Appellant (plaintiff) contends that this is an action in ejectment, and hence that the court had no right to disregard the finding of the jury, and to substitute therefor findings of its own. Respondent, on the other hand, insists that the complaint was a bill to redeem; and if he is right, the findings of the jury were merely advisory. If it be conceded that the second count of the complaint embodies an action in ejectment, yet, unless there was proof that the mortgage was paid, ejectment could not be maintained. "Whenever a mortgagor seeks a remedy against his mortgagee which appears to the court to be inequitable—whether it be to cancel the mortgage and close up his title, or to enjoin a sale under power given him in the security, or to recover from the mortgagee the possession of the mortgaged premises, the court will deny him the relief he seeks, except upon the condition that he shall do that which is consonant with equity. In accordance with these principles it is a settled rule that the mortgagor cannot maintain ejectment against his mortgagee until the debt is paid." Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 442, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314, and cases cited. See, also, Burns v. Hiatt, 149 Cal. 617, 87 Pac. 196, 117 Am. St. Rep. 157. There was a finding by the jury, which was adopted by the court, that a certain amount in rents had been collected by respondent from the tenants of the property, but in ejectment rents and profits cannot be applied to the payment of the mortgage. Such receipts are in the nature of an equitable set-off to the amount due upon the mortgage debt, and must be settled upon an accounting in equity. Spect v. Spect, supra; Jones on Mortgages, § 716.

The first count is an action to redeem. At first blush the second count appears to be an action to redeem only, but upon reflection it seems to embrace also an action in ejectment. Aside, however, from the averment in the second count of payment of the mortgage, and the omission of the respondent to deny this averment by direct and positive statement, the complaint is devoid of anything that even suggests ejectment. The case was tried by the appellant upon the theory that, if there was any payment of the mortgage it was by application of the rents and profits, and not otherwise, which application, as just seen, cannot be made in ejectment. Furthermore the case was submitted to the jury, without objection, upon special issues. Indeed, to refer again to the complaint, and taking it as a whole, it is clear that redemption, and not ejectment, is the relief to which appellant deemed himself entitled, and this theory is strengthened when the prayer of the complaint is considered. To be sure, a prayer cannot aid a defective pleading, still, in a case where, as here, there are two causes of action, it may be consulted with a view to ascertaining the kind of relief which was intended (Nevada Co., etc., Canal Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282); and when that is done in this case, it is obvious that the appellant sought relief in equity only. If he had any other thought, he obscured it in his complaint, and abandoned it at the trial. In fine, the case was tried and submitted, in all respects, exclusively as an action to redeem. We are convinced that it should be so regarded. This brings us to the only other point in the case.

Since the adoption of the Code in 1873 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2), the period of limitation for the commencement of an action to redeem from a mortgage on real property is five years. Prior to that time, and at the date the deed in question was given, it was four years (section 19 of "An act defining time for commencing civil actions," approved April 22, 1850; Comp. Laws 1850-53, p. 819, c. 148). This section was identical with the present section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an action for relief, not otherwise provided for, must be commenced within four years after the cause of action shall have accrued. Appellant claims the benefit of the five-year provision, while respondent insists that the other should prevail; it being the one in existence at the date of the deed. Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 410, 85 Am. Dec. 73. However that may be, this case is governed by the rule laid down in Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117, and in Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58, cited by respondent, which settled the rule for the interpretation of instruments like the one here, and the parties are deemed to have contracted in view of that rule. According to those cases, at the time of the execution of this deed, although in equity a mortgage, it conveyed the legal title, and left to the grantor a mere equity of redemption, and when the debt secured by the deed became barred by the statute of limitations, the right to redeem was also barred. From the record it is clear that when the present action was commenced, the statute of limitations had run against the debt to secure which the deed was made. Section 346, Code Civ. Proc., providing that an action to redeem may be brought within five years, having been enacted after the conveyance was executed, is inapplicable. The law, as declared in the two cases just noticed, defined the legal obligations of the parties to the transaction, and entered into and became a part of their contract, and therefore, when the right to foreclose the mortgage expired, the mortgagor or his successors at the same time lost the right to redeem, and respondent's title was freed from appellant's equities, and became full and complete.

In re SCOTT. (Civ. 463.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
March 27, 1908.)

1. DEPOSITIONS—ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES—
SUBPENA—ISSUANCE—STATUTORY PROVI-SIONS—JUDGE OR "OTHER OFFICER."

Code Civ. Proc. § 1936, subd. 3, as amended by St. 1907, p. 730, c. 391, § 1, provides that a subpoena to require attendance out of court, before a judge, justice, or other officer authorized to administer oaths or take testimony in any matter under the laws, is to be issued by the judge, justice, or other officer before whom attendance is required, and if the subpoena is issued to require attendance before a commissioner or other officer upon the taking of a deposition, it must be issued by the clerk of the superior court of the county wherein the attendance is required, upon the order of such court or a judge thereof. Held, that the term "other officer" means any one authorized to administer oaths or take testimony, etc., and includes a notary public, in view of Pol. Code, § 794, providing that it is the duty of notaries public to take depositions and affidavits and administer oaths in all matters to be used before any court, etc., and it was proper for a judge of the superior court of S. county to order the clerk to issue a subpoena requiring a witness residing therein to attend before a notary in the county to give his deposition, and for the clerk to issue such subpoena.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5088, 5089.]

2. STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION — STATUTORY RULE—CONFLICTING PROVISIONS.

Even if the latter provision of subdivision 3 conflicts with the preceding clause as to the method of issuing a subpoena, the latter provision would prevail, in view of Pol. Code, § 4484, providing that if conflicting provisions are found in different sections of the same chapter or article, the provisions of the sections last in numerical order must prevail, unless inconsistent with the meaning of such chapter or article.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 284.]

3. WITNESSES — ATTENDANCE — VALIDITY OF SUBPENA—WAIVER OF DEFECT OR IRREGU-LARITY.

Where a subpoena regular on its face is issued out of a court of general jurisdiction, and it procures the attendance of the witness at the time and place appointed, and he is sworn and submits to a partial examination without objection, he waives any defect or irregularity in the issuance of the subpoena, and he cannot sustain the action of a judge of the superior court in refusing to direct him to complete the deposition by raising the question of the sufficiency of the subpoena for the first time in an original proceeding in the appellate court for a writ of mandate to compel the judge to require the witness to complete the deposition.

4. DEPOSITIONS—EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES —REQUIRING ANSWER—PROCEDURE—STATU-TORY PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1991, as amended by St. 1907, p. 731, c. 391, § 2, provides that any judge, justice, or other officer authorized to take depositions, etc., may report any disobedience or refusal to answer questions to the superior court of the county in which such attendance was required, and such court thereupon has power, upon notice, to order the witness to perform the omitted act, etc. Held, that the judge of a superior court has no discretion to refuse to exercise the powers, so far as necessary to secure the petitioner the right which the law confers to take the deposition of a witness; and

16 L. R. A. 646, a deed made in 1869, intended as security, was passed upon. The court says: "At the time the conveyance was made by John H. Allen to the respondents, a deed, absolute in form, but intended as a mortgage, in this state transferred the legal title, and there was left in the person executing it a mere equity of redemption; and whenever the debt, to secure which the deed was made, became barred by the statute of limitations, the right to redeem was barred. Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117; Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58. The right to redeem and the right of the creditor to sue on a contract were reciprocal. Cunningham v. Hawkins, 24 Cal. 403, 85 Am. Dec. 73; Arrington v. Liscom, 34 Cal. 366, 94 Am. Dec. 722; Grattan v. Wiggins, 23 Cal. 16. No subsequent legislation could change the rights or obligations of the parties, or extend the time for action. The right and time to redeem were fixed by the laws in force at that time. Bronson v. Kinzie, 1 How. (U. S.) 316, 11 L. Ed. 143; Walker v. Whitehead, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 318, 21 L. Ed. 357; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483 (Gil. 375); Phinney v. Phinney, 81 Me. 450, 17 Atl. 405, 4 L. R. A. 348, 10 Am. St. Rep. 266. Under the decisions just cited, section 346 of the Code of Civil Procedure is inapplicable, because it would effect a material change in the rights and obligations of the parties. Phinney v. Phinney, 81 Me. 450, 17 Atl. 405, 4 L. R. A. 348, 10 Am. St. Rep. 266; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483 (Gil. 375). And for the same reason Raynor v. Drew, 72 Cal. 307, 13 Pac. 866, and other and later cases declaring the rule stated in that section, are not in point. They are based upon that section of the Code, and it was passed posterior to the time the parties entered into the contract."

The case of Allen v. Allen, supra, came up before the Supreme Court again, and it is reported in 106 Cal. 137, 39 Pac. 436. There the court says: "By that decision [referring to the former decision between the same parties] it was held that under the transfer and conveyances of plaintiff herein, they acquired the legal title to the property, leaving in defendants a mere equity of redemption; that the parties are deemed to have contracted in view of the rule of interpretation of such instruments expressed in Hughes v. Davis, 40 Cal. 117, and Espinosa v. Gregory, 40 Cal. 58, and that the debt, to secure which the deed was made, being barred, the right to redeem was also barred. * * * Wherever the right to possession of the land may have been before the time for redemption had expired, upon the failure of the defendants to redeem within the statutory period, the right vested absolutely in plaintiffs, and their title, freed from defendants' equities, became full and complete."

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

it is his duty to consider the report by a notary to the court of the refusal of a witness to complete a deposition, and determine whether the questions were proper, and if so, to direct the witness to answer, and in case of refusal to employ the punitive power of the court to compel obedience.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Depositions, § 141.]

5. MANDAMUS—SUBJECT OF RELIEF—PROCEEDINGS OF JUDGES—SPECIFIC ACTS OF JUDGE—REQUIRING WITNESS TO ANSWER QUESTIONS.

A writ of mandate will lie in the appellate court, to compel the judge of a superior court to require a witness, before the notary taking depositions in the county, to answer questions, and complete his deposition sought to be taken in an action in another county, for it is the duty of the judge to so act, and there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, authorizes the issuance of a writ of mandate by any court, except a justice's or police court, to any inferior tribunal to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty, and section 1086 requires that the writ be issued in all cases where there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law.

6. SAME—PENDENCY OF CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS IN OTHER COURT.

The fact that contempt proceedings were pending in the superior court of the county in which the deposition was to be used is immaterial with respect to proceedings to require the witness to complete his deposition.

7. SAME—ISSUES—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN ORIGINAL PROCEEDING—RESIDENCE OF WITNESS.

Whether the witness' residence was in the county where the deposition was to be used cannot be considered in the first instance in the appellate court, in proceedings for a writ of mandate to compel a judge of the superior court of another county to require the witness to answer questions before a notary taking his deposition.

8. JUDGES—DUTIES—EFFECT OF DISMISSAL OF PROCEEDING.

When under the law it is clearly the duty of a court to proceed to the consideration of a motion upon its merits, it cannot relieve itself of that duty, nor divest itself of jurisdiction by an arbitrary dismissal of the proceeding.

9. MANDAMUS—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—ACTS OF JUDGES—NATURE OF DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDINGS BY RESPONDENT.

An order of a judge of the superior court recited that the motion of plaintiff for an order directing a witness to answer the questions propounded on the taking of his deposition before a notary public, and to adjudge him guilty of contempt and punish him according to law if he refused to answer the questions having been heretofore argued by counsel, submitted to, and by the court taken under advisement, now on this — day in open court appeared the respective counsel, and the court renders its decision as follows: It is ordered that said proceeding be and the same is hereby dismissed. There was no conflicting evidence, and no issue of fact was presented to the court. A petition for a writ of mandate to compel the judge to require the witness to complete his deposition alleged that the proceeding was dismissed solely on the ground that the facts disclosed by the application showed that the court had no jurisdiction, and that allegation was not denied by the answer. Held, that the dismissal was not on the merits, and the determination was not final, but the effect was the same as a refusal of the court to hear and determine the application, and would not preclude compelling the judge by mandamus to require the witness to answer the questions and complete the deposition.

10. JUDGMENT—ESSENTIALS—"ORDER"—"JUDGMENT"—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, defining an "order" as every direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment, the determination by the judge of the superior court was contained in an order virtually denying the motion, and it was not a "judgment," within the meaning of section 577, defining a judgment as a final determination of the rights of the parties in the action or proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3827-3842; vol. 6, pp. 5020-5023; vol. 8, pp. 7695, 7696, 7739.]

11. APPEAL AND ERROR—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The order was not appealable, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 963, providing that an appeal may be taken from certain orders, not including a dismissal for want of jurisdiction.

Application by Mrs. W. P. Scott for a writ of mandate against Hon. Peter J. Shields, judge of the superior court of Sacramento county. Issue of peremptory writ ordered.

James Meridith and J. B. Landis, for petitioner. L. L. Chamberlan and Fred Tuttle, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an original proceeding for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to require a certain witness, one George E. Lamphrey, to answer questions and complete his deposition, sought to be taken in an action pending in the superior court of Placer county, wherein petitioner is plaintiff and Fred S. Stevens, as executor of the estate of Adolph J. Weber, deceased, is defendant. By the petition it appears that the proper affidavit was filed, and notice given that the deposition would be taken before H. B. Bradford, a notary public of Sacramento. Upon application of petitioner respondent made an order directing the county clerk of the county of Sacramento to issue a subpoena, directed to and commanding the said witness to appear and testify at the time and place mentioned in the said notice. The subpoena was issued and served, and the witness appeared. He was sworn and answered certain questions, and then he refused to answer any further, upon the ground that his residence in the future would be in Placer county, and that he would be ready and willing to testify as a witness at the trial. The facts were reported by the notary to respondent, who, upon the hearing of the same, dismissed the proceedings and report, and refused to direct the said witness to answer said proposed questions, on the sole ground that he, as judge of the superior court of Sacramento county, had no jurisdiction to make an order requiring the said witness to complete his deposition. Upon application of petitioner an alternative writ was issued out of this court, and in response to the order to show cause a demurrer and an answer were filed. The demurrer is a general one, and the answer denies, upon information and belief, only one allegation of the petition, which refers to the residence of the witness, averring that for more than three weeks last past he has been and is now a resident of the county of Placer. There is also the additional allegation that similar proceedings have been taken before the superior court of said Placer county, and that the report of said notary has been set for hearing there, with a view of having that court compel the witness to answer questions, or be punished for contempt in case of his refusal to do so. Besides, an amendment to the answer sets out the order of the court dismissing the proceedings.

By the averments of an affidavit the case was brought within the provision of subdivision 2 of section 2021 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The witness also admitted that, at the time his deposition was being taken, he was a resident of Sacramento city. The regularity of the proceedings, indeed, is not questioned, except that it is claimed the subpoena requiring the attendance of the witness should have been issued by the notary before whom the witness was to appear, rather than by the clerk of the superior court under the direction of the judge thereof. The contention involves the construction of the following portion of section 1986 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by the Statutes of 1907, p. 730, c. 391, § 1: "A subpoena is issued as follows: (3) To require attendance out of court, in cases not provided for in subdivision 1, before a judge, justice, or other officer authorized to administer oaths or take testimony in any matter under the laws of the state, it is issued by the judge, justice or other officer before whom the attendance is required. If the subpoena is issued to require the attendance before a court or at the trial of an issue therein, it is issued by the clerk, as of course, upon the application of the party desiring it. If it issued to require attendance before a commissioner or other officer upon the taking of a deposition, it must be issued by the clerk of the superior court of the county wherein the attendance is required upon the order of such court or of a judge thereof, which order may be made ex parte." This "other officer" clearly means any one "authorized to administer oaths or take testimony in any matter under the laws of this state." A notary public is such an officer. Pol. Code, § 794. In the case at bar, therefore, since the subpoena required the attendance of a witness residing in Sacramento before a notary public of Sacramento county at his office in Sacramento city, under the aforesaid provision of the statute it was proper for the judge of the superior court of Sacramento county to make the order for the issuance of said subpoena, and for the clerk of said court to issue it. But it is said that the provision is in conflict with the preceding clause of said subdivision 3, which exacts of the notary the duty of issuing the subpoena. Even so, the latter provision would prevail over the former under the well-settled rule of construction embodied in section 4484 of the Political Code, as follows: "If conflicting provisions are found in different sections of the same chapter or article, the provisions of the sections last in numerical order must prevail, unless such construction is inconsistent with the meaning of such chapter or article." Hall v. Kerrigan, 135 Cal. 7, 66 Pac. 868; 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 619, 734. Another answer to the contention of respondent obviously is that the witness recognized the validity of the subpoena, attended at the time and place appointed, was sworn, and submitted himself to examination as a witness without objection, and he thereby waived any defect or irregularity in the issuance of said subpoena. A subpoena "is the process by which the attendance of a witness is required. It is a writ or order directed to a person and requiring his attendance at a particular time and place to testify as a witness." Code Civ. Proc. § 1985. The subpoena in the present instance was regular on its face, was issued out of a court of general jurisdiction, and it accomplished its purpose in producing the attendance of the witness; and, conceding that the witness could have refused to be sworn or answer questions, on the ground that he was present without authority of law, it should not require citation of authorities to maintain the position that he cannot now, for the first time, make the said objection to justify the action of respondent in declining to direct him to complete his deposition.

That brings us to a consideration of the question, what procedure is to be taken to compel the witness to answer. Section 1991 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1907 (St. 1907, p. 731, c. 397, § 2), provides for the course to be pursued as follows: "Any judge, justice, or other officer mentioned in subdivision three of section nineteen hundred and eighty-six, may report any such disobedience or refusal [to answer questions] to the superior court of the county in which such attendance was required; and such court thereupon has power, upon notice, to order the witness to perform the omitted act, and any refusal or neglect to comply with such order may be punished as a contempt of such court." It was proper, therefore, for the notary to report to the superior court of Sacramento county, and as no question is presented as to the regularity of the proceedings before said court, it was clearly the duty of respondent to consider the said report and determine whether the questions were proper, and, if so, to direct the witness to answer, and, in case of his refusal, to employ the punitive power of the court to compel obedience. The judge of the court had no discretion to refuse to exercise the powers with which the law invested him so far as necessary to secure the petitioner the right which the law confers upon her to take the deposition of the witness. Crocker v. Courey, 140

Cal. 218, 73 Pac. 1006. See, also, Burns v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597. But the judge of the court, according to the allegations of the petition, did refuse to exercise his powers to compel the witness to testify, and the question arises whether petitioner has sought the proper remedy to secure the right to which she is clearly entitled. Section 1085 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that the writ of mandate "may be issued by any court except a justice's or police court to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station," and section 1086 expresses the legislative command that the "writ must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law." We have already seen that it was the duty, resulting from his office, of respondent to compel the performance of the act, and it is apparent that there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. It is said in Crocker v. Conrey, supra: "Mandamus is the proper remedy. There is no other adequate remedy, and where he has no discretion to refuse to act, a judicial officer is as much subject to the mandate of a higher court as any other officer."

We pass now from this somewhat general consideration to the specific objections to the issuance of the writ, suggested by respondent and based upon the allegations of the answer. If we are right in holding that it was the duty of respondent to require the witness to answer, then it is obvious that the averment as to the pendency of the proceeding for contempt before the superior court of Placer county must be disregarded, as involving a matter not within the jurisdiction of said court. It is equally clear that the question of the residence of the witness cannot be considered in the first instance by this court. If the issue had been presented to respondent and adjudicated adversely to petitioner's contention, this might be urged as a reason why the writ should not be made peremptory, although as to that we express no opinion, as it is not necessary to this decision. But it is plain that only those facts must be regarded here that existed at the time of the application to respondent which were presented to him. A fact existing then, and not put in issue and not tried, cannot be urged afterwards as a justification for the court's refusal to perform a plain duty, as it appears from the record that was presented at the time the motion was made.

The only other question worthy of serious attention involves the determination of the nature and effect of the order or judgment set out in the amended answer as follows: "The motion of plaintiff in the above-entitled action or proceeding for an order of this court directing and commanding the witness George E. Lamphrey to answer the questions propounded to him upon the taking of his deposition before H. B. Bradford, a notary public in and for the county of Sacramento, state of California, and that if said witness refuses to answer the questions that he may be adjudged guilty of contempt and punished according to law, having been heretofore argued by counsel for the respective parties, submitted to and by the court taken under advisement, now on this ——— day, in open court appeared the respective counsel, and the court renders its decision as follows: It is ordered that said proceeding be and the same is hereby dismissed." It is claimed that the dismissal of the proceedings divested the court of jurisdiction, and therefore the writ of mandate is not appropriate, since it presupposes not only the duty but necessarily the legal power to require the witness to answer the questions. But this is a mistaken view of the situation. The effect of the order dismissing the proceeding is the same as the refusal of the court to hear and determine the application. When under the law it is clearly the duty of the court to proceed to the consideration of a motion upon its merits, it cannot relieve itself of this duty, nor divest itself of jurisdiction by an arbitrary dismissal of the proceedings. Such an easy and convenient method of rendering ineffective the statute providing for the issuance of the writ of mandate is not to be countenanced.

In Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44, the proceeding was dismissed on the ground that the process of contempt was a proceeding in the action, and that by the appeal from the judgment in said action all proceedings under said judgment had been stayed. The Supreme Court said: "Had the action of the court below been in the exercise of a judicial discretion, of course mandamus would not lie to compel the court to proceed in the matter. But it is perfectly manifest that the action of the court in dismissing the proceeding was based on a supposed want of power, occasioned by the appeal and the incidental stay of proceedings wrought by the execution of the undertaking on appeal. If the injunction was not suspended by virtue of the appeal, it was the duty of the court to have inquired into the facts, and to have brought its judgment to bear upon them. Merced Mining Company v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130." It was held that the appeal did not suspend the injunction, and the peremptory writ of mandate was issued.

In Temple v. Superior Court, 70 Cal. 211, 11 Pac. 699, it is said: "This is an application for a writ of mandate, to compel the superior court of Los Angeles county, Judge W. A. Cheney presiding, to hear a charge of contempt of court, made against one B. Newman, which that court refused to hear, and has dismissed on the ground of want of jurisdiction. We have examined the record and are of opinion that the matter is within the jurisdiction of the court. The facts stated bring the case clearly within section 1210 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and under such circumstances the court cannot, by holding without reason that it has no jurisdiction of the proceeding, divest itself of jurisdiction, and evade the duty of hearing and determining it."

But it is contended that the court acted upon and determined the matter submitted to it, and however erroneous its determination, it is not subject to review in this proceeding. In support of this position People v. Weston, 28 Cal. 640, and Francisco v. M. I. Co., 36 Cal. 286, are cited. In the former case the county court had dismissed an appeal from the justice court, and an application was made to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate requiring the county judge to proceed and try the cause. It is said: "But the court had jurisdiction to inquire and determine whether the appeal had been properly taken and was then pending in that court or not, and in determining that question acted judicially. The court did not refuse to act, but acted, and judicially determined that the appeal had not been properly taken, and upon this ground dismissed it. Where the act to be done is judicial in its character, the writ will not direct in what manner the inferior court shall act, but only direct it to act." In the Francisco Case it is said: "In the case now presented the district court has acted upon the petition of defendant for removal of the cause. The matter was properly before the court upon the petition and evidence in support thereof, and, being satisfied therefrom of the existence of the requisite facts entitling defendant to the order prayed for, the same was granted by the court, and a removal of the cause ordered; and this court by mandamus cannot, directly or indirectly, compel a rescission or disregard of this order."

It may be conceded that those cases were properly decided upon the record as presented to the Supreme Court, but there is some language used in the opinions, somewhat inaccurate, as pointed out in Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 548, 18 Pac. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249, wherein it is declared: "It has been repeatedly said that the writ cannot perform the functions of a writ of error; that it cannot issue to revise judicial action, but can only compel the performance of ministerial functions; and that it will issue to compel a tribunal to act in some way, but not in any particular way. These formulas undoubtedly express a truth, but they express it in an inaccurate and misleading manner; and by reasoning from them, as if literally and in all cases true, courts have sometimes been led into error, and have frequently been forced to call acts 'ministerial' which are plainly not so. An examination of the authorities will demonstrate the inaccuracy of the above phrases." After reviewing numerous authorities the court proceeds: "In view of the foregoing cases, it seems a mere perversion of language to say that the writ will never issue to control judicial action or to compel a tribunal to act in a certain way. * * * In every case the tribunal that is to act must determine, in the first instance, whether the case is a proper one for its action. And in our opinion the true tests are whether its determination is intended by law to be final; and if not, whether there is any other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. * * * But if the determination was not intended to be final, and there is no other adequate remedy, the writ must issue." The determination in the case at bar is contained in an order (Code Civ. Proc. § 1003) virtually denying the motion; it is not a judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 577); and there is no appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 963). Hence it must be clear that it was not intended to be final, and there is no other remedy at all. That the court did not proceed to determine the vital consideration whether the questions propounded to the witness should be answered is manifest. There was no conflicting evidence, no issue of fact was presented to the court, and the proceeding was dismissed solely upon the ground that the facts disclosed by the application showed that the court had no jurisdiction. Such is the allegation of the petition here. It is not denied by the answer, and there is nothing in the order to indicate the contrary.

It is claimed that said order shows that the application was considered and determined, but the language of the order leaves no doubt that the thing considered was "the motion of plaintiff" and the argument of counsel. Such consideration cannot be effective to prevent the issuance of the writ of mandate if the court to which application is made is of the opinion that the duty of the lower court to grant the motion is clear, and that there is no other adequate remedy. The contention of respondent's counsel, if carried to its logical conclusion, would lead to the denial of any application for the writ where the action of an inferior court is involved. It was the plain duty of respondent upon the facts presented, not only to consider the motion and argument, but to grant said motion and compel the witness to complete the deposition.

For the foregoing reasons, it is ordered that the peremptory writ issue.

In re LAMPHREY. (Civ. 464.)

April 10, 1908.)

Application by George E. Lamphrey for a writ of prohibition against the superior court of the county of Sacramento and Hon. Peter J. Shields, judge of said court, to prohibit action on an application to require the petitioner to complete depositions before a notary. On demurrer to the petition. Demurrer sustained, and order to show cause discharged.

H. C. Ross, for petitioner. J. D. Meredith, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This proceeding grew out of an effort to take the deposition of the said George E. Lamphrey, in a cause pending in the superior court of Placer county, wherein Mrs. W. P. Scott is plaintiff and Fred S. Stevens, as executor of the estate of Adolph J. Weber, deceased, is defendant.

For a statement of the facts in relation to said deposition, we refer to the matter of the application of the said Mrs. W. P. Scott for a writ of mandate, directed to Hon. Peter J. Shields, as judge of the superior court of Sacramento county, reported in 96 Pac. 385, decided by this court March 24, 1908.

After making the order, which is set out in the opinion on said application for a writ of mandate, respondent, concluding, no doubt, upon reflection, that he should have directed the witness to complete his deposition, made the following order: "Good cause appearing therefor, it is ordered that the order dismissing the proceeding in the above-entitled action or proceeding heretofore made herein on the 6th day of March, 1908, be and the same is hereby vacated and set aside. It is further ordered that the motion of plaintiff in the above-entitled action or proceeding for an order of this court directing and commanding the witness George E. Lamphrey to answer the questions propounded to him upon the taking of his deposition before H. B. Bradford, a notary public in and for the county of Sacramento, be and the same is hereby set for hearing for Thursday, March 19, 1908, at 10 o'clock a. m. It is further ordered that counsel for the plaintiff give notice to the witness George E. Lamphrey of the making of said orders."

The prayer is for a writ to prohibit the said court and the judge thereof from acting or proceeding in the matter of said application for the purpose of requiring petitioner to answer before said notary public, and from taking any action or proceeding adjudging or decreeing petitioner guilty of a contempt of court for failing or refusing to answer before said notary. It could be easily demonstrated that the writ should not issue for several reasons, but in the said application for the writ of mandate we held that it was the duty of respondent to do what is in this application sought to be prevented. The alternative writ in this proceeding was issued before any conclusion was reached as to the peremptory writ of mandate, but the reason for issuing the latter is sufficient ground for denying the petition herein.

The demurrer to the petition is sustained, and the order to show cause is discharged.

HENTIG v. JOHNSON et al. (Civ. 475.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 28, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—PARTIES ENTITLED TO ALLEGE ERROR—ERROR AFFECTING CO-PARTY.

Plaintiff owned a one-half interest in land title to which stood in the name of W., and a mortgage thereon was foreclosed, and the surplus proceeds paid to W. in conformity with the decree. Plaintiff sued W. for one-half the surplus proceeds, and made the mortgagee and others parties defendant. A joint demurrer to the petition was overruled. Judgment was against W. alone. Held, that any error as to the other defendants in overruling the demurrer was immaterial and could not be reviewed on W.'s appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3584-3590.]

2. MORTGAGES—FORECLOSURE—JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA—MATTERS CONCLUDED—RIGHT TO SURPLUS PROCEEDS.

Though plaintiff owning a one-half interest in land title to which stood in the name of W., which was subject to a mortgage, was a party defendant in a suit to foreclose the mortgage, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, it would be assumed that the issues as to him were based on the usual allegation that he claimed some interest in the premises subordinate to the mortgage, and, as no conflicting rights between plaintiff and W. would be injected into the foreclosure suit by such issue, the foreclosure decree would not be res judicata as to plaintiff's right to a share of the surplus proceeds.

3. ACTIONS—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES—ONLY ONE CAUSE SUFFICIENTLY STATED.

Where plaintiff alleged his one-half interest in land title to which stood in the name of W., and W.'s refusal to pay over one-half the surplus proceeds received by him on foreclosure of a mortgage on the land, and also attempted to set up a conspiracy between W. and other defendants to defraud plaintiff, but the allegations as to conspiracy did not state a cause of action, there was no misjoinder of causes of action.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 475, providing that no judgment shall be reversed or affected because of any error, ruling, etc., unless it appears from the record that it was prejudicial, and the appealing party thereby suffered substantial injury, where a complaint stated a cause of action against appellant, and attempted, but failed, to state another cause against appellant and other defendants, overruling a demurrer to the complaint for misjoinder of parties would not warrant a reversal, where the judgment was against appellant alone.

5. "JUDGMENT"—FORM—SUFFICIENCY.

Where a court ordered, adjudged, and decreed that defendant within 10 days pay plaintiff a certain sum, instead of adopting the expression "that plaintiff do have and recover," etc., the determination was a judgment within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 577, defining a "judgment" as a final determination of the rights of the parties in an action, and it was not merely an interlocutory order, for, no particular form being prescribed by the Code, the test of the sufficiency of a judgment must be the substance, rather than its form.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 395-411.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3827-3842; vol. 8, pp. 7695-7696.]

6. SAME—SURPLUSAGE—EFFECT.

Even though the requirement for payment within 10 days was unwarranted, it was without force and should be treated as surplusage, and would not require modification of the judgment on an appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 395-411.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Geo. H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by F. G. Hentig against Frances E. Johnson, Mary Williams, and another for one-half the surplus proceeds received by defendant Williams from foreclosure of a mortgage on certain property. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant Williams, she appeals. Affirmed.

E. C. Bower, for appellant. F. G. Hentig and Percy B. Lloyd, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff was the owner of an undivided one-half of a certain lot, the legal title to which stood in the name of Mary Williams, subject to a mortgage held by Frances E. Johnson. Williams refused to transfer to plaintiff his interest in said lot, whereupon he brought suit to compel conveyance thereof. Judgment was rendered in his favor, from which Williams appealed. Pending this appeal, Johnson brought suit to foreclose her mortgage, making plaintiff a party defendant therein. She obtained a decree of foreclosure, under which the lot was, on August 2, 1904, sold for a sum in excess of that required to satisfy her judgment, and which surplus was, in accordance with the decree, paid to Williams, the record owner of said lot. Later, the judgment in favor of plaintiff requiring Williams to convey to him an undivided one-half interest in the lot, and from which she had appealed, was affirmed. Upon her refusal to pay to him any part of the surplus proceeds of the sale of said lot, he brought this action against her, making Johnson and others party defendants therein. All of the defendants joined in a demurrer, which was overruled, and thereupon they filed separate answers. Judgment went in favor of all the defendants, except Mary Williams, against whom judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for one-half of said surplus money received by her under said decree of foreclosure, together with interest thereon from the date of its receipt. Her appeal is from this judgment.

1. In considering the demurrer interposed it is unnecessary to discuss the objections therein urged to the sufficiency of the complaint, save and except in so far as it forms a basis for recovery against appellant. If the ruling be correct as to her, the fact that it was erroneous as to the other defendants not complaining is immaterial as to appellant. The complaint contains a mass of surplusage intermingled with a statement of facts, from which it appears that plaintiff was the owner of an undivided one-half of said lot subject to said mortgage; that the title thereto stood of record in the name of said Williams, who wrongfully refused to convey the same to him; that, while thus holding the title, a suit foreclosing the Johnson mortgage was instituted, and the property sold under the decree rendered therein, and the surplus arising from such sale, consisting of $759.95, was, on August 2, 1904, in accordance with the directions in said decree, paid to her; that she refused to pay any part thereof to plaintiff; and that she still retains the same. The prayer of the complaint is for general relief. By his complaint, in addition to the above facts, plaintiff undertakes to set up a conspiracy between appellant and her codefendants, whereby they sought to defraud plaintiff in depriving him of the title to said lot, and upon which he prays that Johnson and Williams be required to convey to him one-half of said lot. The allegations, however, fall far short of constituting a cause of action under which such relief could be granted, and as inserted in the complaint constitute mere surplusage. The complaint shows that Hentig was made a party defendant in the foreclosure suit, by reason of which fact appellant contends that respondent was estopped from asserting claim to any part of the surplus proceeds derived from sale under the decree of foreclosure. As the record discloses nothing to the contrary, we must assume that as to Hentig the issues involved were based upon the usual allegations contained in complaints for foreclosure of mortgages to the effect that he as defendant other than the mortgagor claimed some interest in the mortgaged premises, which claim, however, was subordinate to the lien of the mortgage. No conflicting rights between Hentig and Williams as to the ownership of the property were injected into the action by such issue, and there is nothing in the record showing the issue involved in this suit to have been involved or tried in the action instituted by Johnson to foreclose her mortgage. Hence the judgment of foreclosure was not res adjudicata as to Hentig's right to recover from appellant that portion of the surplus proceeds of the sale which she wrongfully withheld from him. Beronio v. Ventura Lumber Co., 129 Cal. 232, 61 Pac. 958, 79 Am. St. Rep. 118; Murray v. Etchepare, 129 Cal. 318, 61 Pac. 930. There was no misjoinder of causes of action, for the reason that only one cause of action was stated, namely, that to recover one-half of the surplus money received by appellant from the sale. The attempt to state another was wholly futile. Conceding the ruling upon the demurrer for misjoinder of party defendants to have been erroneous, it was nevertheless an error which could not prejudice the rights of appellant. Section 475, Code Civ. Proc.; Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 184, 9 Pac. 176, 12 Pac. 449; Hayne on New Trial and Appeal, § 286. We therefore conclude there was no prejudicial error in the ruling of the court upon the demurrer.

2. It is urged that the judgment is not justified by the findings, and this for the reason that, instead of adopting the expression "that plaintiff do have and recover," etc., the court "ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendant Mary Williams, within 10 days from this date, pay to the plaintiff F. G. Hentig the sum of," etc. Appellant contends that this is not a judgment, but merely an interlocutory order. We cannot agree with this contention. While it is irregular in form, it nevertheless, in substance, conforms to the definition of a "judgment" as contained in section 577, Code of Civil Procedure. It is a "final determination of the rights of the parties in the action." No good reason exists for departure from established and well-recognized forms; but, in the absence of any particular form being prescribed by the Code, the test of the sufficiency of a judgment must be the substance, rather than its form. With reference to the form of judgments, Mr. Black, in his work on the subject (section 115), states the rule as follows: "It may therefore be stated as the modern rule that the form of the judgment is not very material, provided that in substance it shows distinctly and not inferentially that the matter had been determined in favor of one of the litigants, or that the rights of the parties in litigation had been adjudicated." In discussing the same subject, another law writer says: "That whatever appears upon its face to be intended as the entry of a judgment will be regarded as sufficiently formal, if it show: (1) The relief granted, and (2) that the grant was made by the court in whose records the entry is written." Freeman on Judgments, § 50. Measured by the above rules, the document in question constitutes a final judgment for money to be enforced by the issuance of a writ of execution against the property of defendant, as provided by section 684, Code Civ. Proc. As thus interpreted, it follows that the words "within 10 days from this date," as here used, perform no office whatever. While their use is unwarranted, they are nevertheless, in our opinion, on the face of the judgment, of no force or effect. If this be true, the use of the words cannot prejudice the substantial rights of appellant, and it is therefore unnecessary to order a modification of the judgment by striking therefrom words which are mere surplusage. The judgment is affirmed.

KLOKKE v. RAPHAEL. (Civ. 469.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 27, 1908. On Rehearing, April 25, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 25, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—AMENDMENTS—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, permitting the court, in furtherance of justice, to allow a party to amend any pleading, etc., and enlarge the time for answer, demurrer, etc., a wide discretion is vested in courts of original jurisdiction, and where the exercise of such discretion is to afford litigants a trial upon the merits, the abuse thereof must clearly and conclusively appear to justify interference on appeal; and hence, though no copy of an amended complaint was served upon defendant until the expiration of the time for filing, the action of the trial court in permitting it to be served thereafter, but before the filing of defendant's motion to strike the amended complaint, was not an abuse of its discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 601.]

2. MECHANICS' LIENS—INDEMNITY AGAINST LIENS—ACTIONS ON BONDS—COMPLAINT.

In an action on a bond, signed by defendant as surety, to secure the performance of a building contract, and to indemnify against liens by reason thereof, the complaint alleged that suit was instituted to foreclose liens on plaintiff's building, and the contractors, though made parties thereto, neglected to defend, and by reason of their failure to release the building from the liens as they had contracted to do, and in order to protect his interests in the suit to foreclose the liens, plaintiff was obliged to and did employ an attorney to represent him therein, and was compelled to pay him a large sum for services rendered in the suit, and that by reason of the contractors' failure to comply with the conditions of their contract, for the performance of which the bond was given, plaintiff was damaged in the sum paid his attorney, etc. Held, that the complaint stated a cause of action, on general demurrer, and the allegation of payment to his attorney, while ambiguous and uncertain, was sufficient to justify the admission of evidence of the amount actually paid; there being no demurrer to the complaint upon that specific ground.

3. SAME—DAMAGES—ATTORNEY'S FEES IN DEFENDING LIENS.

Where contractors defaulted in their covenant to release a building from all claims against it, and liens were filed thereon, and suits instituted to foreclose them, which the contractors neglected to defend, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1193, providing that contractors shall defend such suits at their own expense, and the owner of the building was ready, on the release of his property from the liens, to pay the parties entitled thereto the balance remaining in his hands due the contractors, he was entitled to have the rights of the lienors established by decree of court, and in an action on the contractors' bond could recover a reasonable amount paid for attorney's fees in defending the actions; such fees being the proximate and direct result of the breach of contractors' covenant to discharge the claims.

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. SAME — TRIAL — VERDICT — RESPONSIVENESS TO ISSUES—EXCEEDING CLAIM.

In an action by the owner of a building on the building contractors' bond to indemnify against liens, in which he sought recovery for attorney's fees paid in defending claims against the building, which the contractors failed to discharge or defend, the complaint not having made claim for money expended as costs in such suit, but only for attorney's fees, the amount of such costs was improperly included in the verdict.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR — DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—MODIFICATION—REDUCING AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.

Where an item was improperly included in a verdict for plaintiff, he being otherwise entitled to recover, the judgment will not be reversed, and a new trial ordered, but will be affirmed as modified, after eliminating the item improperly included.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4498-4505.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Ernst F. C. Klokke against Isadore Raphael. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed as modified.

H. S. G. McCartney and E. C. Bower, for appellant. Walter G. Van Pelt, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover upon a bond, signed by appellant as one of the sureties, and given to secure the performance of a builder's contract, which, among other provisions, contained the following: "The contractor shall, on or before thirty-five days after the acceptance of the building, cancel and release the said building and premises from all claims that may have accrued against the said building by reason of the aforesaid erection." The condition of the bond was that if the contractor should strictly keep and perform all the covenants of the contract by him to be kept and performed, and should, on or before 35 days after completion of the building, discharge and satisfy all claims or liens that might have accrued against the same in and by reason of the performance of said contract, and should save the owner free and harmless from all damages therefrom, as in said contract provided, the bond should be void. It was provided in the contract that the cost of the building should be paid in installments, of which the sum of $558.75 was payable on completion, and $1,117.50 payable 36 days thereafter. The building was completed according to the contract, and plaintiff, on June 20, 1903, duly accepted the same. Prior to said acceptance, and before the expiration of 30 days thereafter, a number of mechanics and laborers, who had been employed in the construction of the building by the contractors, and certain others who had, upon the order of said contractors, furnished material for said building, served notice that they had not been paid for said labor and material, and demanded that plaintiff withhold payment of the balance in his hands due said contractors under the terms of said contract. Whereupon plaintiff retained in his hands said installment of $558.75, which became due to said contractors upon the completion of the building, and also withheld payment of the last installment of $1,117.50, and made demand upon said contractors that they cancel the demands of said laborers and materialmen, and release the building from the lien thereof. The contractors neglected and failed so to do, and left the state. Within 30 days after completion of the building, notice of 11 liens, claimed on account of labor performed and material furnished, were filed against the building and premises. The complaint alleges that thereafter suit was instituted to foreclose said liens, and, said contractors, though made parties to said suits, neglecting upon demand to do anything in the premises, plaintiff, by reason of the failure of the contractors to release said building from said liens as covenanted in said contract, and in order to protect his interest in the suits to foreclose said liens against his building, was obliged to and did employ an attorney to represent him therein, and was compelled to pay said attorney a large sum of money for services rendered in said suits; that by reason of said contractors' failure to comply with the terms and conditions of their contract, for the performance of which said bond was given, plaintiff was damaged in the sum of money which he had paid, and for which he had become indebted to his attorney, which damage, it is alleged, amounts to $500. The court found all the issues in favor of plaintiff, and further found the amount actually paid by plaintiff to be $388.90, for which sum it gave him judgment, and from which defendant appeals.

1. Appellant moved the court to strike from the files plaintiff's second amended complaint, upon the ground that, although it had been filed within the time granted by the court for filing the same, no copy thereof had been served upon appellant or his attorneys until the expiration of such time. The amended complaint was duly filed within the time granted, and a copy thereof served upon appellant before the filing of his motion. There was no abuse of discretion in the denial of the motion upon the showing made by plaintiff's affidavit. Under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure a wide latitude of discretion is vested in courts of original jurisdiction, in relieving parties from default in the performance of acts where such default tends to obstruct a hearing of pending actions. Where the exercise of such discretion is to accord litigants a trial upon the merits, the abuse thereof must clearly and conclusively appear in order to justify interference by this court.

2. Defendant interposed a general demurrer, which was overruled, and this ruling is assigned as error. It is insisted that attorney's fees paid by plaintiff are not recoverable on the bond, because such damage is remote; that if they are recoverable, the complaint fails to allege payment thereof by plaintiff; that it does not appear from the complaint that the amount of money, payment of which was withheld from the contractors, was inadequate to pay the amount of all the liens, and the complaint contains no allegation showing the amount of the liens. There is no merit in these and other grounds urged against the ruling of the court on the demurrer. However inartificially drawn the complaint may be, the objections thereto are not subjects of a general demurrer. It sufficiently states a cause of action. The allegation of payment, while ambiguous and uncertain, is nevertheless sufficient (there being no demurrer interposed to the complaint upon such ground) to justify the admission of evidence of the amount actually paid by plaintiff to his attorney for services rendered in the proceedings to foreclose said liens. While it is not alleged that the amount withheld was inadequate to pay all liens and claims, it does appear that plaintiff was, by said notices of claims served upon him, required to withhold the balance due the contractors, and that this entire balance was required, by decree of court rendered in the actions to foreclose said liens, to be paid and distributed to said lienors, and that the whole amount was exhausted. Burnett et al. v. Glas et al.,¹ cited by appellant, furnishes no support for his contention on this point, for the reason that the facts of that case differ widely from the case at bar. No valid contract was involved therein, and the owner held in his hands nearly $1,000 due to the contractor, over and in excess of all claims and liens against his property, which he wrongfully refused to pay over.

3. Appellant's chief contention is that plaintiff is not entitled to recover attorney's fees paid, for the reason that the damage resulting from such payment is too remote and consequential. The contractors defaulted in their covenant to cancel and release the building from all claims which accrued against it. Liens were filed upon the premises, and suits instituted to foreclose the same. The contractors failed and neglected to defend these suits, as they were required to do under the provisions of section 1193 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff was ready, upon the release of his property from the liens thereon, to pay the parties entitled thereto the balance remaining in his hands due the contractors. He had no means of ascertaining whether the claims were just or unjust. He could not, except at his peril, voluntarily pay them. Therefore, in the absence of any action on the part of the contractors, he was entitled to have the rights of the lienors established by decree of court. The contractors failing to perform their covenant, plaintiff's only course of safety was to secure a release of his property by proceedings in court. To accomplish this result it was necessary to employ an attorney to represent him in such actions as were brought to enforce the liens. As a result of these suits and the action taken by plaintiff, the amount of the liens was ascertained, and the balance in his hands due the contractors ordered distributed pro rata to the parties entitled thereto, through the payment of which plaintiff secured a release of his property from said claims. The reasonable amount paid his attorney for services rendered in said actions was the direct and proximate damage resulting to plaintiff by reason of the breach of the covenant of the contractors to cancel and release the said building and premises from all claims, a covenant for the performance of which the bond was given as security. In the case of Hickman v. Craig, 6 Mo. App. 583, it was held that, "where one agreed to deliver a house free of liens, the measure of damages, where there had been a breach of the covenant against liens, is the amount plaintiff was compelled to pay on account of liens, including costs and attorney's fees in defending the lien suits." In Tally v. Ganahl (Cal.) 90 Pac. 1049, the court, in discussing the right to recover attorney's fees upon a bond containing a similar condition, and where claims of lien had been filed against the premises, and suits instituted thereon, says: "As a result of the suits and of her [plaintiff's] employment of the attorney, the amount of the liens was ascertained, she paid the amount into court, and secured a discharge of the several liens. The amount paid to the attorney in these suits was claimed in the complaint as special damages, and was allowed by the court, after due proof of the facts. We perceive no error in this. It was damages proximately caused by the breach of the agreement to deliver the building free from liens, a covenant for which the bond was security. The liens in question were fairly within the terms of that agreement, the owner was acting in good faith, and the fee was found to be reasonable."

4. There is nothing in the point suggested that the findings are not supported by the evidence. The employment of an attorney, the necessity for such employment, the actual payment by plaintiff of the sum found due, and for which judgment was rendered, the reasonableness of the amount so paid, together with the fact that the services were performed, and the expenditures made in good faith, are all conclusively shown by the evidence.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

On Rehearing.

In the petition for a rehearing filed herein our attention is directed to a fact overlooked in the opinion. The judgment rendered includes the amount of $28.90, which sum, as shown by the evidence, was paid by plaintiff to his attorney as costs, and not for legal services rendered. No claim is made for money expended as costs; therefore, under the pleadings, plaintiff's right to recovery is measured by the sum actually expended by him for attorney's fees only. This sum, as appears by the evidence, was $360. It follows that the inclusion of the $28.90 by plaintiff paid out as costs was unwarranted. It is not necessary, however, to reverse the judgment or order a new trial, as the error may be corrected by a modification of the judgment. McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 60, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171, 85 Pac. 929.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment be modified by deducting therefrom, as of the date of its rendition, the sum of $28.90, and as thus modified it is affirmed.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

GOODMAN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA IN SANTA CLARA COUNTY et al. (Civ. 525.)(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 29, 1908.)1. CERTIORARI—WRIT OF REVIEW—SCOPE.

A writ of review may not be used to correct errors, but only issues where the court has acted without or in excess of jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, § 1.]

2. JURY—RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL—DENIAL.

The denial of a jury trial, in a case where a jury may be waived, is error only, and not action in excess of jurisdiction.

3. SAME—WAIVER OF JURY.

Under Const. art. 1, § 7, the right of trial by jury may be waived in civil actions and in criminal cases not amounting to a felony.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, §§ 176-203.]

4. CERTIORARI—RIGHT TO WRIT OF REVIEW—DENIAL OF JURY.

A writ of review should not be granted to review an order denying petitioner's right to a jury, in a case where a jury trial might be waived, because petitioner had not demanded a jury within the time required by the rules of court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Petition for writ of review by P. G. Goodman against the superior court of California in Santa Clara county and another. Petition denied.

William A. Bowden, for petitioner.

HALL, J. This is an original application for a writ of review, the purpose of which is to have it determined that the superior court exceeded its jurisdiction in refusing petitioner's request for a jury trial, in a cause appealed to said court from a justice's court, and in trying said cause without a jury, and in entering judgment against petitioner upon said trial notwithstanding his demand for a jury trial.

The petition shows that the superior court refused to allow petitioner a jury because of failure to comply with the rules of the court concerning the time within which the demand for a jury must be made. The writ of review may not be used to correct errors, but can only be issued where the court, to which it may be directed, has acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction. The basis of petitioner's contention in this case is that the court acted in excess of its jurisdiction in trying the case without a jury notwithstanding petitioner's demand for a jury. It is sometimes a nice question as to whether a particular action of the court is mere error, or is in excess of jurisdiction; but in this state it has been decided that the denial of a jury trial in a case where a jury might be waived is error only, and not action in excess of jurisdiction. Ex parte Miller, 82 Cal. 454, 22 Pac. 1113; Powelson v. Lockwood, 82 Cal.

613, 23 Pac. 143. Both in criminal cases not amounting to felony, and in civil actions, the right of trial by jury may be waived (Const. art. 1, § 7). In Ex parte Miller, supra, in denying a writ of habeas corpus, the court said: "If a jury trial was denied, it was a mere error which could not be reached by habeas corpus." And in Powelson v. Lockwood, supra, it was held that in refusing a jury to defendant charged with misdemeanor a justice court did not exceed its jurisdiction, but at most only committed error, for which reason the justice court could not be prohibited from proceeding to try the action. In Witman v. Police Court, etc., 145 Cal. 474, 78 Pac. 1052, it was said: "This court has held in two well-considered cases that the denial of a jury altogether in a misdemeanor case was but an error of law, and that the justice's court did not in such denial exceed its jurisdiction"—and cited the two cases above referred to in support thereof. So, also, in Ex parte Fife, 110 Cal. 8, 42 Pac. 299, the court said: "A jury may be waived in any civil case, and it is not contended by any one that the refusal of a demand for a jury in a civil case affects the jurisdiction, or is anything more than error, and, as a jury may, under the Constitution, be waived 'in all criminal cases not amounting to felony,' a jury is not a necessary constituent part of a court for the trial of a misdemeanor, and the refusal of the court to allow a jury on such a trial is mere error." In this case the court held that the court clearly erred in refusing the jury, but determined that it was error only, and did not go to the jurisdiction of the court to try the case without a jury. So in the case at bar the court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the action, and its refusal of petitioner's demand for a jury was at most mere error which did not go to its jurisdiction.

The petition is denied.

LARSEN v. LEONARDT. (Civ. 442.)(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
April 28, 1908. Rehearing Denied
June 27, 1908.)1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

An employé assumes the risk of a danger of which he knew, or which was so obvious that he must have known it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 574-600, 610-624.]

2. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

An employé, who fails to use ordinary care for his own protection, is guilty of contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 674.]

3. TRIAL — VERDICT — SPECIAL FINDINGS — FINDINGS INCONSISTENT WITH GENERAL VERDICT.

In an action for injuries while working on a scaffold in defendant's employment, the court submitted to the jury the special question whether the unsecured condition of the plank from which plaintiff fell was open to his observation, and whether he could have found out its unsecured condition by looking at it, and instructed the jury that an employé assumed the risk of dangers of which he knew, or which were so obvious that he should have known, and, if plaintiff did not use ordinary care for his own protection, he could not recover. The jury answered that "under the evidence they were unable to determine" the special question, and returned a general verdict for plaintiff. Held, that if the jury were unable to determine this special question as to whether the defect was open to plaintiff's observation, which was a fact upon which his right of recovery depended, plaintiff was not entitled to a general verdict, and the judgment will be reversed.

4. SAME — GENERAL VERDICT — SPECIAL VERDICT — PURPOSE.

A general verdict for plaintiff implies a finding in favor of plaintiff of every fact essential to support his cause of action, and the purpose of requiring answers to special questions is that defendant might determine whether the jury would be able to find in favor of plaintiff upon the separate elements of his cause, as well as to find generally for him.

5. SAME—SPECIAL FINDING—QUESTION SUBMITTED—PROPRIETY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 625, provides that, upon request of any party, the court must direct the jury to find a special verdict upon any or all issues, and, if they render a general verdict, to return a written finding upon particular questions of fact. In an action for injuries by falling from a scaffold while in defendant's employment, the court submitted a special question as to whether the unsecured condition of the plank from which plaintiff fell was open to his observation and its unsecured condition could have been found out by looking at it, and at the same time instructed the jury that an employé assumed the risks of obvious dangers and must use ordinary care for his own protection, and, if plaintiff did not do so, could not recover. Held, that the question was authorized by the statute, and defendant was entitled to have them answered.

6. SAME—FAILURE TO MAKE SPECIAL FINDING.

Code Civ. Proc. § 625, provides that, upon request of any party, the court must direct the jury to find a special verdict upon any or all issues, and, if they render a general verdict, to return a written finding upon particular questions of fact. In an action for injuries by falling from a scaffold while in defendant's employment, a special question was submitted to the jury as to whether plaintiff could have observed the unsecured condition of the plank, to which the jury answered that they could not determine the question from the evidence, and to several other special questions submitted, answered, in effect, that they "did not know," or were "unable to determine" them. Held, that the answers did not meet the requirements of the statute, and the failure to find was fatal to the verdict.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR — DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—ON REMAND—PROCEEDINGS ON RETRIAL—LAW OF THE CASE—DECISION BY DIVIDED COURT.

Upon reversal of a judgment for plaintiff, if the appellate judges do not agree upon questions of law, their decision on such questions would not become the law of the case upon a retrial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Henry Larsen against Carl Leonhardt. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Hunsaker & Britt, for appellant. Edwin A. Meserve (Paul H. McPherrin, of counsel), for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action for damages for personal injuries. Defendant appeals from judgment for plaintiff and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff was a hodcarrier, or brickmason's helper, in the employ of defendant, who was a contractor engaged in the erection of a large building in the city of Los Angeles. Plaintiff fell from a scaffold because of stepping upon a loose plank which was insecurely laid on the cross-beams, or putlogs, which supported the floor of the main or permanent scaffold, extending clear across the building, used by the bricklayers and their helpers in laying up the brick in the walls of the building. When the work on the main scaffold reached a stage called "scaffold high," temporary scaffolding, consisting of four ten-inch planks fourteen feet long, was laid upon trusses which were set upon the main scaffold, and were used by the bricklayers to stand upon while laying up the arches to the windows. This temporary scaffolding was moved from arch to arch by the bricklayers and their helpers, and the loose plank which caused plaintiff to fall was moved along with the temporary scaffolding and thrown down alongside of the floor of the main scaffold. While the masons were on the temporary scaffold, the bricklayers' helpers continued to stand upon the main scaffold and to pass up brick and mortar to the brickmasons on the temporary scaffold. Plaintiff had been handing up brick at the end of the temporary scaffold and was called to supply brick to the mason who was working near the center of the arch, and in attempting to pass around the end of one of the trusses, standing upon the main scaffold, so as to be able to hand up the brick from a point near the center of the temporary scaffold, stepped upon the insecure plank, which laid about a foot from the floor of the main scaffold, and was thrown to the ground and injured. It is for damages for this injury that this action was brought.

Quite a number of questions are presented upon this appeal, and as to the determination of some of them the members of this court are not all able to concur. There is one reason, however, which all agree requires that the judgment be reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, and that is the failure of the jury to find upon certain of the special questions which were submitted to them, with the general form of verdict. Of the twelve questions propounded, but four were answered directly. The rest were answered evasively, or, in effect, by "we do not know," or "are unable to determine."

The sixth special question was answered: "Under the evidence submitted, we are unable to determine." The question being: "Was the unsecured condition of the plank from which the plaintiff fell open to the view and observation of the plaintiff, and could the plaintiff have found out the unsecured condition of said plank by looking at it?" The court instructed the jury that an employé assumed the risks of a danger which he knew, or which was so obvious that he must have known, and that, if the plaintiff "failed to use ordinary care for his own protection—did not look out properly for himself"—that he was guilty of contributory negligence. This is the law. Kenna v. Central Pac. R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 26, 35 Pac. 332; Brett v. Frank & Co. (Cal.) 94 Pac. 1051.

If the jury were "unable to determine" from the evidence whether or not the condition of the plank was open to the view of plaintiff, we are at a loss to know how they could render a general verdict in his favor under the instructions of the court. If the jury were unable to find positively that a fact material to the general verdict had not been proven, the plaintiff was not entitled to the verdict, since his case lacked this essential element. The general verdict implied a finding in favor of plaintiff of every fact essential to the support of his cause of action, and the purpose of requiring answers to these special questions was that defendant might determine whether or not the jury would be able to find in favor of plaintiff upon the separate elements of the case when so presented, as well as to render a "lump" verdict in his favor which might conceal some mental reservations. Plyler v. Pacific Portland Cement Co. (Cal.) 92 Pac. 56.

The questions were such as were authorized by section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and defendant was entitled to have them answered. To permit them to be evaded was to deprive the defendant of a statutory right. Such answers as were given to questions 1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, and 12 did not meet the requirements of section 625, and, if allowed, would operate to fritter away and destroy the intention of the Legislature in amending the section.

Any expression of the views of the respective members of the court upon the questions of law as to which all do not agree would be useless, since such opinions would not become the law of the case and could not serve as a rule or guide upon a retrial of the cause.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

DE WITT v. FLORISTON PULP & PAPER CO. (Civ. 409.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
March 26, 1908. Rehearing Denied
May 25, 1908.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—DEATH OF SERVANT—EVIDENCE.

In an action for death of a servant by the bursting of a defective elbow negligently fitted on a steam pipe, evidence held to sustain a verdict against the master.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 954-977.]

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—FORM AND REQUISITES.

Instructions must be read as a whole, and when so read, if not contradictory, and if supplemented by each other, they fairly state the law. An objection that one or more of the instructions do not state all the rule applicable to the evidence with its modifications is unsustainable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 703.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—DEATH OF SERVANT—DEFECTIVE APPLIANCES.

While it is the duty of a master to furnish its employées with safe and suitable appliances, such duty is performed when it exercises reasonable and ordinary care in the selection of appliances for the uses for which they are intended.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 173.]

4. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

Instructions that it was defendant's duty to furnish plaintiff's decedent with safe and suitable appliances was not objectionable for failure to charge that such duty was performed by the exercise of reasonable care, where the court in other instructions in various connections charged that defendant's duty was performed when it exercised reasonable and ordinary care in the selection of the appliance which exploded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 703.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—ASSUMED RISK.

Where intestate was killed by the explosion of an elbow on a steam pipe, but there was no evidence that he knew of any defect in the elbow, he did not assume the risk of danger therefrom.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 574-600.]

6. DEATH—EVIDENCE—HEALTH OF PLAINTIFF.

In an action by intestate's mother as his administratrix for his wrongful death while in defendant's employ, evidence that her health was good, and that she had not been sick since she was nine years old, was admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Death, § 91.]

7. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—DEATH—EVIDENCE.

In an action for death of a servant by the bursting of an elbow on a steam pipe in the engine room of defendant's mill, the court did not err in admitting a declaration by decedent five minutes before the explosion that he was going down to the engine room to look after the engine; there being no contention that decedent was in a place where he should not have been when he was injured.

8. WITNESSES—KNOWLEDGE—EVIDENCE.

In an action for death of a servant by the explosion of a steam pipe elbow, which had been obtained from a scrap pile and placed on the pipe, where a witness had testified on cross-examination that there were many such elbows in use, and that an old elbow which had stood the test was better than a new one, and as to matters in connection with getting elbows from the scrap pile, it was not an abuse of discretion to permit the witness on redirect examination to answer a question as to whether he had ever known of an instance in his experience as a steam fitter where an elbow had been taken from a scrap pile where it had been lying for a year and been put on a steam pipe of the kind in question, to obtain a fuller explanation of the witness' knowledge as to the use of such elbows.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Melinda A. De Witt, as administratrix of the estate of Boone W. De Witt, deceased, against the Floriston Pulp & Paper Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

Snook & Church, for appellant. H. B. M. Miller, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought by the plaintiff as administratrix of the estate of her deceased son, Boone W. De Witt, to recover damages for his death while in the employ of the defendant, such damages alleged to have been caused by its negligence. The case was tried before the court with a jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, upon which judgment was duly entered. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the defendant's said motion.

It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and that the evidence does not show that the defendant was guilty of such negligence as will entitle the plaintiff to recover. This is the first and most important point in the case. It appears without conflict that at the time of the injury the defendant, a corporation, was engaged in the manufacture of pulp and paper in its pulp and paper mills at Floriston, in Nevada county, Cal., and that the deceased was, and for some weeks prior thereto had been, in its employ as a millwright. While so employed in the engine room of the defendant about his usual business doing the work required of him, and with no suggestion of negligence on his part, an iron elbow, forming part of a steam pipe through which steam was conveyed from defendant's boiler at its mill to an engine in said engine room, burst, and by the explosion blew out a partition between the said engine and said elbow, and by the escape of the steam so badly scalded and burned the deceased that he died of his injuries on the following day. It is alleged that the injuries to deceased "were caused by and through the carelessness and negligence of the said defendant in this: That said elbow which exploded as hereinbefore stated was by the said defendant attached to the said steam pipe of which it formed a part on the 26th day of December, 1903, and at the time of and immediately prior to its being so attached it was old, rusty, decayed, defective, unsafe, and unfit for the purposes for which it was intended to be and was used by defendant; that of these facts the said defendant had full notice and knowledge." After a careful examination of the evidence we are of the opinion that it sustains the verdict.

John H. Brightwell, a steam fitter by trade, was working for said defendant in such capacity at the time deceased was injured. He testified in part as follows: "The elbow which exploded was put in by me between the 25th and 28th days of December under the instructions of Mr. Woodford, the master mechanic, who had charge at the mill of putting in these elbows. There was no material about the shop to select from, and I got the elbow from the junk pile at the back of the shop. I told Woodford that I found the elbow out in the junk pile, and said to him that he should put off the matter of putting in this elbow and get some new fittings, and that possibly he could get it from Reno; that the elbow was not safe to put in, and he said, 'Put it in,' he would take the chances of its blowing up, or something to that effect; and that they figured on starting it up on the 28th of December. This conversation occurred in the pipe shop on the 25th of December. On Woodford's instructions I put the elbow on the pipe that was connected with the separator. It was a 6-inch pipe to convey steam from the boiler house to the engine. It was something over 200 feet from the boiler house to the engine room. Steam was first passed through the pipe after the elbow was put on about 7 o'clock in the morning, possibly earlier; had been passing through up to the time of the explosion, which occurred about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. I got that elbow in the junk pile between the machine room and the pipe room. I saw Woodford after I found it, after 12 o'clock Christmas day, and said: 'Frank, I have been looking all over the place for an elbow, and have found only one. I got it out here on the junk pile. I don't think it is safe to put it on the steam line.' I told him it had been lying out there and might be cracked from cold weather. I hadn't seen any indications of it being cracked, but there was sulphite on it, and the threads were bad at one end."

Woodford, the defendant's head machinist, testified in substance as follows: "I had a talk with Brightwell in relation to putting in the separator. The first I remember of saying anything to Mr. Brightwell in regard to that was that Mr. Shepard wanted to get it in its place. Brightwell said they were short of elbows. This was in the pipe shop. He told me he didn't want to put anything on that had been used around the sulphite. I said I guessed we could find some elbows. I found one flange elbow in the warehouse and one screw elbow in the machine shop which looked like a new one. I called Mr. Brightwell's attention to the two elbows, and the same day or the next day I met him between the machine shop and the machine room, and showed him lying along the passageway a screw elbow with a short piece of pipe screwed in each end."

The witness Allen testified that he was present, and heard a conversation between Woodford and Brightwell, which he narrated as follows: "Mr. Woodford walked around and examined the elbow. He said: 'This elbow is all right. Put it in, and I will go out in the machine room and get another.'"

The witness Campbell testified that he heard a conversation between Brightwell and Woodford, and that, as he remembered the conversation, it was as follows: "Brightwell spoke to Woodford and told him that he was not able to find elbows that were safe to put on that steam line, and he also spoke about an elbow found on the scrap pile, and I think he showed this elbow to Woodford, and Woodford told him it was all right, to put it in. Brightwell spoke about putting it off for a day and seeing if they could get an elbow from Reno. Woodford said he didn't think they could get them there."

The witness McKay gives his version of the same or a similar conversation as follows: "Woodford came in, and Brightwell told him that he had hunted all over the place, and he could not find fittings that were good to put on this new work of piping up to the engine—the steam pipe between the engine and boiler. Woodford asked if he had any fittings at all, and he said 'Yes,' that he had one that he found on the scrap pile, and that he didn't like to put it on on that account, that he would rather send to Reno and get one. Woodford walked around and looked at it while it was lying on the bench, and said: 'Jack, that is all right. Go ahead and put it in. That engine must be started up Monday morning.'"

In cross-examination Woodford was questioned as to these conversations and answered as follows: "Q. Mr. Brightwell and three or four witnesses all testified that that elbow which is there on the table, plaintiff's Exhibit A in the case, was shown to you at the mill of the defendant at Floriston a little after 1 o'clock on December 25, 1903, by Mr. Brightwell, and that Mr. Brightwell told you it was not safe to put on the steam line that was used to connect up the receiver. Now are you willing to swear positively that no such statement was ever made to you by Mr. Brightwell at that time and place? A. I cannot recall it; no, sir. Q. But you won't swear positively that that did not occur? A. I won't swear positively that there was not a conversation. I recall some of it."

From the above it may be conceded that the elbow was the part of the pipe that exploded, and that by this means the injury occurred. It exploded on the same day and a few hours after it was put in. The elbow was taken from an old scrap pile. If the testimony of the witnesses above named is true, Woodford was told about the unfitness and unsafeness of the elbow, and notwithstanding he directed that it be put in so that the engine might be started up. The jurors were the exclusive judges of the evidence and of the credibility of the witnesses. They had the right to give credit to the testimony, to draw all reasonable inferences from it and from the facts proven. In this case it would violate the settled practice of the courts of appeal for us to interfere with the verdict.

Counsel claim that the court erred in its instructions to the jury, and special stress is placed upon the giving of the following instructions at the request of the plaintiff: "First. The court instructs you that it is the duty of an employer to furnish his employes with reasonably safe tools and appliances for the doing of the work intended to be done thereby, to furnish them with a reasonably safe and suitable place to work, and to keep such tools, implements, and appliances and such place of work in that condition, and for his failure so to do resulting in injuries to his employes to which their own acts or omissions have not proximately contributed, he is responsible in damages. Second. If, therefore, you believe from all the evidence in the case that the plaintiff's intestate, while in the employment of the defendant, was injured as alleged in the complaint, and died as a result thereof, and such injuries were caused by the failure of the defendant to furnish reasonably safe and suitable tools, implements, or appliances with which to do the work intended to be done thereby, or from its failure to furnish plaintiff's intestate with a reasonably safe and suitable place in which to work, and that the acts or omissions of said deceased did not proximately contribute to such injuries, it will be your duty to render a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant." It is claimed that the above instructions do not state the law correctly, for the reason that they state the law to be that it is the duty of the employer to furnish safe tools and appliances, whereas the law only requires that he should use reasonable and ordinary care in the selection of such tools and appliances.

Instructions must be read as a whole, and when so read, if they are not contradictory, and if, supplemented by each other, they fairly state the law, a case will not be reversed because any one instruction does not state all the rule with its modifications. Now under the law it is the duty of the employer to furnish his employes with reasonably safe tools and appliances for the doing of the work intended to be done thereby. The law is so stated by all the authorities. If it were not so, then we would have the converse—that it is not the duty of the employer to furnish his employes with safe and suitable tools and appliances. The duty of the employer is performed, however, when he exercises reasonable and ordinary care, such as a reasonably prudent man would exercise, in the selection of tools and appliances for the uses and purposes for which they are intended. The instructions complained of do not give the last rule stated, or, in other words, they do not instruct the jury as to when or how the duty is performed; but elsewhere the jury are fully instructed as to such duty. We find that the court, in other parts of its instructions, plainly instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that the elbow in question was reasonably safe and proper to be used by the defendant, you must render your verdict in favor of the defendant. The defendant is not responsible for the use even of an elbow which is shown to be defective, unsafe, or unfit, unless the plaintiff has also proved that the defendant either knew, or had the means of knowing by the exercise of ordinary care, that the elbow was so defective, unsafe, or unfit." And again: "The defendant is not required by law to furnish appliances which are absolutely safe, nor is the defendant required by law to resort to all possible tests or methods of examination. The defendant is required only in this behalf to exercise that reasonable amount of care, skill, and prudence which reasonably careful men exercise in the transaction of their accustomed business." And again: "If the machinery be of an ordinary character, and such as can with reasonable care be used without danger to the employé, it is all that can be required of the employer. This is the limit of his responsibility, and the sum total of his duty."

It seems to us that the instructions complained of could not have misled the jury, when the court, as we have shown, repeated time and again that the duty of the defendant was performed if it exercised reasonable and ordinary care in the selection of the elbow. The jury evidently believed from the testimony that defendant did not use that degree of care which a reasonably prudent man would use in the selection of the elbow. It is no doubt the general rule that, when the court instructs a jury upon what state of fact they may find a verdict, the instructions should include all the facts in controversy upon which evidence has been offered material to the rights of the defendant or the plaintiff as the case may be; but this rule must be reasonably applied, in view of the whole record and all the instructions, for the purpose of determining as to whether or not the jury may, as reasonable men, have been misled by the instruction. The views herein expressed are supported by the decision of our Supreme Court in Stephenson v. Southern Pacific Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407, which was decided by the court in banc after a petition for rehearing had been granted. It is there said: "The following instruction was given at the request of the plaintiff: 'If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence as charged in the complaint, and that the plaintiff was injured thereby, your verdict should be for the plaintiff, and that, whether such negligence appears or is proved by the testimony on the part of the plaintiff or by defendant's own witnesses.' This instruction entirely ignores the question of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and is therefore not in itself a complete and correct statement of the law; and the defendant insists that the judgment should be reversed for this reason. In answer to this contention it is sufficient to say that the rule is well settled here that instructions are to be read and considered as a whole; and the fact that when taken separately some of them may fail to enunciate in precise terms and with legal accuracy propositions of law does not necessarily render them erroneous. It is sufficient if all the instructions taken together, and not being inconsistent with each other or confusing, shall give to the jury a fair and just notion of the law upon the point. Davis v. Button, 78 Cal. 247, 18 Pac. 133, 20 Pac. 545; People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 339, 20 Pac. 719; Monaghan v. Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 81 Cal. 190, 22 Pac. 875; Murray v. White, 82 Cal. 119, 23 Pac. 35; Doty v. O'Neil, 95 Cal. 244, 30 Pac. 526; People v. Turcott, 65 Cal. 126, 3 Pac. 461. Tested by this rule, we do not think the particular instruction complained of could possibly have misled the jury." In this case the instructions must be read as though, after stating, "it will be your duty to find a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant," the following words were added: "But I instruct you that, if the defendant used reasonable and ordinary care in furnishing tools and appliances, it complied with the law, and must be deemed to have furnished reasonably safe and suitable implements or appliances." There is no merit in the claim that the instructions withdrew from the jury the question as to plaintiff's knowledge of any defect in the elbow, or of his assumption of the risk. We find no evidence even tending to show that plaintiff knew of any defect in the elbow, or that he assumed the risk of the danger from such defective elbow.

Other instructions are complained of, but it is sufficient to say that we have examined them, and find no prejudicial error in the giving or refusing of any instruction. The instructions as a whole fully and fairly stated the law to the jury applicable to the case.

The plaintiff testified that she was past 51 years of age; that her health was good. She was then asked, under the defendant's objection, if she had ever been sick in her life. She answered: "Not since I was nine years old." It is now claimed that the court erred in permitting the question and the auswer thereto. It seems to be conceded that the action being by a mother for the loss of her son, the evidence as to the health of plaintiff was material on the question as to her expectancy of life. We cannot say that the fact that plaintiff had not been ill since she was nine years old would not be a factor in determining her condition of health and her expectancy of life. There was no error in the ruling.

The witness Brightwell was permitted, under defendant's objection, to testify to a conversation he had with the deceased about five minutes before the accident. The testimony of the witness, being given in answer to a question, was as follows: "He said: 'I have a letter from some parties that we have met before, and I will let you read it after a while. I am going down to the engine room to look after the engine. I will put in a liner,' or something to that effect. 'I am afraid they are running hot on the boys.'" Defendant moved to strike out from this answer all except the words "I am going down to the engine room." The court in ruling said: "That portion of the answer can stand, that he was going down to the engine room to look after some liner, or something to that effect. The rest will be stricken out." The objection is to that portion of the answer as to the fact that the witness was going "to look after the engine." There is no objection to the portion of the answer in which deceased said he was going to the engine room. The fact that he stated his object in going could not have injured the defendant. It will be presumed that he was going there in and about the business of the defendant. There is no contention that deceased was at a place where he should not have been on an independent mission of his own at the time he was injured. The ruling was not erroneous.

The witness Brightwell was asked in redirect examination the following question: "Did you ever know of an instance in your career as a steam pipe fitter where an elbow was taken off a scrap pile where it had been lying for a year, and you didn't know how it got there or who took it off? In any such case did you ever know of an elbow being put on a steam line of the kind?" To this question the defendant objected on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and not redirect examination, calling for the conclusion of the witness. The court overruled the objection, and the witness answered: "I have never known of any occurrence of that kind." It is now claimed that the question and the answer were immaterial, and that the court erred in not sustaining defendant's objection thereto. The witness had testified, in answer to questions by defendant in cross-examination, that there "are lots of such kind of elbows in use," and that "an old elbow which has stood the test is better than a new one;" and as to other matters in connection with getting the elbow from the scrap pile. The question was evidently asked for the purpose of showing the knowledge of the witness as to the use of old elbows, and of this particular one that was taken from the scrap pile. It was to some extent going over the matters to which the witness had already testified, but for the purpose evidently of obtaining a more full explanation of his knowledge as to the use of such old elbows. In such cases much is left to the discretion of the lower court as to allowing a question of this kind. It would have to be a plain abuse of such discretion in a case where improper testimony material to the issue was by this means brought out that would justify us in interfering with the discretion of the trial court.

Many other rulings are excepted to and discussed in the briefs, but we have not deemed it necessary to consider them in detail. We have noticed those which we deem the most plausible; and, as we find no merit in them, we have not deemed it necessary to discuss the others.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: HALL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

PEOPLE v. AMER. (Cr. 56.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 17, 1908. Rehearing Denied
June 16, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—APPEALABLE ORDER—MOTION IN ARREST.

No appeal lies from an order in a criminal case denying a motion in arrest of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2591.]

2. SAME—APPEAL—OBJECTIONS IN TRIAL COURT—MISCONDUCT OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY.

Misconduct of the district attorney in referring to the failure of accused to testify, aside from any ruling of the court in reference thereto, cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment; it not being a ground for a motion for a new trial.

3. SAME—CONDUCT OF TRIAL—REFERENCE TO FAILURE OR REFUSAL TO TESTIFY.

It does not follow from Pen. Code, § 1323, declaring that the neglect or refusal of defendant to be a witness shall not prejudice or be used against him, that every allusion of the district attorney to the subject constitutes prejudicial error.

4. SAME—APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Misconduct of the district attorney in the argument of a cause must be held to be error without prejudice, where it is inconceivable that an honest jury could have found any other verdict in the absence of such dereliction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3127.]

5. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

It will be presumed that the jury obeyed instructions to disregard improper remarks of the district attorney.

6. SAME—RESERVATION OF EXCEPTIONS.

A remark of the district attorney cannot be held to be error on which to reverse a case, unless a request is made for an instruction to disregard it, and a simple objection thereto is insufficient.

7. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—VENUE OF OFFENSE.

An information alleged that defendant, "on or about the month of January, 1906, * * * was the duly elected, qualified, and acting county treasurer of the county of M., state of California, and as such county treasurer, he, the said W. M. A., then and there had in his possession and under his control, by virtue of his trust and as such county treasurer, * * * the same then and there being public funds of said county of M., * * * which he had received as such county treasurer for the use and benefit of said county, and did then and there fraudulently appropriate such money," etc. Held to sufficiently allege that the offense was committed in M. county.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

William M. Amer was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See 151 Cal. 303, 90 Pac. 698.

Lewis H. Smith, F. G. Ostrander, Raleigh E. Rhodes, and Geo. G. Goucher, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement. He has appealed from the judgment, and there is also an attempted appeal from the order denying defendant's motion in arrest of judgment. This latter must be disregarded. People v. Cadot, 138 Cal. 527, 71 Pac. 649.

Appellant seems to rely mainly upon the affirmation of error committed by virtue of certain remarks of the district attorney in his address to the jury. Among these is the statement that: "The court will instruct you that the defendant does not have to take the stand. That you were told when you were examined touching your qualifications as jurors in the case. He does not have to do it; but, gentlemen of the jury, if he wants to exercise that right with which the Constitution clothes him and extends to him—if he says, 'I will take chances on this proposition, and I will not take the stand, perhaps because of the embarrassing situation I will be placed in and the questions that will be propounded to me'—if he deems it proper to take that chance, why then that is his own business." And again: "And the court will instruct you that the defendant under the law does not have to take the stand; but it seems to me, if you were confronted with the same evidence, and if you were innocent, why a reasonable man would certainly seek to explain it." The court immediately instructed the jury as follows: "Gentlemen of the jury, you are to disregard the statement made by the district attorney. The defendant is not required to take the stand under any circumstances, nor is he ever required to go upon the stand and make any explanation, and you will consider this case as if the statement had not been made." The instruction of the court was given in view of section 1323 of the Penal Code, providing that: "A defendant in a criminal proceeding or action cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself. * * * His neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding." This alleged misconduct of the district attorney was urged strongly by defendant as a reason why a new trial should be given him, and his motion to that effect was granted by the trial court, but the order was afterwards reversed by the Supreme Court. People v. Amer (Cal.) 90 Pac. 698. In the discussion of the question it is said by the court, through Mr. Justice Angellotti: "It appears very clear to us that mere misconduct of the district attorney is not included within any of the statutory grounds upon which a trial court may grant a motion for a new trial. We are brought somewhat reluctantly to this conclusion, in view of the apparently well-settled doctrine in this state that the appellate court will order a new trial on account of such misconduct, where it is prejudicial to the rights of a defendant, and as long as this rule obtains, it is obviously preferable that the trial court should have the power to entertain a motion on this ground. But that such a ground can avail in support of the statutory motion for a new trial can, by no means, be held to be settled by the decisions, and such a conclusion would be so opposed to the plain terms of the statute that we cannot assent to it"—and in suggesting a redress that might be open to defendant for such misconduct it is declared: "In view of the fact that the misconduct of the district attorney has so often been held to constitute a sufficient ground for reversal of the judgment, it may be that it has become a settled rule that the question of the misconduct of the district attorney will be considered upon an appeal from the judgment, when presented by a proper record, and the points saved for review by exception."

But it is clear that there is no authority whatever in the statute for holding that such misconduct of the district attorney, aside from any ruling of the court in reference thereto, can be properly reviewed on appeal from the judgment, unless it is a ground for a motion for a new trial. As said in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice McFarland, supra: "The judgment would not show any erroneous rulings or action by the court; and on such appeal the judgment could be reversed only on the general ground that a verdict, founded in whole or in part upon the effect of a violation of the law by the district attorney, would be a verdict contrary to law." But, as declared by him, this is one of the grounds for a new trial, and "if a verdict founded upon the misconduct of the district attorney is not a verdict contrary to law, then it cannot be touched, either on appeal from the judgment, or on motion for a new trial." If any other rule has been established, it must be by virtue of judicial legislation, as there is no statutory warrant for it. Section 1259 of the Penal Code provides what may be reviewed upon an appeal from the judgment, as follows: "Upon an appeal taken by the defendant from a judgment the court may review any intermediate order or ruling involving the merits, or which may have affected the judgment." In People v. Keyser, 53 Cal. 184, it is said: "The defendant may appeal from the judgment, without having made a motion for a new trial; and on appeal he may rely upon any of the grounds of exception mentioned in section 1170 of the Penal Code, and in such case he must have a bill of exceptions settled, as provided in section 1171." It is obvious that said section 1170 does not apply here, as no complaint is made as to the action of the court in reference to said misconduct of the district attorney. In fact, the trial judge was prompt and active in a commendable endeavor to remove from the minds of the jury any prejudicial effect of said comments. It may be presumed that the Legislature intended to leave the matter to the discretion of the trial judge, knowing that his powers are ample to control the conduct of the officers of the court. It is at least unwarrantable to hold that the provisions of the statute contemplate that the correction of the error cannot be reached on motion for a new trial, but must await the more remote action of the appellate court on appeal from the judgment. But conceding that the question can be reviewed, it does not follow that every allusion on the part of the district attorney to the subject constitutes prejudicial error. Indeed, the statute does not expressly interdict any reference to the defendant's failure to testify, but declares that the circumstance shall not prejudice or be "used" against him. It is difficult to understand how a mere reference to or comment upon a fact known to the jury, made by the district attorney, can be considered prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant. That would be attaching a peculiar magic to the words of said official, which they ordinarily do not possess.

But admitting that it is error for the district attorney to comment upon the circumstance, notwithstanding it is within the knowledge of the jury, and it is referred to by defendant's counsel, and the judge of the court, it is clear in the case at bar that the error was without prejudice. This follows from the nature of the evidence against defendant. We shall not review it, but deem it sufficient to say that it is inconceivable that any honest jury could have found any other verdict, in the absence of any dereliction on the part of the district attorney. His objectionable remarks, in other words, could not have been considered nor used by the jury to the prejudice of the defendant. The rule is stated in 2 Ency. of Pleading & Practice, p. 725, as follows: "In any case it seems that a new trial will not be granted, when the evidence so conclusively shows the defendant's guilt that the jury could not have returned a verdict in his favor without willfully disregarding their duty." To the same effect in People v. McRoberts, 1 Cal. App. 28, 81 Pac. 735, it is said: "In the present case the homicide was admitted, and the evidence was such as to make it reasonably certain that the jury was not led by the misconduct of the district attorney to return a verdict which they otherwise would not have found." The same rule is announced in People v. Salas, 2 Cal. App. 540, 84 Pac. 295, and State v. Ahern, 54 Minn. 196, 55 N. W. 959. But, as we have already seen, the court promptly instructed the jurors as to their duty in the premises, and we must presume that they acted accordingly. There is much force in Mr. Justice Shaw's statement in the concurring opinion in People v. Bradbury, 151 Cal. 675, 91 Pac. 497, that: "The language of the opinions in some of the previous decisions of this court goes too far in support of the theory that there is some sort of a presumption that the misconduct of a district attorney will prevail with the jury, and influence them in the face of the positive instructions of the court that they must not consider the instructions thus improperly made. The presumption should always be that a jury has obeyed the instructions of the court, and, unless the contrary is shown by the record, that presumption should prevail in the appellate courts." See, also, People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 293, 44 N. E. 976; Blume v. State, 154 Ind. 356, 56 N. E. 771.

Appellant also complains of a statement made by the district attorney in reference to witness Crow. In reply to an attack upon said witness by appellant's counsel, the district attorney said: "Now, then, as to Mr. Herman Crow, Mr. Crow has always held a position of respect in this community. I have known the gentleman for a number of years, and I have always heard him well spoken of. I never have heard anything against him, except that which was uttered by the attorneys in this case." If the defendant was dissatisfied with said comment, he should have requested the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. He contented himself, however, with a simple objection to the remark and the language of the court in People v. Ye Foo, 4 Cal. App. 730, 89 Pac. 450, is applicable here: "The court was not asked to strike out the objectionable remark, nor does it appear that the court ruled upon an exception. It is but fair to require defendant's attorney, in case of objectionable remarks by the district attorney, to call the court's attention to them then and there, and invoke the aid of the court to prevent the remarks from injuring the defendant, before he will be allowed to urge the matter as error in this court. In such case the court will not hold the remark error upon which to reverse the case. People v. Shears, 133

Cal. 150, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Beaver, 83 Cal. 419, 23 Pac. 321; People v. Shem Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 383, 1 Pac. 347; People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 650, 49 Pac. 842; Lunsford v. Dietrich, 93 Ala. 565, 9 South. 308, 30 Am. St. Rep. 79."

The foregoing is a sufficient answer to the contention in reference to the district attorney's remark about the collection of the money from the surety company. Indeed, what he said was strictly responsive to a declaration of appellant's counsel, and, besides, it was not calculated to prejudice defendant.

There is no merit in the contention that the information is defective. It is assailed principally upon the ground that it does not appear therein that the offense was committed within Madera county. But we can see no uncertainty in that respect. The information alleges that "said W. M. Amer, on or about the month of January, 1906, * * * was the duly elected, qualified, and acting county treasurer of the county of Madera, state of California, and as such county treasurer, he, the said W. M. Amer, then and there had in his possession, and under his control, by virtue of his trust and as such county treasurer, * * * the same then and there being public funds of said county of Madera * * * which he had received as such county treasurer for the use and benefit of said county, and did then and there fraudulently appropriate such money," etc.

Appellant can hardly be serious in his claim that the venue of the offense is left in doubt. No one of ordinary understanding would be uncertain as to the reference of "then and there." People v. Thompson (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 386, and cases cited.

The record discloses no prejudicial error, and the judgment is affirmed.

I concur in the judgment: CHIPMAN, P. J.

HART, J. I concur in the judgment. I desire, however, to explicitly place my assent to the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice BURNETT upon the point of practice discussed in his opinion with reference to the alleged misconduct of the district attorney, upon the ground that the evidence disclosed by the record appears to be so conclusive of the guilt of the appellant that, in my opinion, said misconduct could not have been prejudicial. Under the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in People v. Amer (Cal.) 90 Pac. 698, the misconduct of a district attorney in a criminal case, where the same is assigned as error, cannot be reviewed on an appeal from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Under the rule intimated by Mr. Justice BURNETT in the case at bar, such misconduct cannot be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment. Thus, if both conclusions be correct, a defendant in a criminal case is afforded absolutely no protection against the most flagrant act of a prosecuting officer in his argument to the jury. Such officer may, with impunity, if he so pleases, import the most damaging extraneous matters into the case, and thus accomplish a conviction where, perhaps, the evidence is so slight that a verdict of acquittal would be the only just one, but which could not, under our constitutional provision limiting appellate courts to the consideration of questions of law alone, be disturbed by the reviewing courts. The settled rule in this state under the decision in People v. Amer, supra, now is, as we have seen, that the misconduct of the district attorney is not an error which can be considered on an appeal from the order refusing a motion for a new trial. While there seems to be no answer to the conclusion, suggested in the main opinion here, that such misconduct is not reviewable on an appeal from the judgment, I think that, under the circumstances, it should be held to be, even if such a ruling may be said to partake of the nature of "judicial legislation." I had always been under the impression that the point could be reviewed on the appeal from the order. It always struck me that, if it could be said that the misconduct of a prosecuting officer in a criminal case was prejudicial to the defendant, a verdict against him would, under such circumstances, be one against law; that, if it could be said that a verdict was thus brought about, then the defendant had not been convicted according to "the law of the land," for most certainly it would appear to be a proposition, logically unassailable, that if he had been convicted through remarks of the district attorney having no basis whatever in anything properly admitted into the record, such conviction would not be according to law, or, in other words, that the defendant had not been tried and found guilty through the fair and impartial trial guaranteed to him by the law of the land. The effect of the decision of the Supreme Court and of the conclusion, if tenable, in the main opinion in the case at bar on the point under consideration, is a declaration to public prosecutors that there is no limit to the extent to which they are privileged to go beyond the record in a criminal case in their argument to the jury.

I cannot subscribe to the proposition.

8 Cal. App. 215

BORELLO v. SUPERIOR COURT OF AMADOR COUNTY et al. (Civ. 471.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.)

April 27, 1908.)

1. PROHIBITION—GROUNDS—JURISDICTION OF LOWER COURT.

The only question involved on an application for a writ of prohibition to restrain a lower court from proceeding with a criminal trial is whether or not that court has jurisdiction to determine the matter before it and of the person or persons accused.

2. SAME.

Where an indictment charges an offense of which the court has jurisdiction, and so far as the record discloses invests the court with jurisdiction of the person of accused, the court has jurisdiction, upon motion to set aside the indictment, to determine whatever questions of law or fact are involved in the motion, and hence rulings refusing, after indictment, to allow inquiry into the qualifications of individual grand jurors, or as to whether there was reason for a challenge to the panel, on the ground that accused had examined the grand jury when impaneled and had declined to exercise any challenge and had waived the right, were within the court's jurisdiction, and, even if erroneous, were not void, and cannot be reviewed on an application for prohibition.

3. GRAND JURY—QUALIFICATION OF JURORS—EXAMINATION BY ACCUSED BEFORE ACCEPTANCE.

Under the mode of initiating a prosecution by indictment, expressly authorized by Const. art. 1, § 8, and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, a trial court is not required to grant a person accused of a public offense who may be indicted, but who has not been held to answer, the privilege of examining persons summoned to serve on the grand jury as to their qualifications, before they have been impaneled and sworn; but, if such privilege is allowed, the court is not required, on motion to set aside the indictment, to allow accused to go over the same ground again.

4. PROHIBITION—GROUNDS—JURISDICTION OF LOWER COURT.

As the privilege granted an accused, who has not been held to answer, to examine grand jurors touching their qualifications before they are impaneled and sworn, is merely one of grace, and not of right, a restriction of accused to the examination of only a few of them could at the most only be error and could not be reviewed by prohibition.

5. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—MOTION TO SET ASIDE—GROUNDS.

Under Pen. Code, § 995, prescribing the grounds of a motion to set aside an indictment, but which does not specify among them the incompetency of the evidence received by the grand jury, that ground cannot be urged.

6. GRAND JURY—DISCLOSURE OF PROCEEDINGS.

Under Pen. Code, § 926, requiring the observance of secrecy regarding testimony before a grand jury, except where it is sought to ascertain whether it is consistent with that given by the witness before the court, or where the witness is charged with perjury in giving the testimony or upon trial thereof, the character of evidence received by the grand jury cannot be shown on motion to set aside the indictment.

7. PROHIBITION—GROUNDS—RULINGS ON ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE ON MOTIONS.

The ruling of a trial court refusing to allow the character of evidence received by the grand jury to be shown on a motion to set aside their indictment, being within the jurisdiction of the court, cannot be reviewed by prohibition.

Petition by Agostino Borello for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court of Amador county and E. C. Rust, judge thereof, from trying petitioner for arson. Writ denied.

Alfred H. Cohen, Jas. H. Creely, and D. B. Spaganati, for petitioner. C. P. Vicini, for respondents.

HART, J. The petitioner and three other persons were indicted by the grand jury of Amador county for the crime of arson. A separate indictment was found against each of the parties. The object of the present proceeding is to secure a writ of prohibition from this court to restrain the court below and the judge thereof from putting the petitioner upon his trial upon the charge for which he was indicted, upon the ground, for certain alleged reasons, that respondents are without jurisdiction to try said petitioner. A petition for a like remedy has also been filed in behalf of each of the other defendants; but the specific grounds upon which it is sought to prohibit respondents from trying them are, confessedly, the same as those involved here, as are also the facts, and therefore the decision in those cases will follow the conclusion reached in the case under consideration.

The record shows that the petitioner had been arrested and was held in custody under a warrant of arrest issued by the justice of the peace of township No. 1 of Amador county, acting in his ex officio capacity of magistrate, upon a complaint filed with and before said officer, charging said petitioner with the crime of arson. Before the grand jury which found the indictment had been impaneled and sworn, the petitioner not having been preliminarily examined for the offense for which he had been arrested, the respondent judge of the superior court caused said petitioner, with the other defendants, to be brought into court, and thereupon notified them and their attorneys that a grand jury was about to be organized; that said body would probably inquire into the cases of the petitioner and the others; that they could be present during the impanelment of said jury, and would be accorded the privilege of examining each of said jury for the purpose of interposing challenges to such as they might determine upon such examination would not be likely to act fairly and impartially toward them. The proposition thus made by the judge was acceded to by all the parties and the impanelment of the grand jury proceeded with. Each of the jurors was questioned by the district attorney and counsel for the accused as to his qualifications to serve as such, and, after 19 had thus been examined, the court asked counsel if they desired to exercise the right of challenge, to which both the district attorney and the attorneys for the accused replied in the negative. Thereupon a foreman was appointed, and the jurors sworn. Thereafter the grand jury, as seen, returned indictments against all the defendants. Subsequently a motion was made to set aside said indictments upon all the statutory grounds. The court heard the motion, and, in support of some of the grounds thereof, permitted counsel for the accused to examine such of the grand jurors as they called to the witness stand. It is now claimed that the court refused to hear certain testimony which petitioner offered to introduce in substantiation of certain grounds upon which he relied for the allowance of the motion to set aside the indictment. Accompanying the record here is a bill of exceptions, showing in full the proceedings had upon the motion. This bill is not only authenticated by the certificate of the judge, but is approved as correct by the attorneys representing both the people and the accused. The bill shows, among other things, that the petitioner, after his indictment, filed in writing, specifying therein the grounds thereof, challenges to certain individual grand jurors and also a challenge to the panel. The court denied the challenge to the panel, and also denied the challenges to the individual grand jurors, refusing to take testimony with respect thereto; the ruling as to the latter challenges being based upon the ground that "the defendant had been given an opportunity to examine said grand jury at the time the same was impaneled, as above set forth, and had done so and declined to exercise any challenges and had waived the right."

The refusal of the court to allow testimony to be received bearing upon the question of the qualifications of the individual grand jurors is one of the principal complaints of petitioner; but we think it is clear that, even if the rulings thereon were incorrect, they only constituted errors committed by the court in a proceeding of which it had jurisdiction, if such a proceeding as the "challenge to the panel" and "the challenges to the individual grand jurors" after indictment is to be viewed, as it must be so regarded if anything at all, as merely two of the grounds upon which the indictment is asked to be set aside. In addition to said written challenge to the panel and challenges to the individual jurors, there was filed by the petitioner a motion to set aside the indictment on the grounds specified in section 995 of the Penal Code other than "any ground which would have been good ground for a challenge, either to the panel or to any individual grand juror."

The only question which is involved in a proceeding of the nature of the one before us is whether or not the court has jurisdiction to hear and determine the matter before it and of the person of the petitioner. In the case at bar, the indictment charges an offense of which the court has jurisdiction, and, so far as the record discloses, it invested the court with jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner. The court therefore had jurisdiction, upon a motion to set aside said indictment, to hear and determine whatever questions of law or fact were involved in the motion, and its decision, although it may be erroneous, is not void. On the contrary, it is valid and binding until reversed on appeal. Ex parte Nicholas, 91 Cal. 641, 28 Pac. 47; Ex parte Walpole, 85 Cal. 362, 24 Pac. 657; Ex parte Fowler (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 958. Therefore the rulings of the court refusing, under the circumstances shown by the record, to allow inquiry into the question of the qualifications of the individual jurors or as to whether there was reason for a challenge to the panel, were within the jurisdiction of the court to make on the motion, and if errors were thus committed they cannot be reviewed in this proceeding. It may be parenthetically stated that, if the court had refused absolutely to hear the motion at all, then a different question would arise, determinable in some appropriate proceeding. But no such proposition is presented here. The court did pass upon all the questions presented by the motion, and it had undoubted jurisdiction to do so, and, whether right or wrong, its action cannot be reviewed here. But we do not hesitate to go further and declare our opinion to be that the record shows that the action of the court refusing to hear the evidence offered relative to the qualifications of the jurors after the indictment was found and filed was justifiable and proper.

The opportunity granted to the petitioner of examining the individual grand jurors precedently to accepting and swearing them to serve as such jurors was, under our present system, only a privilege accorded to petitioner as of grace and not as of right, for the petitioner had not then been "held to answer." Kitts v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 90 Pac. 977. In other words, under the mode of initiating a prosecution for a felony by indictment authorized by the present Constitution (article 1, § 8) and the laws passed in pursuance thereof, a trial court is not required, and therefore could not be compelled, to grant a person who may be accused of a public offense, and who may be indicted by the grand jury, and who has not been "held to answer," the privilege, before they are impaneled and sworn, of examining citizens summoned to serve on such jury touching their qualifications to inquire into and act upon his case. But the court having done so in this case, thus giving the petitioner an opportunity, before the jury was organized and at the time of its impanelment, of showing a cause for challenging any particular juror and fully going into the question of the qualifications of the entire panel, there was no legal reason, we think, requiring the court, on the motion to set aside the indictment, to receive testimony bearing upon matters into which full inquiry had already been made. The practice of allowing an accused person, whose case is likely to be inquired into by a grand jury about to be impaneled, an opportunity to challenge citizens summoned to serve on such jury during its impanelment and before the jury is legally organized, upon the grounds of challenge specified by the Code sections, is seldom resorted to or permitted now. We cannot, however, see any legal objection to the practice; but, when such a course is pursued, the accused person is given an advantage to which, where not previously held to answer, he is not entitled as of right, and in such case there is no reason which suggests itself to this court why he should be allowed, on the motion to set aside the indictment, to go over ground which has already been fully exploited and explored.

There is no ground for the complaint that the court restricted the petitioner to the examination of only a few of the grand jurors upon matters involved in certain grounds of the motion other than those of which we have been speaking. The record shows that the judge stated to the attorneys that they could take the testimony of such of the grand jurors as they desired to call to the stand. Counsel seem to have failed to cause all the jurors to be present—at least, there were certain members thereof who failed to respond to their names when called. And, again it may be said, even if the court had ruled as counsel insist that it did upon this point, the ruling could only be error which, like the question previously discussed, cannot be reviewed in this proceeding.

One of the grounds specified in the motion is that the grand jury found its indictment against the petitioner on illegal evidence, contrary to the mandate on this subject of section 919 of the Penal Code. The question thus raised is not one, in our opinion, which can be considered on a motion to set aside an indictment. Brobeck v. Superior Court (Cal.) 92 Pac. 646. In other words, it is not specified by section 995 of the Penal Code as one of the grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside, and it has been held that where a statute prescribes the grounds of a motion to quash or set aside an indictment and omits as one of them the question of the competency of the evidence presented to and received by the grand jury, the effect is to remove that question from the field of inquiry. 6 Ency. of Ev. p. 255, and cases therein cited. We entertain no doubt that the Legislature with deliberate design omitted to include in the grounds for setting aside an indictment the question of the character of the evidence received and acted upon by the grand jury, for if the rule were otherwise no indictment would ever be preferred which would not be followed by a dragnet inquisition into all the "doings" and proceedings of the grand jury, thus uselessly entailing endless and vexatious trouble and confusion and disclosing secrets of the grand jury's deliberations which it is the policy of the law to preserve inviolate. Besides, section 926 of the Penal Code seems to restrict the purposes for which testimony given before a grand jury may be disclosed, and the proposition here does not come within either the letter or spirit of that section. In any event, the ruling of the court refusing to allow the character of the evidence received by the grand jury to be shown was within its jurisdiction and cannot be rectified or corrected in this proceeding.

For the foregoing reasons, the order to show cause will be discharged, and the prayer for a peremptory writ denied.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

PEOPLE v. MAUGHS. (Cr. 59.)

1. JURY—JURORS—FORMATION OF OPINION—EFFECT.

Under the express terms of Pen. Code, § 1076, the formation and expression of an opinion upon a matter to be submitted to a jury, founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety, do not disqualify one as a juror, if it appears to the court, upon his declaration, that he can and will act impartially.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—DISCRETION—CONDUCT OF TRIAL—CHALLENGES TO JURORS.

Where the answers of a juror upon his voir dire involve conflicting statements bearing upon his qualifications, it is for the trial court to decide whether he is qualified, and its finding thereon cannot be disturbed by a reviewing court unless it appears as matter of law that the court erred.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3056.]

3. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

Error in disallowing a challenge to a juror for actual bias is not available upon a motion for a new trial or on appeal, where accused did not exercise all his peremptory challenges.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3117.]

4. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where appellant complains of the disallowance of challenges for cause to jurors, it cannot be presumed, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that he exhausted all his peremptory challenges.

5. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO STATE SPECIAL PLEAS TO JURY.

Though under Pen. Code, § 1093, subd. 1, the clerk at the trial should have stated to the jury all accused's pleas before any evidence was received, and a failure to state special pleas of "former acquittal" and "once in jeopardy," in addition to stating the general plea of not guilty, until after several witnesses had testified for the state, was error, the error was harmless where no proof was offered in support of the special pleas.

6. SAME—SEPARATION OF JURY—EFFECT.

Where the trial judge did not intend, and accused and his counsel did not understand, that an order directing the sheriff to take charge of jurors chosen pending the selection of the whole panel, was one authorized by Pen. Code, § 1121, authorizing a trial court to order jurors sworn to try an action to be kept in charge of an officer who must not allow them to communicate with others, etc., the separation of the jury during the trial, after such order, not shown by the record to have been prejudicial to the accused, was not reversible error.

7. DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS—DUTIES.

Practicing lawyers are supposed to watch reported cases, particularly where they dispose of questions with which they have to deal in some impending trial, and hence it was the state's attorney's duty, in the second trial of a murder case, to call the court's attention to remarks of the Supreme Court in the same case on a former appeal, on a question before the trial court in the second trial.

8. WITNESSES—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF ACCUSED.

Under Pen. Code, § 1323, providing that if accused offers himself as a witness he may be cross-examined as to all matters about which he was examined in chief, where accused was asked on his direct examination why he shot decedent, and he answered that he did it to keep decedent from killing him, the state, on cross-examination, could inquire into all the circumstances of the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 979-984.]

9. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—DISCRETION—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—ORDER OF PROOF.

The reception of evidence in the state's original case properly admissible in rebuttal is not reversible error, since, under Pen. Code, § 1094, the order of proof is largely within the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3063.]

10. SAME.

Though in a murder trial the corpus delicti should have been proved before the reception of testimony as to statements by accused concerning the circumstances of the homicide, failure to do so was not reversible error, since, under Pen. Code, § 1094, the order of proof is largely in the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3063.]

11. SAME—EVIDENCE—USE OF MODEL.

In a murder trial, it was not error to receive in evidence a model representing the porch upon which the homicide occurred because it failed to show vines and a tree, and fences between the porch and the place where the eye-witnesses to the homicide sat, where the state's attorney stated that it was not offered to show whether the witnesses could have seen what happened, where no other purpose was attempted to be accomplished in using it than to show the distances of certain points from the others on the porch as they existed when the homicide occurred, and where photographs and testimony were received showing the location of the vines, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 893.]

12. SAME—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL—MATTER COVERED.

The refusal of instructions requested is not error where they are covered by those given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1990-1995.]

13. SAME.

In a murder trial, it was not prejudicial error to instruct on the question of accused's flight, where a witness testified that he met accused riding away from the place where the homicide occurred, and that accused stated that he had killed decedent and desired to procure money with which to escape, though accused finally surrendered himself voluntarily.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1980-1985.]

14. SAME.

An instruction based on Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 2, providing that a jury need not decide in conformity to the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number, etc., was not prejudicial error, though part of it was ambiguous, where the matter was clearly presented in the other part.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1990-1995.]

15. SAME—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was not prejudicial error in a murder trial to refuse to give an instruction in the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 1845, providing that a witness can testify to those facts only which he knows personally, except, etc., and stating that a jury must disregard any testimony involving a witness' belief, inferences, etc., since if testimony of the latter character was received, it must have been received through accused's failure to object to it or to have it stricken out, and since if such testimony was given and then stricken, the jury must have known that they could not consider it from what the court told them in its general charge concerning their duties.

16. SAME—QUESTIONS TO WITNESSES.

In a murder trial, any error in allowing the state to ask witnesses whether they had heard testimony at the former trial describing the condition or situation of decedent's body after the homicide, was harmless where the witnesses either stated that they did not hear such testimony or could not recall it if they did.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3129-3131.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Richard B. Maughs was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order refusing a new trial. Affirmed.

See 149 Cal. 253, 86 Pac. 187.

J. W. Knox, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The jury returned a verdict against the appellant of murder of the first degree, and, in the exercise of the discretion conferred upon it by section 190 of the Penal Code, fixed the penalty at imprisonment for life. After the presentation and denial of a motion for a new trial, the defendant was, in accordance with the terms of said verdict, sentenced by the court to imprisonment in the state penitentiary for the term of his natural life. This appeal is from the judgment and the order refusing defendant a new trial. The crime of which appellant was convicted grew out of the killing by him of one Charles Zander by means of a pistol or revolver.

This is the second trial of the cause, the first having resulted in the conviction of the defendant of murder in the first degree and the imposition of a judgment involving the death penalty, but the judgment and order therein were reversed upon appeal to the Supreme Court and the cause remanded for a new trial. People v. Maughs, 149 Cal. 255, 86 Pac. 187.

The defendant, for some time prior to the homicide, had been in the service, as a sort of general "utility man," of the deceased and one B. E. Cole, on a "ranch" in Merced county, not far from the line dividing said county and San Benito county, which the latter were working as copartners. The duties of the defendant (who, at the time of the homicide, was between 55 and 60 years of age) were to look after and care for the chickens, keep the fences inclosing the ranch in repair, cook the meals, and, in short, to perform all such other services as ordinarily come within the duties of a domestic servant. Cole and Zander, during the morning hours of the day upon which the killing occurred, had been going over the ranch, repairing fences which had been through some cause broken down. While the partners were so engaged, a neighbor came along, and, addressing them, said that he had informed Maughs "about that break" in the fence two or three days before. This seemed to enrage Zander, who referred to Maughs in opprobrious language. Near the noon hour the deceased and Cole returned to the house. After they put their horses in the stable, Zander hastened, apparently in a state of anger, to the house, Cole remaining in a vacant lot near the barn. Zander, upon reaching the interior of the house, proceeded to chide Maughs for neglect in repairing the fence and for not getting "the cattle out of the horse corral." The defendant's version of what occurred in the house is to the effect that Zander called him (defendant) vile names, threatened to do him personal violence, and then started to leave the house in a state of intense anger and excitement, but had gone only a short distance when he turned around and ordered Maughs to "roll his blankets" and "get off this ranch," to which latter suggestion defendant replied, "All right, I can do that." The defendant testified that, being apprehensive that the deceased, who was young, strong, robust and active, might attempt to injure him, he went into a room where several different kinds of weapons were kept, and placed his own pistol in his pocket. Thereafter, Zander returned to the house by way of the back porch, and the defendant was then in the act of stepping out of the kitchen on to said porch, when the deceased renewed the quarrel, repeatedly addressing the defendant as a "son of a bitch," and applying to him other like epithets. The defendant declares that the deceased held an open knife in his hand at this time, and after threatening the defendant rushed toward the latter with his left hand, holding the knife, upraised, as if he were going to make an assault, whereupon the defendant drew his revolver and fired at Zander, "without taking aim," the ball entering the head and into the brain, and necessarily producing a mortal wound.

When the shooting occurred, Cole and a man named Gallagher were sitting on a wagon tongue something over 100 feet from where the deceased and the defendant were quarreling and from where the fatal shot was fired. A portion of that side of the porch, to the right of which Cole and Gallagher were sitting, was inclosed with trellis work, over and about which a thick vine extending from the ground to the top of the porch had grown. There were also between the point at which Cole and Gallagher were sitting and the porch on which the shooting took place two chicken fences, about six feet high, made of pickets set together closely. Gallagher testified that, while he heard the voices of the deceased and the defendant just prior to hearing the shot, he paid no attention to what they were saying, and he could therefore give none of the language or words used by them. Cole testified that he was interested in the quarrel and could hear distinctly what was said. He testified that he saw Zander go to the pump located on the back porch; that he judged from Zander's voice that he was very angry; that he heard Maughs go into the kitchen from the sitting room, and before he got to the door he said he was "getting damn tired of this noise"; that he had heard enough of it, "and he says, 'Let this be your last word,'" and shot, and the witness stated that immediately following the shot he heard Zander "hit the floor," by which he meant that he heard the sound made by the falling of deceased's body upon and striking the floor. Cole claimed that he could see a part of the person of Zander when the latter was on the back porch and the shot was fired. The facts thus narrated are gleaned, it is to be observed, from the testimony of the two principal witnesses—Cole for the people, and the defendant in his own behalf.

There is no serious claim that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. It is, however, contended that there are many errors in the record, any one of which is of sufficient force and importance to entitle the defendant to a new trial. These alleged errors are involved in the rulings of the court upon questions of the admissibility of testimony and in the giving and rejection and modification of instructions.

1. Appellant insists that the court erred in its rulings disallowing challenges to jurors Hardman and Phenegar on the grounds of actual bias. Each of these jurors, it clearly appears from the record, declared that he had read in the local newspapers accounts of the homicide, and of the verdict of the coroner's jury finding that the crime of murder had been committed, and had also heard the case discussed by neighbors and acquaintances, and from these had formed an opinion upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the defendant. Each stated that, notwithstanding the opinion thus formed, he could and would try the case fairly and impartially, and regardless of such opinion, and return a verdict in accordance with the evidence adduced at the trial and the instructions of the court. It does not appear from the examination of these jurors that either ever discussed the case with any one claiming to know the facts or with any of the witnesses who testified at the trial. The rule of law in this state—so well and generally understood that it is even familiar to laymen—is that the formation and expression of an opinion upon a matter to be submitted to a jury, founded upon public rumor, statements in public journals, or common notoriety, do not disqualify a person from serving upon such jury, if it appears to the court, upon his declaration, under oath or otherwise, that he can and will, notwithstanding such an opinion, act impartially and fairly in the trial and determination of the questions submitted to him. Pen. Code, § 1076. And even where the answers of a juror upon his voir dire involve conflicting statements bearing upon the question of his qualification to serve, it is with the trial court to decide whether he is qualified, and its finding thereon, whatever it may be, cannot be disturbed by a reviewing court, unless it can truthfully be said that the testimony thus adduced upon its face shows that, as a matter of law, the court erred in its ruling. People v. Fredericks, 106 Cal. 559, 39 Pac. 944; People v. Ochoa, 142 Cal. 274, 75 Pac. 847; People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 86, 60 Pac. 670; People v. Evans, 124 Cal. 210, 56 Pac. 1024; People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 487, 56 Pac. 251; People v. Scott, 123 Cal. 435, 56 Pac. 102. But, as a matter of fact, there is no conflict in the statements of the jurors in the case at bar. They each admitted entertaining the opinion, formed from what they had read and heard, that the defendant was guilty of the crime charged against him. This opinion having been founded on newspaper reports and common notoriety and public rumor, and each juror having declared that, notwithstanding such opinion, he could try the issues submitted to him impartially and fairly, neither was shown to be disqualified under the law. If the mere fact of forming and expressing an opinion thus founded would, per se, disqualify a citizen from serving as a juror in a criminal case, then, indeed, the trial and punishment of persons accused of crime would, under our system, be at an end, for it must be true that every person of ordinary intelligence necessarily forms an opinion of some kind upon every subject concerning which he has read accounts in the public journals or about which he has had discussions with other people. But, aside from these considerations, it is to be noted that it does not affirmatively appear from the record that the appellant had exhausted all the peremptory challenges which he was entitled to exercise, and we think it is well settled that even where the court errs in denying a challenge for actual bias, and the defendant has not exercised all his peremptory challenges upon the completion of the panel, the error of the court in disallowing the challenge cannot be made available either upon a motion for a new trial or on appeal to the advantage of appellant. The reason of this rule is, obviously, that the defendant has no ground for complaint when he has it in his power to remove the objectionable juror by other means than those he had unsuccessfully attempted to invoke. So, even if it could be said that the court erred in disallowing these challenges, the appellant has thus failed to affirmatively show through the record here, as it was his duty to do if he could, that he was prejudiced thereby, for there can be indulged by this court no presumption, in the absence of a showing in the record to the contrary, that the defendant exhausted all his peremptory challenges.

2. It seems that, upon his arraignment, the defendant, in addition to entering a plea of "not guilty" to the charge alleged in the information, also interposed the pleas of "former acquittal" and "once in jeopardy," and that at the trial the clerk of the court, upon reading the information to the jury, stated to the latter that the defendant had entered a plea of "not guilty" to the information, but omitted to state that the special pleas mentioned had been also interposed. After a number of witnesses had given testimony for the prosecution and before the people closed their original case, the district attorney called the attention of the court to the omission by the clerk to state to the jury said special pleas. Thereupon the court, against the objection of counsel for appellant, directed the clerk to state to the jury all the pleas interposed by the defendant. It was undoubtedly the duty of the clerk to have stated to the jury all the pleas of the defendant to the crime charged against him in the information before any evidence was received (section 1093, subd. 1, Pen. Code), and failure to do so was error. But the record before us discloses that such omission here did not constitute prejudicial error. There is not the slightest proof in the record addressed to the issues tendered by the special pleas. Nor was there any attempt to introduce proof in support of such pleas. Under these circumstances, the defendant could not, of course, have been prejudiced by the oversight.

3. It is complained that the appellant suffered serious harm by the separation of the jury during the progress of the trial after it had been ordered by the court into the custody of the sheriff, the claim being that such order was made under the authority of section 1121 of the Penal Code. The record shows that before the panel was completed—that is, before 12 jurors had been sworn to try the case—the court made an order, to which counsel for defendant objected, that the sheriff take charge of the jury. After some colloquy between court and counsel relating to said order, the former inquired of the latter: "Do you consent that the order be made temporary?" to which Mr. Bogie, of counsel for defendant, replied: "Yes, we consent; the defendant consents that it will be just temporary; they are in the custody of the sheriff while retiring." While it is not clear what counsel exactly meant by the use of the language, "they are in the custody of the sheriff while retiring," we think it is clear from the record that it was not intended by the court, nor so understood by the defendant and his attorneys, that the order made was the one authorized and contemplated by section 1121 of the Penal Code. It is evident that the court had some reason, the nature of which the record does not disclose, for keeping together, and consequently in the custody of the sheriff, pending the completion of the panel, such jurors as had been selected and accepted by both sides before the panel had been completed, and also, after the jury was completed, that they remain in the custody of that officer during the noon recesses only. The defendant not only expressly consented to this course, but even suggested it. We do not feel compelled to decide the question of whether, after the court, in the exercise of its discretion, under section 1121 of the Penal Code, has ordered the jury into the custody of the sheriff, the defendant, by consenting to a separation of the jurors, could be held, as a matter of law, to have thus waived the right to thereafter complain of such separation. But the record here does not make it appear very clear precisely to what extent the order was executed. So far as we are able to determine from the record, the court, as we have suggested, does not appear to have attempted to exercise the discretion conferred upon it by section 1121, supra, but when the order was first made seems only to have intended, for some reason which apparently appealed as well to the counsel for the defendant, that the order should have force temporarily and until the whole panel had been selected and sworn. It further appears that after all the evidence was received and before the argument began the court took a recess until the usual hour of opening the afternoon session, and at that time ordered the jury in charge of the sheriff. It does not appear that they were permitted to separate after that order was made. In the case of People v. Maughs, supra, it is held that where the court directs the sheriff to take charge of the jury under the power to make such an order conferred upon it by the section of the Penal Code referred to, and thereafter the jurors are permitted to separate, such separation in and of itself constitutes error, but it is not expressly declared therein to be such error as demands a reversal. But we do not think the case here, as to the point we are discussing, comes clearly within the rule as declared in that case. In any event, we do not think the action of the court in this particular justifies a reversal.

We cannot refrain from here remarking that it is very evident that the attorneys for the people and the learned judge of the trial court either did not before or during the trial of the present case read the opinion of the Supreme Court reversing the first trial hereof, or, if they did, paid little heed to what the court has to say, in language as clear as crystal, upon the subject now under consideration. If they had read the opinion even hastily it would at least seem as if no such chances for a reversal of the present appeal would have been taken as are apparent from the slipshod course pursued with reference to the order directing the sheriff to take charge of the jury. It is often the case, perhaps, that trial judges have little time to read the opinions of the higher courts, and do not do so until such cases are cited upon some particular question pending before them. But practicing lawyers are supposed to watch the reported cases, particularly where they dispose of questions with which they have to deal in some impending trial. It was, therefore, the duty of the state's attorneys in the case at bar to have called the attention of the court to the remarks of the Supreme Court in this same case, relative to the exercise of the power by the court vested in it by section 1121 of the Penal Code. District attorneys should also remember that, while zeal is a very excellent quality in a prosecuting officer, it, perforce, becomes a menace rather than an advantage to a successful prosecution of a criminal case when it succeeds in usurping the place of sound and sane judgment. With the opinion in the Maughs Case before them, the prosecuting attorneys and the court can suggest no conceivable excuse for the occasion of the present discussion in this case, and but for the fact that we do not consider the action of the court in this respect under the circumstances as disclosed by the record prejudicial to the rights of the appellant, we would not hesitate to order a reversal for this very reason.

4. The contention that too much latitude was allowed in the cross-examination of the defendant is, we think, devoid of merit. After answering a few preliminary questions, the defendant was asked the following question by his attorney: "Now, take at the very instant the fatal shot was fired, why did you shoot Charlie Zander?" The defendant replied: "Well, he came at me with a knife and said he would cut my damned throat, and I thought he would do me some great bodily harm or kill me, and I fired at him to keep him from killing me." At the conclusion of this answer, the defendant was turned over to the prosecution for cross-examination. It was no doubt the assumption of counsel for the defendant that such brevity in the examination in chief would curtail the cross-examination or prevent an inquiry through cross-examination into all the circumstances immediately attending the homicide. Objection was, therefore, made to nearly every question propounded to the defendant by the district attorney, and the rulings of the court disallowing certain objections made to the extended cross-examination by the people are assigned as error.

We think the questions asked the defendant by the district attorney were well within the sphere of legitimate cross-examination. Section 1323 of the Penal Code provides, as does also section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution, that a defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but the Code section mentioned also provides that if a defendant in such an action or proceeding "offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief." The cross-examination of the defendant in the case at bar involved an inquiry into all the pertinent circumstances immediately leading up to and connected with the act of killing. This course, as we have stated, was allowable under the section of the Code to which we have referred as interpreted by the Supreme Court in many cases. People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 91, 20 Pac. 36; People v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 23 Pac. 229, 17 Am. St. Rep. 223; People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 475, 35 Pac. 80; People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 87 Pac. 1016. In People v. Rozelle, supra, the court says: "The impression seems to prevail that the section quoted (1323, Pen. Code) has the effect to confine the examination of a defendant to narrower limits than in the case of any other witness. He can be only cross-examined as to matters about which he was examined in chief. The rule is precisely the same as to any other witness." In People v. Gallagher, supra, it is said: "Any question which would have the tendency to elicit from him (defendant) the whole truth about any matter upon which he had been examined in chief, or which would explain, or qualify, or destroy the force of his direct testimony, whether it be to give the whole of a conversation or transaction of which he had given only a part, or to show by his own admissions that he had made contrary statements, or that his conduct had been inconsistent with the statements given in his direct testimony, and thus throw discredit upon them, would be legitimate cross-examination."

The defendant admitted killing Zander, but claimed that the act was in necessary self-defense. On his examination in chief he declared that the act was committed in the defense of his person and life. This statement by the defendant was a mere bald statement, unaccompanied by a recital of any of the circumstances under which the homicide occurred, that the act was necessary for the protection of his own person or for the preservation of his own life. In fact, the answer amounted only to a conclusion drawn by the defendant from the circumstances of the homicide as he claimed to view and understand them. The people had a right to learn, if they could, by a cross-examination of the defendant, whether he had formed a correct conception of the circumstances under which he took the life of Zander. They were entitled to an opportunity to ascertain, through cross-examination of the accused, whether or not his statement carried with it the truth by inquiring into all the circumstances of the "matter about which he had testified." And we have been unable to find any question thus propounded to him and to which objection was made involving an inquiry into any other matter than that "about which he had testified in chief." His answer to the single question asked on direct examination involved his whole case—his complete defense—and therefore opened up for full and thorough exploration by the people the entire field of legitimate inquiry into all the circumstances of the homicide.

5. The court did not err in permitting, over the objection of appellant, certain witnesses to give testimony in the people's original case concerning the alleged crippled condition of the left arm of the deceased. The claim is that the testimony was admissible only as rebuttal, and in that case only upon the interposition by the defendant of the defense of self-defense. The order of proof is largely in the discretion of the trial court. Pen. Code, § 1094. But we are not sure but that the testimony was properly admitted in the prosecution's chief case, for, prior to the reception of this evidence, the declarations of the defendant immediately after the homicide, relative to the shooting, had been received in evidence, and, among other things, it appeared therefrom that the accused claimed that the deceased rushed toward the defendant threateningly with an open knife in his left hand and his left arm raised in a menacing attitude. The object of the testimony with reference to the condition of the deceased's left arm was to show that he could not raise said arm in the position described by the defendant to the witnesses who testified to his declarations. But, admitting that the testimony was irregularly received as a part of the prosecution's original case, if it was, nevertheless, proper in rebuttal, the fact that it was introduced out of order would not justify a reversal of the case. People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 124, 54 Pac. 591; People v. Grimes, 132 Cal. 34, 64 Pac. 101. The testimony was clearly relevant in view of the defendant's testimony.

It is also urged that the court erred in allowing the witness Frank French to testify to statements made by the defendant concerning the circumstances connected with the killing before the corpus delicti had been proved. What we have heretofore said with reference to the order of proof resting in the sound discretion of the trial judge is pertinent and applicable to this point. The rule appears to be settled in this state that, while the corpus delicti should be the first point to which the evidence should be addressed, the order of proof is usually in the discretion of the court, and, unless it clearly appears that the defendant has been prejudiced by the manner in which that discretion has been exercised, it will not justify reversal of the judgment. People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 Pac. 698. The corpus delicti was subsequently shown by clear and undisputed proof, so the defendant could not have sustained any damage by the order in which proof of his extrajudicial declarations was received.

6. A model, representing the porch upon which the fatal shooting occurred, was introduced in evidence for the purpose of il-illustrating the testimony of the witnesses. The model was, except in certain particulars, a faithful representation of said porch. The excepted "particulars" to which we refer included an omission to show by the model some growing vines about the trellis work at the side of the porch, to the right of which some 100 feet distant, as we have seen, Cole and Gallagher, witnesses for the people, were sitting on a wagon tongue, when the shooting took place. The model omitted also to indicate a tree and two fences which were located between the porch and the point where Cole and Gallagher were in conversation when the quarrel was going on and the shot fired. The specific objection to the model was that it might lead the jury to believe that there were no obstructions to a clear view of the porch from the point at which Cole and Gallagher were sitting, and that they could therefore see all that was transpiring on the porch between the defendant and the deceased. The county surveyor testified that he made the model, and that it represented an accurate reproduction of the porch, except in the particulars mentioned, and Mr. Ostrander, for the prosecution, upon offering it in evidence, explained the extent to which the people desired to use it as follows: "We are not introducing it for the purpose of showing that Cole or anybody else could see from the point where they were what transpired on the porch. We are offering this for the purpose of showing the porch as it then existed, the distances, and the material objects on the porch. We are not offering it for the purpose of showing that the testimony of Cole or anybody else is true." And, as limited to the purpose as thus stated, the court admitted it, and it appears to have been confined, in its use by the people, to that purpose alone. We do not think the court erred in admitting the model under the circumstances disclosed by the record. There were photographs received in evidence, upon the motion of the defendant, showing an accurate representation of the house, of the porch with the trellis work and climbing vines, and of the trees and fences between the porch and the place where Cole and Gallagher sat. The conditions generally existing about the premises at the time of the homicide were not only thus fully and clearly displayed before the jury, but were minutely explained by the witnesses. We can see no difference between the model complained of and a mere skeleton diagram of a place where a crime is alleged to have been committed showing distances and the location of material objects necessary to be pointed out in order that the testimony may be the more clearly understood by the court, jury and counsel. Diagrams, which it is not pretended represent complete reproductions of the places thus sought to be illustrated, are often used at the trials of criminal cases, and where it is shown that, as far as they go, they speak the truth, and in no degree prejudice the rights of the accused, they should not be rejected because they fail to show certain objects which are not material or important to the inquiry at hand and therefore could serve no useful purpose in illustrating or clarifying certain important points brought out by the testimony. It does not appear from the record that any other purpose was attempted to be accomplished by the use of the model than to show the distances of certain points from others on the porch as they existed when the homicide occurred—for instance, the location of a pump and its distance from the door of the house leading to the porch, the location of the sink near which the deceased stood, etc. It has often been held that models and diagrams thus used and having no tendency to convey false impressions of the real conditions existing on and about the premises when the crimes under investigation were alleged to have been perpetrated may properly be used for the purpose of making the testimony the more clearly understood. People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 210, 48 Pac. 75; People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 158, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Phelan, 123 Cal. 551, 56 Pac. 424.

7. We have carefully examined the instructions, in the giving, rejection, and modification of which it is declared the court erred to the prejudice of the defendant, and we think there is no foundation for the criticisms urged against the action of the court with respect thereto. The charge of the court was full, fair, and pertinent to all the material issues presented by the information and the evidence. The principles of law contained in the instructions submitted by the defendant and refused by the court were, where applicable to any important issue in the case, embodied in and declared to the jury in other instructions. The same is true where the court modified certain instructions handed in by the defendant, the portions stricken out or refused, where appropriate and proper, being given in other instructions. The instruction upon the question of flight was not altogether inappropriate, as contended. It is true that the defendant finally surrendered himself voluntarily; but one of the witnesses testified that he met the accused on horseback shortly after the homicide, and that the latter said to the witness that he had killed Zander and that he desired to see his (witness') father so that he could procure money with which to leave the country. The defendant was then riding away from the ranch where the shooting occurred. This testimony, though slight upon the subject of flight, constituted, we think, a sufficient predicate for the instruction complained of—at least, it was sufficient to preclude the presumption that the defendant was seriously prejudiced thereby.

The part of instruction No. 13 as given by the court, complained of by appellant, is certainly subject to the criticism that it is rather ambiguous. But what the court was trying to say to the jury in the criticised part is clearly enough stated in the latter part of the instruction. The instruction is based on subdivision 2 of section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and when given in the exact language of the section, as it should be given if at all, involves a mere commonplace. It ought not to be necessary to tell a jury composed of men of average intelligence that they need not accept the testimony of any number of witnesses if such testimony does not convince them of the truth of the fact to which it relates, and this is in effect all that the language of the subdivision of the section from which the instruction was taken declares. We cannot perceive how the appellant could have been prejudiced by the instruction as given.

The same may be said of instruction No. 27, requested by the defendant and refused by the court. The first part of this instruction is in the precise language of section 1845 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the latter part is a declaration that the jury must disregard any part of the testimony of any witness which involves only his "belief or his inferences or his impressions or his deductions." It would have been well enough for the court to have given the instruction, yet we cannot see that the defendant was prejudiced by the refusal to give it. If testimony of the nature of that mentioned in the rejected instruction crept into the record it must have found its way there through the failure of the defendant to object to it or to have it stricken out after it got in, and if such testimony was given and then stricken out, it no longer remained in the record, and the jury, who must be assumed to be possessed of ordinary intelligence, must have known that they had no right to consider it in reaching a verdict from what the court told them in its general charge concerning their duties as jurors.

We have thus reviewed the record at some length. There are other alleged errors pointed out in the briefs of appellant, but we have carefully examined them, and as a result of such examination have concluded that they do not merit extended attention. The alleged misconduct of the district attorney and his assistant in the opening statement of the case and in the final arguments thereof is not, conceding it to be, strictly speaking, misconduct, of such a serious nature as to call for a reversal. The complaint against the alleged misconduct of the assistant prosecuting attorney in referring in his argument to the alleged attempted flight of the defendant immediately after the homicide is disposed of in what we have said relative to the instruction upon that subject. The questions asked certain witnesses by the district attorney as to whether they had heard the testimony of another witness at the former trial of the case describing the condition or situation of the body of the deceased a few hours after the homicide elicited replies to the effect that either they did not hear such testimony or could not recall it if they did. Manifestly the replies were harmless, even if the questions were improper, and there is nothing in the phraseology or form of the questions themselves involving prejudicial insinuations or innuendoes against the defendant.

An examination of the whole record convinces us that the defendant was fairly tried.

For the reasons expressed in the foregoing, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 186

PEOPLE v. DUNCAN. (Cr. 18.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
April 25, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court June 24, 1908.)

1. JURY—COMPETENCY—CHALLENGES.

Pen. Code, § 1073, subd. 2, provides that a juror may be challenged for the existence of a state of mind in reference to the case or to either of the parties which will prevent him from acting without prejudice. A juror on his voir dire testified that he had no prejudice against organized labor though his men had joined in a strike; that he would believe a charge of conspiracy made against laboring men belonging to a labor organization more readily than the existence of a conspiracy between ordinary individuals, but such belief would not make him prejudiced. It was not shown that accused was a member of a labor organization or that any claim would be made that he was such a member. Held, that the overruling of a challenge for actual bias was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, §§ 431-437.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT—DENIAL OF CHALLENGE OF JUROR.

The court on appeal is only allowed to review an order denying a challenge on the ground of actual bias when the evidence on the examination of a juror is so opposed to the decision of the trial court that the question becomes one of law, for it is only on questions of law that the appellate court has jurisdiction in criminal cases.

3. JURY—OVERRULING CHALLENGE OF JUROR.

Where, in a murder case, a juror on his voir dire testified that he had formed the opinion from newspaper reports that decedent had been murdered, that he would put aside that opinion and act wholly on the evidence, and that he could act impartially in the case, the court did not err in overruling a challenge though some of the statements of the juror conflicted with such testimony.

4. WITNESSES—RIGHT TO CONTRADICT WITNESS.

It is error for a party calling a witness who fails to give expected testimony but does not give affirmative testimony against the party to prove statements of such witness made out of court.

5. HOMICIDE—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where in a murder case, a witness for the prosecution testified that he did not remember what accused had told him, and stated in reply to questions whether he had not stated on a designated occasion to persons named that accused had made a certain statement that he could not remember, the error in allowing the questions was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 709-713.]

6. WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—QUESTIONS TO REFRESH MEMORY OF WITNESS.

A witness may be asked concerning statements made by him for the purpose of refreshing his memory.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 87.]

7. HOMICIDE—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The error in permitting the prosecution in a murder case to prove that on the trial of a codefendant a witness for accused had given certain testimony in accord with the testimony he gave on the trial of accused was not prejudicial.

8. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—RIGHT TO REBUT INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE.

Accused introducing hearsay and incompetent evidence cannot object to the prosecution rebutting such testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 861, 862.]

9. SAME—VACATING VERDICT—COMPETENCY OF JUROR—KNOWLEDGE OF ACCUSED—EVIDENCE.

A finding that counsel for accused had information prior to the submission of the cause to the jury that one of the jurors had substituted himself for a person summoned as a juror held authorized on the showing made on a motion to vacate the verdict on that ground in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 6, providing that evidence is to be estimated not only by its intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is within the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict.

10. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—NOTICE TO ATTORNEY.

Accused is chargeable with knowledge of information obtained by his counsel.

11. JURY—TIME FOR OBJECTIONS.

The general rule is that any objection to a juror must be made before he is sworn and that it comes too late after verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, § 504.]

12. SAME.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1060, 1069, providing that a challenge to the panel must be taken before a juror is sworn, and that a peremptory challenge can be taken by either party, etc., any challenge to the panel or to an individual juror must be taken before the juror is sworn to try the cause, and the fact that the disqualification was not discovered until after verdict makes no difference in the rights of the defeated party.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Jury, §§ 544, 556-558.]

13. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 198, defining the qualification of a juror, and Pen. Code, §§ 1068, 1072, providing that a challenge to a juror must be taken when the juror appears and before he is sworn to try the cause, and declaring that the general causes of challenge are a want of any of the qualifications prescribed by law to render a person a competent juror, etc., a challenge on the ground that the offered juror is not the person whose name is in the box and who was summoned should be made when the juror appears, and a new trial will not be granted on the objection to the juror made for the first time after verdict, especially where counsel for accused had information of the facts prior to the submission of the cause to the jury.

14. JURY—NUMBER OF JURORS.

Where a person who substituted himself for the person summoned as a juror was accepted and sworn as a juror and became a juror, the verdict rendered was not open to the objection that it was rendered by 11 jurors.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Edward Duncan was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. W. Hutton and John J. Barrett, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

HALL, J. Defendant was jointly charged with three others, Wm. Buckley, Thomas Moran, and Charles Donnolly, with the crime of murder, for the killing of one George W. Rice, in the city and county of San Francisco on the 9th day of August, 1901. Upon his trial he was found guilty of murder in the second degree. He interposed a motion to vacate the verdict as well as a motion for a new trial, and, both motions being denied, judgment on the verdict was pronounced, and defendant in due time took this appeal from the orders denying his said motions and from the judgment.

Judgments against the other defendants have heretofore been sustained. People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169; People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177; People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 77 Pac. 777.

Several grounds are urged for the reversal of the judgment and orders, which we will discuss in the order presented in appellant's brief.

1. The defendant challenged two jurors, Axt and Peters, under subdivision 2 of section 1073 of the Penal Code. This section of the Code provides that a juror may be challenged "for the existence of a state of mind on the part of a juror in reference to the case, or to either of the parties, which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party."

The juror Axt on his voir dire testified that he had no prejudice against organized labor though his men had joined in a strike; that he would believe a charge of conspiracy made against laboring men belonging to a labor organization "because there must be more organization there," and more to the effect that he would more readily believe that a member of a labor organization would enter into a conspiracy than an ordinary individual, though he further said that such belief would not make him prejudiced. The court disallowed defendant's challenge interposed for actual bias as above stated, and in so doing committed no error. At the time the challenge was interposed there was nothing to indicate to the court that defendant was a member of any labor organization, or that any such claim would be made either by the prosecution or the defense. So far as the record shows, no statement or showing had been made by either counsel which would indicate that such condition existed or would be claimed to exist, or that the homicide grew out of or was connected with any labor trouble, or that defendant or any of his codefendants belonged to any labor organization. The evidence before the court at the time of the ruling complained of did not show any bias on the part of the juror either against defendant or with relation to the case. The court therefore did not err in disallowing the challenge to juror Axt.

The juror Peters testified that he had formed the opinion from newspaper reports that he had read, that George W. Rice had been murdered, but also said that he would put aside that opinion, and would act wholly upon the evidence brought before the court, and that he could act fairly and impartially upon the case. Some of his statements were somewhat in conflict with the above, but his whole examination presents a case for the judgment of the trial court. This court is only allowed to review an order denying a challenge upon the ground of actual bias, when the evidence upon the examination of the juror is so opposed to the decision of the trial court that the question becomes one of law, for it is only upon questions of law that this court has appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases. People v. Owens, 123 Cal. 487, 56 Pac. 251. We cannot say that the court erred in its ruling upon the challenge to the juror Peters.

2. One Stewart, an acquaintance and former shopmate of defendant, was called as a witness for the prosecution, and testified that he saw defendant the evening that Rice was killed; that Duncan asked him (the witness) if he was a union man or a scab, and that he replied that he was neither. Thereupon the district attorney asked the question: "When Duncan asked you if you were a union man or a scab, and you told him you were neither, what did he say to you?" To this the witness answered, "I don't remember what he said." Several more questions were addressed to the witness in an attempt to learn from him what Duncan had said to him, and to which the witness answered that he could not remember. The district attorney then asked the witness if he had not stated on a designated occasion to Mr. Alford, Mr. Byington, Mr. Greany, and Officer Bailey that Duncan had said "that you would be an interested spectator?" To this question defendant objected, and the court overruled the objection, stating that he allowed the question solely for the purpose of refreshing the memory of the witness. The witness answered, "I don't know what it was exactly I said. They brought me in there, and I was rattled, and don't know what I said." A similar question was then asked the witness, and allowed over the objection of defendant, to which he answered, "I don't remember what the words were that I used, or what I said."

If it be conceded that the court erred in its rulings upon these questions, the defendant was not harmed thereby. The prosecution did not attempt subsequently to contradict the witness, or to show what he did state to the four men named. The case is therefore not brought within the rule laid down in People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 529, 75 Pac. 101, and the cases therein cited, that it is error for a party calling a witness, who fails to give expected testimony, but does not give affirmative testimony against the party, to prove statements of such witness. The witness answered that he did not remember what he did say to the men named, and no effort being thereafter made to show what he did say to them, no harm was done defendant. People v. Wallace, 89 Cal. 158, 26 Pac. 650. But the court in allowing the question stated that it did so for the purpose of refreshing the recollection of the witness and none other. The witness had stated that Duncan had held a conversation with him, but said that he could not remember what Duncan had said. It has been held that a witness may be asked concerning statements made by such witness, for the purpose of refreshing his memory. White v. State, 87 Ala. 24, 5 South. 829; Bullard v. Pearsall, 53 N. Y. 230.

In People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 212, 48 Pac. 75, a witness testified that when he returned to the church he found Durrant either standing in the lobby, or lying on the platform in the school room, but in which place he could not remember. It was held that the party calling the witness could, for the purpose of refreshing his memory, read to the witness his former testimony given on the same subject. But whether or not the court was justified in allowing the questions, it is clear from the answers of the witness that no harm was done. People v. Wallace, supra.

3. One Rohrer was examined as a witness on behalf of the defendant. He testified that he was driving a team, was moving slowly, heard two shots, and that he turned himself around towards Shotwell street. From this point on he was an eyewitness to what occurred and gave testimony as to what he saw. Over the objection of defendant the district attorney was allowed to prove by one Elderkin, a shorthand reporter, that on the trial of a codefendant of the appellant, Rohrer had testified as follows: "Q. Did you stop your horses after you heard the shots? A. No, sir. Q. You did not? A. No, sir." Rohrer had not been asked anything about his testimony given on the trial of the codefendant, and it certainly is difficult to understand on what theory the testimony of Elderkin was allowed. It certainly did not contradict anything that Rohrer had testified to in this case. The record shows that defendant moved to strike out this testimony of Elderkin "on the ground that it is not inconsistent with what the witness testified to here, but, on the contrary, it is precisely at this trial as it now appears from the testimony of the rebuttal that he testified to at some other time and place." With the statement as to the testimony of Rohrer on the two different occasions we entirely agree. The testimony read by Elderkin did not in any degree tend to contradict what the witness Rohrer testified to in this case, but is in entire accord with it. For this reason it is inconceivable that the introduction of the evidence in question could have prejudiced the defendant. It could not have had the effect to discredit the witness Rohrer, for it in no way contradicted him, but, as stated by counsel in his motion to strike out, it was precisely in accord with his present testimony. While the court should have sustained defendant's objection to the evidence of Elderkin, it is clear that the ruling of the court could not have injured defendant.

4. Appellant's next point is not supported by anything that we can find in the record. In his brief he says that upon the trial of Duncan (appellant) one Oppenheim was a witness, and that the prosecution was allowed to prove by one Mann that Oppenheim was not a witness upon the trial of appellant's codefendant Buckley, and urges that this was done to discredit the witness Oppenheim, whose testimony he claims was favorable to defendant. After a careful examination of the record we fail to find that Oppenheim was a witness on the trial of defendant, and we are equally unable to find that Mann testified that Oppenheim had not been a witness on the trial of Buckley. Appellant's contention thus falls for want of the necessary premise to support it.

5. The court did not err in allowing the witness Graham to testify that the witness Kinnear had said nothing about a hat. This was rebuttal of testimony given by the witness Kinnear on behalf of the defense upon his redirect examination by counsel for defendant. He testified that in a conversation with officer Fitzgerald, "I told him I saw by the papers that the fellow had a white hat, but I would have to say he had a dark hat on." It may be said that this was hearsay and incompetent, but as it was introduced by defendant it does not lie in his mouth to say that the prosecution should not be allowed to rebut and contradict such testimony. This was all that was done by the evidence of the witness Graham now complained of.

6. The last point presented by appellant for consideration is the one most strongly urged by his counsel, and is predicated on the fact that one Bernard Sherry appeared at the trial, and substituted himself as a juror in place of John H. Sherry, whose name was upon the jury list, and who had been regularly subpoenaed to attend court as a trial juror. From the record it appears that upon the impanelment of the jury to try defendant the name of John H. Sherry was drawn from the jury box, and in answer to such name a person took his place in the box, and was sworn to answer questions as to his qualifications to act as a juror, and was examined by the court, by the district attorney, and by the attorney for defendant, was accepted and sworn as a juror, and acted as such throughout the trial of the case. After the announcement by the foreman of the jury of their verdict, the jury were, at the request of counsel for the defendant, polled, and each answered that the verdict rendered was his verdict, and the court directed that the verdict be recorded. Thereupon one of the counsel for defendant addressed the court in the following language: "Before this jury is discharged, I will ask is there any juror in the box who was not subpoenaed in this case, whose name was never in the jury box, and who was not sworn under his true name to try this case?" At the request of counsel for defendant a poll of the jury was taken upon the question thus propounded, and when the name of John H. Sherry was called one of the jurors answered that his name was Bernard Sherry, that his son John H. Sherry had been subpoenaed, but that he, Bernard Sherry, had served in place of his son. Counsel for defendant at once moved to vacate the verdict because of the irregularity thus brought to light. The motion was denied. Upon the arraignment of defendant for judgment defendant renewed his motion to vacate the verdict, and also made a motion for a new trial. The two motions were heard together, and were both denied.

Upon the hearing of the motions affidavits and evidence from the record were read, mainly directed to the point as to when defendant or his counsel learned or received information of the substitution of Bernard Sherry in place of John H. Sherry. In passing upon each of said motions the court expressly found "that counsel for defendant had information prior to the submission of the cause to the jury concerning the substitution of Bernard Sherry for John H. Sherry on the jury panel and as a juror in said cause." Appellant upon this appeal challenges this finding as not being supported by the evidence, and especially does he insist that no weight should be given to an affidavit by one T. J. Bailey, to the effect that in a conversation which he held with one of the counsel for defendant, said counsel stated that he did not know of the substitution of Bernard Sherry for John H. Sherry until the Thursday preceeding the day of the rendition of the verdict. The record discloses that the cause was submitted to the jury on Friday, and its verdict rendered the same day.

Among other reasons urged for rejecting the affidavit of Bailey is that the statement of counsel for defendant to the affidavit was, as against defendant, mere hearsay, and therefore incompetent evidence as against him. But we are of the opinion that the court was justified in finding as it did irrespective of anything contained in the affidavit of Bailey. Immediately upon the rendition of the verdict Mr. Barrett, one of the counsel for defendant, propounded the question, "Is there any juror in the box who was not subpoenaed in this case, whose name was never in the jury box, and who was not sworn under his true name to try this case?" The propounding of this question is quite convincing that counsel at that time had information of the facts suggested by the question. It is not at all reasonable to suppose that counsel was engaged in what is sometimes called "a fishing excursion." Further, upon the hearing of the motions appellant filed an affidavit by himself, and affidavits by each of his counsel. In his own affidavit he stated that he had no knowledge and no information of the substitution now complained of until after rendition of the verdict. In the affidavits made by counsel each states that he had no knowledge of such substitution until after rendition of the verdict, but makes no mention of when he obtained information on the subject. That this was not an inadvertence, but was intentional and designed, is made perfectly clear by what subsequently transpired. Counsel for the people called attention to the omission of any statement in the affidavits of counsel as to when they obtained information concerning the substitution, and made an earnest effort to induce such counsel to submit to an examination under oath as to such matter, which counsel refused to do; and during the discussion which ensued before the court counsel for defendant made this statement: "There is no issue in the first place tendered on the question of information by that affidavit. There is no issue tendered by us." What information counsel had received that prompted the question that brought forth the disclosure of the substitution was a matter peculiarly within their knowledge and within their power to prove, and the same is true as to when they received such information. Evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is within the power of one side to produce, and of the other to contradict. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 6. From the foregoing facts we are satisfied that appellant cannot justly complain of the finding made by the court. There can be no doubt that a defendant is chargeable with knowledge of information obtained by his counsel. 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 1169.

There is nothing in the record to suggest, and there is no claim made, that either the court, the district attorney, or any one connected with his office or the prosecution, had any knowledge or information concerning the substitution of Bernard Sherry for John H.

Sherry until the disclosure elicited by counsel for defendant after the rendition of the verdict. And no claim is made that Bernard Sherry was not in fact a fair and impartial person to act as a juror. His examination on his voir dire discloses that he was entirely impartial.

The question is thus presented, may a verdict be vacated and a new trial granted upon an objection to a juror made for the first time after verdict rendered that he was not the person who was selected, subpoenaed, and returned to serve upon the panel? Upon the question the authorities in other states are not in accord. The rule generally followed is that any objection to a juror must be made before he is sworn, and comes too late after verdict. "In many cases it has been expressly decided that the right to attack a verdict for the disqualification of a juror does not exist even when the moving party was perfectly ignorant of such disqualification, and that to allow a subsequent attack upon the verdict for that cause would give a wide opening for fraud. In a still larger number of cases it is simply stated that there is no right to attack a verdict on this ground, without any reference to the question of previous ignorance or knowledge, and that may be considered also to support the proposition that ignorance is immaterial." 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 1163.

In England there seems to be considerable flexibility in the practice where a substitution has occurred such as exists in the case at bar, it being considered a matter of discretion with the court. In the very early case of Norman v. Beaumont, Willes' Reports, 484, a new trial was ordered; so, also, in Dovey v. Hobson, 6 Taunton, 460, a new trial was ordered, as a matter of discretion, though the irregularity was discovered before verdict; while in Hill v. Yates, 12 East, 229, where the substitution was discovered after verdict, a new trial was refused, the court saying that it was a matter of discretion. Coming to the United States, we find, as before stated, that the authorities are not in accord.

In Dayton v. Church, 7 Abb. (N. C.) 367, a stranger answered and served in place of one of the panel, which was not discovered until after verdict, and a new trial was ordered.

In McGill v. State, 34 Ohio St. 228, a new trial was ordered, though the substitution was not discovered until after verdict, but in Ohio the law concerning the granting of new trials is much broader than in this state.

In Urquhart v. Powell, 59 Ga. 721, it was held that the fact that the name of one of the jurors who tried the case was neither in the jury box nor on the jury list was no ground for a new trial after verdict; but in the latter case of Stripling v. State, 77 Ga. 108, 3 S. E. 277, a new trial was granted because of a substitution, the court saying, also, that it made no difference whether the court's attention had been called to it before verdict or not.

In a still later case, however, Dasher v. State, 113 Ga. 4, 38 S. E. 348, the case of Urquhart v. Powell, supra, is cited with approval. So too in Stripling v. State, supra, the court cited the earlier case of Anderson v. Green, 46 Ga. 361, with apparent approval, where it was held that a substitution such as exists in this case was no ground for a new trial. The Georgia statute seems to authorize the court to order a new trial, in cases not expressly provided for by the Code of that state, in the exercise of a sound discretion, "according to the provisions of the common law and practice of the court." The new trial in the Stripling Case seems to have been ordered in the exercise of this discretion.

Upon the other hand, in Mann v. Fairlee, 44 Vt. 672, where the wrong man was summoned and served without discovery until after verdict, a new trial was refused. To the same effect is Commonwealth v. Beucher, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 3. So, too, in Commonwealth v. Parsons, 139 Mass. 381, 31 N. E. 767, the wrong juror answered to a name that was called, and served, and a new trial was refused.

In Tolbert v. State, 71 Miss. 179, 14 South. 462, 42 Am. St. Rep. 454, the wrong man was summoned and served, the mistake not being discovered until after verdict. A new trial was refused, the court saying: "The right of the defendant is to have an impartial jury rather than one composed of particular persons, and where this right has been enjoyed there is little cause for complaint, ordinarily, after verdict. An acquittal by such a jury would avail the defendant, and having had a chance of escape at the hands of the jury, he could not be allowed to profit by an innocent mistake or inadvertence which fact did him no harm."

No case has arisen in this state precisely like the case at bar in its facts. But by reason of the provisions of our statute and the decisions thereon, we think it must be held that the objection to the juror came too late. The statutes clearly intend that any challenge to the panel or to an individual juror must be taken before the juror is sworn to try the cause (Pen. Code, §§ 1060, 1069), and the fact that the disqualification was not discovered until after verdict makes no difference in the rights of the defendant.

In Thrall v. Smiley, 9 Cal. 529, the name of one of the jurymen was not on the venire returned by the sheriff, though he had in fact been summoned, and his name placed in the box and entered in the minutes of the court. In disposing of an objection made for the first time after verdict the court said: "The objection, if it had any validity, should have been urged at the trial; it comes too late after verdict. The object of the law is to secure honest and intelligent men for the trial, and it is of no practical consequence in what order, or at what time during the term, they are summoned. It would be productive of great hardship to permit a second trial upon a ground so technical and unsubstantial. Unless the irregularity complained of in the formation of the jury goes to the merits of the trial, or leads to the inference of improper influence upon their verdict, their verdict should not be disturbed"—and quoted with approval similar language used by Shaw, C. J., in Page v. Inhabitants of Danvers, 7 Metc. (Mass.) 327.

In People v. Chung Lit, 17 Cal. 321, it was held that objection because of the fact that one of the jurors was an alien cannot be taken for the first time on motion for a new trial, although the fact was not known until after the verdict. The court said: "The defendants might have examined him upon the subject, and exercised their right of challenge before he was sworn, but having failed to do that they must suffer the consequences of their own neglect."

In People v. Fair, 43 Cal. 137, it was held that the fact that a juror had formed and expressed an unqualified opinion of the guilt of the accused is not, under our practice, ground for a new trial, when the objection is taken for the first time after verdict; nor is it a ground for an arrest of judgment or a new trial under the statutes of this state. This case arose under the provisions of the criminal practice act, which are identical in this respect with the provisions of the Penal Code. In this case the court points out that the subsequently discovered disqualification of a juror is not made either a ground for an arrest of judgment or a new trial; that the statute provides in what cases a judgment may be arrested, and in what cases a new trial may be granted, and that the grounds thus provided are exclusive of all others. The reasoning of the Fair Case seems to be conclusive of the case at bar, for although appellants in form made a separate motion to "set aside the verdict," no such motion is provided for in our Code as distinct from a motion for a new trial or in arrest of judgment. In its effect it was a motion for a new trial, and under our practice it must be so regarded.

In People v. Mortier, 58 Cal. 262, the court again discussed at great length the right to raise, after verdict, the question of the disqualification of a juror, and held, notwithstanding the conflict in authorities in other states, that a judgment in such case should not be reversed because of the disqualification of a juror discovered after verdict. The court quoted with approval from the opinion of the court in Bristow's Case, 15 Grat. (Va.) 648: "To permit prisoners to avail themselves after verdict of pre-existing objections to the competency of jurors, as a matter of right, would not only be unreasonable, but most mischievous in its consequences. The delays in the administration of criminal justice and the chances for the escape of the guilty would be greatly increased. Proper verdicts, specially in trials for grave offenses, would be continually set aside. A prisoner knowing, or willfully remaining ignorant of the incompetency of a juror, would take the chances of a favorable verdict with him upon the jury, and if the verdict should be adverse would readily enough make the affidavit necessary to avoid its effect." To the same effect are People v. Samsels, 66 Cal. 99, 4 Pac. 1061, People v. Evans, 124 Cal. 206, 56 Pac. 1024, and People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245, in each of which it was held that it was too late after verdict to object to the competency of a juror.

The California cases above cited are all cases where the objection went to an individual juror, but the same rule has been applied to an objection to the entire panel. In People v. Ah Lee Doon, 97 Cal. 171, 31 Pac. 933, the jury had been selected from a panel drawn by a judge who was disqualified to act in the case. In disposing of the question raised on a motion for a new trial the court said: "But if the jurors drawn and summoned in pursuance of Judge Angellotti's order were incompetent to try this cause, the objection should have been taken by a challenge to the panel, and if, for the purposes of this case, the act of the judge in ordering the jurors drawn was void, as counsel contend, then certainly the statute (Pen. Code, § 1059) is broad enough to have given the defendant good ground for challenge to the panel. And that was the regular and only way to raise the question. If it had been made at that time, and sustained, a special venire could at once have been issued. Raised for the first time after verdict it comes too late."

Our statute providing for challenges to an individual juror is certainly broad enough to allow a challenge upon the ground that the offered juror is not the man whose name is in the box and who was summoned. Such a person is not a qualified juror (section 1072, Pen. Code) because not selected and returned (section 198, Code Civ. Proc.), and for that reason could be challenged before being sworn. State v. Sternberg, 59 Mo. 410; Goodwin v. State, 102 Ala. 87, 15 South. 571. A challenge should be made when the juror appears. That is the regular and only way to raise the question of his competency. Section 1068, Pen. Code. The objection to the juror Bernard Shaw came too late. The argument that he never became a juror because he was not selected and returned as required, and that therefore the verdict was but the verdict of 11 jurors, we think begs the question. He was accepted and sworn as a juror. He became a juror irregularly, it is true, but, to paraphrase the language of the court in People v. Chung Lit, supra, the defendant might have examined him upon the subject, and exercised his right to challenge or objection before he was sworn, but having failed to do this, he must suffer the consequences of his own neglect.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BOTHIN et al. v. CALIFORNIA TITLE INS.
& TRUST CO. (S. F. 4,493.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 10, 1908.)

1. INSURANCE — TITLE INSURANCE — ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Where a policy of title insurance excepted claims of tenure by present occupants, together with instruments, liens, incumbrances, judicial proceedings, and pending suits not shown by any public record, etc., the policy covered the record title only, and did not insure against a claim sustainable only by proof of adverse possession.

2. WORDS AND PHRASES—"TENURE."

The word "tenure" is a term of extensive signification, and while it means the mode by which one holds an estate in land, it imports any kind of a holding, from mere possession to the owning of the inheritance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6915, 6916.]

3. QUIETING TITLE—CLOUD ON TITLE.

A deed by one, not connected by any conveyance with the record title to land, does not create any defect in the record title of the record owner, nor constitute a cloud on the record title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Quieting Title, §§ 14-33.]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—NOTICE—CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE—RECORD.

Civ. Code, § 1213, providing that every conveyance of real property, acknowledged and recorded, is, from the date of recordation, constructive notice of its contents to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees, only contemplates conveyances by one having legal title to the property conveyed, and is applicable where there are conflicting conveyances made by persons claiming under the same common grantor, and has no application to a deed by a stranger to the record title.

5. INSURANCE—TITLE INSURANCE.

Where a policy of title insurance excepted the tenure of present occupants and incumbrances not shown by any public record, etc., the insurer merely guaranteed the record title, and the record of a deed of trust by him, a stranger to the record title, did not constitute a defect insured against.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Henry E. Bothin and others against the California Title Insurance & Trust Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

Frank McGowan and Geo. D. Squires, for appellants. Olney & Olney, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover damages for breach of a covenant in a title insurance policy. The facts, either admitted or proven, are as follows: On March 1, 1900, the plaintiff H. E. Bothin, having entered into a contract for the purchase, from the Sharon Estate Company, of city slip lots 71 and 72 in the city and county of San Francisco, applied to the defendant, a corporation engaged in issuing title insurance policies, for a policy insuring the title to said lots. On December 13, 1900, the defendant duly issued its policy of insurance on said lots, guaranteeing the title to the same to be in plaintiff, who, at the same time, took a conveyance thereof from the Sharon Estate Company. Among other things, the policy provided that the defendant, California Title Insurance & Trust Company, covenanted to indemnify and insure said plaintiff "from all loss or damage, not exceeding

$10,000, which the said assured shall sustain by reason of defects in the title of the assured to the estate or interest described in Schedule A, or by reason of liens or incumbrances affecting the same on the 13th day of December, 1900, * * * excepting only such as are specified in Schedule B; subject to the conditions and stipulations on the third page hereof, which with the schedules aforesaid are a part of this policy." Schedule B referred to provides, in part, as follows: "Schedule B—defects of or objections to the title, and liens, charges and incumbrances thereon against which the company does not insure; 1. Tenure of the present occupants; * * *

4. Instruments, liens, incumbrances, judicial proceedings and pending suits not shown by any public record thereof in the city and county of San Francisco; and secret trusts known to the assured and not disclosed to the company." It appears that when this policy was issued there was, and for some time prior thereto had been, on record, in the recorder's office of the city and county of San Francisco, a deed of trust by which one P. M. Partridge conveyed to the trustees of the San Francisco Savings Union about 14 feet of the westerly portion of said lot 71. Subsequent to the issuance of the policy to plaintiff, it was discovered that the adjoining owners of property to the west of lots 71 and 72, described in the policy, had encroached about 14 feet thereon with their buildings, and that the buildings of plaintiff encroached to a like extent upon the owners of city slip lots 73 and 74 on the east. In fact, it appeared that neither the owners of property to the west of the lots purchased by plaintiff, nor the predecessors in title of plaintiff, had erected their buildings on the true line, but, respectively, about 14 feet easterly thereof. One of said encroaching owners was said P. M. Partridge, whose trust deed, above referred to, was on record when the policy was issued. The description in that deed did not refer to lot 71 by name, and that it embraced any portion thereof could only be determined by a survey according to the calls of the trust deed. Some question arising subsequent to the issuance of the policy as to the lines between them, Partridge brought an action against plaintiff to quiet his title to the 14 feet of the westerly portion of lot 71 which was in his actual occupancy, and which was embraced in his trust deed, and one John A. Schmidt, adjoining him on the north, brought a similar suit against plaintiff, to quiet title to about the same number of feet of the westerly portion of lot 72, which was in his possession and occupied by his buildings. Judgments in these actions went in favor of the plaintiffs to the portions of lots 71 and 72, and their title quieted thereto. Plaintiff here likewise brought actions against parties claiming under the record title to about 14 feet of the property to the east of said lots and beyond the easterly line thereof, but of which he was actually in the occupancy with his buildings, and obtained judgments quieting his title thereto. It further appears from the findings that plaintiff here, while not obtaining possession of the entire property embraced within lots 71 and 72, obtained the identical property that he had looked at and had in mind when he obtained his deed from the Sharon Estate Company, and substantially of the same dimensions as there called for. There is no claim that P. M. Partridge had any title of record to any portion of lot 71, or that the trust deed executed by him embraced, in its description, any of the improvements of plaintiff which were supposed to cover the entire lot. Neither is there any claim that lot 72 was embraced within the calls of any instruments in writing, save those constituting the chain of title of plaintiff, and it is conceded that the plaintiff had the record title to both these lots. The claim of plaintiff was that he had sustained damages embracing an amount which he had paid for attorney's fees, and expenses in defending the actions brought by Partridge and Schmidt, as also damages for alleged depreciation in value of the property described in the policy, occasioned through the irregular shape in which the judgments in these suits left the remainder of the lots. The court awarded judgment in favor of defendant, and from said judgment, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, the plaintiff appeals.

The main point on this appeal is relative to the title of Partridge to the portion of lot 71 which was included in his deed of trust; it being insisted by appellant that there was a breach of the covenants contained in the policy by reason of this trust deed being upon the record. Taking, however, into consideration the covenants of the policy, this claim is not tenable. It is quite clear from the conditions of that instrument that what was insured by the respondent was that the record title to the lot was in appellant. It is not insisted, nor could it be, that Partridge had a record title to any portion of the lot in question. The evidence shows that he had not. In fact, it was admitted that the record title to the lot was in the appellant, and it is evident from the policy that this was all that the respondent insured. The only title which Partridge had was a title to a portion of the lot acquired by adverse possession, but this the respondent not only did not insure, but expressly declared it did not, in that provision of Schedule B wherein it is stated that, among other defects of or objections to the title not insured against, was the "tenure of the present occupants." "Tenure" is a term of extensive signification. While it means the mode by which one holds an estate in land, it imports any kind of holding, from mere possession to the owning of the inheritance. Bouvier's Law Dic.; Anderson's Law Dic., term "Tenure."

Now the only title that Partridge held to the lot was the title acquired by adverse possession. His tenure of the property was exclusively that of an adverse occupant. He had no title of record, and against his title, acquired by reason of his adverse occupancy, the policy expressly declared it did not insure, when it provided it did not insure against the "tenure of the present occupant." As far as the record title to the lot is concerned, the respondent did insure it to be in appellant; but, as against any title or right to the property asserted by one who might be in possession thereof, holding adversely to the record title, insurance was expressly denied. It was left to the appellant to determine, by an inspection and examination of the property, whether there was adverse occupancy or not, to determine for himself by actual measurement, survey, or examination of the premises whether he was getting what he contracted to purchase, or whether there was an adverse claim of title of any character by the occupants of the whole or any portion of the premises. Necessarily the record title is all that a title insurance company can safely or judiciously insure. While the title to real property may be disclosed by the record to be in one person, it may, in fact, be in another through adverse possession, or in one in occupation of the property under an unrecorded conveyance. It is the possibility of the existence of these conditions as to the title which an insurance company provides against by insuring the record title, and none other. In the case at bar the policy only insured the record title, and as that is conceded to have been in appellant, and the title of Partridge to the portion of the lot in question resting solely upon adverse possession, against which respondent did not insure, there was no breach of the policy of insurance.

But it is claimed, by counsel for appellant, that the provision in Schedule B of the policy that the insurance company did not insure against "the tenure of the present occupants" is not controlling as to the responsibility of the respondent under the evidence in the case, but it is insisted that there was a breach of the policy as to the Partridge title under the fourth subdivision of Schedule B, which provides that the company does not insure instruments, liens, or incumbrances not shown by any public record. The claim is that, under this subdivision, appellant was insured against any "defect" in the title disclosed by public records of the city and county of San Francisco, and that the deed of trust from Partridge to the San Francisco Savings Union was a "defect" in the title, as that term is used in the policy of insurance. Undoubtedly, the policy does insure against any defect in the record title, but the trust deed of Partridge was not a defect in such title. There was no title appearing of record in Partridge to any portion of the lot in question. There was no instrument of any kind, or character of record, which purported to convey any interest in this lot to him.

He was not connected with the chain of title in any respect. That chain, produced from the records, showed the title to be in appellant. This being true, the deed of trust from Partridge created no defect in the record title. As far as the record title was concerned, Partridge was a mere interloper. One who is not connected by any conveyance whatever with the record title to a piece of property, and makes a conveyance thereof, does not thereby create any defect in the record title of another, when such title is deducible by intermediate, effective conveyances from the original owners to that other. This we think so clear that it is idle to attempt to elaborate it. Such a deed would not even be constructive notice. Our Code provides that every conveyance of real property, acknowledged and recorded, is, from the date of recordation, constructive notice of its contents to subsequent purchasers and mortgagees. Civ. Code, § 1213. This language is very general, applying, in terms, to every conveyance; but it is held that this only contemplates conveyances by one having legal title to the property conveyed, and is applied where there are conflicting conveyances, made by persons claiming under the same common grantor. It does not apply to a deed by a stranger, one who is not connected in any manner with the title of record. No notice whatever is conveyed by such a deed. Long v. Dollarhide, 24 Cal. 218; Garber v. Gianella, 98 Cal. 529, 33 Pac. 458; Sharon v. Minnock, 6 Nev. 377; Rankin v. Miller, 43 Iowa, 19; Edwards v. McKernan, 55 Mich. 526, 22 N. W. 20.

It may be suggested, too, in this connection, that the loss to appellant of a portion of his lot 71 did not arise out of the alleged defect in the record title of appellant created by the trust deed from Partridge, but for a cause entirely independent of it. It arose from the fact that Partridge had acquired title by adverse possession of the land, not from any defect in appellant's record title. This title by adverse possession respondent did not insure against, but expressly provided that it did not.

While there is involved in the appeal a claim of breach of the covenants as to that portion of lot 72 to which Schmidt had title by adverse possession, little need be said on the subject. What we have said relative to the Partridge title applies equally to the Schmidt title. As to this lot 72, there were no instruments of any character on record embracing any portion of it, except such instruments as made out the record title of appellant. Schmidt's tenure of the portion of lot 72, at the time of the issuance of the policy, was solely that of an adverse occupant or claimant. He had no title of record, and his title by adverse possession was not insured against, because, as we have seen, it was expressly provided in the policy that the respondent did not insure against "the tenure of the present occupants."

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

GROOM v. BANGS. (S. F. 4,563.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 29, 1908.)

1. DEATH—ACTION FOR CAUSING DEATH—ACTION BY HUSBAND AS HEIR—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

In an action by plaintiff for the death of his wife, a complaint alleged that deceased was his wife at the time of her death, and defendant, a licensed physician, was employed to treat her, and under his careless and unskillful treatment, as set out particularly, she died, to plaintiff's damage, etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 377, provides that when the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death. Held, the complaint stated a good cause of action by the husband as heir of the wife; it not being necessary to expressly allege that he was her heir.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Death, §§ 64-66.]

2. SAME—SEPARATE CAUSE OF ACTION.

The complaint was not uncertain as not showing whether the action was for damages during her lifetime, or for damages to the husband on her death, and the only cause of action stated was an action for damages to the husband as heir of the wife for negligently causing her death.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Death, §§ 60, 69.]

3. PLEADING—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where an original complaint was filed by plaintiff and his wife before her death for injuries to the wife, and after her death an amended complaint was filed by plaintiff alone, to recover as heir of his wife for negligently causing her death, the filing of the amended complaint was, in effect, a discontinuance of the previous action, and the beginning of a new cause of action, and the sufficiency of amended complaint was to be determined solely by its own allegation, without reference to the original complaint.

4. APPEARANCE—PROCEEDINGS CONSTITUTING—WAIVER OF PROCESS.

Where plaintiff and his wife brought an action for injuries to the wife caused by defendant's negligence, and after the wife's death, plaintiff filed an amended complaint with leave, in his own name, as heir, for her death by defendant's negligence, and defendant appeared in the second action and demurred to the amended complaint, he thereby waived process thereon, and may not object that the amended complaint was, in effect, the beginning of a new cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appearance, §§ 91-102.]

5. PLEADING—MOTION—STRIKING OUT MOTION—SUBSTITUTING NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where an amended complaint substituted a new cause of action, if defendant did not wish to consent to the substitution, the proper practice was to move to strike the new complaint from the files, on the ground that it stated a different cause of action; but the question could not be raised by demurrer.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR — PRESENTATION OF GROUND OF REVIEW—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION—MOTION TO STRIKE—FAILURE TO OBJECT.

Where plaintiff and his wife joined in an action for injuries to the wife by defendant's negligence, and on the wife's death plaintiff thereafter filed a purported amended complaint, in his own name, to recover, as heir, for her death, the second complaint stating a new cause of action, and defendant demurred to the new complaint, but did not move to strike it out, the court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties in the second action, and no objection having been properly made by motion to the substitution of the new cause of action, the objection that the amended petition was a new cause of action cannot be made for the first time on appeal.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Marshall W. Groom against Fred Bangs. From a judgment for defendant, and an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. P. Venoe and L. B. Archer, for appellant. Samuel G. Tompkins, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from a judgment after an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The complaint demurred to purports to state a cause of action in favor of Marshall W. Groom, to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by him from the death of Hattie L. Groom, his wife. It alleges that she was, at all the times mentioned, his wife; that the defendant, a licensed physician, was employed by plaintiff to treat her; that she was thereupon placed under his care, and that he was negligent, careless, ignorant, and unskillful; that in consequence of his ignorant, unskillful, negligent, and careless treatment of her, the particulars whereof are set forth at length, she died; and that, by reason of said negligent and wrongful acts resulting in her death, the plaintiff has suffered damage in the amount of $25,000. We cannot discern wherein the complaint lacks in the averments essential to a good cause of action by the husband, as an heir of the wife, for damages accruing by reason of her death, occasioned by the wrongful act or neglect of another, a right of action expressly given by section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was not necessary to expressly allege that he was her heir. It is alleged that she was his wife at the time of her death, and, as surviving husband, he would, under any ordinary circumstances, be her heir. Knott v. McGilvray, 124 Cal. 129, 56 Pac. 789. The respondent points out no particular wherein it is defective as a cause of action of that character.

One ground of demurrer was that the complaint was uncertain, because it could not be ascertained therefrom whether the action was for damages to the wife during her lifetime, or for damages to the husband resulting from injuries to the wife. Another ground was that there was a misjoinder of actions, in that it stated a cause of action for each of the above-mentioned injuries. The only damage alleged is that to the husband resulting from the death of the wife. It could not be upheld as an action for damages caused, either to the husband or wife, during her lifetime. There is no such uncertainty, and but one cause of action is stated, namely, an action for damages to the husband as an heir of the wife, for a negligent injury causing her death.

The complaint we are here considering is designated an amended and supplemental complaint, and was filed by leave of court. The original complaint, also appearing in the record, was filed before the death of the wife. In that complaint the husband and wife were both joined as plaintiffs, and it stated a cause of action for damages to the wife from bodily pain and injury suffered by her, caused by the alleged negligent and unskillful treatment of her by the defendant. The briefs discuss at length the question whether or not an action of that character survived to the husband upon the death of the wife. We deem the question immaterial. The original complaint is not before the court. The sufficiency of the amended complaint, upon demurrer, as to the point of the right of the plaintiff to maintain the action, is to be determined solely by its own allegations, without reference to those of the original complaint. In the new complaint neither Hattie L. Groom, nor any one representing her interest, is joined as plaintiff. The husband is the sole plaintiff therein. He sues in his own right, and he states a cause of action for an injury to himself alone, arising from the death of the wife, an injury and cause of action which did not exist in her lifetime, and which accrued only upon her death. It is a cause of action entirely different from that sued on in the original complaint. The filing of the amended and supplemental complaint was, in effect, a discontinuance of the previous action, and the beginning of a new action for a new cause. This method of procedure was irregular, but no objection was made upon that ground. On the contrary, the defendant appeared to this new action, and demurred to the new complaint, thus waiving process thereon. The proper practice, if the defendant did not wish to consent to the mode of proceeding, was to move to strike the new complaint from the files, on the ground that it was not an amended or supplemental complaint, but stated a new and different cause of action. No such motion was made. The demurrer does not raise the point. It is a case in which the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, and where no objection has been properly made in the court below to the manner of procedure by which the cause was brought before that court. In such cases the objection cannot be made for the first time on appeal. Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 95 Cal. 381, 30 Pac. 562; Power v. Fairbanks, 146 Cal. 613, 80 Pac. 1075; Hart v. Carnall-Hopkins Co., 101 Cal. 163, 35 Pac. 633; De Jarnatt v. Marquez, 132 Cal. 702, 64 Pac. 1090.

The judgment is reversed.

GALINDO v. WALTER, City Clerk. (Civ. 526.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 7, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — LEGISLATIVE POWER—DELEGATION.

Legislative power having been conferred exclusively by San José Charter (St. 1897, pp. 600-603, c. 15) art. 3, cc. 1, 2, on the city council, without any referendum provision, such power cannot be delegated to the electors.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 153, 154.]

2. SAME—POWERS OF MUNICIPALITY.

The powers of a municipal corporation are such as are granted in express words, or are necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted or indispensable to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 144, 149.]

3. SAME — PUBLIC QUESTIONS — WISHES OF VOTERS—SUBMISSION TO VOTE.

Under San José Charter (St. 1897, p. 601, c. 15) art. 3, c. 2, § 1, enumerating the subjects of legislation delegated to the city council, the council had no power to pass an ordinance directing the city clerk to place on the ballot, at the next city election, the question whether the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage should be allowed in the city, for the purpose of ascertaining the will of the voters thereon.

Petition by John A. Galindo for a peremptory writ of mandate against Roy E. Walter, city clerk of the city of San José. Writ granted.

E. M. Rea, for petitioner. Frank H. Benson, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an application for a peremptory writ of mandate, requiring respondent to prepare the sample ballot, to be mailed to the voters of the city of San José, for the election to be held there on the third Monday of May, 1908, and the voting machines to be used at that election, according to law, by omitting from said ballots and from the voting machines the following: "Shall the sale of intoxicating liquor as a beverage be allowed in the city of San José?" and the words "Yes" and "No" placed in such juxtaposition to said question as to enable the elector to vote for or against the matter referred to therein, the petitioner alleging that the respondent threatens and intends to place such words on said ballots and on said voting machines. The city of San José is a municipal corporation operating under a freeholder's charter, formed and adopted under the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, and approved by the Legislature March 5, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 592, c. 15). April 15, 1908, the common council passed and adopted an ordinance which was approved by the mayor, by the terms of which the city clerk (respondent herein) was directed and authorized to place upon the ballot on each voting machine the above-quoted question, in order to submit to the voters at the said election the proposition embodied in such question. There is no referendum provision in the San José charter, the legislative power being conferred exclusively on the common council (article 3, cc. 1, 2). Such power cannot be delegated to the electors (1 Abbott on Municipal Law, § 110, p. 195; City of Oakland v. Carpentier et al., 13 Cal. 544; Ex parte Wall, 48 Cal. 279, 17 Am. Rep. 425); nor does the ordinance in question attempt to do so, it being admitted by both petitioner and respondent that its object is merely, in this way, to ascertain whether it is the desire of the electors of the municipality that the common council shall, by proper ordinance, prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor. The question for decision then is: Has the common council the power to adopt this method for ascertaining the electors' wishes? "The powers of a municipal corporation are such as are granted in express words, or are necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted, or indispensable to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation." 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1139; Hyatt v. Williams, 148 Cal. 585, 84 Pac. 41. Section 1 of chapter 2, art. 3, of the charter of San José enumerates the subjects of legislation; and when this provision is examined, with the rule just noticed in mind, it is found to vest no power in the common council to pass the ordinance in question. The ordinance is therefore void, and affords no authority whatever to the threatened action of the city clerk complained of in this proceeding, and, as no other authority is relied upon, it follows that the ballot and the voting machines should be prepared according to the provision of the charter governing city elections, and that the matter to which objection is made should be omitted therefrom. A writ of mandate will issue to compel an officer to omit from a ballot anything placed thereon not authorized by law. Partridge v. Devoto, 148 Cal. 167, 82 Pac. 775.

It follows that the writ should issue as prayed for, and it is so ordered.

McRAE v. LACKMANN, Sheriff. (Civ. 493.)
(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 11, 1908.)

1. CHATTEL MORTGAGES—VALIDITY.

A chattel mortgage given to secure a loan is valid between the parties, though the articles covered by the mortgage are not such as may be mortgaged under the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Chattel Mortgages, § 149.]

2. SAME—POSSESSION BY MORTGAGEE.

A mortgagee, who has taken possession under a chattel mortgage, stipulating that he may take possession of the property on default in payments called for, is rightfully in possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Chattel Mortgages, §§ 286-293.]

3. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES — WRONGFUL ATTACHMENT—LIABILITY—COMPLAINT.

In an action by a mortgagee, in a chattel mortgage, who had, as authorized by the mortgage, taken possession of the chattels on default of the mortgagor, against a sheriff, for his taking the chattels under a writ of attachment against the mortgagor, a complaint which does not show affirmatively that the plaintiff in the attachment suit was a creditor of the mortgagor or otherwise entitled to question the validity of the mortgage states a cause of action as against a demurrer, since the officer must, to justify the levy, show that the attachment plaintiff was a creditor of the mortgagor and entitled to question the validity of the mortgage.

Action by Donald McRae against John Lackmann, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. From a judgment entered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Order and judgment reversed.

Julian Pinto, Warner Temple, Nathan C. Coghlan, and J. B. Gibson, for appellant. George D. Squires, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from the order of the court sustaining defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint, and from the judgment against plaintiff entered thereon. The action is for conversion, for the taking from the possession of plaintiff certain personal property, which had been theretofore mortgaged to plaintiff by one E. A. Kosta, to secure the sum of $1,500, loaned by plaintiff to Kosta on the 15th day of January, 1902, to be repaid one month thereafter. By the condition of the mortgage, if Kosta made default in any payment, then plaintiff might take possession of the property. It is alleged that he did make default in such payment, and on the 10th day of April, 1902, plaintiff took possession of all of the mortgaged property. It is then alleged that: "On the 11th day of April, 1902, and while plaintiff was justly in possession of said chattels and effects, the defendant, as sheriff as aforesaid, under a writ of attachment issued from the justice's court of said city and county, in an action wherein one W. S. Morrow was plaintiff, and the said C. [E.] A. Kosta was defendant, levied on and seized all of the said chattels and effects included in said mortgage and schedule hereto, and converted the same to defendant's use, to the great detriment of plaintiff, to wit, to his damage in the sum of $1,585." Defendant seems to have based his demurrer upon the proposition that the articles covered by the mortgage are not such as may be mortgaged under our statute. But, whether they are or not, the mortgage was good as between the parties thereto. Perkins v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, 133 Cal. 496, 65 Pac. 1030; Bank of Ukiah v. Moore, 106 Cal. 673, 39 Pac. 1071; Bank of Ukiah v. Gibson, 109 Cal. 198, 41 Pac. 1008. By the terms of the mortgage plaintiff had the right to take possession of the articles upon default in the payments called for by the mortgage, and he was thus rightfully in possession when the writ was served. Perkins v. Maier & Zobelein Brewery, supra. The writ was not issued against plaintiff, but was against Kosta, and it does not appear from the complaint that the plaintiff in the attachment suit was a creditor of Kosta, or was in any position to question the validity of the mortgage under which plaintiff was in possession of the articles taken by the sheriff.

According to the allegations of the complaint, the defendant, as sheriff, took the property from the possession of plaintiff, under a writ issued against Kosta, upon the suit of one Morrow. "When the officer attaches property found in the possession of the defendant, he can always justify the levy by the production of the attachment writ, if the same was issued by a court or officer having lawful authority to issue it, and be in legal form. But when the property is found in the possession of a stranger claiming title, the mere possession of the writ will not justify its seizure thereunder. It rests upon the officer to go further, and prove that the attachment defendant was indebted to the attachment plaintiff. If in the attachment suit judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, that will establish the indebtedness of the defendant; if not, the officer must otherwise prove the indebtedness in order to justify his proceeding." Drake on Attachment, § 185a; Brichman v. Ross, 67 Cal. 601, 8 Pac. 316; Horn v. Corvarubias, 51 Cal. 524; Jones v. McQueen, 13 Utah, 178, 45 Pac. 202. In James v. Van Duyn, 45 Wis. 512, it was held that an officer who seized property in possession of the mortgagee, under an attachment against the mortgagor, could not question the validity of the mortgage until he had shown that the plaintiff in the attachment suit was a creditor of the mortgagor. In the case at bar, the property having been taken from the possession of plaintiff, a mortgagee, under a writ against the mortgagor, and it not affirmatively appearing from the complaint that the plaintiff in the attachment suit was a creditor of the mortgagor, or otherwise entitled to question the validity of the mortgage, defendant's demurrer should have been overruled.

The order and judgment are reversed.

FLANNIGAN et al. v. TOWLE et al.

(Civ. 459.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
April 28, 1908.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR—OMISSION IN RECORD—CORRECTION.

Where, at the submission of an appeal, appellants suggested a diminution of the record in accordance with Supreme and appellate courts rule 14 (78 Pac. x), and the certificate of the trial clerk shows that the printed record contains an incomplete transcript of the bill of exceptions as actually settled by the trial judge, in that objections by appellants to the admission of particular evidence, and exceptions to the overruling of the objections are omitted, appellants' motion to supply the omission will be granted, and the certificate will be considered.

2. SAME — PERSONS ENTITLED TO APPEAL — "AGGRIEVED PARTIES."

3. TAXATION—TAX SALES—ACTION TO TRY TITLE—CONDITION PRECEDENT—TENDER OF TAX.

The original owners of land sold for taxes cannot quiet title to it as against a purchaser from the state because the deed on which the purchaser relies shows that less than three weeks' notice of the tax sale was given by publication, where the suit was brought 12 years after the sale, and there is no claim that the assessment of the taxes was irregular, that the taxes were paid or tendered, that any fraud was perpetrated or that defendant was not a bona fide purchaser or did not pay the full amount that was due; the original owners' failure to offer to do equity compelling the assumption that they are unwilling to pay the tax for which the land was sold.

Appeal from Superior Court, Modoc County; N. D. Arnot, Judge.

Action by P. L. Flannigan and another against C. H. Towle and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

N. J. Barry, for appellants. J. H. Stewart, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. At the time of the submission of this cause, in accordance with rule 14 of the Supreme and appellate courts (78 Pac. x), there was a suggestion by appellants of diminution of the record. According to the certificate of the clerk below, the printed record contains an incomplete transcript of the bill of exceptions as actually settled by the trial judge. The defect consists in the omission of the objections made by appellants to the introduction in evidence of the deeds upon which defendant Towle relies for his title and the exceptions taken to the orders of the court overruling said objections. As the record should speak the truth, the motion of appellants to supply said omission is granted, and the said certificate filed in this court will be considered. The result is that we have a record containing no challenge of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and the only specification of error is that "the court erred in admitting in evidence defendants' Exhibits A, B, C, D, E, and F."

Plaintiffs admitted at the trial that they could show no title to the land described in any of these deeds except that contained in Exhibit B. Hence they are not aggrieved parties so far as the judgment relates to the other tracts. Section 938, Code Civ. Proc.; Estate of Piper, 147 Cal. 606, 82 Pac. 246. The objection to said deed, B, is that the recitals therein contained show that the sale of the land to the state for delinquent taxes was not in accordance with the requirement of the statute, as less than three weeks' notice of said sale was given by publication. We think, however, that under the circumstances disclosed by the record appellants should not be permitted to urge that as a ground for a reversal of the judgment. There is no pretense that the assessment of the taxes was not regular. It is not claimed that appellants ever paid the tax or offered to do so. There is no contention that any fraud was perpetrated, or that defendant Towle did not act in good faith in purchasing the land from the state or that he did not pay the full amount that was due. Plaintiffs, 12 years after the land was sold to the state, bring this action in equity to quiet title, without offering to do equity. It would be grossly inequitable to grant them the relief which they seek without requiring them to reimburse respondent for the money which he has paid in reliance upon the state's title. But from the record before us we must assume that appellants are unwilling to pay the tax, and therefore the court was justified in finding against them.

In Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 673, 33 Pac. 766, it is said: "Courts of equity do not review the proceedings of officers intrusted with the assessment of property. If proceedings taken by them are void, no title will pass by a sale of the real estate, and the party claiming to be injured must litigate his right in an action at law for the possession of the premises." In Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 253, 66 Pac. 303, it is said: "The assessment and bond being valid, it appears that the plaintiffs are indebted for the amount assessed or such proportionate part of it as may correspond to their land. This being the case, they cannot successfully invoke the assistance of a court of equity against the irregularities in the sale complained of, unless on the condition of paying what is due from them. Here no such condition has been imposed by the court, nor is there an offer in the complaint to pay what is due. The plaintiffs were therefore not entitled to relief." In Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 561, 82 Pac. 194; 109 Am. St. Rep. 168, we find this language:

"The plaintiff comes into a court of equity admitting that he should have paid on account of this property the exact sum originally charged against it; that this was no more than his fair share of the public burden which he, in common with all other taxpayers, must bear for the support of the government whose protection he enjoys. We think the case thus presented is without equity, and that on the familiar principle that he who seeks equity must do equity the plaintiff should be denied the equitable relief which he demands. * * * The original tax was not unjust, and, if we concede that the defective descriptions were so material as to make the sales void, that consequently, under the provisions of section 3806 of the Political Code, the tax collector should not have offered the lands for sale, and hence that the penalties and costs are unjust, the plaintiff cannot ask to have the sales canceled nor the assessment set aside unless he shows that he has paid, or offers to pay, the amount which of right he ought to pay." See, also, Steele v. County of San Luis Obispo (Cal.) 93 Pac. 1020.

We think the principle announced in the foregoing cases is applicable here, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 15, 1908. Rehearing Denied June 12, 1908; Denied by Supreme Court, July

1. PLEADING—CROSS-COMPLAINT—SERVICE ON ATTORNEY.

Code Civ. Proc. § 465, provides that all pleadings subsequent to the complaint must be served on the adverse party or his attorney. Section 442, as amended by Act March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 706, c. 372), provides that, whenever defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party to the action, he may file a cross-complaint which must be served on the parties affected thereby, and designates the cross-complaint as a pleading on the part of the defendant. Held, that service of a cross-complaint is sufficient if made either on the adverse party or his attorney.

2. SAME—PROOF OF SERVICE.

Written acknowledgment of service of a cross-complaint indorsed thereon and signed by plaintiff's attorney is sufficient proof of due service to warrant the entry of a default on plaintiff's failure to answer.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—PRESUMPTION—REVIEW.

An order setting aside a default judgment on defendant's cross-complaint must be affirmed on appeal, unless it affirmatively appears from the record that there were no grounds on which the order could have been properly made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3785.]

4. SAME—RECORD.

Where, on appeal from an order setting aside a default judgment for plaintiff's failure to answer the cross-complaint, it appeared from the order that affidavits other than those set out in the transcript were used at the hearing and filed, the appellate court would presume that such omitted affidavits contained a sufficient showing to justify the decision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by James F. Wood and another against Franklin H. Johnston and another. From an order setting aside plaintiffs' default for failure to answer defendants' cross-complaint, and vacating a judgment rendered thereon, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Taylor & Forgy and Jas. E. Byrne, for appellants. G. A. Gibbs, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order of court setting aside plaintiffs' default for failure to answer defendants' cross-complaint and vacating a judgment rendered thereon.

At the same time, and with their answer, defendants filed a cross-complaint, wherein they asked for affirmative relief against plaintiffs. Copies of both the answer and cross-complaint were delivered to plaintiffs' attorney, who acknowledged service thereof by indorsing thereon the following: "Received copy of the within answer and cross-complaint this 18th day of November, 1907"—followed by his signature as the attorney of plaintiffs. Plaintiffs failed to answer or otherwise plead to the cross-complaint within the time required; whereupon defendants caused their default to be entered, and judgment thereon was duly rendered by the court as prayed for in the cross-complaint. Thereafter plaintiffs moved the court to set aside the default and vacate said judgment on the ground of inadvertence, excusable neglect, and surprise. The motion was made upon the files and records in the case and supported by an affidavit of plaintiffs' attorney setting forth the facts alleged to constitute the excusable neglect, surprise, and inadvertence. Upon the hearing the court made an order granting the motion, not, however, upon the grounds upon which the same was made, but, as expressed in the order, upon "the ground that said default and judgment were entered without jurisdiction, no sufficient proof of service of said cross-complaint appearing to have been furnished." The question, therefore, fairly presented by the appeal is the sufficiency of the service of the cross-complaint. The record clearly shows that it was duly served upon plaintiffs' attorney of record. The effect of the order as made was to hold that such service was a nullity, and hence the failure of plaintiffs to answer did not warrant the entry of their default, nor confer upon the court jurisdiction to render judgment thereon. In thus holding we think the court erred.

Section 442, Code Civ. Proc., as amended by act approved March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 706, c. 372), provides that "whenever the defendant seeks affirmative relief against any party to the action," etc. (the amendment consists in adding the last three words italicized after the word "party"), he may, in a proper case, file a cross-complaint, which must be served upon the parties affected thereby. There is nothing contained in the section which indicates how the service may be made upon such party. By reference, however, to section 465, Code Civ. Proc., we find that "all pleadings subsequent to the complaint must be filed with the clerk and copies thereof served upon the adverse party, or his attorney." By the express provisions of section 422, Code Civ. Proc., as amended by act approved March 20, 1907 (Stats. and Amends. to Code 1907, p. 705, c. 372), the cross-complaint is designated as a pleading on the part of the defendant. This being true, it follows that the service is sufficient under said section 465 if made upon either the adverse party or his attorney. In the case at bar the written acknowledgment of service of the cross-complaint indorsed thereon and signed by plaintiffs' attorney is sufficient proof of due service of the cross-complaint, and warranted the entry of default and conferred upon the court jurisdiction to render the judgment thereon.

Respondents contend that, conceding the service of the cross-complaint to have been sufficient, the order appealed from should nevertheless be sustained under the provisions of section 473, Code Civ. Proc., upon the ground of inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect. The motion was granted, and, as every Intendment is in favor of the judgment of the trial court, its action must be sustained, unless it affirmatively appear that the order granting the motion was erroneously made. In other words, unless it appear from the record that there were no grounds upon which the order could have been made, we must presume it was properly made. It appears from the order from which the appeal is prosecuted that affidavits other than the one set out in the transcript were used at the hearing and filed herein. As these affidavits are not before this court, we are unable to say that they did not contain a sufficient showing, both as to the grounds for the motion and merits of the action, to justify the granting of the motion.

There is no merit in the contention that the motion should be limited to an attack upon the judgment only. Taken as a whole, the notice is sufficient to support the motion to vacate both default and judgment.

The order is affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

O'ROURKE v. FINCH et al. (Civ. 511.)(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 18, 1908.)1. APPEAL AND ERROR—TIME FOR TAKING APPEAL.

An order denying defendants a new trial having been entered on plaintiff consenting to a reduction of the judgment, defendants, or either of them, could immediately appeal therefrom under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3; their appeal not being premature, because, when notice of appeal was given, the judgment, as reduced, had not been made nor entered.

2. SAME—ADVERSE PARTIES—NOTICE OF APPEAL.

In determining who are adverse parties to an appeal within the statute requiring notice of appeal to be served upon the adverse parties, the appellate court can look to the record only, and hence an appeal by one defendant from an order denying a new trial on a verdict for plaintiff is not defective, because notice of appeal was not served on his codefendants, where it appears that all the defendants moved for a new trial; plaintiff being the adverse party under the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 2137-2139.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by John Henry Joseph O'Rourke, by Frank J. O'Rourke, his guardian ad litem, against T. J. Finch and others. From an order denying a new trial on verdict for plaintiff, defendant Finch appealed, and plaintiff respondent moves to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Lynch & Drury, for appellant. W. H. Morrissey, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. Motion to dismiss appeal. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,000 in an action for personal injuries. In due time the defendants, who appeared by the same attorneys, served notice of their intention to move for a new trial, specifying the grounds upon which the motion would be made. On the hearing of the motion, December 2, 1907, the court made an order granting the said motion, unless the plaintiff should, within 20 days, consent that the judgment be reduced to $750, in which "event an order will be made denying said motion." Within the 20 days plaintiff filed his written consent that the judgment might be reduced to $750, and the court thereupon, on December 12, 1907, made an order "that the motion for a new trial be and the same is hereby denied." On January 7, 1908, the defendant Finch (appellant herein) duly filed and served upon plaintiff a notice of appeal from the order, so made and entered on December 12th denying the motion. On February 4, 1908, the court made an order directing that the judgment be reduced, according to the prior consent of the plaintiff, to $750; that such order be entered nunc pro tunc as of December 12, 1907.

Upon the above facts, as shown by the record, the plaintiff moves to dismiss the appeal upon two grounds: First. It is claimed that the appeal was prematurely taken, for the reason that, at the time the notice of appeal was given, the judgment, as modified, reducing the original judgment to $750, had not been made or entered. It is not necessary that it should have been. The order denying the new trial had been made and entered in the minutes of the court, and the defendants, or either of them, had immediately the right to appeal therefrom. Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3. Second. It is further urged that this court has no jurisdiction of the appeal, for the reason that it is by one only of the defendants, and that the notice of appeal was not served upon the other defendants; it being claimed that the other defendants were adverse parties. The statute provides that the notice of appeal must be served upon the adverse parties or their attorneys. The motion for a new trial was made by all the defendants. Its object was to set aside the judgment, and have a retrial of the issues of fact. The plaintiff was the adverse party under such motion. He was the party to whom the motion was directed. We must look to the record, and that alone, for the purpose of determining the question as to who were adverse parties. Watson v. Sutro, 77 Cal. 609, 20 Pac. 88; In re Ryer, 110 Cal. 557, 42 Pac. 1082; Niles v. Gonzales et al. (Cal.) 92 Pac. 74.

The motion is therefore denied.

NIMS v. CUNNINGHAM. (Civ. 433.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 15, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for services and expenditures in the care and medical treatment of defendant's daughter during her last illness, a witness testified to the untidy condition of the rooms occupied by the daughter, and to the fact that after her death the rooms had been cleaned up, the error in permitting him to state whether he wished to leave the impression that the rooms had been transformed for the purpose of inspection was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4153-4160.]

2. SAME.

Where, in an action by a physician for services and expenses in the care and medical treatment of defendant's daughter during her last illness, defendant in his answer set forth the friendship that existed between his daughter and a member of plaintiff's family, the admission of evidence that plaintiff's daughter and defendant's daughter were schoolmates, thereby showing that plaintiff was called on in the first place only as a friend, was not prejudicial to defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4054.]

3. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS—ACTIONS FOR MEDICAL SERVICES—RECOVERY.

The fact that a physician is employed to give defendant's daughter medical treatment by reason of the friendship that existed between the daughter and the member of the physician's family does not excuse defendant from paying the legal obligation incurred by him to the physician.

4. SAME.

Where, in an action by a physician for medical treatment of defendant's daughter during her last illness, it appeared that defendant had placed his daughter in charge of plaintiff, and had sent her to another city to be placed in proper rooms, and with proper nurses, and to be cared for, it was not error to permit plaintiff, on defendant's cross-examination, to show that defendant did not have his daughter's address, and did not accompany her to the city, and did not visit the rooms to which she was taken, since such fact showed that the entire charge of the daughter was left to plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by Herbert J. Nims against C. P. Cunningham. From an order denying a new trial and judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. A. Beasley, for appellant. John E. Richards, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover $1,500 for services rendered, expenditures incurred, and money paid out by the plaintiff for defendant, in connection with the care and medical treatment of defendant's daughter during her last illness, all done at defendant's special instance and request. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $1,100. Upon this verdict judgment was entered, and the court subsequently made an order denying the motion of defendant for a new trial. This appeal is from the order so made.

The evidence as to the value of the plaintiff's services, and as to whether or not suitable and proper care was taken of the deceased during her unfortunate illness, was conflicting, and we cannot, even if disposed to do so, interfere with the province of the jury in this regard, and it is not insisted that we should do so.

The appellant relies entirely upon certain rulings in the admission or rejection of evidence, which he claims to have been of such a serious and prejudicial nature as to call for a reversal of the order.

The first error assigned is in relation to the evidence of one Cody, who was called as a witness for the plaintiff. After this witness had testified to visiting the room where deceased was being cared for, and that there were dishes in the rooms; that they were "mussed up," and the bedclothing covered with coffee stains; and, as to the condition of the nightgown of deceased, he testified that he afterwards visited the rooms with the coroner's jury, and found that they had been considerably changed and cleaned up, so they were in a different condition from that in which they were when the witness first saw them. Plaintiff's counsel then asked the witness the following question: "Q. You did not wish, therefore, to leave the impression, in whatever you say, that the rooms had been in any way transformed for the purpose of inspection or anything of that kind?" Counsel objected to this question, on the ground it was immaterial as to what impression the witness wished to leave. The court overruled the objection, and the defendant excepted. The witness answered: "That is a fact; yes, sir." Counsel then asked the witness: "Q. Then, with the exception of tidying up, the rooms were substantially the same when you went there the second time as they were when you was there the first time? A. Yes, sir; they were just about the same after they were cleaned." It would have been better practice for the court to have sustained the objection to the question, but the evidence was harmless. As to the impression the witness desired to leave, it was not necessary to determine. He had testified to the facts as he understood them, and the jury could draw its own inference therefrom. The answer of the witness was to the effect that he did not desire to convey such impression. It is argued by counsel: "His impression, therefore, carried great weight with the jury." It does not appear to us that the impression of the witness could have carried great weight with the jury when he only testified that he did not intend to convey any impression. Whether he conveyed such impression or not was for the jury to say. Whether he intended to convey such impression was wholly immaterial; and, being so immaterial, the answer was harmless.

The next error assigned is in regard to a ruling on a question asked of plaintiff, which ruling is said to be "equally vicious." Plaintiff was a physician, and the deceased had consulted him as a physician and friend. After testifying that he had had two daughters attending the high school with the deceased, Gladys Cunningham, he was asked this question: "Q. Did you know what, if any, was the relation between your daughters and herself?" Defendant's objection to this question was overruled, and the witness answered: "The relations existing between my daughters and Gladys Cunningham were those of schoolmates. The first time I met her she came to our house one evening with her brother." The question and answer were merely introductory, and were proper. The relations that existed between the families of the plaintiff and the defendant, and the fact that the daughters were schoolmates, tended to show why the plaintiff was employed. It probably was not very material, but it was certainly harmless. In fact, the defendant in his answer set forth the friendship that existed between his daughter and the members of the plaintiff's family. The fact that the plaintiff was employed by reason of such friendship would not excuse the defendant from paying the legal obligation incurred by him to plaintiff. If the evidence tended to show that the plaintiff was called upon, in the first place, only as a friend, it certainly was not injurious to defendant, but it might have been to plaintiff.

In the cross-examination of defendant the plaintiff was permitted, under defendant's objection, to show that defendant did not write to his daughter while she was in San Francisco in charge of plaintiff; that he did not have her address; that he did not accompany her to San Francisco, and did not visit the room to which she was taken. It is claimed that this course of examination tended to prejudice the defendant in the eyes of the jury, as showing that he was wanting in affection or solicitude for his daughter. He had placed his daughter in the charge of plaintiff, and sent her to San Francisco to be placed in proper rooms and with proper nurses, and to be cared for; and while a parent would ordinarily know the address of his daughter, and visit her himself, we cannot say that under the circumstances the testimony was sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal of the case. In cross-examination much latitude is allowed, and much is left to the discretion of the trial court. This evidence was brought out in cross-examination, and it might, to a certain extent, tend to show the fact that the entire charge of the deceased was left to plaintiff, and that it was his duty to look out for her and care for her.

There are other assignments of error, but not of sufficient importance to justify us in discussing them. We find no error in the rulings of the court that would justify us in reversing the order denying a new trial.

The order is affirmed.

HENDERSON et al. v. WESTERN GAS ENGINE CO. (Civ. 466.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 14, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS—EMPLOYMENT OF AGENTS—AUTHORITY.

A corporation adopted through its board of directors a resolution authorizing its president to sell at par corporate stock. The president, after making ineffectual attempts to sell the stock, listed it with a broker, and agreed to pay the broker a commission for procuring a purchaser. The broker procured a purchaser. There was a custom that corporate officers, unless otherwise directed, when authorized to sell corporate stock, could list the same with brokers on a commission basis. Held, that since, under Civ. Code, § 2319, an agent has authority to do everything necessary and usual for effecting the purpose of his agency, the president had authority to employ the broker, and he might recover from the corporation the reasonable agreed commission.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by C. M. Henderson and another, partners under the firm name of Henderson-Macomber Company, against the Western Gas Engine Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Edward G. Kuster and C. E. Woodside, for appellants. Clair S. Tappan and Parker & Tappan for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action by brokers to recover commissions for services in selling corporate stock. Findings and judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

The record discloses that defendant corporation, through its board of directors, passed resolutions authorizing its president to sell at par certain of its corporate stock then in the treasury; that when said action was taken there was a custom and usage throughout California that officers, unless otherwise directed, when so authorized, in the usual and ordinary course of business placed and listed such stock with brokers on a commission basis, without express instructions from the board of directors, and in cases where such stock was so listed, to pay commissions to such brokers. That the president, after ineffectual attempts to sell the stock by advertisement and otherwise, listed the stock with plaintiffs, who were then engaged in the brokerage business in Los Angeles, and agreed, if the stock was sold to a customer introduced by plaintiffs, to pay them a commission of 7½ per cent. It is conceded that plaintiffs found a customer, and introduced him to the president, to whom the stock was sold at par, and that the commission of 7½ per cent. was a reasonable one. The court found that no services were rendered by plaintiffs, and no indebtedness against the corporation arose by reason of the transaction. The specifications of error relate to the insufficiency of the evidence to support such findings.

We are of opinion that from the record it appears, without contradiction, that the services were rendered under a valid agreement; and, it being stipulated that the commission claimed was a reasonable one, that the indebtedness was clearly established for the amount claimed in the complaint. Treating the president, under the authority given him by the resolution, as a mere agent of the corporation, his power to employ plaintiffs as such brokers existed under section 2319, Civ. Code: "An agent has authority: (1) To do everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business, for effecting the purpose of his agency." The trial court, that it might know what was proper and usual in the ordinary course of business in such transactions, admitted proof of the custom obtaining in relation thereto. Such custom being established, knowledge thereof must be imputed to the board when it passed the resolution ordering the sale, and such resolution is susceptible of no construction other than it authorized a sale by the president at par in the usual and ordinary manner. That such manner was observed is uncontradicted; that in its observance the employment of plaintiffs resulted, and that they performed the services and earned the commission, is unquestioned. If, as a fact, the corporation did not desire the usual custom of business to be followed in connection with this sale, it was incumbent upon it to so specify its desire in its resolution directing the same; otherwise, the plaintiffs had a right to assume that the employment was warranted. "A corporation, which suffers appearances to exist, and its officers, and agents to so act, as to give one employed by such officers and agents reasons to believe that he is employed by the company, becomes liable to such person, as his employé, to pay for the services rendered." Crowley v. Genesee Mining Co., 55 Cal. 276. The defendant having given this general authority to its president, the plaintiffs had a right to assume, under the custom of business, that it was the intention of the corporation that the usual manner of business in such transactions should be observed, and their employment authorized. The matter of an agent's employment of a subagent is not here involved, but rather the use, by the agent, of the instrumentalities necessary in the prosecution of the business, the use of which by fair inference may be said to have been contemplated by the principal in his appointment.

The order denying a new trial is reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. May 15, 1908.)

PROHIBITION—GROUNDS—WANT OF JURISDICTION.

An allegation in the complaint, in an action in justice's court, on a note reciting "on the first * * * day of July, I promise to pay * * * the sum of $one hundred and eighteen cents with interest," that by mistake the figures "1906" were omitted after the word "July," and that by mistake the word "dollars" was omitted after the word "hundred," without demanding a reformation of the note, is surplusage, and does not convert the action into a suit in equity beyond the jurisdiction of the justice, and prohibition will not lie to prohibit him from proceeding with the trial, for it cannot be assumed that he will exceed his jurisdiction by undertaking to reform the note.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Petition by Alice Burns and another for a writ of prohibition against G. E. Glover, justice of the peace. From a judgment dissolving the alternative writ, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

H. C. Dillon, for appellants. Rolfe B. Bidwell, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county, dissolving an alternative writ of prohibition theretofore issued against respondent, as justice of the peace, prohibiting him from proceeding with the trial of an action. Fraulob and Wicks, as copartners, instituted suit before said justice to recover upon a promissory note, alleged to have been made and delivered to plaintiffs by Alice Burns, one of the petitioners. The promissory note, copy of which was set out in the complaint, was in the following form: "Nov. 1, 1905. On the first, the first day of July, I promise to pay Fraulob and Wicks, for value received, the sum of $one hundred and eighteen cents with interest at six per cent. [Signed] Alice Burns." Nonpayment is alleged, and judgment asked against said Burns for $100.18. This proceeding grows out of the fact that there was inserted in the complaint an allegation as follows: "That by mistake of the party writing said note, the figures '1906' were omitted after the word 'July' in said note; that by mistake of the party writing said note the word 'dollars' was omitted after the word 'hundred' in the body of said note." The contention of the petitioners is that, by reason of said allegation contained in the complaint, the action is one in equity, for the reformation of a written instrument. No demand for such relief is made in the complaint, and no sufficient facts are alleged which could entitle plaintiffs to a reformation of the instrument. The allegation as so inserted serves no purpose whatsoever, and, on motion, should be stricken from the complaint as surplusage. By their action plaintiffs seek a judgment against Alice Burns for $100.18, basing their right thereto upon an alleged promissory note. This action is within the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace. We cannot assume that in the trial of the case the justice court will exceed its jurisdiction by undertaking to reform a written contract, particularly when no facts are alleged entitling the parties to such relief, and no demand therefor made.

FARNHAM et al. v. CALIFORNIA SAFE DEPOSIT & TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 420.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. May 18, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — TIME FOR FILING—ENTIRETY OF UNDERTAKING.

Though it took nearly two years to make improvements consisting of a large building, a barn, and a tankhouse, and the work was done in a somewhat fragmentary fashion, they should be treated as one entire undertaking, making the time for filing mechanics' liens commence to run when all the improvements were actually or constructively completed; an architect having been employed to superintend the work, having made plans and specifications as the work progressed, there having been no general contract for the whole work and the labor having been employed and the material furnished by the owners.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 195-198.]

2. SAME—OCCUPATION OF IMPROVEMENTS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, providing that the occupation of improvements by the owner shall be deemed equivalent to a completion of the improvements, as affecting the time for filing a mechanic's lien, the occupation of improvements while the work was in active progress and only one-half completed, though the house was so far finished that the upper portions could be occupied, did not start running the time for filing liens.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 198.]

3. SAME.

Under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, where the owner of improvements fails to file notice of their completion, mechanics' liens may be filed at any time within 90 days from the actual completion of the improvements.

4. SAME.

Under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, improvements are deemed completed within 30 days from the cessation of labor thereon, as affecting the time for filing mechanics' liens.

5. MORTGAGES—MECHANICS' LIENS—PRIORITIES.

Under the express terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, the lien of a deed of trust given a year after the commencement of building improvements and after the furnishing of materials therefor is inferior to a mechanic's lien for work and materials.

6. MECHANICS' LIENS—CONTRACTS IN WRITING—NECESSITY FOR.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, requiring contracts for improvements costing more than $1,000 to be in writing, does not affect the mechanic's lien of a carpenter for a claim exceeding $1,000, where he did not undertake employment as a contractor, but was employed at $3.50 a day for an indefinite period to do an indefinite amount of work, and where it could not have been ascertained when he was employed whether his aggregate wages would exceed $1,000.

7. SAME—INTEREST—RIGHT TO.

Under Civ. Code, § 3287, authorizing the recovery of interest on recovery of damages certain or susceptible of being made certain, interest is recoverable in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien on the claim from the time of suing, where the claim is susceptible of being made certain either by computation or reference to market rates.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 283, 606.]

8. SAME.

The right of mechanic's lienors to recover interest on their claims under the express terms of Civ. Code, § 3287, is not affected because defendant owners were not parties to the claims, and that the claims were contracted without their knowledge, where such parties claim under him who incurred the claims, and under an instrument executed after they had become liens against the property.

9. SAME—RIGHT TO PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

Work and materials for an improvement having been furnished directly to the owner, and he having agreed to pay therefor, claimants are entitled to personal judgment against him as well as judgment foreclosing the liens.

10. SAME—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1195, authorizing the imposition of attorney's fees in actions to foreclose mechanics' liens, being unconstitutional, it is improper to assess them in such cases.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 651.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Consolidated suits to foreclose mechanics' liens by F. J. Farnham and another against the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, the California Home Building Loan Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant companies appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Joseph Hutchinson, for appellants. J. B. McElroy and C. L. Colvin, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. Three suits to foreclose mechanics' liens were brought against T. E. Pope, George M. Seaton, and Mary Shinn Seaton, and the two corporations above named, which were by order of the court consolidated.

Plaintiffs obtained judgment, which provided, among other things, that the amounts found due constituted liens upon the premises described in the complaint. From this judgment the two defendant corporations have appealed.

Briefly the facts are as follows: The improvements consisted of a large three-story building comprising about 17 rooms, a barn, and a tankhouse. The court found that the lots upon which the barn and tankhouse were situated were separate from that upon which the principal building stood, and that the labor done and materials furnished for said barn and tankhouse had been paid for in full. No lien is claimed on either of these improvements. In March, 1901, the property involved in this action belonged to Bertha Thorndike and Starr M. Bruce who, about that time agreed to sell it to the defendants Seaton. There were defects in the title which the vendors agreed to correct, but it was agreed that the Seaton's might in the meantime occupy the premises, and, if they desired, make alterations in the building. The defects in the title were corrected, and the property was conveyed to Mary Shinn Seaton February 25, 1902. In March or April, 1901, Mary Shinn Seaton took possession of the premises and began making alterations in the buildings, and continued to make the same until June 30, 1903, when, according to the findings of the court, all work ceased. An architect was employed to superintend the work, and he made plans and specifications as the work progressed. There was no general contract for the whole work, but the labor was employed by the owners and the materials were furnished to them. The appellants claim under a deed of trust executed and recorded while these alterations were in actual progress, and before the owners had gone into occupation of the improvements as a residence. The lower court held the liens of the plaintiffs valid and prior to the claim of the California Home Building Loan Company. It is from this decision that the defendant corporations appeal. The appeal is from the judgment and from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

1. It took nearly two years to make these alterations; and, while we believe with appellants that the work was done in a somewhat fragmentary fashion, yet we do not think that it was done in separate and distinct sections, or that the materials were furnished on separate orders so as to constitute each a separate contract. On the contrary, we are of the view that the trial court was right in holding, as it did, that the matter of making the alterations was one entire undertaking, and that the time for filing liens commenced to run when they all were actually or constructively completed.

2. Were the liens filed in time? In discussing these liens, we will take Farnham's for illustration, although it is subject to attacks from which the others are exempt. All the liens were filed August 17, 1903. Thomas E. Pope and the Seatons entered into the occupation of the improvements in August, 1902; and appellants contend that, under the terms of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the building should be deemed completed as of that date. To support this contention they cite Giant Powder Co. v. San Diego Flume Co., 78 Cal. 193, 20 Pac. 419. But the record shows that at this time the work was in active progress, and that but about one-half of the alterations had been made, although the house was finished up to a point where the upper portions could be occupied. Under these circumstances the occupation of the building was not such as was inconsistent with further work on the building, or such as to start the time running for the filing of liens. Orlandi v. Gray, 125 Cal. 372, 58 Pac. 15; Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629.

3. But appellants assert that, even if the occupation be held not to determine the time of completion of the work, the lien was nevertheless filed too late. Farnham's work ceased on the building March 21, 1903, and no notice of cessation of work, as provided for by section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure was ever filed by the owners. Appellants claim in this behalf that Farnham's time to file a lien commenced to run when he ceased work; and that, allowing him, under the authority of Buell v. Brown, 131 Cal. 159, 63 Pac. 167, 120 days thereafter, it was 27 days too late, having been filed August 17, 1903. To support this position, they repeat their point already considered that the work of reconstruction was a series of disconnected jobs, and not one piece of work carried on in furtherance of one general design. They also assert that the painting, which was the last work on the building, and which was done June 30, 1903, was done for the purpose of keeping alive the liens. The painter was not employed by any of the lienholders, but by the owner, and, so far as appears from the record, he filed no lien. There is nothing in the case to show that the delay was caused by the connivance of Farnham or any other lienholder. A fair inference from the evidence is that this work was done in the regular progress of the undertaking, and not for the purpose of extending the time. The court, upon what we think is sufficient evidence, found that all work on the building ceased June 30, 1903. Therefore, if the structure was actually completed on that date, the lien was filed in time, because no notice of completion having been filed the lien might be filed at any time within 90 days from actual completion. If it was not actually completed June 30, 1903, when labor ceased, it was deemed completed 30 days thereafter, and in that event the lien was filed in time. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187; Buell v. Brown, supra. This point applies to all the building lienholders.

4. Appellants contend that Farnham's lien was not prior to their claims, and that the court erred in giving it such priority. In support of this contention, they again argue that the work was done in separate sections, and that, as all the work done prior to the recording of the deed has been paid for, the deed of trust is prior to this lien. The work of reconstruction was commenced and the materials therefor were furnished about a year before the deed of trust was executed or recorded. Section 1186 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The liens provided for in this chapter are preferred to any lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance which may have attached subsequent to the time when the building, improvement, or structure was commenced, work done, or materials were commenced to be furnished. * * *" Under the terms of this section it is clear that this lien is prior to the deed of trust.

In McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 144, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622, it is held that, when the labor and materials are furnished at the instance of the owner without the intervention of a contractor, each relates back to the time the work was done or the materials were commenced to be furnished. In Pacific M. L. I. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 236, 39 Pac. 761, the court says: "The notice of intention specified that the evidence was insufficient to show that the materials for which these defendants claimed a lien 'were furnished or commenced to be furnished prior to the 11th day of November, 1891, the day on which plaintiff's said mortgage was recorded.' It is sufficient to say that there was evidence that a portion of the materials for which they claimed a lien was furnished in September of that year. 'Their lien for all the materials that they furnished for the building would relate to this date, notwithstanding the fact that another portion was furnished subsequent to November 11th, and under an express contract. The lien commences when the claimant begins to furnish the materials, and includes all the materials that he may thereafter furnish for the building (McCrea v. Craig, 23 Cal. 525), whether they are furnished under an express contract, in which the terms and quantity are fixed, or under a contract implied from their purchase and use in the building, from time to time, as they are needed. The materialman cannot file his claim of lien until after the completion of the building, but he must then include in it all the materials which he has furnished, and not file a separate lien for those furnished under different contracts; and the lien for which the claim is thus filed will relate to the time when he first began to furnish the materials." The argument of appellants that Farnham had been paid for all work done before the recording of the deed of trust, and therefore that his lien was subject to it, applies to the lien of Vockel. As to the liens of the materialmen, no claim is made that the amount of money received by them, or either of them, was sufficient to pay for the materials furnished up to the time when the deed of trust was recorded, and the accounts of the Humboldt Lumber Company and the California Mill & Manufacturing Company show that only a small portion of the amount due for the materials so furnished has been paid.

5. Appellants assert that Farnham's contract necessarily exceeded in amount $1,000, and that, as it was not reduced to writing, it is void under the terms of section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Farnham agreed to act as a foreman carpenter for all the carpenter work necessary in the alterations, additions, and repairs in the Seaton three-story frame dwelling house. He was to receive $3.50 a day for his own services, and was to employ two men to work under him, who were to get $3.50 and $2 per day respectively. The work was to be done according to plans and specifications to be made by the architect. Farnham had earned under the contract $1,869, of which $1,218 had been paid. Appellants' contention in this respect is untenable. Farnham did not undertake the employment as a contractor, but merely as a carpenter at a fixed rate per day. Moreover, his employment was neither for a definite period nor for a definite amount of work, and it could not have been ascertained at the time of his employment whether the aggregate of his wages would exceed the sum of $1,000. The case of Smith v. Bradbury, 148 Cal. 41, 82 Pac. 367, 113 Am. St. Rep. 189, cited in support of appellants' position, is not in point. There the contractor agreed with the owner to do all the plastering work on a four-story hotel at stipulated prices per square yard, the contractor supplying the materials; and the evidence clearly showed that at the time the contract was made the work to be done under it would necessarily amount to more than $1,000. The court accordingly held that the contract, not having been filed for record as required by section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure, must be deemed void, and that the materials furnished to the contractor were to be deemed furnished at the personal instance of the owner. That case is inapplicable here for another reason. There the contractor agreed to employ the labor and furnish the materials; and, of course, in such a case, the contract being for over $1,000, it must be in writing and filed for the information of the laborers and materialmen. Here there was no one under Farnham who could claim a lien against his wages. Farnham's lien is the only one subject to the objection just discussed.

6. Appellants claim that the judgment is erroneous, in that it allows interest on all the claims from the date of the beginning of the suits. They argue that all the claims were disputed, and unliquidated, and that there was no way short of litigation by which appellants, who were strangers to the arrangements between the owners and the lien claimants, could ascertain what the proper amounts were. Its right to recover on all the claims was vested in the lienholders at or before the suits were commenced. Farnham's and Vockel's claims were for services at a fixed rate of compensation per day. The claims of the California Mill & Manufacturing Company, of the Humboldt Lumber Company, and of W. L. Taylor were for materials sold at the market prices. McCarl's claim was not allowed. The claim of Weeks was upon a quantum meruit. All the claims except the last one were capable of being made certain either by computation or reference to market rates, and consequently respondents were entitled to recover interest thereon. Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 15, 58 Pac. 312; Civ. Code, § 3287. The claim of Weeks being for the reasonable value of his services was not capable of being made certain by calculation, and hence was not entitled to bear interest prior to the judgment. The judgment should be modified in this respect. Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 67, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Fox v. Davidson, 111 App. Div. 174, 97 N. Y. Supp. 603; Swinerton v. Argonaut L. & D. Co., 112 Cal. 379, 44 Pac. 719. The circumstance that the appellants were not parties to any of the claims, and that they were contracted without their knowledge, does not affect the right of the lienholders to interest. The appellants claim under the person who incurred the liability, and under an instrument executed after the liability had become a lien against the property, and consequently they have only the rights in the property which the owner had when the deed of trust was executed. In speaking of this matter of interest the Supreme Court, in Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 224, 39 Pac. 758, said: "And the lien which the statute gives him is as extensive as the claim which it is intended to protect. If a claimant has furnished materials from time to time as they were needed, and receives payment on account, his claim is not 'unliquidated and open to be adjudicated,' as urged by the appellant. At the time he commenced his action to foreclose his lien his right to recover that open account was vested in him, and was capable of being made certain by calculation, and he was also entitled to recover interest thereon from that date." In the case of Macomber v. Bigelow, supra, relied upon by appellants, the court, in deciding that the lien claimant was not entitled to interest, said that his complaint was against Belyea and Rogers as original debtors to Madigan; that Madigan had no right to a personal judgment against Bigelow, the owner, except to enforce a lien against her property; that, "in case of unrecorded contracts, it is provided by section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure that all persons by whom labor is done and materials furnished 'shall have a lien for the value thereof.' No personal liability is incurred by the owner, but the land upon which the improvement is made is subjected to a lien therefor in favor of these persons. * * * Under these facts the court was not authorized to allow interest upon his claim prior to the rendition of its judgment." In the present case the services were rendered and the materials furnished directly to the owner, and he promised to pay for them. The claimants here are entitled to a personal judgment against the owner, as well as a judgment foreclosing the liens. In that case (Macomber v. Bigelow) in regard to interest the court further said: "Tuttle and Dupuy were, however, employed by Madigan at fixed rates of compensation, which they were entitled to receive from him upon the completion of their work, and the court properly allowed them interest thereon (citing authorities), and made the amount of their judgments liens upon the property of Bigelow."

7. The present case was decided prior to the decision of the Supreme Court declaring the provision in section 1195 of the Code of Civil Procedure concerning attorney's fees in mechanic's lien cases unconstitutional. Three hundred and seventy-five dollars was allowed as counsel fees in the case at bar, and to that extent the judgment is erroneous. Builders' Supply Depot v. Dennis O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982; Union Lumber Co. v. Simon, 150 Cal. 751, 89 Pac. 1077, 1081.

8. Appellants also complain of the court's action in permitting witness Farnham to answer a certain question, and that the claims of lien are not true for a number of specified reasons. We have carefully examined these matters, and find no error in respect to any of them.

The judgment is ordered modified by striking therefrom $375 allowed as counsel fees, and $18.45, being the amount of interest allowed on the claim of Weeks from the date of the filing of the complaint to the date of the entry of the judgment; and, as thus modified, the judgment and order will stand affirmed.

May 15, 1908. Rehearing Denied
June 13, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATORS—RIGHT TO CONTEST—"PERSON INTERESTED."

A public administrator and nonresident heirs are "persons interested," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1374, providing that any person interested may contest a petition for letters of administrator, on the ground of incompetency of the applicant, and they may contest the appointment, not only in the lower court, but on appeal.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—RIGHT TO APPOINTMENT—PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR—COUNTY OF DECEDENT'S RESIDENCE OR TO WHICH CAUSE IS TRANSFERRED.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1431, provides that on petition for administration, where no judge of the superior court is qualified to act, an order must be made transferring the proceedings to a superior court of an adjoining county, which shall exercise the same authority and jurisdiction over the estate, and all matters relating to the administration thereof, as if it had original jurisdiction; and section 1432 provides that the transfer shall not affect the right of any person to letters of administration. Section 1365 provides the order of persons entitled to administer, which includes the public administrator; section 1726 provides that the public administrator must take charge of estates of persons dying within his county, for which no administrators are appointed. The alleged will of a resident of R. county was probated in the superior court thereof, and letters of administration issued to M., the public administrator of that county. Thereafter a petition for revocation of the probate was filed, and the judge, deeming himself disqualified, ordered the estate transferred to the superior court of S. county, where the probate of the will was revoked. Thereupon L., the public administrator of S. county, filed his petition for letters of administration, as did M. Held, that M. was entitled to the appointment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Applications by L. R. Bradley, public administrator of San Bernardino county, and by M. S. Bowman, public administrator of Riverside county, for letters of administration on the estate of Sarah Graves. From an order appointing M. S. Bowman administrator of the estate, Bradley and others appeal. Affirmed.

Goodcell & Goodcell and Chas. R. Gray, for appellants. C. L. McFarland and Purington & Adair, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from an order appointing an administrator. Sarah Graves died January 7, 1906, in the county of Riverside, being at the time of her death, a resident of that county, and leaving estate therein consisting of real and personal property. On February 5, 1906, a document, purporting to be her last will and testament, was admitted to probate in the superior court of the said county of Riverside, and letters of administration with the will annexed issued thereon to M. S. Bowman, the public administrator of that county. Thereafter certain heirs of the deceased filed a petition for the revocation of the probate of said will, issues were joined upon the allegations of said petition, and the judge of said superior court, deeming himself disqualified to try the same, made an order transferring the estate to the superior court of San Bernardino county. Upon trial being had in the court last named, a judgment was made and entered revoking the probate of said will. Thereupon L. R. Bradley, the public administrator of San Bernardino county, filed his petition for letters of administration upon said estate, and the said M. S. Bowman, as the public administrator of Riverside county, also filed his petition praying for letters of administration thereon. Certain nonresident heirs of the deceased filed an opposition to the latter application. The matter coming on for hearing, the superior court of San Bernardino county made its order appointing M. S. Bowman, public administrator of Riverside county, administrator of said estate. L. R. Bradley and said nonresident heirs join in an appeal from this order.

The question of law for consideration on the appeal is whether the public administrator of San Bernardino county or the public administrator of Riverside county is entitled to administer upon the estate. Respondent also questions the right of the nonresident heirs to appeal, and presents this upon appeal and by separate motion to dismiss. It is also suggested that L. R. Bradley has resigned the office of public administrator of San Bernardino county, and this is made to appear by an affidavit showing his resignation, the proper acceptance thereof, and the appointment and qualification of his successor. This affidavit is made the basis of another motion to dismiss the appeal. The motions to dismiss and the appeal were argued and submitted together. If it be conceded that the application of Bradley for letters of administration was based upon a right, in part at least, personal, and that his successor in office could not be substituted in this action, and, therefore, upon the showing of his resignation and the appointment of such successor, respondent is entitled to have the appeal of Bradley dismissed (Estate of Lermond, 142 Cal. 585, 76 Pac. 488), the appeal must still be heard upon its merits, as we are of opinion that the other appellants are entitled to prosecute the appeal. Section 1374 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that any "person interested" may contest a petition for letters of administration, on the grounds stated in the opposition of the appealing nonresident heirs. It is not necessary that the contestant shall be competent to assert the right to administer himself, nor be entitled to nominate the appointee in order to contest. If the facts constituting the incompetency of the applicant were not properly or sufficiently stated, this would not be a ground for the dismissal of the appeal. An appeal lies from an order granting or denying letters of administration, and no reason is given why the right of the "person interested" to contest should cease upon the adverse order being made by the superior court. The public administrator is a "person interested" in the estate, so as to contest for letters of administration, and he may appeal from an adverse order. Estate of Damke, 133 Cal. 433, 65 Pac. 888. We are satisfied that the heir has a like right of appeal; otherwise, the right of contest would be of little avail. The motion to dismiss the appeal of the nonresident heirs is denied.

When the proceedings in the estate of Graves were transferred to the superior court of San Bernardino county, that court was empowered thereafter to "exercise the same authority and jurisdiction over the estate, and all matters relating to the administration thereof, as if it had original jurisdiction of the estate." Code Civ. Proc. § 1431. The transfer, however, did "not affect the right of any person to letters testamentary or of administration on the estate transferred, but the same persons are entitled to letters testamentary or of administration on the estate, in the order hereinafter (hereinbefore) provided." Section 1432. Upon the revocation of the probate of the will, the letters of administration with the will annexed ceased to have any effect, and the estate was subject to administration as if the deceased had died intestate. None of the persons entitled to priority over the public administrator having applied for letters, the public administrator was entitled to administer. Section 1365, subd. 8, Code Civ. Proc. The right of the public administrator of Riverside county to administer upon the estate, as alleged in his petition, is based upon the facts which, under section 1726, Code Civ. Proc., entitled him to letters, to wit, that Sarah Graves died in Riverside county, was a resident thereof, and left estate therein, and that no administrator for the estate had been appointed. That of the public administrator of San Bernardino county rests solely upon the transfer of the estate to that county. The evident purpose and intent of sections 1430-1433, Code Civ. Proc., is to provide a proper forum for the administration of estates of persons dying resident in a county in which the judge is disqualified to admit the will to probate or to appoint an executor or administrator of the estate. This is made apparent by the proviso in section 1431 that a transfer is not necessary when some judge, qualified to act, attends upon the court in the county in which the petition is filed, and the requirement of section 1432 that a retransfer of the proceedings must be made should the disqualified judge cease to act before the settlement of the estate. The public administrator of one county is entitled to contest the right of another public administrator to administer upon an estate in the superior court of the county of which the applicant is the public administrator, and the conflicting claims of the applicants must be determined by ascertaining the residence of the deceased at the time of his death. Estate of Damke, 133 Cal. 437, 65 Pac. 888. It is the duty of the public administrator to take charge of the estates of persons dying within his county (section 1726). No burden is imposed upon him of administering estates which have been transferred to his county by reason of the disqualification of the judge of the superior court of an adjoining county. As he is the public trustee appointed by the law to take charge of the estates of persons within his county, who die leaving no one competent to administer such estates, every intendment would seem to be in favor of a construction of the law which imposes the trust upon the resident officer, rather than upon an officer of an adjoining county. That he owes his appointment to the fact that he is a county officer does not offer any reason why he should be excepted from the provision of section 1432 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the transfer of the proceedings "shall not affect the right of any person to letters testamentary or of administration on the estate transferred."

The order of the court appointing the public administrator of Riverside county to administer upon the estate should be affirmed.

Order affirmed.

CITY ST. IMPROVEMENT CO. v. REGENTS OF UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 4,558.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 30, 1908.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—STATE CONSTITUTION—POWERS.

The Constitution of the state being but a restriction on the power of the Legislature, the limitations therein contained will not be extended beyond the legitimate meaning and use of the terms employed.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS—PROPERTY OF STATE UNIVERSITY.

Const. art. 13, § 1, exempting the property of California University from taxation, did not exempt unimproved vacant property in which the university's funds were invested from liability for the payment of special assessments imposed for street improvements benefiting such property.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the City Street Improvement Company against the Regents of the University of California. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Bishop, Wheeler & Hoefler (Alfred J. Harwood, of counsel), for appellant. J. C. Bates and R. M. Royce, as amici curiæ. Chas. E. Snook, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. By this action plaintiff sought to enforce a street assessment lien acquired by virtue of a public contract upon certain real property situated in the city and county of San Francisco, legal title to which stands in the name of the Regents of the University of California. The allegations usual and pertinent to such an action were pleaded, and, in addition thereto, it was alleged that the land upon which it was sought to impose the lien was entirely unimproved, vacant, and unoccupied, and was and is held and devoted solely to the private uses of the defendant, and is not incidental to the performance of any public function, nor actually appropriated to any public use whatsoever, and, further, that by the doing of the street work the land was enhanced in value at least to the amount of the assessment, and derived an equal benefit with all other lots of land assessed. A general demurrer was interposed by the defendant, which demurrer was sustained. From the judgment which followed, plaintiff appeals, and there is thus presented the single question whether, under the state of facts represented by the complaint, the land of the defendant is or is not subject to assessment and liable for the lien following thereon, under the general laws for the improvement of streets.

As to the character, status, and powers of the defendant corporation, little more need be said than that it is a private corporation charged with the public trust of the general government and superintendence of the University of California. St. 1867-68, p. 252, c.

244. This corporation has the power to hold, purchase, and convey such real estate as the purposes of the corporation shall require. It may receive donations from private individuals of moneys or other property for the benefit of the university, and it has, under restrictions, the power of distribution of its funds. Its principal source of income is derived from the state by tax levy. One-half of the moneys received from this tax must be devoted to the purpose of acquiring lands, buildings, and permanent improvements for the university, while the other moiety is under the general control of the board. St. 1897, p. 44, c. 48.

Article 9, § 7, Const., declares that the University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued. Article 13, § 1, it is not disputed, exempts the property of the University of California from taxation. But the Constitution of the state being but a restriction upon the power of the Legislature, the limitations therein contained will not be extended beyond the legitimate meaning and use of the terms employed. There is a broad and well-recognized distinction between a tax levied for the general public good and without special regard to the benefit conferred upon the individual or property subject to the tax, and a special assessment levied to force the payment of a benefit, of value corresponding and equal to the amount of the assessment, levied upon the property. This matter need not be discussed, since it has been elaborately considered and expounded in San Diego v. Linda Vista Irrigation Dist., 108 Cal. 189, 41 Pac. 291, 35 L. R. A. 33. The opinion in that case quotes from Hassan v. City of Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, as follows: "The collection and enforcement of assessments made for local improvements has never been the subject of general regulation by statute, and there is no provision which exempts the property of the state from liability for such assessments. Not being excepted by the statute law of the state it is left for the Legislature, which is vested with ample power for that purpose, to make such enactments on the subject as may be considered needful and proper." Hamilton, Special Assessments, § 318, summarizes the matter in the following language: "Exemptions made by general laws in favor of such property apply only to the general purposes of government, state, county, and municipal, even where the statute exempts the specific property from taxation of every kind, or from being taxed by any law of the state, and do not apply to the system of special assessment for local improvements."

With this distinction in mind between a general tax and a special assessment for benefits, no authority has been pointed out to us in the Constitution, the statute law, or in the decisions of this court which forbids the application of the street law to land whose title and use are such as here pleaded

The question cannot arise as to this being an effort to subject lands of the state, owned and used in its sovereign capacity, to an assessment lien, since, as declared in Estate of Royer, 123 Cal. 614, 56 Pac. 461, 44 L. R. A. 364, the University, while a governmental institution and an instrumentality of the state, is not clothed with the sovereignty of the state, and is not the sovereign. The lands, title to which is in the board of regents, are lands held for the public educational purposes of the state, and their holdings and their use do not differ in principle from the lands which may be held by boards of school directors or trustees of school districts. The principle is well established that, where any of such lands are not directly and necessarily used for a public purpose, they may be subjected to the payment of special assessments for benefits. And this is in consonance with justice and equity; for, to assess certain lot owners upon a street for all the cost of the work, part of which is for the benefit of a public institution, is to enhance the value of the university property at the expense of the few, instead of by taxation upon all the people at the expense of all. So it is said in Hassan v. City of Rochester, supra: "A different rule would compel individual lot owners to pay assessments levied for improvements which were of benefit to the state lands without any adequate advantage, and in many instances impose a burden which would be extremely onerous and produce great injustice. This could not have been intended." The limitation upon the powers thus to subject lands held for public purposes to such assessments is indicated by the case of Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451, where an attempt was made to subject a schoolhouse erected by a public school district to a mechanic's lien. It was there held that the state is not bound by the general words of a statute which will operate to trench upon its sovereign rights, or injuriously affect its capacity to perform its functions. The principle is that public policy itself will deny and forbid the application of general laws to property so held in trust for public purposes, as public school buildings, city or county municipal buildings and the necessary land upon which they stand, because of the grave interference with necessary public functions, governmental or educational, which would thus result. The private right of the individual must give way to the general good of all. But the rule goes no further, and wherever lands, though owned by some public agent or mandatary of the government, school boards, counties, or cities, penal, or reform institutions, or institutions for the feeble minded or insane, are not in use in the performance of a public function, such lands, in the absence of a constitutional or legislative restriction (such as we have seen does not exist in this state), are justly compelled to bear their part of the expense which goes directly to increase their values. So it was declared in San Diego v. Linda Vista Ir. Dist., supra, where pueblo lands of the city of San Diego had been subjected to and sold under the lien of an irrigation district assessment. And in Witter v. Mission School District, 121 Cal. 350, 53 Pac. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33, where an attempt was made to enforce a street assessment against lots used for school purposes, while sustaining a demurrer because of the absence of facts here pleaded, namely, that the lands were not in use for a public purpose, after referring to San Diego v. Linda Vista Ir. Dist., supra, this court said: "So far as shown, the lots in question may have school buildings upon them and may be used and occupied exclusively for school purposes, in which case we do not think this action could be maintained. As a private owner, however, of land not used exclusively for school purposes, but held as an investment or from which to derive rentals, as property of an individual is held and owned, we see no reason why the lands of a school district should not be assessed for improvements the same as those of any other private owner. That these rulings are in accord with the great weight of authority may be seen by reference to City of Chicago, etc., v. City of Chicago, 207 Ill. 37, 69 N. E. 580; State v. Robertson, 24 N. J. Law, 504; School Dist. v. Board of Improvements, 65 Ark. 343, 46 S. W. 418; Sioux City v. School Dist., 55 Iowa, 150, 7 N. W. 488; City of Atlanta v. First Presbyterian Church, 86 Ga. 737, 13 S. E. 252, 12 L. R. A. 852; Hassan v. City of Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528; Sewickley M. E. Church Appeal, 165 Pa. 475, 30 Atl. 1007; Essex County v. City of Salem, 153 Mass. 141, 26 N. E. 431. A reading of these cases will disclose that in many of the states, upon the theory that, in the absence of express prohibition, even the state should bear its share of benefits for special assessments, it is held that property, although devoted to public use, is liable to such assessment. The rule in this state is, as above indicated, that such property when actually devoted to the public use is exempt; otherwise not.

The complaint in this action sufficiently pleads facts rendering the land in question liable to the assessment. Its ultimate liability, of course, must depend upon proof of the facts alleged, but the complaint was not obnoxious to demurrer, and the judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer and permit defendant to plead to the merits.

ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN BANK, Limited, v.
SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA
et al. (S. F. 4978.)

Rehearing Denied July 24, 1908.)

1. CERTIORARI — WHEN PROPER REMEDY BY APPEAL.

An order in an action by the state to liquidate the affairs of an insolvent corporation, directing a bank to pay to the receiver funds belonging to insolvent being appealable, the bank was not entitled to a writ of review to review the order, which was a final adjudication of the bank's claim that, since third parties claim the funds, it has the right to retain the funds until the determination of their claim, or to pay the money into a court having jurisdiction thereof to abide such determination and a final adjudication of an intervener's claim to part of the funds, though the order was made the day before the day set for a hearing on the intervener's petition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, §§ 5, 6.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR—PARTIES ENTITLED TO APPEAL.

An order in an action by the state to liquidate the affairs of an insolvent, directing a bank to show cause why it should not be required to pay to the receiver funds belonging to the insolvent, made the bank a party to the record, entitling it to appeal from an order requiring it to pay the funds over.

In Bank. Petition by the Anglo-Californian Bank, Limited, for a writ of review against the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco and another. Writ discharged.

Jesse W. Lilienthal, for petitioner. E. De Los Magee and J. V. De Laveaga, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. Upon the petition of plaintiff filed in this court, a writ of review was issued commanding defendants to certify to this court, in order that the same might be reviewed, a transcript of the record and proceedings culminating in an order of said superior court requiring plaintiff to pay to Edward J. Le Breton, as receiver of the California Safe Deposit & Trust Company, an insolvent corporation, $47,637.55 held by it as the agent of said insolvent at the time of the adjudication of insolvency. The claim of plaintiff was that such order was in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, and therefore void. Defendants duly certified to this court a transcript of such record and proceedings, and the matter has been submitted for decision.

It appears from the record that in a proceeding instituted in said superior court under the bank commission act, by the people of the state of California by the Attorney General against said California Safe Deposit & Trust Company and its directors, judgment was given on January 14, 1908, decreeing said corporation insolvent, ordering it into involuntary liquidation, and appointing Edward J. Le Breton as receiver thereof to take possession of all its property, and to do all things necessary in the liquidation of its affairs. Plaintiff, a banking corporation, was at such time an agent of the insolvent corporation for certain purposes, and as such agent had in its possession $94,469.23, carried on its books to the credit of said insolvent. The receiver having demanded an accounting of plaintiff as to the money in its possession belonging or credited to the insolvent, plaintiff on January 22, 1908, rendered an account showing the above facts. On January 24, 1908, plaintiff notified the receiver that it had received written notice from the partnership firm of Stewart & McKee that said firm claimed that $3,349.77 of said sum was its own property, and was not the property of the insolvent, and that plaintiff must not pay the same or any part thereof to the receiver. On the same day it also notified the receiver of the receipt of a similar notice from the Western Pacific Railway Company as to $44,287.78. Solely because of said claims by said third parties, and not claiming any beneficial interest on its own part, plaintiff refused to pay to the receiver any part of either of the said amounts, and paid only the balance of said $94,469.23, viz., $46,831.68. These facts having been brought to the knowledge of the superior court by written petition by the receiver, said court made its order to show cause directed to plaintiff, neither of said third persons being made parties thereto, requiring it to show cause on February 26, 1908, why an order should not be made requiring the payment by plaintiff to the receiver of said amounts. On February 25, 1908, said firm of Stewart & McKee filed their petition in intervention in the proceeding pending in said superior court, setting up the facts upon which it based its claim to the $3,349.77, and asking for an order decreeing the same to be its property and directing the receiver to direct plaintiff to pay the same to it, or directing plaintiff to make such payment. The court on the same day made its order allowing said Stewart & McKee to file said petition and intervene in the matter. By order of the court, a citation was thereupon issued to the receiver and plaintiff requiring them to show cause on March 18, 1908, why said petition should not be granted. Before the date so fixed, viz., on March 3, 1908, the court, after a hearing on the order to show cause based on the receiver's petition, made its order requiring plaintiff to forthwith pay said amount, together with the $44,287.78 claimed by the Western Pacific Railway Company, to the receiver. This is the order which plaintiff seeks to have annulled in this proceeding.

We can see no good answer to the claim made by defendants in their brief to the effect that plaintiff had the right to appeal from the order complained of, and that, therefore, the writ of review was improperly issued. It is, of course, not disputed that, if a party has the right of appeal from an order made in excess of jurisdiction, he cannot have such order reviewed in certiorari proceedings.

Such is the express provision of our statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1068), and it has been uniformly so held by this court. That an order of the character of the one under consideration is generally appealable by one affected thereby who is a party to the record is practically conceded by learned counsel for plaintiff, and it must be under the decisions of this court. The theory upon which the decisions sustain such right of appeal by such a party from such an order is that the order is in effect a final judgment against him in a collateral proceeding growing out of the action—is so far independent of the suit itself as to be substantially a final decree for the purposes of an appeal, although there has been no final decree in the suit. See Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 Pac. 604; Grant v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872; Los Angeles v. Los Angeles, etc., Co., 134 Cal. 121, 66 Pac. 198. Plaintiff's position on the merits is that, by reason of the claim made against it by the third parties as to this money, it cannot safely pay the same to the receiver except in pursuance of some judgment or order made in a proceeding to which such claimants are parties, and that it is entitled either to retain the money until such controversy is determined, or to pay the money into a court having jurisdiction thereof, to abide such determination. The order in question is a final adjudication against plaintiff upon these matters. Its effect, if valid, is to require plaintiff to forthwith pay such money to the receiver, and finally deprive it of possession thereof without securing it against the claims of such third parties. It is clearly within the class of orders referred to in the cases last cited. Plaintiff was, of course, a party to the record, so far as such collateral proceeding was concerned, having been brought in as such a party by the order to show cause, and is fully within the rule of Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 506, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102, in regard to parties entitled to appeal.

It is claimed, however, that this order is not now appealable, because there has been no final determination on the petition of Stewart & McKee as to $3,349.77 of said money, filed by leave of the court and which had not been heard at the time of the making of the order. The rule invoked is the one applied in Nolan v. Smith, 137 Cal. 360, 70 Pac. 166, to the effect that a judgment is not a final judgment within the meaning of section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to appeals, unless it be one which finally disposes of the rights of all the parties to the action in relation to the matter in controversy, and thus, in effect, ends the proceeding in the court in which it is entered. Assuming in aid of plaintiff that the intervention of Stewart & McKee was made in the collateral proceeding instituted by the receiver for the obtaining of the possession of the money from plaintiff, rather than in the main proceeding pending in the superior court, the rule invoked has no application here. The order did finally determine the rights of all the parties, including such interveners, in relation to the matter in controversy. It was such a disposition of the whole subject-matter of the controversy as to completely dispose of the petition of the interveners, and deny them the relief sought thereby. The mere fact that it was made before the day set for a hearing on the interveners' petition and without any such hearing, however erroneous such a course may have been, does not change the situation. The whole controversy was regarding the present disposition of the money in the possession of plaintiff. The receiver claims that it should be forthwith delivered to him by plaintiff, the interveners claim that $3,349.77 thereof should be paid to them by plaintiff, and sought an order requiring such payment, and the plaintiff claimed that it should not be required to deliver up the money to the receiver in the face of the adverse claim made by the interveners, until the question of ownership had been determined. The order made purported to dispose of this whole controversy by decreeing immediate payment by plaintiff of the whole amount to the receiver, and, in effect, ended in the superior court the particular proceeding under consideration. We are satisfied that it must be held to be an adjudication of the subject-matter of the controversy as to all of the parties thereto.

It follows from what we have said that the writ of review was improperly issued.

The writ is discharged, and the proceeding dismissed.

Ex parte GREENALL. (Cr. 1,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1908.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS — PRACTICING WITHOUT AUTHORITY—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY—"PRACTICING MEDICINE OR SURGERY."

In a prosecution for violation of Act March 14, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 252, c. 212), providing that any person who shall practice * * * medicine or surgery, etc., or any other system of treating the sick, without having a certificate, etc., shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, it must appear that defendant practiced, or attempted to practice, medicine, etc., as a business or calling, or advertised or held himself out as so doing, the term "practicing medicine or surgery," etc., meaning that one is engaged in that line of work as a business; and a complaint, charging that defendant did unlawfully "treat the sick" by practicing the system or mode known as "chiropractic," without having a certificate, etc., was insufficient, the words "by practicing the system or mode," etc., being simply descriptive of the method by which defendant treated the sick.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, pp. 5488, 5491; vol. 8, pp. 7758-7759.]

2. HABEAS CORPUS—COMPLAINT IN CRIMINAL CASES—SUFFICIENCY.

The sufficiency of the complaint in criminal cases in inferior courts such as a justice's court will be considered by the appellate court on habeas corpus proceedings.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Habeas corpus by C. D. Greenall. Petitioner ordered discharged, and his bail exonerated.

Philaetha S. Michelsen and Gavin W. Craig, for petitioner. William C. Tait, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The petitioner was convicted in the justice's court of Los Angeles township of the county of Los Angeles on a complaint charging that he did, on or about the 18th day of June, 1907, "willfully and unlawfully treat the sick or afflicted by practicing the system or mode known as 'chiropractic' without having at the time of so practicing a valid, unrevoked certificate from the Board of Medical Examiners of the state of California entitling him so to do, as provided by an act of the Legislature of the state of California entitled 'An act for the regulation of the practice of medicine and surgery, osteopathy, and other systems or modes of treating the sick or afflicted, in the state of California, and for the appointment of a board of medical examiners in the matter of said regulation,' approved March 14, 1907." St. 1907, p. 252, c. 212. The judgment pronounced on said conviction was affirmed on appeal by the superior court of said county. Having been delivered into the custody of the sheriff of said county under such judgment, he sought to be discharged by this court on habeas corpus, and a writ having been issued, he was released on bail pending a determination of this proceeding.

It is contended that the complaint in the justice's court did not state facts constituting a public offense. We are of the opinion that this contention must be held to be well founded. The act of March 14, 1907, provides that: "Any person who shall practice or attempt to practice or advertise or hold himself out as practicing medicine or surgery, osteopathy, or any other system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted, in this state, without having, at the time of so doing, a valid, unrevoked certificate, as provided in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The act nowhere states, as did the act of 1901 (St. 1901, p. 56, c. 51), which was limited to a regulation of the practice of "medicine and surgery," what is meant by the term "practice" as used therein. The act of 1901, after providing that "any person practicing medicine or surgery" without a license shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, provided, in section 16: "The following persons shall be deemed as practicing medicine or surgery within the meaning of this act: (1) Those who profess to be, or hold themselves out as being, engaged as doctors, physicians or surgeons in the treatment of disease, injury or deformity of human beings. (2) Those who, for pecuniary or valuable consideration, shall prescribe medicine, magnetism or electricity in the treatment of disease, injury or deformity of human beings. (3) Those who, for pecuniary or valuable consideration, shall employ surgical or medical means or appliances for the treatment of disease, injury or deformity of human beings * * * (4) Those who, for a pecuniary or valuable consideration, prescribe or use any drug or medicine, appliance, or medical or surgical treatment, or perform any operation for the relief or cure of any bodily injury or disease." There was thus given by that act to the term "practicing medicine or surgery" a definite meaning, corresponding substantially with the popular understanding of the term. When we say that one is practicing medicine or surgery or osteopathy, we ordinarily mean that he is engaged in that line of work as a business, holding himself out as being so engaged, or for a consideration treating those who will accept his professional services, and we would not apply the term to one who incidentally and gratuitously suggests or puts into operation some method of treatment in the case of one who is "sick or afflicted." We are satisfied that the term "practice" in the act of 1907 should not be given any broader meaning than it had in the act of 1901. One who within this meaning "practices" medicine or surgery or osteopathy, or any other recognized mode of treatment of the sick, without a certificate, violates the provisions of the act. It might be sufficient in the complaint to charge simply that one had practiced medicine, or osteopathy, or chiropractics, without such certificate. In such an allegation, the word "practice" would, in view of the accepted meaning it is given when used in such connection, naturally and reasonably bear no other construction than the one we have described, and so construed would show an offense. But the complaint in the case before us, as we read it, contains no such allegation. The allegation was simply that the defendant did willfully and unlawfully "treat the sick or afflicted" without having at the time a valid unrevoked certificate as required by the act, the words "by practicing the system or mode known as 'chiropractic,'" being simply descriptive of the method by which he treated the sick. As thus used, the word "practicing" cannot reasonably be given the meaning we have described, but is synonymous with the word "using." We are informed in the briefs that the word "chiropractic" means a treatment somewhat analogous to that of osteopathy, the removal of the cause of disease without the use of drugs or any other means except the adjustment of the vertebra of the spine by manipulating them with the hand. If this be correct, the complaint simply charges that the defendant used this method in "treating" the sick or afflicted, without having any certificate under the act, and the allegations of the complaint would be fully sustained by proof that he had incidentally and gratuitously attempted to administer aid to one who was sick or afflicted by the use of this method. It might as well be contended that a complaint simply charging that one treated a sick person by administering medicine, without having a certificate, would state a public offense under this act. To bring a person within the provisions of the act, it must appear that he practices, or attempts to practice, medicine, etc., as a business or calling, or advertises or holds himself out as so doing, and, as we have said above, an allegation that one "practiced medicine" or surgery, etc., might show this. As we read the act, the allegations of the complaint in the justice's court in this case are entirely consistent with the innocence of the defendant of any violation of its provisions. It therefore fails to show a public offense.

Counsel for respondent contends that, if there is in this state such an offense or crime as that of which petitioner was convicted, the insufficiency of the complaint is immaterial on habeas corpus, citing Ex parte Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 Pac. 605. The rule of the Ruef Case has never been applied by this court to proceedings in courts of inferior, as distinguished from courts of general, jurisdiction. To the contrary, it has been the uniform practice to consider on habeas corpus the question of the sufficiency of the complaint in such inferior courts, and to discharge the prisoner where such complaint failed to show a public offense under the laws of the state. This matter was fully considered in Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 212, where the distinction between the two classes of courts was stated, and where the prisoner was discharged solely because of the insufficiency of the complaint in this regard. That decision has never been modified. In the Ruef Case we were considering the question with relation to a proceeding pending in a court of general jurisdiction, the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, while here we have a proceeding in a court which has uniformly been treated as an inferior court, a justice's court. Ex parte Kearny, supra. It may be that a strong argument can be made in favor of the proposition that there is no logical basis for a distinction in this regard between courts of general jurisdiction and those of inferior jurisdiction, but the distinction has the support of no less an authority than Chief Justice Marshall in the celebrated case of Tobias Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 193, 7 L. Ed. 650, and has been constantly adhered to by this court.

In view of our conclusion upon the question of the sufficiency of the complaint, it is unnecessary to consider the contention of petitioner that the act of 1907 is unconstitutional.

It is ordered that the petitioner be discharged, and his bail exonerated.

KAISER v. BARRON. (L. A. 2,090.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1908.)

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — CROSS-COMPLAINT — CONTRACT — CONSIDERATION — REASONABLENESS.

Civ. Code, § 3391, provides that specific performance cannot be enforced against a party to a contract, if he has not received an adequate consideration, or if it is not as to him just and reasonable, etc. Held, that where a cross-complaint in ejectment sought specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, but neither alleged in general terms the adequacy of the consideration or the fairness of the contract, nor pleaded facts which would justify an inference that such conditions existed, it was insufficient to sustain a decree for specific performance.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by Emil Kaiser against U. M. Barron. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

See 95 Pac. 879.

F. C. Spencer, for appellant. Chas. S. McKelvey, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action of ejectment brought by plaintiff to recover the possession of the south 10 acres of a 25-acre tract of land in Orange county. The defendant answered, denying plaintiff's ownership and right of possession, and filed a cross-complaint, in which he sought a decree specifically enforcing the performance of a contract between himself and one Sisson, plaintiff's predecessor in interest, for the conveyance by Sisson to defendant of the ten-acre parcel in dispute. It is alleged that plaintiff bought subject to this contract, and that its terms have been fully performed on defendant's part. The court made findings in accordance with the allegations of the cross-complaint, and entered a judgment denying the plaintiff any relief, and requiring him to execute a deed conveying to the defendant the 10 acres in controversy. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

In a prior action between the same parties the plaintiff sued to quiet his title to the 25 acres, of which the property here involved is a part. The judgment there rendered in favor of defendant was reversed by this court. Kaiser v. Barron (Cal.) 95 Pac. 879. The defense in that case was based upon the contract here sought to be specifically enforced.

The substance of that contract, as stated in the opinion in the earlier appeal, was "that defendant would plant the northern 15 acres (of the 25-acre tract) in walnut trees, and would nurture and care for them until the 1st day of January, 1906, at which time, defendant having fulfilled the conditions of his contract, plaintiff's predecessor in interest agreed to convey to him the southerly 10 acres." These terms appear to have been modified by the parties in a manner which is not material to this discussion. No answer can be made to the appellant's contention that the defendant (cross-complainant) failed to establish a right to specific relief, in that he did not allege or prove that the plaintiff had received an adequate consideration for the contract, or that it was as to him just and reasonable. Civ. Code, § 3391. The cross-complaint does not allege in general terms the adequacy of the consideration or the fairness of the contract, nor does it set forth facts which would justify the inference that these conditions existed. There is no allegation of the value of the 10 acres agreed to be conveyed, or of the value of the services to be performed as a consideration for the conveyance, nor is there any proof on these subjects.

That such allegation and proof are prerequisites to the granting of a decree of specific performance is thoroughly settled. "A court of equity must be satisfied that the claim for a deed is fair and just and reasonable, and the contract equal in all its parts, and founded upon an adequate consideration, before it will interpose this extraordinary assistance." Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 354. See, also, Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 302; Nicholson v. Tarpey, 70 Cal. 609, 12 Pac. 778; Morrill v. Everson, 77 Cal. 114, 19 Pac. 190; Windsor v. Miner, 124 Cal. 492, 57 Pac. 386; Prince v. Lamb, 128 Cal. 120, 60 Pac. 689; Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 170, 66 Pac. 231. In White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613, 87 Pac. 193, the court, after citing these cases, said that "there must be a showing of the value, at least, so that the court can determine whether it was in reasonable proportion to the price to be paid, or of other facts which are sufficient to satisfy the court that the contract is just and reasonable to the buyer in all its material elements." It is true that the court made a finding that "the terms and conditions of said contract and the consideration therefor was fair and reasonable." But this finding, regardless of the fact that it is without the issues, is not supported by any evidence. The plaintiff's demurrer to the cross-complaint should have been sustained. It will not be necessary to consider other points made by appellant.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the court below to sustain the demurrer to the amended cross-complaint and for further proceedings.

CHARLES A. WARREN CO. v. SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS UNION et al. (S. F. 4,932.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 26, 1908.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—ESTATE—AUTHORIZING ACTION—TRUSTORS.

One who has given a deed of trust on property as security retains an "estate of inheritance," and so, under St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59, § 1, may bring an action to quiet title, notwithstanding Civ. Code, § 863, provides that every express trust in real estate "vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust," and that "the beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property"; section 864 providing that the trustor may transfer or devise the property, subject to the execution of the trust, section 865 providing that his grantee or devisee acquires a legal estate in the property, except as against the trustees, and section 866 providing that every estate not embraced in the trust is left in the trustor or his successor.

2. SAME.

That it is intended that one may maintain an action to quiet title under St. 1906, p. 79, c. 59, notwithstanding he has given a deed of trust thereon as security, is shown by section 5, requiring plaintiff to file, with the complaint, an affidavit setting forth all subsisting mortgages, "deeds of trust," and other liens on the land.

3. SAME—"POSSESSION."

Though one gives a deed of trust on land as security, he still retains the possession within St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59, § 1, limiting the right to bring action to quiet title to one who is by himself or his tenant or other person in the actual and peaceable possession of the property.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by the Charles A. Warren Company against all persons claiming any interest in, or lien upon, the real property herein described, or any part thereof. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants the San Francisco Savings Union and the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco appeal. Affirmed.

Campbell & Baldwin, for appellants. J. C. Bates, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to quiet title, brought under the provisions of the act of June, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the establishment and quieting of title to real property in case of the loss or destruction of public records." St. 1906, p. 78, c. 59. The plaintiff, claiming the ownership of a lot of land in the city and county of San Francisco, filed a complaint in the form described in section 2 of the act. Accompanying the complaint, the plaintiff filed an affidavit, as required by section 5 of the act. This affidavit, after setting forth plaintiff's ownership of the land, and showing his source of title, together with other matters required to be stated in the affidavit, averred that the land was subject to a lien "for $15, 000 with interest, secured by a deed of trust in favor of San Francisco Savings Union, a corporation." The San Francisco Savings Union and the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco (the trustee named in the deed of trust referred to in the affidavit) appeared, and, treating the complaint and the affidavit in conjunction as constituting a single pleading, demurred for want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and on the ground that plaintiff was not a proper party plaintiff to the action. Their demurrer being overruled, the defendants answered, denying plaintiff's ownership in fee simple, and alleging that on May 12, 1905, Charles A. Warren, the then owner of the land, and plaintiff's predecessor in interest, had executed and delivered to the Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, as trustee, a deed of trust to secure the payment of a promissory note for $15,000 made by the grantor to the San Francisco Savings Union. It is alleged that the note is unpaid and is still held and owned by said Savings Union, and that the Mercantile Trust Company has never conveyed said real property. The answer prays judgment declaring the Mercantile Trust Company to be the owner of the land subject to the terms of the deed of trust. This instrument, a copy of which is annexed to the answer, is in the usual form of a conveyance to a trustee to secure the payment of an indebtedness. The court found in favor of the allegations of the complaint and affidavit, and entered its judgment, declaring the plaintiff to be the owner in fee simple of the property; adjudging that no person other than plaintiff has any estate, right, title, or interest in, or any lien upon said property except that said Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco holds a deed of trust as security for money loaned as in its answer set forth. It is further adjudged and decreed that all persons other than plaintiff be enjoined from asserting any claim, right, title, or interest in or to said property, adverse to the title determined in favor of plaintiff, "except that * * * Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco has and holds a deed of trust on the lot * * * as set forth in its answer on file in this action to secure the money loaned as evidenced by the promissory note as set forth in its said answer herein." From this judgment the defendants San Francisco Savings Union and Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco appeal.

The contention of the appellants is that by the execution of the deed of trust the title in fee vested in the trustee, Mercantile Trust Company of San Francisco, and that, so long as such title was held by the trustee, the plaintiff had no such estate or interest as would authorize it to maintain an action under the provisions of the act in question. In view of the fact that the court below, in declaring the title of plaintiff, expressly made such title subject to the deed of trust, it is difficult to see how the appellants are in any wise prejudiced by the judgment complained of. They assert no interest in the land except that vested in them by the deed of trust, and the judgment does not purport to limit their right to protect that interest as fully as they could if there had been no judgment. But, assuming that the defendants were "parties aggrieved" by the judgment (Code Civ. Proc. § 938), and as such entitled to appeal from it, we think the act in question, reasonably construed, does authorize an action by one who has made a conveyance in trust, merely as security for a debt. Section 1 of the act provides that in certain cases "any person who claims an estate of inheritance or for life in, and who is by himself or his tenant or other person holding under him, in the actual and peaceable possession of any real property," may bring the action to establish his title and to determine all adverse claims to the property. It is argued by appellants that inasmuch as, by the provisions of Civ. Code, § 863, "every express trust in real property, valid as such in its creation, vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust" and "the beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property," the execution of the deed of trust to the Mercantile Trust Company vested the whole estate in such trustee, and there remained in the grantor and his successors no "estate or interest in the property," and necessarily no "estate of inheritance or for life." That instruments conveying property as security for a loan in trust to sell in the event of nonpayment, or to reconvey to the grantor upon payment of the debt, create valid express trusts, is thoroughly settled in this state. Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, 121 Cal. 379, 53 Pac. 813; Balfour, etc., Co. v. Woodworth, 124 Cal. 169, 56 Pac. 891; Staaacke v. Bell, 125 Cal. 309, 57 Pac. 1012; Tyler v. Currier, 147 Cal. 31, 81 Pac. 319. And that such instruments do not create a mere lien or incumbrance, but vest in the trustee the legal title to the property, has been repeatedly held, and has been reasserted by this court in the very recent case of Weber v. McCleverty, 149 Cal. 316, 86 Pac. 706.

It does not follow, however, that no estate can remain in the trustor. Under section 864 of the Civil Code, the author of a trust may prescribe to whom the property shall belong, in the event of the failure or termination of the trust, and may transfer or devise such property, subject to the execution of the trust. By the terms of section 865, his grantee or devisee acquires a legal estate in the property as against all persons except the trustees and those claiming under them. Section 866 provides that every estate not embraced in the trust, and not otherwise disposed of, is left in the author of the trust or his successors. While, under the Code provisions, the beneficiary takes no estate, the creation of the trust may vest an estate in the trustee, and still leave an estate in the trustor. Under an instrument like the one in question, the trustee takes a fee, such estate being necessary for the carrying out of the trust to sell if the debt should not be paid. But since, upon payment of the debt, the property will revert in the trustor or his successors, an interest in the property is left in such trustor. Such interest is an estate, and, as it may pass by devise or descent, is an estate of inheritance. "The legal title is conveyed solely for the purpose of security, leaving in the trustor or his successors a legal estate in the property, as against all persons except the trustees and those lawfully claiming under them." McLeod v. Moran (Cal.) 94 Pac. 604.

There are other considerations making it perfectly clear that the party executing an instrument of this character is embraced within the class of those to whom the Legislature intended to give the right to institute this action. Section 5 of the act requires the plaintiff to file with the complaint an affidavit, setting forth, among other things, "a statement of any and all subsisting mortgages, deeds of trust, and other liens" on the land. The phrase "deeds of trust" unquestionably has reference to deeds of trust given as security, like the one in the case at bar. While they do not, strictly speaking, constitute "liens" upon the property, the Legislature, by so designating them, and requiring a statement of them in the affidavit accompanying the complaint, manifested unmistakably its intention that the existence of such deeds of trust should not operate to deprive the trustor of the right to maintain the action. The right to bring the action is limited by section 1 of the act to any person who is by himself or his tenant, or other person, in the actual and peaceable possession of the property. That the trustor has such possession is clear. The deed of trust "conveys no right of possession and the trustor may remain in possession, and, until the execution of the trust may maintain an action to recover possession even when the trust deed is silent upon the subject of possession." Sacramento Bank v. Alcorn, supra. It follows that the respondent was a proper party plaintiff, and entitled to the relief granted. It may be added that this case presents no question as to the rights of beneficiaries or trustees under any instruments except deeds of trust given as security for indebtedness.

The judgment is affirmed.

STEMLER v. BASS (GARVER, Intervener).
(L. A. 2,060.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 2, 1908.)

1. BROKERS—WRITTEN AUTHORITY.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5, requiring a broker's contract of employment to sell real estate to be in writing, a sale of real estate made by a broker is not binding on the principal unless the broker is acting under written authority.

2. SAME—SCOPE OF AUTHORITY—EVIDENCE—FINDING.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that a broker only had written authority to find a purchaser and consummate a sale by paying in cash to a bank selected by the principal the amount of money required by the principal's instructions to the bank, and accepting the deed awaiting delivery on compliance with such instructions, and that he had no authority to execute a contract of sale binding on his principal.

3. SAME.

The ordinary authority of a real estate agent deputed to sell land is simply to find a purchaser; he having no power to bind his principal by a contract of sale unless it appears that it was intended to confer such additional authority on him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, § 13.]

4. SAME—CONTRACT OF SALE—RATIFICATION.

Where it did not appear that the owner of land knew that his broker had executed any agreement for sale of the land in writing either on his own account or as agent of such owner, until the owner had by telegraph refused the offer and communicated the fact of refusal to both the broker and the bank, which telegrams superseded and were received before letters accepting the broker's offer, there was no ratification of the broker's unauthorized act in executing a contract of sale so as to bind the owner.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Belle G. Stemler against T. W. Bass and Nellie O. Garver, interveners. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. F. McLaughlin and Earle & Creede, for appellant. John D. Pope and Wellborn & Wellborn, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action by the vendee to enforce specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale of a lot of land in Huntington Park, Los Angeles county. Defendant had judgment, and plaintiff appeals from such judgment and an order denying her motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff's claim is based on a written instrument executed on January 3, 1905, by one J. S. Hadden, purporting to act as the agent of defendant T. W. Bass, owner of the land, which is as follows: "Los Angeles, Cal., January 3, 1905. Received from Belle G. Stemler $50.00 (fifty dollars) as deposit on purchase of property owned by T. W. Bass, (now of Broken Bow, Neb.) said property located and being lot 13, block 31, Huntington Park, Los Angeles county, Cal. The balance, $800.00 (eight hundred dollars) to be paid on transfer of the said property, clear of all incumbrances, except mortgage of $1,200.00, now held by one Katherine Kramer, which the said purchaser, Mrs. Belle G. Stemler, agrees to assume. The amounts above specified, namely $800.00 and the $50.00 deposit, constituting $850.00 the entire equity of T. W. Bass, as per instruction of letter addressed to J. S. Hadden, dated December 28th, 1904, the said terms and amount being accepted by the purchaser. Signed by agent of T. W. Bass, J. S. Hadden." The trial court found that Bass never conferred authority on Hadden to execute any contract of sale of the land, that the only authority conferred on him was to find a purchaser for the same, that Hadden had no authority to sell the same except for cash, payable immediately in bank to the credit of Bass, and that Bass withdrew the authority conferred before Hadden had made any sale in accordance therewith. The principal question on this appeal is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these findings.

Unless the agreement made by Hadden with plaintiff was authorized in writing by Bass, it was, of course, not binding upon him (subdivision 5, section 1624, Civ. Code), unless subsequently ratified. Plaintiff seeks to show such authority in certain letters and written directions sent by Bass from the state of Nebraska, where he was residing. Bass had left California for Nebraska early in September, 1904. He had endeavored to sell this property before leaving, but had been unable to do so, and left the property in charge of Hadden, with directions to see what he could do about selling it. On the day he left, he told Hadden that, if he could get $2,100 for the property, to sell it. There was a mortgage of $1,200 thereon, which the purchaser was to pay or assume, and the balance of the purchase money was to be paid to the owner. The first written evidence of any authority was contained in a letter from Bass to Hadden, dated September 12, 1904, wherein he said: "How did you come out with the deal on the house? I wish you would push that sale through lively as I am in need of the money." On October 19, 1904, he wrote Hadden that he had decided not to sell at present, but desired him to get a good tenant from month to month, upon certain terms. On October 26th he wrote him again that he had decided to sell, and that for the next 60 or 90 days would take $900 net for his equity in the property. November 22d, replying to a message from Hadden that he had an offer of $2,050 for the place, he wrote to accept it, and let him know to whom the deed was to be made, and "I will send it to the Los Angeles National Bank, and the money can be paid there and take up the deed. Hope you will get everything through all O. K." On November 23d he wrote, stating that he had received a message to the effect that the deed should be made to Hadden, and stating: "I am sending the deed to Southern California Savings Bank and instructing them that upon the payment of $850 to be forwarded to me and you accepting the mortgage for $1,200 in favor of Mrs. Katherine Kramer and also the payment of $14.24 to Mr. Burbank for the insurance policy they shall then turn over to you the deed." On November 28th he inclosed the deed to Hadden made subject to the mortgage, the purchaser assuming the same, to such bank, with directions to deliver the same upon payment to it of $850, and $24.50 insurance, and to forward such money when so paid to him. On December 14th he wired Hadden to take up the deed, as he needed the money. On December 28th he wrote Hadden that he had paid up the insurance, and said: "Now, * * * I am in need of some money awfully bad, and if you can possibly find me a buyer that will pay $850 and take up that deed, let them have it. * * * I will write the bank to accept $850 and turn over the deed, and purchaser to accept the mortgage of course. I do hope you can dispose of it." On the same day he wrote to the bank: "I have paid up the insurance and also the interest to date, so upon the payment to you of $850 you can then turn over to them the deed and send me a draft for the amount." On January 3, 1905, Hadden wired him: "Your place sold. Letter explaining. Advise bank about deed." On January 4th he wrote Hadden, acknowledging receipt of the message, and stating that he would await the letter before advising the bank further about the deed, and that he had an offer from another party but would give Hadden the preference, if the terms were as good as those of the subsequent offer. On January 6th he telegraphed Hadden, asking: "Have you deposit how much net to me wire answer." And received the following answer: "Eight fifty net fifty deposited guaranteed transfer on your communication." On January 7th he wrote Hadden, stating that he had advised the bank to deliver the deed upon the payment of $850, and on the same day he wrote the bank to deliver the deed upon such payment being made. Before the receipt of either of these communications, he on January 9th telegraphed Hadden: "Cannot accept offer on property. Letter explaining on the way." And to the bank he telegraphed: "Return deed made to J. S. Hadden to me at once cancel all negotiations." The bank at once complied with this direction. On January 10th he wrote Hadden, explaining that he had sold the property to another party for $1,035 net. The foregoing is all the correspondence that is material. The offer referred to in the letter of November 22d was apparently not plaintiff's offer; the evidence showing that her offer was not made until January 3d.

Upon these facts the trial court was amply warranted in concluding that Hadden was not authorized to make the contract of January 3, 1905, or any contract of sale on behalf of Bass, and that his only authority in the matter, in addition to finding a purchaser, was to consummate a purchase by paying in cash to the bank selected by Bass as his agent the amount of money required by the instructions to such bank, and thereupon accepting the deed awaiting delivery upon compliance with such instructions. Until such consummation, in the absence of ratification or estoppel, Bass could be in no degree bound by any act of Hadden's. The ordinary authority of a real estate agent deputed to sell real estate is simply to find a purchaser, and he has no power to bind his principal by a contract of sale unless it appears that it was intended to confer such additional authority. Duffy v. Hobson, 40 Cal. 240, 6 Am. Rep. 617; Armstrong v. Lowe, 76 Cal. 616, 18 Pac. 758; Delano v. Jacoby, 96 Cal. 279, 131 Pac. 290, 31 Am. St. Rep. 201. Whether or not it was intended to confer such additional authority is to be determined from the language used regarded in the light of the surrounding circumstances. Rutenberg v. Main, 47 Cal. 213. In the case at bar, additional authority was, of course, conferred; but the limit of such additional authority was very clearly defined. The evidence showing the additional authority affirmatively showed the want of authority on Hadden's part to bind Bass by any agreement to sell. All that he could effectually do was to consummate a sale by the payment of the requisite amount in cash to the bank and the acceptance of the deed there deposited, and the writings relied on showed no attempt to confer any other authority. Such writings showed very clearly that what Bass wanted was the immediate payment of the whole purchase price in cash, that he was willing to part with his property or any interest therein only upon such payment, and that he was unwilling to cloud his title by any agreement for sale with some unknown purchaser, who might ultimately prove unwilling or unable to complete his contract, the existence of which agreement might deprive him of the opportunity to sell for cash to some other person. See Duffy v. Hobson, supra. The case at bar is very different in its facts from Rutenberg v. Main, supra, relied on by plaintiff, where it clearly appeared that it was intended by the owner to clothe the agent with authority to do generally whatever was necessary to make the proposed sale binding upon the principal.

There was no ratification of the agreement by Bass. It does not appear that he knew that Hadden had executed any agreement for sale in writing either on his own account or as the agent of Bass, until he had by telegraph refused the offer and communicated the fact of refusal to both Hadden and the bank. See Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 Pac. 53. His letters of date January 7, 1905, to Hadden and to the bank cannot be construed as purporting to ratify any agreement for sale made for him by Hadden, and they were superseded by the telegrams of January 9th, which were received by Hadden and the bank prior to the receipt of the letters, and at once acted upon by them. No principle of estoppel applies to the case.

Our conclusion on the matters already discussed renders it unnecessary to consider any other point made.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

RUBIO CAÑON LAND & WATER ASS'N v. EVERETT. (L. A. 2,002.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 3, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—RIGHT TO PROSECUTE—INTEREST IN SUBJECT-MATTER—TRANSFER OF INTEREST.

Where, in a suit to establish plaintiff's right to maintain and use a pipe line through defendant's land, to restrain further interference therewith by defendant, and to recover damages for injury thereto, plaintiff obtained the injunction prayed and a judgment for $100 damages, and defendant's motion for a new trial, from the denial of which, as well as from the judgment, defendant appealed, was directed to the part of the judgment awarding damages, as well as to the part establishing the easement, the fact that defendant parted with his interest in the land and relinquished his interest in the pipe line was no ground for dismissal of the appeal.

2. EASEMENTS—CREATION—PIPE LINE—RIGHT OF WAY—CONVEYANCE OF LAND—APPURTENANCES.

Plaintiff orally contracted with defendant's grantor for the purchase of certain land on which a pumping station was to be constructed and for a pipe line right of way over the remainder of the lot. Plaintiff constructed the pumping plant and pipe line, whereupon defendant's grantor executed to plaintiff a deed conveying the land on which the plant was located, together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining. The deed did not otherwise describe the pipe line or right of way through the remainder of the land, which was subsequently conveyed to defendant by a deed excepting the tract previously conveyed to plaintiff, described by metes and bounds, but not reserving or mentioning the pipe line or right of way. Held that, as between plaintiff and defendant's grantor, plaintiff's deed was sufficient to convey the right of way for the pipe line across the land so conveyed to defendant.

3. SAME—"APPARENT."

The word "apparent," as applied to an easement, as against a purchaser of the servient estate, does not necessarily mean "visible," but includes easements used by means of some artificial structure on the servient tenement, such as a pipe, sewer, or ditch, as distinguished from those using the servient easement in its natural state and at intervals, in the meantime leaving no visible sign of their existence, such as a way or right of fishery or pasture.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 60.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 440.]

4. SAME—NOTICE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant, at the time he purchased a servient estate, had knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the existence of plaintiff's right to maintain a water pipe line through property so purchased.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 93.]

5. SAME--PROCEEDINGS TO ESTABLISH RIGHT--FINDINGS--NOTICE.

In a suit to establish an easement, a finding that defendant had knowledge of facts and circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to the existence of the easement and right of way, and that by prosecuting such inquiry he might have learned of the existence thereof, sufficiently charged defendant with notice of the easement, and was not objectionable for failure to set forth particular facts and circumstances referred to.

6. SAME--CREATION--PAROL AGREEMENT--EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff and defendant claimed title from a common source, and plaintiff claimed an easement over defendant's land for a pipe line, evidence of a parol agreement between plaintiff and the common grantor, granting such easement, was admissible to show that plaintiff held an equitable title thereto prior to a conveyance thereof as an appurtenance to the tract conveyed by such common grantor to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, §§ 90-92.]

7. EASEMENTS--DAMAGES--PUNITIVE DAMAGES--MALICIOUS INJURY.

Where, in a suit to establish an easement for a pipe line right of way, the complaint also claimed damages for defendant's alleged malicious injury to the pipe, and the evidence showed that defendant, pursuant to a willful intention so to do, inflicted unnecessary injury to the pipe when he removed a part of it, punitive damages were allowable.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the Rubio Cañon Land & Water Association against Torrey Everett. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Roger S. Page and Sherman Page, for appellant. Lee & Shase and J. H. Scott, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Defendant was the owner of a tract of land in and through which, before he became such owner, plaintiff had laid an eight-inch pipe leading from the plaintiff's well and pumping plant, adjoining defendant's land, to plaintiff's reservoir, situated about a mile distant. The pipe was used by plaintiff to conduct water from its pump to said reservoir. Defendant, claiming that the pipe was maintained and used through his land without right, proceeded to tear up and remove 30 feet of the pipe and destroy 80 feet more by making holes therein. Thereupon plaintiff began this action to establish its right to maintain and use the line of pipe through defendant's land, to restrain further interference therewith by defendant, and to recover damages for the injury thereto. Judgment was given for the plaintiff, defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and he appeals from the judgment and the order.

The respondent moves to dismiss the appeals on the ground that, since they were taken, the defendant has parted with his interest in the land and relinquished his interest in the pipe line. The plaintiff in its complaint demanded judgment for $750 and recovered thereon $100 as damages. The motion for a new trial was directed to this part of the judgment as well as that relating to the pipe line. Under these circumstances, the defendant has the right, independent of the question of title, to appeal from the money judgment and from the order denying a new trial. Solomon v. Reese, 34 Cal. 33; Dashiell v. Slingerland, 60 Cal. 654. The appeals will therefore stand, regardless of the existence or nonexistence of further controversy as to the right of way. The motion is denied.

The land of plaintiff on which its well and pumping plant were situated consisted of one-half an acre which, together with defendant's land, comprised the whole of lot 14, block 8, of Altadena, which block originally belonged to one Andrew McNally. Plaintiff was engaged in supplying water to its stockholders for domestic use and irrigation. McNally was one of its largest stockholders. The plaintiff's water supply was insufficient, and in order to obtain more water it made an oral agreement with McNally to the effect that it would sink a well on the half acre in question, erect a pumping plant thereon, lay the pipe line in question, and operate the pump and pipe to carry water from the well to plaintiff's reservoir for the use of McNally and the other stockholders, and that thereupon McNally would convey to the plaintiff the said parcel of land and give the defendant the right of way in question over the remainder of lot 14 for the pipe line in controversy. In pursuance of this agreement, plaintiff constructed the well, pumping plant, and pipe line at an expense of more than $12,000, and McNally thereupon executed to it a deed conveying the half acre, together with the "appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining." The deed did not otherwise describe the pipe line or right of way through the remainder of lot 14. This deed was dated April 24, 1903, and was duly recorded May 15, 1903. Defendant purchased of McNally the remainder of lot 14 on April 16, 1904, by deed of that date. This deed expressly excepted the half acre previously conveyed to the plaintiff, describing it by metes and bounds, but it did not expressly reserve or mention the pipe line or right of way therefor across the land conveyed to Everett. The court finds that Everett, at the time, had no actual knowledge of the existence of the right of way or of the pipe line, so far as it was constructed on his land, but that he did have constructive notice thereof by reason of the recorded deed from McNally to plaintiff of the half acre with the appurtenances belonging thereto, and also by reason of actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put him on inquiry concerning the said pipe line and right of way.

As between the plaintiff and McNally, the conveyance of the half acre unquestionably carried with it the right of way to maintain the pipe line. The pipe line was then in existence across the remainder of lot 14 and was then in use by plaintiff as an appurtenance to the pumping plant, for the purpose of carrying water from the pump to the reservoir, and McNally had full knowledge of these facts. The half acre and the pipe line were in the possession of plaintiff under the previous parol agreement. As to the easement over the land conveyed to defendant, the half acre was the dominant tenement, and the remainder of the lot the servient tenement. If McNally, while he was the owner of the entire lot, had erected the pumping plant, laid the pipe, and put the same in operation, and had then conveyed the pumping plant to the plaintiff, the effect would be, under the rule of common law and of the Civil Code, to create an easement across the remainder of the land for the maintenance of the pipe line as an incident to the land conveyed. Civ. Code, § 1104; Jones v. Sanders, 138 Cal. 411, 71 Pac. 506; Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 139; Quinlan v. Noble, 75 Cal. 352, 17 Pac. 69; Dixon v. Schermeier, 110 Cal. 585, 42 Pac. 1091; Smith v. Corbit, 116 Cal. 591, 48 Pac. 725. It may be that the fact that the pumping plant and pipe line were constructed by the plaintiff, and not by McNally, would prevent the conveyance from having this effect, or at least prevent the application of the common-law and code rule referred to; but under the principles of equity, and by force of other rules of law, the effect is the same. McNally had agreed in parol to convey the land and the right of way and had put plaintiff in possession in pursuance of the agreement. The consideration of the agreement, so far as McNally was concerned, was the expenditure of the money necessary to construct the well, pump, and pipe line, and the supplying of the water obtained to McNally and the other stockholders. Plaintiff had paid the full consideration agreed upon by putting the system in operation. It had a perfect equitable title to the land and to the easement appertaining thereto. The deed was but the execution of the parol agreement. It transferred the naked legal title and vested in plaintiff the entire estate, legal and equitable, in the land, and in the easement which was, as the property then stood, an incident thereto. Civ. Code, § 801. The transfer of the legal title to the principal thing transferred also the legal title to the easement as an incident thereto. Civ. Code, § 1084; Pogue v. Collins, 146 Cal. 435, 80 Pac. 623. This would be the case even if the deed had not expressly purported to convey the "appurtenances" with the land. Cave v. Crafts, 53 Cal. 140; McShane v. Carter, 80 Cal. 313, 22 Pac. 178; Simmons v. Winters, 21 Or. 44, 27 Pac. 7, 28 Am. St. Rep. 727; Tucker v. Jones, 8 Mont. 231, 19 Pac. 571; Jones on Conveyancing, § 1643; Brewster on Conveyancing, § 118.

It is contended by the respondent that, inasmuch as the deed from McNally to plaintiff passed the legal title in the pipe line and right of way therefor to the grantee, it necessarily follows that its recordation constituted constructive notice to the defendant of the easement therefor over the land he subsequently bought, although the pipe was concealed by being buried two feet under the surface of the ground, and plaintiff had no actual knowledge thereof. It is contended that the rule is that subsequent purchasers of land take it subject to all servitudes then laid upon it for the support of easements of the class called "apparent" and which are attached to other land. The principle is well established, but the question whether or not an easement of the character of this pipe line is an apparent easement is not so clear. Many authorities declare that the word "apparent," as applied to an easement in this connection, does not necessarily mean visible, but refers to easements used by means of some artificial permanent structure on the servient tenement, such as a pipe, a sewer, or a ditch, as distinguished from those which use the servient tenement in its natural state, and at intervals, in the meantime leaving no visible sign of their existence, such as a way or a right of fishery or pasture. Jones on Easements, § 125, Larsen v. Peterson, 53 N. J. Eq. 88, 30 Atl. 1049, Pyer v. Carter, 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 414, Fetters v. Humphreys, 18 N. J. Eq. 260, and Kelly v. Dunning, 43 N. J. Eq. 70, 10 Atl. 276, are cited in support of this proposition. It seems also to find some support from the decision in Farmer v. Ukiah Water Co., 56 Cal. 14, holding that the record of a deed for a tract of land was constructive notice of the right to an easement consisting of a water supply delivered through an underground pipe across adjoining land, although the grantee of that land had no actual notice thereof.

We do not find it necessary to decide whether or not the record of the deed was constructive notice to the defendant, for we are of the opinion that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the court that the defendant had actual notice of facts and circumstances sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the pipe line and right of way, and this finding supports the judgment.

The defendant knew of the well and pumping plant and that it was a part of plaintiff's water system and was used to supply water to plaintiff's reservoir and pipes, by means whereof it distributed water to its stockholders in the neighborhood. He knew that the land he was buying was dependent upon this system for water to use thereon; that in order to obtain this water he must become a stockholder of plaintiff. He bought 50 shares of the stock for that purpose at the time of buying the land. The pipe line ran north from the pumphouse to Piedmont Drive, a distance of about half a mile in a straight line, passing through the remainder of the half acre and of lot 14 and a number of other lots intervening. It was located parallel to and about four feet east of a stone-lined storm ditch, five feet wide and three feet deep, extending through all of said lots. Alameda street bounded lot 14 on the north. Across this street, and immediately over the line of pipe, there was a distinct depression in the earth, such as frequently appears where a trench for a pipe has been lightly refilled. Similar depressions some six inches deep showed in a straight line in defendant's lot over the pipe line, indicating its exact course. These were not such depressions as would be made by plowing. Some five or six feet north of the pumphouse there was a pipe protruding six inches above the ground and leading down to a cut-off valve in the pipe line in question. Six feet further north a 1½-inch pipe connected with the said pipe line, extending 18 inches above the ground and then turning by an elbow ran to the pump engine in the pumphouse. These pipes gave clear indications that they must be connected with an underground pipe leading from the pumphouse to the north. Before buying the lot, defendant went to the pumphouse and to the land around it to see what was there to be seen, and did see the pipes above mentioned. He went there because he wanted to know just how the plant was operated, and what it was operated for, and whether it would be so noisy as to be objectionable. It was not then in operation. He also walked all over lot 14 and along the storm drain and looked at the whole property. No evidence was given to show that he knew the direction of the plaintiff's reservoir from the pumphouse, but he testified that before buying he inquired of the people generally about the conditions relating to water and the sufficiency of the supply, and he did not deny knowledge of the position of the reservoir nor of the fact that the water from the well was pumped to the reservoir through a pipe. The force and effect of these circumstances, as proof that the defendant was put upon inquiry concerning the location of the pipe line, was a matter for the determination of the trial court. All that it is necessary for this court to decide is that an inference could reasonably be drawn therefrom that the defendant was thus put on inquiry, and we think that it is sufficient for that purpose. His avowal that he was not aware of it is not conclusive, for the trial court may not have credited him on that point.

The finding merely states that he had knowledge of facts and circumstances sufficient to put a prudent man on inquiry as to the existence of the easement and right of way, and that by prosecuting such inquiry he might have learned of the existence thereof. Complaint is made that this finding does not set forth the particular facts and circumstances referred to. We do not think that this was necessary. The finding of the fact that plaintiff was put on inquiry sufficiently charges him with notice of the easement.

The evidence of the parol agreement between McNally and plaintiff was admissible for the purpose of showing that plaintiff held the equitable title to the easement prior to McNally's conveyance thereof.

On the question whether or not the court intended to charge the defendant with punitive damages, the finding is somewhat ambiguous; but we do not think the ambiguity is material. The complaint averred a malicious injury, and the evidence was sufficient to show that defendant, in pursuance of a willful intention so to do, did inflict unnecessary injury to the pipe at the time he removed a part of it. We find no error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

SLOSS, J. I concur.

ANGELOTTI, J. (concurring). I do not believe that it should be held that the record of the deed from McNally to plaintiff was constructive notice to defendant of the right of plaintiff to an easement which was not visible, unless he had actual knowledge of the existence of the easement, or notice of the facts and circumstances sufficient to put him on inquiry. As I understand the opinion, however, the decision on this point is put entirely on the ground that the evidence is sufficient to sustain the finding of the trial court that the defendant had actual notice of facts and circumstances sufficient to put him on inquiry as to the pipe line and right of way. Although the evidence as shown by the printed record is, to my mind, not entirely satisfactory to this effect, I do not think it can be held that there was not enough therein to support the conclusion of the trial court.

I therefore concur.

MARRON v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY.
(Civ. 477.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 13, 1908.)

COUNTIES — CLAIMS — DISALLOWANCE — ACTIONS.

Under the county government act of 1897, (St. 1897, p. 471, c. 277, § 42), providing for an allowance by the supervisors, and that if the claimant is unwilling to receive the amount allowed in full payment, claim may again be considered at the next regular session of the board, and section 43, providing that a claimant dissatisfied with the rejection of his claim, or with the amount allowed, may sue the county within six months after the final action of the board, where the board allows a portion of the claim presented and rejects the remainder, it is necessary that the claim be again presented at the next regular session, and a suit brought without such second presentation is premature, though the particular items rejected all relate to one class of items.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Silvestre Marron against the county of San Diego. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Wade McDonald, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., L. R. Kirby, Dist. Atty., and H. S. Utley, Dep. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of San Diego county, in an action brought for the purpose of determining the validity of certain fees, charged by the constable and justice of the peace of San Luis Rey township in that county, for the arrest of "brake-beam tourists" upon charges of "fraudulently evading the payment of railroad fare." The board of supervisors rejected all items of plaintiff's bill based upon arrests made upon such charges; and, the matter being submitted to the superior court upon an agreed statement of the case, judgment was for the defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

It appears from the complaint that plaintiff presented four causes of action, two for his own fees as constable, and two for the fees of the justice of the peace, which had been assigned to him. His own bills are alleged to have been: For January, 1907, official services rendered for defendant in serving process, transporting and feeding prisoners, etc., "aggregating in value" $84.35; for February, for the same kind of services, "aggregating in value" $74.70. The justice of the peace's official services for January are alleged to have aggregated $81, and those for February $66; and the prayer is for the aggregate of all these sums, to wit, $306.05. It is alleged that, of the January bill of plaintiff, items amounting to $10.25 were allowed, and $74.10 were rejected; of his February bill $47.85 were allowed, and $26.85 rejected; that, of the bills of the justice of the peace, items aggregating $15 were allowed, and $66 were rejected, in the January bill, and $24 allowed and $42 rejected in the February bill. It is further alleged that all of the items rejected arose out of services rendered in cases in which persons were "charged with fraudulently evading the payment of railroad fare." It is stipulated that the claims against the county, upon which this action is based, were presented to the board of supervisors but once, at which time they were allowed in part, and rejected in part, as above stated, and that they "were never thereafter again presented to said board of supervisors for allowance." In the case of Arbrios v. San Bernardino, 110 Cal. 553, 42 Pac. 1080, it was held, in construing sections 43 and 44 of the county government act of 1893 (St. 1893, p. 364, c. 234), that when the board of supervisors allows a portion of the claim presented, and rejects the remainder, it is necessary that the claim be again presented at the next regular session of the board, and that the claimant indicate his unwillingness to accept the amount allowed, in order that he may maintain an action against the county, and that a suit brought without such second presentation is premature. Sections 42 and 43 of the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 471, c. 277), contain the same provision, and were presumably enacted by the Legislature with the construction given by the court in the Arbrios Case in mind. The distinction drawn in the opinion rendered by the Supreme Court in San Diego v. Riverside, 125 Cal. 495, 58 Pac. 81, between cases in which the entire claim was rejected on the first demand and claims such as the one under consideration in the Arbrios Case strengthens, rather than weakens, the latter case as an authority. The rule is again recognized in Millard v. Kern County, 147 Cal. 682, 82 Pac. 329, that if the claim be wholly rejected on the first presentation, it need not be presented the second time. The reason given for the rule laid down in the Arbrios Case, is inapplicable to, as well as unaffected by, the other two cases mentioned. On the authority of the Arbrios Case the judgment of the superior court, in favor of the defendant, should be sustained. That the particular items rejected all relate to one class of cases does not affect the rule. If a part of the claim be allowed, and a part rejected, the court will not inquire into the reason for the disallowance in applying the rule. Until there has been a second presentation there has been no such final action as the statute requires in order that the claimant may sue the county. This view renders it unnecessary to pass upon the validity of the items rejected by the board of supervisors.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

BORT v. QUADT. (Civ. 491.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 27, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court July 24, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS BY DEMURRER—ROPE AS APPLIANCE IN ITSELF.

A servant was injured from the collapse of staging resulting from a defective rope from which it was slung. Plaintiff alleged that the rope was an appliance used and necessary in the work. Held, that on demurrer the rope must be considered as an appliance in itself, so that the petition stated a cause of action, notwithstanding the staging was rigged by the servants themselves from material furnished by the master.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 525-534.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT—DUTY OF MASTER—SAFE APPLIANCES—APPLIANCES CONSTRUCTED BY SERVANT—MATERIAL FURNISHED AS APPLIANCE IN ITSELF.

It is the duty of the master to provide reasonably safe and suitable appliances and to keep them in a proper condition, and this duty cannot be delegated so as to shift the responsibility, and while the master is not liable for any neglect of the servant in constructing appliances from material furnished by the master, if a rope furnished for the rigging of staging is in itself an appliance and is unsafe, the master is not released from liability, notwithstanding the servant assisted in rigging the staging.

3. SAME—"APPLIANCE"—ROPE.

A rope furnished by a master for servants to use in rigging staging held not an appliance in itself, in view of the circumstances, notwithstanding a rope may be an appliance under some circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, p. 455; vol. 8, p. 7578.]

4. SAME—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a judgment for injuries to a servant on the theory that defendant did not furnish sufficient material for the rigging of a safe staging on which to work.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 958-968.]

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"FALL."

A "fall," as used in connection with a painter's staging to raise and lower it, consists of four ropes inserted in pulleys, which ropes are attached to a ladder and run from it to the building, where they are connected with a sling by a block and tackle.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by C. A. Bort against John Quadt. From a judgment for plaintiff and a denial of a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

G. H. Perry and Pippy & Bahrs, for appellant. Robert P. Troy, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant. The case was tried by a jury, which found for plaintiff, and judgment was accordingly entered. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

At the time of the accident the plaintiff was in the employ of the defendant as a journeyman painter, and was engaged with others in painting the Palace Hotel in San Francisco. On November 9, 1904, the second day of his employment, a staging on which he was suspended collapsed and fell to the sidewalk from a height of about 40 feet, whereby plaintiff sustained serious personal injuries, crippling him for life. The cause of the accident was the breaking of a defective or inadequate sling to which was attached the staging used in painting the hotel. The staging consisted of a ladder, with planks placed upon it, and three "falls." It was known as a "three-fall staging." A "fall" consists of four ropes inserted in pulleys, and these ropes are attached to a ladder, and run from it to the roof of the building, where they are connected with the "sling." The ladder, or platform part of the staging, is raised or lowered with these ropes. There was a "fall" at each end of a ladder, and a third "fall," known as the "middle fall," in the center of the ladder. At the top of each "fall" there was a block and tackle, and this was attached to a "sling" which hung down from the roof about a foot. It was the middle sling that broke.

Appellant interposed a general demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and appellant contends that in so ruling the court committed error. The part of the complaint aimed at by the general demurrer reads as follows: "That the said rope which broke as aforesaid was insecure, unsafe, and defective, and the said rope was one of the usual and necessary appliances used and necessary in the work plaintiff was employed to do by said defendant. That the said defendant well knew that said rope which broke as aforesaid was unsafe, insecure, and defective, but that said defendant failed, neglected, and refused to remove the same, and to supply a safe and secure rope in the place and stead thereof. That said injuries so sustained as aforesaid were not sustained through any fault of said plaintiff." Counsel for appellant say: That the component parts of a painter's scaffolding are not appliances furnished by the employer to the employes with which they are to do their work; that the only duty the appellant owed the workmen was to furnish them with adequate and sufficient materials from which to construct the necessary scaffolding. To maintain this view they cite a number of cases, in each of which the evidence on the trial clearly showed that the appliance was constructed by the servant himself, or by himself and fellow servants, from materials furnished by the employer. In such a case the rule is well settled that the master is not liable for any neglect in the preparation of the appliance. Noyes v. Wood, 102 Cal. 392, 36 Pac. 766; Leishman v. Union Iron Works, 148 Cal. 274, 83 Pac. 30, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 500, 113 Am. St. Rep. 243; Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 603, 45 Pac. 1017. In the last case it is said: "The rule which requires the master to provide a safe place and safe appliances for the servant is applied when the place in which the work is to be done is furnished or prepared by the master, as in the case of a ship or mill or a factory, and when the machinery or other appliances with which the servant is employed to work are furnished by the master; but it has no application when the place at which the work is to be done or the appliances for doing the same are to be prepared by the servant himself. If the appliance is furnished by the master for the purpose of enabling the servants to perform the work in which they are to be engaged, he is required to see that it shall be reasonably safe for that purpose; but if the preparation of that appliance is a part of the work which the servant is required to perform, the master is not liable for any defect in its preparation." The case at bar, however, does not come within the rule contended for by appellant and laid down in those cases, for it is alleged in the complaint that the rope which broke was itself an appliance, and regarding it as such—which, of course, we must do on demurrer—it was the duty of the master to see that it was a reasonably safe and suitable appliance, and to keep it in a safe and proper condition; and, furthermore, this was a duty which he could not delegate so as to shift the responsibility to any agent or servant. Wall v. Marshutz & Cantrell, 138 Cal. 522, 71 Pac. 692. That a rope, under some circumstances, may be an appliance, see Silveira v. Iverson, 125 Cal. 266, 57 Pac. 996; Id., 128 Cal. 187, 60 Pac. 687; Manning v. App. Consolidated Mining Co., 149 Cal. 35, 84 Pac. 657; 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 84. It follows that the complaint states a cause of action, and that the demurrer thereto was properly overruled.

We shall refrain from reviewing the evidence in this case. If we felt called upon to do so, unnecessary labor would be devolved upon the court, for the transcript was compiled in utter disregard of that part of section 661 of the Code of Civil Procedure which requires that the statement or bill of exceptions shall contain only so much of the evidence as may be necessary to explain the grounds of the appeal. It is sufficient to say that we lean to the view that under all the circumstances of this case the rope which broke was not an appliance, as contended by respondent, but that it was a part of a stock of materials from which the appliance (scaffolding) was to be constructed. Consequently, if sufficient materials were furnished by appellant out of which the employes could have constructed a safe scaffolding, the appellant performed his full duty; but there is sufficient evidence in the record to show that in this respect the appellant failed. The foreman, Peterson, who was employed after the scaffolding was built and adjusted, testified concerning it in part as follows: "I told him (appellant) that I would not go up on the staging and do my work; that the staging was rotten and so on, and that it would not hold anybody. He said, 'That staging is all right,' and I said it was not. I had a little fuss in the street with the defendant, and he said: 'Go up and strengthen it.' I took all of the rope I had to strengthen the two end falls, and I did not pay any attention to the middle fall, and there is where it happened. I tried to get down to the middle fall, but the rope was not long enough. The rope did not reach the middle fall. I tried to put the rope on the middle fall to put extra strength in it." On cross-examination he made it plain that he did not at this time strengthen the middle fall because he had no more rope. It is true that new rope was sent by appellant to the building the next day, which was several days before the accident; but the foreman was instructed not to use it on the scaffolding in question until, in the usual progress of the work, it reached the ground. In reference to these matters he testified on cross-examination as follows: "Q. He then asked you to strengthen it? A.

Yes, sir; he did, and I did the best I could with the ropes I had. Q. You could not fix the center sling? A. No, sir; the rope was too short to get there. Q. Did you tell the defendant when you went down that the rope was too short to fix the center sling? A. Yes, sir; I told him. Q. When you returned to the defendant after fixing the two side slings, what did you say to him about the center sling, if anything? A. I told him I had strengthened the two end falls, and there was not enough rope to go to the center. He said: 'It was all right any way, without strengthening. It is all right.' Q. What instructions did he give you in regard to the use of the new rope which was brought there? Where did he tell you to use the new rope? He told me to place it when the staging came down, and to keep on rigging ahead. Q. He told you to place the new rope on the next staging? A. For the next staging so soon as it came down, to have it ready. * * * Q. And he told you that day that the next day he would send out all the ropes you wanted? A. Yes, sir; after the staging was lowered down. Q. And were there not a great many ropes delivered to the job the next day? A. Yes, sir; they were not intended for the first staging, but for the next. Q. You spoke of the first staging when you told the defendant there were no more ropes there? A. Yes, sir. Q. And he told you that the next day there would be a whole lot of ropes delivered? A. Yes. Q. As a matter of fact there were a whole lot of ropes delivered the next day? A. Yes, sir; plenty. Q. Three or four days before the accident? A. Yes, sir. Q. Did you do anything or take any of those ropes to strengthen that middle fall? A. There is no way of strengthening the ropes except to lower the staging to the ground and strengthen it and rig it over. Q. You were the foreman of the job there? A. Yes, sir. Q. Why did you not lower down the staging then and strengthen that fall? A. The defendant told me: 'You are my foreman. I am the boss.' He said: 'You go by my advice.' And I did." As soon as the appellant arrived at the scene of the accident, and his foreman, Peterson, told him what had happened, the appellant said to him: "For Christ sake go and hide the rope. Go up, Jake, for Christ sake, just as soon as you can." It will be observed that the witness speaks of having failed to strengthen the middle "fall" because there was not enough rope on hand, while in fact it was not the "fall" but the "sling" that broke; but later on in his testimony he makes it somewhat plain that in saying "fall" he meant "sling."

We have carefully examined the alleged errors as to giving, refusing, and modifying instructions, and find no occasion for discussing them in detail. The instructions as a whole gave the jury a full and fair statement of the law pertaining to every phase of the case.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

to a suit who becomes a party is the person who is served.

5. JUDGMENT—NAME OF DEFENDANT—MISNOMER—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A judgment is binding on the party served, though he may have been sued or served by a false or fictitious name, under the rule that a party regularly served with summons, though under a name not his own, must appear and plead the misnomer and defend the action on pain of being concluded by the judgment.

6. SAME—DIFFERENT NAME.

It must be shown by a party relying on a judgment that the person served is the same as the person against whom it is sought to enforce the judgment; the presumption being that different names designate different persons.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1819.]

7. SAME.

Plaintiff, M. S. Brum, was sued on a note as Manuel S. de Brum. Summons was regularly served on plaintiff, but he made no appearance and permitted judgment to be rendered against Manuel S. de Brum, though plaintiff had a complete defense thereto. Held, that such names would either be regarded as prima facie the names of different persons, or as idem sonans, and hence, in either event, plaintiff could not enjoin the enforcement of the judgment, since, in the latter event, he would be bound by it, and, in the former, any sale of plaintiff's property under the judgment would be void on its face and would not therefore be enjoined.

8. SAME.

Where plaintiff's neglect to appear and defend a summons and complaint duly served on him was not due to any imposition or fraud on the part of the adverse party, and there was no showing of mistake, surprise, or other equitable ground excusing his default, plaintiff cannot be relieved from the judgment rendered against him because he would have had a defense to the original suit.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Suit by M. S. Brum against E. C. Ivins and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

Albert Nelson, for appellants. William Mallagh and R. V. Bouldin, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought in the superior court of San Luis Obispo county to restrain the sheriff of said county and his deputies from levying a certain execution upon plaintiff's real estate.

On October 10, 1904, one Blumenthal commenced an action in the justice's court of the city and county of San Francisco against Manuel S. de Brum to recover $60, with interest, alleged to be due on a promissory note made and delivered by Manuel S. de Brum to Dr. Meyers & Co., or order, and assigned to Blumenthal. The note, as set forth in the complaint, was by its terms payable at San Francisco. Summons was issued and was regularly served on M. S. Brum, the plaintiff in this action. He made no appearance in the suit in the justice's court, and judgment went in that court by default in favor of Blumenthal, and against the defendant nam-

(Supreme Court of California. July 3, 1908.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JURISDICTION—PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT.

Where defendant, a resident of San Luis Obispo county, was alleged to have executed a note sued on payable in the city and county of San Francisco, a justice court in San Francisco had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 832, subd. 7.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Justices of the Peace, § 235.]

2. SAME—JURISDICTION OF PERSON.

Such justice acquired jurisdiction of defendant's person by the service of a summons on him.

3. JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS — PERSON SERVED.

A judgment in favor of plaintiff necessarily establishes his right to relief given against the person served.

4. PROCESS—SERVICE—IDENTITY OF PERSON.

While identity of names raises merely a presumption of identity of person, the only individual of the name used to designate a party ed in the complaint. Thereupon an execution was duly issued to the sheriff of San Luis Obispo county (defendant herein) and placed in his hands, with instructions to levy on the real property of plaintiff in this action. The court found, following the allegations of the complaint, that plaintiff had never had any dealings with Dr. Meyers & Co., that he had never executed the promissory note sued on in the justice's court, and that he had never been indebted to Dr. Meyers & Co. It further found that plaintiff's full name is Manuel S. Brum, that he always signs "M. S. Brum," and has never signed his name to any instrument as "Manuel S. de Brum." The findings state that plaintiff did not appear in the action in the justice's court because he "had signed no promissory note in said case or made any contract with Dr. Meyers & Co." On these facts the court gave judgment restraining the defendants from levying execution against the plaintiff's property. The defendants appeal.

The respondent necessarily rests his claim to relief upon the fact that the complaint, summons, and judgment in the justice's court named the defendant there as "Manuel S. de Brum," while the plaintiff here, whose property is sought to be taken in satisfaction of that judgment, is named "Manuel S. Brum." If the action in the justice's court had proceeded against Manuel S. Brum, it could hardly be contended that a person bearing that name could, after being duly served with summons and permitting judgment to go against him by default, maintain a proceeding to enjoin the execution of the judgment upon the mere ground that he was not in fact liable on the obligation which formed the basis of the former judgment. The justice's court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 832), and by the service of summons on the defendant named would, in the case supposed, have secured jurisdiction of his person. "A judgment in favor of the plaintiff necessarily establishes his right to the relief given against the person served." Van Fleet on Coll. Att. § 367. While identity of names raises merely a presumption of identity of person, and there may be many persons bearing the name designated as that of the defendant in the proceeding, the only individual of that name who becomes a party to the suit is the one who is served. If he is not liable upon the cause of action set up, he has his opportunity to assert that defense when he is, by service brought into the action. Failing to do so, he cannot, after judgment has gone against him, resist its enforcement on the ground that he, although named in the proceedings and served, was not the party intended to be served. "The cases all agree on this point." Van Fleet on Coll. Att., supra.

Here the name of the person designated as defendant in the justice's court action differed somewhat from the name of this plaintiff. The weight of authority is to the effect that a judgment is binding upon the party served, even though he may have been sued or served by a false or fictitious name; that a party regularly served with summons, although under a name not his own, must come in and set up the misnomer and whatever defense he may have, or else be held concluded by the judgment. 1 Freeman on Judgments (4th Ed.) § 50a; Van Fleet on Coll. Att. § 356; Foshier v. Narver, 24 Or. 441, 34 Pac. 21, 41 Am. St. Rep. 874; Bloomfield R. R. Co. v. Burress, 82 Ind. 83; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404, 15 L. Ed. 451; Guinard v. Heysinger, 15 Ill. 288. It must be shown by the party relying on the judgment that the person served is the same as the person against whom it is sought to enforce the judgment. The presumption is that different names designate different persons. Thus, it has been held in this court that where the defendant had been sued and served by the name George N. Mott, and had defaulted, the judgment entered could not, on plaintiff's motion and without notice to defendant, be amended by altering the name "George" to "Gordon." The court said that there was no proof in the record that George and Gordon were the same person, and "prima facie two different names must be held to signify two different persons." McNally v. Mott, 3 Cal. 235. See, also, Sutter v. Cox, 6 Cal. 415; Houghton v. Tibbets, 126 Cal. 57, 58 Pac. 318. But if on proper proceedings it is shown that a person was served with process in an action brought against him, the judgment will bind him, although he may have been wrongly named. The cases last above cited involved substantial differences in names. There are cases of slight errors in spelling, which do not destroy the virtual identity of name (idem sonans). Such errors are disregarded entirely. For example, in Seaver v. Fitzgerald, 23 Cal. 85, it was held that a valid judgment against D. C. Seaver could be based on a publication of summons designating the defendant as D. C. Seavers. "The names," said the court, "are substantially the same."

This case must fall, so far as the variation of names is concerned, in the class of cases like McNally v. Mott, or in that represented by Seaver v. Fitzgerald; that is to say, the names Manuel S. Brum and Manuel S. de Brum must be regarded either as prima facie the names of different persons or as substantially the same. In either view the respondent was not entitled to the relief here sought and granted. If the name of the person against whom the judgment and execution ran is not the name of plaintiff, a purchaser under execution sale could not recover possession or establish title against plaintiff without allegation and proof that the plaintiff, although designated by a wrong name in the proceedings leading to the execution, was, in fact, the party who had been sued. If such showing could be made, the plaintiff would be bound by the judgment, and would have no ground for relief against its enforcement. If it could not be, the execution would afford no authority for selling plaintiff's property. On the face of the proceedings, the sale of plaintiff's property would appear to have been made on an execution against another person. Such sale would be prima facie void. It would cast no cloud on plaintiff's title, and should not therefore be enjoined. Rom. Cath. Archbishop v. Shipman, 69 Cal. 586, 11 Pac. 343; Russ, etc., Co. v. Crichton, 117 Cal. 695, 49 Pac. 1043.

On the other hand, if there be no substantial difference between the names Manuel S. Brum and Manuel S. de Brum, we have the case, hereinabove supposed, of an action by a party regularly sued and served to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties. A court of equity is asked to interfere on behalf of a judgment debtor who claims that he had a meritorious defense to the original action, but failed to set up that defense. His neglect to appear in the justice's court and deny the averments of the complaint which had been served upon him was not due to any imposition or fraud on the part of the adverse party, nor is there a showing of mistake, surprise, or other equitable ground excusing the failure to defend. Nothing is better settled than the rule that a defendant who, under such circumstances, fails to defend against an action at law, cannot have relief in equity against the judgment in the action, on grounds which would have been a defense to the original suit. 23 Cyc. 1006; Phelps v. Peabody, 7 Cal. 50; Mastick v. Thorp, 29 Cal. 444; Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292; Ede v. Hazen, 61 Cal. 360.

The record discloses no ground for the granting of relief against the execution of the judgment. Upon the facts found, judgment should have gone for the defendants.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment that plaintiff take nothing by the action, and that the defendants recover their costs.

HICKS v. POST. (L. A. 2,034.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 3, 1908.)

1. BROKERS — CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — AGREEMENT OF AGENCY.

Plaintiff, the owner of land, entered into a contract with defendant and his partner, by the terms of which defendant and his partner were to sink a well on the land, install a pumping plant, and develop water upon the premises, they to pay all the expenses, and were to subdivide and sell the premises, in consideration of which they were to have the exclusive handling and sale thereof, and the net proceeds of sale of the land and crops raised thereon, after first paying plaintiff the first cost of the lands, were to be divided equally between plaintiff and defendant's firm. Defendant's firm was given the option to make such terms of sale as they might deem proper, subject to certain restrictions, and the contract provided that, if the property should not be subdivided and sold by defendant's firm at a sooner date, the contract should remain in force for two years, and for such further time as might be agreed upon at the end of that period. Held, that the contract was nothing more than an agreement of agency whereby defendant's firm, in consideration of money and services to be given by them, were given the exclusive right to sell the land for a compensation to be measured by the price realized, and they had no interest, legal or equitable, in the land, at least after the expiration of the time limited by the parties.

2. SAME—OPERATION—TIME AS OF THE ESSENCE OF THE CONTRACT.

Civ. Code, § 1492, providing that where delay in performance is capable of exact compensation, and time has not been expressly declared to be of the essence of the obligation, an offer of performance, accompanied with an offer of such compensation, may be made at any time after it is due, etc., is not applicable to a contract under which a broker is given a certain time within which to make a sale; but the broker must perform within the time limited in his contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, § 68.]

3. SAME—CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT—EXTENSION—NECESSITY OF WRITING.

An oral agreement for extension of the contract was an agreement "authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission," and was of no effect because not in writing, as expressly required by Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6.

4. ESTOPPEL—MISREPRESENTATIONS.

The mere act of entering into an oral agreement for an extension of the contract, which agreement was required to be in writing, was not such a misrepresentation by plaintiff of a fact not equally within the knowledge of defendant as would estop plaintiff to deny that the contract was lawfully extended, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3, providing that whenever a person has by his own act intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot in any litigation arising out of such act be permitted to falsify it.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by Truman B. Hicks against M. E. Post to quiet title to land. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Kemp & Collier, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to quiet title to a tract of 120 acres of land in Los Angeles county. The defendant answered, claiming ownership of an equitable interest in the land. His claim was based upon the provisions of a written agreement between plaintiff Hicks, on the one hand, and defendant Post and Otis L. Lockhart, doing business as Post & Lockhart on the other. This contract, dated the 3d day of March, 1903, recites that Hicks is the owner in fee simple of the land in controversy, having purchased the same from Post & Lockhart, and that he is desirous of having water developed upon the said property and the same subdivided and sold. By its terms Post & Lockhart agree to proceed at once to sink a well upon the land and install a pumping plant thereon, and to develop water upon the said premises to the amount of 60 inches or more; they (Post & Lockhart) to pay all of the expense of developing the water and installing the pumping plant. They further agree to attend to all the details of subdividing and selling the said premises in such tracts as may be desired by purchasers, together with a sufficient amount of water for each tract sold, and also to attend to the harvesting of any crops which may be produced upon the premises. In consideration of these covenants, and of the payment by Post & Lockhart of the expenses incurred in the development of the water and installation of the pumping plant, Hicks agrees that Post & Lockhart shall have the exclusive handling, subdividing, and sale of the said premises. It is agreed that out of the net proceeds of sale of the said lands, and of any crops which may be raised upon the said premises during the continuance of the agreement, there shall be paid, first, to Hicks the sum of $125 an acre (the same being the first cost of the said lands to the said Hicks), and thereafter the net proceeds arising from the sale of said lands, water, and crops shall be equally divided between the said Post & Lockhart, and the said Truman B. Hicks, one-half to each. Post & Lockhart are given the option to make such terms of sale as they shall deem proper, subject to certain restrictions mentioned in the agreement. The final clause of the contract reads as follows: "It is further understood and agreed between the parties hereto that if the said property shall not be subdivided, sold and disposed of by the said parties of the first part (Post & Lockhart) at a sooner date, this contract shall be and remain in full force and effect for two years from the date hereof, and for such further time as may be agreed upon at the end of the said two years." The answer alleges that on February 3, 1904, Lockhart transferred and assigned all his right and interest in the contract to Post, the defendant herein. It is alleged that pursuant to the contract Post entered upon the land and proceeded to sink a well, by means of which he developed 100 inches of water, which was more than the amount specified in the agreement, and that he installed a pumping plant as required; the amount of money expended by him for these purposes amounting to $3,733.41. It is further alleged that the defendant Post has had the entire control and management of the property, has attended to all the details of seeding and harvesting the crops and marketing the same, and has expended for such purposes in excess of the amount received by him for the crops the sum of $65.61. He has also, as is averred, spent a large amount of his time and labor in attending to said property. It is averred that prior to March 3, 1905, it was agreed between the plaintiff and the defendant that the contract of March 3, 1903, should be extended indefinitely, and that the defendant should continue in the possession and exclusive handling and development of the said property, and that the same should thereafter be sold at such price as might be agreed upon between the said plaintiff and defendant, and for such sum as would reimburse the plaintiff for the purchase price of the property, and also reimburse the defendant for the amount of money expended by him in the improvement and development of the property; that pursuant to such extension and agreement the defendant remained in possession of the premises and expended a considerable amount of money in harvesting crops and disposing of the same, and in protecting the said property; that in pursuance of the said agreement defendant took to the said property a great number of prospective purchasers, in the endeavor to find a purchaser for the said property. All of these things are alleged to have been done by the defendant with the full knowledge, consent, and acquiescence of the plaintiff. On March 5, 1906, the plaintiff served upon the defendant a written notice that he, the said plaintiff, elected to declare the agreement of March 3, 1903, at an end, and refused to enter into any agreement for the further continuance thereof. Post refused to recognize Hicks' right to so terminate the agreement. The facts hereinbefore set forth, as alleged in the answer of the defendant Post, were found by the court to be true, with the exception of the allegations concerning the understanding and agreement of the parties that the contract of March 3d should be extended. In this regard the court found that the life or term of the said agreement of March 3, 1903, was not extended or modified as set forth in the answer, or at all. The court found, further, that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of the land, and that defendant has no interest, either legal or equitable, in said property. Judgment in favor of the plaintiff followed. The defendant appeals from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The action was commenced after the expiration of the two years specified in the original agreement. Leaving out of consideration, for the moment, any question of the extension of such contract, it is apparent that, at least after the expiration of the time limited by the parties, the defendant had no interest, legal or equitable, in the land. The contract was nothing more than an agreement of agency, by which the plaintiff, as owner of the land, gave to Post & Lockhart, in consideration of moneys to be expended and services to be performed by them, the exclusive right to sell the land for a compensation to be measured by the price realized. The right of Post & Lockhart to compensation and reimbursement was, as is aptly stated by respondent, "not to attach to the lands, but only to one-half of the net proceeds arising from the sale in the event that a sale should be made during the life of the agreement." There is nothing to indicate that Post & Lockhart were to have any interest in the land. Heyn v. Philips, 37 Cal. 529; Price v. Sturgis, 44 Cal. 591; Byers v. Locke, 93 Cal. 493, 29 Pac. 119, 27 Am. St. Rep. 212. Nor is there anything in this contract to justify the conclusion that it was intended to create a partnership in the land between the plaintiff Hicks and Post & Lockhart. Wheeler v. Farmer, 38 Cal. 203; Smith v. Schultz, 89 Cal. 526, 26 Pac. 1087; Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 Pac. 147; Title Insurance & Trust Co. v. Grider (Cal.) 94 Pac. 601.

On the face of the findings the case is simply one of an agency to sell land, limited to a certain period of time. The agent, in the hope and belief that he will be able to sell the land at a profit within the time, agrees to and does make certain expenditures upon the land. If he is able to make the sales, he will be reimbursed for these expenditures out of the proceeds of the sales. If he fails to make the sales, he loses the expenditures which he has made. This is the element of chance which necessarily inheres in a contract of this character. Appellant's argument that time is not of the essence of a contract, unless it is expressly so declared in the contract (Civ. Code, § 1492), has no application to a contract under which a broker is given a certain time within which to make a sale. The broker must perform the duty assumed by him within the time limited in his contract. Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 Pac. 642; Ropes v. John Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 671, 79 Pac. 354. The defendant was under his agreement, entitled to nothing unless he made a sale during the life of the contract, and it is not claimed that he did this during the period originally fixed.

It is argued, however, that the court erred in excluding evidence offered by the defendant to show that the parties had agreed upon an extension of the time fixed in the contract. The only evidence offered in this regard was testimony that there had been an oral agreement between the plaintiff and defendant "that the said contract should be extended indefinitely, and that the defendant should continue in possession of and exclusive handling and development of the property, and that the same should thereafter be sold at such price as might be agreed upon between the said plaintiff and defendant, and for such sum as would reimburse the plaintiff for the amount of money which he had paid for the property, and also reimburse the defendant for the amount of money which had been expended by him in the improvement and development of the same." This evidence was properly excluded. If we have properly construed the writing of March 3, 1903, the agreement for extension was simply one "authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission," and was, under our statute, required to be in writing. Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6.

There is no force in the argument that Hicks was estopped to deny that the contract continued in force for an indefinite period after the 3d day of March, 1905. The mere act of entering into an oral agreement in a matter concerning which the parties were, by law, required to contract in writing, cannot be regarded as a misrepresentation by Hicks of a fact not equally within the knowledge of Post. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3; Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 278. But beyond this, it does not appear that Post was, as respects expenditures on the land, injured in any way by his reliance on the extension. The expenditures so made by him after March 3, 1905, did not equal his receipts from the crops after that date. The fact that, acting under an invalid agreement, he made efforts to find purchasers, cannot, of course, operate to prevent the other party from asserting the invalidity of the contract. To hold the contrary would be to abrogate the statute of frauds. Shanklin v. Hall, 100 Cal. 26, 34 Pac. 636; O'Toole v. Dolan, 129 Cal. 488, 62 Pac. 92.

What we have said in construing the contract between the parties sufficiently answers the contention that plaintiff was bound to "do equity" by repaying to defendant the amounts expended by him.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

DAUPHINY v. BUHNE. (S. F. 3,540.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 25, 1908.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER—PRIVILEGED PUBLICATION—POLITICAL CANDIDATES.

Publication of a false criminal charge concerning a candidate for public office by a member of the community is not privileged, within Civ. Code, § 47, subd. 3, declaring privileged a publication made in a communication without malice to a person interested therein by one who is also interested.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 146.]

2. SAME—QUESTION FOR COURT.

When the facts and circumstances under which an alleged defamatory publication is made are undisputed, it is a question of law for the court whether or not it was privileged.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 362.]

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—EVIDENCE.

The facts and circumstances under which an alleged defamatory publication was made being undisputed, and showing it was not privileged, the court, if requested so to do, should instruct that it was not privileged; and, though not so requested, it is error to give an instruction on the theory that there is evidence on which it may be found that it was privileged.

4. LIBEL AND SLANDER—LIBEL PER SE.

An article, charging plaintiff with official corruption, with dishonestly agreeing to accept personal benefits as a consideration for his vote as member of a city council, is libelous on its face.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 91-94.]

5. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The article set out in the complaint being libelous on its face, it is error to refuse to so charge.

6. SAME—DAMAGES—AGGRAVATION—PLEA OF TRUTH.

Where defendant reiterates the alleged libelous charges in the answer, and offers no evidence of their truth, and the jury are satisfied that it is made with a knowledge of its falsity and maliciously and not in good faith, such plea of justification is an aggravation of the wrong, and may, as the jury should be instructed, be considered by them in assessing damages.

7. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court should not instruct in a libel suit that, if an honest mistake is made in an honest attempt to enlighten the public, it must reduce the damages to a minimum, as the jury may under such circumstances award much more than the minimum as actual damages.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR—RECORD—POINTING OUT ERRORS.

Where the transcript, embodying a bill of exceptions containing all the evidence, which is lengthy, set out by question and answer, contains no index of where any particular evidence is to be found, and appellant's brief does not indicate where the questions objected to, and the rulings thereon, may be found, but merely sets forth a page of questions objections to which it is claimed were erroneously overruled, the court will not search the transcript to discover whether there was error.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

Action by A. C. Dauphiny against A. H. Buhne. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

A. W. Hill, for appellant. Henry L. Ford, L. M. Burnell, and A. J. Monroe, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an action for libel. In the early part of 1901 plaintiff was a member of the firm of A. C. Dauphiny & Co., doing a general merchandise business in the city of Eureka, and both he and defendant were members of the common council of said city. At that time there was presented to the council petitions by various railroad companies for franchises to operate their roads across the city front of the city. Among these petitioning companies was the California & Northern Railroad Company. Diverse views were held by members of the council as to the terms and conditions upon which these several franchises should be granted, plaintiff opposing for a long time the granting of the franchise to the California & Northern Railroad Company, defendant favoring it. Ultimately this franchise was passed, plaintiff and defendant both voting in favor of it, and it developed from the evidence on the trial that it was concerning the action of plaintiff relative to the passage of the ordinance granting this franchise that the article published by defendant of plaintiff had reference. Subsequently, and in the month of June, 1901, plaintiff and defendant were both candidates for re-election as councilmen from their respective wards in the city of Eureka. They were not opposing candidates, but each openly opposed the re-election of the other. It was during this period that the defendant caused to be published in the Daily Humboldt Standard, a daily newspaper published in the city of Eureka, an article entitled: "From Councilman Buhne of the First Ward," signed in the same way and containing the following: "Now, Mr. Dauphiny * * * did you have the city's interest at heart when, after fighting a certain franchise, you went to the company seeking it, or its representatives, and told them that if they would buy groceries from you, you would vote for the franchise? I know you did this and can prove it, and you voted for the franchise." Plaintiff thereupon brought this action for damages grounded upon the portion of the article just quoted, which was set forth in the complaint, accompanied by proper allegations that it was intended by defendant, and understood by the citizens who read the article, to charge that plaintiff had violated his official oath and been guilty of official corruption; that he had solicited personal benefits and had dishonestly accepted them for the purpose of influencing his official action as a member of the council of the city, and had corruptly bartered and legislated away the rights and privileges of said city, with the further allegation that said article so published was false and malicious. Defendant answered, admitting the publication, and as a first defense averred that it was true, and, as a second defense: "That at the time the defendant published the alleged defamatory article in the Daily Humboldt Standard, to wit, on June 15, 1901, the said plaintiff was the member of the city council from the Fourth Ward, and this defendant was the member of said city council from the First Ward of said city of Eureka. That at the said time, to wit, June 15, 1901, both plaintiff and defendant were candidates for the same offices, to wit, as members of the city council of the city of Eureka to be elected at the general election which was held in the said city of Eureka on or about the 16th of June, 1901. That defendant wrote and published said article, without malice, of and concerning the character and motives of a candidate for a public office, and for the promotion of public interests and public welfare. That this defendant and all other people, citizens and electors of said city of Eureka, were interested in the character and motives of all candidates for public offices and public trusts, which said candidates were seeking at the hands of said electors." The case was tried and a verdict rendered by the jury in favor of the defendant, and from the judgment entered thereon, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

It is insisted on this appeal that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the verdict against plaintiff and that a new trial should have been granted by the lower court on that ground; also, that the court erred in refusing instructions asked by appellant and in giving some requested by the respondent. As a new trial must be had for error as to instructions, it is unnecessary to embarrass future consideration of the case by discussing the sufficiency of the evidence. Different or other evidence may be presented upon the new trial which must be ordered.

It will be observed that two defenses were interposed by defendant: First, a justification on the ground that the charge as published was true; secondly, that the article published by him, under the circumstances alleged, constituted a privileged publication under section 47 of the Civil Code, which relieved him from responsibility to plaintiff. As the jury, while satisfied that the charge published was untrue, might yet have found it to be privileged under the instructions of the court and based their verdict upon that ground, it becomes important to consider the instructions as to the law on that subject. Section 47 of the Civil Code, relating to privileged publications, declares that "A privileged publication is one made * * * (3) in a communication, without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested, or by one who stands in such relation to the person interested, as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive of the communication innocent, or who is requested by the party interested to give the information." The defense of privilege which the defendant pleaded and under the evidence introduced by him sought to sustain was made and offered with a view of bringing the publication within the operation of subdivision 3 of said section. As to the evidence, it was conceded that the plaintiff was a candidate for councilman when this publication was made, and the defendant testified in his own behalf that he entertained no malice against the plaintiff when he caused the charge to be published; that he published the article, as he said, with the intention of stating things concerning plaintiff which he believed to be true, and because he believed the public generally should know what kind of a man the plaintiff was. This was the only evidence upon which the claim of privilege was based. The theory of defendant, both under his pleading and this evidence, was that because the plaintiff was a candidate for public office he had a right, as a member of the community, to call the attention of the public to the character and motives of plaintiff as such candidate; that these were matters in which the public had a direct interest; that under these circumstances, as long as the publication was made without actual malice, and in a belief that the charges were true, it was a privileged publication under the subdivision of the section referred to, even though, in fact, the charge was false.

The trial court accepted this theory and claim of the defendant, and, upon the assumption that there was evidence which would support a finding by a jury that the publication was privileged, instructed them upon the law as to that subject. The court read to the jury that particular portion of the section of the Civil Code which we have quoted, and, having done so, immediately proceeded further to instruct as follows: "I therefore instruct you that, if you find from the evidence in this cause that the alleged publication was made by the defendant without malice upon a matter in which he was interested to a person or persons who was or were also interested therein or who being interested therein requested him to give such information, then I instruct you that such communication to such person or persons was and is a privileged communication. If you find such to be the fact, then such communication forms no basis for an action, and you will find a verdict for the defendant, unless you can also say that the defendant in making the publication was actuated by malicious motives independent of the mere publication of the article in question." It was error to give this instruction, because there was no evidence in the case at all warranting it. All the evidence relied on by the defendant in support of his claim that the publication was privileged had no tendency to support it. There was no evidence under which this instruction was applicable. It is not the law that a person may assail the character of a candidate for office by charging him with criminal misconduct, and then escape liability on the ground that the charge was made with good intentions and for justifiable ends without malice, and under even an honest belief that the charge is true, and that the occasion of his candidacy called for its publication. While the privilege of electors to comment and criticise the acts and conduct of candidates for public places is very large, this privilege must be confined to statements of the truth. There is no privilege of publication under the Code or general law which will exempt one from responsibility for falsehood. The only justification one can make who publishes criminal accusations against a candidate is, when he is called to account, to prove the truth of the accusation. Libel is no more justifiable when published about a candidate for public office than if published of him on any other occasion. His reputation and character are as much entitled to protection against false accusation when he is a candidate for office as at any other time. It is true that, when a person becomes a candidate for a public office, his talents and qualifications for the office to which he aspires may be freely commented on and criticised by any member of the community by publication or otherwise. His faults or his vices, in so far as they may affect his official character, may be freely discussed. He does not, however, by becoming a candidate, surrender his private character as a subject for false accusation. That character is only put in issue as far as his fitness or qualification for the office he seeks may be affected by it. The public have an interest in knowing the truth about those who occupy or seek public office, but it has no interest in having falsehoods concerning them disseminated. Hence publication of the truth, with an honest intention of giving information to the public of a candidate, furnishes no ground for complaint. But it is one thing to publish the truth and quite another to publish falsehoods. The publication of the truth is justifiable, but the publication of a falsehood finds no justification whatever under the law. While facts may be published, falsehoods may not, and he who would justify a charge of specific acts of misconduct against a candidate for office must do so by proof of the truth of the charge or he does not justify at all. The law does not permit the character of those seeking position to be destroyed by libelous charges under any guise of privileged publication. One can justify the publication of a libel against a candidate for office upon privilege, only by proof that the accusation is true. This is the rule unqualifiedly laid down by this court in Jarman v. Rea, 137 Cal. 339, 70 Pac. 216, where the subject will be found fully discussed.

It may be said, too, while considering this instruction, that, had the plaintiff requested it, it would have been the duty of the court to have instructed the jury that the publication made by the defendant, under the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, was not privileged. When the facts and circumstances under which an alleged defamatory publication is made are undisputed, it is a question of law for the court to determine whether it was privileged or not. In the case at bar the facts and circumstances under which the alleged libelous publication was made were not disputed. They showed that the publication was not privileged, and, had the court been requested, it should have so instructed the jury. Carpenter v. Ashley, 148 Cal. 422, 83 Pac. 444. The fact, however, that no such instruction was asked did not make it any the less error to give the jury an instruction on the theory that there was evidence upon which they might find the publication was privileged when in fact there was none.

It is also insisted by appellant that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury, as requested by him, that the article set forth in the complaint was libelous on its face. This point is well taken, as the court should have given that instruction. The article charged the plaintiff with official corruption, with dishonestly agreeing to accept personal benefits as a consideration to influence his official acts upon the matter which was before the legislative body of the city of Eureka of which he was a member. A charge against a public official importing want of integrity or corruption in the discharge of his official duties is actionable of itself. Schomberg v. Walker, 132 Cal. 224, 64 Pac. 290; Jarman v. Rea, supra.

The court should have likewise given another instruction asked by plaintiff, but which it refused. This instruction was to the effect that where a defendant reiterates the alleged libelous charges in his answer and offers no evidence to prove their truth, and the jury are satisfied that it is made with a knowledge of its falsity and maliciously and not in good faith, such plea of justification is an aggravation of the wrong done to the plaintiff and may be considered by the jury in assessing damages. This instruction was correct and should have been given. Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75; Westerfield v. Scripps, 119 Cal. 611, 51 Pac. 958.

It is further insisted by appellant that one of the instructions given at the request of respondent was erroneous. In that instruction, the court told the jury that "the public are interested in knowing the character of candidates for office; and, while no man can willfully destroy the reputation of a candidate by falsehood, yet, if an honest mistake is made in an honest attempt to enlighten the public, it must reduce the damages to a minimum if the fault itself is not serious, and there should be no reasonable responsibility where there is no malice." This instruction was undoubtedly taken from language used by the court in Baily v. Kalamazoo Publishing Company, 40 Mich. 251, 257, where the court was discussing the right to criticise the conduct of a candidate for office and the responsibility therefor. At least, we find the language used there, although inaccurately copied in the instruction as to the latter part of it. In that case the words used are "there should be no unreasonable responsibility where there is not actual malice," instead of "no reasonable responsibility where there is no malice" as the instruction has it. It is always injudicious to take the language of a court in discussing a proposition of law as a correct instruction to be given to a jury. General language is often there used which would be inappropriate as an instruction, and this instruction is an illustration of it. The particularly objectionable part of the instruction is found in the use of the language "it must reduce the damages to a minimum." It is not the province of a trial court to say to a jury: "If an honest mistake is made in an honest attempt to enlighten the public, it must reduce the damages to a minimum." This does not at all follow. Minimum as applied to damages means the least possible amount that may be awarded by a jury, but under the circumstances such as the court referred to in its instruction the jury might award much more than the minimum as actual damages. This is too clear for comment. Of course, as to the rest of the instruction which was incorrectly copied, it is hardly worth discussing it, on account of the emasculated condition in which it was given. There could be, however, no necessity or propriety in giving it if it had been correctly copied. What the responsibility should be is a question purely for the jury, to be determined by them under instructions explicitly declaring the rule under which it should be ascertained. There is responsibility for substantive damages—damages for loss of reputation and so forth—even where there is no actual malice in the mind of the accuser when he makes the defamatory charge. There is no necessity on a new trial for giving this instruction at all, even if modified by omitting the objectionable features we have pointed out. As it stood, it only had application to the matter of mitigation of damages, and the rule in that respect, as laid down in other instructions, seems to be full enough, or, at least, is not challenged by appellant as being incorrect in law.

Some alleged errors in rulings upon the admissibility of evidence are claimed to have been committed by the court. The transcript embodies a bill of exceptions containing all the evidence set out by question and answer, is quite lengthy, but the transcript itself does not contain any index of where the testimony of any witness may be found. Neither in the briefs of counsel for appellant is it indicated where, or in what part of the bill, the questions objected to, and the rulings of the court upon them, may be discovered. He contents himself with setting forth in a page or so in his brief a lot of questions which he claims the court erred in overruling his objections to. We are not even enlightened on the subject as to whether the questions were answered or not. It is the duty of counsel to point out specifically where alleged errors, upon which they rely, may be found in the transcript, and if counsel do not see fit to do so, it will be assumed that they have not deemed them of sufficient merit or importance to undertake the task. In any event, under such circumstances, this court will not assume the burden of doing it.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ALDERSON et al. v. HOUSTON.
(L. A. 2,030.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — STATUTORY PROVISIONS—LANGUAGE.

Under the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 1644, the words of a contract are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, rather than according to their strict legal meaning.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 732-740.]

2. BROKERS — COMPENSATION — TRANSACTION NOT COMPLETED—DEFAULT OF PRINCIPAL—REMOVAL OF INCUMBRANCES FROM PROPERTY —“TAX.”

Where a contract with brokers for the sale of lots required defendant to furnish a certificate of title, showing the property clear of incumbrances, except “* * * taxes assessed, but not due and payable,” defendant was bound to clear the property from all street assessments; the word “tax” being ordinarily used to refer only to taxes assessed for state, county, or city purposes, and not to designate street assessments for public improvements.

3. SAME—ESTOPPEL OF PRINCIPAL.

Defendant gave plaintiffs the right to the exclusive sale of certain lots for the period of 18 months, free of all incumbrances, except taxes assessed, but not due and payable. Street assessments became due after the contract was made, and it was optional with defendant to pay them, or by nonpayment to suffer the issuance of 10-year bonds therefor, which were not due and payable except in annual installments. Held, that having failed to pay the assessments, defendant was estopped to set up his inability to discharge the liens for the bonds subsequently issued, as an excuse for nonperformance of the contract on his part.

4. SAME—PERFORMANCE BY BROKER PREVENTED BY DEFAULT OF PRINCIPAL—REMEDIES.

A contract giving plaintiffs the exclusive right, for a specified time, to sell a number of lots owned by defendant at a separate price each, and providing that an advance commission of 10 per cent. on the selling price should be paid plaintiffs, and that a commission of $8,000, less such amounts as were paid as advance commissions, should be paid when all the lots were sold, was an entire one; and the act of defendant, in disabling himself from complying with the terms of the contract requiring certificates of clear title to be given, by suffering the accrual of bond liens for street assessments, thereby preventing plaintiffs from performing their part of the agreement, amounted to a wrongful discharge of plaintiffs as agents, and they were not required to continue making sales and demanding of defendant certificates showing clear title, but were entitled to sue immediately on the breach, and recover the entire damages therefrom.

5. SAME.

Where defendant gave plaintiffs the exclusive right, for 18 months, to sell a number of lots, on commission, agreeing to give with each lot a certificate of clear title, but thereafter allowed street improvement assessment liens to accrue against the lots, and refused to discharge them, and plaintiffs, by reason thereof, lost the sale of several lots for which they had secured purchasers, the subsequent offer of defendant to procure certificates of clear title, accompanied by a condition that he was not to be bound to clear the title, but would do so or not at his pleasure, did not remove the effect of the repudiation of the contract.

6. DAMAGES—PROSPECTIVE LOSSES—LOSS OF PROFITS — COMMISSIONS OF BROKERS — BREACH OF CONTRACT BY PRINCIPAL.

Civ. Code, § 3300, provides that, for breach of an obligation arising from contract, the measure of damages is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom. Defendant gave plaintiffs the exclusive right to sell lots at a separate price each, agreeing to pay an advance commission on the selling price, and a further commission, when all the lots were sold, of $8,000, less the advance commissions, but breached his agreement to furnish a certificate of clear title, thereby preventing plaintiffs from selling some of the lots. Held that, the evidence showing that plaintiff could have sold all the lots but for such breach, they were entitled to recover the agreed commission, less the amounts paid thereon and the amount which they would have had to expend in the future performance of the contract but for such breach.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by G. E. Alderson and another against H. R. Houston. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Chas. L. Batcheller and Thos. C. Ridgway, for appellants. Russ Avery and Samuel H. French, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiffs appeal from a judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The complaint states a cause of action for the breach of a contract on the part of defendant, as owner of 43 lots in the city of Los Angeles, empowering the plaintiffs, as real estate brokers, to sell the said lots. The contract is dated May 17, 1904. It declares that the defendant is the owner of 43 lots, describing them, and gives to plaintiffs the right to the exclusive sale thereof for the period of 18 months from its date. It contained the following provision: "All sales are to be made with delivery of certificates of title for each lot as sold or passes title under the terms of this agreement, drawn by the Title Insurance & Trust Co. of Los Angeles, and shall show clear of incumbrances, except building restriction, and such taxes that may be assessed but are not due and payable." It further provided that an advance commission of 10 per cent. on the selling price should be paid to plaintiffs, and that "a commission of $8,000, less such amounts as are paid in cash as advance commission, being the said 10 per cent., and such discounts as shall have been allowed from list prices to said Alderson shall be paid in cash when all the said lots are sold." The discount mentioned referred to certain discounts, to be allowed on sales of certain lots upon which plaintiffs were to build houses. It was agreed that they should erect on the lots 6 houses within 12 months, and 4 within 15 months, from the date of the contract. Time was made of the essence of the agreement, and it was agreed that any failure of the parties thereto to comply with the terms thereof should forfeit the contract upon 30 days' written notice. The sales of the respective lots were to be made at prices stated in a schedule attached to the contract. It is alleged that the plaintiffs proceeded to place the lots on the market for sale, advertise them in the newspapers, place signboards advertising that the same were for sale by plaintiffs, and in all the usual ways, and in various ways, endeavored to procure purchasers, built houses on several of the lots in pursuance of the terms of the agreement, and made sales of a number of the lots at the prices agreed upon, for which they received advance commissions and discounts amounting to $2,320. It is further alleged that certain street assessments, for the improving and opening of streets abutting on the lots, became a lien upon a number of the lots; that the plaintiffs procured purchasers for some of these lots ready, able, and willing to buy the same, and demanded of defendant that he procure a certificate of title showing the same to be free from incumbrances; that thereupon the defendant refused to remove the liens of said assessments from said lots, and refused to furnish the certificates of title, as demanded, and denied his obligation, under the terms of the contract, to clear any lots of the lien of said assessments, whereupon said sales so made by the plaintiffs were prevented and defeated, and the plaintiffs were prevented from performing their part of the contract. It is claimed that, by reason of the conduct of the defendant in preventing the performance of the contract by plaintiffs, the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the damages arising from the breach of the contract, and that this consists of the $8,000 agreed to be paid as commissions upon the sale of all the lots, less the sums received in advance, as the contract provides, which balance amounts to $5,680.

The court found that the plaintiffs placed the lots on the market, and advertised them, and made the effort to sell the same as alleged in the complaint, and that they procured purchasers for 12 of the lots not incumbered by assessment liens, for which certificates of title were furnished, and deeds made, to the satisfaction of the purchasers, and upon which the $2,320 advance commissions and discounts were received by the plaintiffs. The dispute arises concerning lots 13, 16, 54, 55, and 56. As to lots 54 and 55, the court finds that the plaintiffs found purchasers therefor, and that defendant hindered and prevented the sales thereof, but that after February 23, 1905, he did not refuse to clear the title of said lots of the assessment lien, or refuse to furnish the certificate of title provided in the contract, nor insist that the purchasers should pay the assessment, or accept title to the lots subject thereto. As to lot 56, the finding is to the same effect, except that it is found that the defendant did not hinder or prevent the sale thereof. As to lots 13 and 16, the court finds that the plaintiffs found purchasers therefor, but that the defendant did not refuse to furnish clear certificates, nor hinder or prevent the sales. The plaintiffs found purchasers for lots 54 and 55 at the agreed price of $1,100 each. Under the terms of the contract there was a discount of 25 per cent. upon the price of lot 55, to which the plaintiffs would have been entitled, as part of the commission, if they had made the sale. They would also have been entitled to $110, as 10 per cent. advance commission on the sale of lot 54, if such sale had been accomplished, making a total of $385 on the two lots.

The plaintiffs claim that the judgment in favor of the defendant is not supported by the findings, and that many of the findings are not supported by the evidence. The evidence shows that at the time the contract was made the assessment liens on lots 54, 55, and 56 had not accrued, and that they did not accrue until September 16, 1904. Sales of lots 54, 55, and 56 were made about October 7, 1904. Houston made deeds ready for delivery for lots 54 and 56, conveying title subject to the assessment liens. He was requested, on October 20, 1904, to discharge the liens and furnish clear certificates of title, whereupon he refused to furnish the same, or to make a deed, except upon the condition that the purchasers should pay or assume the liens, stating that the contract did not require him to give title to any of the lots free or clear of assessment liens. The court found that his contention in this respect was untenable, and in this we think the court was correct. The part of the contract above quoted required him to furnish a certificate of title showing the property clear of incumbrances, except building restrictions, and taxes assessed, but not due and payable. While in the broad sense of the term the word "tax" may be construed to include special assessments made to pay for improvements upon streets, or for the opening thereof, yet such is not the ordinary and usual meaning of the word. In construing contracts the words thereof are to be understood in their ordinary and popular sense, rather than according to their strict legal meaning. Civ. Code, § 1644. In the ordinary course of business, particularly among real estate dealers, it is well known that the word "taxes" is used to refer to ordinary taxes assessed upon property for state, county, or city purposes, and not to designate street assessments for public improvements. There is nothing to indicate that it was here used in other than its ordinary meaning. By the contract, therefore, the defendant was bound to furnish a certificate of title for each lot, showing that the same was free from all liens, except such state, county, and city taxes as were assessed, but not due or payable. He was, consequently, bound to clear the property from all street assessments, and to furnish certificates accordingly. In this connection, another contention of defendant may be considered. The proceeding for improving the street in question was made under the general street improvement law and the so-called "Bond Act." See Gen. Laws (Pony Ed.) 1906, pp. 1279, 1330; St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153, and amendment thereto; Bond Act, St. 1893, p. 33, c. 21; St. 1899, p. 40, c. 42. At the trial Houston claimed that 10-year bonds had been issued on these assessments, which were not due and payable except in annual installments, and hence that they came within the exception in the contract as taxes "not due and payable." The assessment became a lien on September 16, 1904, the date of issuing and recording the warrant. Section 10, Street Improvement Act, supra. Bonds could not, in any event, be issued therefor until the expiration of 30 days thereafter, and after the recording of the contractor's return to the warrant. Section 4, Bond Act, supra. In the intervening time the entire assessment on each lot was due and payable. Section 10, supra. It was therefore optional with Houston either to pay the assessments, or by non-payment to suffer the issuance of 10-year bonds therefor. He had, by his contract with plaintiffs, agreed to sell these lots free from such liens, at any time within 18 months from the date of the contract. His conduct, in thus voluntarily permitting them to become incumbered by liens for these bonds which could not be discharged for 10 years, was an act by which he disabled himself from executing his contract according to its terms. The assessments having become due and payable after his contract was made, and he having then had an opportunity to discharge the liens, he would be estopped to set up his inability to discharge the liens for the bonds subsequently issued, as an excuse for nonperformance of the contract on his part.

After his refusal of October 20th to pay the liens, or furnish clear certificates therefor, a correspondence on the subject ensued between plaintiffs and defendant. The plaintiffs steadily insisted that Houston was bound to furnish clear certificates and remove the liens, declared that the sales made would fall through if their demands were not promptly met, and urged immediate action. They also stated that it was useless to try to sell the lots at the schedule prices with the assessment liens upon them, and that, in order to enable them to carry out their contract, they must have the question settled. The defendant steadily persisted in his refusal and in his denial of any obligation to pay the liens or furnish certificates clear of such liens. During this correspondence, and because of the delay in clearing the title, the buyer of lot 54 withdrew his offer, and claimed and obtained a return of his deposit. A certificate of title was ordered for lot 55, but further proceedings upon that sale were delayed by the plaintiffs, because of the existing controversy concerning the assessment liens, they having informed the buyer that the sale was to be made free of incumbrance. The buyer, after some delay, refused to wait longer for the title to be cleared, and withdrew his deposit and offer. Houston was not informed of this sale, nor specifically requested to clear the title thereto. A formal demand for a clear deed and certificate for lot 56 was made on January 20, 1905, and was definitely refused by the defendant on January 24, 1905. On February 23, 1905, the defendant served on plaintiffs a written notice, stating that he had executed and deposited in escrow a deed of lot 56, clear of liens, and that he would thereafter, until he should give written notice to the contrary, execute deeds, and procure certificates of title clear of incumbrance, for all lots sold by the plaintiffs under the contract, but that he contended, and would continue to contend, until he gave written notice otherwise, that he was not bound by the contract to give deeds or procure certificates free from the lien of street assessments, and that he reserved all his rights under the contract; that he did this in order to remove any excuse claimed by plaintiffs for not performing the contract on their part, and to protect himself in case his construction of the contract was finally determined to be wrong, and not as a compromise, or with any concession that his construction of the contract was not correct. The deed referred to in this notice did not on its face purport to convey a clear title, but declared that it was made "subject to all taxes and assessments levied or assessed against the property after the 17th day of May, 1904," which made it subject to the street bond thereon, amounting to $483.40. He had, however, deposited with the deed his check to the city treasurer for the amount of the bond, with instructions to the escrow holder to deliver the check to the city treasurer when the deed was taken up. The holder of the bond had agreed to accept full payment in that way, and cancel the bond, but plaintiffs were not informed of that fact until the trial of the cause. The plaintiffs did not accept the propositions made in the notice of February 23d, but replied thereto on March 2, 1905, saying that it came too late, that they had been prevented from making sales by his delay and refusal to conform to the contract, and that unless he would give a reasonable extension of time for the performance of the contract by them, and would agree thereafter to pay or remove all street assessment liens as the lots were sold, they would insist on their rights and damages for his breach of the contract. To this Houston replied, on March 4th and 15th, in writing, reaffirming all that he said in his notice on February 23d, and stating that, while no legal or moral reason existed for so doing, yet he would and did extend the time limit of the contract 4 additional months, but that he would not agree to abide by the contract, except as stated in said notice. This offer to extend the time was not accepted on the terms proposed, and on May 8, 1905, it was withdrawn. The plaintiffs did not take up the deed for lot 56 in pursuance of the offer of February 23d, and about the 1st of June, 1905, they began the present action.

Although the contract in question provides for the sale of 43 lots, at a separate price for each lot, yet in view of its provisions with respect to the payment of the $8,000 commissions, it must be considered as an entire contract. The total price of all the lots, according to the schedule prices, was $47,275. The $8,000 commissions provided for was evidently not calculated upon any percentage of the prices fixed. By the terms of the contract, if plaintiffs failed to make a sale of all the lots, they would receive nothing, excepting these advance commissions and discounts, which would not amount to $8,000. It is similar, in this respect, to the contract considered in Cox v. McLaughlin, 44 Cal. 18. There a contractor agreed to grade and construct a section of a railroad at a fixed sum for the entire work, to be paid, from time to time, in installments as the work progressed, and it was held that the contract was entire, and that the provision for payments, from time to time as the work progressed, did not make it severable. In the present case the plaintiffs are not entitled to anything, except the advance commissions and discounts, until the entire contract is performed, and there is no scale furnished by the contract whereby the whole amount they are entitled to for each lot can be apportioned. See, also, the following authorities: Sterling v. Gregory, 149 Cal. 117, 85 Pac. 305; Potter v. Potter, 43 Or. 154, 72 Pac. 704; Horseman v. Horseman, 43 Or. 94, 72 Pac. 698; 2 Parsons on Contracts, 519; 3 Page on Contracts, §§ 1484, 1487, 1493. The contract made plaintiffs agents of defendant to sell all the lots for the agreed commission, at the agreed price, upon the terms fixed thereby, and within the time limited. The conduct of the defendant in repudiating his own obligation to perform, in refusing to perform a material part of the contract, and in disabling himself from performance by suffering the accrual of bond liens, which could not be removed, except with the consent of the bondholder, prevented the plaintiffs from performing their part of the contract as its terms provided. It amounted to a wrongful discharge of plaintiffs as agents. It was a breach of a material part of an entire contract. "The first breach by the defendant was a breach of the whole, and discharged the plaintiffs from performance of any conditions on his part." Haskell v. McHenry, 4 Cal. 411. "Plaintiffs were entitled to sue upon the breach immediately, and recover the entire damage resulting from it, without waiting for the time for full performance to elapse." Hale v. Trout, 35 Cal. 242. They were not required to go on making sales and demanding certificates showing clear title. Id. The law is well and succinctly stated in Clark & Skyles on Agency (section 365, p. 826) as follows: "The agent has the election of two remedies by which he may obtain the redress for the wrongful discharge: (1) He may treat the contract as rescinded, and sue at once, on a quantum meruit, for the service actually rendered by him prior to the revocation and notice thereof; or (2) he may treat the contract of employment as continuing, though broken by the principal, and sue on the breach, for damages. In the latter case he may either sue for damages at once upon the breach of the contract, or wait until the expiration of the time of service fixed by the contract, and then sue for damages." Page 828: "If he elects to treat the contract as continuing, and sues at once for the breach, he is entitled to recover the amount of compensation, if any, earned by him prior to the breach, and remaining unpaid, and, in addition to this, the probable damages sustained by him by reason of the breach. Such damages are prima facie the whole amount of unearned compensation which he would have earned if allowed to carry out the contract; but the principal may reduce such amount of damage, by showing affirmatively, the burden of proof being on him, that the agent will probably find similar employment during the remainder of the term fixed by the contract." Page 830: "When an agent has notice of his wrongful discharge, it is not necessary that he should tender his service, or keep himself in readiness to perform. * * * All that is necessary is that he was ready and willing to continue in such employment at the time of the discharge."

It is claimed, on behalf of the defendant, that the conduct of the defendant, although contrary to the terms of the contract, did not constitute a sufficient prevention of performance by plaintiffs to justify them in declaring the contract terminated, and suing to recover the entire compensation allowed therein. We think this claim cannot be sustained. The question was elaborately discussed in Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Richards, 152 Ill. 59, 38 N. E. 773, 30 L. R. A. 33. After quoting from the decision in Palm v. O. & M. R. Co., 18 Ill. 217, the following passage: "I have examined all the authorities referred to by counsel, and have made diligent search myself, but have found no case where the plaintiff has been allowed to recover for losses sustained by not being permitted to complete the contract, unless he has been prevented from going on with his work, by the positive affirmative act of the other party, or where the other party has neglected to do some act, without which the plaintiff could not, in the nature of things, go on with his contract"—the court proceeds to discuss the question, and in the course of the discussion says: "Stress is laid by counsel upon the words 'prevented from going on.' * * * The same language—I. e., that the party suing must be 'prevented' from performance—has been used in numerous cases; but, wherever the attention of the court has been directly called to the sense in which the word has been used, it has been held, not to mean that there must be physical prevention, but that any acts, conduct, or declarations of the party evincing a clear intention to repudiate the contract, and to treat it as no longer binding, are a legal prevention of performance." After some further discussion the opinion proceeds: "Without further quotation from cases it seems clear, both upon principle and by authority, that where one party to an executory contract refuses to treat it as subsisting and binding upon him, or by his acts and conduct shows that he has renounced it, and no longer considers himself bound by it, there is, in legal effect, a prevention of performance by the other party, and it can make no difference whether the contract has been partially performed, or the time for performance has not yet arrived; nor is it important whether the renunciation be by declaration of the parties that he will be no longer bound, or by acts and conduct which clearly evince that that determination has been reached and is being acted upon. It would seem clear, on principle, that a mere declaration of the party of an intention not to be bound, or acts and conduct in repudiation of the contract, will not, of themselves, amount to a breach, so as to create an effectual renunciation of the contract; for one party cannot, by any act or declaration, destroy the binding force and efficacy of the contract. (Italics ours.) As said by Bowen, L. J., in Johnston v. Milling Co., 16 Q. B. Div. 460: 'Its real operation appears to be to give the promisee the right of electing either to treat the declaration as brutum fulmen, and holding fast to the contract to wait till the time for its performance has arrived, or to act upon it, and treat it as a final assertion by the promisor that he is no longer bound by the contract, and a wrongful renunciation of the contractual relation into which he has entered. * * *

If he does so elect, it becomes a breach of contract, and he can recover upon it as such.' Upon the election to treat the renunciation, whether by declaration or by acts and conduct, as a breach of the contract, the rights of the parties are to be regarded as then culminating, and the contractual relation ceases to exist, except for the purpose of maintaining the action for the recovery of damages. These views are amply sustained by numerous decided cases." The court cites and discusses the following cases supporting the proposition: Hochster v. De Latour, 20 L. & Eq. 157; Frost v. Knight (L. R.) 7 Exch. 111; Freeth v. Burr (L. R.) 9 C. P. 208; Mersey S. & I. Co. v. Naylor, 9 Q. B. Div. 648; Roper v. Johnston (L. R.) 8 C. P. 167; Ex parte Stapleton (L. R.) 10 Ch. Div. 586; Planche v. Colburn, 8 Bing. 14; Danube & B. S. R. Co. v. Xenos, 13 C. B. (N. S.) 825; Masterton v. Mayor, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 61, 42 Am. Dec. 38; Hosmer v. Wilson, 7 Mich. 304, 74 Am. Dec. 716; Derby v. Johnson, 21 Vt. 21; Hinckley v. Pittsburgh S. Co., 121 U. S. 264, 7 Sup. Ct. 875, 30 L. Ed. 967; Haines v. Tucker, 50 N. H. 307; Smith v. Lewis, 24 Conn. 624, 63 Am. Dec. 180. The same principle is stated in De Prosse v. Royal Eagle Co., 135 Cal. 411, 67 Pac. 502, where the court says, referring to a repudiation by the defendant of a part of an entire contract: "A repudiation of a part of it was, as to plaintiffs, a repudiation of it all; that is, plaintiffs had the right to consider the breach of this covenant a breach of the entire contract"—quoting with approval the passage from Haskell v. McHenry, supra.

60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164, where it was held that where a contract was entire, and the consideration for the work to be done by plaintiff was to be paid in installments as the work progressed, the mere failure or refusal of the defendant to pay an installment when it became due did not constitute such a prevention of performance as to authorize the plaintiff to sue for the entire contract price without performing all the work, but that it was a sufficient breach to warrant the plaintiff in treating the contract as rescinded, refusing to go on with the work and suing upon a quantum meruit for the value of the work already done. But, as is pointed out in Porter v. Arrowhead R. Co., 100 Cal. 500, 35 Pac. 146, those cases were so decided for the reason and upon the ground that the payment of an installment upon the contract price was not a condition precedent to the doing of the work, and that a breach cannot be a "prevention" of performance by the other party, unless it is a breach of a condition precedent; that is, of something which the defendant must do before the plaintiff can perform. In the case at bar we find that the condition broken by Houston, the part of the contract which he repudiated, was a condition precedent to the performance by plaintiffs. The defendant was to furnish certificates showing clear titles to the satisfaction of buyers. The plaintiffs could not complete the sale of any lot upon the contract terms until this was done. It is not for the defendant to say that purchasers might have been found who were willing to take the lots, and pay or assume the liens in addition to the contract prices, if the plaintiffs had continued to make efforts to that end. The plaintiffs owed him no duty to find such buyers. They had a right to stand upon the contract. The refusal of the defendant to clear the lots of the liens effectually prevented the plaintiffs from completing the making of the sales above mentioned, and also from the performance of their part of the contract.

It is further claimed that, by the offer contained in the notice of February 23, 1905, and the extension of time offered on March 4th, Houston receded from his refusal and from his repudiation of the contract, and removed all excuse for a lack of full performance by plaintiffs. The claim is not tenable. In the first place, the time of performance was limited by the contract to 18 months from its date. During more than 4 months of that time, Houston had repudiated his obligation, and had refused to perform the same, and this delay had, as the evidence shows, prevented the sales of the four lots numbered 13, 16, 54, and 55. As to lots 54 and 55, the court so finds. As to the other two, the evidence shows that plaintiffs had found purchasers ready, able, and willing to buy at the fixed prices, if the title were cleared, but that, because of Houston's repudiation and refusal, they could give no assurance that the title would be cleared, and that, after waiting a long time, during which the hope was held out to them that Houston would ultimately yield his claim, and give a clear title, the buyers became weary, and refused to go on with the purchases. The subsequent offer of Houston did not restore to plaintiffs these buyers, nor destroy the effect of his previous refusal to be bound. In the second place, Houston's offer of February 23d was not a retraction of his previous refusal to be bound. On the contrary, he thereby repeated and reaffirmed his intention not to be bound, and declared that he would thereafter perform the contract or not as he should choose. If plaintiffs had accepted this as a settlement of the dispute, they could no longer give prospective buyers a positive promise of a clear title, or make a positive sale at the fixed prices, but would be compelled to say that both the title and prices were dependent upon the pleasure of Houston, and were not fixed by the contract. The proposition of Houston was a clear repudiation of his obligation. The offered extension of time did not remove the objection. It was accompanied by a condition that Houston had no right to impose, namely, that he was not to be bound to clear the title, but would do so or not at his pleasure. The plaintiffs were not required to accept the offer of extension with that condition annexed. The performance on their part involved the expenditure of money in advertising, and of time and effort to find buyers, and it would be unjust to require them to do this in reliance upon the mere volition of Houston, instead of upon his obligation, to which they had a right. In Lake Shore, etc., Co. v. Richards, supra, there was a similar dispute as to the construction of a contract, and a refusal to perform as to a part only. With respect to this the court there said (page 99 of 152 Ill., page 783 of 38 N. E. [30 L. R. A. 33]): "Under the construction of the contract upon which it had acted, and was proposing to continue to act, it was under no obligation to deliver any cars to be transferred by plaintiff's firm, thus absolutely repudiating its contract liability to do so. True, it had not altogether ceased to deliver some cars to be thus transferred, but they were not delivered because of any contract liability to do it, but at their convenience and option." It was held that this did not remove the effect of the repudiation of the obligation.

As the case must be reversed for a new trial, it is proper to discuss the question of the measure of damages. The rule applicable to such breach of contract is stated generally in section 3300 of the Civil Code, whereby the damages allowed are said to be "the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all detriment proximately caused thereby, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom." There are a few cases, involving the future performance of a broken contract, wherein it has been held that the possibility that the plaintiff would have been able to perform if he had not been prevented was, from the nature of the undertaking, so remote and speculative that the contract price for full performance could not be allowed as damages. Contracts of agency to sell goods in unlimited quantities on commission have been held to be in this class. Union R. Co. v. Barton, 77 Ala. 148; Brigham v. Carlisle, 78 Ala. 248, 56 Am. Rep. 28; Washburn v. Hubbard, 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 11. These, however, are exceptions. The general rule is thus stated in 1 Sutherland on Damages (section 121): "The decided cases which relate to prospective damages warrant the statement that the injured party is entitled to recover compensation for such elements of damage as are likely to occur. The jury may proceed upon reasonable probabilities, and accept, as sufficiently proved, those results which, under like circumstances, generally come to pass. It is not, however, to be hence inferred that prospective damages may be recovered on every plausible anticipation, nor that no allowance is to be made for the uncertainties which affect all conclusions depending on future events. It is only intended that such uncertainties, where the damages are shown by evidence reasonably certain, do not exclude them wholly from consideration." As was stated in Danforth v. Tenn., etc., Co., 93 Ala. 614, 11 South. 60: "If profits formed a constituent element of the contract, their loss the natural and proximate result of the breach, and such as was reasonably in the contemplation of the contracting parties, and the amount can be estimated with reasonable certainty, they are recoverable."

There was uncontradicted evidence in the case at bar showing that it was extremely probable that plaintiffs could and would have sold all the lots within the time limited in the contract if the defendant had been willing to clear the title. It was amply sufficient to support a finding to that effect. The court below made no finding on the point, being evidently of the opinion that no finding was required, inasmuch as it concluded that there had been no prevention of performance. The question whether or not the contract could have been performed was a question of fact, to be determined from the evidence, in case the court had concluded that the defendant was liable.

In mitigation of damages the defendant would have been entitled to deduct from the contract price the amount which the plaintiffs would have had to expend in the future performance of the contract, and which they were excused from expending by reason of the defendant's breach and their election to treat the contract as terminated. 1 Sutherland on Damages, § 120, p. 340; U. S. v. Speed, 75 U. S. 84, 19 L. Ed. 449; Masterton v. Brooklyn, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 62, 42 Am. Dec. 38; McMaster v. State, 108 N. Y. 556, 15 N. E. 417. The defendant did not introduce any evidence in mitigation of damages.

We are of the opinion that the court erred in its conclusions of law, first, that the defendant did not prevent the performance by plaintiffs of the contract; and, second, that plaintiffs were not entitled to the agreed commission less the amounts previously paid thereon, and that the motion for new trial should have been granted.

The judgment and order are reversed.

BENTLEY v. HURLBURT.

HURLBURT v. BENTLEY.

(L. A. 2,074.)

Rehearing Denied July 30, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—SELLING LOTS—FILING AND RECORDING PLATS.

St. 1893, p. 96, c. 80, as amended by St. 1901, p. 288, c. 124, provides: That when land is laid out in lots for sale the proprietor thereof shall cause a plat of it to be made, and shall acknowledge it; that it shall then be presented to the body having control of streets, which shall indorse thereon what streets offered by it are accepted; that when so indorsed it shall be recorded in the office of the county recorder; that the plat shall not exceed a certain size, and shall be drawn in all details clearly and legibly, and if not so drawn may be refused; that when it is presented to be recorded the recorder shall paste it in a book of maps, and it shall then be deemed recorded; and that one selling or offering to sell a lot "before the plat is made out, acknowledged, filed," as herein provided, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held that, even if a sale of a lot before compliance with the statute would make the contract void, there was a substantial compliance with the statute, where the proprietor made out and acknowledged the plat, and, after taking it to the city engineer and receiving it back from him after he had referred it to the city council, handed it and the recording fee to the recorder, and the recorder did not refuse it, but requested him to take it to the county surveyor, and he did this, and such surveyor sent it to the city surveyor, with a note requiring some corrections, and, after receiving it back with the corrections, delivered it to the recorder for recording; the sale being made after the proprietor had delivered it to the recorder, but before it was returned by the county surveyor; and a "filing" by the proprietor being all that is required of him before making a sale.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—ACTION FOR INSTALLMENTS OF PRICE—DEFENSES—TITLE.

Whether plaintiff, in an action at law by a vendor to recover installments of payments on the contract of sale, not including the final installment, not yet due, has parted with his title to the land, is immaterial; he having performed all the conditions of the contract to be performed by him. Whether he is able to comply with his agreement will for the first time become important when the final installment shall fall due.

3. NEW TRIAL—DENIAL OF MOTION—WAIVER OF EXCESS.

Notwithstanding the judgment is excessive, it is proper to deny a new trial; plaintiff having already filed a waiver of the excess.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 324-329.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Two actions; one by W. George J. S. Bentley against Burt G. Hurlburt, the other by said Hurlburt against said Bentley. There was judgment for Bentley, new trial was denied, and Hurlburt appeals. Affirmed.

O. B. Carter, for appellant. Taner, Taft & Odell, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The two above-entitled actions were, by order of court, consolidated and tried together. Bentley v. Hurlburt is an action to recover installments claimed to be due on 25 contracts for the sale by Bentley to Hurlburt of lots of land in the city of Santa Monica, Los Angeles county. The complaint is in 25 counts or causes of action. The first alleges that on June 19, 1905, the plaintiff sold to defendant lot 4 in block 4 of the Fountain Glen tract, and the defendant agreed to pay therefor the sum of $350, as follows: Ten dollars at the date of the contract, $10 on the 19th day of July, 1905, and $10 on the 19th day of each month thereafter until the whole was paid, with interest on deferred payments. It is alleged that the defendant paid the installments for June, July, August, and September, 1905, but had failed and refused to pay any further amounts of principal or interest. The plaintiff alleges performance of all conditions of the contract to be performed by him to the time of commencing the action. Each of the other counts is in the same form, except that different lots of the same tract and different amounts of purchase price are set forth. The complaint was filed on February 24, 1906, and prayed judgment for $1,532.25, together with such further sums as might accrue under said contracts before entry of judgment. The answer denies that plaintiff sold to defendant any of the lots, denies that any contract was ever entered into between the parties for the sale of any of such lots, and denies that defendant paid to plaintiff any sums of money, pursuant to the terms of any contract for such sale. The answer also contains a counterclaim, in the form of a common count for money had and received by plaintiff to the defendant's use, in the amount of $1,090. The action of Hurlburt v. Bentley was in two counts, one setting forth the same cause of action as that contained in the counterclaim just mentioned, and the other a similar claim for $180, alleged to have been had and received by plaintiff to the use of Mrs. R. E. Kempton; said claim having been assigned to Hurlburt. Bentley's answer to this complaint consisted of denials of the material allegations, and a counterclaim for the sums involved in the first action. There was a further counterclaim for $510, alleged to be due from Mrs. R. E. Kempton to Bentley on contracts similar to those set up in the action of Bentley v. Hurlburt. The findings of the court were in favor of Bentley, and he recovered judgment for $2,648.10. From the judgment and an order denying a motion for new trial, Hurlburt appeals.

It is not disputed that the parties did, in fact, sign and deliver writings purporting to bind them to the terms of the contracts set up in the original complaint. Nor is there any question (except in a particular to be mentioned) regarding the amount paid on these contracts or the amounts due thereon at the time the judgment was entered. The appellant's position is that the contracts were totally void, and that, as a consequence, Bentley cannot enforce them, while, on the contrary, the amounts paid on such void contracts by the proposed vendee may be recovered by him. It is this right to recover payments already made that is asserted in the counterclaim in the first action and the complaint in the second.

The claim of invalidity is based on the provisions of an act entitled "An act requiring the recording of maps of cities, towns, additions to cities or towns, or subdivisions of lands into small lots or tracts for the purposes of sale, and providing a penalty for the selling or offering for sale any lots or tracts in cities, towns, additions to cities, towns, subdivisions, or additions thereto, before such maps are filed and recorded," approved March 9, 1893. St. 1893, p. 96, c. 80. The act reads as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever any city, town, or subdivision of land into lots, or any addition to any city, town, or such subdivision, shall be laid out into lots for the purposes of sale, the proprietor or proprietors thereof shall cause to be made out an accurate map or plat thereof, particularly setting forth and describing: First—all the parcels of ground within such city, town, addition, or subdivision, reserved for public purposes, by their boundaries, courses, and extent, whether they be intended for avenues, streets, lanes, alleys, courts, commons, or other public uses; and second—all lots intended for sale, either by number or letter, and their precise length and width.

"Sec. 2. Such map or plat shall be acknowledged by the proprietor, or if any incorporated company, by the chief officer thereof, before some officer authorized by law to take the acknowledgment of conveyances of real estate.

"Sec. 3. The map or plat so made, acknowledged, and certified, shall be filed in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the city, town, addition, or subdivision is situated.

"Sec. 4. Every person who sells, or offers for sale, any lot within any city, town, subdivision, or addition, before the map or plat thereof is made out, acknowledged, filed, as herein provided, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars, and not more than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed six months, or both such fine and imprisonment."

In 1901 section 3 of the act was amended to read as follows: "Sec. 3. The map or plat so made, acknowledged, and certified shall be presented to the governing body having control of the streets, roads, alleys, and highways in the territory shown on the map or plat, and said governing body shall indorse thereon which streets, roads, alleys, and highways, offered by said map or plat, they accept on behalf of the public, and thereupon such streets, roads, alleys, and highways, only as have been thus accepted, shall be and become dedicated to public use. When so indorsed, and not before, said map or plat shall be recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the city, town, addition, or subdivision is situated, in a book kept for that purpose. The map or plat shall be no more than thirty-six inches by thirty-six inches in size, and shall be drawn in all details clearly and legibly, and if not so drawn may be refused by the county recorder. When such map or plat is presented to be recorded the county recorder shall paste the same securely in a book of maps, and it shall then be deemed to have been recorded under the provisions of this act." St. 1901, p. 288, c. 124.

The contention of the appellant is that the sale of the lots in question was made in advance of the filing or recording of a map or plat thereof, and that, as such sale was an act to which the law affixed a penalty, it was prohibited and void, and could not be the basis of an action to recover money agreed to be paid under the contract of sale. That the imposition by statute of a penalty implies a prohibition of the act to which the penalty is attached, and that no recovery can be had on a contract made in violation of statutory prohibition, is doubtless the general rule. Civ. Code, § 1667; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 127, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31, and cases cited. The rule is, however, not without exceptions. In Harris v. Runnels, 12 How. (U. S.) 79, 13 L. Ed. 901, the Supreme Court of the United States said: "Before the rule can be applied in any case of a statute prohibiting or enjoining things to be done, with a prohibition and a penalty, or a penalty only for doing a thing which it forbids, the statute must be examined as a whole, to find out whether the makers of it meant that a contract in contravention of it should be void, or that it was not to be so." While the statute here under consideration has not been construed by this court, statutes substantially similar have been brought for interpretation before the courts of other states. In a majority of the cases it has been held that a contract of sale made in violation of such a statute was not void, and that the vendor could recover the purchase price in an action on the contract. Strong v. Darling, 9 Ohio, 201; Bemis v. Becker, 1 Kan. 226; Pangborn v. Westlake, 36 Iowa, 546. The contrary was decided in Downing v. Ringer, 7 Mo. 585.

It will not be necessary for us to choose between these opposing views, for the reason that we are satisfied that the court below was justified by the evidence in concluding that Bentley had substantially complied with the statute. The facts, as testified to by respondent's witnesses, were these: A map of the Fountain Glen tract, in which the lots sold were situated, was acknowledged by Bentley on the 27th or the 29th of May, 1905. He took the map to the city engineer, who, after referring it to the city council, returned it to Bentley on June 6th. On June 7th or 8th Bentley went to the office of the county recorder and handed the map and 50 cents to the recorder. The latter looked at the map and told Bentley to take it to the county surveyor's office and leave the 50 cents. Bentley did so. The county surveyor sent the map to the city surveyor of Santa Monica, with a note requiring some corrections. These were made, and the map returned to the county surveyor, who, on July 3, 1905, delivered it to the recorder to be recorded. The sale of the lots in question was made on June 19th, after Bentley had tendered the map, with the fee for recording, to the recorder, but before the map, as corrected, had been returned to the recorder's office. As above stated, we think that these facts showed a compliance, on Bentley's part, with the provisions of the law. Section 3 of the act, as originally enacted, required merely that the map be "filed" in the recorder's office. Under the amended section 3 it must be "recorded," and it is provided that it shall be deemed to be recorded when it has been, by the recorder, pasted securely in book of maps. Section 4 of the act, the section imposing the penalty, does not use the word "recorded." It defines as a misdemeanor the selling or offering for sale of lots "before the map or plat thereof is made out, acknowledged, filed." Under the original act the proprietor of the land had unquestionably done all that was required as a prerequisite to selling lots when he had tendered a proper map, together with the legal fee, to the recorder for filing. The amendment to section 3, requiring a certain method of recording, did not enlarge the terms of section 4 which made it a misdemeanor to sell, or offer for sale, before the map was "filed." The new section 3 refers to two acts—the presentation of the map for recording, and the pasting in a book. The former, which is to be performed by the party who seeks to have the map recorded, may well be called a "filing." The latter, which is the act of the recorder, is by the act itself defined as a recording. We think the reasonable construction of the act, as amended, is that it prohibits the sale or offering for sale of certain classes of lots before a map, made, acknowledged, certified, and indorsed as specified in the law, shall have been presented to the recorder to be recorded. The "proprietor" of the land has then done all that the law imposes upon him, and a delay on the part of the recorder in performing the ministerial duty of pasting the map in a book will not affect the right of the owner to make a sale, or render such sale criminal. Here the owner, Bentley, had so presented the map to be recorded. The recorder did not refuse it, as, under section 3, he was authorized to do if the map was not drawn "clearly and legibly," or was not of the required size. What he did was to request Bentley to take the map to the county surveyor. The law did not authorize him to make an approval by the county surveyor a condition precedent to the receiving of the map. If it was "not more than 36 inches by 36 inches in size" and was "drawn in all details clearly and legibly," it was the recorder's duty to receive and record it. Bentley, in taking the map to the surveyor, did not withdraw it, and the subsequent recording must be regarded as having been made pursuant to the original presentation of the map on June 7th or 8th. The sale of the lots on June 19th was therefore proper, and the statute affords to Hurlburt no ground for refusing to pay the amounts which he agreed to pay, or for the return of installments paid under the contract.

It is argued by appellant that there can be no recovery on the contract for the reason that there was evidence that Bentley had parted with his title to the land. This evidence was immaterial. The action is one at law to recover money agreed to be paid by defendant. The plaintiff alleges, and there is no denial, that he has performed all the conditions of the contract to be performed by him. Hurlburt was not entitled to a conveyance until payment of the entire purchase price. When the final installment shall fall due, it will for the first time become important to ascertain whether the vendor is able to comply with his agreement to convey a good title.

The judgment, as entered, included $460.95, the amount due on contracts between Bentley and Mrs. Kempton. It is conceded that this sum could not be recovered in an action against Hurlburt. In the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial it is recited that the judgment is excessive in the sum of $460.95 and that Bentley has filed a written waiver of said amount. The denial of the motion follows these recitals. This, it is claimed, did not obviate the error in the original judgment. It has, however, long been settled in this state that on a motion for new trial the court may, if the judgment be excessive, make a conditional order denying the motion if the prevailing party will consent to remit the excess and granting it in the absence of such consent. Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381; Chapin v. Bourne, 8 Cal. 294; Gillespie v. Jones, 47 Cal. 259; Clanton v. Coward, 67 Cal. 373, 7 Pac. 787; Thomas v. Gates, 126 Cal. 1, 58 Pac. 315. If, upon such conditional order being made, the consent to the reduction be filed, the usual practice has been to enter an absolute order denying the motion. This is, in effect, what happened in the present case. The fact that the plaintiff's consent to remit preceded the making of any order on the motion for new trial made it unnecessary for the court to make an order conditional in form, giving the plaintiff a certain time within which to file his consent to the reduction. The consent having already been filed, the court could properly act upon such consent and deny the motion at once.

The transcript contains copies of certain affidavits which are claimed by appellant to show newly discovered evidence, on which a new trial should have been granted. These affidavits are not, however, authenticated by being incorporated in a bill of exceptions (rule 29 of this court [78 Pac. xii]) or otherwise, and they cannot therefore be considered on this appeal. Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 234; Esert v. Glock, 137 Cal. 533.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

McCOWEN et al. v. PEW et al. (S. F. 4,670.)

(Supreme Court of California. June 22, 1908.

1. PLEADING—CONSTRUCTION.

Plaintiffs sued to cancel an option to purchase land, and defendants filed a cross-complaint for specific performance of the agreement to convey. Plaintiffs claimed that the contract was void as against public policy. Held that, in determining whether the cross-complaint shows the contract to be void, the other pleadings must be considered, although the point of invalidity was based on the allegations of the cross-complaint alone.

2. CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—PUBLIC POLICY—ANNULMENT OF CONTRACT.

Though an agreement involved in a suit is fair between the parties, whenever or wherever it appears in the cause that the consideration and inducement for the agreement were contrary to public policy, the court must annul the agreement, though no objection to its enforcement be raised by either party.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 681–722.]

3. RAILROADS—CONSTRUCTION—CONTRACTS—VALIDITY.

Defendants, to secure freight for a railroad to be built by them, took options upon timber lands in the locality through which the line might be built and such freight received, and the owners of the lands, to induce the building of the road over a particular one of four contemplated routes, gave the options at prices representing the full value of the land. Held, that the contract was not void as against public policy.

4. SAME.

Plaintiffs sued to cancel an option to purchase timber lands. By cross-complaint defendants asked specific performance of the contract, alleging that the option was taken to obtain freight for a railroad to be built by them, and that it was given at a price representing the full value of the land, to induce the building of the road over a particular one of four contemplated routes. Held, on objection that the cross-complaint did not state a cause of action or defense based on a claim that the contract was void as against public policy, that it must be presumed, in the absence of allegations in the cross-complaint to the contrary, that defendants intended to form a railroad corporation, and that the options were for the benefit of the corporation, and that any inducements operating upon the granting of such options must be taken to have been extended to the contemplated railroad itself.

5. SAME—CONTRACTS FOR LOCATION OF STATIONS, ETC.

An agreement by a railroad company with an individual precluding itself from locating stations, etc., on its road at any other than particular localities, etc., is void, as violating the company's duty to the public to locate and maintain its stations, etc., where the public necessities demand their establishment.

6. SAME.

An agreement of an individual or officer or agent of a railroad company, under an assumption of influence with the company, for a consideration, to secure from the company the location of stations, etc., in a particular locality, or to secure the building of its road by a particular route, is void, as constituting a species of bribery.

7. SAME.

A railway company, in the absence of a law requiring it to select a particular route, having discretion to select the route, may, for a consideration moving to itself and as an inducement thereto, determine as between contesting localities in favor of one as against the others.

8. CONTRACTS—VALIDITY—PUBLIC POLICY.

A contract should not be declared against public policy, unless it contravenes some public statute, or is against good morals, or tends to interfere with the public welfare or safety.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by George McCowen and another against J. W. Pew and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying a new trial, defendant Pew appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Jesse W. Lilienthal and J. E. Pemberton, for appellant. McNab & Hirsch and D. M. Delmas, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This case was here before (McCowen v. Pew, 147 Cal. 299, 81 Pac. 958), and was remanded for a new trial because an incorrect rule of law was applied by the trial court for the measurement of damages.

The action was brought in the superior court of Mendocino county. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs were the owners of about 1,160 acres of land in said county, and on October 16, 1899, entered into an agreement with the defendant J. W. Pew (which agreement is set forth in the complaint), whereby an option was given to the latter to dispose of said property to others, or to purchase said property himself, within one year from the date of the option, at the price of $15 per acre; that said Pew had not exercised his right under the option within the year given, but still asserted and claimed some rights thereunder. The prayer was for a decree adjudging the agreement to be void and as of no validity and quieting the title of plaintiffs to the property.

The defendant Pew filed an answer; also, an amended cross-complaint, which was answered by plaintiff. In the amended cross-complaint he alleged the making of the agreement, as set forth in the complaint, granting to him an exclusive option for 12 months to acquire said property from plaintiffs, and then proceeds to further allege: "(4) That in the making of said agreement this defendant was not acting in his own interest and behalf, but for others associated with him, who were to construct the railroad herein-after mentioned, and as to the interest of said persons, although made and taken solely in the name of this defendant, as party of the second part. (5) That at the time said agreement and contract was made, this defendant, and the persons so associated with him, were contemplating and preparing for the building of a railroad from some point on the line of the railway of the San Francisco & North Pacific Railway Company into some portion of Mendocino county, in which timber and wood could be procured in large quantities. That at said time four different locations (or routes) for said proposed railroad were under consideration by them, and it had been determined by them to so build said railroad at some one of the said contemplated locations only, but it had not been decided at which one. That one of the said contemplated locations for said proposed railroad was from Ukiah, northerly to Willits in said county. That the building of said railroad at last-mentioned location would greatly increase the value of the lands hereinbefore described by making the timber thereon accessible to a market, but the building thereof at any one of the other proposed and contemplated locations would not increase the value of these lands. That the selection of a route or location depended largely upon securing options upon timber lands along the line of the proposed railway. That all these facts were well known at the time to plaintiffs, and that the inducements and consideration moving the plaintiffs, and causing them to enter into said contract or agreement, was the encouragement and inducement of the building of said railroad from Ukiah to Willits in preference over said other routes. (6) That thereupon and thereafter this defendant, and the persons so associated with him, secured the selection of said route and location for said railroad from Ukiah to Willits in preference to said other routes and locations, and said railroad was thereupon surveyed and laid out and is now in process of construction and being rapidly built and pushed toward completion, and will be built from Ukiah to Willits within a short time; and that the consideration and inducement causing preference to be given to said location thereof was the option given said contract hereinbefore set forth, giving this defendant the privilege of purchasing said land, and similar options in similar contracts regarding other lands adjacent thereto and in that portion of the county, and said options were all taken and said contracts all entered into solely for the purpose of securing freight for said railroad, and the added valuation that would be given to said lands by the construction of the railroad in excess of the price set in said contracts respectively." Then follows allegations in the amended cross-complaint addressed to the subject of damages with which we are not concerned on this appeal, followed by a prayer for a specific performance of the agreement to convey.

The pleadings thus stood when the cause came on again for trial, after being remanded, as heretofore stated, and the trial court directed that the issues raised by the cross-complaint and answer be first tried. When the cross-complainant proceeded to put in his evidence in support thereof, counsel for plaintiffs objected to the introduction of any evidence in support of it on the ground that the cross-complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action or defense to the action of plaintiffs. The court sustained the objection, dismissed the cross-complaint, and entered judgment in favor of plaintiffs quieting their title as prayed for in their complaint. From this judgment and an order denying their motion for a new trial the cross-complainant Pew appeals, and the only question necessary for consideration is the refusal of the trial court to permit the introduction of any evidence by appellant in support of his cross-complaint.

While the particular ground upon which the trial court based its ruling in that respect is not disclosed by the general objection of respondents interposed upon the offer of appellant on the trial, or from the ruling of the court upon it, it, however, appears from the exhaustive discussion in the briefs on both sides here that the special point made was that from the allegations of the cross-complaint it appeared that the contract sought under that pleading to be specifically enforced was contrary to public policy and void, and hence specific performance of it could not be decreed. The allegations of the cross-complaint upon which this contention was based are those which we have heretofore specially quoted, and particularly those alleging that at the time the agreement granting an option was entered into several routes from some point on the line of the San Francisco & North Pacific Railroad Company into some portion of Mendocino county were in view, including one from Ukiah to Willits; that the inducements and consideration moving from plaintiffs and causing them to enter into said agreement granting an option to cross-complainant was the encouragement and inducement of the building of the said railroad between the last-mentioned points in preference over said other routes; that, having procured the option from plaintiffs, defendant and his associates secured the selection of the route of the railroad from Ukiah to Willits in preference to other locations; and that the consideration and inducement causing preference to be given to said location was the option given in said contract heretofore set forth granting the appellant the privilege of purchasing said land, together with similar options and similar contracts regarding other lands adjacent thereto and in that portion of the county of Mendocino.

To agreements made under such circumstances and upon such considerations and inducements as these allegations show the agreement relative to this option to have been made, it is insisted by respondents that the rule must be applied: That railroad companies are quasi public corporations, in the location of whose lines the public has an interest; that it is the paramount duty of such companies to establish their lines with routes through localities where the wants and necessities of the public shall be best subserved; that the policy of the law is that such companies shall be left to a free and unlimited exercise of their discretion in locating such lines in the interest of public necessities and conveniences; that contracts between a landowner and a company for the establishment of the line of road to subserve and promote the private and pecuniary advantages of those entering into them are in contravention of such policy and void, because the tendency of all such contracts is to sacrifice the public interest to the selfish private advantage of the contracting parties. We make no question about the rule as contended for by respondents, but we are satisfied, taking the allegations of the cross-complaint with the other pleadings in the case, which must be considered for that purpose (although it was on the allegations of the cross-complaint alone that the point of invalidity was based), that it does not appear therefrom that in the granting of the option any restriction or limitation was imposed thereby on Pew and his associates, who contemplated building the railroad, as to the selection of a route, or that the agreement was entered into for the private advantages of the contracting parties, or in disregard of the public interests. As far as the contracting parties are concerned, while not particularly material to a consideration of the proposition involved, it may be said that it was alleged in the cross-complaint that the price of $15 an acre for the land in question "was reasonably fair and just," and this is admitted in the answer to the cross-complaint to be true. As to the allegations concerning the consideration and inducement to the granting of the option, it is quite apparent that they were made by the cross-complainant as a foundation for a claim for special damages for the cutting of the timber during the life of the option, and for no other purpose (McCowen v. Pew, supra), while the answer to the cross-complaint denies that any such consideration entered at all. But while we mention these matters it must, of course, be conceded that the validity of the contract is not to be determined from their consideration. Even if, as between the parties, this contract was fair, and the allegations of the cross-complaint appeared to have been made for a purpose aside from raising any question as to the validity of the consideration for it, yet, for whatever purpose said allegations were made, if it appears therefrom that the consideration and inducement for the agreement were such as are contrary to public morality and public policy, it is the duty of the court to annul the contract for that reason "whenever and wherever it might appear in the cause," even though no objection to its enforcement on that ground was raised by either party to it. Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735; Morrill v. Nightingale, 93 Cal. 452, 28 Pac. 1068, 27 Am. St. Rep. 207; Oscanyan v. Arms Co., 103 U. S. 267, 26 L. Ed. 539.

Now to a consideration of the allegations of the cross-complaint, to determine whether in the making of the agreement for the option any rule of public policy was infringed: Preliminary to a consideration of these allegations, it is to be observed, however, that the agreement itself granting the option (the terms of which we have not heretofore particularly referred to) provides for an option in favor of respondent Pew to purchase the 1,160 acres of timber land at $15 an acre, and recites that the owners (McCowens) "desired to dispose of same and to have the assistance of said party of the second part (Pew) in so doing without cost to the parties of the first part," and declares the consideration for the option to be "for value received, * * * and to induce said party of the second part to undertake the disposition of said land." On the part of Pew, he stipulated "to use his best endeavors to dispose of said property, either by acquiring same or selling same to others," without cost to the McCowens. These are the only provisions of the contract of option itself. There is nothing therein relative to any conditions or stipulations or restrictions as to any route for a contemplated railroad, nor any mention made of a railroad at all. Neither when we come to an examination of the allegations of the cross-complaint do we find anything from which it appears that any agreement was made that in consideration of the granting of the option the selection of any particular route was provided for. As we understand and construe these allegations, it appears therefrom: That Pew and his associates contemplated constructing a railroad through some portion of Mendocino county; that various routes were in contemplation, but no particular one had been decided on when the option in question was obtained; that, with a knowledge that said road was to be built on some route, the option was given by the McCowens as an inducement and encouragement towards the building of the railroad over a route from Ukiah to Willits; that defendant Pew and his associates subsequently secured the selection of said railroad route between these points in preference to other routes and locations; that the option so given, together with similar options and similar contracts regarding other lands adjacent thereto, was the consideration and inducement causing preference to the building of the route between Ukiah and Willits, and the said options were all taken, and said contract entered into, solely for the purpose of securing freight for said railroad and the added valuation which would be given to said lands in excess of the price stated in said contract by the construction of said road.

It will be observed that there is nowhere in these allegations any statement that Pew and his associates agreed to select any particular route to the exclusion of any other route, nor, in fact, as far as said allegations are concerned, does it appear therefrom that they undertook to do anything. Neither is it alleged that the route which was selected was materially, or at all, injurious to the public interests, or that any other route would have better subserved any public want or necessity. All that appears is: That Pew and his associates, for the purpose of securing freight for the railroad they contemplated building, took options upon timber lands in the locality through which the line of said road might be built and such freight received; that certain owners of land, as an inducement to the building of the railroad over one of the four contemplated routes, gave an option upon their lands at a price specified in the option representing the full value of the land; and that the only advantage to be secured to the builders of the road (as full value for the land was to be paid) was the obtaining of freight to be carried. A contract made under these circumstances and upon the consideration and inducement disclosed by the cross-complaint is, we are satisfied, when tested by the decisions, in violation of no rule of public policy. In the absence of anything to the contrary in the allegations of the cross-complaint, it must be taken that Pew and his associates were persons contemplating the formation of a railroad corporation, and that the options obtained by Pew were for the benefit of such corporation, and that any inducements operating upon the granting of such options must be taken to have been extended to the contemplated railroad itself.

Contracts or agreements between railroad companies and individuals, or between individuals and officers of the company, where one of the particular parties has contracted to secure certain advantages from railroad corporations as to the location of routes of road between designated points, and for the establishment of depots and stations in certain localities, have in numerous cases been before the courts for determination as to their validity. These agreements that we have referred to resolve themselves into three classes, and the rules to be extracted from the decisions dealing with them are, first, that in all cases where a railroad company agrees with an individual to preclude itself from establishing or locating depots or stations on its road at any other than certain localities, or within certain prescribed limits, such agreements are void. Contracts of this kind are plainly in violation of a clear duty owed by the railroad company to the public, as public agents, to locate their depots and stations where the public wants and necessities demand their establishment, and to change them and provide others as future public necessities may require. Any attempted limitations or restrictions on the part of the railroad company as to the exercise of such public duty is subversive of the public interests and void. Williamson v. Railroad, 53 Iowa, 126, 4 N. W. 870, 36 Am. Rep. 206; Railroad Company v. Mathers, 104 Ill. 257; Railroad Company v. Ryan, 11 Kan. 602, 15 Am. Rep. 357; McClure v. Railroad Company, 9 Kan. 373. The second class relates to agreements where some individual or officer or agent of the railroad company, under an assumption of influence with that corporation, has agreed for a consideration to secure from the corporation the location of stations or depots in a particular locality, or to secure the building of its road by a particular route. Such contracts are uniformly held to be void. They constitute a species of bribery of the officers of the company and are necessarily corrupt in their tendencies as influencing the officers of the corporation for mercenary considerations and for their private emolument to forego the duties they owe to public interests to locate such public conveniences where public necessities require that they should be established. Some of the cases declaring the invalidity of this class of agreements are: Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 472; Bester v. Wathen, 60 Ill. 138; Holladay v. Patterson, 5 Or. 177; and others to which we shall later more particularly refer. The last class of cases are those involving contracts such as the one under consideration here, where the consideration is to move directly from the individual to the railroad company as an inducement to the construction of its lines between certain points or analogous cases involving contracts providing for the establishment of depots or stations at particular points on the railroad, but where there is no provision or stipulation in the agreement that the route selected or depot or station to be established is to be located or established to the exclusion of other routes and locations.

It is to be observed that there is no law which requires a railroad corporation to select any particular route for the construction of a contemplated road. It is to be assumed that the corporation will build through that particular territory where the public necessities require its construction and where its material benefit will be best advanced; but there is no law which requires it to do so. In this state any three persons may incorporate to construct a railroad and may select such route as they choose to build over, notwithstanding a different route might be more to the public interest. In the absence of any law requiring a particular route to be selected, it is necessarily left to the judgment of the corporation to do the selecting, and vested with such discretion, in making a selection between different routes, we do not understand the rule to be that the company, for a consideration moving directly to itself and as an inducement thereto, may not determine as between contesting localities in favor of one locality as against the others, or that such an agreement is per se illegal and void. Necessarily, the position of respondents is that the agreement in question here is per se void. This is what they do claim, and could not claim otherwise, because there is nothing in the allegations of the cross-complaint that the route selected was not the most advantageous to public interests. They insist, however, that it was not necessary for it to so appear; that any contract whereby a railroad is induced to make a particular selection in consideration thereof is of itself invalid. If this position were correct, it would naturally and logically follow that every contract whereby property was to be conveyed or money contributed by another as an inducement to the building of a railroad over a particular route, whether it appeared that the public interest would be affected or not, would be void, and it would further follow that no authorities could be found sustaining such a contract. To the contrary, however, the great weight of authority and the prevailing doctrine is that such agreements of themselves are not void; that they do not contravene any rule of public policy and are enforceable.

Now, as to the authorities sustaining such contracts and the cases upon which respondents rely for their invalidity, and first as to the authorities supporting this contract: In Greenhood on Public Policy, pp. 321, 322, it is said: "The manner in which the majority of the railroads of the country have been built is, in all probability, familiar to every one. Men in subscribing to railroads do so out of self-interest. The conditions imposed are made with reference to the enhancement of the value of their own property, or to their personal convenience. * * * It cannot be said that a subscription to a railroad corporation, conditioned on the location of its route in a particular section or direction, has any tendency to influence the corporation to disregard the public convenience, for it goes to a place to obtain traffic, and no public policy requires it to select the dearest route it may find. If it does prejudice the public, it is a matter of easy proof, and, if such proof can be furnished, any contract of subscription will fall; but, in the absence of such proof, prima facie any subscription to a railroad corporation conditional upon its building its line in a particular route or through a particular town or country is val-

ld. The contrary view has been sustained by a small but respectable minority. The majority hold that, having fulfilled the condition, the corporations have the right to insist upon the agreement." In Piper v. Choctaw Northern Townsite & Improvement Co., 16 Okl. 436, 85 Pac. 965, it is said: "This case squarely presents the proposition as to whether or not a railroad company, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of its line of road, may accept and enforce an obligation payable to it, conditioned upon the construction of its line of road to a given point within a given time, and the establishment and maintenance of a depot there. There are many respectable authorities which affirm this proposition, and in the judgment of this court it is nearer in consonance with sound reasoning in this case to hold that, under the facts presented, the contract is not void, and therefore is enforceable. If the law were otherwise, it would be equivalent to a declaration that a community desiring the advantages of a line of railway, where chartered privileges permit its construction, would be, under the law, prevented and prohibited from inducing such construction by aiding the same. A railroad company is only a quasi public corporation, and as such it must not only take into consideration the public welfare, but the private welfare of its stockholders as well, in the location and construction of its line of road. A donation to its assets which enables it to build a contemplated line immediately, and a consideration in part of its immediate construction, or which enables it to build its line upon a route that it might not otherwise be able to build, could not be held to be void upon the ground of public policy, and in this respect it must be held to be the privilege of a railroad company, in determining its duty towards the public and its shareholders, to determine what line and between what points its line shall be constructed." In Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Ralston, 41 Ohio St. 587, the court declares on this same point: "That public policy forbids the enforcement of contracts to induce the location of railroad lines at particular places in disregard of the rights of stockholders and the public is very true. Contracts for location, providing private emolument for the officials who sanction them, are, of course, void, and, even if the stipulated location turn out to be the best that could have been made, and entail no detriment to stockholders or the public, yet such contracts are held in well-considered cases, and, we think, correctly, to be against public policy as a dangerous exercise of official power for private gain. In the case at bar these objectionable features are not present. The stipulated compensation was for the company alone, and it may well be that it was a matter of indifference to the stockholders and public whether the route was through Defiance or not. The propriety of the location in respect to particular points when the charter is silent is of necessity left to the managing officers of the company, and we fail to see any illegality or immorality in their stipulating for the benefit of the company in awarding the advantages of location as between contesting localities. The general doctrine that such an agreement is not void per se as against public policy is laid down in the leading case of Cumberland Valley R. R. Co. v. Baab, 9 Watts (Pa.) 458, 36 Am. Dec. 132, and has been frequently recognized in analogous cases in our Supreme Court, notably in the decisions sustaining contracts to take stock conditioned on a particular location." In 23 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 688, the same general doctrine is announced that "contracts for the location of railroad lines at particular places are not void per se as against public policy, but they are illegal where calculated to prejudice the interest of the public or of the shareholders of the road, or where they provide for private emoluments to the officers of the road who are entrusted with the duty of choosing its location." These citations sufficiently declare the prevailing doctrine which finds support in numerous authorities, among others: Cumberland R. Co. v. Baab, 9 Watts (Pa.) 458, 36 Am. Dec. 132; McClure v. Missouri River, etc., R. Co., 9 Kan. 373; Workman v. Campbell, 46 Mo. 305; Telford v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 172 Ill. 559, 50 N. E. 105; Louisville, etc., Co. v. Sumner, 106 Ind. 55, 5 N. E. 404, 55 Am. Rep. 719; Racine Bank v. Ayres, 12 Wis. 512; Berryman v. Cincinnati Southern R. R. Co., 77 Ky. 755; Texas & St. Louis R. R. Co. v. Robards, 60 Tex. 545, 48 Am. Rep. 268; Harris v. Roberts, 12 Neb. 631, 12 N. W. 89; First Nat. Bank of Cedar Rapids v. Hendrie, 49 Iowa, 402, 31 Am. Rep. 153; Supervisors v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co., 121 Mass. 460; Lyman v. Sub. R. Co., 190 Ill. 320, 60 N. E. 515, 52 L. R. A. 645; 3 Elliott on R. R. (3d Ed.) §§ 121-386; Missouri Pac. R. R. Co. v. Tygard, 84 Mo. 263, 54 Am. Rep. 97. Some of these authorities cited relate to the validity of contracts providing for the transfer of property, or the contribution of money, to railroads as a consideration or inducement to the building of their line of road over certain routes or between designated points. Others relate to similar contracts inducing the establishment of depots or stations in particular localities. In principle there can be no distinction between such contracts as to the objects sought, whether they pertain to lines of road or the location of depots or stations. The proposition in all these cases decided is that, in the absence of any agreement that the route selected, or the stations located, shall be to the exclusion of other routes or stations, they are not contrary to public policy, and that the rule applies equally to both classes of contracts.

Now, to examine the authorities cited by counsel for respondents in support of their contention as to the invalidity of the contract—and we shall refer only to those from which they have quoted excerpts in their briefs: We make no question as to the correctness of the principles announced in almost all those cases; but, in our judgment, the facts in each case to which they were applied were radically different from those in the case at bar. Recurring to these cases: In Reed v. Johnson, 27 Wash. 42, 67 Pac. 381, 57 L. R. A. 404, the evidence disclosed that certain officers of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in consideration that they should receive a portion of the proceeds of plaintiff's land, agreed to so locate the line of said road that it would run through a certain section of land, and further agreed to locate a depot within the section; that the company had contemplated building its line by another route, but by reason of the inducement above stated the officers having in charge the location of the line and depots determined to change the route and locate both the line and depot upon said land. In the next case relied on (Bestor v. Wathen, 60 Ill. 138), the railroad company made a contract with a certain construction company to build its road. While building, the construction company, the president of the railroad company, one of its directors, and its construction agent entered into a contract with the owner of 160 acres of land, situated where the road then in process of construction was expected to cross the Illinois Central Railroad, by the terms of which the owners agreed to sell the first-named parties an interest in the land. The only consideration was that the so-called purchasers should "aid, assist, and help in building the road upon said land." The court refused to enforce either of these contracts. In both these cases the contracts were between an individual and certain officers of the railroad company who were taking advantage of their position as agents of the railroad company to contract for their individual benefit. It is apparent from the opinions in both these cases that the railroad company had nothing to do with these contracts and had no interest in them; that they were made for the private and personal benefit of certain officers of the company in the one case, and certain officers and the contracting company in the other. They were without the knowledge of the company and in violation of the duties of the contracting parties to them. It is obvious that the court did not there have under consideration contracts made with the railroad company itself or for its benefit, but those made by certain of its agents and officers with outsiders, looking to the personal advantages of said officials alone. Such contracts were clearly a fraud upon the corporation and its stockholders whom the officers and agents represented. These contracts fell within the second class of cases, to which we have heretofore referred, and which are universally condemned as fraudulent upon the rights of the corporation and void.

In Woodstock Iron Co. v. Extension Co.,

129 U. S. 643, 32 L. Ed. 819, a railroad company contracted with another company of like nature to construct a railroad by the nearest and cheapest route from Atlanta to Columbus for a consideration of $20,000 a mile. One of the directors of the extension company and also a director in the railroad company negotiated on behalf of the extension company a contract with an iron company to deflect the road at a certain point lengthening it about five miles, for which the iron company agreed to give a right of way through its property and convey certain tracts of land and pay certain sums of money. The railroad company had no knowledge of the contract, and the court held the contract void as immoral in its conception and corrupting in its tendency; that it was nothing less than a bribe offered to the employé to disregard his contract with his employer. Of course, such a contract would be indefensible, but the contract at bar is in no manner similar to it. Fuller v. Dame, 18 Pick (Mass.) 472, is also cited as supporting the contention of respondents; but there the company, however, had no knowledge of the contract or any interest in it. Its existence was not even known to it or its officers. All that was held in that case was that a contract made by a stockholder of a company with a property owner to use his influence with the company for the establishment of a depot in a particular locality was a fraud upon the other stockholders and upon the company and void as against public policy. It will be observed that this case also falls within the second class of cases we have heretofore mentioned.

A case also relied on is Enid Right of Way & Township Co. v. Lile, 15 Okl. 382, 82 Pac. 811. This case, if its apparent force was not destroyed by the language used in a subsequent decision by the same court, tends more than any other cited by respondents, to sustain their contention. In the Enid Right of Way Case the affirmation of the judgment was by an equally divided court. An exhaustive dissenting opinion was filed, in which an analysis of all the cases supporting the prevailing opinion was made, and they were differentiated from the case under consideration by the court, and the conclusion reached by the judges dissenting upon a review of all the authorities bearing on the question, that the weight of authority was in favor of the validity of the contract there in question, but which the prevailing opinion discountenanced as contrary to public policy. In that case the action was upon a promissory note given by defendant Lile to the plaintiff, which was stipulated to be paid when the Denver, Enid & Gulf Railroad was completed to a point where the location of a depot on certain land was to be made. The note was held void as contrary to public policy. It is unnecessary to discuss the grounds upon which the court reached this conclusion, because, while the apparent effect of this decision is in favor of the position of respondents, this same court in a subsequent decision appears to have limited its application to contracts between third parties looking to the exercise by them of influence with the railroad company to do something which was against public policy, because, in Piper v. Choctaw Northern Township & Imp. Co., supra, which we have heretofore quoted from, it is expressly held, in conformity to the prevailing doctrine, that a subscription moving directly to the railroad company to encourage the building of its railroad at a particular place contravened no rule of public policy and was enforceable. In that opinion the Enid Case, as also McGuffin v. Coyle, 16 Okl. 648, 85 Pac. 954, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524, decided by the same court (Oklahoma), and relied on also by respondents, are specially referred to and held not to militate against the general rule.

We have referred, we think, to all the cases quoted from by respondents in support of their position, and are satisfied that none of them have any application in support of the point they make. While all these cases reviewed had relation to contracts concerning the establishment of depots or stations, the principle to be applied in determining their validity is no different from that which is to be applied with reference to contracts regarding the construction of a road between given points. This, of course, is conceded by counsel in citing them. It will be observed further, that in all the cases reviewed the contracts in question were declared invalid because agents or officers of the companies had taken advantage of their position to further their private interests and secure personal emoluments to the disadvantage of the companies they represented. The contracts were not declared invalid because they related to the location of depots or stations (speaking now of the special matters involved in the contracts in those cases) at particular localities, but because the persons who made them had been guilty of fraud and corrupt conduct toward their principals (the corporations). None of the cases involved a contract between an individual and the company itself, or those contemplating the construction of the road, providing for the payment of money or property as an inducement to its construction over a particular route, the making of which, under the prevailing doctrine as we have shown, countervails no rule of public policy.

The error of the trial court was in holding, as it necessarily did, that per se this contract was void as against such policy. A contract should not be declared in contravention of public policy unless it is apparent that it contravenes some public statute, or is against good morals, or that its tendency is to interfere with the public welfare or safety. Nothing of this character appears from the allegations of the cross-complaint. Contracts for the conveyance of property, or the payment of money, in consideration of the building of a railroad within a given time and between certain points, as our court (Spire v. Urbahn, 124 Cal. 110, 56 Pac. 794) says, have become familiar as stimulants to the construction of such railroads and other public works. It is familiar history that the great railroads of the West have been largely aided in their construction by contributions and donations made in inducement to the selection of certain routes. States, counties, and cities have granted subsidies to them to that end, and the national government in the building of the first trans-continental railroads donated vast tracts of land as inducements to the building of such roads over the continent and between particular points. Our statute (Civ. Code, § 465) provides for the acquirement by a railroad company of grants and donations of real and other property which may be made to aid and encourage the construction, maintenance, and accommodation of such railroad. We refer to these matters as indicating the public policy which supports contracts which are made in inducement to the building of railroads, and that no contract which simply provides for the transfer of property or the payment of money, or confers upon the company the right to acquire either as an inducement to build its road between certain points, should for that reason alone be held in contravention of any public policy.

The most that has been held by any of the cases—and those supporting the prevailing doctrine appear to so hold—is that it may be interposed as a defense to the enforcement of such contracts that they were made in disregard of public convenience and in violation of the clear wants and necessities of the people. Of course, in the present case no such showing is made. The trial court based its conclusion that the contract for the option was invalid from the allegations of the cross-complaint, which does not pretend to disclose anywhere that any public convenience or necessity was subverted by the contract. The court held, as a matter of law, that a contract giving an option to purchase certain lands as an inducement to the building of a line of railroad between certain points was void upon its face, or void per se. The courts, however, as we have seen, declare expressly to the contrary, and that such a contract, in the absence of any showing that public interest has suffered in its making, is valid and enforceable. The trial court was therefore in error in refusing to permit the offer of evidence on the part of appellant in support of the allegations of his cross-complaint, and in dismissing his action praying for specific performance of the contract.

In disposing of this appeal we have not overlooked the objection of respondents that the appeal from the order denying appellant's motion for new trial cannot be considered because his notice of intention to move for a new trial was not served in time. We have examined the record and find no merit in the point.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

UNITED STATES OIL & LAND CO. v.
BELL et al. (L. A. 2,048.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 1, 1908.)

1. DEEDS—CAPACITY OF GRANTOR—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to quiet title to an undivided half interest in certain land, evidence held to warrant the court's finding that a conveyance by defendants to plaintiff's grantors was based on a sufficient consideration, and was not procured by undue influence or by taking advantage of the necessities and distress of the feme grantor, and her alleged weakness of mind.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—DEALINGS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In all dealings between attorney and client the highest degree of fairness and good faith is required of the attorney, and, if the transaction presents even a suggestion of unfair dealing, the burden of proof is on the attorney to show the honesty and good faith thereof, and that it was entered into by the client freely and voluntarily.

3. HOMESTEAD—TENANCY IN COMMON.

Land held by tenancy in common or joint tenancy cannot be selected or claimed as homestead.

4. TRIAL—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE—EXCLUSION.

Where, on an issue as to mental capacity of a feme grantor, she had testified that she was very much incensed at the provisions of the deed, that she had walked the floor the whole night before signing, and neither undressed nor went to bed, and subsequently testified that she was half insane when her attorney waited for her signature to the deed; and that the matter had kept her awake all night—questions calling for her feelings after she had read the deed over and her condition during the night, and whether she slept the night prior to the execution of the deed, were properly excluded as already covered by the testimony.

6. QUIETING TITLE—MATERIALITY.

Where, in a suit to quiet title to a moiety of certain land, the main issue was as to the validity of a deed by defendants to plaintiff's grantors covering such portion of the land, whether certain attorneys had brought actions against the feme defendant and recovered judgments against her since her execution of such deed was immaterial.

7. WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—LEADING QUESTIONS.

That certain questions were leading is not material, where it appears from the answers given that the form of the questions did not affect them.

8. SAME—NONRESPONSIVE ANSWERS.

9. TRIAL—MOTION TO STRIKE EVIDENCE.

Where a motion to strike out evidence is made on several grounds stated in the conjunctive, it need not be denied where only a part of the grounds are well taken.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by the United States Oil & Land Company against Kate M. Bell and another to quiet title to certain land. Judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

B. F. Thomas, for appellants. Richards & Carrier and James L. Crittenden, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendants from an order denying their motion for a new trial. On June 12, 1897, defendant Kate M. Bell was the owner of a tract of land in Santa Barbara county, containing about 10,000 acres, under a deed from her husband, defendant John S. Bell, which had not been recorded. On that day she and her husband by deed of conveyance, which was duly recorded June 18, 1897, granted, sold, and conveyed to James L. Crittenden and Sidney M. Van Wyck, Jr., an undivided one-half thereof. This deed also purported to convey an undivided one-half of another tract, containing some 4,000 acres, in which concededly defendants had no interest, and which is in no way here involved. Thereafter, on October 30, 1897, Mrs. Bell made and acknowledged her declaration of homestead as to a portion of said 10,000-acre tract, containing 75 acres, more or less, and such declaration was duly recorded November 1, 1897. On March 7, 1899, said Van Wyck conveyed his interest under the deed aforesaid to James L. Crittenden, and on September 18, 1902, said Crittenden and his wife conveyed said undivided one-half of said 10,000-acre tract to plaintiff. This action was brought by plaintiff on October 31, 1902, to obtain a decree adjudging that defendants have no interest in any part of said 10,000-acre tract other than that Mrs. Bell has an undivided one-half interest therein as tenant in common with plaintiff, that plaintiff is the owner in fee of an undivided one-half as tenant in common with Mrs. Bell, and that the declaration of homestead is null and void. On July 14, 1903, the defendants answered, and on the same day Mrs. Bell filed a cross-complaint, the object of which was to obtain a judgment declaring the deed of June 12, 1897, rescinded and annulled on the ground that there was not any adequate or sufficient consideration therefor, and that the same was executed and procured by and through undue influence of the grantees, by an unfair advantage of Mrs. Bell's weakness of mind, taken by the grantees, and by an oppressive and unfair advantage of her necessities and distress taken by said grantees. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint. The findings of the trial court were full and complete in favor of plaintiff upon the question of the validity of the deed of June 12, 1897. It was found that the deed was made "for a valuable, adequate and sufficient consideration"; that they "did freely and voluntarily make, execute and deliver" the same; "that there was no concealment or misstatement or misrepresentation whatever or of any kind upon the part of said Jarrett T. Richards in any of his transactions * * * in the matter of the said deed"; that said deed "was not made, executed, or delivered under or by reason of or as the result of any undue influence or of any oppressive or unfair advantage taken of the mental distress, or financial embarrassment or necessitous condition of the defendants or either of them by said James L. Crittenden, or by said Sidney M. Van Wyck, Jr., or by said Jarrett T. Richards or by Charles F. Carrier or by any one on behalf of them or either of them"; "that neither of said defendants was ever or at any time subject to any undue influence exercised by any of said parties, but that said defendants with full knowledge and notice of all the facts acted freely and voluntarily." If these findings have sufficient support in the evidence, they dispose of the case, and render immaterial other findings in favor of plaintiff upon other matters urged in support of the judgment.

Examination of the record discloses ample support for these findings. The trial court found in accord with the great weight of evidence that in May and June, 1897, and for some time prior and subsequent thereto, the 10,000-acre tract was of the value of not exceeding $100,000. It was and for several years had been almost hopelessly involved in litigation, claims being asserted against it to the extent of about $110,000 by the executors of the estate of Thomas Bell and the San Francisco Savings Union. The Bell estate claims aggregating some $50,000 had been pending in the courts for several years being involved in the action of Bell v. Staacke, which was commenced in 1893. The property was in the hands of a receiver, and was yielding no income to defendants. The attorneys for the defendants herein apparently felt that there was practically no hope for success in that case, and that the claims against the property would absorb it all. Under these circumstances, it was suggested by Mr. Richards, one of such attorneys, that another attorney might be found who might be able to carry the case to a successful issue. Mr. James L. Crittenden, then of the firm of Crittenden & Van Wyck, was spoken of in this connection, and Mr. Richards went to San Francisco in May, 1897, to consult with him, armed with a power of attorney executed by Mr. and Mrs. Bell, authorizing him to employ an attorney or attorneys and to grant as a contingent fee to the person so employed any interest in the subject of the suit and the real property affected thereby as to him might seem best. Mr. Crittenden finally agreed with Mr. Richards that his firm would take the case for one-half of the property, Mr. and Mrs. Bell to pay all costs and expenses. He expressed a desire to have Mr. Richards remain in the case to act with his partner, Mr. Carrier, as local attorneys, and said that he would allow him one-third of his fee therefor. He also insisted that an absolute conveyance of the undivided half of the property should be made at once. On May 22, 1897, Richards wrote to Mr. Bell at Santa Barbara, stating that Mr. Crittenden would agree "to fight the thing through for half what can be recovered," and that he had voluntarily agreed to give Richards one-third of his half, but that $250 must be advanced by the Bells for personal expenses and costs of Mr. Crittenden in attending the trial. Mrs. Bell read this letter on its receipt. On May 25th Mr. Richards received a telegram from Mr. Bell, of which Mrs. Bell had knowledge, directing him to "close arrangement," and informing him the money was ready. Thereupon the contract of employment was executed by Mr. Richards for Mr. and Mrs. Bell, and by Messrs. Crittenden and Van Wyck, the Bells agreeing therein to forthwith execute and deliver a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of an undivided half of said property. On his return to Santa Barbara from San Francisco, Mr. Richards gave a copy of the agreement to Mr. Bell. Mrs. Bell testified that she never saw the agreement until long after, but there never was any claim on her part that she did not fully understand and intend that Messrs. Crittenden and Van Wyck were to have half of the property for their fee, and that Mr. Richards was interested with Messrs. Crittenden and Van Wyck to the extent already stated. Her claim was that she did not understand that the conveyance was to be made prior to the termination of the litigation, or that the attorneys were to receive one-half of the rents and profits of the land received by her pending the litigation, which, of course, would necessarily be the case if they received a deed at once. As we have seen, however, at this time the property was in the hands of a receiver, and there was apparently no likelihood of her ever receiving any of the rents and profits. Early in June, 1897, Mr. Crittenden went to Santa Barbara to engage in the trial of the action. He insisted that the deed should at once be made in accord with the agreement, and Mr. Richards on the evening of June 11th left the deed at the Bells' house for examination by her, Mr. Bell having already seen it and being entirely satisfied. On the morning of June 12th he called at the house, and saw Mrs. Bell. She undoubtedly for some reason was strongly averse to executing it, and had been worrying a great deal over the matter during the night. The trial court was fully warranted by the evidence in concluding that her only objection was to thus absolutely putting the property in the control of parties who were strangers, before they had rendered the services they had undertaken to perform. He was further fully warranted in concluding that in the interview between her and Mr. Richards the latter was not guilty of the slightest bad faith, or of any misrepresentation or undue influence whatever, but that he honestly and fully explained the situation to her, and that Mrs. Bell, while deploring the circumstances that made it necessary, executed the deed freely and voluntarily and with full understanding of the situation. Considering the value and situation of the property, there was nothing unreasonable or unfair in the amount of compensation demanded, or in requiring a deed to be made at that time. Up to this time neither Mr. Crittenden nor Mr. Van Wyck had ever seen Mrs. Bell or personally communicated with her. The deed was duly delivered, and Mr. Crittenden proceeded with the performance of the service he had agreed to render. There was never any intimation to him that the arrangement that had been made was not entirely satisfactory to Mrs. Bell, nor has there ever been any complaint that the services of the attorney were not in every respect satisfactory. With the consent of Mrs. Bell, Mr. Van Wyck retired from the case, and Mr. Crittenden continued his services in the litigation in which this land was involved until the end of the year 1903, relying upon his deed, as he had a right to rely, in view of the acceptance of his services by Mrs. Bell and her failure in any way to claim the invalidity of such deed. While he was not ultimately successful in releasing the land from the claims asserted against it, he was successful in prolonging the litigation to such an extent that, when those claims could no longer be resisted, the land, as the record indicates, had become much more valuable on account of the discovery of petroleum therein, an advantage accruing not only to him as the owner of an undivided half, but also to his client as the owner of the other half.

We cannot understand how, in the face of substantial evidence of this character, it could be conceived that this court would hold the findings of the trial court to be without sufficient support. It may be assumed that the rule as to transactions between a client and his attorney is fully as rigorous as is claimed by counsel for appellant—that in all dealings with his client the highest degree of fairness and good faith is required of the attorney, and the courts view all such transactions with suspicion and examine them with the utmost scrutiny, and, if they present even a suggestion of unfair dealing, the burden of proof is on the attorney to show the honesty and good faith of the transaction and that it was entered into by his client freely and voluntarily. The trial court was amply warranted in concluding that the honesty and good faith of the transaction had been shown, and that it had been entered into by the Bells freely and voluntarily.

There is nothing in the evidence requiring a conclusion that Mr. Crittenden was estopped to urge the invalidity of the homestead declaration. The deed from the Bells to Messrs. Crittenden and Van Wyck being valid, the land was thenceforth held by the Bells and their grantees by tenancy in common, and it is settled in this state that, under the law as it has existed for many years, land held by tenancy in common or joint tenancy cannot be selected or claimed as a homestead. See Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 143 Cal. 548, 83 Pac. 999, and cases there cited.

Certain errors of law in the admission and rejection of testimony are urged. Objections were sustained to certain questions asked Mrs. Bell, such as "What were your feelings after you had read the deed over that night, and your condition during the night?" "What was your mental condition that night?" "Did you sleep that night after you read over that deed?" "Had you slept any the night previous?" all referring to the night prior to the execution of the deed on June 12, 1897. But the witness had already testified that she was very much incensed at the provisions of the deed, and the result was that she walked the floor the whole night and neither undressed nor went to bed, and subsequently testified that she was half insane when Mr. Richards waited for her signature to the deed, and that the matter had kept her awake all that night. This sufficiently covered the subject-matter of such questions. The record fails to show any exception to the ruling of the trial court in sustaining an objection to the question asked Mrs. Bell as to any change in her financial condition between the time of executing the deed and the filing of her cross-complaint, and this ruling therefore is not open to review. We are unable to perceive the materiality of the question asked Mrs. Bell as to whether Messrs. Richards & Carrier had brought actions against her and recovered judgments against her since June 12, 1897.

Certain questions asked Mr. Richards on his cross-examination by plaintiff's counsel, and objected to by defendants, were, we think, within the scope of a proper cross-examination. Besides, the matter elicited thereby was unimportant, and could not have prejudiced defendants.

Other questions asked Mr. Richards on cross-examination by plaintiff's counsel were not strictly within the scope of proper cross-examination. Admittedly plaintiff's counsel would have been entitled to ask these questions, except for the claim that some of them were open to the objection of being leading, if he had been examining the witness as his own on direct examination. He did subsequently make the witness his own as to all these matters, with full opportunity to opposing counsel to cross-examine. So far as the objection that some of these questions were leading is concerned, it is apparent from the answers given by the witness that the form of the questions in no degree affected the answers.

The court did not err in striking out, on the ground that it was not responsive to the question, testimony given by Mr. Bell to the effect that Mrs. Bell "was in a terrible state, and had not gone to bed all night." The question was: "State as nearly as possible what Mr. Richards said when he came to your house that morning." Learned counsel is in error in his claim that, where a motion is made to strike out evidence on several grounds stated in the conjunctive, the motion must be denied, unless all the objections are well-based.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

1. EVIDENCE — PAROL EVIDENCE — VARYING TERMS OF CONTRACT—ADMISSIBILITY.

The rule that parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract has no application where both parties to the action are not parties to the contract, or in privity with them, and where a controversy is between a party to a written contract and one who is neither a party to it, nor a privity to one who is, parol evidence contradicting the contract is admissible.

In an action on an assigned claim, parol evidence is admissible to correct a mistake in the written assignment, and the assignee may show by parol that by "J. H. G." the assignor meant "H. J. G.," the correct name of the assignee.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE'S SEPARATE PROPERTY—EARNINGS.

A wife's earnings may be her separate property by agreement with her husband, or because of her living separate from him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Husband and Wife, §§ 459–464.]

4. ASSIGNMENTS — ACTION BY ASSIGNEE — WIFE'S CLAIM FOR SERVICES—COMPLAINT—CONSTRUCTION.

Where, in an action by the assignee of a claim for a wife's services, the complaint alleged that defendant became indebted to the wife on account of services, and that she transferred her claim to plaintiff, etc., a finding in accordance with the allegation of the complaint must be construed to mean that defendant became indebted to the wife in her separate right, and that the assignment by her was not void on the ground that the claim was community property and assignable only by the husband.

5. EVIDENCE—OPINION OF WITNESS.

Where, in an action on an assigned claim for services, it appeared that the written assignment was made to "J. H. G.," instead of "H. J. G.," the correct name of the assignee, the testimony of one present at the time of the execution of the assignment, that the assignor intended to execute an assignment to the assignee, was objectionable as the opinion of the witness.

6. TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—STRIKING OUT—GROUNDS—HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

Where it developed on the cross-examination of a witness that his answer on direct examination was based on the statement of a third person to the witness, the answer must be stricken as hearsay.

7. SAME—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

In an action against a corporation, which denies the allegations of the complaint and sets up a counterclaim alleging an indebtedness due to it from plaintiff, a finding that the allegations in the answer, except wherein it purports to answer one cause of action alleged in the complaint, are untrue, negatives the existence of any indebtedness from plaintiff to defendant.

8. CORPORATIONS—DEEDS—EXECUTION.

A deed of a corporation, signed by its president and secretary, and bearing the corporate seal, is prima facie evidence that the deed was duly authorized by the board of directors.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 1729.]

9. ACKNOWLEDGMENT—AUTHORITY TO TAKE—DISQUALIFICATION OF OFFICER.

An acknowledgment taken before a grantee or one standing in the position of a beneficiary under a conveyance, or other written instrument, is void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Acknowledgment, §§ 106, 107.]

10. SAME.

An acknowledgment by grantors, taken before a grantor, is not void.

11. SAME.

An acknowledgment by stockholders of a mining corporation of a consent to a deed executed by the officers thereof, taken before another stockholder, is not void, since the latter takes no beneficial interest under the conveyance.

12. EVIDENCE — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE — RECORDS OF CONVEYANCES.

Act April 23, 1880 (Laws 1880, p. 131, c. 118), as amended by Act March 9, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 96, c. 92), prohibits the directors of a mining corporation from selling any part of the mining ground unless a sale is ratified by holders of two-thirds of the stock. A deed was executed by a mining corporation, through its officers, attested by the corporate seal, and properly acknowledged. The stockholders all formally consented by a separate instrument. The secretary signed and acknowledged the certificate required by the act. Held, that the deed was executed in accordance with the act and was entitled to be recorded, and the record thereof was entitled to be read in evidence with the same force and effect as the original deed, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1851.

13. MINES AND MINERALS—MINING CORPORATIONS—POWERS—PURCHASE OF REAL ESTATE.

Under Act April 23, 1880 (Laws 1880, p. 131, c. 118), as amended by Act March 9, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 96, c. 92), prohibiting directors of a mining corporation from purchasing "any additional mining ground" unless the act is ratified by holders of two-thirds of the stock, etc., the ratification of the stockholders of the mining corporation purchasing real estate is only required for the acquisition of additional mining ground, and to raise the question of the validity of a purchase, it must be shown that the land purchased was additional mining ground.

14. APPEAL AND ERROR—DISPOSITION OF CASE ON APPEAL—REMITTITUR.

Where, in an action involving separate items, the court erred in the admission of evidence in support of one item, the court on appeal will permit plaintiff to file a remittitur in the trial court entering partial satisfaction of the judgment to the amount of such item, and affirm the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4462-4476.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by H. J. Greve against the Echo Oil Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from a denial of a new trial, defendant appeals. Conditionally affirmed.

Stanton L. Carter, for appellant. Everts & Ewing, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against defendant, and from the order of the court denying defendant's motion for a new trial. The amended complaint, upon which the action was tried, contained five counts. The first and second counts set forth causes of action accruing directly to plaintiff, and no attack is made by appellant as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these causes of action. The findings of the court as to the third cause of action were in favor of defendant. The fourth count sets up a cause of action accruing originally to W. J. Kinney for the sum of $243, for services rendered to defendant by said W. J. Kinney, and in the third paragraph of said count it is alleged that said W. J. Kinney, before the commencement of the action, did sell, transfer, and assign his said claim to the said H. J. Greve, and the said H. J. Greve is now the lawful owner and holder thereof, and the whole of said sum of $243 remains unpaid. The fifth count sets up a cause of action accruing originally to A. M. Kinney for the sum of $90 for services rendered to defendant, and in the third paragraph of said count is a similar allegation as to the assignment and transfer and nonpayment thereof. The appeal comes to this court upon the judgment roll and a statement of the case. This statement sets forth that plaintiff introduced sufficient evidence to sustain all the allegations of the first and second causes of action, and all the allegations of paragraphs 1 and 2 of the fourth and fifth causes of action (which paragraphs set forth the causes of action as they accrued to plaintiff's assignors), and then proceeds to set forth the evidence relating to the allegations of paragraph 3 of the fourth cause of action, as to the assignments to plaintiff. The court made findings in accordance with the allegations of the third paragraph of counts 4 and 5.

In discussing the evidence relating to these findings, appellant's counsel has wandered far from the points raised by the specifications of insufficiency of evidence. He has discussed the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings that the assignments were made prior to the commencement of the action, and that they were made for a valuable consideration, and the like. An examination of the specifications disclosed that the only point relating to the assignments there presented is that the assignments were not made to H. J. Greve, but were made to J. H. Greve. To make this clear, we insert the first specification relating to the finding as to the assignment of the claim set forth in the fourth cause of action, which is a type of all the specifications as to the assignments. It is as follows: "The evidence is insufficient to support, justify, or sustain that portion of the findings numbered 3, 'that previous to the filing of the complaint and the commencement of said action, W. J. Kinney assigned, for valuable considerations, and transferred the said claim to H. J. Greve, the plaintiff herein, and the said H. J. Greve is now the true and lawful owner and holder thereof,' in that the evidence does not show that said W. J. Kinney assigned or transferred the claim referred to to the plaintiff, H. J. Greve, or that the plaintiff, H. J. Greve, is, or ever was, the owner, or holder, thereof; but, on the contrary the evidence shows conclusively that said Kinney, by a written assignment, prior to the commencement of the action, for a valuable consideration, assigned and transferred said claim for $243, being the claim referred to in the fourth cause of action of plaintiff's amended complaint, unto one J. H. Greve, and that J. H. Greve is, and at the time of the commencement of this action was, and ever since has been, the true and lawful owner thereof." It needs but a reading of the above specification to see that the only attack made on the finding is that the proof showed an assignment to J. H. Greve, instead of an assignment to H. J. Greve, the plaintiff. The specification as to the evidence of the assignment of the claim set forth in the fifth count is in all respects like the one above set forth. Therefore the only point we can consider with regard to the assignments is: Was the evidence sufficient to prove assignments to H. J. Greve of the claims sued upon as assigned claims?

The record discloses that the plaintiff introduced in evidence, without objection, two written assignments, one signed by W. J.

Kinney, for the claim set forth in the fourth count, and one signed by A. M. Kinney for the claim set forth in the fifth count. Both assignments are in terms to J. H. Greve, and not to H. J. Greve. Plaintiff's name was shown to be Henry John Greve. The court permitted plaintiff to prove by parol testimony, over the objection and exception of defendant, that said assignments were in fact delivered to plaintiff, H. J. Greve, and that by said assignments the assignors intended to assign said claims to H. J. Greve, the plaintiff. W. J. Kinney, one of the assignors, who is the husband of A. M. Kinney, the other assignor, testified that so far as he knew there was no such person as J. H. Greve. From the evidence thus introduced it is clear that the assignors intended to assign the claims sued on to plaintiff, and that by mistake in writing the assignment his initials were transposed. The real point of appellant's contention is that the oral evidence was incompetent, and that the court erred in admitting it. In this connection appellant urges that the action of the court in this regard was in violation of the rule that parol testimony is inadmissible to vary or contradict the terms of a written contract. This rule, however, has no application where both parties to the action are not parties to the contract or in privity with them. "Where the controversy is between a party to a written contract and one who is neither a party to it nor a privy to one who is, the rule excluding parol evidence to explain, vary, modify, or contradict the writing does not apply. In such case neither the party nor the stranger to the contract is bound by the rule excluding parol evidence." 11 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 550; Hussman v. Wilke, 50 Cal. 250; Smith v. Moynihan, 44 Cal. 53; McMaster v. Pres., etc., Ins. Co. of N. Am., 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 239; Furbush v. Goodwin, 25 N. H. 425; Badger v. Jones, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 371; Krider v. Lafferty, 1 Whar. R. 314; Edgerly v. Emerson, 23 N. H. 564, 55 Am. Dec. 207; Sprague v. Hosmer, 82 N. Y. 470; People v. Bragle, 88 N. Y. 585, 42 Am. Rep. 269. So, also, in Owen v. Meade, 104 Cal. 179, 27 Pac. 923, where an assignment omitted to name any assignee it was held no error to admit parol evidence to show that such omission was unintentional, and that the assignor in fact agreed to assign the claim sued on to the plaintiff. In the case at bar, although plaintiff claimed to be the assignee under the assignments put in evidence, defendant was not a party thereto, nor in privity with a party thereto, and, under the rule above quoted and abundantly sustained by the above cited cases, either plaintiff or defendant had the right by parol evidence to explain or correct a mistake in the written assignments. The court therefore did not err in allowing plaintiff to prove by parol evidence that by "J. H. Greve" the assignors meant "H. J. Greve." The evidence thus introduced was quite sufficient to sustain the findings relating to the assignments of the claims sued on in the only particular in which they are attacked in the specifications.

Appellant in his brief has also raised the point that the assignment by A. M. Kinney was void because she is the wife of W. J. Kinney, and the claim by her assigned must be considered to be community property, and therefore only assignable by the husband. In addition to the fact that any such point is excluded from consideration by the narrow scope of the specifications above pointed out, the contention is also completely answered by the settled statement of the case, which recites that sufficient evidence was introduced to sustain the allegations of paragraph 2 of the fifth cause of action. The allegations of said paragraph 2 are that defendant became indebted to A. M. Kinney on account of work and services, etc. The court found in accordance with this allegation, which must be construed as meaning that defendant became indebted to A. M. Kinney in her separate right. A wife's earnings may be her separate property by agreement with her husband, or because of her living separate and apart from him. Her right to assign the claim sued on in the fifth count is thus conclusively established by the findings as to the allegations of paragraph 2, which the statement recites are sustained by the evidence.

In discussing the action of the court in allowing proof by parol to vary or explain the written assignments, we were dealing only with the general line of proof that the court allowed in this regard. We now come to a particular ruling which was erroneous, not because it varied a written contract by parol evidence, but because it violated other rules pertaining to evidence. The claim sued on in the fifth count, for $90, was the claim of A. M. Kinney, and was alleged to have been assigned by her to plaintiff. A. M. Kinney was not a witness on the trial of the action, but her husband, W. J. Kinney, was. After the assignment made by A. M. Kinney had been read in evidence, and it had been shown by W. J. Kinney that A. M. Kinney was his wife, and that he was present when she executed the writing, he (W. J. Kinney) was asked by plaintiff: "To whom did she intend to execute that assignment?" This was objected to as irrelevant, incompetent, and not the best evidence. The objection was overruled, and the witness answered: "H. J. Greve." The objection should have been sustained. The evidence sought called for the opinion of the witness upon a vital point in the fifth cause of action, which was for the court to determine from the facts and circumstances surrounding and attendant upon her execution of the instrument. If she had herself been a witness at the trial, she might properly have been asked her intentions; but to ask a bystander what she intended is simply to ask for his opinion. The witness was permitted to give his opinion upon a vital fact which should have been determined by the court unaided by opinions of witnesses.

The witness was thereupon asked by counsel for defendant upon cross-examination: "How do you know she intended to assign it to H. J. Greve? Did she tell you so?" And answered: "Yes, sir." Defendant thereupon moved to strike out the answer of the witness to the question as to whom A. M. Kinney intended to execute the assignment, upon the ground that it was hearsay. This motion the court denied, and again committed error. This motion was directed to the evidence that the witness had given on his direct examination, and not, as counsel for respondent seems to think, to his answer made to defendant's counsel. By his answer to the question put by defendant's counsel it was developed that his answer on direct examination that A. M. Kinney intended to assign to H. J. Greve was based on the statement of A. M. Kinney to the witness, and was therefore hearsay, and should have been stricken out.

Besides denying the allegations of the several counts in plaintiff's complaint, defendant pleaded as a part of its answer a counterclaim as an offset to the indebtedness set up in the complaint. In the counterclaim it is alleged, in substance, that plaintiff, at the time of the commencement of the action, was indebted to defendant in an amount exceeding the aggregate amount of all the claims sued on for the balance due and unpaid upon his subscription to 24,000 shares of the capital stock of the corporation, defendant, and upon which subscription there now remains unpaid and owing from plaintiff to defendant a sum greatly exceeding the aggregate amount of all the claims sued on. Defendant in its counterclaim did not ask for any affirmative relief, nor is the amount claimed to be owing on account of the subscription for stock given. It is simply alleged that the amount of the indebtedness exceeds the amount of the claims sued on. The court did not make findings in detail on the issues presented by the counterclaim, but contented itself with the general finding "that all the allegations in the answer filed to said amended complaint, save and except wherein said answer purports to and does answer the third cause of action set forth in plaintiff's amended complaint, are untrue." While this manner of making findings has been held sufficient, it is not to be commended, for it often leaves the reviewing court in the dark upon what particular theory of the facts the court decided the case. The finding in this case, however, negatives the existence of any indebtedness on the part of plaintiff to defendant, and is sustained, either if the evidence shows that plaintiff never subscribed for any stock of defendant, or that if he did subscribe for such stock it has been wholly paid for. The evidence in the record does show that plaintiff subscribed for 24,000 shares of the capital stock of defendant at the par value of $1 per share; but we think that the evidence sustains the proposition that such stock was wholly paid for by the transfer by the "Trophy Oil Company," with the consent of all its stockholders, of 160 acres of land to defendant in consideration of 54,000 shares of stock of defendant corporation, of which the 24,000 shares subscribed for by plaintiff were a part. The 54,000 shares for which the land was sold to defendant were not issued to the Trophy Oil Company, but were divided among the stockholders of the Trophy Oil Company. All the stockholders of the Trophy Oil Company approved and consented to the deed in writing, which bears date October 13, 1900, and the land appears to have been taken and ever since held by the defendant corporation. It does not concern the defendant corporation as to how the 54,000 shares of stock given as consideration for the land were disposed of. The books of the defendant corporation do not show how the land was paid for, but witnesses testified that the consideration for the transfer of the land was 54,000 shares of stock in the defendant company, of which the 24,000 shares subscribed for by plaintiff were a part.

Upon the trial of the issues raised by the counterclaim, the court admitted in evidence the record of a deed, purporting to be executed by the Trophy Oil Company to the Echo Oil Company, conveying to the latter company 160 acres of land. It was and is objected that the deed was void and inadmissible, because it was not shown to have been authorized by the board of directors, and was not ratified by the holders of two-thirds of the stock of the corporation, as required by "an act for the further protection of stockholders in mining companies," adopted April 23, 1880 (Laws 1880, p. 131, c. 118), and amended March 9, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 96, c. 92). The deed is signed by the president and secretary of the corporation, and has the corporate seal attached. This is prima facie evidence that the deed of a corporation is duly authorized by the board of directors. Ang. & Ames on Corp. § 224; Underhill v. Santa Barbara, etc., Co., 93 Cal. 300, 28 Pac. 1049; Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300; Southern Cal. Colony Ass'n v. Bustamente, 52 Cal. 192; Crescent City Wharf & Lighter Co. v. Simpson, 77 Cal. 286, 19 Pac. 426; Andres v. Fry, 113 Cal. 124, 45 Pac. 534. There is attached to the deed a writing signed by nine stockholders, whereby they ratify, confirm, and consent to the deed, and to this is attached the certificate of the secretary, attested by the seal of the corporation, to the effect that the said stockholders are the owners of all the stock of the company. The written ratification and the certificate of the secretary fully comply with the statute in all respects, provided they were properly acknowledged. In this regard it is urged that the acknowledgments of the secretary and all the stockholders save one were void because taken before one of the parties to the instrument. It does appear that the acknowledgments of the secretary and of eight stockholders were taken before J. R. Baird, as a notary, who is one of the signing stockholders. It certainly is the law that an acknowledgment taken before a grantee, or one standing in the position of a beneficiary under a conveyance or other written instrument, is void, and does not entitle an instrument so acknowledged to be recorded. Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 365, 51 Pac. 549, 955; Merced Bank v. Rosenthal, 99 Cal. 39, 31 Pac. 849, 33 Pac. 732; Murray v. Tulare Irrigation Co., 120 Cal. 311, 49 Pac. 563, 52 Pac. 586. In support of this doctrine many cases might be cited from other jurisdictions. In some of them the rule is stated broadly that an acknowledgment may not be taken before a party to the instrument; but an examination of the cases discloses that in every case where an acknowledgment has been held void, because taken before a party to the instrument, the officer taking such acknowledgment was either a grantee or agent of the grantee in the instrument, or took some benefit under the instrument. We have been unable to find, after diligent search, involving the examination of many cases, a single case where it has been held that an acknowledgment by grantors taken before a grantor is void. No reason occurs to us why such an acknowledgment should be held void, and the reason assigned in the cases for holding an acknowledgment taken before a grantee void does not exist in such case. In Murray v. Tulare Irrigation Company, supra, it was held that an acknowledgment taken before one of several grantees, where each grantee took a separate interest in the land conveyed, was good as to all the grantees save the one taking the acknowledgment. In the case at bar, the consenting stockholder who took the acknowledgment of the other stockholders held but one-ninth of the stock. The consent of the other eight stockholders was sufficient to validate the conveyance without his joining therein at all. He took no beneficial interest under the conveyance, and therefore his act does not transgress the rule laid down in the adjudicated cases. The deed itself having been executed by the corporation, through the proper officers, attested by the corporate seal, and by them properly acknowledged, and all stockholders having in writing consented to the deed, and, as we have seen, properly acknowledged the execution of such consent, and the secretary having signed and also acknowledged the certificate required by the act above referred to, the deed was entitled to be recorded, and the record thereof was entitled to be read in evidence with the same force and effect as the original deed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1851. The court therefore did not err in admitting in evidence the record of the deed. In thus deciding, we have not overlooked the contention of appellant that the conveyance was void because the ratification thereof by the stockholders of Echo Oil Company (the grantee) is not acknowledged before any officer. This contention is completely answered by the case of Granite Gold Mining Company v. Maginness et al., 118 Cal. 136, 50 Pac. 269. The ratification of the stockholders of the grantee company is only required for the acquisition of additional mining ground, and in order that defendant might raise the point it must appear that the land conveyed was additional mining ground. No such showing was made.

Appellant in his brief discusses many other points, none of which appear to us to be of sufficient importance to require special notice.

The error which we have pointed out concerning the admission of the evidence of W. J. Kinney could only affect the trial as to the assigned claim of A. M. Kinney, which was for $90 only. If respondent should prefer to waive his claim to that extent, rather than suffer a retrial, we think that justice and the interest of the parties require that he should be allowed to do so.

It is therefore ordered that if respondent shall within 10 days after the filing of the remittitur in the trial court enter partial satisfaction of the judgment to the amount of $90, as of the date of the entry of the judgment, the order and judgment shall stand affirmed; otherwise the order and judgment are reversed. Plaintiff recovers its costs of appeal.

RICHMOND et al. v. HOUSER, Judge, et al.
(Civ. 531.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 29, 1908.)

1. CERTIORARI—RETURN—SUFFICIENCY.

Where no objection is urged to the sufficiency of a return on an application for certiorari to review the proceedings of the superior court, and all parties treat the same as a correct transcript, the Court of Appeal will so regard it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, § 143.]

2. SAME—EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Certiorari lies to review an order of the superior court remanding an action in forcible detainer theretofore certified to the superior court by a justice of the peace, and such order is not reviewable only on appeal, since it is an improper divestiture of jurisdiction.

3. SAME—PARTIES.

On certiorari to review an order of the superior court, it is necessary that it should be a party, and, in its absence, the writ being directed to the judge of such court, its order cannot be annulled.

Application by Emma Agnes Richmond and others for a writ of certiorari, directed to Frederick W. Houser, as judge of the superior court in and for Los Angeles county, and others. Application denied, without prejudice.

Wm. T. Blakely, for petitioners. Tipton & Cailor, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari to review the proceedings of the superior court of Los Angeles county remanding an action in forcible detainer theretofore certified to such court by a justice of the peace. The writ is not directed to the court, but to Frederick W. Houser, judge of said court. There is no return by the clerk of the superior court, and the transcript certified to this court is certified to by the justice of the peace; but therein is contained a certificate of the clerk of the superior court, showing the action and proceedings of the superior court. No objection is urged as to the sufficiency of this return, and all parties treat the same as a correct transcript, and we will so regard it.

The return shows that the action of the justice in certifying the case to the superior court was proper, and the order of remand unwarranted. It is insisted by respondents that such order is erroneous, and reviewable only on appeal. We are of the contrary opinion. The superior court had jurisdiction to hear and determine the case before it upon its merits, and the order of remand was an improper divestiture of its right of jurisdiction. "Where such is the case, the writ of certiorari is a proper proceeding to annul the order." Hall v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 550, 12 Pac. 672; Levy v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 292, 5 Pac. 353. This writ of certiorari, however, being sought to review the action of an inferior tribunal, it is necessary that such tribunal should be a party, that an effective review be had. This court cannot, in the absence of a proper party, make an order annulling the order of remand.

The application is therefore denied, without prejudice.

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—FINDINGS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—REVIEW.

An appellate court, in reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, is not concerned with the preponderance of the evidence, or the substantial character of the showing made by the defeated party; but the inquiry is whether the record contains any evidence tending to support the findings, giving full credit to the testimony of the successful party.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3979-3982.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—APPROPRIATION—ACQUISITION OF WATER RIGHTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence in an action for deprivation of water for irrigation held to justify a finding that one, under a claim of right, for more than the statutory period used for purposes of irrigation 25 inches of the water of a stream, authorizing a judgment that he had acquired the right to the use of such water.

3. TRIAL—FINDINGS—ISSUES.

It is the duty of the court to find on all material issues, regardless of any request of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 916.]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—IRRIGATION—ACTION TO PROTECT RIGHTS IN WATER—FINDING.

A finding that one is the owner of 25 inches of the water of a stream, and that he has used the same under a claim of right for more than the statutory period, "and that such use and appropriation is prior" to any rights of another therein, negatives any claim of right of the latter in or to such water, and passes on the issue of the prior right of the latter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. S. Beuse, Judge.

Action by Lewis Davies and others against Joseph Angelo and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James F. Farragher, for appellants. Taylor & Tebbe and Gillis & Tapscott, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The principal contention of appellants relates to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the lower court. Those to which the specification of insufficiency is addressed are substantially as follows: (1) That the use of the waters of McAdams creek by defendants has never been adverse to the rights of plaintiffs for a sufficient period of time to give them an adverse right thereto; (2) that during the time (20 years) plaintiffs and their predecessors owned and cultivated the so-called Davies ranch, they owned and used 25 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, of the waters of McAdams creek and its tributaries (except Clear creek) for irrigating said lands, and that such use and appropriation are prior to any rights of defendants herein; (3) that such use of said waters was made each year from April 1st to October 1st, and that it was necessary for the cultivation of said lands; (4) that in the year 1904 defendants wrongfully and unlawfully diverted all of the waters from said creek and deprived plaintiffs thereof; (5) that during the period of time covered by the diversion by defendants there was sufficient water flowing in McAdams creek to have reached plaintiffs' ditches; (6) that the acts of defendants caused plaintiffs damage in the sum of $200, and that the continuance of the diversion by defendants of the water would cause great and irreparable damage and injury to plaintiffs.

We are not concerned, of course, with the question of the preponderance of the evidence, or as to the substantial character of the showing made by the defendants; but the single inquiry is, does the record contain any evidence tending to support said findings? This question must be answered in the affirmative. Without segregating and considering it under its appropriate and corresponding findings, we make the following quotations from the testimony of the witnesses: Lewis Davies said: "I have been familiar with the Davies ranch, on McAdams creek, since 1871. Every year through the irrigating season we have used the water and have raised a crop, excepting, perhaps, in 1881 or 1882, when we had a lawsuit with the miners for this same water. Without irrigating water the garden and fruit crops would dry up and would not mature. The water we used for irrigating was from McAdams creek and a drain known as the 'Oak Grove drain.' We had two irrigating ditches from the creek for irrigation of garden, orchard, alfalfa, and hay. In the spring, when the water was plenty, we used 100 and more; but when the water gets low in the creek we use what the miners have used above us, and that varies from 20 to 30 inches. We would use all the water flowing in McAdams creek above Clear creek. Last year there was a very large crop of apples on the trees, and if we had had water we would have had good apples. Defendants put a dam across the creek and deprived us of the water, however, and the fruit dried up. I think there was plenty of water there to have saved our fruit, if defendants had not interfered. I estimate the damage to our fruit and garden at $350. I went to defendants, and told them to use the water to irrigate their garden and turn the water down, so I could save my garden and fruit; but they said, 'If the water is ours, we will use it all the time.' I took the dam out, and they put it back immediately, and we did not have any water afterwards. No one above us during the irrigating season in prior years has diverted any of the waters of McAdams creek, or taken them away from us, except during our lawsuit with the miners in 1881, and possibly in 1882." Mr. Davidson testified: "I have been acquainted with McAdams creek more or less for 50 years last past. I know the Lewis Davies place. I think Davies bought this in the '70's. Up to 1900 I was by the Lewis Davies place every year, and I can say they used surface waters of McAdams creek every year for irrigating. I know the old former Ed Mathewson place, now occupied by defendants. There has been a garden there quite a while. It was not there for some time after the Davies ranch." Mr. Wayne testified: "I lived on McAdams creek from 1871 to 1874. I know what is called the 'Davies ranch.' During the time I was there they used water from McAdams creek to irrigate it. While I was there the miners had me to go up and down the creek and keep the water in it. After the water got down so that it was used by the last mine, the first ranch to use it was the Lewis Davies ranch."

There is other testimony of a similar character, and it is not denied that the irrigating season extends from April 1st to October 1st. Giving full credit, as we must, to the testimony of plaintiffs, we reach the conclusion that plaintiffs, under a claim of right for more than the statutory period of time, for purposes of irrigation, used the waters flowing in said McAdams creek; that said claim of right included at least 25 inches, as found by the court below, although there were periods of drought when the supply was less; that defendants, by the construction of a dam, deprived plaintiffs of the use of water to which they were entitled, and thereby damaged the latter to the extent of $200, and that the continuance of said obstruction would work irreparable injury to plaintiffs. The findings, supported, as they are, by the evidence, justify the judgment, and render immaterial the allegation of defendants as to prior appropriation of said water, upon which there is no specific finding.

In this connection appellants cite Haight v. Tryon, 112 Cal. 4, 44 Pac. 318, and Cloverdale v. Smith, 128 Cal. 230, 60 Pac. 851. In the former the well-settled doctrine is announced that "it is the duty of the court to find upon all the material issues, regardless of any request of the parties," and in the latter it is held that in an action to abate and enjoin a nuisance caused by the construction and maintenance by defendants of a bulkhead, embankment, and ditch, where the court found that the ditch caused the injury complained of, but that the defendants did not construct the ditch, and rendered judgment for the defendants, the omission to find upon the material issue presented by the pleadings as to whether defendants maintained the ditch is ground for reversal. But those cases are not in point here, for the reason that the court found that plaintiffs are and have been the owners of 25 inches of the water, and have used the same under claim of right for more than the statutory period, "and such use and appropriation is prior to any rights of defendants herein."

The prior right to the waters, and the extent of such right, were thereby determined, and the findings of the court necessarily negative any claim or right of defendants in or to any of said waters. The material issues were all passed upon, and we see no reason for interfering with the conclusion of the trial court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Supreme Court July 27, 1908.)

1. INSURANCE—LIFE POLICY—BENEFICIARY.

The intention of insured as to who should be the beneficiary, being ascertained, must be given effect, where it does not contravene public policy or any statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1461.]

2. SAME—RIGHT TO CHANGE BENEFICIARY.

Where the right to change the beneficiary is reserved in the policy, the beneficiary has no vested interest, and another may be substituted at the instance of insured.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1469.]

3. SAME.

Where a policy in favor of the mother of insured reserved the right to him to change the beneficiary, the fact that he falsely represented to his mother that he had married one with whom he was living in illicit relations and desired to make her the beneficiary, as she was his wife, and that the mother believed him, is of no consequence in determining the rights of the substituted beneficiary.

4. SAME.

Fraud practiced by insured on the insurer in securing a change of beneficiary, in that he falsely represented that he had married one with whom he was living in illicit relations and desired to make her the beneficiary, as she was his wife, is of no consequence in determining the rights of the substituted beneficiary as against the beneficiary first named.

5. SAME.

A change in the beneficiary of a policy, induced or procured by a promise of the substituted beneficiary of a continuance of illicit relations, is not thereby rendered void; the gift not requiring any consideration to support it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Carrie M. Waring, known as Carrie M. Wilcox, and Inez C. Wilcox and another having instituted separate actions against the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company on a life policy, the actions were thereafter consolidated, the amount of the policy deposited in court, and by appropriate pleadings the rights of the parties set out and litigated in such consolidated action. From a judgment for defendants, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

F. W. Allender, Clara A. Allender, and Warren L. Williams, for appellant. Murphy & Schmidt, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment of the superior court of Los Angeles county and from an order denying a new trial. It is made to appear by the record that each of the parties plaintiff and defendant originally instituted actions against the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, successor to the Conservative Life Insurance Company, upon a certain policy of insurance theretofore issued by said insurer upon the life of Jesse Manley Wilcox; that thereafter, by order of court made pursuant to a stipulation, these actions were consolidated, and the insurance company deposited in court the amount of the policy, and by appropriate pleadings the rights of the plaintiffs and defendants to such fund were set out and litigated in such consolidated action.

Upon the trial it was found by the court: That the policy of insurance was executed and delivered to Jesse Manley Wilcox on the 26th day of June, 1905. That the defendant Inez C. Wilcox, mother, was named therein as the beneficiary, but that the policy contained a clause conferring upon Jesse Manley Wilcox the right to change the beneficiary. That said policy was delivered by the insured to Inez C. Wilcox, his mother, with the intent and purpose of the insured that the policy should belong to and be the property of the said mother, and the possession of such policy was retained by her until shortly before February 1, 1906, when she, believing from the statements of plaintiff that plaintiff and the insured had intermarried, at the request of the insured, delivered the policy to him. That on the 1st of February, 1906, the insured requested in writing of the insurer that the beneficiary named in the policy be changed from Inez C. Wilcox, mother, to Carrie M. Wilcox, wife, and on the day following the insurer indorsed upon the policy the following: "Carrie M. Wilcox, wife, is hereby made the beneficiary under the within policy in the place and stead of Inez C. Wilcox, mother, named herein; such change being made at the request of Jesse Manley Wilcox, holder of this policy. Dated February 1, 1906." That on the 19th of February following the insured died, and due proof of his death was made. The court further finds that when said request for a change of beneficiary was made by the insured, and when the indorsement on such policy was made by the insurer, there was no such person as Carrie M. Wilcox, wife of said Jesse Manley Wilcox, and there never was such a person as Carrie M. Wilcox, wife of said Jesse Manley Wilcox, and that said Jesse Manley Wilcox died single and unmarried. The court further finds that the insured did not request the insurer to make the plaintiff, Carrie M. Waring, the beneficiary thereof, and that Carrie M. Waring did not give any consideration to said Jesse Manley Wilcox to have herself named as beneficiary, and that Inez C. Wilcox never consented that plaintiff be named as beneficiary in her place and stead; that when said Inez C. Wilcox handed over the policy to the insured he at the time was living in illicit relations with plaintiff, of which fact the mother was in ignorance, and such surrender of the policy by the mother was based solely upon her belief that her son was married to plaintiff. While there is no finding upon the question, there is an averment in both complaint and answer that Carrie M. Waring was sometimes known as Carrie M. Wilcox; and it further appears that plaintiff was in possession of the policy at the time of the death of the insured. Upon these findings the court rendered its judgment in favor of Inez C. Wilcox, the mother, and awarded to her the fund in controversy.

We are of opinion that there is no evidence to support the finding that the insured did not request the insurer to make the plaintiff, Carrie M. Waring, the beneficiary of said policy. There is no room for controversy as to the identity of the person whom Jesse Manley Wilcox intended to be the substituted beneficiary. The averment in the answer that plaintiff was known as Carrie M. Wilcox, the undisputed fact that it was through her insistence that the insured procured the policy from the mother, and her possession of the policy after his death, all point with certainty to the fact that the insured intended that plaintiff should be the beneficiary under the policy. The intention of the insured, then, being ascertained, it is the duty of the court to give that intention effect, provided it does not contravene public policy or any statute. Bogart v. Thompson, 24 Misc. Rep. 581, 53 N. Y. Supp. 623. It is regrettable that a son should so far forget the duty he owes to the mother who bore him that he should become willing to divert a fund intended for her support to the use of a mistress, who could but dishonor him. Yet the right to manage and control his own confers upon him absolute dominion over his property, and even confers upon him the right to perform this unfilial act. The old rule once obtaining, that the beneficiary named in a policy must consent to a change in order that another beneficiary be substituted, applied only where the right of substitution was not reserved in the contract evidenced by the policy. It is now established that where the contract so provides the beneficiary may be changed at the instance of the insured, and that no vested right exists in the beneficiary, in the absence of any facts or circumstances tending to establish an equitable interest in the proceeds of the policy. "The beneficiary's interest is the mere expectancy of an incomplete gift, which is revocable at the will of the insured, and which does not and cannot become vested as a right until fixed by his death. * * * One cannot be defrauded of that in which he has no vested right. A vested right is property, which the law protects, while a mere expectancy is not property, and therefore is not protected." Hoelt v. Supreme Lodge K. of H., 113 Cal. 96, 45 Pac. 185, 33 L. R. A. 174. It follows from this that the false representations as to the relationship between the parties, made to the mother, and her belief therein, are of no consequence in determining the rights of the substituted beneficiary. Nor can we attach any importance to a finding that the policy was delivered with the intent that it should become the property of the original beneficiary; for it contained the reserved right of substitution, and vested no right other than one to receive the benefit in the event the insured did not elect before his death to change the beneficiary. "It was a part of the contract, as entered into in the beginning, that the assured, of his own free, unrestrained will, might at any time make the substitution he desired." Bowman v. Moore, 87 Cal. 311, 25 Pac. 409. The same may be said with reference to the fraud practiced upon the insurance company in the false representation as to the marital relation; for, whatever may have been the effect of such statements as affecting the rights of the insurer, it is not complaining. Woodmen of the World v. Rutledge, 133 Cal. 640, 65 Pac. 1105.

There is nothing in this record indicating that the change in the beneficiary was induced or procured through any promise to continue illicit relations. Were such fact, however, to be assumed from the relations existing at the time of the surrender of the policy and the continuance thereof until death, such fact would not make void a gift by the insured, the right to which became vested at his death. We are not confronted with a question of the enforcement of a contract based upon a void consideration, for no consideration is requisite in support of a beneficiary's right. When the death of the insured intervened, the gift to plaintiff became complete, and her right to the money covered by the policy became vested. This money was in the treasury of the court, paid therein by the insurer, who disclaimed any interest. No other litigant showed any right to the fund, and it was the duty of the trial court to direct its payment to the person to whom the insured intended it to be paid in the event of his death. As we have before said, that person was clearly the plaintiff in this action. Judgment should have been rendered accordingly.

Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded for further proceedings.

KETTNER v. SHIPPY et al. (Civ. 491.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 29, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—UNNECESSARY FINDING.

In an action on a note, wherein plaintiff alleged a transfer to him before suit, for a valuable consideration, it was not error, prejudicial to defendants, to fail to find as to the valuable character of the consideration for the transfer, since the complaint must be construed as alleging transfer after maturity, entitling defendants to avail themselves of any defense available against the original payee; and, since the purpose of the statute requiring an action to be prosecuted by the real party in interest is to save a defendant, against whom a judgment may be obtained, from further vexation or litigation by other parties claiming the same demand, but where plaintiff shows such title that a judgment upon it, satisfied by defendant, will protect him from further annoyance or loss, and where, as against him suing, defendant can urge any defenses he could make against the real owner, defendant is not concerned, and cannot object.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4234.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES — CONSIDERATION FOR NOTE—SUFFICIENCY.

That the payee held a note secured by a mortgage on one of defendants' property, the payment of which note such defendant had assumed, that the payee agreed with such defendant, and the defendants who had become associated with him in the ownership of the property, to and did accept the note sued on in satisfaction of the first note, and that the first note was destroyed, and the mortgage released, warrants a finding that the note sued on was executed upon a valuable consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 7, Bills and Notes, § 174.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A finding resting upon competent evidence will not be disturbed, though the evidence is conflicting.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by William Kettner against A. B. Shippy and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. S. Clack, Bradley & Farnsworth, and Geo. W. Cartwright, for appellants. H. B. McClure, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. The complaint declares upon a promissory note, negotiable in form, executed by defendants to one Brown for $1,300 and interest. Alleges also its maturity, non-payment, and assignment and transfer, before the commencement of the action, for a valuable consideration, to plaintiff, who is the owner and holder thereof. The answers deny the execution of the note, or that for a valuable consideration it was assigned or transferred to plaintiff by Brown, and allege that there was no consideration for its original execution. Upon the trial the execution was admitted, and the court found that after maturity Brown assigned and transferred the note to plaintiff, who is now the lawful owner and holder thereof. The court further finds against defendants upon the issue as to consideration in the original execution.

Appellants contend for a reversal of the judgment, because no finding is made in relation to the valuable character of the consideration for the assignment and transfer to plaintiff. Under the rule the complaint must be construed as alleging transfer after maturity, from which it follows that in the action defendants were entitled to avail themselves of any defense which they could have made had the suit been brought by the original payee. The purpose of the statute which provides that the action must be prosecuted by the real party in interest is to save a defendant, against whom a judgment may be obtained, from further vexation or litigation, instituted by other parties claiming the same demand; "but where the plaintiff shows such a title as that a judgment upon it, satisfied by defendant, will protect him from further annoyance or loss, and where, as against the party suing, defendant can urge any defenses he could make against the real owner, then there is an end of the defendant's concern, and with it of his right to object." Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 658, 40 Pac. 8. When so protected, the character or extent of consideration paid by the assignee is wholly immaterial, and no prejudice results from any omission to find in relation thereto.

It is insisted, further, by appellants that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding that the note was executed upon a valid consideration. There is evidence in the record which, if true, establishes that Brown held a note for $1,500, secured by chattel mortgage upon property owned by defendant Noble, the payment of which note Noble had assumed; that, under an agreement with Noble and certain of defendants who had become associated with him in the ownership of said property, Brown agreed to accept the note sued on in satisfaction of the note held by him and so secured. Pursuant to this agreement the note set out in the complaint was executed. Brown thereafter released the mortgage, and destroyed the note which it secured. The court accepted these facts as established. They are sufficient to warrant the finding. That the evidence was conflicting is apparent, but it is not our duty to disturb a finding which rests upon competent evidence.

There is no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SOTO. (Cr. 83.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
May 29, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL AND ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—PRESENTATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Act 1905 (St. 1905, p. 761, c. 569) amending Pen. Code, §§ 1171, 1174, relating to the settlement of bills of exceptions, etc., in criminal cases, was not intended to wipe out all general provisions for relief from excusable neglect, rules relating to waiver of the steps necessary to acquire jurisdiction, and to the estoppel of parties to take advantage of their own wrong, but these continue to be a part of the practice applicable to criminal cases.

2. SAME—EXTENSION OF TIME—STIPULATION. Pen. Code, § 1174, as amended by Act 1905 (St. 1905, p. 761, c. 569), provides that in no case can the time, specified therein and in section 1171, for presentation to the judge of the draft of a bill of exceptions be extended by stipulation of the parties. Held, that this should not be construed to include a stipulation of facts in open court, the sufficiency and weight of which the court passes on in granting or denying the order extending the time, but is confined to a stipulation whereby the parties attempt to extend the time without giving the court an opportunity to determine whether or not good cause for the delay exists.

3. SAME.

Pen. Code, § 1174, as amended by Act 1905 (St. 1905, p. 761, c. 569), provides that the time specified for presenting the draft of a bill of exceptions may be extended for a reasonable period by the trial judge, but only for good cause shown, and on affidavit showing the necessity therefor, presented, on written notice of at least two days, to the adverse party. Immediately after sentence was pronounced, all the parties being present in open court, defendant applied for additional time in which to prepare and serve his bill of exceptions. Thereupon the district attorney stated that it would be impossible for the record of the trial to be written up in time for defendant to prepare and serve his bill within the time allowed by law, and on this statement of the district attorney, and without objection on his part, the court made an order granting defendant additional time. Held, that this was a statement of fact which the court was entitled to consider as a showing of cause, and equivalent to the affidavit required by said section 1174.

4. SAME.

Where, immediately after the pronouncing of sentence, the parties being present in open court, the district attorney, in response to defendant's application for additional time in which to prepare and serve his bill of exceptions, stated that it would be impossible for the record of the trial to be written up in time for defendant to prepare and serve his bill within the time allowed by law, and on such statement, without objection by the district attorney, the court granted additional time, this amounted to a waiver of the service of notice required by Pen. Code, § 1174, as amended by Act 1905 (St. 1905, p. 761, c. 569), providing that an extension of time for a reasonable period may be granted on written notice to the adverse party.

5. PROHIBITION—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

On application for a writ of prohibition prohibiting the trial judge from settling a bill of exceptions in a criminal case, on the ground that no notice of application for additional time was given, as required by statute, it will be assumed that the court, if necessary, would before settling the bill make its formal order granting relief, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court may relieve a party from a judgment order, etc., taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, etc.

Shaw, J., dissenting in part.

Rosember E. Soto was convicted of crime. The district attorney applied for a writ of prohibition prohibiting the trial judge from proceeding with the settlement of defendant's bill of exceptions. Alternative writ dismissed, and petition denied.

Albert Nelson, Dist. Atty., for the People.
Lamy & Putnam, for defendant.

TAGGART, J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of rape. He moved the court for a new trial, and his motion was denied on the 7th day of February, 1908, and on the same day judgment was rendered and sentence imposed. Immediately following the pronouncing of sentence, all the parties being present in open court, the defendant made application to the court for 20 days' additional time in which to prepare and serve his bill of exceptions. The district attorney made a statement that it would be impossible for the record of the trial to be written up in time for defendant to prepare and serve his bill within the time allowed by law; and, upon this statement of the district attorney, and without objection, upon his part, the court made its order granting defendant 10 days' additional time to prepare his bill. Defendant's attorney relied upon the foregoing order, and also upon the assurance of the district attorney that the latter would consent to a 10 days' further extension of time, if necessary, and that he would not insist that the notice required by statute should be given, if defendant should make application for such extension. On February 17th, it appearing that there was some doubt about the order of February 7th having been entered, the counsel for both parties being in court, the question was raised, and the court determined that such an order had been made, and directed the clerk to make an entry thereof in the minutes. This was not done, however, until March 16, 1908, when, by a written order of the court, the minutes were corrected to show this order so made. On the morning of February 17, 1908, all parties being in open court, defendant's attorney, being apprehensive of the effect of the failure to enter the order of February 7th, made application to the court for additional time. The district attorney objected, upon the ground that no notice had been given, and no affidavit of cause served on him, as required by sections 1171 and 1174 of the Penal Code. The matter was continued until the afternoon of the same day, for further hearing, at which time defendant presented, served, and filed an affidavit containing a sufficient showing to sustain either an order granting additional time (if the application was noticed and served in time), or an order granting relief from his failure to give the notice and serve an affidavit in the time required by section 1174. The district attorney again objected to the granting of the order, and the hearing was continued until February 20th. In the meantime, on February 17th, the defendant served notice in writing, on the district attorney, of his intended application to the court (judge) on said 20th day of February, 1908, for an extension of time within which to present his bill of exceptions. The application was based on the affidavit above mentioned, no counter showing being made by the district attorney, who again objected to the court granting the application, on the ground that the defendant had not complied with the provisions of sections 1171 and 1174. The court overruled these objections, took the matter under consideration, and on February 25th made an order as follows: "Motion of defendant for additional time to file his bill of exceptions is granted, and his time is extended from February 17, 1908, to and including February 29, 1908, at 10 a. m." On February 25, 1908, written notice, as required by section 1171, of defendant's intention to apply on February 28, 1908, to the judge who tried the cause to settle the defendant's bill of exceptions, was served upon the district attorney. At the time set for such presentation, the latter appeared, and objected to the settlement of the bill, on the ground that the judge had no jurisdiction to settle the same, but made no counter showing to the defendant's showing for relief. An alternative writ of prohibition issued from this court to the superior judge, prohibiting the trial judge from proceeding with the settlement of the bill, and the matter now comes on for hearing, on the motion of the district attorney to make the writ permanent.

The position of the district attorney on this application is that no waiver, conduct, misrepresentation, or deceit of a district attorney, whether relied upon by a defendant or not, can excuse him for a failure to give the notice and serve the affidavit required by the statute, and that either or all these cannot estop a district attorney from raising this question as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the settlement of the bill. We take it the amendment of the sections named, upon the recommendation of the code commissioner in 1905, was to accomplish the purpose stated in the notes to those sections, on page 1156 of the Statutes of 1905, and that it was not intended thereby to wipe out all general provisions for relief from excusable neglect, rules relating to waiver of the steps necessary to acquire jurisdiction, and to the estoppel of parties to take advantage of their own wrong. These continue to be a part of the practice applicable to criminal cases in this state. Section 1174 provides that "in no case can the time be extended by stipulation of the parties." This should not be construed to include a stipulation of facts in open court, the sufficiency and weight of which the court passes upon in granting or denying the order extending the time, but is confined to a stipulation whereby the parties attempt to extend the time without the court being given an opportunity to determine whether or not a good cause for the delay exists. The court being in session, the counsel for the respective parties being present, and the district attorney making a statement of the facts relative to the possibility of having the record of the proceedings upon the trial transcribed in time to prepare the bill, this was a statement of fact which the court was entitled to consider, as a showing of cause and equivalent to the affidavit required by section 1174. The district attorney being present, and consenting to the order when there was still abundant time for the defendant to comply with the statutory provision as to service of notice, was a waiver of service of notice, and gave the court jurisdiction. Had this been after defendant was in default, another question would have arisen. Upon these grounds, and for these reasons, the order of February 7th operated to give the defendant 10 days' time in addition to that allowed by law. The application of defendant on February 17th made a showing sufficient for relief and also for an extension of time. It was treated as if an application to extend the time only, and the order made thereon, was limited to this in its terms. If the order of February 7th be considered as ineffectual to grant the 10 days' additional time, and the application of February 17th as one for an extension of time only, the notice and service of affidavit required by section 1174 were lacking. As an application for such an order, accompanied by a showing or excuse why the notice and affidavit had not been made in time, it was before the court. The court made its order granting the extension asked, but did not make any formal or separate order purporting to grant relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on the ground of excusable neglect, from the failure to give the notice. Upon the showing being made by the affidavit of Attorney Lamy in open court on the 17th day of February, the judge continued the matter for hearing in all its features, and gave the district attorney ample time to make a counter showing to the facts stated in the affidavit upon which defendant relied for relief, but none was made. We think the district attorney was in court upon the application for relief, and that the order made was sufficient to grant the relief and extend the time. We do not regard this holding as necessary to the determination of the rights of the applicant here, as the order of February 7th extended the time of defendant until February 27th. If it be conceded that both the efforts to secure an extension of time were ineffectual, we should still be compelled to hold that the petition should be denied.

Passing the order of February 7th as unauthorized, and the order of February 25th as ineffectual, because not preceded by a formal order of relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, we come to the action of the court, which we are asked to prohibit. The bill of exceptions is before the judge who tried the cause, for settlement upon notice of two days, as required by section 1171. All the record made, and all the facts arrayed in the affidavit presented upon the former applications for relief and extension of time, are before the trial court, and may be considered by it. We are asked to presume that the court will proceed to settle the bill, even though the making of a formal order of relief under section 473 be first required, without making this prerequisite order. We cannot assume that the court will do this, for the purpose of prohibiting it from settling the bill. Rather must we assume that it will take such action on the application for relief as will make it competent for it to settle the bill without error, and, if necessary, make its formal order granting relief under section 473 before settling the bill.

In our opinion the alternative writ should be dismissed, and the petition denied, and it is so ordered.

I concur: ALLEN, P. J.

SHAW, J. I concur in the judgment, but cannot assent to all that is said in the foregoing opinion by Mr. Justice TAGGART. Under the provisions of section 1171 of the Penal Code the defendant should have presented the draft of his bill of exceptions to the judge for settlement within 10 days after judgment, or within such extension of time, ordered by the trial judge, in accordance with the provisions of section 1174 of the Penal Code. The bill was not presented within the time specified in section 1171, supra, nor was any legal order made prior to the expiration of the 10 days extending defendant's time for presentation of his bill. The order made on February 7, 1908, but not entered until March 16th following, was a nullity, for the reason that no affidavit showing the necessity for such extension of time was made or filed. People v. Blis (Cal. App.) 84 Pac. 676; People v. Simmons (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 48. The time having expired, the court was without authority to make the order, of date February 25, 1908, extending defendant's time to February 29, 1908, within which to prepare and present his bill of exceptions, unless the court had first made an order relieving defendant from his default. Admitting that the affidavit filed on February 17th constituted an application for relief, and performed the dual function of showing the necessity for the extension of time, and also constituted a sufficient showing under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in support of the application for relief, still, so far as the record shows, the court never at any time made an order relieving defendant from default. The minute entry of February 25th does not purport to be other than an order extending the time. It cannot, in my judgment, be construed as an order relieving defendant from default. Where the court is without jurisdiction to make an order, except by virtue of some intervening action or order, the record must, in order to justify the exercise of jurisdiction, show that such intervening action or order upon which jurisdiction depends was had or made. Cameron v. Arcata, etc., R. R. Co., 129 Cal. 279, 61 Pac. 955.

The expression of opinion by the trial judge wherein he gives his reasons for making the order, as shown by the return, is no part of the record, and cannot be regarded of any weight in support of this application. Higgins v. Los Angeles Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 344; Schwerdtle v. Placer Co., 108 Cal. 589, 41 Pac. 448. Want of jurisdiction, however, does not, of itself, warrant the issuance of the writ of prohibition. Petitioner can suffer no injury, for the reason that he has an adequate remedy upon the hearing of the appeal, by interposing objections to the consideration of the bill of exceptions, upon the ground that the bill itself discloses that it was settled after the expiration of the statutory time, and in the absence of an order granting relief, without which there could be no authority for making the order dated February 25th extending the time. Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 Pac. 765. "The writ of prohibition should not ordinarily issue where certiorari will lie, unless it appears that the applicant for the writ will necessarily be injured if the tribunal sought to be prohibited is permitted to proceed." Santa Monica v. Eckert et al. (Cal.) 33 Pac. 880; Hayes v. Board of Trustees, etc. (Cal. App.) 92 Pac. 492.

It is not improper to suggest that ample time remains for defendant, if so advised, to make an application, supported by a showing of facts, which may warrant the trial judge in making an order relieving him from default, thus affording a record of the proceedings under the authority of which he would, in the first instance, be warranted in settling the bill.

PEOPLE v. KING. (Cr. 44.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 29, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court, July 27, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS COVERED—REFUSAL NOT ERROR.

It is not error to refuse an instruction substantially covered by instructions given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

2. BURGLARY—POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY—EFFECT.

Unexplained possession of stolen property, by one accused of burglary and of larceny in connection therewith, however soon after the taking, does not, of itself, justify a conviction, though the burglary be shown to a moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt, but it is a circumstance to be considered with any other incriminating evidence in determining whether accused is guilty, and if not satisfactorily explained, tends to show his guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Burglary, §§ 104–107.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Joseph King was convicted of burglary in the first degree, and he appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Geo. D. Collins, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. Appeal from the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant was accused, jointly with Thomas Baker and Harry Hamilton, of burglary, committed on April 23, 1902, in the city and county of San Francisco. The information also alleged two prior convictions of burglary against both appellant and Hamilton, and one prior conviction of robbery against Baker. Appellant admitted the prior convictions charged against him, and pleaded not guilty to the main charge. No evidence was offered on the part of appellant, and he was convicted of burglary in the first degree. He was sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for 20 years, the sentence to run concurrently with another of 10 years, the judgment imposing which has been affirmed by the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District. People v. King, 4 Cal. App. 213, 87 Pac. 400.

Appellant does not contend that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the verdict of the jury, but he complains of the refusal of the court to give certain instructions. The first of such instructions is that numbered 40, which reads: "If the evidence in this case proves no more than the fact that defendant had possession of the property in evidence, and that he, with one Hamilton, brought the same to No. 835B Howard street, in this city, then the court instructs you that the defendant cannot be convicted of burglary, and that your verdict must be that he is not guilty." This instruction was substantially given several times, at the request both of the appellant and of the people. Some of the instructions given, which we think cover the one refused, are the following: Instruction No. 2, which, in part, reads: "In other words, if the jury believe, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, that a burglary had been committed on the premises in question, as alleged in the information, that certain personal property had been stolen in the commission of such alleged burglary, and that certain of such property was afterwards in the possession of the defendant, this possession, of itself, and standing alone, is not sufficient to justify his conviction, even if the commission of the burglary be established as aforesaid." By instruction No. 48 the court told the jury that it could not convict the appellant of burglary upon proof that he had received stolen property knowing the same to have been stolen. In instruction No. 61, requested by appellant, the court informed the jury that, unless the evidence satisfied their minds that King actually entered the premises described in the information, or aided or abetted some other person in entering said premises, their verdict should be not guilty. Instruction No. 37, also in effect, covers the subject-matter of the rejected instruction.

Appellant next complains of the action of the court in refusing his instructions Nos. 44, 55, and 62; but the substance of these proposed instructions was amply covered by other instructions given by the court. No.

44 was given almost as proposed by part of appellant's instruction No. 39.

It is further urged that the refusal of the court to give appellant's instruction No. 49, and the giving of people's instruction No. 2, was reversible error. These instructions are as follows: "(49) You are instructed that the defendant is not required, and cannot be required, to explain his possession, if any, of the property in evidence here; and the law prohibits you from making any inference or deduction or drawing any conclusion adverse to the defendant from the fact that he has omitted to furnish any explanation of his possession thereof, if he had any such possession." "(2) The people in this case contend that certain of the property, alleged to have been stolen from the said premises at the time of the alleged burglary, was subsequently in the possession of the defendant. Upon the subject of stolen property in the hands of a defendant charged with burglary, the court instructs the jury that the mere possession of stolen property, unexplained by a defendant, however soon after the taking, is not, of itself, and standing alone, sufficient to justify a conviction, even if it be shown to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the alleged burglary was committed. But it is a circumstance which, taken in connection with other incriminating evidence in the case, if any there be, is to be considered by the jury in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of a defendant so charged. The failure of a defendant to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, if it is found that there was such possession, is a circumstance tending to show his guilt, and he is bound to explain such possession in order to remove the effect thereof as a circumstance, considered in connection with other incriminating facts, if any such are found in the evidence. In other words, if the jury believe, to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, that a burglary had been committed on the premises in question, as alleged in the information, that certain personal property had been stolen in the commission of such alleged burglary, and that certain of such property was afterwards in the possession of the defendant, this possession, of itself, and standing alone, is not sufficient to justify his conviction, even if the commission of the burglary be established as aforesaid. But it is a circumstance which, if not satisfactorily explained, tends to show his guilt, and, when taken in connection with other incriminating evidence in the case, if such there be, may be sufficient to satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt, of the guilt of the defendant of the crime of burglary, as alleged in the information." We think the law on the subject of recent possession of stolen property was correctly declared in instruction No. 2, and that therefore the court did not err in giving it, and in refusing instruction No. 49.

The instruction given has the support of numerous decisions in this state. Among them are People v. Kelly, 28 Cal. 423, People v. Gill, 45 Cal. 285, People v. Clough, 59 Cal. 440, People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 457, People v. Etting, 99 Cal. 578, 34 Pac. 237, People v. Abbott, 101 Cal. 648, 36 Pac. 129, People v. Wilson, 135 Cal. 331, 67 Pac. 322, People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 Pac. 288, People v. Lang, 142 Cal. 482, 76 Pac. 232, People v. Horton (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 382, and People v. Hallam (Cal. App.) 92 Pac. 190.

In the case of People v. Wilson, supra, it is said: "The eleventh instruction given to the jury, which is claimed to be error, is as follows: 'If the jury believe from the evidence that the property mentioned in the information, or any portion thereof, was feloniously taken from the person of the prosecuting witness, James A. Carter, as described in the information, and received into the possession of the defendant shortly after being so feloniously taken, the failure, if failure there be, of the defendant to account for such possession, or to show that such possession was honestly obtained, is a circumstance tending to show his guilt, and the accused is bound to explain the possession, in order to remove the effect of the possession as a circumstance to be considered in connection with other suspicious facts, if the evidence disclose any such.' The instruction is almost a literal copy of that given in People v. Abbott, 101 Cal. 647, 36 Pac. 129, and was therein approved. We see no reason to depart from the doctrine of that case."

The instructions given elaborately covered every phase of the case. The record discloses no error; hence the judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

In re HILL'S ESTATE. (Civ. 445.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
May 27, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court, July 24, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—RIGHT TO APPOINTMENT—ORDER OF PREFERENCE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—RELATIVES OF DECEDENT'S DECEASED SPOUSE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, as amended by St. 1907, p. 566, c. 296, provides that administration of the estate of an intestate must be granted to one or more of the persons thereafter mentioned; the relatives of the deceased being entitled to administer only when entitled to succeed to the personal estate or some portion thereof. Brothers are placed fourth in the order of preference, and the next of kin entitled to share in the distribution of the estate are placed seventh. It is further provided that the section shall apply to the relatives of the previously deceased spouse of decedent, when entitled to succeed to some portion of the estate under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, which subdivision, as amended by St. 1907, p. 567, c. 297, provides that if a decedent is a widow or widower, and any portion of the estate was common property, and neither spouse left issue, one-half of the common property would go to the parents of each spouse, respectively, or, if both parents on either side were dead, to the brothers and sisters and their descendants by right of representation. I. and her deceased husband, J., both died without issue or surviving parents. I. had no surviving brother or sister, but had nephews. J. had a brother, who survived both J. and I. There was community property, consisting of both realty and personalty. Held, that J.'s brother was entitled to appointment as administrator of I.'s estate over the nephews of I.

2. SAME—EFFECT OF POSSIBLE EXHAUSTION OF PERSONAL ESTATE BEFORE DISTRIBUTION.

The fact that there might be no community personal estate left for distribution would not affect J.'s brother's right to preference, notwithstanding the first portion of Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, as amended by St. 1907, p. 566, c. 296.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; E. W. Wilson, Judge.

Applications for administration on the estate of Isabella Hill by John Hill, a brother of decedent's deceased husband, and by Charles F. McCann and another, nephews of decedent. From an order denying his application and granting the other application, John Hill appeals. Reversed.

A. W. Hill, for appellant. Gregory & Connick, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from an order appointing respondents administrators of the estate of deceased, Isabella Hill. It appears that Stephen Hill and Isabella Hill were married in 1865; that Stephen died intestate and without issue of the marriage, December 25, 1906, in the county of Humboldt, leaving quite a large estate therein; that his surviving wife was duly appointed administratrix of his estate January 29, 1907, and died intestate and without issue December 26, 1907; that the said Isabella, as administratrix, filed her inventory and appraisal of the estate of her deceased husband on February 12, 1907, showing said estate to consist of personal and real property, of which $90,000 was reported as real estate and separate property and $13,428.61 was community property. Of this latter item $7,868.61 was personal property and $5,560 was real property. It appeared, also, that during her administration real estate had been sold to the amount of $1,160, and that $160 of personal property had been set apart to the widow, $2,400 had been paid out on account of family allowance, $927.65 for payment of claims, including funeral expenses and of last illness, and $750 for a monument to decedent. There had been no decree of distribution, and no account of any kind rendered or settled. Notice to creditors had been ordered; but it did not appear whether such notice had been given, or whether the time for the presentation of claims had expired. Stephen Hill died without father or mother, and Isabella died without father, mother, brother, or sister. The matter was heard upon the petition of appellant, brother of Stephen Hill, deceased, and the petition of respondents, nephews of deceased, Isabella Hill.

Appellant specifies insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision denying the petition of John Hill, in this: that Isabella Hill died, a widow, without father, mother, brother, or sister, leaving as part of her estate an undivided interest in the estate of her deceased husband, and that appellant is a brother to said Stephen; that the evidence is insufficient, because petitioners McCann and Connick are nephews of decedent, Isabella, while petitioner John Hill is brother of deceased, Stephen Hill. For like reasons the decision is specified to be against law. The sole question is: Was the brother of Stephen Hill entitled to letters in preference to the nephews of Isabella?

Section 1386, subd. 8, of the Civil Code, as amended March 18, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 567, c. 297), provides as follows: "If the deceased is a widow, or widower, and leaves no issue, and the estate, or any portion thereof was common property of such decedent and his or her deceased spouse, while such spouse was living, such property goes in equal shares" to his or her children and their descendants, and, if none, then one half to the father and mother in equal shares, or, if both be dead then to the brothers and sisters and their descendants, "and the other half goes to the father and mother of such deceased spouse in equal shares, * * * or, if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such deceased spouse and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation." A different disposition is made of the separate property, for by this subdivision 8 all the separate property of the deceased spouse which came to decedent by descent goes, in the case here, "in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such spouse and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation." It will be seen, therefore, that appellant is entitled to succeed to some portion of both the real and personal estate of the decedent and of both the separate and common property involved.

Section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure, prescribing the order in which certain persons are entitled to administer, was amended March 18, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 566, c. 296), as follows: "This section shall apply to the relatives of the previously deceased spouse of decedent when entitled to succeed to some portion of the estate under subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code." Prior to this amendment the section applied only to the relatives of the deceased, but by this amendment it now applies also to the relatives of the previously deceased spouse. It will be observed that by the amendment the section now applies to relatives of the previously deceased spouse of decedent, "when entitled to succeed to some portion of the estate," whereas, by the first paragraph of this section, the relatives of the deceased are "entitled to administer only when they are entitled to succeed to his personal estate or some portion thereof." It is not necessary in the present case to determine whether or not this latter provision applies to appellant, for he is shown to be entitled to succeed to some portion of both the personal property of decedent, as well as to a portion of the realty.

It is urged, however, that appellant failed to establish any interest in the personal property of decedent, because her estate is not closed and distributed, and hence it cannot be known whether upon final distribution there will be left any personal estate for distribution. This cannot be the test, for, if it were, it would apply equally to the relatives of decedent, and neither they nor the relatives of the previously deceased spouse would be qualified to apply for letters. Manifestly, there was some personal estate (the amount is not material) to which appellant succeeded at the death of decedent and this satisfies the statute.

By the provisions of section 1365, Code of Civil Procedure, the brothers are fourth in order of precedence, and the next of kin are seventh. As the amended section applies equally "to the relatives of the previously deceased spouse of decedent," the order or precedence must necessarily so apply, and clearly, in our opinion, the order prescribed by the statute must be followed; and this gives the brothers precedence over the next of kin, whether they be "relatives" of decedent or of the deceased spouse.

The order is reversed.

Supreme Court, July 27, 1908.)

1. FORGERY—CHARACTER OF DOCUMENT.

Under Pen. Code, § 470, making guilty of forgery one who, with intent to defraud, counterfeits or forges the seal or handwriting of another, the document forged or counterfeited must not only be false and forged, but it must also be of such a character as to be available in law to work the intended injury or fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Forgery, §§ 28-47.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2900-2909; vol. 8, p. 7665.]

2. SAME—INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION.

An indictment for forgery need not expressly allege every fact, the existence of which is assumed by the forged document, when the instrument on its face is valid, and it is not necessary, in an indictment for forging the name of S. to a proof of loss, to allege that the insurance company had issued a policy to S., or that the property insured was damaged by fire.

3. SAME.

Where an instrument is perfect and intelligible, and its nature can be seen by the court itself, no averments as to extraneous facts are necessary; and hence an indictment for forging a proof of loss under a fire policy issued to S. was not defective for failing to allege the modes in which the proof of loss might be used to deceive others, since such proof, with a forged assignment from S., could have operated to defraud the insurance company.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Forgery, § 78.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Wm. P. Lawlor, Judge.

Joseph V. Di Ryana and another were convicted of forgery, and from the judgment and from an order denying motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

H. H. McCloskey and Wm. S. Barnes, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendants were convicted of forgery. They moved for a new trial and in arrest of judgment, which motions were denied. From the judgment, and from the order denying their motion for a new trial, defendants prosecute this appeal.

The indictment alleges that the defendants committed the crime of forgery "by falsely and fraudulently forging and counterfeiting the handwriting of Pasquale Solimena to a certain instrument in writing for the payment of money," which instrument was an ordinary form of proof of loss used by insurance companies. The document is as follows:

"To the Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Co. of Hamburg, Germany: By your policy of insurance No. 123,915, dated March 23, 1906, issued to Solimena Bros. by Rudolph Herold, Jr., your agent at San Francisco, Cal., for the term of one year to the 23d day of March, 1907, you insured the party herein and therein named against loss or damage by fire, to the amount of two thousand dollars, as more fully appears by the printed portions and conditions of said policy, viz., 1,000 on stock of lumber; 1,000 on machinery, tools and implements of trade, including motor, all while contained in frame building situate No. 814 east side of Battery street, between Broadway and Vallejo street, San Francisco, Cal. (2) The property thus insured belonged to Pasquale Solimena and Alfonso Solimena, doing business as Solimena Bros. and no other person or party had any interest therein. (3) The building was occupied by the following persons and occupations and no other person or persons: First floor, stores and assured manufacturing furniture and fixtures of wood; residences above. (4) A fire occurred on the 20th day of April, 1906, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., by which the property named in the policy was destroyed or damaged as hereinafter set forth in detail. (5) The whole value of the respective items of the property amounted to $——, which was the actual cash value at the time of the fire, as set forth in annexed Schedule A. (6) The whole amount of loss sustained is $1,000, as set forth in annexed Schedule A. (7) The whole insurance on said property at the time of the fire, including that above mentioned, was $2,000, and no more. See Schedule B annexed. (8) We claim of your company its proportion of said loss, viz. $1,000, as per apportionment Schedule B. (9) The fire originated as follows, viz. (State here fully the circumstances connected with the origin of the fire): From general conflagration, and premises were undamaged by earthquake. (10) Nothing has been done by us or with our privity or consent to violate the conditions of insurance, or void the policy. Witness our hands at San Francisco this 31st day of May, 1906. Pasquale Solimena of and for Solimena Bros.

"State of California, County of San Francisco. ———, 19—. Personally appeared Pasquale Solimena, the signer of the foregoing statement, and made solemn oath that said statement is just and true, according to the best of his knowledge and belief. Before me, Thomas S. Burnes, Notary Public in and for the City and County of San Francisco, State of California. [Seal.]"

The evidence shows that there was also forged, by the defendants, an assignment of the interest in the claim of Solimena Bros., under the policy of insurance to one of the defendants. This assignment was presented to the Hamburg-Bremen Insurance Company, with the forged instrument set forth in the indictment, and thereupon the insurance company paid the defendants the insurance money, amounting to $1,000. The charge of forgery here, however, is based on the claim of loss alone. The instrument set forth in the indictment is not one of those specifically enumerated in section 470 of the Penal Code which may be the subject of forgery, nor was the indictment altogether framed on the theory that it was; for it will be noted that it alleges that the crime was committed by "forging and counterfeiting the handwriting" of Pasquale Solimena to the named document. This allegation brings the defendant within that part of section 470 of the Penal Code which, in its terms, makes one guilty of forgery who, with intent to defraud, "counterfeits or forges the seal or handwriting of another." In other words, one may be guilty of the crime of forgery by counterfeiting the handwriting of another to an instrument not specifically enumerated in said section. Nevertheless, to constitute the crime of forgery, the document forged or counterfeited must not only be false and forged, but it must also be of such a character as to be made available in law to work the intended injury or fraud. In the case of People v. Turner, 113 Cal. 280, 45 Pac. 331, the defendant forged a certificate of recordation on the back of a deed, and it was contended that the act complained of was not known to our law of forgery. The court, speaking of the information, which was based on the same part of section 470 as is the indictment here, said: "By the terms of that section one who 'counterfeits or forges the seal or handwriting of another's is guilty of forgery. Fraud and deceit are essential elements to the crime, and unless the counterfeited handwriting be of such a nature that some one might possibly be defrauded by it, the mere fact that it is a false writing is not sufficient to constitute an offense. But, on the other hand, if the counterfeit writing might possibly deceive another, and was prepared with intent to deceive and defraud another, then it becomes immaterial whether any person was actually injured or not." A proof of loss is an instrument recognized by the criminal law of this state (Pen. Code, § 549), by text-writers, and by the adjudicated cases of this and other countries. Its functions in insurance matters are well known. The writing in question was a complete and valid proof of loss, and, as such, possessed at least some seeming legal efficacy.

Having said this much about the general nature, both of the indictment and the claim of loss, we turn to the objections urged by the appellant. It is true that the indictment does not aver that there was a policy of insurance issued to Solemina Bros. by the said insurance company, nor, if there was such a policy, that the property insured was damaged or destroyed by fire, etc. Nor was it necessary, in our judgment, as contended by appellant, to allege these matters; for, according to the decisions in this state, it is unnecessary that the indictment should expressly allege every fact the existence of which is assumed by the forged document, when the instrument on its face is valid. Thus, in People v. Todd, 77 Cal. 464, 19 Pac. 883, the defendant was charged with forging a will, and it was held unnecessary to state in the indictment the fact that the testator had property that might be subject to the terms of the will. Again, in People v. Bibby, 91 Cal. 470, 27 Pac. 781, the defendant was charged with having forged an order of the trustees of a school district, upon the county superintendent of schools, for a requisition upon the county auditor for a warrant against the county school fund; and the court held that the order charged to have been forged was valid on its face, and therefore that it was unnecessary to allege the facts assumed in the forged order, such as the existence of the school district, or that the trustees whose names were signed to the order were the trustees of such district. In Ex parte Finley, 66 Cal. 264, 5 Pac. 223, a decree of divorce was forged, and the court said: "It is not necessary to hold that the recitals in a decree of divorce, set out in the information, are the equivalent of an express averment that the parties to the divorce were married. We hold that the marriage need not be averred. They may have been married, and on its face the writing shows that it may have been used to consummate a fraud."

In People v. Turner, supra, the Supreme Court said: "But on the other hand, if the counterfeit writing might possibly deceive another, and was prepared with intent to deceive and defraud another, then it becomes immaterial whether any person was actually injured or not. It may be readily seen that one may be exposed to fraud and injury by a forged certificate such as this. He might rest under the assurance that the certificate carried with it that his deed was, in fact, of record and is subjected to injury, or perhaps to loss of the property at the hands of the forgers, who might thereafter sell or mortgage to an innocent third party, whose deed was placed of record." There, apparently, it was unnecessary to allege aliunde the ways in which the certificate might be used to effect an injury.

Appellant further contends, substantially, that, if it be assumed that the instrument is a complete proof of loss, it alone could not possibly work an injury on any person; that it might be the subject of forgery under certain conditions, but that those conditions must be pleaded in the indictment, or no crime is charged, and by way of illustration he says: "If, in addition to the forged claim of loss, there were a forged assignment from Solemina Bros. to the appellant, the two instruments, taken together, might tend to defraud." This position is untenable. It is true that whenever a forged writing is defective or unintelligible, and consequently it cannot be seen in what way it could operate to defraud, then its capacity in that respect must be made to appear by the averment of existing extraneous facts. Hughes on Criminal Law and Practice, § 935; Rembert v. State, 53 Ala. 469, 25 Am. Rep. 639; State v. Wills, 70 Minn. 403, 73 N. W. 178. But when, as here, the instrument is perfect and intelligible, and its nature, extent, and capacity can be seen and judged by the court itself, this rule does not apply, and no such averments are necessary. Snell v. State, 21 Tenn. 347; People v. Ah Woo, 28 Cal. 211; People v. Todd, 77 Cal. 465, 19 Pac. 883; People v. Van Alstine, 57 Mich. 69, 23 N. W. 594; Hughes on Criminal Procedure, § 943. McClain, in his work on Criminal Law, § 758, expresses the rule thus: "By the weight of authority it is sufficient if the instrument appears to be one that might be good and effectual, if valid, though the circumstances which would render it effectual do not appear." In Commonwealth v. Costello, 120 Mass. 369, it is said that an indictment for the forgery of a bond to dissolve an attachment need not state in detail how the bond could have been used to defraud; "it is enough that it appeared from the character of the instrument, together with the provisions of the statute, that it might have been so used, in connection with other facts, real or simulated, either then existing or with which it was to be afterwards connected."

From these authorities, and others to be

presently cited, we apprehend that it was unnecessary to allege, in the indictment, the modes in which the proof of loss might be employed to deceive another. It, with a forged assignment or a power of attorney from Solimena Bros., or by some one impersonating either of them, could have operated to defraud the Hamburg-Bremen Fire Insurance Company. It thus clearly appears that some one could have been deceived and injured by a proof of loss such as this. In the case of State v. Hilton, 35 Kan. 338, 11 Pac. 164, one Brown had his life insured in the National Union, a mutual benefit insurance company. One of the officers of the company received notice that Brown had died. Upon receiving the notice he forwarded blanks for proof of death. The defendant was appointed a committee to investigate the cause of death of Brown and after a short time the proofs of death were sent by defendant to the insurance company. These proofs were untrue, because, in fact, Brown was not dead. The papers returned by the defendant to the company were headed, "Official notice and proof of death," and embraced several separate and complete documents. On page 1 there was a statement with questions answered; on page 2 the certificate of the attending physician, with the statement of an officer under oath that the attending physician was respectable, entitled to credit, and in active practice; on page 3 there was a report of a council examining committee on the cause of death. Attached to the proof of death, and on page 3 thereof, there was an undertaker's affidavit and a clergyman's certificate. The defendant was charged with having forged this affidavit and certificate. The court said: "The undertaker's affidavit and clergyman's certificate, as executed, are complete and separate instruments, and are not defective or in any way invalid on their faces. It is true that all of these separate and independent instruments are necessary to complete the proof of death; but, in our opinion, the undertaker's affidavit and the clergyman's certificate, as executed, are as complete and separate instruments as though they were wholly detached from the other papers constituting the proof of death. We do not think that where a certain number of written instruments are required to be presented in connection with each other as indispensable to establish any alleged fact, a person who fraudulently and falsely makes one or more of these written instruments is guiltless of offense because he does not falsely make all, or because, in some of the other written instruments to be presented, a discrepancy or defect occurs which prevents the accomplishment of his fraudulent purpose. The undertaker's affidavit and the clergyman's certificate are in the exact form required, and we think are the subject of forgery. * * *

It has been held in a number of cases that it is forgery to make an instrument with intent to defraud, although, if it had been genuine, other steps must have been taken to complete the instrument. Hughes on Crim. Law & Prac., § 935. We think the reasoning in those cases is applicable to this case. In Commonwealth v. Costello, 120 Mass. 367, quoted with approval in People v. Bibby, 91 Cal. 470, 27 Pac. 781, the defendant was charged with forging a bond, to be used for the purpose of dissolving an attachment. It was contended that the bond was invalid in law, because, not having been approved, it could not operate to release the attachment. In that case, before the bond could have been effectual to injure or defraud any one, certain steps must have been taken, yet the court held it to be forgery, although the steps never had been taken. The court said: "It is contended that the bond, alleged to have been intended to dissolve the attachment, could not have operated so to do, and that, as it was void for that purpose (the steps requisite to give it validity not having been taken), there could have been no forgery of it. It is true that the false making of an instrument merely frivolous, or one which upon its face is clearly void, is not forgery, because from its character it could not have operated to defraud, or been intended for that purpose; but, if the instrument is one made with intent to defraud, although, before it can have effect, other steps must be taken or other proceedings had upon the basis of it, then the false making is a forgery, notwithstanding such steps may never have been taken or proceedings had. * * * How this bond could have been used to defraud need not have been set out in the indictment in detail; it was enough that it appeared from the character of the instrument, together with the provisions of the statute, that it might have been so used, in connection with other facts, real or simulated, either there existing, or with which it was to be afterwards connected."

There are other reasons apparent to us why the false making of the proof of loss in question could operate to injure another; but what we have said above may be deemed sufficient for the purposes of this case.

From what has been said, it follows that the judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

itations, but not showing that intervener is in possession, and not connecting himself with defendant, shows no cause of action or defense.

4. PLEADING—SEPARATE COUNTS.

Averments in one count of a complaint in intervention cannot aid another count thereof, into which they are not incorporated by appropriate reference, or otherwise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by Ashley D. Cameron, executor of Annie L. Cameron, deceased, against Ah Quong; Chin Shin intervening. There was judgment for intervener, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Welles Whitmore and C. C. Merriman, for appellant. Riordan & Lande, F. H. Short, and F. E. Cook, for respondent.

HART, J. Action in ejectment. The plaintiff alleges ownership of the lands in dispute and ouster by the defendant, and prays for restitution of said premises, for damages for withholding the same and for the sum of $1,750 as the value of the rents and profits from January, 1898, to and including a portion of the year 1903. The defendant, Ah Quong, answering the complaint, specifically denies the material averments thereof, and then pleads the bar of the statute of limitations. Chin Shin intervened, and as a first cause of action sets up title to the lands in dispute by adverse possession and alleges that the defendant, Ah Quong, holds possession of the same as his tenant; and, as a second cause of action, intervener alleges that he is the owner of two certain mortgages subsisting against the premises, and of which he acquired ownership by purchase from and assignment by the respective mortgagees, and that by reason of his said ownership of said mortgages the "plaintiff is not entitled to the judgment in this action prayed for by him, or to any relief whatever." The plaintiff interposed an answer to the first cause of action set out in intervener's complaint, denying in detail the material allegations thereof, and moved to strike out the second count in said complaint on the ground, among others, that it "does not allege possession or right of possession." The court refused to grant the motion to strike out the alleged second cause of action, and the plaintiff made no answer thereto. Upon the issues thus made up, a trial was had and a judgment rendered that the plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the lands in controversy, and that he be given possession thereof, "provided that before he shall be entitled to have actual possession or occupation of said lands and premises, or any part thereof, or any right to any writ or process out of this court to place him in possession thereof he, said plaintiff, shall first pay to said intervener, said Chin Shin, the full amount of the principal sums and accrued interest due to said intervener under

CAMERON v. AH QUONG (CHIN SHIN, Intervener). (Civ. 437.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. May 28, 1908.)

1. PLEADING — COMPLAINT — MOTION TO STRIKE.

In challenging the sufficiency of the facts, alleged in a count of a complaint in intervention, to constitute a cause of action or a defense, a demurrer, rather than a motion to strike out, is the better practice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 400, 1092.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR—OBJECTION TO SUFFICIENCY OF COMPLAINT.

Notwithstanding failure to demur to a complaint, objection that it fails to state a cause of action for want of essential facts may be made on appeal, though evidence showing the facts was admitted without objection.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1232-1236.]

3. EJECTMENT — COMPLAINT IN INTERVENTION — SUFFICIENCY.

A count of a complaint in intervention in ejectment, merely alleging that plaintiff in the action ought not to maintain the action and is not entitled to the judgment asked for by him, or to any relief by reason of the following facts, and then proceeding to show notes of plaintiff secured by mortgage on the land held by intervener, right to foreclose which is barred by lim-the terms and provisions of said two mortgages owned by said intervener and as set forth in the findings of the court herein," etc. The appeal is from the judgment and the order denying plaintiff a new trial.

We are forced to the conclusion that the intervener, in his alleged second cause of action, upon which alone the court below finds that he is entitled to relief, totally fails to state facts justifying the decree entered in his behalf. It may first with propriety be observed that the better practice would have been, perhaps, rather than a motion to strike out the alleged second cause of action, to have interposed a demurrer thereto. The vital ground of the motion, however, is in effect a challenge to the sufficiency of the facts alleged in said purported second count of the complaint in intervention to state a cause of action or defense. Besides, the point is made here that the facts alleged therein do not constitute a cause of action, or a defense, and it is well settled that, where a complaint or pleading is so deficient in its averments as that it does not even attempt to state a cause of action or a defense, the point may be raised here for the first time. In other words, "where a complaint in an action fails to state a cause of action, for want of essential facts, objection thereto is not waived by failure to demur, nor cured by verdict or judgment," and the point may be urged upon appeal, notwithstanding the failure to demur. Code Civ. Proc. § 434; Hurley v. Ryan, 119 Cal. 71, 51 Pac. 20; Bane v. Peerman, 125 Cal. 220, 57 Pac. 885; Buckman v. Hatch, 139 Cal. 53, 72 Pac. 445.

The facts presented at the trial show, and the proposition is not questioned, so far as the evidence is concerned: That the intervener, through the defendant, Ah Quong, as his tenant, was, for fully seven years prior to the institution of this action by plaintiff, in possession of the premises in controversy; that he was originally put in possession by Chapman, the mortgagee of the second mortgage, upon purchasing and thus acquiring ownership of the latter and the note, to secure payment of which said mortgage was executed by plaintiff's testate, notwithstanding the fact (which we think under the evidence could exert no material influence against the right to the relief asked for by intervener) that there is no provision in said mortgage authorizing the mortgagee to take and hold possession of the premises as an additional security for the debt. Relying upon the undisputed evidence of his possession, the respondent intervener insists that the findings and the decree of the court below should be sustained upon the equitable principles enunciated and applied in the case of Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314, as well as upon the equitable principle that "he who seeks equity must do equity," invoked in that class of cases in which the relief sought is the quieting of title and in which, by virtue of said principle, the mortgagee of an outlawed mortgage, although not in possession of the mortgaged premises, is held to be entitled to the satisfaction of the mortgage debt before the relief demanded by the plaintiff will be awarded. Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225; De Cazara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 132, 22 Pac. 74; Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 458, 27 Pac. 763. But, while the evidence appears to clearly disclose that the "equities of the case" are decidedly with the respondent intervener, and that he is entitled to the relief which the court below has undertaken to grant to him, an insuperable obstacle to the upholding of the decree lies, as already suggested, in the complete failure of his complaint in the second count thereof to state a cause of action. The case here, it must be borne in mind, is not an equitable suit to quiet title. The plaintiff brought an action at law to secure possession of the premises involved against one Ah Quong, who, it is alleged, unlawfully ousted plaintiff of possession of said premises, and who, at the time of the commencement of said action, still unlawfully held such possession. The second cause of action set out in the complaint in intervention nowhere alleges that the intervener has or ever had possession of the premises in dispute. It merely alleges that "the plaintiff in this action ought not to have or maintain said action, and is not entitled to the judgment therein prayed by him, or to any relief whatever by reason of the following facts and circumstances, to wit," and then follow averments of the execution of the notes and of the mortgages on the premises to secure the payment of said notes, of the assignment of said notes and mortgages to intervener, and his ownership thereof. The notes are set out in hæc verba, and the right to foreclose the mortgages executed contemporaneously with the execution of the notes is thus shown to have been barred by the statute of limitations at the time this action was instituted. It is therefore plainly obvious that, in order to successfully defend against ejectment by the mortgagor, the intervener necessarily should have alleged possession of the mortgaged premises in himself, and that the omission to do so constitutes failure to state any cause of action or defense whatever. "This right to retain the possession of the land is not coincident with a right to foreclose his mortgage, or dependent upon such right, but depends solely upon the existence of the debt. The possession of the land is a specific security for the debt, distinct and separate from the mortgage, which has been conferred by an act of the debtor, and the right to retain the same is independent and distinct from any right springing from the mortgage." Spect v. Spect, supra. Thus it is clear that the gist of the intervener's defense against ejectment by the plaintiff is his possession of the mortgaged premises, held, by consent of the mortgagor, as an additional security for the debt. It is true that in his first cause of action or defense, in which title to the premises by adverse possession is claimed, intervener alleges that the defendant, Ah Quong, against whom ejectment is brought by the plaintiff, holds possession of the premises as his (intervener's) tenant; but, in his second cause of action, as we have seen, his possession under any circumstances or upon any conditions is nowhere referred to, either expressly or by appropriate or any reference to the allegations contained in the first cause of action or defense. In short, the situation is this: The plaintiff proceeds in ejectment against Ah Quong. The latter tenders an issue upon the question of the right of possession. Intervener (eliminating from consideration his first cause of action, as may properly be done, for the court below was justified in finding that title by adverse possession was not established by the proofs) undertakes to defend against plaintiff's claim of right of possession as against Ah Quong upon a pleading which fails to allege possession in himself or to connect himself in the slightest degree with Ah Quong's possession. His position therefore is no better than or different from that of one having an outlawed mortgage against the premises and who is not in possession under such mortgage. So far as the averments of his second cause of action or defense disclose, the intervener is a perfect stranger to the transaction out of which originates the action in ejectment against Ah Quong. In other words, in an action in ejectment by A. against B., it is not supposable for an instant that C., a perfect stranger to B. and the holder and owner of a mortgage, the right to foreclose which is barred, could intervene and in effect say to the court: "You have no right to eject B., because I have a mortgage on the premises barred by the statute of limitations, and therefore, upon equitable principles, B. is entitled to hold possession of said premises until the debt which my mortgage was given to secure is paid."

The fact that the appellant failed to object to evidence addressed to issues not tendered by the pleadings can be of no service or avail to the respondent intervener. It is well settled that where a complaint, as is the fact in the case of intervener's pleading here, entirely fails to state a cause of action, evidence offered and received, whether against or without objection, upon the theory, unsupported or unfounded by the averments of the complaint, that the issues necessary to be determined are tendered and submitted by the pleadings, cannot cure the total absence of allegations essential to a statement of a cause of action. Of course, the rule is different where there is mere defectiveness in the statement of sufficient facts; but, if the rule were otherwise as to the first stated proposition, then, certainly,

Of course, it will not be disputed that when a complaint contains two or more causes of action the rule is that they shall be distinctly and separately stated. If the pleading is of this character, each separate division or count or cause of action or defense must be complete by itself, and must either contain all the averments necessary to a perfect cause of action or defense or the omitted facts supplied by appropriate reference to material facts properly set forth in a former count, thus incorporating them into and making them a part of the subsequent count or cause of action or defense. Pomeroy's Code Remedies (4th Ed.) § 466; Hopkins v. Contra Costa County, 106 Cal. 570, 39 Pac. 933. As before observed, the principle applied in the case of Booth v. Hoskins, supra, and other cases heretofore cited upon the same point, cannot be applied here.

If the plaintiff had proceeded in equity to remove a cloud from or to quiet title to the premises, the situation would be very much different from that presented here. In such a case, the intervener here could, as a defendant, whether directly proceeded against or as an unknown defendant, defend against the relief thus sought by setting up the mortgages, and, under the equitable maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity, prevent plaintiff from securing the relief for which the averments of his complaint called until the mortgage debts had first been satisfied. It may pertinently be suggested that the respondent intervener might have saved himself some trouble and expense if, when the motion was made to strike out his second cause of action or defense, he had amended said second count by inserting therein averments covering the point upon which we feel constrained to reverse the judgment.

The appellant, as before observed, failed to object to testimony offered in support of intervener's possession of the premises, and, as we find no prejudicial errors in the rulings of the court reviewable on an appeal from the order, the same will be affirmed.

For the reasons expressed in the foregoing, however, the judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — ORDINANCES — CONFLICT WITH STATUTE — RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.

In determining whether an ordinance conflicts with the general law on the same subject, a court must examine the ordinance, the general law, the subject-matter, the evils intended to be remedied, and then apply common-sense principles to each particular case, and an ordinance should be sustained if it can be reconciled to the statutes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 274-280.]

2. SAME.

Courts are disinclined to declare void an ordinance of a sanitary nature, or preventing the sale of adulterated or impure food, or other products, but if it conflicts with the general law, it cannot be sustained.

San Francisco Ordinance No. 2944 and Amending Ordinance 1208, providing a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $500, or imprisonment for not less than 10 days nor more than 100 days, for selling impure or "adulterated milk," defined to be milk containing less than 12 per cent. of milk solids, more than 88 per cent. of water or fluids, or less than 3.3 per cent. fats from January 1st to April 30th, and 3.4 per cent. from May 1st to December 31st, is void within Const. art. 12, § 11, authorizing municipalities to make sanitary, etc., regulations not conflicting with general laws, as being in conflict with Act March 15, 1907, St. 1907, p. 265, c. 216, providing a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or imprisonment for not less than 10 nor more than 60 days for selling adulterated milk, defined as containing less than 3 per cent. of milk fats, and less than 8.5 per cent. solids not fat, excepting, etc., and expressly providing a general scheme to prevent adulteration and sale of impure milk or dairy products.

Application by L. Desanta for a writ of habeas corpus. Prisoner discharged.

Jas. C. Sims, J. A. Spinetti, and Roland Becsey, for petitioner. Wm. H. Langdon and Louis Ferrari, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. The prisoner seeks to be released on habeas corpus from imprisonment under a judgment convicting him of a misdemeanor, to wit, selling milk containing less than 3.4 per cent. of fats, in violation of certain ordinances of the city and county of San Francisco, known as Ordinance No. 2944, and Amending Ordinance No. 1208. The material parts of said ordinances necessary for a discussion of this case are as follows:

"Sec. 8. The terms 'adulterated,' 'impure,' 'unhealthy' and 'unwholesome,' as used in this ordinance, mean (1st) milk containing less than 12 per centum of milk solids; (2nd) milk containing more than 88 per centum of water or fluids; (3rd) milk containing less than 3.3 per centum of fats from January 1st to April 30th, and 3.4 per centum of fats from May 1st to December 31st, of each year.
* * *

"Sec. 18. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars and not more than five hundred dollars; or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than ten days nor more than one hundred days."

It is claimed that the part of said ordinance involved here is void, because in conflict with the state law upon the same subject, and thus in contravention of section 11 of article 12 of the state Constitution, which provides as follows:

"Any county, city, town or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

The Legislature, long after the adoption of the ordinance, passed an act entitled "An act to prohibit adulteration and deception in the sale of dairy products, and defining adulteration in dairy products; to establish a standard of quality in dairy products, and to provide for enforcing its provisions," approved March 15, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 265, c. 216 et seq.). The act consists of eight sections, with various subdivisions of such sections, and evidently was intended to cover fully the subjects indicated in its title. So far as necessary for the purposes of this opinion, its provisions are as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person to produce, manufacture or prepare for sale, or to sell or offer for sale, or have on hand for sale, any milk or product of milk that is adulterated within the meaning of this act. * * * It shall be unlawful for any person under this act, when selling or offering for sale, or having on hand for sale, milk or any product of milk, to use the words 'milk,' 'condensed milk,' 'sweetened condensed milk,' 'evaporated cream,' 'milk,' or 'butter,' either verbally or printed or written on any label or printed matter used in connection with the sale or offering for sale, or having on hand for sale, of milk or any product of milk, or upon any bill of fare used in any hotel, restaurant or other place where meals are served, when the article shall not conform with the provisions of section 2 of this act.

"Sec. 2. Milk and the products of milk enumerated in this section shall be deemed adulterated within the meaning of this act if it or they shall not conform with the following definitions or standards: (1) Milk is the fresh, clean, lacteal secretion obtained by the complete milking of one or more healthy cows, properly fed and kept, excluding that obtained within fifteen days before and five days after calving, and contains not less than 3 per cent. of milk fats, and not less than 8.5 per cent. of solids not fat. * * *

"Sec. 3. It shall be the duty of the State Dairy Bureau now existing under the laws of this state to enforce the provisions of this act, provided that nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any city or county board of health, or other city or county official, from enforcing the provisions of this act.

"Sec. 4. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than ten nor more than sixty days. * * * All fines collected under this act shall be paid to the State Dairy Bureau when the complaint is made through the State Dairy Bureau, and the State Dairy Bureau shall pay the same to the State Treasurer, and the amount paid by the State Dairy Bureau to the State Treasurer is hereby appropriated to the use of the State Dairy Bureau in enforcing this act for the fiscal year in which the amount was paid to the State Treasurer. * * *

"Sec. 6. It shall be the duty of the district attorney, upon application of the State Dairy Bureau, or of any city or county board of health, to attend to the prosecution in the name of the people of any complaint entered for violation of any of the provisions of this act within his district.

"Sec. 7. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed."

The act provides fully as to correctly labeling all packages of dairy products, and defines skimmed milk, condensed milk, condensed skimmed milk, cream, evaporated cream, milk fat, butter fat and butter. The statute is a general law, and the question is as to whether or not the part of the ordinance under which the prisoner was convicted is in conflict with the statute, for, if so, it must fall in submission to such general law. There is no question as to the rule that an ordinance or by-law must not be in conflict with the general law upon the same subject; but the question as to whether or not an ordinance or by-law is in conflict with the general law is sometimes difficult of solution, and necessarily cannot be determined by any fixed rule. It is the duty of courts to examine the ordinance, the general law, the subject-matter, the evils intended to be remedied, and then to apply the principles of common sense to the solution of each particular case as it arises. It is, and should be, always the endeavor of courts to sustain an ordinance or by-law, and, if possible, to reconcile and uphold both the ordinance and the statute. Courts are loth to declare void any ordinance of a sanitary nature, or relating to and preventing the sale of adulterated or impure food or other products; but in case there is a conflict, in the light of the above rule, the duty of the court must be performed.

After carefully comparing the ordinance in this case and the general law, we are forced to conclude that the ordinance is in conflict with such law. They both prescribe a punishment for the same acts, to wit, the sale of impure or adulterated milk. The ordinance provides a penalty of not less than $25 nor more than $500, while the statute fixes the fine at not less than $25 nor more than $200. The ordinance provides that the imprisonment must not be less than 10 nor more than 100 days, and the statute provides for imprisonment for not less than 10 nor more than 60 days. Under the statute milk is deemed pure, and may be sold anywhere in the state, if it contains 3 per cent. of fats; but under the ordinance any one who sells milk containing 3 per cent. of fats, and less than the percentage named in the ordinance, commits a crime. Under the general law milk may be sold where it contains 9.25 per cent. of milk solids, but under the ordinance every person who sells milk containing 9.25 per cent. of solids commits a crime, unless the milk contains at least 12 per cent. of milk solids. It is thus plain that the ordinance prohibits and prescribes a punishment for the same acts that are legal under the statute. It also fixes a different standard for milk from that prescribed by the statute. The ordinance not only prescribes a punishment for the same acts that are punished under the general law, but it prescribes a punishment for acts that are legal under the general law. It prescribes a greater punishment than the general law for the same acts which are punishable under the general law; and it prescribes a greater punishment for acts that are no crime under the general law than the general law prescribes for acts that it makes criminal. The general law provides for inspection of milk and dairy products by the State Dairy Bureau, and that all fines shall be paid to the State Dairy Bureau, and for its use in enforcing the act. The ordinance makes no such disposition of fines. The general law provides for its enforcement, either by the State Dairy Bureau or the city or county board of health. It provides that the city or county board of health may enter and inspect premises where milk or products of milk are produced or manufactured.

It is thus plain that the state law provides a general and universal scheme to prevent the adulteration and sale of impure milk or dairy products. Milk, which is pure within the meaning and definition of such law, may be sold anywhere in the state. It may be sold in Los Angeles and in San Francisco. It is said that the Legislature, in fixing a minimum beyond which no board of supervisors could go—that is, that no board could by ordinance make it legal to sell milk which did not come up to the standard prescribed by the state law—did not intend to prohibit such board or legislative body from raising the standard or fixing the standard for such city. We do not agree with such contention. The effect of the general law is to authorize the sale of milk which comes up to the standard there prescribed. An ordinance which prescribed a different standard, and punishes any one for selling milk which is pure within the standard prescribed by the general law, is in conflict with the general law.

In Mayor, etc., of New York v. Nichols, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 209, it appeared that the defendant had been sued to recover the amount of certain penalties, incurred for the violation of an ordinance of the city relating to the sale of hay, and providing for inspectors to inspect and weigh hay, and to mark the quality and weight on the bundles, and providing that any person who should sell hay without first having the same inspected and weighed according to the requirements of the ordinance should forfeit the sum of $5 for every bundle sold. The general laws of the state provided that every person who should put up and press any bundle of hay for market should mark or brand, in a legible manner, the initials of his Christian name, and his surname at full length, and the name of the town in which he resides, on some board or wood attached to the bundle. The general statute made further provision as to the hay being of good quality, and provided a penalty for any violation of its provisions. The court held that the ordinance must give way to the provisions of the Revised Statutes, and in the opinion said: "These provisions obviously authorize a sale of pressed hay without inspection, and the corporation of the city of New York possessed no power to repeal or supersede them. If they are violated, a remedy is pointed out, and this remedy must be resorted to. The system of inspecting hay is abolished by the statute, and, in place of it, the seller is required to prepare the article for market in a particular manner, at the peril of being subjected to the penalties annexed."

In State v. Tyrrell, 73 Conn. 407, 47 Atl. 686, it was held that the defendant could not be prosecuted for a violation of a city ordinance, making it unlawful to offer or expose for sale certain milk without first having obtained from the board of health of the city a license where the subject was fully covered by the statute of the state. The court said: "Judging the ordinance of the city of Waterbury, referred to in the statement, by its words, we should be led to believe that the purpose of the board of aldermen in passing it was to prevent the sale and consumption, in that city, of impure or adulterated milk. To accomplish that purpose the ordinance is intelligent, consecutive, and adapted to the end in view. But the charter of the city forbids the aldermen to enact any ordinance upon any matter which is or shall hereafter be regulated by any public statute, or power to regulate which has been or shall be conferred upon any other authority, by any public statute. The General Statutes of 1888, §§ 2658-2664, inclusive, together with chapter 235, p. 578, Pub. Acts 1895, provide full regulations in respect to adulteration of milk. If, then, the purpose of the aldermen was to regulate the sale of impure milk in Waterbury, it would appear that the ordinance was in excess of their power to enact."

In State v. Keith, 94 N. C. 933, it was held that an ordinance of a city or town, which makes an act which is punishable as a criminal offense under the general laws of the state an offense against the city or town, was void because in conflict with the general laws. The court said: "So much of that ordinance as is material here undertakes to make an assault upon a public officer in the city of Raleigh, while in the discharge of his official duty, an offense against the city, punishable by fine or imprisonment. It is indictable under the general law of the state to so assault such officer, and it is settled that a town ordinance, which undertakes to make that which constitutes a criminal offense under the general law of the state an offense against the town, punishable by fine or imprisonment, is inoperative and void."

The rule is thus stated in McQuillin on Municipal Ordinances, § 499: "Under the usual grant of municipal powers, which, in general terms, includes the authority to enact all necessary ordinances, to preserve the peace and advance the local government of the community, the local corporation cannot provide, by ordinance, for the punishment of an act constituting a misdemeanor or crime by state statute. The cases in the note fully illustrate the rule." The author cites many authorities which sustain the text.

Our own Supreme Court has, in many cases, held the rule in accordance with the above authorities. In Ex parte Keeney, 84 Cal. 304, 24 Pac. 34, it was held that an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, regulating the granting of certificates of death, and the issuance of permits for interments, and punishing the health officer, as for a misdemeanor, for noncompliance therewith, was unconstitutional and void, because in conflict with the provisions of the Political Code on the same subject. It was there said: "It is very clear that by this article the Legislature has undertaken, as a part of the provisions of the general law relating to the public health, through a local department of the state government, to wit, the board of health for the city and county of San Francisco, all of the members of which, except the mayor of the city and county, are appointed by the Governor, to manage and control certain—we do not say all, but certain—of the sanitary regulations of the city and county, and contiguous harbor of San Francisco, and by section 3025 has particularly undertaken to manage and control the conditions and terms upon which permits for the interment of human bodies within said city and county may be issued, and by whom. * * * It follows that any order or ordinance, or provision of any order or ordinance of the municipality, which conflicts with the provisions of this general law, is prohibited and forbidden to the municipality—is unauthorized and void."

In Ex parte Solomon, 91 Cal. 440, 27 Pac. 757, it was held that an ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco, fixing the minimum penalty, for having lottery tickets in possession, at $250, or imprisonment for three months, and allowing a maximum penalty of $1,000, or imprisonment for six months, was void, and not in harmony with the provisions of the Penal Code as to kindred offenses. It was there said, in a concurring opinion by Justice Patterson, that there was nothing in the nature of the offense which calls for any severer penalty for its commission in a thickly settled community than for its commission in the country.

So, in this case, there is no reason why in the city and county of San Francisco milk should contain a greater percentage of fats or solids than in other parts of the state. The law should be uniform, unless there is some valid reason for its being otherwise. In Re Sic, 73 Cal. 142, 14 Pac. 405, the question was fully discussed in an opinion by Mr. Justice Temple in his usual clear style; and it was held that an ordinance of the city of Stockton, in regard to the smoking of opium, intended to punish precisely the same acts as were punishable under section 307 of the Penal Code, was in conflict with the general law and void. The learned justice there said: "The section plainly covers the same ground as the Penal Code. It was probably intended to cover some supposed defects in the Penal Code. Still it denounces as criminal precisely the same acts which are intended to be prohibited by the Code. It is admitted that no ordinance is valid which conflicts with the general laws of the state. * * * It would seem that the ordinance must be conflicting with the general law, which may operate to prevent a prosecution under the general law. The Constitution provides that no one should be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. If tried and convicted or acquitted under the ordinance, he could not be again tried for the same offense under the general law."

In Flood v. State, 19 Tex. App. 584, an ordinance relating to selling goods on Sunday was held void where the subject was covered by the state law.

In State v. McNally, 48 La. Ann. 1450, 21 South. 27, 36 L. R. A. 533, an ordinance regulating the number of hours during which mechanics and laborers shall be employed each day on public work in the city, was held void because the offense was made indictable by statute.

It is not necessary to discuss the doctrine that where the act prohibited is a crime, both under the ordinance and the statute, and the punishment does not exceed that prescribed by the statute, the conviction will be sustained. In this case the act charged relates to the very things treated of by the general law but is not made a crime by the general law. Counsel for the people earnestly calls our attention to Polinsky v. People, 73 N. Y. 65, which it is claimed is directly in point. We have carefully examined that case, and find in it nothing contrary to the views we have expressed herein. The general statute of the state prohibited the sale, or exposing for sale, of adulterated milk, and prescribed a punishment therefor. It did not pretend to cover the subject of traffic in milk or bringing impure milk into the city of New York. The court held that the offense charged was bringing adulterated milk into New York, an offense "not embraced in the statute." The opinion fully agrees with the views we have expressed, but upheld the ordinance for the very plain reason that that subject was not covered by the general law. In the opinion it is said: "If the board of health could, under its general power to enact sanitary ordinances, pass an ordinance prohibiting the same act which was already prohibited by the statute, an indictment would lie for either a violation of the ordinance or of the statute. A conviction under the ordinance would be a conviction for an offense, the punishment of which is prescribed by some other statute than the general statute for the punishment of misdemeanors, and the statute of 1862 would govern as to the punishment. But the difficulty with the argument addressed to us upon the point is that it proceeds upon a false assumption. The third count charges an offense not embraced in the statute of 1862, but which is embraced in the ordinance, to wit, bringing adulterated milk into the city of New York for sale. The statute relates only to selling or exposing impure or adulterated milk for sale. The ordinance may be violated, and the offense of bringing into the city impure or adulterated milk for sale may be complete, without either selling or exposing it for sale."

In re Murphy, 128 Cal. 29, 60 Pac. 465, is also relied upon to sustain the ordinance. That case is not in point, and simply holds that the game of "Keno," as described in the ordinance discussed, is not a percentage game prohibited by section 330 of the Penal Code; the case being directly in line with Polinsky v. People, supra. The court said: "Since it was competent for the city, by ordinance, to prohibit all games not denounced by the statute, lack of jurisdiction is not made to appear."

In the case at bar the ordinance is aimed at the very question covered by the statute—the sale of milk containing less than the proper percentage of fats, and, if enforced, would supersede the statute.

We conclude that the ordinance, in the respects involved in this case, is void, and the prisoner must be discharged; and it is so ordered.

ROGERS CO. et al. (L. A. 2,026.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 21, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Aug. 17, 1908.)

DEEDS — RESERVATIONS — CONSTRUCTION — "RIGHT OF WAY."

One deriving title under a deed executed by an association conveying land subject to the reservation of a reasonable right of way across said lot, and also reserves to said association all springs or other streams of water arising on said lot, etc., does not obtain the right to dig trenches and lay pipe lines for the conduct of water developed on his land on the land of another claiming under a similar deed from the same grantor, since the phrase "right of way" contemplates only a right of ingress and egress to and from the land conveyed, and since the grantee has no title to the water on his land, that being reserved to the association alone, so that he could not need a right of way across the land of the other grantee for the purpose of carrying such water.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by the San Rafael Ranch Company against the Ralph Rogers Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

McNutt & Hannon, for appellants. Borden & Carhart, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Defendants, under claim of right so to do, entered upon the lands of plaintiff and proceeded to cut down the trees and shrubs, and dig up the soil for the purpose of laying a pipe line to conduct water, developed on their land, over the land of plaintiff. Plaintiff sought and obtained an injunction restraining them from thus entering upon its lands, and, from this judgment, defendants appeal.

Both plaintiff and defendants derive title from a common grantor. In all of the deeds executed by this grantor were contained the following reservations: "Said association expressly reserves to itself and each member thereof and to all alienees of the same forever, a reasonable right of way along and across said lot, and also reserves to said association all springs or other streams or waters arising or flowing, visible or invisible, on said lot, with a right to enter upon the same and make the necessary excavations or other works for the development of the same by payment of reasonable damages therefor." Defendants are the owners of a portion of lot 48. By mesne conveyance, the city of Los Angeles became vested both with the title to the land of this portion of lot 48, and also with the reserved right to the waters therein contained. Appellants contend that they, in turn, acquired all of the rights of the city of Los Angeles to the land and to the water, in brief, all of the rights reserved by the common grantor. They next contend that thereby is vested in them, not only the right to develop water upon their lot 48, but the right to enter upon and cross the lands of plaintiff and all others holding under their common grantor. We need not be at pains to consider at length appellants' contention that they have succeeded to the water rights on lot 48, which, with the land, vested in the city of Los Angeles. The city's deed to the lot expressly excepted and reserved "the right to take and use any and all water or waters in, on, or under any and all of the said land hereinbefore described." The contention of appellants that, if treated as an exception, it is repugnant to the estate granted by the city, is not well founded, and does not find favor. Painter v. Pasadena L. & W. Co., 91 Cal. 81, 27 Pac. 539; Butler v. Gosling, 130 Cal. 422, 62 Pac. 596; Sears v. Ackerman, 138 Cal. 586, 72 Pac. 171. But, passing this matter, even if appellants had acquired all of the rights of the city to the waters in lot 48, they acquired no right to enter upon the lands of plaintiff, as here they were doing. Neither the city itself had this right, nor did the common grantor, the San Gabriel Orange Grove Association. In the reservations above quoted the association reserved to itself, its members and alienees, "a reasonable right of way in and across" the lands which it granted. The phrase "right of way," as thus used, has a well-defined meaning. It contemplates a right of ingress and egress to and from the grantee's lands. It does not contemplate the right to dig trenches and lay pipe lines for the conduct of water. Indeed, such construction of this reservation of a right of way is distinctly negated by the reservation immediately following, which reserves to the association alone (and not to any of its members or alienees) the right to the waters upon the lands which it conveys. In the nature of things, since the grantee of such a piece of land had no title to the water upon it, he could not need a right of way across his neighbor's land for the purpose of carrying such water away.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

YOUNGER v. MOORE et al. (Civ. 489.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
May 8, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—ALLOWING ANSWER.

Defendants having had no legal right to have their defaults set aside and be allowed to answer, so that they could only file the kind of answer for which consent had been given by plaintiff, and this being insisted on by plaintiff, they cannot complain that they were not allowed to file a different kind of answer, though, had they filed the answer permitted, they might have been permitted to amend, if it appeared during trial that the ends of justice would be subserved thereby.

2. NEW TRIAL—PROVINCE OF MOTION.

A motion for new trial is not a proper proceeding to review the action of the court in giving judgment, where no issue of fact was tried.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 5.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County, M. T. Dooling, Judge.

Action by Helen Younger against Charles Moore and others. From an order denying their motion for new trial, said Moore and certain other defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Charles M. Cassin and Benj. K. Knight, for appellants. Chas. B. Younger, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This is an appeal by Charles Moore, Stella Moore, Alice Hoffmann, and William C. Hoffmann, from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The case is the same as No. 488 of the same title, this day decided,¹ but involves a different question as to the rights of appellants on this appeal.

It appears from the record that each of the appellants was regularly served with summons, and made default, which default was duly entered. The defaults were entered in August, 1902, and not until the trial had commenced, in December, 1903, was any motion made by said appellants to be relieved of the default. The court held—and it seems to be conceded—that, the application having been made more than six months after the entry of the defaults, it had no power, upon the showing made, to relieve the defendants by setting aside such defaults. Accompanying the application of appellants, and as a part thereof, was an answer, which they served with their motion and asked to be permitted to file in case the defaults were set aside. This answer alleged that the appellants Charles Moore, Stella Moore, and Alice Hoffmann are (each) the owners of an undivided one-fourth interest in and to "all the tract of land described in plaintiff's complaint lying and being situate south of the county road leading from the city of Santa Cruz, in said county of Santa Cruz, in the state of California, to the town of Pescadero." They further stated that as to the proportions in which the remaining one-fourth of the tract is owned they had no information or belief sufficient to enable them to answer. The answer sets forth a plea in abatement of another action pending in regard to the same subject-matter, and alleged to be between the same parties. During the discussion of the motion of these appellants to have the default set aside and to be permitted to file their said answer, counsel on the part of the plaintiff and the other parties to the suit stated that, notwithstanding the default of appellants, they had no objection to the action being tried on its merits, and to the appellants offering testimony as to what their rights were, but that they objected to having any delay in the matter by setting aside the defaults. The court remarked that it was not the policy of the law to set aside a default, so that the defendant could put in a plea in abatement. After some preliminary discussion the following took place:

"Mr. Leonard (Plaintiff's Attorney): Now, if this is to be set aside for that purpose, I would like it specifically understood that they are not to come in and have the default set aside, and be allowed to answer, and then save an exception to not being allowed to enter that plea.

"Mr. Cassin: I am not saving any exception to that.

"Mr. Leonard: I would like an understanding about that.

"The Court: The answer is there with the motion. So much of the answer as is necessary, aside from the plea of another action pending, whatever the plea is, the answer will be permitted, and that portion of the answer will be stricken out. Now, all that portion of the answer beginning on page 2, at line 4, commencing, 'Said defendant, as a special answer and plea in abatement,' running through page 2 down to and including the words 'in said action is the same Helen Younger who is plaintiff named in the complaint herein,' on line 6, page 3, that will be stricken out. And commencing on page 3, line 29, 'Further answering, and as a plea in abatement herein, said defendants allege,' running down to 'to which reference is hereby made, and that part of the answer is hereby repeated,' on line 5, page 4, that will be stricken out.

"Mr. Cassin: If your honor wishes, I will file the answer at noon to-day, eliminating that part of it."

On the following day the defendants offered to file, not the answer that they had before prepared and served, with the plea in abatement eliminated therefrom, but a different answer, setting up different matter than alleged in the answer that the court permitted them to file, and alleging that at the time of his death the father, William H. Moore, held nine-tenths of the lower portion of the ranch in trust for his wife; that the interests of appellants were different from that they had stated in the answer they had first prepared and served. Objection being made to this answer, the court held that, as the default was set aside with the consent of the parties for the purpose of allowing a particular answer as then proposed to be filed, it would not allow appellants to change the answer they had been permitted to file. No permission was given to file any but the original answer, eliminating therefrom the plea in abatement. The original answer was not filed. When another and different answer was offered the following day, the court refused to permit it to be filed. No exception was taken to the court's ruling. The court during the trial, although appellants had not filed the answer which the court had given them permission to file, asked appellants' attorneys if they had any testimony to offer. After mature consideration counsel for appellants declined to introduce any testimony in support of such answer. Then the following took place:

"The Court: You must remember in this connection that you were allowed to file the defense to this action that you then offered. Under the answer they have already offered, which they have been given an opportunity to file, they would make certain proofs if you would agree to make no objection.

"Mr. Younger: No, sir; we don't agree to anything of the kind.

"The Court: To which counsel declined to agree, as I understand it. If that is the case, then you have no proofs to offer?

"Mr. Cassin: We have not an answer on file at the present time.

"The Court: That situation was fixed yesterday. I am not prepared to say that the answer offered is not an answer.

"Mr. Cassin: I want it understood, so that the record will be clear. I don't claim the right, or waive the right, to set up any plea of abatement, anything of that kind. The only thing we ask is to set up a proper answer under the provisions of section 758 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The Court: Whether or not you have an answer, here is a legal proposition that will be determined by the facts that occurred yesterday.

"Mr. Cassin: I am satisfied we have not, because we were given until yesterday to file it, and we have not filed it.

"Mr. Cassin: I will take leave of the court, and bid your honor good-by.

"The Court: I am sorry to part with you at this stage of the road."

It will thus be seen that, even with the appellants in default, counsel were willing to allow them to be heard to file an answer that they had prepared, but eliminating the dilatory plea. The court by its order permitted the answer to be filed as by consent of attorneys representing parties who had not defaulted. This they declined to do, and no answer was filed. It is sufficient to say that, it being conceded that appellants had no legal right to have their defaults set aside and be allowed to answer, they could only insist on filing the kind of answer to which consent had been given. The conditions were insisted upon, and imposed by the court, by which the defaults were to be set aside. As appellants did not comply with the terms, they cannot here complain. Dennison v. Chapman, 102 Cal. 618, 36 Pac. 943. If the appellants had filed the answer which the court permitted them to file, they would no doubt have been permitted to amend it, if it appeared to the court during the trial that the ends of justice would be subserved by such amendment. As the facts appear, we do not think that the court abused its discretion in refusing to allow the second answer to be filed.

It may be further said that, as to these appellants, there was no trial of an issue of fact, because there was no answer on file. A new trial is a re-examination of an issue of fact, and a motion for a new trial is not a proper proceeding to review the action of the court in giving judgment in a case where there is no issue of fact tried. Foley v. Foley, 120 Cal. 33, 52 Pac. 122, 65 Am. St. Rep. 147.

The order is affirmed.

O'DEA et al. v. HOLLYWOOD CEMETERY ASS'N et al. (L. A. 1,948.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 8, 1908.
On Rehearing, Aug. 13, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS—UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS—ASSESSMENTS—INJUNCTION.

In an action to enjoin the sale of shares of stock for a delinquent assessment on unpaid subscriptions, on the ground that other shares had not been assessed, the complaint was framed upon the theories: First, that the unassessed shares were not fully paid up and stood upon the same plane as to assessments as the stock held by plaintiffs, and that the assessment should have been levied upon them as well as upon plaintiffs' shares; and, secondly, that, if the unassessed shares were fully paid up, the shares held by plaintiffs were equally so, that they had been purchased by plaintiffs in good faith and for value, and upon the representations of the corporation that said shares were fully paid up. Held, that plaintiffs could not insist that the evidence showed their shares to have been fully paid, as the complaint was not framed on that theory, but was in fact framed on the theory that their shares were not issued as fully paid stock.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In an action to restrain the sale of corporate stock for a delinquent assessment on unpaid subscriptions, on the ground that all shares had not been assessed, evidence held sufficient to show that plaintiffs' shares were subscription shares not fully paid for, and that the shares not assessed were fully paid.

3. SAME—ISSUE OF STOCK AS FULLY PAID—POWER OF DIRECTORS—RIGHTS OF OTHER STOCKHOLDERS.

Directors of a corporation have a right to issue stock as fully paid up, on such terms and at such price as they see fit, and, in the absence of fraud, their action is final, and cannot be attacked by the stockholders or the validity of the issue assailed on the ground that the consideration was inadequate.

4. SAME—DISTRIBUTION OF CAPITAL.

Where a new corporation takes the property of an old corporation, for which fully paid stock is issued to a trustee to be distributed among the stockholders in the old corporation, the stockholders in the new corporation cannot object that the transaction is in violation of Civ. Code, § 309, prohibiting the distribution of the capital of a corporation prior to its dissolution.

5. SAME.

Under Civ. Code, § 309, prohibiting the distribution of the capital of a corporation prior to its dissolution, neither the directors of the corporation nor its stockholders have any right to distribute the corporate capital or the property received in exchange for it among the stockholders.

6. SAME—ASSESSMENT ON STOCK—AUTHORITY TO MAKE—DE FACTO DIRECTORS.

Even if directors of a corporation, by reason of the invalidity of the issue of stock to them, were not de jure directors, they were at least de facto directors, and as such had ample power to levy an assessment on unpaid subscriptions, and their right to do so cannot be collaterally questioned or attacked.

7. SAME—PART OF STOCK FULLY OR PARTLY PAID.

Under Civ. Code, § 332, providing that an assessment on corporate stock may be for the full amount unpaid upon the stock to meet the liabilities or to satisfy claims of creditors, it is proper, where part of the stock of a corporation has been fully paid or partly paid, to levy an assessment for the unpaid portions of the subscription price upon those other shares upon which a less amount or nothing has been paid, in order to equalize the subscription payment on all the stock.

8. SAME.

Assessment is the proper method to collect unpaid subscriptions to corporate stock.

9. SAME—TRANSFER OF SHARES—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS—ESTOPPEL OF CORPORATION.

Before the amendment of Civ. Code, § 323, requiring certificates of stock issued prior to the payment of the full amount due to state the amount paid, a corporation had the right to issue its shares for cash or upon credit, and was not required to have the certificate show the terms on which it was issued, and purchasers of shares had no right to assume that the stock was fully paid, and no estoppel by representation could be invoked against the corporation.

10. SAME.

Certificates of corporate stock are not negotiable instruments, and the stock represented is subject to assessment for subscription calls, though in the hands of purchasers having no knowledge that the subscription is unpaid.

11. SAME—SALE FOR UNPAID SUBSCRIPTION—RIGHTS OF PURCHASER.

When a corporation offers stock for sale to pay a delinquent assessment, it acts as the agent of the delinquent stockholder, and the purchaser takes the title that the delinquent stockholder had, and no other, and he takes it subject to liability for the unpaid subscription price.

Shaw, J., dissenting. Beatty, C. J., dissenting on rehearing.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by M. F. O'Dea and others against the Hollywood Cemetery Association and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank G. Finlayson, Walpole Wood, and Jesse F. Waterman, for appellants. J. S. Chapman, E. C. Moore, and Herbert Cutler Brown, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by four stockholders of the defendant corporation against it, and its board of directors, to enjoin the sale by them of 7,690 shares of stock of said corporation, owned by plaintiffs, for a delinquent assessment of $4 a share levied on said stock. The corporation was organized October 25, 1899, with a capital stock of $200,000, divided into 20,000 shares of the par value of $10 a share. All the stock of the corporation was issued. The seven directors of the company subscribed for, and there was issued to them, 10 shares each, and the remaining 19,930 shares were issued in two certificates; one certificate numbered 8 being for 7,680 shares, and another certificate numbered 9 being for 12,250 shares. Certificate No. 8 was issued to F. W. Samuelson individually, and No. 9 to F. W. Samuelson, as trustee. The assessment in question was levied on 7,750 shares of the corporate stock which embraced the 70 shares originally issued to the directors of the corporation, and the 7,680 shares issued to Samuelson individually, represented by certificate No. 8, and to which particular shares the plaintiffs had succeeded as purchasers. This assessment, levied upon the 7,750 shares only, was levied upon the theory that these shares were not fully paid up shares, and was levied as a call for an unpaid portion of the subscription price thereof. No assessment was levied upon the remainder of the shares of the capital stock, being the 12,250 shares issued to Samuelson, as trustee, and represented by certificate No. 9, upon the theory that said stock was fully paid up, and not subject to said assessment or call. The assessment on 60 of the shares originally issued to the directors was paid. The other 10 shares so issued to the directors were acquired by plaintiffs, and upon these shares and the 7,680 acquired by them, and represented by certificate No. 8 issued to Samuelson individually, they refused to pay, contending that the assessment was invalid, and it is the validity of such assessment that is involved in this action. The complaint was framed upon the theories: First, that the 12,250 shares represented by certificate No. 9 were not fully paid up and stood upon the same plane as to assessments as the balance of the stock of the corporation, and that the assessment should have been levied upon them, as well as upon the 7,750 shares; secondly, that if the 12,250 shares were fully paid up, the shares held by the plaintiffs were equally so, that they had been purchased by them in good faith and for value, and upon the representation of the corporation that said shares were fully paid up, and the corporation was thereby estopped to take to these shares the character of fully paid up stock, and the claim of plaintiffs is that, upon either theory, any assessment levied should have been upon all the shares of stock of the corporation, and that a levy upon a portion thereof only was invalid for want of equality. The findings of the court were against the plaintiffs upon the issues made under these theories. It found that the assessment was valid and entered judgment in favor of the defendants. This appeal is taken by the plaintiffs from the judgment accompanied by a bill of exceptions bringing up the evidence for review in an attack by them upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings.

Before approaching a consideration of the main propositions involved in the attack upon the findings, it may be said that, as to the 10 shares originally issued to one of the directors of the corporation and held by one of the plaintiffs, there can be no manner of doubt but that the finding of the court that nothing was paid on its subscription price save a 10 per cent. assessment is correct. This brings us to a consideration of the really controlling question on this appeal, which is the correctness of the findings of the court as to the status of the stock represented by the certificates numbered 8 and 9, respectively.

It must be conceded, as the respondents freely do, that if the 7,680 shares of stock included in the 7,750 shares upon which the assessment in question was levied, stood in the same position with reference to the payment, or nonpayment of the subscription price thereof, as the 12,250 shares did which were not assessed, such assessment would clearly be void for want of equality in its levy. The court found that it did not stand in the same position. As to certificate No. 8 for the 7,680 shares, the court found: That on October 16, 1899, F. W. Samuelson, who was then president of the defendant corporation, caused to be issued to himself the certificate representing such shares; that he caused said certificate to be issued without any authority of the board of directors of the corporation therefor; that nothing whatever was paid upon said certificate at the time of its issuance; and that nothing has been paid thereon since, with the exception of an assessment of 10 per cent. levied in March, 1904. The court, however, found that after the issuance of said certificate, by levying and collecting the assessment of March, 1904, and by other acts and conduct on its part, the corporation recognized and treated the said certificate as having been validly issued to said Samuelson, upon his credit, for the full par value thereof, and is now estopped to assert that said certificate or the said shares are invalid, but is not estopped to deny that anything has been paid thereon in addition to said assessment levied in the month of March aforesaid. The finding of the court as to the 12,250 shares evidenced by certificate No. 9 was that they were fully paid shares of stock of the corporation issued in consideration of property received by it.

The main attack made by appellants here is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain these findings, and a consideration of this attack will necessitate a somewhat extended reference to the transactions surrounding the formation of the defendant corporation and relating to the issuance of these two certificates 8 and 9. Upon these matters the evidence in the case shows that F. W. Samuelson and one Lombard were in 1897 the owners of a 60-acre tract of land near Hollywood in Los Angeles county, and in that year, they, with others, formed a corporation known as the "Hollywood Cemetery Association" for the purpose of establishing a cemetery upon said tract of land. Subsequent to the formation of this corporation (which shall hereafter be referred to as the old corporation), and when it was about to actively engage in opening up and conducting the cemetery on this land, opposition developed, and its operations were stopped by an injunction issued in the superior court of Los Angeles county. After the injunction was granted, an appeal was taken by the corporation to this court. While the appeal was pending, the defendants H. C. Brown, N. M. Entler, and John Freeman, who had no connection whatever with this corporation, conceived the idea of starting a cemetery in Los Angeles county, and with that object in view procured options upon a tract of land located about a mile and a half from the cemetery of the old corporation. Before anything else was done by them in furtherance of their project, this court reversed the judgment of the superior court enjoining the Hollywood Cemetery Association from establishing its cemetery. County of Los Angeles v. Hollywood Cemetery Association, 124 Cal. 344, 57 Pac. 153, 71 Am. St. Rep. 75. After such reversal, and in order to avoid the establishment of two competing cemeteries in close proximity to each other, Brown and his associates entered into communication with Samuelson, who, with Lombard, was the principal owner of the old corporation, with the view to combining the two enterprises. An understanding was reached between them which, however, was not reduced to writing, and as to it Brown testified that it was agreed that a new corporation was to be organized, and of the stock thereof he and his associates were to receive 45 per cent., and 55 per cent. thereof was to go to Samuelson and those associated with him in the old corporation. The consideration for the issuance of 45 per cent. of the stock to Brown, Entler, and Freeman was their withdrawal and abandonment of their proposed enterprise, and "throwing their energies, as far as they amounted to anything, in the direction of building up the other cemetery proposition." Thereafter the Hollywood Cemetery Association, defendant in this case (hereafter to be referred to as the new corporation), was formed. The signers of the articles of incorporation were Samuelson, Brown, Entler, Freeman, and three others, each of whom subscribed for 10 shares of stock. Upon the trial the corporate records, consisting of the minute book and stock and transfer books, were offered in evidence, and the minutes disclosed that the first meeting of the board of directors of the new corporation was held on September 14, 1899. At this meeting Samuelson was elected president and Freeman secretary of the corporation. Another meeting was held on October 17, 1899, at which Samuelson, Entler, Freeman, and Brown were present, and at which it was decided that the corporation should purchase from the Hollywood Cemetery Association, the old corporation, the lands and premises owned by it in Los Angeles county "upon some such terms as was outlined by Mr. Samuelson, and to that end that a bonded indebtedness be created." At a meeting of the directors held on October 24, 1899, a meeting of the stockholders was called to be held on October 25, 1899, for the purpose of considering the creation of a bonded indebtedness of the corporation to the amount of $60,000. Pursuant to this call a stockholders' meeting was held. It is shown by the minutes that at this meeting there were represented 7,750 shares of the stock; 7,690 shares thereof being entered as held by F. W. Samuelson, and 10 shares by each of the other 6 directors, and this being all the stock at that time issued. An adjournment of this meeting was had, at which a resolution was adopted authorizing the creation of a bonded indebtedness in the amount of $60,000, to be evidenced by 300 bonds of the denomination of $200 each, secured by a mortgage or deed of trust of all the lands then owned, or thereafter to be acquired by the corporation. This resolution, according to the minutes, was adopted by a vote of the stockholders holding the 7,750 shares. A meeting of the board of directors was held upon the same day, at which a resolution was adopted creating a bonded indebtedness as authorized by the stockholders. Upon October 27, 1899, another meeting of the board of directors was held, at which a resolution providing for the acquisition of the property of the old corporation was adopted. This resolution recited an offer by the old corporation to sell to the new one the 60 acres of land owned by it for $40,000 of the bonds of the new corporation at par and 12,250 shares of the capital stock of the new corporation, issued full paid up at the par value thereof; said shares to be turned over to the stockholders of the old corporation in proportion to their respective holdings. It further recited the agreement of the stockholders of the old corporation to turn over to the new one all of their shares of stock in the old corporation. The resolution declared that the corporation should purchase the property upon these terms and conditions, and that the president and secretary be authorized to deliver to the Hollywood Cemetery Association (the old corporation) upon receipt of a good and sufficient deed conveying the property, and the assignment by the stockholders of all of their shares of stock in the old corporation, the bonds of the new corporation in the sum of $40,000, and to issue and deliver to Samuelson, as trustee, for the purposes aforesaid, the said $12,250 shares of the capital stock of the corporation full paid, and at the par value thereof. Samuelson, though present, refrained from voting upon this resolution, but all of the other directors present voted in favor of it, and it was subsequently consented to in writing by the one director who had been absent from the meeting when it was adopted. A meeting of the board of directors was again held on January 18, 1900, at which time a resolution was adopted, which, after reciting the purchase of the property of the old corporation, the issuing of the $40,000 in bonds to that corporation, the conveyance by the latter of the property, and the assignment by the stockholders of their stock, ratified the issuance of the 12,250 shares of the capital stock of the new corporation as theretofore authorized. As to the subsequent history of these 12,250 shares represented by certificate No. 9, which, as heretofore stated, was issued to F. W. Samuelson, as trustee, it appears that Samuelson indorsed and surrendered this certificate and received in exchange a certificate for 9,390 shares in his own name and certificates for 2,860 shares in the names of the other stockholders of the old corporation, which later he delivered to them. The 9,390 shares he at once transferred to Brown, Entler, and Freeman; they each receiving 3,130 shares. Upon the trial it was stipulated between the parties that Samuelson took the 12,250 shares "for the very purpose of splitting the same up as aforesaid and for the purpose of turning over to each of said three persons, viz., H. C. Brown, Entler, and Freeman, said 3,130 shares, in accordance with the pre-existing understanding, that according to said understanding it was not necessary for either of the three persons, viz., H. C. Brown, Entler, and Freeman, to pay any sums of money whatever to Samuelson." Certificate No. 8 for 7,680 shares was issued to Samuelson on October 16, 1899, prior to the meeting at which the purchase from the old corporation, and the issuance of bonds and stock in consideration thereof was authorized. From the stock and transfer book of the new corporation offered in evidence, there appeared opposite certificate No. 8 the following statement: "This stock was subscribed for by F. W. Samuelson, issued to him subject to calls for all or any part of the full subscription at the par value thereof." Across the entry of certificate No. 9, issued to Samuelson, as trustee, for the stockholders of the Hollywood Cemetery Association, is the note: "This stock is full paid and is so issued." While the evidence in the case shows that the books of the corporation in which these entries are found were frequently examined by Samuelson, there is no direct evidence that he ever actually saw the entries, and for present purposes it will be assumed that he did not, and no consideration will be given to them.

It is insisted by appellants, from the facts recited, that the findings of the court as to the status of the respective blocks of stock represented by the two certificates referred to were wrong. This point is pressed with great earnestness; the stress of the argument being that it is apparent from the terms of the preliminary agreement entered into between Samuelson, and Brown and his associates, that it was contemplated that all the stock to be issued by the corporation was to be of the same character, that if the evidence warranted the court in finding that the 12,250 shares, represented by certificate No. 9, were issued as fully paid up stock, it equally warranted a finding that the 7,680 shares represented by certificate No. 8 were of the same class. There would be much plausibility in the position of the appellants if there were nothing in the record relative to the circumstances under which the stock was ultimately issued conflicting with their claim, or if the complaint had been framed upon the theory under which the claim is now made as to the apparent purposes of said agreement so that it could have been considered by the court. Under the agreement itself it may well be claimed that it was never contemplated that Brown and his associates, who were to contribute neither money nor property to the contemplated enterprise, should obtain fully paid up stock in the new corporation, and that Samuelson, who contributed valuable property, should only receive an issue of subscription stock. In other words, it would be unreasonable to say that Samuelson, who owned approximately two-thirds of the stock of the old corporation, would enter into a contract whereby he was to surrender to the new corporation valuable holdings in the old one (in fact, the only tangible property it secured) and receive only 7,680 shares of stock in the latter corporation, upon which he was liable to the extent of $76,800 for unpaid subscription, while Brown and his associates, who were to contribute nothing tangible, should receive a large proportion of fully paid up stock, solely for abandoning a contemplated opposition enterprise and devoting their energies to the service of the new corporation, and that his fellow stockholders with Samuelson in the old corporation should likewise receive paid up stock; that, on the contrary, a reasonable construction of the agreement was that all the stock to be issued was to be of the same class, either subscription stock or fully paid up.

In harmony with this claim, counsel for appellants now insist that this is the construction the court should have given the agreement; that it was the intention of the parties that all of the stock issued should be of the same character; that there was nothing in the evidence as far as the corporate records are concerned, indicating that the stock to be issued to Samuelson, individually, was to be of a different status from that issued to him as trustee for the purpose of apportioning it among Brown and his associates and the stockholders in the old corporation; and that the court should have found that the stock issued to Samuelson, individually, was the same character of stock as that issued to him as trustee, and was fully paid stock. Whatever merit there may be in the present position of appellants, it was neither available to them in the court below, nor can it be insisted on here, for at least two sufficient reasons, the first of which is that their complaint was not framed on the theory they now advance, and, secondly, because it was in fact framed on the theory that the 7,680 shares of stock were not, in fact, issued to Samuelson as fully paid stock. If their complaint had been framed on the theory that, under the preliminary agreement, it was the intention and understanding of the parties that all the stock of the new corporation was to be issued as fully paid shares, in the respective proportions agreed to, notwithstanding that upon the face of the corporate records this appeared not to have been done as far as the 7,680 shares was concerned, their contention would not be without merit. It might then have been insisted that under all the evidence—the agreement and the corporate records—that it was obviously the intention of the parties that all the stock of the new corporation was to be issued as fully paid up shares, and that the actual purpose of the resolution authorizing the issuance of fully paid up stock to Samuelson as trustee was simply to have it appear upon the records of the corporation that the 12,250 shares of stock, proportional amounts of which were to be delivered to Brown and his associates, who had really contributed no tangible property to the corporation, were, in fact, issued for property of the old corporation which was actually received by the new one. Under such a theory, if presented in the complaint, the plausible claim which is now made here might have been insisted on, although, even under the evidence as it stands, the finding as the court has made it, that these 7,680 shares were issued to Samuelson, not as fully paid up, but as subscription stock, would not have been unjustified. The court might well have found, and doubtless did, that while the preliminary agreement called for the issuance of stock in certain proportions, and in all probability it was understood that all stock should be of the same class, that this preliminary agreement was not the one which the parties ultimately proceeded under. None of its terms seem to have been filled. As to the proportionate distribution of stock called for in it, it appears that the 9,390 shares distributed by Samuelson to Brown and his associates was something in excess of 45 per cent. of the capital stock, and that Samuelson and the other stockholders in the old company received less than 55 per cent. of it. Then, as to the matter of bonds, nothing was said in the agreement as to them. In the $40,000 issue thereof, Samuelson had, on account of his corporate holdings in the old corporation, an interest to the extent of probably two-thirds. It will be thus observed that in the final adjustment between the parties there was an entire departure from the terms of the preliminary agreement as to the percentage of distribution of stock and its character, and an additional element as to bonds incorporated into it.

Samuelson was not a witness on the trial, and the only witness speaking clearly on all the transactions, from the making of the preliminary agreement up to the passage of the resolution authorizing the issue of the 12,250 shares of paid up stock and the bonds, was Brown. Samuelson was a director of the corporation and acted in all the transactions, save as to the resolution authorizing the purchase of the property of the old corporation for the bonds and 12,250 shares of paid up stock, when, being interested on both sides, he refrained from voting. Brown testified: That, at the time the resolution was passed relative to the bonds and this stock, it was understood that the 12,250 shares should be considered paid up stock; that, as to the other stock, Samuelson subscribed for it, and there was no understanding that it was to be fully paid up; that there was no order of the board of directors authorizing the issuance of this 7,680 shares to Samuelson; and that he had the stock issued to himself and did not pay a dollar for it. Whatever, too, may be said as to the preliminary agreement contemplating that the stock to be issued to Samuelson should be of the same class as the other stock, it is certain that the issuance of stock alone did not figure in the transaction between the parties as ultimately consummated. Samuelson received stock and bonds—the latter of which had no mention in the preliminary agreement. It is not to be presumed that Samuelson had any doubt of the success of the enterprise into which the new corporation was entering. The prudence of his conduct in taking subscription stock is not to be determined in the light of the subsequent unfortunate entanglement of the corporation. He doubtless then thought the project would be a success.

As every intentment must be had in favor of the findings of the trial court, it is to be assumed that the court concluded that, if it was originally contemplated that the same class of stock in the new corporation was to be issued to all parties to it, this arrangement, which was not in writing, was abandoned, and that Samuelson, in consideration of receiving his share of the bonds of the new corporation, agreed to take the 7,680 shares of stock as unpaid stock, allowing the shareholders of the old company associated with him, and Brown and his associates, to take as their share of the stock, 12,250 shares, fully paid up. Independent of this, however, the second reason we have heretofore assigned is an all-sufficient answer to the appellants' challenge relative to the status of these 7,680 shares. It is nowhere alleged in the complaint that these shares were intended to be, or were, issued as fully paid up stock. There are numerous allegations in the complaint as to the different holdings by the plaintiffs of portions of this block of stock, but it is barren of any allegation that it was, in fact, issued to Samuelson as fully paid. In truth, the allegations, as made, negative the proposition that it was of this character. As to the status of all the stock of the corporation involved here—the 7,680 and the 12,250 shares—the allegations as to the former are, not that it was fully paid, in fact, but that the corporation and its officers at the time these plaintiffs acquired their holdings of it, represented it to be fully paid, and set up these representations as an estoppel on the part of the corporation to assert that it was not fully paid stock. There is clearly a very essential distinction between an allegation that a corporation by reason of its conduct is estopped from denying that stock which it has issued was fully paid and an allegation that stock which it had issued had been in fact fully paid for before or at the time of its issuance. As it is not alleged in the complaint that these 7,680 shares of stock were, in fact, fully paid, no issue as to that matter could arise under the pleadings. The court was not authorized to make any finding on the subject, and, had it found as appellant claims it should have done, it would have been a finding outside the issues, and reversible error. So that, aside from the considerations we have advanced in support of the finding of the court that these 7,680 shares were subscription shares subscribed for by Samuelson, the appellants are not in a position to insist that this finding is erroneous, because under their theory of the evidence it shows them to have been fully paid. There was no issue on this latter point, and appellants cannot be heard to insist on a reversal on account of facts which they claim the evidence established, but upon which they did not rely by any proper pleading. This disposes of the claim of insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding as to the 7,680 shares of stock being simply subscription stock.

Now as to the 12,250 shares: It would be idle to attempt to discuss the evidence relative to the finding that these shares were fully paid. The evidence that they were is not open to any serious question. The main contention against the finding as to character of these shares is that the evidence shows that the value of the property transferred by the old corporation to the new in consideration of the delivery of this stock and the $40,000 bonds was far less than the face value of the stock and bonds given for it. It may be conceded that this is true. At least there was considerable evidence to this effect. The court, however, found that the transfer was acquiesced in by all the stockholders then interested in the new corporation, and that the assets turned over to said corporation in consideration of said stock and bonds were of great value, "in the estimation and judgment of the defendant corporation and of the board of directors of the said corporation at the time of said transfer, and were equivalent in value to the full value of the said shares and of the said bonds, and were a just and adequate consideration for the issuance of said 12,250 shares of stock as fully paid stock." These findings were all in harmony with the evidence. Every stockholder of the new corporation assented to this transaction, and the directors authorized, approved, and ratified it. Samuelson himself was one of the actors in the matter, and these plaintiffs, who have succeeded to the shares of stock, which he then held, cannot be heard to question the validity of the issue of this paid up stock for inadequacy of its price. Directors of a corporation have a right to issue stock as fully paid up, upon such terms and at such price as they see fit, and in the absence of fraud, as far as the stockholders or their assignees are concerned, the action of the directors in issuing it is final, and the action of the corporation cannot be attacked by the stockholders, or the validity of the issue assailed on the ground, merely, that the consideration was inadequate for which the corporation issued it as fully paid up. Creditors may attack the transaction; stockholders cannot. Cook on Corporations, § 35; Stein v. Howard, 65 Cal. 616, 4 Pac. 662; Vermont Marble Co. v. Declez Marble Co., 135 Cal. 579, 67 Pac. 1057, 56 L. R. A. 728, 87 Am. St. Rep. 143; Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423.

Neither is it of any moment, as affecting this conclusion, that the fully paid stock was issued to Samuelson as trustee for the benefit of, and to be distributed to, persons who were not interested in the property which was received by the corporation, and towards the payment of which this stock was issued. The proposition advanced by appellants is that this issue of 12,250 shares was invalid because they were distributed to the stockholders of the old company through that medium—of Samuelson as a trustee—in violation of section 309 of the Civil Code, prohibiting the distribution of the capital of a corporation prior to its dissolution; but we cannot see how these appellants are entitled to raise this point. They are not stockholders of the old corporation whose capital stock they say was distributed through the method they complain of. It is difficult to see how they are in a position to object or question the transaction. They do not claim that this issue might not be validly made to Samuelson, but that its issue for the purpose of distributing it partly to Brown and his associates made it invalid. But this appears to us to be a matter in which these appellants have no concern. Whether Samuelson kept the shares or turned them over, among others, to Brown, Freeman, and Entler, was a matter entirely between these parties themselves, which did not concern either the new corporation or its stockholders. It is not claimed that the new corporation distributed any of its capital thereby, and the old corporation is not complaining and is not a party to this action. If the old corporation or its stockholders have any ground of complaint, these appellants, as stockholders in the new corporation, are not authorized to make it for them. Nor, examining the particular medium through which the shares were ordered transferred to the old company, their validity was not affected by the mode adopted. It is of no consequence that the 12,250 shares were ordered to be issued to Samuelson as trustee, instead of directly to the old corporation. It is true that these 12,250 shares constituted part of the capital of the old corporation, and it is equally true that under the law of this state neither the directors of a corporation nor its stockholders have any right to distribute the corporate capital or the property received in exchange for it, among the stockholders. Civ. Code, § 309; Martin v. Zellerbach, 38 Cal. 300, 99 Am. Dec. 365; Kohl v. Lilienthal, 81 Cal. 378, 20 Pac. 401, 22 Pac. 689, 6 L. R. A. 520; Schaake v. Eagle, etc., Can Co., 135 Cal. 474, 63 Pac. 1025, 67 Pac. 759. But we do not see how this claim of illegality in this respect could advantage appellants at all, even if their position were correct. If the issue of this stock in the manner complained of was invalid, it would result at most in rendering the issue of this 12,250 shares void. If this were the effect, the only result which would follow would be that these shares would not be liable to any assessment at all. Such a result could not aid appellants in their attack on the present assessment, because, if the issue of the 12,250 shares was void, then the issue of the stock which appellants hold—which was alone assessed—comprises the only legally issued stock of the corporation, and was therefore the only stock of the corporation liable to an assessment.

But it is said by the appellants, pursuing this same line of reasoning relative to the alleged illegal issue of these shares, that if the issue of them was illegal, then the directors of the corporation—who were such only by virtue of owning this illegal stock—had no authority to levy an assessment. We think it may be fairly concluded from the evidence that all the directors save Brown were owners of stock subscribed for in the articles of incorporation, which were not part of these 12,250 shares; but this is really of no moment. If they were not stockholders by virtue of the fact that this issue of stock was invalid, and hence were not de jure directors, they were at least de facto directors, and that is sufficient for present purposes. As such directors they had ample power to levy the assessment, and their right to do so cannot be collaterally questioned or attacked.

There is nothing in the point that this assessment was invalid because it was not levied on all the capital stock of the corporation; that is, that it was not uniform. Section 332, Civ. Code, provides that an assessment may be for the full amount unpaid upon the capital stock to meet liabilities, or to satisfy claims of creditors. Under this section it is proper, where part of the stock of a corporation has been fully paid, or partially paid, to levy an assessment for the unpaid portion of the subscription price upon those other shares of the capital stock upon which a less amount or nothing has been paid, in order to equalize the subscription payment on all the stock. To take the case at bar as an illustration: Of the capital stock of the corporation 12,250 shares had been fully paid up, and 7,750 shares had not been so fully paid. Hence the whole capital stock had not been paid. The shares stood in a different class. As to one, full payment had been made; as to the other, but a partial payment—the dollar assessment. Under the section cited, the directors had a right to levy an assessment upon the 7,750 shares as a distinctive class of corporate stock, for the whole or a part of the subscription price unpaid. This was uniformity of assessment. It would not be proper to levy an assessment to call in a given amount on a portion of the unpaid stock, and a less amount on another, if all the stock stood in the same class as to the unpaid subscription price. A call cannot be made which will affect only a portion of those who stand in the same class as to the amount of unpaid subscription, but if upon a portion of the stock all or half should have been paid, and nothing or but a small amount had been paid on the other portion, an assessment could be properly levied on the stock which had made the smaller payments, in order to equalize the contributions of all the stockholders. This is the only mode of assessment as to different classes of stock which would not be violative of the rule that all assessments on stocks must be uniform. That assessment is the proper method to collect unpaid subscriptions is well settled. Kohler v. Agassiz, 99 Cal. 9, 33 Pac. 741; Union Savings Bank v. Dunlap, 135 Cal. 628, 67 Pac. 1084; Union Savings Bank v. Lieter, 145 Cal. 696, 79 Pac. 441; 1 Cook on Corporations, § 114; 1 Morawetz on Corporations, 154.

These objections of the appellant to the findings and against the validity of the issue of these 12,250 shares and the assessment being disposed of, brings us to a consideration of the only remaining point of any consequence, namely, how far the original character of the 7,680 shares were subsequently affected by representations or conduct on the part of the corporation or by mesne transfers from the holder thereof to the present holders, these plaintiffs. It is insisted, in that regard, that prior to the purchase of this stock by appellants the corporation represented to them that said shares were fully paid up, and that it is now estopped to assert that the stock is of a character different from what they represented. The court, however, found that the corporation had never made such representations, that there was nothing on the records of the corporation which indicated anything other than that the shares were subscription shares and nothing had been paid thereon, and that the officers of the corporation had made no representations or statements to the contrary, and the evidence sustains these findings. The main claim of all these appellants is, however, that they acquired these shares of stock in the open market from the holders of certificates of stock, that these certificates had been issued by the corporation defendant to the transferors of each of the plaintiffs and did not show that the stock represented thereby had not been paid in full, that the issuance of these certificates in this form constituted a representation by defendant corporation that the shares represented thereby were fully paid, that the plaintiffs who acquired the said certificates from the holders thereof were bona fide purchasers, without notice that the stock had not been paid, and therefore, as between themselves and the corporation, these shares held by plaintiffs must be deemed fully paid. There is nothing in the particular point made that the issuance of the certificates without it appearing thereon that the stock had not been fully paid was a representation by the company that it had been so paid. These certificates were issued long before section 323 of the Civil Code was amended as it now reads, requiring certificates issued prior to the payment of the full amount due to state the amount paid. Nor was there anything on the face of these certificates indicating whether the shares were fully paid or not. The certificate to Samuelson was of the ordinary form, reciting that he was the owner of 7,680 shares, transferable on the books of the company by indorsement and surrender of the certificate. There was nothing indicating what Samuelson had paid for the shares. The corporation had a right to issue its shares for cash or upon credit and was not required to have the certificate show full or any payment, or the terms on which it was issued, and plaintiffs had no right to assume anything as to the payment. Under these circumstances, no estoppel by representation could be invoked against the corporation. Stockton

C. H. & A. Works v. Houser, 109 Cal. 1, 9, 41 Pac. 809.

But independent of this claim of representation, the broad proposition of appellants is that, because they purchased their certificates of stock in good faith and without notice in the open market, such stock is to be deemed fully paid up, and they are protected as bona fide purchasers, even though upon the face of the certificates there was nothing to indicate that the stock had been fully paid. In effect, their claim is that certificates of stock are negotiable securities and subject to the same rules governing the transfer of such instruments; but this position under the law of this state is untenable. Whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions (and some authorities therefrom are cited by appellants in support of their claim), it is well established in this state that certificates of stock are not negotiable instruments, either in the commercial sense or within the definition of the Civil Code, and that the stock represented by them is subject to assessment for subscription calls, no matter to whom it may be transferred. The rule in this state is that certificates of stock in a corporation are but mere evidences of the holder's right to a given share in the franchises and property of the corporation, and are not negotiable instruments. Barstow v. Savage M. Co., 64 Cal. 388, 1 Pac. 349, 49 Am. Rep. 705; Graves v. Mono Lake Min. Co., 81 Cal. 304, 22 Pac. 665; Craig v. Hesperia L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 7, 45 Pac. 10, 35 L. R. A. 306, 54 Am. St. Rep. 316. Such certificates of shares not being negotiable instruments, the rule analogous to other nonnegotiable instruments applies, and a purchaser takes them subject to all equities in favor of the corporation. The transfer relieves him from no liability to the corporation which his transferrer was under, so that when one purchases stock and causes the transfer to be entered upon the books of the corporation, he thereafter holds his shares on the same conditions as did the stockholder from whom he purchased. He acquires under them all his rights and is subject to all his liabilities and obligations respecting them. Visalia, etc., R. Co. v. Hyde, 110 Cal. 632, 43 Pac. 10, 52 Am. St. Rep. 136; Craig v. Hesperia L. & W. Co., supra; People's Home Sav. Bank v. Rickard, 139 Cal. 285, 73 Pac. 858. Many authorities from other states might be cited to the same effect, but these from our own state declare the rule here.

The plaintiff O'Dea purchased 1,386 shares of the stock in question at a sale by the corporation of the same for a delinquent assessment. This was part of the Samuelson stock and assessed to him. O'Dea claims that this was, in effect, a purchase by him directly from the corporation of these shares as the property of the corporation, and not from the stockholder who theretofore had held and owned them. There is nothing in this point. When a corporation offers stock for sale to pay a delinquent assessment, it acts as the agent of the delinquent stockholder. It could only acquire title in default of bidders and by bidding it in itself. When the stock is offered for sale and is purchased thereat, the purchaser takes the title that the delinquent stockholder had, and no other, and he takes it subject to liability for the unpaid subscription price. 1 Cook on Stockholders, § 133; Purdy's Beach on Corporations, § 377b.

Some other points are made by appellants for reversal, but in our judgment they are untenable and without sufficient merit to warrant special consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.

SHAW, J. I dissent. The evidence shows that Samuelson, at the beginning of his cemetery enterprise was the owner of all the land now belonging to the new corporation, apparently free of all incumbrances, and that through the manipulations of the other parties concerned in the enterprise with him, and without the expenditure of any substantial sum of money or the contribution of any considerable effort or property by any other person, at the close of the proceedings, Samuelson stood as a subscriber for something over 7,600 shares of stock in the new corporation upon which subscription he owed the new corporation the full par value of $76,000, and was not the owner of any other property, while the other parties, who contributed nothing and did nothing substantial, were the owners of all the residue of the stock in the new corporation as full paid stock on which they owed the corporation nothing; their stock being about two-thirds of the total capital stock of the new corporation. It also appears that the new corporation was then the owner of the Samuelson land and of the entire capital stock of the old corporation and by reason of such ownership of said stock was entitled to the entire beneficial interest in the $40,000 of bonds which the new corporation has issued to the old corporation. In short, Samuelson went in with property in his own right of the value of something like $50,000 and came out with no property and owing $76,000, and all of this was brought about by mere manipulation of documents and papers without anything of value having passed to him. Such a thing is to me absolutely incredible, and some other explanation of the transactions must be possible. I think it is found in the proposition that when, after the issue of practically all the stock of the new corporation to Samuelson, the 7,600 shares represented by certificate 8 and the 12,250 shares represented by certificate number 9, and when he thereupon made the distribution of the stock in accordance with the agreement, it was fully understood by all concerned that all the stock was to be considered as full paid, as in fact it was by virtue of the original agreement. While there may be some evidence of a somewhat evasive character that is contrary to this conclusion, there is really no substantial evidence against it.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. (dissenting). I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause. In my opinion the whole merits of the case are bound up in the question whether it is true, as found by the trial court, that the assets of the old corporation which were transferred to the new corporation in exchange for $40,000 in bonds and 12,250 shares of its stock were, in fact, or in the honest judgment and estimation of the parties to that transaction, equal in value to the bonds ($40,000) and the par value of the shares ($122,500). If they were of that value, or honestly believed to be of that value, it is not only lawful, but strictly just, to assess the remaining 7,750 shares of subscription stock exclusively until they have contributed to the capital of the company as much per share as the 12,250 shares have contributed, viz, $10 a share. In the opinion of this court it is said that the finding on this point is sustained by the evidence. I dissent from that view. I cannot discover in the record any substantial evidence that the assets of the old corporation were actually worth more than $40,000—worth, in other words, any more than the value of the bonds issued to Samuelson and his associates in the old corporation. Nor do I find any evidence that in the honest judgment and estimation of any of the parties they were worth more than $50,000. The statement therefore that the 12,250 shares issued to Samuelson in trust for himself and his associates in the old corporation had been fully paid was a fiction. They were certainly not fully paid, and if anything was paid on them, either in fact or according to any reasonable estimate of the value of the assets of the old corporation, it was a very small fraction, and probably less than 10 per cent. of their par value.

Samuelson, however, does not appear to have been defrauded. He was himself a consenting party to the statements recorded in the books of the corporation to the effect that the 12,250 shares of stock issued to him as trustee had been fully paid. Why he chose to turn over his portion of those shares to Brown and Freeman and Entler is unexplained, and, in the absence of any complaint from him, is immaterial. Aside from the stock, he received, in bonds, the full value of his interest in the assets transferred to the new corporation, and he, if a party here, would have no right to complain of the court for refusing to violate the Constitution (article 12, § 11) and the statute (Civ. Code, § 359) by treating as fully paid his 7,690 subscription shares, upon which, admittedly, only a small percentage of their par value has ever been paid. But in my opinion any bona fide holder to whom Samuelson's subscription shares have been transferred for value has a right to ask a court of equity to enjoin the sale of such shares to satisfy an assessment levied upon them exclusively, when it is made to appear that a large part of the so-called full paid shares remain in the hands of those who took them with full knowledge that little or nothing had in fact been paid for them. The decree of the court should have been based upon the real character of the shares which the defendants are seeking to exempt from assessment, and not upon the fictitious character which they have chosen to ascribe to them. If there are any innocent holders of these exempted shares who have paid value for them on the faith of the recorded statements that they were fully paid, they perhaps might claim the exemption; but those who took them with full knowledge of their fictitious character, or gratuitously, are, in the view of equity, liable to the same assessments as the plaintiffs.

(Supreme Court of California. July 6, 1908.
On Rehearing, July 30, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—RECORD—OPINION OF TRIAL COURT.

The opinion of the trial court rendered in deciding the case is no part of the record on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2339.]

2. CORPORATIONS—PROMOTERS—LIABILITY.

Promoters of a corporation formed to purchase property from another occupy a fiduciary relation to those whom they induce to become with them subscribers to the stock, and are bound to declare to their associates any personal interest that they have in the matter, and without such disclosure they cannot legally profit at the expense of their associates, and, where they are guilty of any misrepresentation of facts or suppression of truth in relation to their personal interest in the proposed purchase, the corporation may either set aside the transaction or recover compensation for the loss sustained.

3. SAME.

That one of the promoters of a corporation, formed for the purpose of purchasing certain property from another person, on learning that the subscribers to the stock were dissatisfied on account of secret profits made on the purchase, returned the sum given him to a co-promoter from whom he had received it, does not affect his liability to the corporation for the loss it sustained.

4. SAME.

Persons conspiring with promoters of a corporation formed to purchase the property of another, to induce it to purchase the property at a price in excess of the sum for which the owner has agreed to convey it, by representing that the excessive price is reasonable and is the agreed price, are, equally with the promoters, liable for the secret profits made on the sale of the property to the corporation, though such persons had no dealings with the corporation, or its members, or did not occupy fiduciary relations towards them.

5. SAME.

A person conspiring with promoters of a corporation, to induce it by false representations to purchase property at a price in excess of that agreed to by the owner, is liable equally with the promoters for the secret profits made on the sale, though he was not originally a party to the fraud, if, knowing the fraud, he aided in its execution, he became a party thereto and was chargeable with the consequences.

6. SAME.

All persons co-operating in a fraud, inducing a corporation to purchase property at a price in excess of that agreed to by the owner, are jointly liable for the ensuing injury, irrespective of the degree of culpability.

7. SAME.

A person conspiring with promoters of a corporation to induce it to purchase property at a price in excess of that agreed to by the owner is liable equally with the promoters for the secret profits made on the sale, though he did not share in the profits of the fraud.

8. TRIAL—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

Findings must be construed to support the judgment, if they can be reasonably so construed.

9. CORPORATIONS — PROMOTERS—LIABILITY — FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY—"AID AND ABET."

On the issue of the liability of a person on the ground that he had conspired with promoters of a corporation to induce it to purchase property at a price in excess of that agreed to by the owner, the court found that such person did not, on the date of the execution of the agreement for the sale of the property to the subscribers for formation of the corporation, know what representations had been made by the promoters, but also found that he knew that the property was being sold to the subscribers, and that the subscription agreement signed by them contained false representations of the price at which the property was to be acquired, and that he executed an agreement for the sale containing the false representations as to price, and gave a false receipt for the excess, and that by signing the receipt he "aided and abetted" the promoters in their scheme to increase the price to the subscribers. Held to show knowledge on the part of such person of the scheme of the promoters to obtain a secret profit at the expense of the subscribers; the words "aid and abet" implying an intentional participation with knowledge of the object to be attained.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 291-293.]

10. SAME.

One of several co-owners of certain land employed a broker to procure a purchaser thereof. The broker induced third persons to enter into a contract for the purchase for $33,000. Such persons promoted the organization of a corporation to purchase the premises for $39,500. The broker aided them in their scheme, with actual knowledge of the fact that they would make a secret profit of $6,500 not only by signing the subscription agreement for himself and for another, but also by procuring the signatures of two other subscribers. Held, that the broker was jointly liable to the corporation for the secret profits made on the sale of the property, irrespective of motives.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW — FINDINGS — INFERENCES.

The court on appeal may draw necessary inferences from the findings to support the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3908-3911.]

12. CORPORATIONS—PROMOTERS—LIABILITY.

One of several co-owners of certain land, after employing a broker to procure a purchaser thereof, obtained an authorization from the co-owners to sell the premises for $27,500. He contracted to sell the premises to a third person for $33,000. The third person and others organized a corporation to purchase the same for $39,500. He dealt solely with the purchaser up to the time he ratified the broker's act in signing his name to the corporate subscription agreement, which was consistent with the statement contained therein that he was selling to the subscribers at a profit on his option to purchase, and the court found that the subscribers had no knowledge that the promoters or any of the subscribers, other than such co-owner, were to receive any part of the $39,500 stated in the agreement as the price. Held, that such co-owner was not liable to the corporation for the profits made by him in the transaction, since, the subscribers knowing that he was making a profit, the mere fact that they did not know the amount did not entitle them to complain, in the absence of misrepresentations.

13. SAME.

A broker was employed to procure a purchaser of real estate for $33,000, at a compensation of $3,000. He did not find a purchaser, and for the purpose of bringing about a sale he associated himself as a joint purchaser with others in the organization of a corporation formed to purchase the premises. Held that, as against such corporation, he was not entitled to the agreed compensation, though one or two of the corporate subscribers knew the facts.

14. JOINT ADVENTURES—MUTUAL RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES—JOINT PURCHASERS OF REAL PROPERTY.

The implied understanding between joint purchasers of real estate is that each is engaged in an enterprise solely for the mutual and common benefit and advantage of all, and that each has a common interest with the others according to the amount of his subscription.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Joint Adventures, §§ 3-6.]

15. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — AUTHORITY OF AGENT—RIGHT TO PROFITS MADE BY AGENT.

An agent will not be allowed to make profits for himself at the expense of his principal, by any deception as to the purchase price of property, and he is a trustee of any profits so obtained.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, §§ 132, 133.]

16. CORPORATIONS—PROMOTERS—LIABILITY.

An owner of land and promoters of a corporation formed to purchase the land, who conspired to induce the corporation, by fraudulent representations as to the agreed price, to purchase the property at a price in excess of that agreed to by the owner, are joint tort-feasors, and the law will afford no relief to the vendor merely because he is compelled to pay more than his proportion of the loss sustained by the corporation.

17. COSTS — COSTS OF DEPOSITIONS — ALLOWANCE.

The successful party is entitled to recover the costs incurred in the taking of necessary depositions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Costs, §§ 596-603.]

18. SAME.

Where the depositions taken by the successful party could not be necessary to the protection of his rights, the court did not err in disallowing the costs thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Costs, § 598.]

19. SAME—RETAXATION OF COSTS—MOTIONS.

It is not essential that a motion to retax costs should be accompanied by any affidavit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Costs, § 811.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by Lomita Land & Water Company against F. E. Robinson and others. From a judgment granting insufficient relief, plaintiff appeals, and certain of the defendants also appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Hunsaker & Britt, for plaintiff. W. R. Bacon and Denis & Loewenthal, for defendant Robinson. Porter, Sutton & Cruickshank, for defendant Whitlock. Percy R. Wilson, for defendant J. C. Cline. Milton K. Young, for defendant A. C. Freeman.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action brought by a corporation organized under the laws of this state to recover from four of the original subscribers to the stock thereof certain alleged secret profits realized by them on a sale of a tract of land to such corporation. There are appeals by different parties from the judgment. The case comes before us on the judgment roll alone, and the question presented by all the appeals is as to the sufficiency of the findings to sustain the judgment.

The findings show the facts, so far as material, to be as follows: The land involved consists of some 700 acres of land in Los Angeles county, valuable both for farming purposes and the purposes of a gun club and duck preserve. It was held, subject to a mortgage for $18,000, by several persons, of whom Robinson was one. Under these circumstances, Robinson employed defendant Whitlock to find a purchaser therefor without fixing any price. Some time prior to July 5, 1903, Whitlock interested defendant Freeman in the matter of the purchase of the property and induced him to examine the same. At Freeman's request, defendant Cline examined the property, in company with Freeman and Robinson, and pronounced it suitable to the uses of a gun club as a duck preserve. On July 5, 1903, Freeman paid Robinson $500 for an option to purchase said property within 30 days. No price was then agreed on, and Robinson gave Freeman a receipt for the money, stating therein that the same was "in payment for an option for 30 days on approximately seven hundred acres of the Rancho La Bolsa Chica, which said option is to be executed by me as soon hereafter as same can be formally drawn from description to be by me furnished," and that such $500 was to be applied on price to be specified therein. Subsequent to this, Robinson's associates in the property gave to him a written authorization to sell the property for $27,500 net, dated July 5, 1903, stating therein: "You may have thirty days from the 5th inst. to close the sale. It is further understood that you are to deposit in the American National Bank of Long Beach the sum of five hundred dollars for this option, which money will be applied on the purchase price if the sale be accepted; otherwise to be paid to us as a forfeit." Robinson, upon obtaining this authorization or option, entered into an arrangement with Whitlock that he "would fix the purchase price of the said real property to defendant Freeman at the sum of $33,000, of which Whitlock should receive as his compensation for finding a purchaser, * * * the sum of $3,000, and that defendant Robinson should have and retain the balance of $30,000." Early in August, 1903, the so-called option of July 5, 1903, given Freeman by Robinson, was in writing extended until August 25, 1903, and it was stated in such writing that the price agreed on was $33,000. In the meantime, Freeman and Cline had commenced and were engaged in efforts to form a corporation to take this property for the purposes of a gun club. It is not found that Robinson knew anything about their plans or efforts in this direction until after he had definitely agreed in writing with Freeman as to the price for which Freeman might purchase the property, or that he had anything whatever to do with the formation of the corporation, other than to become a subscriber for one share therein. At the instance of Freeman, a written instrument in the nature of a subscription agreement was prepared by one Paul W. Schenck, dated July 14, 1903, reading as follows: "Whereas, F. E. Robinson, one of the undersigned, is the owner of an option to purchase a certain portion of the Rancho La Bolsa Chica, in the county of Los Angeles, * * * and comprising between 600 and 700 acres of said Rancho; and whereas, it is proposed to form a gun club corporation, * * * and by such formation secure for its members the land aforesaid for the sum of $39,500, payable $14,500 cash and the balance in installments extending over a period of 9 years: Therefore the undersigned, each for himself, does hereby subscribe for one share and agree with every and all other subscribers hereto as follows: (1) Within five days hereafter to pay to A. C. Freeman in trust, for the purposes herein set forth, the sum of $500 on each such share as the initial payment thereon. * * * This agreement is made contingent upon securing subscriptions for the total 36 shares, and if they be not so secured within 30 days, all money so paid in in trust to be refunded."

Prior to August 25, 1903, this agreement was signed by 36 men for one share each, including each of the defendants; Robinson's name being the thirteenth signed, and Whitlock's the fourteenth. Prior to July 5, 1903, Robinson had stated to Whitlock that he wanted to be a member of the gun club, and Whitlock signed the name of Robinson to the subscription agreement, assuming that he had authority to do so, and informed Robinson thereof some time prior to August 25th, and Robinson ratified Whitlock's act. Most of the subscribers were obtained by Freeman and Cline, but Whitlock obtained two, Messrs. Hickcox and Dotter. Robinson never saw the agreement until after this action was commenced, but on August 25th was informed as to the statement made therein concerning the price at which the property was to be sold to the corporation. None of the persons who signed the subscription agreement, except the defendants and S. Schenck, Paul W. Schenck, George C. Dotter, and Ross T. Hickcox, ever was informed or had any knowledge that either Whitlock, Freeman, or Cline, or any subscriber "other than said Robinson," was to receive any part of the $39,500 mentioned in the agreement, or that any subscriber "other than said Robinson" was in any way interested therein other than as a subscriber. All that Dotter and Hickcox knew was that Whitlock had at one time urged them to form a gun club to purchase the property, saying that he had it for sale at a probable price of about $30,000 or $33,000, and they supposed when they signed the agreement that he was making some profit out of the matter. The Schencks were partners and confidential business associates of Freeman. No subscribers other than defendants and the Schencks ever were informed or knew the price Robinson was to pay for the property. On August 25, 1903, by the direction of Freeman, an agreement for the sale of the property to the subscribers was executed by Freeman with Paul W. Schenck, as trustee for the subscribers. The consideration for the sale named therein was $39,500, the property to be taken for $21,500, subject to the $18,000 mortgage, which was assumed by Schenck as trustee. It was stipulated therein that of the $21,500, $14,500 cash was to be paid on the execution of the agreement, $5,000 one year from date, and $2,000 eighteen months from date; interest at 9 per cent. to be paid on deferred payments. Thereupon Freeman paid to Robinson, from moneys in his hands received from the subscribers, the sum of $7,000, which, with the $500 due from Robinson on the subscription agreement and the $500 theretofore paid by Freeman to Robinson for the option, made a total payment of $8,000. Robinson then gave Freeman, at his request, a written receipt for $14,500, as follows: "Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 25, 1903. Received of A. C. Freeman, fourteen thousand five hundred dollars, first payment on gun club grounds. $14,500. F. E. Robinson." Of the $6,500 thus receipted for, but not paid, Freeman retained for his own use $2,600, and paid to Cline $1,300, to Sam Schenck $1,300, and to Paul W. Schenck $1,300. Cline subsequently returned his $1,300 to Freeman, as did also Sam Schenck. Robinson paid to Whitlock from the money received by him the sum of $3,000 for his services, and this left him, including the moneys still due him under the contract, a profit of $2,500 on the transaction. Pursuant to the subscription agreement, plaintiff was organized as a corporation by the subscribers, and on April 9, 1904, said Schenck, trustee, transferred to it the agreement of purchase. On August 25, 1904, plaintiff paid Robinson under said agreement $5,490, but has made no other payment except such installments of principal and interest as have become due on the subsisting mortgage. Robinson has acquired from his associates the legal title to the property.

Other facts were found by the trial court, but we deem the foregoing to be a fair statement of the material facts, except in so far as we hereinafter specify other findings. It is important to bear in mind that, so far as the findings show, Robinson had absolutely nothing to do with the matter of the formation of the corporation to purchase this property (except in subsequently agreeing to become a subscriber for a share of its stock), even to the extent of suggesting the organization of such a corporation. The theory of the findings is that Robinson was dealing solely with Freeman, agreeing to sell the property to him for $33,000, and that the scheme of a corporation to take over the property so to be acquired by Freeman was the scheme of Freeman and his associates, and that Robinson had nothing to do therewith. The opinion of the trial court rendered in deciding the case is no part of the record, but it is proper to state that it is in line with this construction; the learned judge stating emphatically that the evidence satisfied him that the intention of Robinson and Freeman was that Robinson was to sell the property to Freeman for $33,000. It is further important to bear in mind that the trial court did not find that the subscribers had not been informed or did not know that Robinson was to personally receive a portion of the $39,500, and was interested in the matter other than as a co-subscriber. The lack of knowledge on the part of the subscribers as to such matter was limited by the findings to the other defendants. It is further clear under the findings that Whitlock was Robinson's agent only so far as the sale of the property by Robinson to Freeman was concerned, and that the promotion by him of a corporation to purchase was not authorized by Robinson, and that anything he may have done in the matter of the formation of the corporation was not done as Robinson's agent and could not bind Robinson. The facts found distinguish this case from that of Ex-Mission, etc., Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 32 Pac. 600, in this regard. The trial court concluded that plaintiff was not entitled to recover the $5,500 difference between $27,500 and $33,000 received by Robinson, and of which Robinson had paid $3,000 to Whitlock. As to the $6,500 difference between the price at which Freeman purchased from Robinson, $33,000, and the $39,500, for which the property was purchased by the subscribers to the stock of the proposed corporation, the court found that plaintiff was entitled to recover from Freeman and Cline, as secret profits realized by them as promoters of the corporation from their co-subscribers, and also from Robinson and Whitlock, upon the theory that they had aided and abetted Freeman and Cline in their scheme to secretly increase the price of the property to their co-subscribers for their own benefit, Whitlock by procuring signers to the subscription agreement, and Robinson by making it appear in the agreement of sale that the price to be paid was $39,500 instead of $33,000, and by giving the receipt for $14,500, when in fact he received only $8,000. The trial court found as a fact that in this way Whitlock and Robinson aided and abetted Freeman and Cline in such scheme. Judgment was accordingly given against all four defendants for the amount already paid by the subscribers and the corporation in excess of the amount which should have been paid, viz., $4,500, with $490 interest, and decreeing the $2,000 and interest still to be paid Robinson under the terms of the contract not to be a valid claim against plaintiff, and directing Robinson to execute a conveyance of the property to plaintiff. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, claiming that it should have been awarded judgment against Robinson and Whitlock for the $5,500 difference between the $27,500 and the $33,000. Robinson and Whitlock each appeal from the judgment against them. There is no appeal on behalf of either Freeman or Cline.

1. As to defendants Freeman and Cline, the case, under the authorities, is, of course, a clear one so far as the $6,500 profit made by Freeman and shared by him in part with others is concerned. They were essentially promoters of the corporation formed for the avowed purpose of purchasing this property from one other than themselves, and they misrepresented to those whom they induced to join in the enterprise, and who became with them subscribers to the stock of the proposed corporation, the amount the corporation would be required to pay in order to obtain the property, for the purpose of making $6,500 secret profit from the subscribers in the transaction, and this secret profit was in fact made. The findings show that their plan from the beginning was to form a corporation to purchase this property, and that they practically procured its formation. As promoters of the corporation, they occupied a fiduciary relation to their co-subscribers, and were bound to truthfully declare to their associates any personal interest that they had in the matter of the purchase. Without such disclosure they could not legally profit at the expense of their associates. If they were guilty of any misrepresentation of facts or suppression of truth in relation to their personal interest in the proposed purchase, the corporation is entitled to set aside the transaction, or recover compensation for any loss which it has suffered. See Ex-Mission, etc., Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 626, 32 Pac. 600, and cases there cited. In Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 102, 35 Pac. 444, this court quoted approvingly the following: "The substance of the law is that promoters are corporate fiduciaries. Transactions with their companies wherein they deal honorably, with full disclosure, and without seeking to influence the action of the corporation will be upheld; but transactions in which they suppress or misrepresent material facts, or otherwise deceive the company, or corruptly control its action, are fraudulent, and the company may elect either wholly to set aside such transaction, or to recover the promoter's profits." It should be noted, in justice to Cline, that, when he learned that the subscribers were dissatisfied on account of these secret profits, he returned the $1,300 given him to Freeman from whom he had received it. This, however, does not affect his liability in this case.

2. So far as such $6,500 secret profit is concerned, we think there can be no doubt that Robinson is also liable to plaintiff. In 1 Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, at page 327, it is said: "Persons who conspire with promoters of a corporation to induce it to purchase property at a certain price, upon the representation that it is a reasonable price, and the one which has been agreed to be paid to the owner, whereas it is greatly in excess of the sum agreed to be paid, are, equally with the promoters, liable for the secret profits made on the sale of the property to the corporation, although it is not alleged that such persons, other than the promoters, had any dealings with the corporation or its members, or occupied fiduciary relations towards them. * * * This is on the well-established principle that, where several persons combine to carry out a fraudulent conspiracy to cheat another, each and all of such persons are liable to the defrauded party, without reference to the amount of the fruits of the fraudulent transaction he obtains or the degree of his activity in the scheme." It is not essential to such a liability that such participant was originally a party to the contrivance of the fraud. If, knowing the fraud contrived, he willfully aids in its execution, he thus becomes a party to the plan and is chargeable with the consequences. See Lincoln v. Chafin, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 138, 19 L. Ed. 106. All persons uniting or co-operating in such a wrong are jointly liable for the ensuing injury, irrespective of the degree of culpability. See Marriott v. Williams (Cal.) 93 Pac. 875, and cases there cited; Cooley on Torts (3d Ed.) 213; More v. Finger, 128 Cal. 319, 60 Pac. 933. As said by the learned judge of the court below: "It is not necessary that the defendants shall have all been in league from the beginning to defraud the investors or any of them. They need not be in pari delicto. It is enough that each was at some time and in some degree a party to and aided the improper transaction, and it matters not how unequal may have been the assistance rendered." Nor is it even essential that such a participant should have shared at all in the profits of the fraud. This is illustrated by the case of Stoney Creek, etc., Co. v. Smalley et al., 111 Mich. 321, 69 N. W. 722, where the vendor of certain real property gave to the vendee at his request a receipt designed to show a larger consideration than was in fact to be paid, to enable the vendee to impose on his associates. The court said: "It is urged that Davis was not an agent of Smalley, that the latter did not authorize Davis to make any representations, that he was to have no interest in the corporation, had no partnership relations with Davis, and that he was not concerned in and received no part of the purchase money for which the property was to be sold, above his original price of $2,500. This defense cannot obtain. Smalley gave Davis a false paper. He knew it was false, and that it could not be used for any legitimate purpose. He knew that a fictitious consideration was stated in the deed. * * * Where one deliberately gives another a false statement in writing, knowing the purpose for which it is to be used, which that other uses to deceive a third party, he is a joint wrongdoer, and must be held responsible for the consequences which follow. Smalley cannot defend upon the ground that he received no benefit from the fraud."

It is urged that the findings do not show any knowledge on Robinson's part of any scheme on the part of Freeman to obtain a secret profit at the expense of the subscribers, and that without this element there is no basis for a conclusion that he was knowingly a party to the fraudulent scheme. In this connection, reliance is placed on the finding that "defendant Robinson did not on the 25th day of August, 1903, know what representations had theretofore been made by any of his codefendants herein to the plaintiff, or its stockholders, or signers of said subscription agreement." This finding must, however, be read in connection with the other findings. From these, it appears that Robinson knew that the property was in fact being sold to persons who had been induced to subscribe to an agreement to form a corporation to acquire the property for gun club purposes, and that the subscription agreement presented to and signed by the subscribers contained the false representation that the price at which it was to be acquired was $39,500, when, in fact, he was selling it for not exceeding $33,000. He then had knowledge of this false representation made in writing by those who were promoting the corporation. When he was requested to make his agreement for sale state the same false representations as to price, and was requested to give a false receipt for the excess that he was not to receive, it is incredible that he did not know that the object of the request was to obtain for Freeman and his immediate associates written evidence confirming the false representation theretofore made, and enabling them to conceal from their co-subscribers the fact that they were making a secret profit in the matter of the acquirement of this land. We have in addition, the finding that he, by signing such receipt, "aided and abetted defendants Freeman and Cline in their scheme to increase the price of the real property in question to the signers," etc. The words "aid and abet" as thus used have a well-understood meaning, and may fairly be construed to imply an intentional participation with knowledge of the object to be attained. It is well settled that findings must be construed to support a judgment if they can reasonably be so construed, and we are satisfied that the findings here must be held to establish that Robinson knew the purpose for which the false papers given by him were to be used.

3. We are of the opinion that the conclusion that Whitlock was, with the other defendants, jointly liable as to the $6,500 secret profit is supported by the findings. He is found to have aided and abetted Freeman and Cline in their scheme to increase by this amount the price of the property to the subscribers, by securing signers to the subscription agreement. We have seen that, by the terms of this agreement, it was contingent upon securing 36 subscribers for 1 share each within 30 days, and the whole scheme of Freeman and Cline was dependent on this being accomplished. With actual knowledge of all the facts relative to this purchase, including the facts that the representation in the subscription agreement as to the price at which the property was to be acquired was false, and that Freeman and his immediate associates were making a secret profit of $6,500, Whitlock not only signed the subscription agreement for himself and for Robinson, but also procured the signatures of two other subscribers, thus knowingly aiding and abetting in the consummation of the scheme. As we have heretofore stated, it was not essential to liability on his part that he should have been a party to the scheme from its inception, or that he should have shared in the secret profits obtained by Freeman by means thereof. It is immaterial what his motive may have been, whether he felt that his own commission from Robinson was dependent on the success of Freeman's plan to make the subscribers pay $39,500, or desired to assist for some other reason. He with knowledge of all the facts willfully aided and abetted Freeman and Cline in their scheme, and is therefore jointly liable.

4. We are satisfied that, in view of the findings, the judgment in favor of Robinson as to the profits made by him upon the transaction cannot be disturbed. Whatever suspicions various facts found may arouse as to the existence of a scheme on the part of all the defendants to procure the formation of a corporation to purchase this property from the original owners, with a large secret profit to each of them, the findings as made prevent that conclusion so far as Robinson is concerned. According to the findings he was dealing solely with Freeman up to the time that he ratified Whitlock's act in signing his name to the subscription agreement, and there is nothing therein to require the conclusion that he even knew prior to this that a corporation was being formed by Freeman to take the property. We may assume, in accord with the contention of learned counsel for plaintiff, that, when he became a subscriber, a joint purchaser with his associates, holding as he did only a mere option to purchase the property, he was required to abstain from making a profit in the matter of the purchase without the knowledge of his associates. But the difficulty of plaintiff's case in this regard is that the findings do not show that the subscribers did not have full knowledge that Robinson was to make a profit on the transaction. The subscription agreement did not represent to the contrary, and it was entirely consistent with the statements therein contained that he was selling to the subscribers at a profit his option to purchase, and was interested in the matter other than as a subscriber. There was, of course, nothing wrong in his making a profit under the circumstances, unless the fact that he was so doing was not known to his associates on the subscription agreement. The findings on this point are limited to the proposition that they (except the defendants) did not know the terms of his authority to sell, or the price he was required to pay his co-owners; that he did not inform them as to the amount of his profit. But it is a necessary inference from another finding that they did know that he was to receive a profit. The court found "that none of the persons who signed said subscription agreement, except defendants, * * * had any knowledge that said Whitlock, Freeman, and Cline, or any of them, or any of the subscribers other than said Robinson, were to receive any part of the sum of $39,500 mentioned in said subscription agreement as the purchase price of said real property, or that said defendants, other than said Robinson, or any of them, were in any way interested therein other than as co-subscribers to said subscription agreement." We are entitled to draw necessary inferences from findings in order to support a judgment, and, as said before, must construe findings to support a judgment, where such a construction is not unreasonable. See Paine v. San Bernardino, etc., Co., 143 Cal. 656, 77 Pac. 659; Nevills v. Moore Min. Co., 135 Cal. 561, 67 Pac. 1054; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 342, 66 Pac. 309. If the subscribers knew he was making a profit, as we must hold in view of the findings, the mere fact that they did not know the amount will not entitle them to complain, in the absence of some misrepresentation in the matter.

5. We do not see upon what theory the judgment in favor of Whitlock as to the $3,000 commission received by him from Robinson can be upheld. He had a $3,000 interest in the consummation of the purchase by the subscribers, which was unknown and undisclosed to his associates other than the other defendants, the Schencks, Dotter, and Hickcox. His arrangement with Robinson as to compensation, as found by the court, was that Robinson would fix the price of the property "to defendant Freeman at the sum of $33,000, of which defendant Whitlock should receive as his compensation for finding a purchaser the sum of $3,000, and that defendant Robinson should have and retain the balance of $30,000." The court found that Whitlock did not find in Freeman a purchaser willing and able to buy the property for $33,000. Under these circumstances, and undoubtedly for the purpose of bringing about a consummation of this sale and enabling himself to realize this profit, he chose to associate himself as a joint purchaser with the other subscribers and to actively assist in procuring other necessary subscribers. When he did this, he assumed, as to his associates, under a well-established rule of law, a relation analogous to that which exists between partners, and was precluded from making any secret profit out of the contemplated purchase at their expense. The implied understanding between joint purchasers is that each is engaging in an enterprise solely for the mutual and common benefit and advantage of all, and that each has a common interest with the others, according to the amount of his subscription. See Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403. Whitlock knew that the property was being obtained from Robinson for $30,000, and that $3,000 of the amount stated in the subscription agreement as the price at which the property could be obtained from Robinson and his associates represented his own personal profit in the transaction, to be made at the expense of his associates. It is elementary that a partner or an agent will not be allowed to make a profit for himself at the expense of his associates or his principal by any deception as to the purchase price, and that he will be held as a trustee for any profits so obtained. This rule has often been applied in transactions of the kind here involved. See Walker v. Pike Co., etc., Co., 139 Fed. 609, 71 C. C. A. 593; Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 586, 89 Am. Dec. 134; King v. Wise, 43 Cal. 628; Barry v. Bennett, 45 Cal. 80; Getty v. Devlin, supra; Mattern v. Canavan, 3 Cal. App. 493, 86 Pac. 618; Johnston v. Little, 141 Ala. 382, 37 South. 592; Hodge v. Twitchell, 33 Minn. 389, 23 N. W. 547; Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox, 64 Conn. 101, 29 Atl. 303, 25 L. R. A. 90, 42 Am. St. Rep. 159. We think the facts in this case make the decision in Milwaukee, etc., Co. v. Dexter, 99 Wis. 214, 74 N. W. 976, 40 L. R. A. 837, inapplicable. In view of the specific facts found, the further finding that Whitlock's services in finding a purchaser for said real property were fully performed and completed prior to the time he signed the subscription agreement and prior to the time when he agreed to become a member of the club and prior to the time when he asked either Dotter or Hickcox to sign the subscription agreement can mean no more than that the specific acts theretofore found by the court to have been done by him, viz., the interesting of Freeman in the matter and the bringing of Freeman and Robinson together, were done prior to his becoming an associate in the joint enterprise. The fact that some one or two of the subscribers other than the defendants knew or supposed that Whitlock was interested other than as a subscriber does not assist him. Colton Impr. Co. v. Richter, 26 Misc. Rep. 26, 55 N. Y. Supp. 486, 489. See, also, Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 101, 35 Pac. 444. There is absolutely nothing in the claim that the fact that Robinson's name appeared in the subscription list to have been signed "per B. W.," showed that Whitlock was acting as Robinson's agent in the matter of the sale of the property. Upon the facts found we are satisfied that it must be held that Whitlock is a trustee of plaintiff to the extent of his secret profit of $3,000, and accountable therefor.

6. We find no error in the judgment other than the failure to grant a recovery against Whitlock on account of the $3,000 secret profit. It is suggested that, in so far as the judgment cancels the $2,000 note given Robinson on account of the purchase price and remaining unpaid, because of the $6,500 secret profit made by Freeman in which Robinson did not participate, it is unjust; but, as we have seen, Robinson was jointly liable as to this $6,500, and plaintiff has paid all that it is legally required to pay on account of the purchase, and should not be required to pay this amount which it does not owe to one of those liable to return it in the event of its payment. If, by reason of the arrangement between themselves, one of those jointly liable is compelled to pay more than his proportion, it is simply his misfortune. The law can afford him no relief. As to the liability in question, the defendants occupy the position of joint tort-feasors.

7. There is also an appeal by plaintiff from an order taxing costs and striking out of plaintiff's memorandum of costs items aggregating $97.20, notary fees for taking the depositions of defendants before trial. The affidavit annexed to the cost bill stated that such disbursements were necessarily incurred. The motion to strike out these charges was made on the ground, among others, that the taking of the depositions was unnecessary. It was stated in the notice of motion that said motion would be made upon the records, files, and papers in the above-entitled action, which, of course, included said depositions; the same having been filed among the papers in the cause. These records, files, and papers were considered by the court below on the hearing of the motion; but none of them except those constituting the judgment roll have been brought before us, and we cannot tell what they show. Plaintiff undoubtedly had the right to have the depositions taken, and is entitled to recover the cost thereof if it was necessary to take them. California Farm & Fruit Co. v. Schlappa Pietra, 151 Cal. 745, 91 Pac. 593; Lindy v. McChesney, 141 Cal. 351, 353, 74 Pac. 1034. It may, however, have appeared to the trial court from the evidence considered on the motion that the taking of these particular depositions was entirely unnecessary to the protection of the rights of the plaintiff under any reasonable view of the case. We are not prepared to hold that the trial court is without power to disallow the cost of taking depositions, where it appears to the court that such taking could not under the circumstances be necessary to the protection of the rights of a party. We must assume in support of the order that the evidence before the court, consisting of the files, records, and papers in the case, showed a case warranting such a conclusion. See Lindy v. McChesney, supra. It was not essential that the motion to retax costs should be accompanied by any affidavit. Senior v. Anderson, 130 Cal. 299, 62 Pac. 563.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the court below to enter judgment in accord with the views herein expressed. The order taxing costs is affirmed. Each party shall pay his own costs of appeal.

On Rehearing.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The judgment entered herein on July 6, 1908, is hereby modified to read as follows: "On the appeal of defendant F. E. Robinson and on the appeal of defendant Ben Whitlock, the judgment of the superior court is in all respects affirmed. On the appeal of plaintiff from said judgment, the judgment of the superior court is amended and modified, by adding at the end thereof the following, viz.: 'It is further ordered and adjudged that plaintiff, Lomita Land and Water Company, do have and recover from defendant, Ben Whitlock, the further sum of $3,399.55'—and, as thus amended and modified, said judgment is affirmed. The order taxing costs is affirmed. Each party shall pay his own costs of appeal."

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by Isaias W. Hellman against John Longley and others. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, certain of the defendants appeal. Dismissed.

Chas. S. McKelvey, for appellant. J. H. Shankland and J. P. Chandler, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal by the defendant Anaheim Landing, Mining & Development Company from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial. The judgment was entered April 14, 1906. The motion for a new trial was denied, and the order of denial entered October 18, 1906. Notice of appeal from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial was filed December 18, 1906. The appeal from the judgment, therefore, was taken more than six months from the date of the entry of the judgment, and the appeal from the order denying a new trial was taken 61 days after entry of the order.

Upon this condition of the record respondent urges and moves that the appeals be dismissed. No answer is made by the appellant, and, indeed, we see none that could be made. The court being without jurisdiction, therefore, to entertain these appeals, it is ordered that they be, and they are hereby, dismissed.

EMERY v. KIPP. (L. A. 2,089.)

(Supreme Court of California. July 29, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Plaintiff may not complain of the admission of the judgment roll in a former action on the ground the judgment is void because of the insufficiency of the facts set forth in the affidavit for publication of summons, where, on the same objection made by her in the former case, the affidavit was held sufficient.

2. SAME—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment, to be successfully attacked collaterally, must be void on its face.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 920.]

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE SUED AS FEMALE—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT.

A judgment against a married woman is valid, though she is sued as a feme sole and in her maiden name, particularly on any contract made in such name.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Husband and Wife, § 856.]

4. NAMES—RIGHT TO CHANGE.

At common law one may change his name at will and sue or be sued in any name in which he is known and recognized.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Names, § 18.]

5. SAME.

One may adopt a name in which to prosecute business, and may sue or be sued in such name.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Names, § 7.]

6. PARTIES—DESIGNATION—ASSUMED NAME—TITLE TO LAND.

If one takes title to land in any other than his true name, so far as that property is concerned, he has assumed the name in which he takes title, and he may be sued thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 109.]

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE—WIFE SUED AS FEME SOLE—JUDGMENT VALID.

A judgment against "Louisa Munro," quieting title to land deeded to her under that name, is not void because, when sued, she was a married woman, her name being "Madeline Louisa Munro Emery," and because her husband was not joined, the record of her marriage designating her as "Madeline L. Munro," and there being nothing to apprise a prudent person that she had married, though jurisdiction over her was obtained by published summons.

8. PROCESS—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—EFFECT.

Service of process by publication is as effective for all purposes as personal service, where authorized, and when the statutory requirements have been met; the only distinction being found in the privilege accorded by Code Civ. Proc. § 473, allowing a defendant not personally served, on such terms as may be just, to appear within a year after default judgment against him and answer the merits.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Process, § 138.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by Madeline L. Emery against Sylvester Kipp. From a judgment for plaintiff and from an order refusing a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Stearns & Sweet, for appellant. L. L. Boone, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff commenced this action to quiet title to lands situate in the county of San Diego. She obtained judgment, and from that judgment and from the order of the court denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals.

Upon the trial the following facts were established without conflict: The maiden name of plaintiff, who is an Englishwoman by birth, is Madeline Louisa Munro. In England she was usually called Louisa. After coming to California she was usually called Madeline by her friends and family, although she was sometimes addressed and spoken of as Louisa. In 1888 one Phipson, the then owner of the land in controversy, executed a deed thereof to this plaintiff, naming her therein as Louisa Munro. In December, 1894, under the name of Madeline L. Munro, she married Alfred A. Emery, and continued to be his wife until the time of his death in 1903. In the marriage license she was named and designated Madeline L. Munro, and in the certificate of the minister who performed the marriage ceremony her name was written Madeline L. Munro. She had never executed any conveyance of the property, and, so far as her title is concerned, since the date of her deed, it has always stood on the records of the recorder's office in San Diego county in the name of Louisa Munro, and not in the name of Madeline Louisa Munro or Madeline L. Munro. Defendant's title comes by mesne conveyance from a judgment obtained in an action to quiet title to the land in controversy prosecuted by Nellie Rue against Louisa Munro. Proof of plaintiff's title having been made as above outlined, defendant, to establish his interest in the land, offered the judgment roll in the action of Nellie Rue v. Louisa Munro, and upon objection of plaintiff the judgment roll was refused admission in evidence. The soundness of the court's ruling upon this proffer embodies the questions presented for consideration upon this appeal. Respondent's objections to the admission of the judgment roll, while couched in different forms, resolve themselves into two: First, that the judgment is void because of the insufficiency of the facts set forth in the affidavit for publication of summons; second, that the court acquired no jurisdiction of this plaintiff by the substituted process and constructive service, she being a married woman, and her husband not having been joined with her (Code Civ. Proc. § 370), and she not having been sued in her true name, which at the time of the commencement of the action of Rue v. Munro was Madeline L. Emery, and not Louisa Munro.

The first objection thus advanced needs little consideration. This plaintiff connected herself with the action of Rue v. Quinn by making a motion therein, after judgment by default had been entered against her, to set the judgment aside upon the ground that it had been entered without any jurisdiction having been obtained over her person. The ground there urged was the same as that here presented, that the facts set forth in the affidavit for the publication of summons were entirely insufficient. The trial court granted her motion, but upon appeal to this court its order was reversed; it being here held that the affidavit was sufficient. Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 Pac. 216, 70 Pac. 732. The ruling and determination in Rue v. Quinn have subsequently been approved in numerous cases. Weis v. Cain, 140 Cal. xvii, 73 Pac. 980; People v. Wrin, 143 Cal. 13, 76 Pac. 646; People v. Norris, 144 Cal. 424, 77 Pac. 998; Cargile v. Silsbee, 148 Cal. 260, 82 Pac. 1044; Shepard v. Mace, 148 Cal. 272, 82 Pac. 1046.

The questions presented under the second objection are both more interesting and more important. Preliminarily, it is to be borne in mind that the attack here made upon the judgment in Rue v. Emery is collateral, and to be successful it must be established that the judgment is void on its face. Hahn v.

Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742; Sharp v. Daugney, 33 Cal. 505; Galvin v. Palmer, 134 Cal. 426, 66 Pac. 572; Van Fleet, Coll. Att. §§ 3, 614, 616. That the judgment was not void for nonjoinder of the husband as party plaintiff is established by the case of Bogart v. Woodruff, 96 Cal. 609, 31 Pac. 618. The facts in that case were that a married woman, while a feme sole, had executed a promissory note. Suit was brought upon this promissory note against the maker. She was sued in her maiden name, and her husband was not joined. Personal service upon her was had, and judgment went for plaintiff upon her default. The original plaintiff then commenced another action to enforce the judgment against the wife sued under her married name; her husband being joined as defendant. There, as here, a collateral attack was made upon this judgment; it being contended that it was void, first, because of the misnomer of the married woman defendant, and, second, because, being a married woman, her husband was a necessary party, without whom the court could not obtain jurisdiction of the person of the wife. The trial court took this view, but upon appeal the judgment was reversed by this court, holding that when the wife suffered such a judgment to be given against her, either after trial on the merits or by default, the objection of the nonjoinder of the husband was waived, and holding further that the judgment was not void because of misnomer in describing her by her maiden name, the name under which she executed the contract; she being sufficiently identified by the name under which she was sued. The only distinction between the Bogart Case and the case at bar is that in the former personal service on the defendant was had, while in the latter substituted service by publication of summons was the mode adopted for acquiring jurisdiction. Whether or not any different conclusion is necessitated by reason of this fact is a matter for later consideration.

The rule as laid down in the Bogart Case, namely, that a judgment is valid when obtained against a married woman sued as a feme sole and in her maiden name, particularly upon any contract which she has executed in such name, is a rule of general acceptance. 1 Freeman on Judg. § 150; Van Fleet on Coll. Att. §§ 603, 616; Hartman v. Ogborn, 54 Pa. 120, 93 Am. Dec. 679; Winchester v. Everett, 80 Me. 535, 15 Atl. 596, 1 L. R. A. 425, 6 Am. St. Rep. 228; McCaffrey v. Corrigan, 49 Ind. 175. This is in consonance with the principle of common law that a man may change his name at will and sue or be sued in any name in which he is known and recognized. Linton v. First Nat. Bank (C. C.) 10 Fed. 894. So a person may adopt any name in which to prosecute business, and may sue or be sued in such a name. Graham v. Elzner, 28 Ill. App. 269. This principle has been applied in this state, where it is held that, if the owner of property convey by any name, the conveyance as between himself and his grantee is valid and will transfer title. Fallon v. Kehoe, 38 Cal. 44, 99 Am. Dec. 347; Wilson v. White, 84 Cal. 239, 24 Pac. 114. So, when it comes to examining the authorities dealing with actions affecting real estate, this same principle, it will be found, is universally applied. If a man chooses to take the title to real estate in a name other than his true name, so far as that property is concerned, he has assumed the name in which he takes title as his true name, and in suits affecting the property he may be sued by such designation. A leading and well-considered case upon this subject is that of Blinn v. Chessman, decided by the Supreme Court of Minnesota. 49 Minn. 140, 51 N. W. 666, 32 Am. St. Rep. 536. In that case the purchaser was George Chessman. He accepted a deed executed to him in the name of George Cheeseman, and the deed was so recorded. Thereafter an action was brought by one Leonard against George Cheeseman to determine adverse claims to the property. Summons was served by publication, and judgment by default was rendered in favor of Leonard that he was the owner of the property. In time plaintiff Blinn succeeded to Leonard's title and brought suit against George Chessman, and, as the court stated, the question presented in that case "was whether a judgment against Cheeseman was of effect as to this defendant Chessman as respects his title to the land." The reasoning of the court is full and convincing. It declares the presumption to be that a grantee who personally accepts, retains, and records a deed of conveyance does so with knowledge of its contents. It affirmed the trial court in holding that the Leonard judgment against Cheeseman was binding upon Chessman, who had taken title to the property in the name of Cheeseman, saying: "This conclusion is not based upon the ground of the likeness of the two names, either in spelling or in sound; but upon the ground—upon which also the decision of the court below was placed—that the defendant is to be deemed to have adopted the name of Cheeseman for the purpose of acquiring and holding the title to this land, and he can have no reason to complain that he is so designated in legal proceedings calling in question the validity of the title so acquired and held. From the fact that this was not his true name it does not follow that the court did not acquire jurisdiction. If he had assumed this name, or any other, generally, and for all purposes, and especially if he had come to be known by the name assumed, there would be no doubt that legal proceedings against him in such name would, in general, be sustained. The name is not the person, but only a means of designating the person intended; and where one assumes and comes to be known by another name than that which he properly bears, that name may be effectually employed for the purpose of designating him. * * * In this case it is probably true that the defendant did not intend to change his name, nor to adopt for general purposes the name of Cheeseman, but he did—if he knew the misnomer, as we must assume he did—most effectually assume that name for the purpose of taking and holding the title to this land. He not only accepted the conveyance made to himself by that name, but he placed it on record, for the purpose, and with the effect, presumably, of giving notice to the world that the title had been so conveyed and was so held. * * * In proceedings concerning this land it would be at least quite as likely that the name disclosed by the record as the grantee would be used in a summons or notice intended to be addressed to such grantee as that the record should be disregarded, and the true name of the defendant used. Hence there was as much reason why his attention should be arrested by the name of George Cheeseman in a published summons or notice as there would be if his true name were used. He had placed himself under the necessity of having regard to the former as well as the latter. He cannot well complain that the name in which he took the title, and which he put forth to the world by the records, as the name of the grantee, should be employed in proceedings instituted for an adjudication concerning that title." The same principle is enunciated by the Supreme Court of Missouri in Elting v. Gould, 96 Mo. 535, 9 S. W. 922. The court was passing upon a judgment obtained in a suit brought against R. O. Elting to enforce a lien for taxes upon his property. Judgment had been given against R. O. Elting, and the land was sold and conveyed by sheriff's deed. Upon the records of the county the land stood in the name of R. O. Elting, but Elting's name was Richard O. Elting, and he contended that a judgment rendered against him in the name of R. O. Elting was void. The service, as here, was by publication. The court upheld the judgment, saying that the patent to the land which was recorded and which was the only conveyance of title on record showed that R. O. Elting owned the land. "It is by this name and description that he is known in his title papers. We think it is sufficient."

Applying the principle of these cases to the facts in the case at bar it appears that this plaintiff took title to the land in the name of Louisa Munro, that in her recorded certificate of marriage her name was given as Madeline L. Munro, that there was nothing of record to disclose that Louisa Munro was the same person designated as Madeline L. Munro, and consequently there was nothing of record to disclose that Louisa Munro had ever changed her name. So far as the real estate was concerned, she held title to it only as Louisa Munro. No steps, which a reasonable or prudent person might take, would under our existing laws serve to give a party desirous of commencing an action any knowledge or information that Louisa Munro had married or had in any other way changed her name. The law does provide that any person in whom the title of real estate is vested who shall from any cause have his or her name changed shall upon any conveyance of real estate set forth the name in which he or she derived title to such real estate. St. 1874, p. 345, c. 245; Civ. Code, § 1096. The law, too, might well have provided that, when a woman in whose maiden name title to real property stands shall marry, she shall cause recordation of the fact to be made in such manner as to give notice thereof to the world; but the law not having done this, it may not be said that a plaintiff is in fault who, after exhausting the means of information open to him, commences an action against a person holding such title by the same name in which the title is held. The inconvenience, and, indeed, the grave consequences resulting from a different view would render actions to quiet title by substituted process of little or no benefit. In nearly every state there are statutes authorizing the change of a man's name. A nonresident owner of land in California may legally cause his name to be changed in another state and an adverse claimant in this state, after satisfying the court that after due diligence the nonresident owner cannot be found within the state, may commence an action against the party under the name in which his record title stands. If a judgment so obtained can be collaterally attacked by a showing that the nonresident claimant had legally changed his name, and that therefore jurisdiction was not acquired, which is the contention here made, the value of such an action is at an end.

But does the fact that in this case jurisdiction of the defendant was secured by published summons, in any respect, change the rule? We think not. In every case where service by publication is authorized, if the statutory requirements have been complied with, it is as effective for all purposes as personal service. The only distinction in this state is found in the privilege accorded by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which allows a defendant not personally served, on such terms as may be just, to appear within a year after the rendition of a judgment by default against him and answer to the merits of the original action. We have here a case where the claimant to the real estate is served by published summons under the name by which she took and recorded her title to the land. In Blinn v. Chessman, supra, the service was by publication, and, addressing itself to this question, the court there said: "If such a name is employed in legal process or notices, whether served personally or by publication—where such service is authorized—the notice is effectual; the person who has assumed the name is presumed to understand that the process or notice addressed in that name is addressed to him." In Mosely v. Reily, 126 Mo. 124, 28 S. W. 895, 26 L. R. A. 721, the same subject is considered; the court saying: "As has been said, the object of the publication is to give notice of the proceeding to the real person who is interested. The name is only used to identify such person, and may be the only means of identification; but, if the name as used is the same as the party himself uses and under which he is known, and the facts recited in the notice sufficiently identify the person intended, and advise him that his property is brought before the courts, we think that would be sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to render the judgment. * * *

Notice by publication, though only allowable from necessity, is, when authorized, as effective as personal service. Every one is presumed to have had opportunity to read these publications and to learn from them the nature and objects of the proceedings of which they give notice." In Lane v. Innes, 43 Minn. 137, 45 N. W. 4, the Supreme Court of Minnesota declared that "any notice which would give jurisdiction if personally served upon the party is good when served by publication if that publicity of the pendency of the action which the law intends is thereby given." See, also, Van Fleet on Coll. Att. §§ 361, 367.

As against this reasoning and authority, our attention is called to but one conflicting case, that of Freeman v. Hawkins, 77 Tex. 493, 14 S. W. 364, 19 Am. St. Rep. 769. In that case land was conveyed to Mary E. Robison. She subsequently married a man by the name of Freeman. Thereafter suit was brought against her in the name of Mary E. Robison to quiet title. The court declared that Mary E. Robison upon marriage took the surname of her husband, saying: "A citation, whether to be served personally or by publication, must contain the names of the parties to the action. We are of the opinion that a citation by publication, requiring 'Mary E. Robison' to be cited and to appear, was not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction to render a judgment that would bind 'Mary E. Freeman.'" In this brief statement there is no consideration paid to the general rules which we have discussed, nor to the authorities which support them, and we think the conclusion reached by the Texas court is at variance with the otherwise universally accepted doctrine.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court upon a new trial to admit in evidence the proffered judgment roll.

ERVIN v. RECORD PUB. CO. (L. A. 2,088.)
(Supreme Court of California. July 28, 1908.)

1. LIBEL AND SLANDER — PUBLICATION OF LIBELOUS ARTICLE—INNUENDOES.

A newspaper publication, averring that a woman had a great admirer in a Chinese pugilist, who wired her to meet him at a designated place and time, that the time fixed was too early for her, that there were some things better left unsaid, and that it was best to pass over the meeting between the two, some things being too sacred for words, is on its face equivocal and capable of meaning that she was a member of the underworld, familiar with the Chinese prize fighter, and on such terms of intimacy with him that things took place between them that were not proper for publication, and, if intended and understood to convey such meaning, the article was libelous per se.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 71-78.]

2. SAME.

To maintain an action for words which on their face appear harmless, but which may under certain circumstances convey a covert meaning, it is necessary to aver that the author intended them to be understood, and that they were in fact understood by those who read them, in their covert sense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 206.]

3. SAME.

It is sufficient to make a publication libelous, if it is of such a character that persons unacquainted with the female referred to and hearing of her for the first time through the article reasonably would and did understand therefrom that she was a person of low character and guilty of immoral conduct; the charge as so understood being false and malicious.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 71-78.]

4. SAME.

A complaint in libel is sufficient where it appears from the article complained of and from the innuendo assigning its meaning that the article as a whole was false and scandalous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 184.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Mabel Clare Ervin against the Record Publishing Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Drake, for appellant. Edwin A. Meserve (Paul H. McPherrin, of counsel), for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment for damages against defendant in an action for libel. The defendant appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll.

The defendant is a publisher of a newspaper in the city of Los Angeles. As a part of its daily issue, it published what was known as the "Pink Sheet," or "Sporting Edition," in which was contained sporting news, with pictures of prize fighters, wrestlers, and other persons of that class, and other news relating to sporting events. The charge made in the complaint is that it maliciously published in a "Sporting Edition" or "Pink Sheet" of its newspaper, of and concerning the plaintiff, the following article: "Too Early for the Queen. Ah Wing Wired 'Queen Mab' to Meet Him, But Hour Was Too Early. Mab Ervin, 'Queen Mab,' has a great admirer in one Ah Wing, champion Chinese pugilist of the world. Ah Wing arrived in Los Angeles Monday morning from his home in Sacramento, to put the finishing touches to his condition for his battle Friday night with Eddie Menny at the pavilion of the Pacific Athletic Club. Before he left home, he wired 'Queen Mab,' asking her to meet him at the depot at 7 a. m., but the hour was too early for her majesty, and Ah Wing came into town with nobody to welcome him. He was dressed in his bulliest and brassiest Chinese costume, consisting of a pair of pale blue flowered trousers, a dark blue broadcloth jacket, and a black pot-shaped chapeau surmounting by a cute little rosette of red silk. The first time he was here he had on his second best suit. The queen interviewed him and made the biggest hit of her life. This time Ah Wing wore his best clothes because—well, because he wanted to look well in the eye of her majesty, and he never dreamed that she wouldn't be at the depot to meet him. He forgot that one of the prerogatives of royalty is to do as you please, and Ah Wing was sad as he came into the Record office to find Queen Mab. There are some things which are better left unsaid, so it is best to pass over the meeting between the queen and her humble subject. Some things are too sacred for mere words." It is further alleged that, by the use and publication of said words, the defendant intended to assert, and be understood as asserting, and by the readers of the said newspaper was, in fact, understood as asserting, that plaintiff was a person of low character, a sweetheart and boon companion, and the consort of the said Chinaman prize fighter, that she associated with him, was in the habit of meeting him socially and intimately, and would have met him at the train, except that it was too early, that they did thereafter meet in defendant's office, and that because of their said intimacy there were some things that happened between them that could not be told, and that their relations were such that there were some things too sacred for mere words. It is further alleged that the charge, as thus understood, was false and scandalous, and imputed to the plaintiff a low and base character, without shame or self-respect.

The only error urged upon this appeal is that the court erred in overruling a demurrer to the complaint, assigning as a ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The objection is not well taken. It is not necessary here to decide whether or not the article is libelous per se, but the best that can be said of it is that it is upon its face equivocal and capable of a meaning injurious to the plaintiff of the character stated in the innuendo. It might readily be understood by any one reading it as implying that the plaintiff was a member of the underworld, familiar with the Chinese prize fighter, and upon such terms of intimacy with him that when they met things took place between them that were not proper for publication, implying that they were of an indecent or improper character. Being capable of this meaning, it was proper for the plaintiff in her complaint to allege, by way of innuendo, the meaning which it was intended by the defendant and was understood by its readers, to convey, as set forth above. So understood, there can be no question that the article was libelous. "The rule which governs the action for libel in such cases is perfectly well settled. Words, which on their face appear to be entirely harmless, may, under certain circumstances, convey a covert meaning, wholly different from the ordinary and natural interpretation put upon them. To render such words actionable, it is necessary for the pleader to aver that the author of the libel intended them to be understood, and that they were in fact understood by those who read them, in their covert sense." Maynard v. Fireman's Fund Co., 47 Cal. 208; Edwards v. Publishing Soc., 99 Cal. 435, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70; Ingraham v. Lyon, 105 Cal. 257, 38 Pac. 892. "If the words are equivocal, or ambiguous, and admit of several meanings, it is proper to attribute to them in the innuendo, the fixed and definite meaning the plaintiff thinks they ought to bear." 25 Cyc. 451.

In addition to the facts heretofore stated, the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was an unmarried woman of marriageable age and known as "Mab Ervin"; that at the time of the publication of the alleged libel she was engaged in the business of writing for newspapers, and was in the employ of the defendant on its staff of reporters. It is claimed by the defendant that persons acquainted with plaintiff and having knowledge of these facts could not understand the article published in any other than an innocent sense. This, however, would not remove its libelous character. It is sufficient to make a publication libelous if it is of such a character that persons unacquainted with the plaintiff, and hearing of her for the first time through said article, reasonably would and do understand therefrom that she is a person of low character and guilty of improper and immoral conduct; the charge, so understood, being false and malicious.

Another ground of demurrer was that the complaint was uncertain, in that it could not be ascertained what portion of the article it was which plaintiff claimed was false and scandalous. There is no merit in this assignment of insufficiency. It is sufficient, if it appears from the article and from the innuendo assigning its meaning that the article, as a whole, was false and scandalous.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re EDWARDS' ESTATE. (L. A. 2,188.)
 (Supreme Court of California. July 30, 1908.
 Rehearing Denied Aug. 27, 1908.)

1. WILLS—TESTAMENTARY DIRECTIONS—AUTHORITY OF COURT.

Generally speaking, the law favors testacy to intestacy, and is zealous to see that the testamentary directions of a testator are complied with, and only in case of intestacy does the state distribute the property of decedent under its laws of succession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 964.]

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — APPOINTMENT—JURISDICTION OF COURT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1299, 1303, 1304, authorizing enumerated persons to petition for the probate of a will, etc., and section 1373, providing for notice of hearing of petition for administration by posting the same, etc., the court must postpone the hearing of an application for administration on the estate of a decedent, who left a will alleged to be invalid, until, in appropriate proceedings, the question of the validity of the will has been determined.

3. SAME—SPECIAL ADMINISTRATORS—APPOINTMENT.

The court, on postponing consideration of an application for administration of a decedent, who left a will alleged to be invalid, until its validity has been determined, may protect the estate by appointing a special administrator, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1411.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 119.]

4. WILLS—PETITION FOR PROBATE.

The purpose of a petition for the probate of a will, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1299, is to give jurisdiction, and, while the person who petitions for the probate is generally interested in sustaining the will, it is not necessary that he should be such a person, and the court on obtaining jurisdiction must take all proper evidence to the end of establishing the will, or the contrary.

5. SAME—"TO HAVE THE WILL PROVED."

The words "to have the will proved," in Code Civ. Proc. § 1299, authorizing enumerated persons to petition the court having jurisdiction "to have the will proved," mean no more than that the court shall hear all evidence offered in proof or disproof of the will, and, if on any material matter there is a failure to offer evidence, the production of it shall be had at the instance of the court itself, in order to satisfy the court, under section 1317, of the testamentary capacity of testator and the lack of duress or undue influence.

6. SAME.

While a creditor is in no sense interested in upholding the will of the deceased debtor, and is interested only in securing payment of his debt out of the estate, he may petition for the probate of the will, and thereby advance the administration of the estate to the end that he may be paid.

7. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — PETITION FOR ADMINISTRATION.

Where petitioner for administration of a decedent, who left a will alleged by petitioner to be invalid, did not indicate a willingness to postpone the hearing of the petition until the validity of the will had been determined in an appropriate proceeding therefor, the court was justified in dismissing the petition.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Walter M. Edwards, deceased. From a judgment dismissing the petition of Sarah Edwards for letters of administration on the estate of the deceased, she appeals. Affirmed.

Holcomb & Shaw, Will H. Holcomb, and George N. P. Shaw, for appellant. Collier, Smith & Hoff, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The petitioner, in seeking letters of administration upon the estate of the deceased, set forth facts which indisputably entitled her to such letters, if the deceased died intestate. Upon this matter she alleged: That deceased left a purported will, executed in due form, with certain codicils thereto; that the will and codicils were on file with the court. She then averred that, at the time of the attempted execution and publication of the will and codicils, the deceased was insane and not of sound and disposing mind and memory, and that therefore he died intestate. Contest over the issuance of the letters was joined, upon the ground that the petition for letters disclosed the fact that instruments testamentary in character and executed with the formalities required by law were on file with the court, that they had not been presented to the court for probate, that no adjudication of their validity or invalidity had been made, and that by reason of the existence of these instruments, not as yet offered for probate, the court had not jurisdiction to determine the petition for letters of administration. After hearing, the court so ruled and denied the petition for letters, and upon appeal the single question presented may be thus stated: Where it is made to appear that an instrument testamentary in character and executed with the formalities required by law has not been offered for probate, may a court, upon application for general letters of administration, hear and determine the question of the validity or invalidity of this instrument, and, as it shall determine, grant or refuse to grant general letters of administration, or does it become the duty of the court, upon such a showing, to postpone the consideration of the application for letters of administration until, in the appropriate proceeding provided by law for the proving of a will, the question of the validity or invalidity of the instrument shall have been determined?

In effect, the latter was the course which the court adopted, and its determination we think was sound. Generally speaking, the law favors testacy to intestacy, and is zealous to see that the testamentary directions of a testator are fully complied with. Only in case of intestacy does the state distribute the property of the decedent under its laws of succession. The case here presented is one which, in the nature of things, will rarely, arise. Evidence of this appears from the fact that it is the first time that it has arisen in the history of this state, and the researches of learned counsel have disclosed but two cases from other states where the matter has come before the courts. Where an instrument is in form a will, there will usually be somebody interested in maintaining its validity who will therefore petition the court to have it proved. Under our procedure such a petition seems necessary to confer upon the court jurisdiction to act (Code Civ. Proc. § 1299 et seq.), though under our earlier probate procedure no petition was required. In re Howard's Estate, 22 Cal. 395. Manifestly, the petition for letters of administration, in such a case as this, is presented by one in hostility to the asserted will. The notice required to be given (Code Civ. Proc. § 1373) is an entirely different notice from that required to be given upon petition for the proving of a will (sections 1303, 1304). No notice is given to the executors, devisees, or legatees, or to any person who may be interested in supporting the alleged will. Upon the hearing therefore it may be assumed that no evidence will be forthcoming to substantiate the validity of the will, while evidence against that validity will be offered. The result may be foreseen. The court will be compelled to find against the validity of the instrument and to issue letters of administration, and, while it may at once be conceded that such a determination would not be conclusive against those claiming an interest under the will, the practical result would be that an estate would go into the hands of an administrator antagonistic in interest to the will. Distribution of such an estate may readily be had in ten months, and after such distribution has become final the difficulties standing in the way of a recovery of the property from the distributees are too apparent to need enumeration. It is not necessary here to say that the court, under such circumstances, is without power to adjudicate the matter until after the determination of the validity or invalidity of the purported will under proceedings for the proving thereof; but it must be apparent, aside from the question of power, that the court should treat such a showing as equivalent to a plea in abatement, and at least suspend the hearing of the application for letters until the question of the validity of the will has been determined in appropriate proceedings. The law provides ample means for the protection of the estate until this shall have been accomplished. The situation presented is one which the law expressly contemplates may arise, and which it meets by turning the custody of the estate for its preservation into the hands of a special administrator. It is the simple case of the delay in granting letters testamentary or administration. Code Civ. Proc. § 1411. Nor need it be apprehended that the situation which appellant argues may result, namely, a situation where nobody applies for the probate of a will, and therefore the estate forever remains unadministered, will ever in fact occur. Some devisee or legatee, desirous of upholding the will, or some heir desirous of obtaining his share of the estate, in the event of intestacy, or even a creditor, will assuredly appear and present his petition to have the will proved. That a creditor may do so as a person "interested in the estate" will not, of course, be questioned (Code Civ. Proc. § 1299), and it is so expressly provided in New York, from the provisions of whose Code so many of our probate enactments have been drawn (Code Civ. Proc. N. Y. § 2614). Nor are the apprehensions of appellant that one petitioning to have a will proved, while holding the belief that it is invalid, will thus stultify himself beyond rehabilitation, based upon any solid foundation in fact. Generally speaking, it is true that the person who petitions for the probate of a will is one interested in sustaining the validity of the proffered instrument, but it is by no means necessary that he should be such person. The purpose of the petition is to give jurisdiction to the court, and, jurisdiction having been obtained, it becomes the duty of the court, with or without contest, to take all necessary and proper evidence, not to the end of establishing the will, or, per contra, not to the end of denying it probate, but to the end of determining whether or not it be a legal expression of a testamentary intent upon the part of the deceased. It is not required that the petition be verified. The petition is merely a request to the court "to have the will proved," which means no more than that the court shall hear all evidence offered in proof or disproof of the will, and, if upon any material matter there be a failure to offer evidence, the production of it shall be had at the instance of the court itself. Thus the sole question in controversy over the probate of a will may be whether the signature of the testator was forged, yet nevertheless, before admitting the will to probate, upon disproof of the forgery, the court must be satisfied, not only that the will was duly executed, but that the testator at the time of its execution was of sound and disposing mind, and not acting under duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence. Code Civ. Proc. § 1317. A creditor is in no sense interested in upholding a will. He is interested only in securing payment of his debt out of the assets of the estate. Yet he may petition for the probate of a will; his object in so petitioning being nothing more than to advance the administration of the estate to the end that he may be paid. No unseemly delay may therefore be feared, as has been said, in such a case; but, upon the other hand, there is the distinct gain that the decree of the validity or invalidity of the instrument will have been made in a proceeding especially designed for the purpose of determining that very fact, and that determination is a final, conclusive, and binding determination upon the whole world. During the delay which may result, the estate itself and its interests are being protected by a special administrator—an officer of the court, appointed by the court for this particular purpose. Such, it seems, must be the natural and orderly procedure, and for this reason, as we have said, aside from the question of the power of the court to hear and determine the matter in an application for letters of administration, it was clearly proper for it to postpone the hearing of the letters until the validity of the instrument in its custody, and executed with all the formalities of a will, had been determined in proceedings brought for that purpose.

It has been said that but two cases have been called to our attention bearing directly upon this matter. One, to which we have not access, declares, in the language of appellant's brief, that "administration will be granted, as in case of intestacy, where the testator was insane when he made the will." In re Goods of Rich [1892] Prob. Div. 143. Such undoubtedly would be the determination in this state, but the question here before us is: In what proceeding is the question of insanity to be determined? Much more nearly in point is the New York case (In re Taggart's Estate [Sur.] 16 N. Y. Supp. 514). It is there said: "On application for letters of administration by a creditor of deceased, it having been shown to the court by the next of kin that deceased left an instrument purporting to be his will, administration cannot be granted until the question of the validity of the will is disposed of in an independent proceeding, although the next of kin declare their purpose not to offer it for probate." In that case the court adopted what we think to be the correct rule. It expressed its willingness to postpone the consideration of the application until after the hearing and determination in another proceeding of the question of the validity of the will. But, if petitioner did not indicate that such was his wish, it ordered that the proceedings should be dismissed. In this case, if there had been any expression of a willingness upon the part of petitioner to have a postponement of the hearing of her petition, doubtless the court would have ordered it; but, under the circumstances, it was justified in dismissing the petition.

The decree and judgment appealed from are therefore affirmed.

1. COURTS—JURISDICTION—APPELLATE JURISDICTION—"ASSESSMENT."

The word "assessment," in Const. art. 6, § 4, conferring appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court in cases at law in which the demand amounts to $2,000 or more, or which involve the legality "of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine," and giving appellate jurisdiction to the District Court of Appeal of cases where the demand amounts to $300, and does not amount to $2,000, when considered in connection with section 5, conferring original jurisdiction on the superior court of cases involving the legality of any "tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine," refers to assessments for public taxation or for the raising of funds for local public improvements, and does not include assessments by a private corporation to compel stockholders to contribute to its treasury additional sums in proportion to their ownership of paid-up stock; and the Supreme Court does not have appellate jurisdiction of an action by a private corporation for $350 for an assessment by it on paid-up stock held by a stockholder, but the appeal lies to the District Court of Appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 549-555; vol. 8, pp. 7583-7584.]

2. SAME—TRANSFER TO PROPER COURT.

Where a case, improperly appealed to the Supreme Court, instead of to the District Court of Appeal, was formally submitted in the Supreme Court on the briefs on file, the submission will stand; but the case will be transferred to the District Court of Appeal for decision.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by the Bottle Mining & Milling Company against Charles Kern. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Transferred to the District Court of Appeal for decision.

Haas, Garrett & Dunnigan, for appellant. B. J. Bradner and C. S. Burnell, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal taken by the defendant to this court from a judgment of the superior court against him for the sum of $350. The action was for the recovery of that sum alleged to be due to plaintiff from the defendant upon an assessment made by the plaintiff upon its paid-up capital stock; the plaintiff being a private corporation, with all its stock fully paid up, and the defendant one of its stockholders. The complaint demanded judgment for the sum of $350 only.

The Constitution gives this court appellate jurisdiction in all cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $2,000 or more, or which involve "the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine." It also gives appellate jurisdiction to the District Court of Appeal of all cases on appeal from the superior court, where the demand, exclusive of interest, amounts to $300, and does not amount to $2,000. Const. art. 6, § 4. The word "assessment" in the clause just quoted refers to assessments relating to public taxation or to raise funds for local public improvements, and it does not include assessments or calls made by a private corporation to collect subscriptions to its capital stock or to compel its stockholders to contribute to its treasury additional sums in proportion to their ownership of paid-up stock. Section 5 of article 6, confers original jurisdiction on the superior court of all cases at law involving "the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine." In Arroyo D. & W. Co. v.

Superior Court, 92 Cal. 47, 28 Pac. 54, 27 Am. St. Rep. 91, the suit was to collect an assessment or call by a private corporation for an unpaid subscription to its capital stock, the amount demanded was less than $300, and it was held that this clause did not give the superior court original jurisdiction of the action. The same principle is applicable to the language of section 4, which by identical words confers appellate jurisdiction upon this court. The cases cannot be distinguished.

The fact that the assessment here was upon paid-up stock does not bring the case within our jurisdiction. Being a mere action at law to recover money, and the demand in the complaint being for less than $2,000 and amounting to more than $300, the appellate jurisdiction lies with the District Court of Appeal, and not with this court. The appeal was taken to the wrong court, and under the further provisions of section 4 the proper procedure is to transfer the cause to the District Court of Appeal. The case was formally submitted here upon the briefs on file. The submission will stand, but the case will be transferred for decision.

It is ordered that the cause be transferred to the District Court of Appeal of the Second District for consideration and decision.

BOORAEM v. POTTER HOTEL CO. (L. A. 2,031.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 1, 1908.)

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—"PROBABLE CAUSE."

Want of probable cause, the burden of proving which is on plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution, the determination of any disputed facts as to which is for the jury, and the sufficiency of the facts shown as to which is for the court, and which is absence of a suspicion founded on circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true, does not exist where a draft given a hotel by a guest is thrown out by the bank on which it is drawn, with the indorsement, "Has no account," and the hotel has him arrested, without further communication with the bank, and without consulting the district attorney; and this, though it knows the guest has correctly given it the name of another hotel to which he has gone, and which is further away from the bank.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by Robert E. Booraem against the Potter Hotel Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henley C. Booth and Louis H. Roseberry, for appellant. Baker & Bowen, W. S. Day, and Gray, Baker & Bowen, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was prosecuted against the defendant to obtain damages for malicious prosecution. At the conclusion of the taking of plaintiff's testimony, defendant moved for a nonsuit upon several grounds. The court granted the motion, and, from the judgment which followed, plaintiff appeals. As we think the court was correct in granting the nonsuit upon the ground that plaintiff had failed to prove a want of probable cause, no other of the grounds need be considered.

The law touching the question is both simple and settled. It is incumbent upon the plaintiff, and the burden of proof is upon him in an action of this kind, to prove want of probable cause. Davis v. Pacific Telephone Co., 127 Cal. 312, 57 Pac. 764, 59 Pac. 698. "What facts and circumstances amount to probable cause is a pure question of law. Whether they exist or not in any particular case is a pure question of fact. The former is exclusively for the court, the latter for the jury." Ball v. Rawles, 93 Cal. 222, 28 Pac. 937, 27 Am. St. Rep. 174. If the facts going to establish the presence or absence of probable cause are controverted, they must be passed upon by the jury before the court can determine the issue, but it is always for the court to say as matter of law whether or not the facts, the existence of which the jury may find, do or do not establish probable cause. Where the facts are uncontroverted, as in this case, the question resolves itself into one of pure law for the court's determination.

Coming to a consideration of the facts in this case, in connection with these well-established principles of law, the following was shown without conflict: Plaintiff was a mining engineer of high social and professional standing. Visiting California, he purchased from the First National Bank of Los Angeles a letter of credit for $500. He went from Los Angeles to the Potter Hotel at Santa Barbara, where he remained for about three days. During his stay he associated upon terms of friendship with other guests of the hotel, who were also of high social standing, though it is not made to appear that this fact was known to the hotel management. Making ready to leave Santa Barbara for San Francisco, he left word at the hotel office that he was about to depart for San Francisco, and would stay at the St. Francis Hotel in that city. He left specific directions that his mail should be forwarded to his new address. He likewise presented his letter of credit, asking the cashier in the office whether a draft upon this letter of credit would be accepted in payment of his bill, or whether he should go to a bank in Santa Barbara and draw the money to pay his bill. The hotel management agreed to accept a draft against his letter of credit. His bill amounted to about $20, and the cashier of the hotel herself drew a draft against his letter of credit in favor of the Potter Hotel Company for $30, paying him the difference. He then pursued his journey to San Francisco and took up his abode at the St. Francis Hotel. He had been there but a short time when the manager of the St. Francis Hotel informed him that he had received a message from the Potter Hotel at Santa Barbara, asking to know upon what Los Angeles bank his letter of credit was drawn. He exhibited his letter of credit to the manager of the St. Francis Hotel, and thinking that some mistake might have been made in drawing the draft—which it will be remembered he did not himself draw but only signed—he wrote to the Potter Hotel to the effect that his letter of credit was upon the First National Bank of Los Angeles and was good. That evening he was arrested by a police officer of San Francisco, was refused permission to communicate with friends so as to obtain bail, and was incarcerated in the common jail overnight. The next morning he was released and discharged; word having been received from the Potter Hotel Company that the arrest was a mistake. The Potter Hotel Company, after accepting the draft, deposited it in the usual course of business with its commercial bank in the city of Santa Barbara. By that bank it was forwarded to its correspondent in Los Angeles for collection. It passed through the clearing house, and was thrown out by the First National Bank of Los Angeles upon which it was drawn, with the indorsement placed upon it, "Has no account," and thus dishonored it was returned to the Commercial Bank of Santa Barbara, which notified the Potter Hotel Company. Thereupon the head bookkeeper, the cashier of the bookkeeping department, consulted with the manager of the hotel about procuring the arrest of plaintiff. The manager was reluctant to proceed, and the head bookkeeper, thinking that a mistake might have been made in the name of the bank upon which the draft was drawn, telephoned to the St. Francis Hotel and learned from the management there, as has been indicated, that the letter of credit was, in fact, issued by the First National Bank of Los Angeles. Since that bank had returned the draft with the indorsement above quoted, this served to confirm the suspicion that the letter of credit, as well as the draft, was fraudulent, and upon this the head bookkeeper consulted the chief of police of Santa Barbara, a complaint was sworn to, and plaintiff was arrested upon a telegraphic warrant following the filing of this complaint. Subsequent to this the Potter Hotel Company received advices from the Los Angeles bank to the effect that it had made a mistake, that the draft was good, and that it would pay it, whereupon the Potter Hotel Company immediately telephoned to San Francisco and secured the release and discharge of plaintiff.

Here are presented, upon either side, all of the facts necessary for consideration. Upon the one hand, it is argued that lack of probable cause is shown from the very conduct of the plaintiff in designating the hotel to which his mail was to be forwarded, and in actually going to that hotel as represented; that the First National Bank of Los Angeles is nearer to Santa Barbara than the St. Francis Hotel; and that before taking criminal proceedings the hotel company should have communicated with the Los Angeles bank and asked an explanation of the reason why the check was dishonored. It is further urged that the hotel company, before resorting to such drastic measures, should have consulted the district attorney, or have obtained other legal advice; and, finally, it is said—and, of course, it is true—that the conduct of plaintiff throughout was that of an honorable and upright man, and that there was nothing in his conduct to have excited suspicion. But, upon the other hand, it is quite apparent that the hotel company in its conduct was not inspired by any malicious motive. Probable cause is a suspicion founded upon circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. Davis v. Telephone Co., supra; 2 Greenleaf on Evidence, §§ 453, 457. It is equally apparent that there were presented to the hotel company very strong circumstances of suspicion. It was under no obligation to assume that an institution as prudent and careful as is a bank would have made so grave a mistake. It was under no duty, therefore, to have communicated with the bank to ask whether or not it had made a mistake. The indorsement upon the rejected draft meant but one thing—that it had been drawn upon a bank—not where the drawer had no funds, but where he had no account; and such an act, in the absence of explanation, was both a fraud and a crime. If the Potter Hotel Company, as is suggested it should have done, had consulted the district attorney, doubtless that officer, or any other attorney, would upon this presentation of the facts have said that the evidence was sufficient to justify the issuance of a criminal warrant. Such being the case, it cannot be said that plaintiff established a want of probable cause for his prosecution, absolutely unwarranted as that prosecution unquestionably and admittedly was. The fault and error lay with an institution, which, of all, is supposed to be the least liable to errors of the kind—with the Bank of Los Angeles.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

STERNE v. MARIPOSA COMMERCIAL & MINING CO. (S. F. 4,208.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 11, 1908.
On Rehearing, June 8, 1908.)

1. TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT.

The rule that, where a portion of the testimony is unobjectionable, the party moving to strike out must designate with precision the particular portion challenged, has no application where the whole answer is subject to the objection made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 248.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to an employé through the alleged negligence of defendant in not furnishing a socket wrench for tightening the nuts on a machine, plaintiff stated on cross-examination, in answer to a question where he acquired his information regarding certain kinds of wrenches, that one of defendant's employés, who was subsequently shown to have had charge of part of defendant's machinery, and who presumably had considerable knowledge concerning the matter under inquiry, told him that, if a socket wrench had been used, he, plaintiff, would not have been hurt. Held, that the refusal to strike out the answer was prejudicial error.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for injuries to an employé through the alleged negligence of defendant in furnishing a spanner wrench instead of a socket wrench for tightening the nuts on a machine, instructions making the question of defendant's negligence turn on the conclusion of the jury as to whether or not the spanner wrench furnished and used was in fact a suitable wrench for the work, without regard to whether or not there had been any want of ordinary care on defendant's part in failing to furnish a socket wrench, were erroneous; it being essential to the existence of negligence on the part of defendant, not only that the appliance was in fact not a safe one for the work, but also that defendant knew, or ought in the exercise of reasonable care for the safety of its employés to have known, that the wrenches furnished were not safe and sufficient.

4. SAME—APPLIANCES—DUTY OF MASTER.

The obligation of an employer in furnishing safe appliances for the servant to work with is simply to use reasonable care; that is, the degree of care which a man of ordinary prudence in the same line of business would be expected to exercise to secure his own safety were he doing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 173.]

Beatty, C. J., dissenting on rehearing.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Mariposa County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by Stanley Sterne, by his guardian ad litem, against the Mariposa Commercial & Mining Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

Lindley & Eickhoff, J. M. Corcoran, and B. L. Quayle, for appellant. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for $7,000 damages for personal injuries, alleged to have been suffered by him through the negligence of defendant, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff, a boy nearly 17 years of age, was in the employ of defendant at its mine in Mariposa county. There was a hoisting plant operated by steam used in the mining work, and plaintiff was employed as fireman and in assisting around the engine used as a part of such hoisting plant, and to perform certain other duties, such as running the air compressor, etc., and there was evidence sufficient to sustain a conclusion that he was required to work wherever directed by one Pettis, the engineer of defendant. On March 13, 1903, certain repair work was done on the bearings on the pillow block of the hoist, on which bearings revolved the shaft of a cogged wheel. This work was done by Maguire, the general foreman and representative of the company at the mine, Pettis, Mills (a machinist), and one Thorn. This work having apparently been satisfactorily completed, Maguire ordered the engineer to start up the engine, and he and Thorn left the engine room. The engine having been started, Mills was engaged in making a final adjustment about the pillow block and bearings, and, for the purpose of tightening one of the nuts, had applied to the nut a wrench variously denominated in the record a spanner or stationary wrench. At this point plaintiff appeared upon the scene. There was in plaintiff's own testimony evidence sufficient to support a conclusion that Pettis told plaintiff to get a monkey wrench and assist Mills in his work, although the other evidence indicates that Mills was already using a monkey wrench in connection with a spanner wrench in tightening the nut; the nut being so situated that it could not be turned without a combination of two wrenches. A monkey wrench was applied to the spanner wrench being used by Mills, and, Mills holding in place the spanner wrench, plaintiff turned the spanner wrench by means of the monkey wrench, and was in the act of making a second turn, when, according to plaintiff's contention, the spanner wrench in Mills' hands slipped sideways from the nut, and plaintiff's hand, in consequence thereof, came in contact with the cogs of the wheel and was so mutilated as to require amputation. The nut was hexagonal, and there had been supplied no socket wrench which would fit it.

Much is said in the brief of counsel for plaintiff as to the effect of the failure of defendant to deny certain allegations of the complaint which we take to be nothing more than attempted allegations of the legal duty of an employer to his employés in the matter of furnishing suitable tools and appliances, and keeping the same in proper repair. Such allegations had no proper place in the complaint and tendered no issue of fact. The failure to deny them in the answer in no way affects the determination of the case, which must be determined upon the facts admitted or proved, in the light of the law as settled by our statutes and decisions. The basis of the alleged liability of defendant for the injury suffered by plaintiff was (1) the claim that defendant negligently failed to furnish a proper wrench for the tightening of this particular nut, the claim being that a socket wrench, to be used in connection with the monkey wrench, was the only proper and safe appliance for the particular work; and (2) the claim that defendant was negligent in sending plaintiff, alleged to be an inexperienced minor, without warning, into a place and position of danger. It is earnestly urged that the evidence was insufficient to support a conclusion that there was any negligence in the failure to furnish a socket wrench. We deem it unnecessary to consider this contention in view of the fact that the judgment and order must be reversed for an error occurring at the trial. It is impossible for us to say upon which theory the jury rendered the verdict against defendant—whether upon the theory that it had failed to use reasonable care in the matter of furnishing a safe and suitable wrench, or upon the theory that it had negligently sent plaintiff, without warning, to work in a dangerous place. It follows that, if prejudicial error was committed in regard to the issue relative to the wrench, a reversal must be had.

Plaintiff, in his testimony on direct examination, having spoken of a "stationary wrench" and a "monkey wrench," stated that there was no socket wrench on the premises, and no wrench similar thereto. He then described a socket wrench as being one with six sides and covering the whole of the six-sided nut; whereas the stationary wrench covered only two sides of such nut. This was his only testimony in relation to wrenches on direct examination. On cross-examination he was asked by defendant's counsel: "Well, where did you acquire the information which you gave in response to the questions recently asked you by Mr. Hanlon in reference to stationary wrenches or socket wrenches?" The plaintiff in answer was proceeding to state that he had been told certain things by one of the men, when he was interrupted by defendant's counsel with a statement that what he was saying was not an answer to the question, and they did not want it. Plaintiff's counsel insisted that the plaintiff be allowed to finish the answer he was giving, and, against the protest of defendant, the witness was allowed to give the following so-called answer: "I was told by J. H. Lind that, if a socket wrench had been used, I never would have been hurt." Defendant's counsel immediately moved that the answer be stricken out on the ground that it was not responsive to the question, and earnestly and at length set forth the reasons in support of the motion, but the trial court denied the motion and allowed the answer to stand. It was subsequently made by plaintiff to appear that J. H. Lind was an employé of defendant at the mine who had charge of a part of the machinery, and who presumably had considerable knowledge concerning the matter under inquiry. There was thus placed before the jury, as proper evidence for their consideration in determining the cause of the accident and the question of defendant's negligence, the extrajudicial statement of a man whose opinion was apparently entitled to some weight, as to the exact cause of the accident. That statement was of such a nature as to intimate negligence on the part of defendant in not supplying a socket wrench. It came to the jury without the sanction of an oath and without opportunity to defendant to cross-examine the maker of the statement. We can conceive of no ground upon which the ruling of the court denying the motion to strike out this answer can be sustained. The answer of the witness was wholly and entirely irresponsible and foreign to the question asked. The rule that, where a portion of the testimony is unobjectionable, the party moving to strike out must designate with precision the particular portion challenged, relied on by plaintiff's counsel, of course, has no application where the whole answer is subject to the objection made. Counsel for plaintiff makes a futile attempt to show that a portion of the answer here, namely, "I was told by J. H. Lind," was responsive. But these words cannot be thus separated from the remainder of the answer, for to so separate them would be to make them express something not within the meaning of any part of the answer. No part of the answer as given, when considered as a whole, stated that the witness had received any information on the matters concerning which he had testified on direct examination from J. H. Lind. The answer of the witness cannot thus be mutilated and distorted from its original meaning. It was an answer expressive of a single thought, absolutely foreign to any matter embraced in the question asked by counsel for defendant. It is not material that the so-called answer was given to a question asked by counsel for defendant on cross-examination. "While the rule may be somewhat stringent as to concluding a party by the answers of his own witnesses in general response to a question, or binding him by irrelevant answers to irrelevant questions, still it never has been held, or should be, that a party is bound by the irresponsible answers of his adversary's witnesses, and we cannot understand why it should seriously be contended for." Estate of McKenna, 143 Cal. 580, 587, 77 Pac. 461, 463. It is idle to urge that the answer was entirely harmless. There is by no warrant in the record for any such conclusion on our part. It was by no means a self-evident proposition, as suggested by counsel for plaintiff, that the accident was due to the failure to use a socket wrench instead of a spanner or stationary wrench. The claim of plaintiff's counsel that there was testimony to the same effect given by defendant's witnesses is not well founded. It is impossible for us to say what weight and influence this improper evidence of plaintiff had on the minds of the jury in determining the question of defendant's liability. The error of the trial court must be held prejudicial. Short v. Frink (Cal. Sup.) 90 Pac. 202, and cases there cited. The trial court, at the request of plaintiff, gave to the jury a number of instructions, in each of which the court explicitly directed them to find a verdict for plaintiff, or explicitly declared plaintiff to be entitled to a verdict, in the event that they found certain things specified therein to be true. Any such instruction should, of course, embrace all the things necessary to show the legal liability of the defendant and to warrant the direction or conclusion contained therein that plaintiff is entitled to a verdict. See Killelea v. California, etc., Co., 140 Cal. 604, 74 Pac. 157. The following are fair samples of these instructions:

Plaintiff's instruction No. 8: "I instruct you, gentlemen, that the parties have in their pleadings here admitted that it was the defendant corporation's duty, and its own personal duty, to furnish and supply a fit engine, keep it in repair, and to supply a sufficient number of wrenches, and to discard old ones, and to supply new and fit ones to each kind, and to test and inspect said wrenches, and to put each in safe condition before use. Now, I instruct you that if you find that the company and that Maguire, its foreman, failed to furnish or supply a suitable, fit, and proper wrench on March 13, 1903, and that the said Mills was obliged to use the wrench he actually did use to turn the engine nut, and that Stanley Sterne was injured by the flying off of the said wrench from the engine nut, he, Stanley Sterne, and his fellow servants not being guilty of contributory negligence, but acting in the scope of his duty as directed by said Maguire (if said Maguire gave any directions), then I instruct you, gen-flemen of the jury, that you must return a verdict here into this court in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant corporation herein."

Plaintiff's instruction No. 9, so far as material: " * * * If you find that the defendant and Maguire, its foreman, failed to furnish a suitable wrench for Mr. Mills to use in tightening the engine nut on March 13, 1903, and that, owing to the unfitness of the wrench that was used by Mills at the time, the injury was caused to plaintiff, without any contributory negligence on plaintiff's part or on the part of any of his fellow servants, then I instruct you that the injury was caused by the defendant's fault and neglect of duty, and that the verdict of this jury should be brought in here in favor of Stanley Sterne, the plaintiff, and against the corporation defendant."

It is unnecessary to further consider these instructions than to point out that they were erroneous, in that they made the question of defendant's negligence to turn on the conclusion of the jury as to whether or not the spanner or stationary wrench furnished and used was in fact a suitable wrench for the work as it was then being done with the machinery in motion, without regard to whether or not there had been any want of ordinary care on the part of defendant, or its personal representative Maguire, in failing to furnish a socket wrench. It was essential to the existence of negligence on the part of the defendant in the matter, not only that the appliance was in fact not a safe appliance for the work, but also that the defendant or its representative Maguire knew, or ought in the exercise of reasonable care for the safety of its employes to have known, that the wrenches furnished were not safe and sufficient. See Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409. The obligation of an employer in such matters is simply to use reasonable care, that degree of care, as was said by Judge Lurton in a decision of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, "which a man of ordinary prudence in the same line of business would be expected to exercise to secure his own safety were he doing the work." Westinghouse, etc., Co. v. Heimlich, 127 Fed. 94, 62 C. C. A. 92. See, also, Dolan v. Sierra Ry. Co., 135 Cal. 436, 67 Pac. 686. As we have already intimated, there is nothing in the condition of the pleadings in this case to enhance this obligation. Even if it was made to appear here that a socket wrench would have been a safer appliance to use under the conditions of the particular work in hand, there was ample evidence to justify a conclusion that there was in the failure to furnish a socket wrench no want of reasonable care on the part of defendant, or its representative, Maguire—that a reasonably careful man, as solicitous for the safety of his employes as he would be for his own safety, would have considered the wrenches furnished entirely safe and adequate for all work to be done by the employes—that such wrenches so furnished were such as experience sanctioned as reasonably safe. This element was entirely omitted from these instructions, and the trial jurors were thus explicitly instructed that if, from the evidence given on the trial, they believed that the wrenches furnished were not in fact "suitable, fit and proper," they must find defendant guilty of negligence. Because of our conclusion that the judgment and order must be reversed for the error first discussed, it is unnecessary to determine whether error in these instructions can properly be held to have been without prejudice to defendant's cause in view of other instructions given by the court relative to the same subject, and we have discussed the matter solely for the purposes of a new trial.

It is unnecessary to discuss any of the other points presented.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing upon the ground that the error of the superior court was, in view of all the evidence in the case, without prejudice. The answer of plaintiff which the court refused to strike out meant nothing more than that a socket wrench would not have slipped, and, as to that, there was no controversy. One of the defendant's witnesses testified to the same effect.

TANDY v. WAESCH et al. (L. A. 2,038.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 5, 1908.)

1. PARTIES—PERSONS WHO MAY SUE—TRUSTEES OF EXPRESS TRUST.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 367, requiring every action to be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as provided in section 369, authorizing a trustee of an express trust to sue, and declaring that a person in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another is a trustee of an express trust, one making in his own name for the benefit of another a contract for the purchase of real estate may sue for the part of the price paid on the vendor failing to convey clear title as required by the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 11.]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—DEFECTS IN TITLE—RESCISSION BY PURCHASER.

A vendor contracted to sell real estate and convey a title "free and clear of all incumbrances." There were building restrictions on the land, and the land was subject to the reserved right of way for and the right to construct and maintain pipes and ditches for irrigation purposes. Held, that the vendor could not convey a title clear of all incumbrances, and the purchaser might rescind and recover the part of the price paid.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 199, 200.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by A. E. Tandy against J. W. Waesch and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant J. W. Waesch appeals. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton, for appellant. Oscar C. Mueller and William M. Hiatt, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to recover the sum of $1,000 paid on account of the purchase price of a piece of land under contract with defendant, whereby defendant agreed to convey the land by a title free and clear of all incumbrances. He averred that defendant's title was incumbered by restrictions, reservations, and covenants as follows: "It is hereby covenanted and agreed, by and between the parties hereto, and it is part of the consideration of this conveyance, that no main building shall be erected or suffered to remain upon the premises hereby conveyed that is not reasonably worth $1,000 for one story or $1,500 for two stories, and said main building shall be erected before any other building on said property. There is hereby expressly reserved and excepted from the operation of this deed to the parties of the first part, their successors, heirs and assigns forever, the right of way for, and the right to construct, lay down and maintain pipes, ditches, and zanjas for irrigation purposes upon, through, and across the parks, streets, and avenues in said city of Redondo Beach, said several rights of way and exceptions to be made of such sizes, quantities, and dimensions as may be reasonably required for the several and respective uses for which the same are severally reserved." It was alleged that a reasonable time had been given to remove these incumbrances, and that they had not been removed, and, indeed, upon the trial, it was conceded that they were still in existence. Defendant pleaded by answer and cross-complaint, calling in as defendants to his cross-complaint, beside the plaintiff Tandy, W. M. Garland and E. T. Ames. Trial was had, judgment passed for plaintiff Tandy, and, from that judgment and the order of the court denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals.

His principal contention upon appeal seems to be that as it was disclosed and known to him that Tandy was acting as agent, and that the defendant Garland was principal, the action should have been brought by Garland, and cannot be maintained in the name of Tandy. Tandy, however, was a proper party plaintiff. To the general rule laid down in section 367, Code Civ. Proc., that every action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, there are certain exceptions specified in section 369, Code Civ. Proc. That section authorizes the trustee of an express trust to sue without joining the beneficiary, and declares that a person with whom, or in whose name a contract is made for the benefit of another, is a trustee of an express trust within the meaning of this section. The contract having been made in Tandy's name for the benefit of Garland, Tandy thus became the trustee of an express trust and entitled to maintain the action. See Walker v. McCusker, 71 Cal. 594, 12 Pac. 723; Giselman v. Starr, 106 Cal. 657, 40 Pac. 8; Los Robles Water Co. v. Stoneman, 146 Cal. 204, 79 Pac. 880; Anglo-Cal. Bank v. Cerf, 147 Cal. 384, 81 Pac. 1077; Pom. Code Rem. (4th Ed.) §§ 103, 105; Bliss on Code Pleadings, § 57.

The restrictions, reservations, and covenants constituted incumbrances upon the title of defendant, which, not being removed, justified plaintiff in seeking a recovery of his partial payment under defendant's contract to convey to him a title "free and clear of all incumbrances." Indeed, this proposition is not seriously disputed; but, if it were, it finds abundant support. Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855; Whelan v. Rosser, 1 Cal. App. 701, 82 Pac. 1082; Goldstein v. Hensley, 4 Cal. App. 444, 88 Pac. 507; Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 319, 23 N. E. 303; Ayling v. Kramer, 133 Mass. 12; Brewster on Conveyancing, § 201; Warvelle on Vendors, § 312.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

WHITE v. HORTON et al. (L. A. 2,077.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 4, 1908.)

1. HOMESTEAD — INCUMBRANCE—MORTGAGE—EXTENT OF INCUMBRANCE.

Where a homestead is mortgaged, or is declared upon land subject to mortgage, it is not the exemption which is mortgaged, but the whole property, and the homestead exemption still exists subject only to reduction to satisfy the mortgage.

2. SAME—LIABILITIES ENFORCEABLE AGAINST HOMESTEAD—JUDGMENTS.

Civ. Code, § 1254, provides that, if a homestead exceeds in value the amount of the exemption and cannot be divided, the court must direct its sale under execution. Section 1256 provides, when the sale is made, the balance above the homestead exemption must be applied to the execution. Defendant mortgaged land, and thereafter made a declaration of homestead upon it. M. recovered a judgment against defendant for $4,000, and, her judgment not being satisfied, appraisers valued the homestead at $10,000, but reported that it could not be divided without injury to the whole. Plaintiff brought foreclosure, and his judgment decreed satisfaction of the mortgage out of the proceeds of a sale and that M.'s judgment be satisfied out of the remainder. Held, that the proceeds of the sale should have been disposed of, first, to satisfy the mortgage, and then the homestead fund should be set aside, and any remainder paid to the judgment creditor.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Action by Florence C. White against George C. Horton and others to satisfy a judgment against defendants' homestead. From a decree ordering the property sold and directing its disposition, the owners appeal. Reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment as directed.

Borden & Carhart, for appellants. Hahn & Hahn and Walter Holsinger, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. The appellants Horton, to secure the payment of a promissory note, had executed a mortgage upon a lot of land in the county of Los Angeles. Subsequent to the execution and recordation of this mortgage, the husband made a declaration of homestead upon the mortgaged property for the benefit of himself and family. Thereafter the defendant and respondent Ednah J. Menner recovered a judgment against the defendant George C. Horton for the sum of $4,000, with interest and costs. The note secured by mortgage becoming overdue and being unpaid, an action to foreclose was commenced by plaintiff. While this action was pending the judgment creditor, Ednah J. Menner, under the provisions of sections 1245 to 1259 of the Civil Code, caused appraisers to be appointed to value the homestead; her judgment not having been satisfied. The appraisers placed a valuation upon the homestead exceeding $10,000, but further reported that the property could not be divided without injury to the whole thereof. Thereupon proceedings were taken whereby the matter was certified to the court in which the foreclosure action was pending, under stipulation that upon sale of the mortgaged premises the claims of Menner under her judgment should be considered and determined. The court in giving judgment in the foreclosure proceedings decreed a sale of the property, and out of the funds derived from the sale awarded the mortgagee the amount due upon the mortgage, with interest and costs. Next out of the funds it decreed that the judgment of Ednah J. Menner should be satisfied, and that any funds remaining should be paid over to the owners of the property. No question arises as to the regularity of any of the proceedings, and the single proposition propounded is as to the correctness of the court's disposition and distribution of the funds arising from the sale of the homestead.

By appellants it is contended that, upon sale of the homestead, they were entitled to $5,000, which was wholly exempt from execution sale, attachment, or any other form of legal seizure, saving that, if the value of the residue of the property was not sufficient to pay the mortgage debt, recourse could be had against the $5,000 to make good any deficiency. Since here there has been a sale of the homestead and the court is dealing with money in hand, it matters not whether it be said that the family is entitled to the $5,000 as a homestead exemption fund, which fund may be subject to reduction to satisfy the mortgage debt, or whether it be said that the mortgage shall first be satisfied, and that the owners of the homestead shall have the next $5,000 as an exempt fund. However stated, the actual result will always be the same, and in either case, under appellants' contention, the judgment creditor has no lien or claim upon the homestead property, or upon the fruits of its sale, until after the demands of the mortgagee have been fully satisfied, and $5,000 have been exempted and set apart for the use of the family. Upon behalf of respondent it is contended that sections 1237 et seq. of the Civil Code entitle the family to an exemption of but $5,000; that whether they mortgage property at a time when it is impressed with a homestead, or whether, as here, they mortgage property upon which a homestead is subsequently declared, the result is the same, and that result is that they have mortgaged the homestead exemption, as distinguished from the homestead itself; that in satisfying that mortgage, where the rights of other creditors are involved, resort shall first be had to the exemption, and that $5,000 shall first be applied in satisfaction of the mortgage debt. No authority is cited in support of the declaration that a mortgage upon a homestead is a mortgage to be first satisfied out of the exempt $5,000 which the law allows. Indeed, considering the policy of the law, which most strongly favors homesteads, this statement upon its face does violence to that policy. A case like the present, where the homestead has been converted into money, and where the question, as here, turns upon the order of the distribution of the fund, has not previously come before this court; but similar cases involving the disposition of homestead lands have repeatedly been presented to the court, and in every instance the conclusion has been contrary to the contention which the respondent urges. One of the early cases was that of McLaughlin v. Hart, 46 Cal. 638. Hart and his wife executed a mortgage to plaintiff to secure the payment of a promissory note. Subsequently Hart, to secure his own debts, executed other mortgages upon the land, in which his wife did not join, to defendants Pierce, Shedder, and Piquet. Hart and his wife had filed a declaration of homestead covering 50 acres of land mortgaged to plaintiff. The subsequent mortgages to Pierce, Shedder, and Piquet did not affect the homestead. Defendants Pierce, Shedder, and Piquet filed a cross-complaint, asking to have their mortgages foreclosed, and urging that plaintiff should first be compelled to resort in satisfaction of his mortgage to the homestead property, under the application of the equitable doctrine that where one creditor has several securities to which he can resort, and another creditor has a lien on but one of those securities, the latter may compel the former to exhaust the securities upon which he, the latter, has no lien. But by its decree the trial court exempted the homestead from sale unless it should be found necessary to have recourse to it to satisfy the mortgage of plaintiff, and denied to the defendants any right to compel a sale of the homestead, to the end that the funds might be first applied in extinguishment of plaintiff's mortgage debt. This court upheld the judgment of the trial court, saying: "The liens of the junior mortgagees upon the outside lands were created by him alone and without her (the wife's) consent, and to hold that these latter mortgagees may, for their own benefit, compel a sale of the homestead to satisfy the McLaughlin mortgage, would be in effect to create a lien in favor of the junior mortgagees upon the homestead of Mrs. Hart without her consent." Treating this case in terms of money instead of land, the same doctrine is invoked by appellants, and the same answer must be made as was made in that case. The Menner debt is a debt of the husband, and not of the wife, incurred after a homestead had been placed upon the property. To hold that the mortgagee must first exhaust the homestead fund of $5,000 would be, in effect, to create a lien in favor of the judgment creditor upon the homestead of Mrs. Hart without her consent, and deprive her of her homestead exemption for a debt not her own, and for the payment of which she had in no way bound the homestead property.

So, again, in Barrett v. Sims, 59 Cal. 615, Sims had executed a mortgage upon the property to defendant Clarke. Subsequently he executed a deed to defendant Beckman of the property, reserving therefrom a strip 25 rods wide, upon which he filed a declaration of homestead. Sims being indebted to plaintiff, the latter commenced an action, sued out a writ of attachment, and levied upon the right, title, and interest of the defendant Sims in the land. He alleged that Sims' deed to Beckman was without consideration, and that Sims had declared the homestead to delay and defraud his creditors; that he did not know the amount due on the mortgage executed by Sims to Clarke, nor what part should be paid out of the homestead, nor what part should be paid out of the land conveyed to Beckman, but he prayed that all the land should be declared subject to sale under his judgment, that the amount of the claim of the mortgagee, Clarke, be determined, and that Clarke in seeking satisfaction of his claim be required first to exhaust the homestead property upon which he, plaintiff, had no lien. This court, reviewing the subject of homesteads and homestead exemptions, concluded: "Inasmuch as the conveyance to Beckman is a valid conveyance, and plaintiff has an ample remedy at law to enforce his judgment against the excess, if any, in value of the homestead beyond five thousand dollars (subject to the rights of the mortgagee), he has no standing in a court of equity, and the bill should be dismissed." Here, again, is distinct recognition of the fact that where a homestead is mortgaged, or is declared upon land subject to a mortgage, it is not the exemption which is mortgaged but the whole property, and there is a further recognition of the position contended for by appellants that the homestead exemption still exists and is to be recognized, subject always and only to reduction in amount to satisfy the just demand of the mortgagee.

But, turning from the consideration of these analogous cases, all doubts and difficulties are resolved if appellants' rights are viewed in the light of the code provisions. So viewing them, the incidental fact that the homestead was sold under foreclosure proceedings may be eliminated as not pertinent. The condition, then, confronting the judgment creditor who had taken steps to subject the homestead to sale under the provisions of the Civil Code, was that the appraisers had found that the homestead could not be divided, and that it was of the value of about $11,000. If, then, the judgment creditor had proceeded, as she had an undoubted right to proceed, and caused the property to be sold (Civ. Code, § 1254), the purchaser at such sale would have acquired the property subject to the lien of plaintiff's $4,000 mortgage. By reason of this mortgage, which, of course, would not be affected by these proceedings, the land on sale would bring $7,000. What disposition would and should be made of that $7,000? The Code furnishes a ready and complete answer. "If the sale is made, the proceeds thereof to the amount of the homestead exemption must be paid to the claimant, and the balance applied to the satisfaction of the execution." Civ. Code, § 1256. To summarize: The land under this sale would still be subject to the mortgage so that the mortgagee would retain his security unimpaired. The first $5,000 resulting from the sale would be paid as the homestead exemption fund to those entitled to it, the balance only, amounting, in the instance we have cited, to $2,000, would be available to meet the demands of the judgment creditor.

It follows from the foregoing that the court by its decree should have apportioned the funds arising from the sale of the homestead as follows: First, to the satisfaction of the claim of the mortgagee; second, $5,000 to appellants Horton as their homestead exemption fund, and the residue to the judgment creditor Menner.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in conformity with the foregoing.

RISDON v. PREWETT et al. (TERRY, Intervener). (Civ. 468.)

COURTS—APPELLATE COURTS—JURISDICTION.

Const. art. 6, § 4, gives the District Courts of Appeal appellate jurisdiction in certain enumerated proceedings, and in such other special proceedings as may be provided by law, except cases in which appellate jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court. Code Civ. Proc. § 52, provides that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction "(4) in all special proceedings." Held, that an action to determine on reference by the Surveyor General the rights of the respective parties to purchase certain school land from the state was a special proceeding, and appealable directly to the Supreme Court.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to determine, upon reference by the surveyor general, the rights of the respective parties to purchase from the state certain school land. The appeal is taken directly to this court. Respondent moves the court to dismiss the appeal upon certain grounds.

By section 4, art. 6, Const., the District Court of Appeal is given appellate jurisdiction in certain enumerated proceedings, "and in such other special proceedings as may be provided by law (excepting cases in which appellate jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court.) * * *" Section 52, Code Civ. Proc., provides as follows: "The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction: * * * (4) In all special proceedings." The action is a special proceeding, and the appeal should have been taken to the Supreme Court. Obviously, as the District Court of Appeal has not jurisdiction, it cannot determine the pending motion.

Agreeably to the provisions of section 4, art. 6, Const., the cause is transferred to the Supreme Court.

CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—NOTICE—SERVICES—STATUTES.

Pen. Code, § 1240, declaring that an appeal is taken by filing with the clerk of court in which the judgment or order appealed from is filed, a notice stating the appeal from the same, and serving a copy on the attorneys of the adverse party, is mandatory, so that a notice of appeal in a criminal case not shown to have been served on the attorney for the respondent is wholly ineffectual.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2723.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Harry Finerty was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hinds & Ingersoll, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was by information charged with robbery jointly with one Charles Washburn. He was tried separately, convicted, and sentenced to 50 years in the penitentiary. This appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The record herein does not show that the notice of appeal was served on the attorney for the respondent; and, as no effort has been made to show that there was in fact service, we must conclude that it was not made, and the appeal must therefore be dismissed. Section 1240 of the Penal Code is as follows: "An appeal is taken by filing with the clerk of the court in which the judgment or order appealed from is entered or filed a notice stating the appeal from the same, and serving a copy thereof upon the attorneys for the adverse party." This provision is mandatory, and is necessary to confer jurisdiction.

In the case of People v. Brown, 148 Cal. 743, 84 Pac. 204, this precise question arose, and the court refused to consider the appeal. The court there said: "In People v. Colon, 119 Cal. 668, 51 Pac. 1082, it was held that the proceeding specified in section 1240 must be taken to confer upon this court jurisdiction to hear and determine the appeal. People v. Colon quotes from People v. Bell, 70

Cal. 33, 11 Pac. 327, where it is said: "The transcript herein does not show that notice of appeal was served on any one. The law requires that it shall be served on the attorneys of the adverse party (Pen. Code, § 1240), and the transcript on appeal must show it." People v. Clark, 49 Cal. 455; People v. Phillips, 45 Cal. 44. This not being the case, the appeal cannot be considered." Notwithstanding this defect, considering the nature of the case, we have examined with care the points urged by appellant, and after such examination we are convinced that the record does not disclose any prejudicial error. The case seems to have been fairly tried, and the judgment should not be disturbed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WINCHESTER v. BECKER. (Civ. 496.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 11, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—SCOPE OF REVIEW—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL "SOLELY UPON ERRORS OF LAW."

Upon an appeal from an order granting a new trial "solely upon errors of law," the appellate court is limited in its review to errors appearing in the record exclusive of the sufficiency of conflicting evidence to justify the decision.

2. SAME—REVIEW—FAILURE TO FIND ON MATERIAL ISSUE.

Plaintiff ceded her property to real estate agents for $5,150 or $5,000 net to her. Subsequently G., representing himself to be in the agents' employ, called upon plaintiff, and she accepted his offer of $5,000 net for the property, believing that she was dealing with the agents. In an action by plaintiff to rescind the contract of sale, she alleged, and there was evidence to prove, that G. was not connected with the real estate firm, but was acting solely for the purchaser and at his instance, but the court made no finding upon that issue. Held, that the issue was a material one, since, if G. was authorized to act for plaintiff's agents and the price of $5,000 net was accepted, the agents could have under their contract no claim for commission, but, if G. was acting solely for the purchaser who was purchasing at a price which would leave her still liable to her agents for their commission, G. was guilty of fraudulent conduct for which defendant as principal was responsible, and, the court having failed to find thereon, its decision was against law and reviewable on appeal from an order granting a new trial.

3. SAME—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE TO SUPPORT.

If there is no evidence upon an issue which is essential to the judgment, a finding upon such issue is an error of law, and hence, on appeal from an order granting a new trial solely on errors of law, the court may look into the bill of exceptions to see if a finding upon a material issue has any support from the evidence.

4. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE — CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE — UNFAIR OR OPPRESSIVE CONTRACTS.

A court will not lend its aid to enforce a contract which is in any way unfair or savors of oppression.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 153.]

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — PURCHASER'S RIGHT TO POSSESSION.

A contract reciting that the owner of premises had received of a person $100 as a deposit on the purchase price, $2,500 balance to be paid upon the delivery of an unlimited certificate of title, does not confer a right of possession upon the person.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Jennie M. Winchester against A. E. Becker, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. There was a judgment for defendant, and, from an order granting a new trial "solely upon errors of law," defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Lane and G. P. Adams, for appellant. J. L. Murphey, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendant as cross-complainant from an order granting a new trial. The action was brought by plaintiff for the rescission of a real estate contract and in ejectment. The defendant answered and filed a cross-complaint, praying for a specific performance of the contract sought to be rescinded. The trial court found in favor of the defendant, and gave judgment against plaintiff and in defendant's favor upon the cross-complaint. Notice of intention to move for a new trial upon nearly all of the statutory grounds was duly given by plaintiff upon the hearing of which the court granted the same, but "solely upon errors of law." The rule is established that, upon an appeal from such an order granting a new trial, the appellate court is limited in its review to errors appearing in the record exclusive of the sufficiency of conflicting evidence to justify the decision. The written contract which plaintiff sought to rescind, and which, upon the other hand, defendant sought to specifically enforce, appears in the pleadings and findings in the words and figures following: "Los Angeles, June 10, '05. Received of A. E. Becker the sum of $100.00 as deposit on lot 2 of the Osborne tract. Balance of $2,500.00 to be paid upon the delivery of an unlimited certificate of title. Jennie M. Winchester." It may be inferred from the record that upon the trial of the action all parties proceeded upon the theory that it was competent to alter the terms of such a contract by parol proof; for no objection thereto appears which was so made as to afford the trial court an opportunity to pass upon the question. From the evidence introduced the court finds that it was understood and agreed upon by the parties that, in addition to the $2,600 in cash mentioned in the contract to be paid for the property, the defendant was to assume a mortgage of $2,400, a lien on said premises, through which the consideration was increased to $5,000, instead of $2,600, as specified in the contract, which price of $5,000 the court finds to be the fair value of the premises. Treating this modified contract as the true agreement, the court finds that it was executed under the circumstances following: Plaintiff, being the owner of said premises and desirous of selling the same for $5,300, on June 5, 1905, executed to a real estate firm a writing, whereby she made said firm her exclusive agents for the sale of said premises at said price for 30 days, or until such time as she revoked the authority in writing, agreeing that if during the time of said agency they should sell said premises, or introduce a buyer who should purchase at an acceptable price, plaintiff would pay the regular commissions to said agents. That shortly thereafter the real estate firm took defendant to the property and showed the same to him, giving the price at $5,300; and defendant refused to buy at that price, but offered $4,800. This offer being communicated by the real estate firm to the plaintiff, she declined it, but said to them that she would accept $5,150 or $5,000 net to her. Thereafter one Golden, on behalf of the defendant, called upon plaintiff, and represented that he was in the employ of plaintiff's agents, which representation was without defendant's knowledge, and plaintiff, believing that she was dealing with her agents, agreed to accept his offer made on behalf of defendant to pay $5,000 net for the premises, and executed the receipt and contract hereinbefore set out.

It is further found that pursuant to said agreement defendant took possession, and has ever since been in the lawful possession of said premises; that on June 15th plaintiff gave notice of rescission, and tendered back the $100 paid and demanded possession. It is averred in the complaint, and repeated by plaintiff in the answer to the cross-complaint, that Golden, when he made the representation that he was in the employ of the real estate firm, was not so employed; that such representation was false and known by him to be false. The court makes no finding upon this matter. We think plaintiff was entitled to a finding upon this issue; for if, in fact, Golden was not connected with plaintiff's agents, but was acting solely for the purchaser, it changes the situation of the parties. If Golden had authority from the agents to act, and the price of $5,000 was accepted, such agents, under their contract of employment, could have no claim against plaintiff for commission. On the contrary, if Golden was, as alleged by plaintiff, acting solely for a purchaser who had been introduced into the transaction by the agents, and who was secretly making the purchase at a price less than plaintiff understood she was to receive, or at a price which, if accepted, would still leave her liable to her agents for their commission, then Golden was guilty of fraudulent conduct for which the defendant as his principal was responsible. This finding plaintiff was entitled to have, if any evidence appears in the record upon which such finding could be based. Examining the bill of exceptions, we find it clearly established, without contradiction, that Golden was not connected with the real estate firm, but, on the contrary, was acting solely for the purchaser and at his instance and request. If there is a failure to find upon a material issue, "the decision is against law and may be reviewed on appeal from an order granting or refusing a new trial." Adams v. Helbing, 107 Cal. 301, 40 Pac. 422. Were it to be assumed that the finding made by the trial court, "that there was no deception or fraud on the part of the defendant, and plaintiff has not suffered any damage," is equivalent to a finding that Golden was acting for plaintiff's agents, and that they were concluded by his statements and negotiations, we may still look into the bill of exceptions to see if such finding has any support from the evidence; for, "if there is no evidence upon an issue which is essential to the judgment, a finding upon such issue is an error of law." Domico v. Casassa, 101 Cal. 414, 35 Pac. 1024. The record, as before stated, contains no evidence supporting a finding that the agents of plaintiff were connected in any wise with Golden, or concluded by any contract or representation made by him.

It is insisted by appellant that conceding the falsity of Golden's statements, and that plaintiff relied thereon in the transaction, still no damage resulted to plaintiff, and she cannot complain. We are unable to appreciate the force of this suggestion. If plaintiff was induced by a false statement to make a contract through which she became liable to her agents for $150 commission, for which she would not have been liable if the representations had been true, she certainly was damaged to that extent. Her liability to the agents was created by the sale to one introduced by them, and it is no answer to say that, because such liability has not been enforced before the trial, it therefore ceases to exist. "The court will not lend its aid to enforce a contract which is in any respect unfair or savors of oppression." Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 302.

There is still another error of law apparent in the record. The court finds that pursuant to the contract set out defendant took possession of the premises and has ever since been in the lawful possession thereof. This finding is susceptible of no construction other than that the right of possession was conferred by the contract set out. The converse of this has been determined in Winchester v. Becker, 4 Cal. App. 382, 88 Pac. 296.

We are of opinion that errors of law appear in the record justifying the action of the trial court granting the order for a new trial; and the order is affirmed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—USE OF STREET AS HIGHWAY—NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—RIDING BICYCLE IN CROWDED STREET.

One who had been pushing a bicycle along the side of a crowded city street partially obstructed by debris was not guilty of negligence in mounting the bicycle where the road was clear which would preclude his recovery for an injury from an automobile which came suddenly from behind a car, and collided with him.

2. EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—SPEED OF AUTOMOBILE SHORTLY BEFORE ACCIDENT.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Personal injury action by Hans Olsen against Morris Levy. Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto & Richardson, for appellant. Arthur H. Barendt, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff, caused by the alleged negligence and carelessness of the defendant while operating an automobile owned by him. In accordance with the verdict of the jury, a judgment for $300 was entered in favor of the plaintiff. The appeal is from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant (defendant) contends that the respondent was guilty of contributory negligence which was the proximate cause of the accident, the alleged negligence consisting in riding his bicycle on Market street, San Francisco, while the street was greatly obstructed by debris. The record shows that at the time of the accident the north and south sides of Market street, between East and Third streets, were impassable by reason of being covered with debris from buildings destroyed by the fire of April 18, 1906; that the roadway of Market street available for use was then greatly narrowed. The respondent testified as follows: "On account of the number of people, cars, and teams on the street, it was impossible for me to ride on my bicycle, so I was compelled to walk up. I continued to walk up the north side of the street to about 20 feet from where the accident happened. I saw the road clear, got on my bicycle, and continued going up Market street, when all of a sudden an automobile came out of the track from behind the car, and ran into me. * * * The crowd was so great that it was impossible for me to ride on my bicycle up Market street until about 20 feet from where the accident happened. I then got on the bicycle because I thought I could safely do so. It was not possible to travel fast on the street on account of the vast concourse of people and the cars." In this view of the record, we are at a loss to see that respondent has been guilty of any conduct which would preclude him from recovering in this action.

Appellant next contends that the court erroneously refused to strike out the answer of P. A. Ray, a witness called by respondent, as to the rate of speed the automobile operated by appellant was going just prior to the accident. The following proceedings were had with reference to that testimony: "Q. What first attracted your attention to the defendant? A. He was going down Market street at a lively gait. I knew it was a reckless way. I saw several make lively escapes, two young fellows particularly. Mr. Devoto: I move to strike that out as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The Court: Did you see when the machine struck the plaintiff? A. Yes. Q. How far distant did the other accident take place? A. Less than 100 feet. The Court: Motion denied. Mr. Devoto: We take an exception." Appellant argues that this testimony showed the speed of the automobile before the accident, but did not tend to prove the rate of speed at the time of the accident. To state the point is to answer it. We fail to perceive any merit in this position.

The court did not err in the giving or refusing of any of the instructions.

The order is affirmed.

2. CRIMINAL LAW — WARRANT FOR COMMITMENT—"PROBABLE CAUSE."

The expression "probable cause," as used in the federal Constitution, referring to the issuance of warrants, means that there is a probability that a crime has been committed by the person named in the warrant.

3. HABEAS CORPUS — RIGHT TO DISCHARGE—PERSON ACCUSED OF MURDER — PROBABLE CAUSE.

Pen. Code, § 1487, subd. 7, provides that, where a person has been committed on a criminal charge without reasonable or probable cause, it is ground for his discharge. Petitioner was held to answer to a charge of murder. It appeared that deceased met his death in a house occupied by him and by petitioner and his wife at some time between 7 o'clock and 9 o'clock p. m. Deceased had been working that day, and had made some purchases at a store about 7 o'clock, and on his way to his lodging house took two drinks of beer at a saloon, and bought a small can of beer and took it away with him. He was found dead about 9 o'clock, lying on his face, in a room on the ground floor which opened through a door into a hall in which was a stairway leading to the second story. When the body was first seen by a neighbor who went into the room where it lay, petitioner stated that deceased had fallen downstairs, and hit his head on the lounge. There was some evidence tending to show that it was not reasonably probable that deceased met his death by the accident to which petitioner attributed it, and that petitioner was in some way connected with the death. Held that, though perhaps insufficient to warrant conviction, probable cause was sufficiently established to justify the holding of petitioner to answer the charge made against him.

Petition by Jesse Heacock for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and prisoner remanded.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People. Louis Gonsalves, Weldon & Held, Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas, and C. E. McLaughlin, for petitioner.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The petition shows that petitioner is held by the sheriff of Mendocino county by virtue of "a commitment and an order and warrant of commitment made by a justice of the peace of Ten Mile River township, in said county, purporting upon its face to hold this petitioner to answer upon the charge of murder." It is averred that petitioner "has been committed on said criminal charge without reasonable or probable cause * * * which will more fully appear from a complete transcript of the evidence and the testimony taken at the examination before said justice of the peace as a committing magistrate, which is hereunto annexed, hereby referred to and made a part hereof." It is made by statute a ground of discharge "where a party has been committed on a criminal charge without reasonable or probable cause." Pen. Code, § 1487, subd. 7; Ex parte Sternes, 82 Cal. 245, 23 Pac. 38. The term "probable" has been defined to mean "having more evidence for than against; supported by evidence which inclines the mind to believe, but leaves some room for doubt." Bain v. State, 74 Ala. 38 (citing Webst. Dict.). The meaning of the expression "probable cause" as used in the federal Constitution, referring to the issuance of warrants, is that there is a probability that a crime has been committed by the person named in the warrant. The facts which are stated upon oath before the court or magistrate must induce a reasonable probability that all the acts have been done which constitute the offense charged. U. S. v. Bollman, 24 Fed. Cas. 1189, 1192, No. 14,622.

There was evidence that deceased met his death in a dwelling house occupied by him and by defendant and his wife at some time between 7 o'clock and 9 o'clock p. m. of May 4, 1908. The deceased was a laborer in a lumber camp and had been working that day. He made some purchases at a store about 7 o'clock, and on his way to his lodging house took two drinks of beer at a saloon and bought a small can of beer and took it away with him. He was next, about 9 o'clock, found dead, lying on his face, in a room on the ground floor which opened by a door into a hall in which was a stairway leading to the second story. When the body of deceased was first seen by a neighbor who went into the room where it lay, defendant stated that deceased "had fallen downstairs, and hit his head on the lounge." There was evidence of facts and circumstances surrounding the occurrence, brought out at the preliminary hearing, which we think were of sufficient probative force to justify the magistrate in holding defendant to answer the charge made against him. There was some evidence tending to show that it was not reasonably probable that deceased met his death by the accident to which defendant attributed it, and that defendant was in some way connected with the death of deceased. Though perhaps insufficient to warrant conviction, we cannot say that the evidence failed to establish probable cause.

The writ is discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

DAVIS v. TREACY. (Civ. 527.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
June 22, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — NATURE OF RIGHT — STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The right to a mechanic's lien is purely a creature of the statute, and, in order to sustain an action to foreclose such a lien, the complaint must show a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute.

2. SAME — FORECLOSURE — STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, provides that one claiming a mechanic's lien under the law must file with the county recorder "a claim containing a statement of his demand, after deducting all just credits and offsets, with the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, and also the name of the person by whom he is employed or to whom he furnished the materials, with a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of his contract, and also a description of the property to be charged with the lien." Held, that a complaint alleging that the action "is brought in support of plaintiff's lien upon said property of said defendant, which lien was filed on December 1, 1904, in the office of the recorder of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California (said city being the place where said property is situated), duly verified by oath, and setting forth the description of said property, as follows" (followed by a description of the property sought to be charged), but which does not show what the claim or lien filed with the county recorder contained save the description of the property, fails to set forth a cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 509.]

3. COURTS—SUPERIOR COURTS—JURISDICTION.

A superior court has no jurisdiction of an action involving a demand exclusive of interest amounting to $136.15, Code Civ. Proc. § 76, subd. 3, conferring upon those courts original jurisdiction in all cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to $300.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Trout, Judge.

Action by G. C. Davis against Timothy E. Treacy. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, upon plaintiff's failure to amend, judgment was rendered against him, and he appeals. Affirmed.

G. C. Davis, in pro. per. I. Danielwitz and N. H. Hurd, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeal from judgment entered against plaintiff upon failure to amend his complaint after demurrer sustained. The complaint is at least unique. It is an attempt to set forth a cause of action to foreclose a laborer's lien for labor performed in cleaning windows the value of which is alleged to be $35, and for time lost of the value of $24.50 in attempting to collect plaintiff's claim of $35 against defendant. Plaintiff also asks for attorney's fees and expenses of filing claim of lien, so that the total amount for which he asks judgment exclusive of costs is $136.15. The demurrer was upon the grounds that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject of the action, misjoinder of causes of action, and that the complaint stated no cause of action. The court sustained the demurrer upon the grounds of want of jurisdiction and misjoinder of causes of action.

The amount sued for is below the amount required to vest the superior court with jurisdiction by reason of the amount sued for (Code Civ. Proc. § 76), so that, unless the complaint states a cause of action to foreclose a lien under the mechanics' lien law, the court was without jurisdiction of the cause. The right to a mechanics' lien is purely a creature of the statute; and, in order to sustain an action to foreclose such lien, it is essential that the complaint shall show a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute. Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 37 Pac. 195. Any one claiming a lien under the mechanics' lien law must file with the county recorder "a claim containing a statement of his demand, after deducting all just credits and offsets, with the name of the owner or reputed owner, if known, and also the name of the person by whom he was employed, or to whom he furnished the materials, with a statement of the terms, time given, and conditions of his contract, and also a description of the property to be charged with the lien," etc. Code Civ. Proc. § 1187.

The only attempt to show any compliance with this provision of the statute is contained in paragraph 11 of the complaint, and is in the following words: "That this action is brought in support of plaintiff's lien upon said property of said defendant, which lien was filed on December 7, 1904, in the office of the recorder of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California (said city being the place where said property is situated), duly verified by oath, and setting forth the description of said property, as follows:" (Here follows a description of the property sought to be charged.) There is absolutely nothing in the complaint to show what plaintiff's claim or "lien," as he styles it, filed with the county recorder, contained, save the description of the property sought to be charged, or that it contained anything save such description. Following paragraph 11 of the complaint are other paragraphs containing independent substantive statements, some of which are proper statements to be contained in a claim or statement of demand filed under section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but there is no attempt to allege that any of them were contained in the claim or "lien" filed with the recorder. The complaint in this respect utterly fails to show a compliance with the provisions of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for this reason fails to set forth a cause of action for the foreclosure of a mechanics' or laborers' lien. The only cause of action stated is one to recover for services rendered of a value less than $300. Of this action the superior court had no jurisdiction, for which reason the demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment is affirmed.

COMMERCIAL UNION ASSUR. CO., LIMITED, OF LONDON, v. WOLF, Ins. Com'r.

(Civ. No. 528.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. June 22, 1908.)

1. STATUTES—PENAL STATUTES—REPEAL—EFFECT.

Under the rule that the repeal of a prior penal statute or of one providing for forfeitures or penalties takes away all remedies for the violation of the law repealed committed before the repeal, unless the remedy is specifically saved, or unless there is vested some private right, the repeal of Pol. Code, pt. 3, c. 3, tit. 1, art. 16, relating to insurance, and the enactment of a new article 16, covering the same subject by Act March 8, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 141, c. 119), section 608 of which declares that, if any foreign insurance corporation doing business in this state shall transfer, or cause to be transferred, to the United States Circuit Court from any court of this state having jurisdiction of the subject-matter any action or special proceeding arising or growing out of any business previously transacted within the state, then the insurance commissioner shall, on receiving a certified copy of the record showing the facts hereinbefore set forth, immediately revoke the certificate of authority, authorizing such company to transact business within the state, operated to prevent past removals made prior to the taking effect of the act of 1907 by a foreign insurance company lawfully doing business within the state from constituting ground for revocation of licenses under the new act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, §§ 369, 370.]

2. INSURANCE—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—DOING BUSINESS WITHIN STATE—LICENSES—REVOCATION.

St. 1907, p. 146, c. 119, § 596, provides that no insurance company shall transact business in the state without complying with all the laws of the state, and thereafter procuring from the insurance commissioner a certificate of authority which shall expire on the 1st day of July after it is issued unless sooner revoked, and must be renewed annually, and section 608 (page 155) declares that, if any foreign insurance company transfers to the United States Circuit Court any action or special proceeding arising or growing out of any business previously transacted within the state, then the insurance commissioner shall revoke its license. Held, that where a foreign insurance company authorized to do business within the state removed a cause to the federal court in April, 1907, after such act took effect, a revocation of the insurance company's license therefor would have been only effective to deprive the company of its right to transact business in the state until July 1, 1907.

3. SAME—RIGHT TO NEW CERTIFICATE.

That a foreign insurance company by removing a cause from the state to the federal courts has rendered itself subject to forfeiture of its license prior to July 1, 1907, when the same expired, but no action was taken toward imposing such forfeiture, the company after such date on complying with the law was entitled to a new license authorizing it to transact business within the state.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Petition for mandamus by the Commercial Union Assurance Company, Limited, of London, against E. Myron Wolf, insurance commissioner of the state of California. Judgment for petitioner, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and E. B. Power, Asst. Atty. Gen., for appellant. T. C. Coogan, William H. Orrick, and E. J. McCutchen, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. Plaintiff, a foreign insurance company, brought this proceeding to procure a writ of mandate to compel the defendant, as state insurance commissioner, to issue to it a certificate or license authorizing it to transact its insurance business in the state of California for the year ending July 1, 1908. The facts were found by the trial court, upon which a judgment was entered, awarding plaintiff the writ as prayed for in its petition. This appeal is from the judgment upon the judgment roll without a bill of exceptions.

It appears to be conceded that the plaintiff was entitled to the writ, unless it had by certain acts forfeited its right to do business in the state of California at the time that it applied for the license or certificate. It appears that in the year 1878 the plaintiff obtained a certificate of authority, in accordance with the statute then in force, authorizing it to transact the business of insurance in the state of California, and thereupon commenced, and thereafter continued to conduct, its business of insurance in the state of California in accordance with the laws of the state. It was then provided, under article 16, c. 3, § 595, pt. 3, tit. 1, Pol. Code, as follows: "It is further enacted that if any action hereafter commenced in any district court of this state by a citizen thereof against a foreign corporation or company doing insurance business in this state and such corporation or company shall transfer or cause to be transferred such action to the United States Circuit Court, the right of such corporation or company to transact insurance business in this state shall thereupon and thereby cease and determine; and the insurance commissioner shall immediately revoke the certificate of such corporation or company authorizing it to do business in this state, and publish such revocation daily for the period of two weeks in each of some two daily newspapers, one published in the city of San Francisco, and the other in the city of Sacramento." The above quoted section remained in force and continued to be the law of this state upon the subject until February 19, 1907.

In December, 1906, an action was pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against plaintiff by one Gerahty, and upon the motion of plaintiff the said cause was transferred from the said superior court to the United States Circuit Court. By an act approved February 19, 1907, which went into effect immediately (St. 1907, p. 13, c. 20), said section 595 of the Political Code was amended to read as follows: "It is further enacted that if in any action hereafter commenced in the superior court of this state by a citizen thereof against a foreign corporation or company doing business in this state, such corporation or company shall transfer or cause to be transferred, remove or cause to be removed, such action to the United States Circuit Court, the right of such corporation or company to transact insurance business in this state shall thereupon and thereby cease and determine; and the insurance commissioner shall immediately revoke the certificate of such corporation or company authorizing it to do business in this state, and publish such revocation daily for the period of two weeks in each of some two daily papers, the one published in the city of San Francisco and the other in the city of Sacramento." In November, 1906, the Crown Distilleries Company, a corporation, commenced an action against plaintiff in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco; and on the 7th day of March, 1907, the plaintiff caused the said action to be transferred and removed from said superior court to the United States Circuit Court. By an act approved March 8, 1907, which went into effect immediately (St. 1907, p. 141, c. 119), article 16, c. 3, pt. 3, tit. 1, Pol. Code, and each and every section thereof, were repealed, and a new article 16, covering the same subject of insurance, was enacted. In the place of the repealed section 595, this latter act contains section 608, which reads as follows: "If any foreign insurance company doing business in this state shall transfer or cause to be transferred to the United States Circuit Court, from any court of this state having jurisdiction of the subject matter, any action or special proceeding arising or growing out of any business previously transacted in this state, then the Insurance Commissioner shall have the power, and it shall be his duty, upon receiving a certified copy of the record showing the facts hereinbefore set forth to immediately revoke the certificate of authority, authorizing such company to transact insurance business in this state." This latter act provides for the issuing of certificates of authority by the insurance commissioner to all companies, corporations, and persons, such certificates to expire on the 1st day of July after their issuance, and must be "renewed annually." Section 596 thereof provides as follows: "No company shall transact any insurance business in this state without first complying with all the provisions of the laws of this state, and thereafter procuring from the insurance commissioner a certificate of authority, and continuing to comply with the laws of this state." The act, although repealing all the prior sections of the Political Code, contains a saving clause as to all causes of action that had accrued or that had been commenced for assessments, penalties, and fines under the repealed law. After it went into effect, and on the 20th day of March, 1907, Brown Bros. Company commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against this plaintiff; and thereafter, in April, 1907, plaintiff caused said action to be transferred to the United States Circuit Court.

Under the view we take of this case, it is not necessary to discuss the various constitutional objections raised as to the act of March 8, 1907; nor is it necessary to discuss the provision of section 595 of the Political Code in force at the time the first action was transferred; nor the provision of the same section as amended and in force at the time the second action was transferred. It is sufficient to say that at the time the act of March 8, 1907, went into effect the plaintiff was doing business in the state of California, and its license had not been revoked, nor was any action pending to deprive it of its right to do business in the state. No cause of action appears to have accrued against it for any penalty, assessment, or fine, and no saving clause is contained in the act for any other delinquency, or for having gone into court and asked the right which the law gave it to have pending cases removed to the United States Circuit Court. It is elementary that the repeal of a prior statute penal in its nature, or which provides for forfeitures or penalties, takes away all remedies as to violations of the law repealed committed before the repeal, unless the remedy is specifically saved or reserved, or unless there is vested some private right. We do not find in the entire act of March 8, 1907, anything showing an intent to prevent any company, corporation, or person from procuring a certificate on account of any prior delinquency. The act by its terms makes provision as to future transfers, and not as to any transfer that had already been made. Forfeitures and penalties are not favored; and, in the absence of the plain mandate of the statute, a company will not be refused permission forever to do business in the state of California, for the simple reason that under a prior statute it committed a lawful act which at the time would have justified the revocation of its license. There is nothing in the entire scope of the act which would justify such contention, or which even tends to show that the Legislature had such a thing in mind. The act provides that the insurance commissioner may revoke the certificate of authority of any company that becomes insolvent; but it provides that if, within 90 days after the receipt of the notice of revocation the company shall repair its capital stock so as to become again solvent, "the commissioner may issue a new certificate of authority in the manner and to the same effect as the original certificate of authority." It provides certain conditions and statements to be made and performed by a foreign insurance company before it shall be allowed to transact business in the state; but no mention is made as to any past transgression by the company. It provides that no company shall transact any insurance business without first complying with all the provisions of the laws of this state, which means, in effect, that any company which complies with all the provisions of the laws of the state shall be entitled to a certificate of authority to do business in the state.

This brings us to the question as to the effect of the act of plaintiff in procuring the case of Brown Bros. & Co. to be transferred to the United States Circuit Court in April, 1907, after the present act went into effect. Under section 608 of the act herein quoted, it was made the duty of the insurance commissioner "upon receiving a certified copy of the record showing the facts hereinabove set forth to immediately revoke the certificate of authority." It does not appear that any certified copy of the record, showing the transfer of the action of Brown Bros. & Co., was ever received by the insurance commissioner, or that he ever revoked the certificate of authority which had prior thereto been given to plaintiff. Even if the commissioner had received a certified copy of the record, and had revoked the certificate of authority, it would only have deprived the plaintiff of the right to transact its insurance business in the state until July 1, 1907. The license or certificate of authority under the act in every case expires on the 1st day of July after its issue, and must be renewed annually. Now, we cannot by judicial construction add to section 608 any provision not contained therein. It contains a provision in the nature of a penalty or forfeiture; that is, if the foreign corporation does not submit any cause of action brought against it to the jurisdiction of the state, but has such cause transferred to another tribunal, the insurance commissioner "may revoke the certificate of authority." The act of revoking can only deprive the plaintiff of that which the commissioner had already given by issuing the certificate. The certificate is to be issued in each case only up to the 1st day of the following July. It necessarily follows that the act of revoking would take away the authority up to the 1st day of the following July. The commissioner under the act is authorized to give the certificate upon the applicant complying with the law, and it is made his duty to take away that which he gave—the certificate—as a penalty for having a cause transferred from the jurisdiction of the state courts. No other penalty is prescribed. We do not know but that the Legislature intended no other. In any event we cannot insert that which we fail to find in the statute.

It appears by the findings, which are not controverted, that "prior to the 1st day of July, 1907, plaintiff duly filed in the office of the insurance commissioner of said state of California a copy of its articles of incorporation and charter duly certified by the proper custodian thereof, and the certificate required by subdivision 2 of section 607 of the Political Code of said state; the statement required by sections 611 and 612 of said Political Code; the designation of agent and stipulation required by section 616 of said Political Code; a good and sufficient bond in the penal sum of $20,000 as required by section 623 of said Political Code; and also an application in due form for a certificate of authority, authorizing it to transact the business of fire and marine insurance in said state during the year ending July 1, 1908. * * * That plaintiff is not, and was not at the time of the filing of the documents hereinbefore referred to, in arrears or indebted to the state of California or to any county or city and county thereof for fees, licenses, taxes, assessments, fines, or penalties of any kind or otherwise; nor was plaintiff at any of said times, nor is it now, in default for failure to comply with any of the laws of said state regarding the government or control by said state of said plaintiff." Section 616 of the Political Code provides that the stipulation must be as follows: "The [giving name of company] does hereby stipulate and agree that in consideration of the permission granted by the state of California to it to transact insurance business in this state, that if at any time said company shall leave this state, or cease to transact business in this state, or shall be without any agent in said state upon whom any notice, proof of loss, summons or other legal process may be served, then in any action or proceeding arising out of any business or transaction which occurred in this state service of any notice provided by law, or insurance policy, or proof of loss, summons or other legal process, may be made upon the insurance commissioner, and such service upon the commissioner shall have the same force and effect as if made upon the company." We conclude that the plaintiff was entitled to the certificate, and that it was the duty of the defendant to issue it.

The judgment is affirmed.

KENNEDY v. MERICKEL. (Civ. 503.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
July 19, 1908.)

1. BROKERS — CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT — WRITING—STATUTES.

Civ. Code, § 1624 (6), providing that an agreement authorizing or employing a broker to purchase or sell real estate for a compensation or commission shall be invalid unless some note or memorandum thereof is in writing subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent, does not require that there be a written contract intended by the parties as an obligation, but only that a note or memorandum in writing shall be made sufficient to show the authorization or fact of employment, subscribed by the party to be charged, it being sufficient if it shows that the broker is authorized to find a purchaser ready, willing, and able to make an exchange of property or one with whom an exchange is actually made.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant conducted certain correspondence with plaintiff, looking to an exchange of property to be brought about through the acts of plaintiff and another as brokers, and in the second letter plaintiff called defendant's attention, not only to the fact that plaintiff expected commissions, but to the amount he expected to receive, and suggested that L. was entitled to a portion thereof, to which defendant replied that he expected to pay L. and plaintiff commissions provided plaintiff was working with L. in handling defendant's property, the amount of which should be governed by the laws governing in defendant city, such letters constituted a sufficient memorandum of plaintiff's contract of employment to satisfy Civ. Code, § 1624 (6), requiring some note or memorandum of a broker's employment contract in writing in order that the same should be enforceable.

3. SAME—ACTION FOR COMMISSION—PARTIES.

Where two real estate brokers represented defendant in an exchange of property but they were not employed jointly, one of them was not a necessary party to a suit by the other to recover commissions for his services.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT—SCOPE OF REVIEW—ORDER DISSOLVING ATTACHMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 956, declaring that, on an appeal from a judgment, appealable orders are excepted from the matters which the court is required to review, and section 963, declaring that an order dissolving an attachment is an appealable order, an order discharging an attachment after motion for nonsuit had been granted and before entry of judgment cannot be reviewed on appeal from the judgment alone.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by William Kennedy against W. D. Merickel. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. M. Barstow and Collier & Carnahan (John D. Pope, of counsel), for appellant. Purington & Adair, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to recover commissions for exchange of real estate. Judgment was for defendant on a nonsuit. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and brings up the evidence in a bill of exceptions.

Plaintiff is a real estate broker residing in Los Angeles city, and defendant a resident of Minneapolis, Minn. The latter was the owner of real property in the last-named city of the estimated value of $175,000, which he desired to exchange for ranch property in California. Through the efforts of plaintiff, an exchange for property in Riverside county, known as the Everest Rancho, was effected. Defendant refused to pay plaintiff for such services, and this action is brought to recover the sum of $4,400 as a reasonable compensation for his services in bringing about the exchange of property for defendant. At the close of plaintiff's case, the court granted a motion for a nonsuit upon the grounds that the evidence failed to show an agreement in writing authorizing or employing plaintiff to make such exchange, as required by subdivision 6, § 1624, Civ. Code, that plaintiff failed to show what his commission was according to the terms of the contract, and because one J. H. Lawton, a necessary party plaintiff, had not been made a party to the action. The rule declared by section 1624 of the Civil Code that "the following contracts are invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent: * * * (6) An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for a compensation, or a commission"—has been frequently applied and construed. The cases doing this have generally rested upon the opinion rendered in McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 299. From that opinion it appears that before the Code provision was adopted, in order that a broker might recover commissions for effecting a sale of real estate, it was necessary that he prove an express contract of employment, or, in the absence of an express contract, that he might recover upon proof of a usage regulating transactions of this kind, but that the law would never imply a contract of employment. The effect of the Code, then, was to require that the authorization or fact of employment should appear from a writing subscribed by the party to be charged (Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 Pac. 130), and it has been held that usage is no longer admissible to prove this fact (Lambert v. Gerner, 142 Cal. 399, 76 Pac. 53). The provision that the employment or authorization shall be in writing does not require that it be by a written contract intended by the parties as an obligation. It may be merely a note or memorandum. Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239, 51 Pac. 333. It is not requisite that it shall be an instrument by the terms of which the agent is empowered to so bind the principal as to support an action for specific performance. Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237. It is sufficient if it shows that the broker is authorized by the principal to find a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to exchange (Merriman v. Wickersham, 141 Cal. 570, 75 Pac. 180), or one with whom an exchange is actually made (Clark v. Allen, 125 Cal. 276, 57 Pac. 985). As said in Cody v. Dempsey, 86 App. Div. 335, 83 N. Y. Supp. 899, there is no definite requirement, except that the authority to act in the matter shall be evidenced by a writing. All the statute requires is written authority. While, as said in Lambert v. Gerner, supra, a person cannot make himself the agent of another simply by writing letters and acting as agent without the assent or consent of the latter, it does not require the citation of authorities to establish that a writing in the form of a letter, or writings in the shape of a correspondence, may be sufficient under the statute. A writing signed by the owner and addressed to the broker expressly or impliedly acknowledging his authority to act as agent for the purposes of the sale is a sufficient compliance with the statute. Imperato v. Wasboe, 47 Misc. Rep. 150, 93 N. Y. Supp. 489. The purpose of the statute being to prevent the assertion of false claims for compensation by brokers and agents against owners of real estate, which was possible under the old rule, it is sufficient if it be shown that the party to be charged has recognized the broker as his agent by a writing subscribed by him. Toomy v. Dunphy, supra.

We do not think it necessary to accept the view of the New York Supreme Court in the case of Getzelsohn v. Donnelly, 50 Misc. Rep. 164, 98 N. Y. Supp. 213, cited by appellant, that a letter purporting on its face to be written to the plaintiff as a purchaser can be shown by parol to be intended as an employment or authorization of him as an agent in determining this question as applied to the facts of the case at bar. That it appears from the letter of October 14th that the defendant knew that plaintiff was interesting himself in some capacity in bringing about a sale of the property, and by the same letter invited plaintiff to write him again and make him a proposition, was not alone sufficient to satisfy the statute. This letter, which was introduced in evidence, was as follows: "Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 14th, 1905. Wm. Kennedy, Los Angeles, Cal.—Dear Sir: Yours of Sept. 22nd. also Oct. 7th, at hand. I have been out of the city for the last three weeks, consequently the delay in answering. Your letter written in confidence to me I will answer in confidence. Neither one of the agents you refer to in your letter are what you call reliable people, and if I were going to make an exchange for property in your state would prefer to deal with you direct. I have had no proposition submitted to me by Mr. Lawton of St. Paul since receiving your letters. In referring you to a bank in the city here would refer you to the Northwestern National Bank. If I have to deal through an agent here think I would prefer Mr. Lawton to Tibbetts. Hoping to hear from you again with a proposition, Yours truly, W. D. Merickel. 2009 Bryant Ave. South." Neither was it sufficient when considered only in connection with the letters of September 22d and October 7th, which are mentioned in it. The negotiations between the parties up to the date of October 14th showed merely that plaintiff had sent certain propositions to defendant's agent who had failed to deliver them and that plaintiff desired to get into direct communication with the principal. There is absolutely nothing to show employment or intention to employ plaintiff in either or any of these letters. By the letter of October 14th, however, defendant invited a proposition from plaintiff, and he received it in the letter of October 19th written by plaintiff. In this letter the latter says: "We do not represent Mr. Everest. His property comes to us through other brokers, and in the event of a deal we would be obliged to look to you for the usual commission." This position and declaration of plaintiff are brought home to defendant and emphasized in the succeeding letters of plaintiff to defendant dated, respectively, October 26th and October 27th. The transactions and negotiations mentioned in these letters disclosed a condition of affairs brought about by plaintiff which induced defendant to telegraph on November 1st, "I think if you can hold trade will leave here 15th November," and to write a letter to plaintiff to the same effect on the same day.

Little stress is to be laid upon the use of the words "your man," in defendant's letter, as affecting the question of whether or not plaintiff was conducting the negotiations on behalf of defendant. This is a well-known form of expression which is applied to the customer of a broker whether seller or purchaser, regardless of which party the broker represents. From the viewpoint of persons seeking to establish one or the other theory in the case, it would or would not indicate certain intentions, but from the disinterested standpoint of a court it would give little or no aid in solving the question before us. In response to plaintiff's second letter, under date of October 27th, calling defendant's attention, not only to the fact that plaintiff expected commissions, but the amount he expected to receive, and the suggestion that Mr. Lawton was entitled to a portion of these commissions, defendant writes: "As to the commissions in the deal, if made, will say that I expect to pay to Mr. Lawton and you, providing you are working with Mr. Lawton in handling my property, a regular commission of the amount allowed by the laws governing my city." The proposition of the Everest Rancho, as to which plaintiff advised defendant he would expect commissions, was shown by plaintiff's evidence to have been consummated through his efforts. A proposition in writing direct from Everest was procured by plaintiff at the request of defendant, and other services rendered in connection with the deal, at the written request of defendant. It is not necessary to state the language used in the correspondence, other than as above mentioned, to show that there was sufficient acknowledgment by defendant in writing of the employment of plaintiff to make the exchange to satisfy the statute and entitle the plaintiff to recover his compensation for services rendered as a broker. Much of the later correspondence related to the amount of commission to which plaintiff was entitled, and as to its division with Mr. Lawton. The plaintiff also testified to interviews with defendant relating to the same subject. It is not necessary that the writing required by the statute shall either state the amount of the commission, nor that the employment is for a compensation. Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 642, 25 Pac. 130. The complaint counts upon the reasonable value of the services. This is in accordance with the evidence. Defendant did not accept plaintiff's proposition of $4,400, and plaintiff did not accept defendant's proposition of "the amount allowed by the laws governing my city" (Minneapolis). There was then no express contract as to compensation, and, where this is the case it is an agreement to pay what the service is reasonably worth. Ford v. Brown, 120 Cal. 551, 52 Pac. 817. Plaintiff and two other witnesses testified to the value of the services rendered by plaintiff. The value of the services was to be determined by the market in which the contract was made and to be performed, and the property sold—that is, Los Angeles—and the evidence was as to the worth of the services in that city.

Mr. Lawton was not a party necessary to an action by plaintiff to recover for his services. If Lawton were entitled to receive any of the commissions, it seems hardly necessary to say that plaintiff could not recover that which was due Lawton. They were not employed jointly, and plaintiff's evidence was to the effect that the value of the services rendered by him alone was the amount for which he asked judgment. The granting of the nonsuit was error and the judgment should be reversed.

Both parties discuss as if before this court on this appeal from the judgment alone an order releasing an attachment made upon the motion of defendant's counsel after the motion for a nonsuit had been granted and before the entry of the judgment in the case. An order dissolving an attachment is an appealable order (Code Civ. Proc. § 963), and upon an appeal from a judgment appealable orders are expressly excepted from the matters which this court shall review (Code Civ. Proc. § 956).

Judgment reversed and cause remanded.

PEOPLE v. MORLEY et al. (Cr. 87.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 19, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Aug. 17, 1908.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION — DESCRIPTION OF OFFENSE—NAME.

Where the specific acts alleged in an information constituted the offense of willfully and maliciously burning personal property with intent to defraud the insurer denounced by Pen. Code, § 548, it was immaterial that the information erroneously designated the offense as arson.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 180.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—VERDICT—INFORMATION.

Where an information charged defendants with willfully burning certain property with intent to defraud the insurer, the fraud alleged being the burning of insured property, a verdict finding defendants guilty of willfully and maliciously burning the personal property named in the information, with intent to defraud the insurance company as charged in the information, sufficiently found that the property burned was insured.

3. ARSON—BURNING INSURED PROPERTY—INSURANCE BY DE FACTO CORPORATION.

In a prosecution for willfully burning personal property with intent to defraud the insurer, proof that the insurer was a de facto corporation, and acting as an insurance company, was sufficient proof of the insurer's existence as a corporation.

4. CORPORATIONS—DE FACTO CORPORATIONS—PROOF.

Where a policy insuring certain personal property against loss by fire on its face showed that the insurer was incorporated A. D. 1845, and a witness testified that he was in the employ of the Royal Insurance Company [insurer], a corporation, the evidence was sufficient to establish the de facto character of the insurance corporation.

5. ARSON—BURNING INSURED PROPERTY—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE.

Pen. Code, § 548, declares that every person who willfully burns any property which is insured against loss or damage by fire with intent to defraud the insurer is punishable, etc. Held, that the offense is complete, though the policy be invalid, if defendants believed it to be valid, and burned the property with intent to collect on the policy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Arson, § 3.]

6. SAME—CORPUS DELICTI—EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for willfully burning certain personal property with intent to defraud the insurer, evidence held to sufficiently establish the corpus delicti prior to the introduction of certain confessions.

7. CRIMINAL LAW—ADMISSIONS.

In a prosecution for burning personal property with intent to defraud the insurer, inculpatory statements, made by defendant's co-defendant in his presence and not denied by him were admissible as admissions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 898.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Crystobelle Morley and another were convicted of burning certain property with intent to defraud the insurer thereof, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Earl Rogers, Paul W. Schenck, W. H. Dehm, and A. C. Hurt, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendants from a conviction and an order denying a new trial.

The information filed charged the defendants jointly "of the crime of arson committed as follows": That said parties (naming them) "on the 3d day of August, 1907, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully, and feloniously and maliciously burn, injure, and destroy certain property, to wit, certain household furniture and other personal effects then and there in house [premises described], which was then and there the property of Henry Sanderson, and was then and there insured against loss and damage by fire by the Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool, a corporation, with intent then and thereby to defraud, prejudice, and damage the said Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool, a corporation; contrary," etc. A demurrer to the information was overruled. A joint trial followed, which resulted in a verdict as follows: "We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find the defendants guilty of willfully and maliciously burning the personal property named in the information with intent to defraud the insurance company as charged in the information." Defendants moved in arrest of judgment, and for an order to have a judgment of acquittal entered, both of which were denied, as was a motion for a new trial.

Appellants contend that the information is defective, in that the defendants are charged with arson, while the particular facts as set out charged a crime amounting to an offense under section 548 of the Penal Code. The precise question involved in this criticism of the information has been determined by our Supreme Court in People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 38, 38 Pac. 538, wherein it is held that, when the specific acts constituting the offense with which defendants are charged are set forth in the information with sufficient clearness to show that the transaction is under a particular section of the Penal Code, the designation in the information of the offense by some other name is immaterial; and it is unnecessary here to consider whether or not the defendants have been legally committed by a magistrate, as a prerequisite to the filing of the information, for no motion to set aside the information upon that ground was made, and the same, under section 996 of the Penal Code, was therefore waived.

The appellants further contend that the court erred in denying the motion for acquittal and in arrest of judgment. These motions were based upon the claim that the verdict was insufficient to warrant the court in pronouncing judgment. It is true that the verdict is, to a degree, informal. There is no express finding that the property destroyed was, in fact, insured. But the verdict should be construed in connection with the pleadings and the information (People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 62, 67 Pac. 42); and construed so as to give effect to the manifest intention of the jury (People v. Holmes, 118 Cal. 448, 50 Pac. 675). The information charged that the property so burned was insured by a designated corporation. The jury by the verdict finds that the property named in the information was by defendants willfully and maliciously burned with intent to defraud the insurance company, as charged in the information. The fraud upon the company as charged in the information was the burning of insured property. The verdict, when read in connection with the information, is certain in the intent to find that the property burned was insured. People v. Millan, 106 Cal. 323, 39 Pac. 605. It is insisted by appellants that this inference is not warranted by the proof adduced upon the trial. That the property insured belonged to defendant Sanderson is not questioned. The insufficiency of the evidence to show that it was actually insured is urged upon the ground only that parol proof of the existence of the corporation was all the evidence presented. Proof that it was a de facto corporation and acting as an insurance company is sufficient. People v. Hughes, 29 Cal. 260; People v. Ah Sam, 41 Cal. 653; People v. Goldsworthy, 130 Cal. 602, 62 Pac. 1074. The policy of insurance issued to and received by defendant Morley, which is in the record, and which appears never to have been by her transferred, stated upon its face that the insurance company was incorporated A. D. 1845, and a witness testified that he was in the employ of the Royal Insurance Company, a corporation. This was sufficient evidence to establish the de facto character of the insurance corporation.

If appellants by their contention that it was not shown that the burned property was insured against loss or damage by fire intend to urge that neither of the defendants could have recovered on the policy, the answer to this is that the belief of defendants that it was binding was clearly established and their intent to defraud fully proven. The crime may be complete, though the policy be invalid, if defendants believed it to be valid and committed the act with the intent to collect on the policy. The policy was not introduced in evidence to prove that accused held a binding policy, but to show the intent with which the house was burned. McDonald v. People, 47 Ill. 533. If the inability of the defendant to recover on the policy could be made an effective defense to a criminal prosecution, this would be available to every policy holder who burns up his property to secure the amount of the policy of insurance thereon. The fact of setting fire to the insured property by the policy holder invalidates all fire insurance policies, and would prevent a recovery in every case, if this were the rule. The policy holder would then only have to prove the act which constitutes his guilt in order to escape punishment. In the case at bar the successive steps of sale, demand of possession by Sanderson, burning of the property, and attempt to collect the insurance, all tend to establish the intent to realize by these acts. The failure of defendant Morley to assign the policy and the inability of Sanderson to collect in his own name become immaterial. A valid policy was issued, and defendants believed it continued to be a valid obligation of the company when the goods were destroyed. The effect of the law or the terms of the policy to render the policy invalid by reason of the acts of the defendants cannot shield them from punishment for the crime.

The questions of what persons are prejudiced or what persons are benefited by the commission of a crime of this character are merely collateral ones. The guilt of the accused does not depend upon the legal obligations arising out of the policy. United States v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 409, 6 L. Ed. 502; State v. Tucker, 84 Mo. 25; People v. Hughes, supra. This is evidenced also by the language of section 548 itself. No element of advantage to the defendant is made a part of the offense, and the person who burns insured property with the intent to defraud is guilty whether the property or possession be his or that of another. It was the duty of the trial court to construe the verdict so as to give it the effect intended by the jury, if the intended effect could be ascertained from its language considered in connection with the pleadings and evidence. Johnson v. Visher, 96 Cal. 310, 31 Pac. 106. The trial court construed the verdict as a general one, and we think such construction permissible.

Appellants contend further that the corpus delicti had not been proven before alleged confessions were received in evidence, and error is claimed on account thereof. There is in the record competent evidence, which was received before any admissions or confessions were introduced, which tended to show that the destruction of the property was the work of an incendiary, and facts and circumstances pointing to defendants' connection therewith. It is unnecessary to recite all of this testimony, but it is sufficient to call attention to the fact that a few minutes after the fire was discovered, which was about 1:30 a. m., a part of the furniture was found piled together in one room; that defendant Sanderson was seen running away from the fire; that he told a witness that no one was in the house; that this defendant two hours thereafter was found with serious burns on his person some miles from the scene of the fire, and, when requested by an officer to give his name, refused to do so, made contradictory statements as to why he was in such a condition and in that locality at such an hour, resisted an officer who sought to accompany him in quest of a physician, and finally gave an assumed name when taken to the hospital. It further appears that the policy of insurance had been taken out only a few days before the fire; that one of the defendants, Mrs. Morley, who lived in the house, was found almost entirely dressed a few minutes after the fire; that certain personal effects of this defendant which had not been transferred by her to Sanderson were found in an outhouse; that both defendants made contradictory statements as to the origin of the fire. All of these, with other suspicious circumstances, tended to establish that a crime had been committed.

It is further insisted that, assuming the correctness of the ruling in admitting such confession, as to defendant Sanderson such confession by an accomplice was insufficient to warrant his conviction. It must be remembered that all of the admissions and statements made by Mrs. Morley, codefendant of Sanderson, in relation to the fire and her connection and that of Sanderson therewith, were made in Sanderson's presence. She there stated that Sanderson applied the match, and gave a detailed account of Sanderson's connection with the fire. Sanderson denied none of these statements made by Mrs. Morley, except to deny that he knew the property was insured, and stated that the fire was caused by the explosion of a lamp. But, assuming that Sanderson's explanation as to the origin of the fire is to be taken as a denial of all of Mrs. Morley's statements in his presence, still there is independent evidence sufficiently corroborative of the statements of Mrs. Morley to warrant the jury in returning a verdict of guilty.

The instructions refused, and on account of which refusal error is claimed, all relate to the charge of arson. Such instructions were inapplicable under the information, which specified another and distinct offense and in reference to which all evidence was confined.

We perceive no error in the record prejudicial to defendants, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 355

In re DAVIS' ESTATE. (Civ. 455.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
June 8, 1908.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—CERTIFICATE—CONSTRUCTION.

Where the certificate to a transcript on appeal from an order fixing an administrator's compensation declared that the judge had examined the contents "of the within transcript on appeal in said matter, and find that the papers and orders therein set forth and contained are copies of the original papers and orders filed and used upon the hearing and in the various proceedings" of the estate, the certificate sufficiently showed that the papers and orders certified were in fact all the papers and orders so used.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS — COMPENSATION OF ADMINISTRATOR — DISTRIBUTION IN KIND.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, provides that where the property of an estate is distributed in kind, and the distribution involves no labor beyond the custody and distribution thereof, the administrator's compensation shall be computed on all the estate above $20,000 at one-half of the rate fixed by such section. Decedent's property consisted of an undivided one-half of the estate of her brother D., then in course of administration in another county, consisting of real estate in the possession of D.'s administrator, who sold the land for partition and paid the proceeds of decedent's interest to her administrator, which was by him distributed. Held that, though decedent's administrator had inventoried such interest as real estate, he nevertheless received and accounted therefor in money, and was therefore only entitled to one-half commissions, nor was such right affected by the fact that he was made a party to the partition suit; it not appearing that he was put to any extra trouble, or expense thereby.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Judicial accounting by the public administrator of Tulare county as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Jane Davis, deceased. From an order fixing the administrator's compensation, he appeals. Affirmed.

Hannah & Miller and H. T. Miller, for appellant. Heller, Powers & Ehrman, Pillsbury, Madison & Suto, and Carter P. Pomeroy, for respondent.

HART, J. The facts of this case are well stated in the brief of counsel for the respondents, George W., Samuel D., Edward, and William G. French as follows: "Jane Davis died on the 19th day of September, 1904, in the state of New York. On the same day the appellant, the public administrator of Tulare county, applied in this state for letters of administration upon her estate. On December 24, 1904, appellant was appointed administrator, and on November 12, 1906, was appointed administrator with the will annexed. The estate of said decedent consisted wholly of an undivided one-half interest in the estate of her brother, Samuel Davis, deceased, then in course of administration in the courts of the city and county of San Francisco. The latter estate was distributed on November 13, 1906, and the undivided one-half thereof came into the 'possession' of appellant on the 28th day of December, 1906. On the 14th day of January following appellant filed his final account and petition for final distribution of the undivided interests of the heirs of Jane Davis. It appears that the undivided one-half interest of Jane Davis in certain real estate belonging to the estate of Samuel Davis was inventoried by appellant as real estate. Subsequently, and while in the possession of the executor of Samuel Davis, the land was sold at a partition sale, and the share of the cash proceeds belonging to the estate of Samuel Davis turned over to his executor. Upon distribution of the latter estate, one-half of the proceeds was 'distributed' to appellant as administrator of the Jane Davis estate." The appellant, in his final account, upon the theory that the estate of said Jane Davis was not "distributed in kind" (section 1618, Code Civ. Proc.), asks for commissions aggregating $10,517.66. To this claim the respondents objected on the ground that the property of the estate "is distributed in kind and the administration of said estate involved no labor beyond the custody and distribution of the same by the said administrator," etc. The court, in its decree settling the account, having found that the estate was "being distributed in kind and involved no labor beyond the custody and distribution of the same," reduced the claim for the administrator's commissions, allowing him only the sum of $5,792 as compensation for his services as such administrator. The administrator was also allowed the sum of $10,792 to be paid to his attorneys as counsel fees. The appeal is by said administrator from that portion of the decree fixing and settling his compensation.

Objection is first urged against the consideration of the record by this court upon the ground that the transcript on appeal does not contain the evidence received at the hearing and upon which the court based its finding and decree fixing the compensation of the administrator. In other words, it is contended that none of the papers, independent of those constituting the judgment roll, used at the hearing and comprising the evidence upon which the court acted in fixing and allowing the administrator's commissions, are authenticated by a bill of exceptions, as required by rule 29 of this court. 78 Pac. xii. We think the objection is untenable. In the case of Melde v. Reynolds, 120 Cal. 234, 52 Pac. 491, the judge of the trial court merely declared, over his signature, as the judge who tried the case, that certain affidavits were used on the hearing of the motion for a new trial. The clerk of the court also certified that certain other affidavits were used upon said motion. The Supreme Court in that case, among other things, says: "A bill of exceptions, settled as directed by section 651 of the Code of Civil Procedure, would contain all the affidavits upon which the judge acted in making the order, but the indorsement by him upon certain affidavits that they were used at the hearing of the motion does not make them the record of the papers upon which the motion was heard, since it does not appeal thereby that these were all the papers used at the hearing"—citing Shain v. Eikerenkotter, 88 Cal. 13, 25 Pac. 966. In the case at bar the judge in his certificate declares that "I have examined the contents of the within transcript on appeal in said matter, and find that the papers and orders therein set forth and contained are copies of the original papers and orders filed and used upon the hearing and in the various proceedings of said estate." While the judge's certificate does not in so many words state that the papers and orders set forth in the transcript are all the papers and orders used in the proceeding, it is clear that by the employment of the definite article "the" as descriptive of the papers and orders thus used the judge intended to, and does, certify that said papers and orders were in fact all the papers and orders so used.

Section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, provides that "when no compensation is provided by the will, or the executor renounces all claim thereto, he must be allowed commissions upon the amount of estate accounted for by him, as follows," and then follow the commissions to which such executor is entitled, graduated in amount according to certain designated sums constituting the total value of the estate. The latter part of the same section also provides: "Where the property of the estate is distributed in kind, and involves no labor beyond the custody and distribution of the same, the commissions shall be computed on all the estate above the value of twenty thousand dollars, at one half of the rates fixed in this section."

The controversy between the appellant and the respondents arises out of a difference of opinion as to the true meaning of the quoted part of the section of the Code of Civil Procedure to which we have just referred. The contention of the appellant is that, notwithstanding the fact that the undivided one-half interest of Jane Davis in certain realty belonging to the estate of Samuel Davis, deceased, was sold by the executor of the latter estate while it was still in his possession as such executor, and the proceeds thereof in cash turned over to appellant, as the administrator with the will annexed of the estate of Jane Davis, deceased, the distribution of the last named estate, consisting of the money so received, was not "in kind," and that, therefore, he is entitled to commissions computed upon the basis upon which compensation is allowed in estates, the property of which is not distributed in the form in which it is received into the possession of executors or administrators, and which "involves labor beyond the custody and distribution of the same." This contention is founded upon the fact that the appellant included in his inventory of the property of the estate of Jane Davis her devised interest in the real estate belonging to the Samuel Davis estate, which at the time of said inventory was yet in process of administration; it being obviously appellant's theory that in so returning such interest as a part of the estate of his testate the same, in the form of realty, constituted the amount, or a portion thereof, of the estate "accounted for by him," within the meaning of said section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We cannot agree with the contention of the appellant. We think the law plainly contemplates that an executor or administrator shall receive as his compensation for services performed as such officer commissions based upon the value of property which he has taken into his possession, and which, having been so taken into possession, has been "accounted for." Estate of Simmons, 43 Cal. 543; In re Ricaud, 70 Cal. 71, 11 Pac. 471. In the Simmons Case the court says: "When he [the administrator] shall have taken the property into possession and accounted for it, he is entitled to compensation by way of commissions upon its value. Unless he take it into possession, he is not charged in his account with its value. He may, and doubtless would, incur a responsibility, should he fail to take it into possession when he lawfully might, if by such failure it should become ultimately lost to those entitled to its benefits; but, as affording a basis for the allowance of commissions, the value of the estate which has been taken into possession, and having been in possession has been accounted for, is alone regarded."

In the case at bar, the evidence shows that the interest of Jane Davis in the land here referred to was, at the time of appellant's appointment as administrator, lawfully in the possession of the executor of the estate of Samuel Davis, deceased; that it became necessary that all said land should be sold by the executor of Samuel's estate in order to distribute said estate according to the disposition made thereof by the will of said Samuel; that said sale was conducted, under a decree of partition of the real property, by said executor of Samuel's estate, and that the latter estate was distributed on November 13, 1906, and that the undivided one-half thereof came into the possession of appellant on the 28th day of December, 1906; that on the 14th day of January, 1907, the appellant, as administrator, etc., of the estate of Jane Davis, deceased, filed his final account and petition for the distribution of said estate. Thus, it is to be observed, the appellant at no time during the administration of Jane Davis' estate ever had possession of her interest in the lands devised to her by Samuel Davis, and that he distributed her estate in the form in which he received possession of it. In other words, there was no change in the character of Jane Davis' estate from the time appellant as administrator took possession of it up to the time of the entry of the decree of the distribution thereof. It is therefore plainly to be seen that, within the real meaning of the language of section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the property of the estate of Jane Davis as distributed was the same in character as when the possession thereof was received by the appellant, and that the appellant bestowed upon it no labor beyond that involved in its custody and distribution. The "labor" involved in the transaction resulting in the conversion of Jane Davis' interest in the lands of Samuel's estate into cash necessarily, under the law, devolved upon the executor of the estate whence such interest came, for, as we have seen, said executor was the lawful custodian and possessor of all the estate of Samuel Davis, and of which this land constituted a part, until said estate was distributed. And, when said Samuel's estate was distributed, the interest of Jane Davis therein was distributed in the character of money, and not in that of realty. The property, therefore, "accounted for" by appellant, within a reasonable interpretation of the language of the Code section, was the money received by him from the executor of Samuel Davis' estate as the proceeds of the sale of Jane's interest in the lands.

We are unable to find any support for appellant's position in Estate of Cudworth, 133 Cal. 462, 65 Pac. 1041. In that case the evidence established that the executor expended labor in the management of said estate and the property thereof beyond the mere custody and distribution of the same; that the executor found it necessary, during the course of the administration of the estate, to surrender certain stock and bonds coming into his possession as part of the assets of the estate in exchange for new issues; and that before doing so, he was required to make, and he did make, a thorough and careful investigation of the affairs of the corporations. Besides, he collected and realized on many of the promissory notes belonging to the estate, made diligent efforts to collect notes due, gave much personal time and attention to the condition and protection of 20 or more tenements belonging to the estate, bestowed labor upon their repairs, and protected the estate against suit to quiet title brought against him in his official capacity. The administration lasted for more than two years. In the case under consideration there was, as seen, absolutely no change in the character of the property of the estate as it was received by the administrator after it came into his possession, and the estate was distributed in a little less than a month after the interests of Jane Davis in Samuel's estate were turned over to him. In short, the record discloses that there was no labor bestowed by the administrator upon the property of the estate beyond its mere custody and distribution, and that the same was distributed "in kind," or in the form in which he received possession of it.

The claim that some extra or special labor was performed by the appellant in a contest with the public administrator of Fresno county over the right to administer the estate of Jane Davis should be considered in determining the compensation of appellant is without merit. This contest involved the bestowal of no labor upon the estate. Whatever labor was performed in carrying on the contest was so performed before the appellant either obtained possession or was adjudged entitled to the possession of the estate. Nor is there anything in the claim that the fact that the appellant was, as administrator of the estate of Jane Davis, made a party to the partition suit instituted by the executor of the estate of Samuel Davis should be considered in fixing appellant's compensation. Necessarily he had to be made a party to that suit, and it does not appear that he was by reason thereof put to any extra trouble, labor, or expense.

For the reasons stated in the foregoing, the order and decree settling the final account and fixing the compensation of the administrator is affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 468

Ex parte RUEF. (Cr. 154.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
June 30, 1908.)

1. BAIL—RIGHT TO BAIL.

Under Const. U. S. Amend. 8, providing that excessive bail shall not be required, and Cal. Const. art. 1, § 6, providing that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties unless for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great, the admission to bail except in such capital cases is a constitutional right, which the accused can claim, and which no court or judge can properly refuse.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 5, Bail, § 140.]

2. SAME.

Under the federal and state Constitutions, the Legislature cannot prescribe such burdensome rules as to sureties and their right to qualify as such that a prisoner would be deprived of his constitutional right to be admitted to bail on giving sufficient sureties.

3. SAME—SURETIES—QUALIFICATION—HOUSEHOLDER OR FREEHOLDER.

Under Pen. Code, § 1279, providing that each surety on a bail bond must be a resident, householder, or freeholder within the state, it is sufficient that he is a resident of the state and is either a householder or freeholder.

4. SAME—RESIDENTS.

Under Pen. Code, § 1279, declaring that each surety on a bail bond must be a resident, householder, or a freeholder within the state, but that the court or magistrate may refuse to accept any person as bail who is not a resident of the county where bail is offered, the court will rarely refuse a surety because he is not a resident of the county, unless there are circumstances which would reasonably excite suspicion as to him, or unless it would be difficult to investigate his financial standing in a distant location.

5. SAME—QUALIFICATION.

Pen. Code, § 1279, provides that each surety offered on a bail bond must be worth the amount specified in the undertaking exclusive of property exempt from execution, but that the court or magistrate on taking bail may allow more than two sureties to justify severally in amounts less than that expressed in the undertaking, if the whole justification be equivalent to that of sufficient bail. Held, that a surety was qualified if he had sufficient property, either real or personal, either in the county or elsewhere.

6. SAME—EXAMINATION OF SURETIES.

On an examination of sureties offered as bail, witnesses may be examined and the sureties placed on oath, and fully examined and cross-examined by the district attorney.

7. SAME—FRIENDS AND RELATIVES.

Under Pen. Code, § 1279, providing the qualifications of sureties to become bail, it is no objection to sureties offered that they are friends and relatives of the accused.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco.

Habeas corpus in the Court of Appeal on petition of Abraham Ruef, involving a review of proceedings in the superior court to admit to bail. Writ allowed and further hearing remanded to a judge of the superior court, with directions to discharge prisoner from custody on furnishing certain bail bonds.

Henry Ach, Frank J. Murphy, and M. C. Chapman, for petitioner. W. H. Langdon and Francis J. Heney, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. It appears in this case that bail has been fixed in certain criminal proceedings pending in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco under several indictments against defendant. It further appears that the judge of the superior court in whose department the proceedings are pending, while examining sureties offered by defendant on his various bonds, declined and refused to accept anyone as surety unless such surety was the owner of real estate equal in amount to the sum for which he desired to qualify upon such bond, and for which he was to become liable; and, further, that such judge refused to hear or consider the financial responsibility of any relative of the prisoner, or to receive any such relative on the bond, no matter what amount of property such relative might possess in his own name. It further appears that the hearing as to the qualification of the proposed sureties on the several bonds has been heretofore continued from time to time by the judge of said court against the protest and objection of the prisoner; the last hearing being continued from June 27 to July 3, 1908. It further appears that the judge of said court directed his reporter not to take down any of the proceedings or testimony on the examination of such sureties in the proceedings before him.

This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus, in order that the prisoner may be admitted to bail upon giving bonds with good and sufficient sureties as required by law. Our Constitution provides that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties unless for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great. Const. Cal. art. 1, § 6. The Constitution of the United States provides that excessive bail ought not to be required. Amendment 8. The admission to bail, except in capital cases where the proof is evident or the presumption great, is a constitutional right which the accused can claim, and which no court and no judge can properly refuse. People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 542, 81 Am. Dec. 77.

This brings us to the question of the qualification of bail. Under the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of this state, the Legislature could not prescribe such burdensome rules as to sureties and their right to qualify as such that the prisoner would be deprived of his constitutional right to be admitted to bail upon giving sufficient sureties. In this state, however, the Legislature has prescribed the form of the undertaking and the qualifications of bail. Pen. Code, §§ 1278, 1279. It is the duty of the court to follow the law as it is written in all cases, under all circumstances, without fear and without regard to public clamor, with no friendships, no feelings, no prejudice, and totally without regard to personal consequences to himself. Any other course would bring the law into disrepute, take away the safeguards of liberty for which the Anglo-Saxon race has so long struggled. The judge should look to the law and the rule prescribed by the Legislature for his guidance, regardless of his own personal opinions.

The qualifications of bail are thus stated in the Penal Code:

"(1) Each of them must be a resident, householder or freeholder within the state; but the court or magistrate may refuse to accept any person as bail who is not a resident of the county where bail is offered.

"(2) They must each be worth the amount specified in the undertaking, exclusive of property exempt from execution; but the court or magistrate, on taking bail, may allow more than two sureties to justify severally in amounts less than that expressed in the undertaking if the whole justification be equivalent to that of sufficient bail."

Upon examination of the section, it is easily seen that each of the sureties must be a resident of the state. He must be a householder or freeholder within the state, but, if he is either, it is sufficient. He may be a householder, and not a freeholder, or he may be a freeholder, and not a householder. The court or magistrate may refuse to accept any person who is not a resident of the county where the bail is offered, but this discretion the court rarely avails itself of; and we apprehend that a court would not refuse a surety for the simple reason that he is not a resident of the county, unless there is some circumstance that would reasonably excite suspicion as to such surety, or unless it would be difficult to investigate his financial standing in a distant location. As to property qualification, the requirement is that each surety must be worth the amount specified in the undertaking exclusive of property exempt from execution. It may be real or personal property, in the county or elsewhere. Its situation may be inquired into for the purpose of testing the truth as to whether or not the surety really owns the property, and the court in all cases should be careful not to accept fictitious or worthless bail, or to accept persons as sureties who are not financially responsible. Witnesses may be examined and the sureties placed upon oath. The district attorney should be allowed to bring witnesses and examine them fully; and he should further be allowed to fully cross-examine the sureties, and all reasonable means of investigation allowed, but no unreasonable delay should be granted. Neither friends nor relatives are excluded by the statute; and the court has no power to arbitrarily refuse them for the sole reason that they are relatives or friends. In fact, it is usual and customary for the prisoner to call upon his friends and relatives in such cases. It is much more natural for those to become sureties for the prisoner than for strangers to do so. The object of bail is to secure the prisoner's attendance. In case of default of his appearance, the amount of bail is declared forfeited. It can make no difference whether the sureties are relatives or not, provided they are financially responsible.

If the bail is forfeited and the money paid, it makes no difference where it comes from. The prisoner is entitled to have his sureties examined in accordance with the law and the views herein expressed.

It is ordered that the further hearing of this writ and the further proceedings in this matter be referred to the Hon. Frank J. Murasky, one of the judges of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, to hear the testimony as to the qualification of the sureties, to approve the bonds if sufficient sureties are produced, and, upon sufficient sureties being produced and the bonds approved in the amounts and in the several sums heretofore fixed, that the prisoner be discharged from custody.

STILES v. HERMOSA BEACH LAND & WATER CO. (Civ. 495.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 6, 1908.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—COMPLAINT—ADEQUACY OF CONSIDERATION.

Under Civ. Code, § 3391, providing that plaintiff in a suit for specific performance must allege such facts as will enable the court to decide whether the contract is such that it would not be inequitable to enforce it, a complaint to compel specific performance of a contract for the sale of land setting out the contract, but failing to state any facts from which the court could determine that the consideration was adequate, and that the contract as to defendant was just and reasonable, was fatally defective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 357, 358.]

2. PLEADING—AMENDMENT TO CONFORM WITH PROOF.

In a suit for specific performance tried June 27, 1906, the court properly permitted plaintiff to amend his complaint on July 24th following, in order to make it conform to the proof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 603-605.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Suit for specific performance by A. E. Stiles against the Hermosa Beach Land & Water Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and from a refusal of a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Bicknell, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher (Edward E. Bacon, of counsel), for appellant. Tanner, Taft & Odell, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action to enforce specific performance of contract to convey real estate. Defendant appeals from judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges that on the 15th day of February, 1902, plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement in writing (setting it out in full). From this writing it appears: That defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff certain real estate at Hermosa Beach for $135. That plaintiff paid $45 cash, and agreed to pay $45 on or before October 2, 1902, and $45 on or before April 2, 1903, with interest at 7 per cent. on deferred payments from October 2, 1901. The deed was to be delivered upon the completion of the terms of the contract. Time is made of the essence of the contract, and upon default in payment of any installment of principal or interest, or the payment of taxes on the property (which plaintiff assumes), "the whole of said principal and interest shall be due and payable, or this agreement may be rescinded," at the option of the defendant. It is further alleged in the complaint that plaintiff paid to defendant the first payment as provided, and the second one on October 23, 1902, together with interest thereon to October 2, 1902; that on March 22, 1904, he paid the sum of $6.30, being the interest on the last payment to February 15, 1904, and on December 14, 1905, he paid the further sum of $7.10, being the interest on said last payment to January 1, 1906; that defendant accepted each and all of said payments without objection; that plaintiff performed all the conditions on his part to be performed, and on February 3, 1906, tendered the last payment with interest, but defendant refused to accept it, and that again on February 7th he tendered said payment and interest, and demanded a deed, which was refused. To this complaint defendant interposed a general demurrer, which was overruled. The case was tried on June 27, 1906, and by leave of the court an amendment to the complaint was filed July 24, 1906; the findings being dated August 2, 1906.

In the respect in which appellant contends in support of its demurrer that the complaint is defective the latter is not aided by the amendment. It is thoroughly settled in this state that a complaint for specific performance must, in order to make out a case good against general demurrer, state facts from which the court may determine that the consideration is adequate, and that the contract is as to the defendant just and reasonable. It is incumbent upon the plaintiff to state such facts as will enable the court to decide whether the contract is of such a character that it would not be inequitable to enforce it. Civ. Code, § 3391; Herzog v. A. T. & Santa Fé R. R. Co. (Cal.) 95 Pac. 898. Specific performance is an equitable remedy, and it is incumbent upon the plaintiff in an action of this character to show, both in the averments of his pleading and in the evidence at the trial, that he is entitled to the equitable relief which he seeks. Windsor v. Miner, 124 Cal. 494, 57 Pac. 386. There is no allegation that plaintiff was in possession of the premises, and no such facts are here alleged as those set out in the complaint for specific performance before the Supreme Court in Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 Pac. 276. The contract there under consideration was held just and fair, and not inequitable to enforce, because of the peculiar circumstances of that case. "The complaint contains no allegation to the effect that there was any consideration for the contract, except by the averment that it was in writing, which fact, under our Code, imports a consideration. Nor are any of the circumstances under which the contract was entered into shown, otherwise than by the recitals found in the written contract. These cannot be regarded as averments of the pleader, at all events, beyond the covenants found in it of which specific performance is asked," says Temple, J., in Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 171, 66 Pac. 231. This language and law are applicable to the case at bar, and the general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained.

There was no error in permitting the plaintiff to file an amendment to the complaint for the purpose of making it conform to the proof. Indeed, it seems to be the proper rule for a trial court to require such an amendment to be made where an issue, material to the determination of the case, has been tried without being presented in the pleadings, rather than to have a mistrial result from the variance. Hancock v. Board, etc., 140 Cal. 554, 74 Pac. 44; Hedstrom v. Union Trust Co. (Cal. App.) 94 Pac. 386.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to sustain defendant's demurrer to the complaint.

WEBSTER v. COMMON COUNCIL OF CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al. (Civ. 481.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 1, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1908.)

MANDAMUS — RIGHT TO RELIEF — MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — CITY COUNCIL — ORDINANCE RATIFYING FRANCHISE.

A railway company having been granted a franchise by the state board of harbor commissioners for the bay of San Diego to erect and maintain a wharf and pier in the tide lands and waters of such bay took no steps to have an ordinance passed by the council of such city ratifying and confirming the franchise, whereupon the required number of registered electors of the city submitted a proposed ordinance for that purpose as authorized by City Charter, c. 4, § 2, which petition was regularly certified by the city clerk, but the council refused to pass the ordinance or to submit it to a vote of the people as required by the charter. Held, that a resident elector or taxpayer had no beneficial interest in the passage of such ordinance, and therefore had no capacity to institute proceedings for a writ of mandate against the city council to compel such action.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Application by E. Bartlett Webster for a writ of mandate against the common council of the city of San Diego and others. From a judgment vacating an alternative writ and dismissing the petition, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Mills & Hizar, for appellant. Geo. Puterbaugh, City Attorney, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Appeal from a judgment denying an application for a writ of mandate. Petitioner is a resident elector, property owner, and taxpayer in the city of San Diego. Respondents are members of the common council of said city, which city is organized under a freeholders' charter containing a provision for the enactment of ordinances by direct vote of the electors of the city. The South Park & East Side Railway Company, a corporation, was granted a franchise to erect and maintain a wharf and pier in the tide lands and waters of San Diego Bay by the board of state harbor commissioners for the bay of San Diego under the provisions of section 2606 of the Political Code; the said pier or wharf so provided to be erected being within the limits of the city of San Diego. The record does not disclose that the corporation holding such franchise ever asked or requested or demanded of that city, or of respondents, that an ordinance ratifying and confirming said franchise should be enacted, but certain persons by a petition signed by the requisite number of registered electors of said city submitted to said common council a proposed ordinance for that purpose, as provided by section 2 of chapter 4 of the charter of that city. This petition was regularly certified by the city clerk, but the common council failed and refused to pass the ordinance so submitted within 20 days after its sufficiency had been certified by the city clerk as required by the charter in such cases, and refused to call a special, or any, election at which said ordinance could be submitted to "a vote of the people." Application was thereupon made by plaintiff and appellant to the superior court of San Diego county for a writ of mandate to compel such submission. An alternative writ was issued, but upon a hearing on the petition, and answer and demurrer to said answer, judgment was entered vacating said alternative writ and dismissing the petition.

We see no reason for disturbing the judgment of the trial court, nor is it necessary to consider any of the matters alleged in the answer or the issues of law raised thereon by the demurrer thereto in reaching this conclusion. A case could not well be presented which would more effectually illustrate the necessity for the rule requiring the application for the writ to be by "the party beneficially interested." Code Civ. Proc. § 1086. On the face of this petition the "South Park & East Side Railway Company" is the only party as to whom the law could imply a beneficial interest. For aught that appears here, it has abandoned all the privileges granted it by the harbor commissioners, and has no intention of complying with the terms of it if confirmed by ordinance of the city. It must be presumed that this is the case from its failure to ask for a confirming ordinance. If we were to assume that petitioner here, as a resident elector or taxpayer, is a competent person to ask the common council to put in action the election machinery of the city for the purpose of passing an ordinance by direct vote, it would be idle for the court to grant his petition in the face of an abandonment of the franchise from the harbor commissioners by the grantee of the franchise. This, however, is not a case in which the taxpayer, resident, or elector as such can be said to be a party beneficially interested. A taxpayer is said to be so interested in a matter which affects, or may affect directly, his assessment or taxes (Hyatt v. Allen, 54 Cal. 353), or, being a resident elector having minor children of an age to attend school, is affected by the location of a schoolhouse. (Eby v. Trustees, 87 Cal. 173, 25 Pac. 240). Again, as a property owner he is beneficially interested in the disincorporation of a municipality in which he is a resident elector and taxpayer. (Fredrick v. San Luis Obispo, 118 Cal. 391, 50 Pac. 661. The reason for his being considered a party beneficially interested in all these cases is clear, and it is equally clear that no such reason exists in the case at bar.

Neither does the petitioner here bring himself within the class considered by this court in Good v. Common Council, 5 Cal. App. 265, 90 Pac. 44, nor within the reason there given in sustaining the petitioner's right to be considered a party beneficially interested. Petitioner there was one of the persons who demanded of the common council that it call an election to protect a right granted by the charter to the electors of the city. He was one of the signers of the petition to inaugurate a proceeding, the primary purpose of which was to carry out the wishes of the electors, and they asked that the action be taken upon their behalf, and not on behalf of some corporation or third person. Petitioner here was not only not beneficially interested in the franchise which he is seeking to have confirmed by ordinance, but he does not even allege that he was one of the petitioners seeking to accomplish the passage of the ordinance by a direct vote.

Judgment affirmed.

MILLER et al. v. SCOBLE. (Civ. 386.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
June 4, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—FINDINGS—REVIEW—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

Where there was evidence on which to base the trial court's findings that assessment work had been done on certain mining claims in good faith, such finding would not be set aside on appeal because based on alleged improbable and contradictory evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3979-3982.]

2. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY AND PROBABLE EFFECT.

An order denying a new trial for newly discovered evidence will be reversed if it appears that the newly discovered evidence is such as must, if proved on a new trial, change the result, and proper diligence has been shown.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 210-214, 226.]

3. SAME—SURPRISE—FALSE SWEARING.

Where, in an action to quiet title to adjoining mining claims, the only issue was whether the assessment work had been done by plaintiffs on the claims, and plaintiffs establish a prima facie case showing that the requisite amount of work had been done, defendant could not claim that he was surprised by such testimony in that it was false, so as to entitle him to a new trial; it being defendant's duty to have witnesses present at the trial to prove the contrary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 193.]

4. SAME — CONTINUANCE — FAILURE TO ASK — EXCUSE.

Where defendant was surprised at plaintiffs' evidence as to the doing of certain assessment work on mining claims in controversy, it was no excuse for defendant's failure to ask a continuance in order to procure proof to the contrary that he expected the judge of the court to visit the mine before rendering his decision.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 195-198.]

5. SAME—CUMULATIVE EVIDENCE.

A new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be granted where the new evidence is largely cumulative, and is not such as to probably change the result.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; G. W. Nicol, Judge.

Action by Marietta Miller as trustee and others against R. J. Scoble. Judgment for plaintiffs, and, from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

F. R. Whitcomb, Wm. M. Sims, and J. B. Curtin, for appellant. F. P. Otis, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to quiet title to two adjoining mining claims. Plaintiffs had judgment, and defendant appealed from the order denying his motion for a new trial. Appellant relocated the claims on January 1, 1905, and he contends that the annual labor required by law was not done on either of said claims by plaintiffs for the year 1904, and also that by virtue of his affidavits of newly discovered evidence a new trial should have been granted.

1. In the opening brief appellant inveighs caustically against the testimony of plaintiffs' witnesses, asserting that it is entirely unworthy of credence, and insufficient to justify the finding of the court that the work was done in 1904. But the fact remains, as the transcript shows, that two witnesses, Heldman and Miller, testified that the $200 worth of work was done by them and one Curtis. They give the number of days that they were employed, the price per day of their labor, and they describe how and where the work was done. It is true that they do not entirely agree as to some of the details, and Heldman is less certain as to the exact time of the employment than Miller, but it cannot be disputed that their testimony supports the finding of the court, and even admitting, as we do, that a very strong counter showing was made by defendant, we are powerless to disturb said finding under the well-established rule of conflicting evidence unless the testimony for plaintiffs is so improbable that we must reject it as not entitled to belief. This rule is admitted by appellant, but he stoutly insists that the conduct of said witnesses as sworn to is inherently improbable, as "it violates every principle of human action." The assertion is made in view of their statement that they sank a shaft in quartz rock to the depth of 20 or 25 feet and had three benches upon which to throw the rock, that they threw it up 8 feet upon one bench and then upon another, and at last to the top, from which point they moved it several feet to an old dump pile. Appellant says "they were there simply to do assessment work, and were not called upon to enter upon any such a stupendous and hazardous undertaking as the one they describe, without appliances in the way of blacksmith utensils, wheelbarrows, and other articles necessary to do such work." But we cannot say that they were required to have all the approved appliances, nor that because they appear to have worked somewhat stupidly and not to the best advantage they did not do the work as they claim. The considerations suggested were proper to be addressed to the trial judge as affecting the credibility of the witnesses. No doubt they were not overlooked by the court below, but it was found, in view of all the circumstances, that the necessary work was done in good faith; and we cannot hold otherwise without invading the province of the trial judge. It is fair to say that the explanation by witness Miller of the manner in which the work was done mollifies somewhat the sting of appellant's criticism.

2. In his closing brief it is virtually admitted by appellant that the evidence is sufficient to support the said finding of the court, but it is claimed that "the principle of law that this court will not disturb the decision of the lower court has no bearing, for in this case appellant relies principally on his motion for a new trial upon accident and surprise, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against and upon newly discovered evidence material for defendant, which he could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced at the trial." It is conceded that much must be left to the discretion of the trial court in the determination of the sufficiency of the showing made. The rule is, as stated by the authorities, that it is usually to be presumed that the discretion of the court has been properly exercised, yet when it appears that the newly discovered evidence is such as must, if proved upon a new trial, change the result, and proper diligence has been shown, an order denying the new trial must be reversed. The "accident and surprise" were occasioned by the testimony of the witnesses for plaintiffs that the assessment work for 1904 was done in sinking a certain shaft, digging a certain cut, and running a certain drift and making a winze therein, whereas, it is asserted, no such shaft, cut, drift, or winze was ever dug or made, and "that in the nature of things defendant was greatly surprised at such bald, open, false swearing as to matters which had no existence whatever in fact; that plaintiffs in their affidavits of assessment work filed for record did not state where in particular they claimed to have done their assessment work on said mines for the year 1904, simply swearing, generally, that they had done the work so that the defendant could in no way glean therefrom where or at what places plaintiffs claimed to have worked."

But it is conceded that the only issue before the court was whether the assessment work was done by plaintiffs on said claims, and common prudence would require defendant to be prepared to show that said work was not done on any part thereof. In fact, as appellant admits, plaintiffs made out a prima facie case by introducing in evidence the said affidavits of assessment work, and the burden was then cast upon defendant to show that the requisite amount of labor was not done upon any portion of the claim, and he does not excuse his failure to use diligence in producing all the witnesses that he deemed necessary to convince the court of the merit of his contention. Again, considering the case from appellant's standpoint in view of the said affidavits, he should not have been surprised at the "bald, open and false swearing" of plaintiffs' witnesses, but should rather have anticipated it and been fully prepared to overcome its effect. Moreover, when the surprise did occur, appellant should have asked for a continuance in order that he might induce other witnesses to visit the mine and testify at the trial upon the point suggested. The only excuse offered in his affidavit for his failure to do so is that he believed and relied upon his belief that the judge of the court would visit said mine before rendering his decision in the cause. In other words, the appellant chose to rely upon the visit to the mine of the judge to produce conviction rather than upon the testimony of other witnesses, and he must now abide by his choice. But the judge did not visit the mine, and it is claimed that appellant was thereby surprised, and should therefore have a new trial that he may present additional evidence. It is a sufficient answer to say that from the statements contained in the counter affidavits presented upon the hearing of said motion the court was justified in concluding that appellant had no reason to believe that such visit would be made, and, besides, it is apparent that a personal inspection of the premises by the trial judge cannot be deemed equivalent to the testimony of witnesses, and therefore the expectation of such visit cannot afford any legal excuse for defendant's remissness in making no effort to secure, before the submission of the cause, the additional evidence. Again, an examination of the transcript discloses that the proposed evidence is substantially cumulative. Witness Curtis and others who were familiar with the situation testified that the work done by plaintiffs did not meet the requirement of the statute. Besides, it cannot be held that the result would probably be different if the additional evidence were introduced. As a matter of fact, the affidavits of the proposed witnesses were received, and, after considering them and the counter affidavits, the only person in a position to determine with any degree of accuracy whether the decision would likely be changed in the event of another trial has settled the question in the negative by denying the motion.

We have deemed it unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the somewhat elementary principles announced, and notwithstanding the earnest, and, indeed, vehement asseveration by appellant of the gross injustice of the decision, the record does not warrant us in substituting our judgment of the evidence for that of the trial court, and we are led to the conclusion that the responsibility exercised by the other tribunal in determining the issue is not subject to revision.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

APPEAL AND ERROR—TERMINATION OF CONTROVERSY—MOOT CASE.

Where, in an action to enforce a provision in an employment contract requiring the employé to refrain from soliciting customers for a rival company within six months after termination of his employment, an appeal from a judgment dismissing the action was not taken until after the six months had expired, and no claim for damages was made, the appeal presented only a moot case, and should be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Suit by Munger's Laundry Company against N. A. Rankin. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

M. K. Young, for appellant. G. L. Whitman, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment dismissing an action.

Plaintiff sought in this action to enjoin defendant, who was a former employé, from soliciting work for a rival company within certain prescribed territory for a period of six months after the term of his employment with plaintiff, basing such right upon a written agreement of defendant by which, in consideration of $6, he agreed in his original contract of employment not to engage in such business of soliciting for a rival company within such territory for the time mentioned. The contract of employment between plaintiff and defendant was terminated on March 21, 1906, and the six months within which he had agreed not to engage in business within such territory expired September 21, 1906. The action was brought in June. The demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court, and the judgment appealed from entered July 20, 1906. The notice of appeal was given in December following.

It will be observed that at the date of the appeal, and at all times since September 21, 1906, defendant was at liberty to continue his work, even assuming the validity of the contract with plaintiff. No claim of damages was made, and the only question involved was the right to enjoin the defendant from his work between the date of employment and September 21st. The appeal before this court, therefore, seeks to determine an abstract question which does not arise upon any existing facts or rights, and is, in consequence, a moot case. Adams v. Union R. Co., 21 R. I. 134, 42 Atl. 515, 44 L. R. A. 273. Were the judgment erroneous, and by reason thereof subject to reversal, plaintiff does not now possess, and has not since September 21, 1906, possessed any rights under the allegations of his complaint entitling him to relief, and the determination of the question involved is of no material consequence to appellant.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed in conformity with the action of the Supreme Court in the case of Kinney v. Newlin et al. (L. A. No. 681) entered October 11, 1900 (no opinion filed), and in Foster v. Smith, 115 Cal. 611, 47 Pac. 591.

FISHER v. FRANK. (Civ. 453.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
July 1, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1908.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES—DRAFTS—ACCEPTANCE—EFFECT.

Where a draft required that, on the receipt of the F. Fisher prunes by the drawee, he pay to the order of K. $2,538.12 as payment in full for receipts 3 and 6, value received, acceptance of the draft by the drawee was an agreement by him to pay the amount stated therein on receipt of the Fisher prunes represented by the two receipts.

Findings of fact on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Where the trial court heard the evidence and passed on a motion for new trial, all presumptions will be indulged in favor of the correctness of the court's findings and conclusions.

4. BILLS AND NOTES—ACCEPTED DRAFT—ACTION—DEFENSES.

Where an accepted draft recited that, on the receipt of the F. Fisher prunes by the drawee, he was to pay to the order of K. $2,538.12, as payment in full for receipts 3 and 6, plaintiff was entitled to recover the balance due on the draft on proof that the prunes referred to in the receipts mentioned had been delivered; the disposition of the balance of Fisher's crop of prunes being immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Fiacro Fisher against George Frank. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from a refusal of a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Will M. Beggs, for appellant. W. C. Kennedy, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover upon a draft drawn in favor of W. C. Kennedy, accepted by defendant, and duly indorsed to plaintiff. The draft with its indorsements is as follows:

"San Jose, Cal. Sept. 16th, 1904.

"On receipt of the F. Fisher prunes by you pay to the order of W. C. Kennedy two thousand five hundred and thirty-eight and $\frac{12}{100}$ dollars as payment in full for receipts Nos. 3 and 6, value received, and charge the same to account of

H. C. Newby.

"To George Frank & Co., San Jose, Cal. No. 4.

"Accepted, George Frank & Co.

"Nov. 2d, 1904. Recd. $800.

"Jany. 19, '05. Recd. $300. Pay to Fiacro Fisher. W. C. Kennedy."

Judgment was prayed for the balance of $1,438.12 remaining due upon the draft after deducting the payments that had been made thereon. The case was tried before the court, and findings filed, upon which judgment was ordered entered in favor of plaintiff. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

It is claimed that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and, further, that the evidence does not support the finding of the court in regard to the delivery of the prunes, which finding is as follows: "That all the Fisher prunes referred to in said draft or contract, and mentioned in receipts 3 and 6 therein referred to, were in pursuance of agreement with H. C. Newby duly delivered to H. C. Newby at Coyote station, and were cured and dried by him, and were then by him duly shipped to and received by said George Frank; and that the whole of said prunes were so received by him on and before August 17, 1905." As each of the alleged errors goes to the sufficiency of the evidence, and involves the question as to the construction of the draft, we will discuss them together.

Plaintiff had sold the prunes represented by receipts Nos. 3 and 6 to H. C. Newby. Receipt No. 3 was to the effect that Newby had received from plaintiff 145,198 pounds of green prunes at the price of $23 per ton. Receipt No. 6 was to the effect that Newby had received 110,291 pounds of green prunes at $23 per ton. The amount due plaintiff for the prunes represented by both receipts was $2,938.12, but, as $400 had been paid to him before the bill of exchange was drawn or accepted, it was drawn for the balance of $2,538.12. The acceptance of the draft by defendant was in effect an agreement upon his part to pay the amount stated therein upon the receipt of the Fisher prunes represented by the two receipts. There is evidence to sustain the finding of the court that the prunes represented by the receipts were delivered to and received by defendant. It would serve no useful purpose to quote the evidence. Conceding that there was some conflict, we cannot disturb the finding upon this ground. The trial court heard the evidence, and passed upon the motion for a new trial. All presumptions are in favor of the correctness of its findings and conclusions.

It is urged by the appellant that the court failed to find upon the issue raised by appellant's answer, to the effect that the Fisher prunes—that is, the entire crop of the Fisher prunes—were not delivered to defendant. We are of opinion that the finding of the court in regard to the prunes represented by the draft, which referred to receipts 3 and 6, was all the finding that was necessary. If the prunes represented by said receipts were delivered—and there is evidence to show that they were, and the court found that they were—then, as before said, the defendant became responsible for the amount of the draft which he had accepted. It became immaterial as to any other portion of the crop of prunes raised by Fisher, and the findings covered the issues before the court.

We do not think there is any error in the respects claimed by appellant, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

In an action to establish plaintiff's right to use a pipe line extending across defendant's land for the purpose of carrying water, the complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner of a two-ninths interest in such pipe line, and the answer alleged that defendant was the absolute owner of that part of the pipe line. The findings stated that defendant had no right in the pipe line except to use it for carrying water to irrigate his own land. Held, that the facts found were not in issue; the material issue being as to defendant's ownership of the two-ninths interest which plaintiff claimed, not his ownership of the entire line.

COLLINS v. GRAY. (L. A. 2,024.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1908.)

1. PLEADING—ANSWER—ADMISSIONS.

A complaint alleged that plaintiff was the owner of a tract of land, together with 6.2 inches of water from the water system of a water company, which entitled him to use that quantity of water for irrigation under the rules of the company, that, by the customary method of distribution, the owner takes the water to which he is entitled at monthly intervals in his turn for a fixed period, and the customary run of water for plaintiff's premises was 40 inches for 4 days in each month. These allegations were admitted, except that defendant denied that the customary run of water for plaintiff was 40 inches for 4 days or any number of days in each month, but averred, on the contrary, that on May 29, 1898, it did not exceed 15 inches for 2 days each month, and each year had gradually increased. Held, that plaintiff's right to receive 40 inches for four days each month was admitted; defendant's denial extending only to beneficial interest in the land, plaintiff was in privity with him, and was entitled to take his title to the pipe line acquired by adverse use.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by A. P. Collins against C. R. Gray. From an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Order affirmed.

Chas. R. Gray, in pro. per. Purington & Adair, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. An appeal from the judgment was also taken, and the judgment was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal for the second district. Collins v. Gray, 3 Cal. App. 723, 86 Pac. 983. The object of the action was to establish the plaintiff's right to the use of a pipe line extending through the defendant's land for the purpose of carrying water therein to the land of the plaintiff. It is contended upon this appeal that certain of the findings are not supported by sufficient evidence.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff is the owner of a certain tract of land containing 30 acres, together with 6.2 inches of water, continuous flow, from the water system of the Riverside Highland Water Company, which entitles plaintiff to the use of that quantity of water for irrigating said land, in such manner, under such conditions, and at such times as should be fixed by the rules of the company and the custom of the water users under that system; that by the customary method of distribution the water to which land under the system is entitled is cumulated so that, instead of using the flow continuously, each owner takes the water to which he is entitled at regular monthly intervals in turn for a fixed period; that the customary run of water for the plaintiff's premises was 40 inches for 4 days in each month during the irrigating season, and that the premises had been irrigated in that manner from the said water system for the last 10 years or more. These allegations are all admitted by the pleadings, except that the defendant denies that the customary cumulated flow of water to plaintiff has been, or is, 40 inches of water for 4 days, or any other number of days, each month, and avers that, on the contrary, on May 29, 1898, and for some time prior thereto, the customary flow of water to plaintiff through said pipe line did not exceed 15 inches of water for 2 days each month during the irrigating season, and that each year since that date the flow to said premises through said pipe line has gradually increased. Under this state of the pleadings the fact of plaintiff's ownership of the right to receive 40 inches of water for 4 days each month during the irrigating season is admitted. The denial extends only to the fact that the plaintiff's land had not actually received that quantity of water or any quantity in excess of 15 inches during the time stated, from and after May 29, 1898, and some time prior thereto. It admits that for the last 10 years or more plaintiff has received some water through the pipe line, and that his land has been irrigated by that means.

The complaint further alleges that the plaintiff is the owner of an undivided two-ninths interest in the pipe line across the defendant's land, and that he and his grantors have used said pipe line openly, notoriously, peaceably, exclusively, and uninterruptedly under a claim of right and title thereto, and adversely to the defendant and the whole world, and with defendant's knowledge, for more than five years last past, for conveying water to plaintiff's land during each irrigating season for the time in each month that the water was, as before stated, apportioned to said land by the water company. These allegations are denied. The court in its findings states that the plaintiff was not the owner of an undivided two-ninths interest in the pipe line, but the findings also declare that he has a claim and interest in the pipe line for the purpose of conveying water thereto for irrigating said land, and that he and his predecessors in interest have used said pipe line openly, notoriously, peaceably, exclusively, and uninterruptedly, under a claim of right and title thereto, adversely to defendant and the whole world, and with defendant's knowledge and acquiescence, but without his consent or permission, for more than five years last past, for conveying water to plaintiff's land for such time each month as the water was apportioned thereto as stated in the complaint. It is claimed that this finding is not sustained by the evidence.

It is conceded that the evidence sufficiently shows that the plaintiff and his grantors had been using the pipe line to carry water to plaintiff's land for at least 10 years prior to the beginning of the action, and that this use had been adverse under such circumstances as to give plaintiff a prescriptive right to use the pipe for carrying some water to his land. The precise claim of defendant is that the evidence does not sustain the finding that his right extended to the carrying of 40 inches for 4 days each month, but would only support a finding of some smaller quantity. It appears from the testimony of Mr. Wheeler, plaintiff's grantor, that he had been using the pipe line to carry water to this land for irrigation, under claim of right, adversely to defendant, with his knowledge and against his will, from 1893 up to the time Wheeler sold the land to plaintiff a few days before the action was begun, a period of 10 years. As to the quantity of water, he said: "At the time I sold to Collins I had 62 shares of the capital stock of the Riverside Highland Water Company. I don't know how many inches of water that called for. That water has been used 10 years by me." The admissions in the pleadings, in connection with the testimony of the secretary of the company, show that 62 shares of stock entitled the holder to a continuous flow of 62/10 inches of water, that this water had been delivered in cumulated amounts for a fixed period each month and not in a continuous flow, and was equal to 186 inches for 1 day each month, or, by computation, 40.65 inches for 4 days each month. The testimony of Wheeler, therefore, appears to be that for 10 years next before the action was begun he had used that quantity of water on the land through the pipe in question. On his cross-examination it appeared that in 1893 the land did not need much water, that in 1894 he used more, and that at the time of the trial it needed more than it ever did. The evidence of the defendant tends to prove that Wheeler owned but 31 shares of the water stock prior to 1902, one year before the action was begun. From these facts he argues that prior to 1902 Wheeler could not have used more than the equivalent of 20 inches for 4 days, or 40 inches for 2 days, each month, and that the finding of an adverse use of the pipe for more than 5 years to carry 40 inches 4 days a month is unsupported. The evidence may appear somewhat uncertain and ambiguous on this precise point. But it appears that the pipe was of ample size to carry all the water required by those using it. It does not seem to have been a matter of any importance to defendant to see whether the plaintiff, while he was using it, carried 40 inches therein or less than that quantity. Upon the trial the attention of the court and of the witnesses was not specifically called to the question of the exact quantity of water carried in the pipe line by Wheeler during the period of adverse use. It is the province of the trial court to determine the meaning and effect of uncertain and ambiguous evidence, and to reconcile apparent contradictions and inconsistencies, if reasonably possible. Under the circumstances we think the evidence sufficiently supports the finding in question.

The findings state that the defendant had no property or right in the pipe except to use it for carrying water to irrigate his own land during the period for which he was entitled to receive the water. It is claimed that this finding is unsupported by the evidence. No issue of this character was tendered by the complaint. The answer alleged that defendant was the absolute owner of the part of the pipe line extending through his own land. The material issue was not with regard to his ownership or the entire interest in the pipe line, but with regard to his ownership of the two-ninths interest therein which plaintiff claimed. As to this the court made a definite and precise finding. The additional finding that the defendant had no interest in the part of the line not claimed by the plaintiff was wholly immaterial, and, even if erroneous, it could not constitute error prejudicial to the defendant. Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 163; Dougherty v. Coffin, 63 Cal. 456, 10 Pac. 672; Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 375, 39 Pac. 797. The finding as to his lack of interest was not carried into the judgment, and, being immaterial to the issues, it would not be binding upon the defendant in any subsequent action. Fulton v. Hanlow, 20 Cal. 483; Lillis v. Emigrant D. Co., 95 Cal. 559, 30 Pac. 1108; Mitchell v. Insley, 33 Kan. 657, 7 Pac. 201; Auld v. Smith, 23 Kan. 69; House v. Lockwood, 137 N. Y. 268, 33 N. E. 595; 23 Cyc. 1309; 1 Freeman on Judgments, § 271; 2 Black on Judgments, § 687.

The finding that the plaintiff has used the property adversely for five years, accompanied, as it is, with a finding of all the facts necessary to constitute a title by prescription, is a good finding of an interest in the pipe line to the extent of the adverse use, without the additional express finding of ownership. The findings are to be harmonized if possible, and, with that end in view, we think the statement therein that the plaintiff is not the owner of the pipe line is to be construed as a declaration that he had not received any legal title thereto by conveyance and that the finding as to the prescriptive right should be given full effect as a finding of title acquired in that manner.

It is further claimed that the plaintiff is not entitled to the benefit of the adverse use made by his predecessor, Wheeler. This claim is founded upon certain evidence showing that Wheeler, before this use began, had conveyed the premises to other persons in trust to secure a debt owing by him, and that this trust continued until the plaintiff, shortly before the suit was begun, purchased both Wheeler's interest and that of the trustees. There is no merit in this contention. It appears clearly that Wheeler, although he had conveyed the premises as security, still remained in full possession and use of the property without interference by the trustees, and that during all that time he owned the entire beneficial interest in the land. Under these circumstances his successor would be in privity with him, and would be entitled to take his title to the pipe line acquired by adverse use.

The order is affirmed.

SIXTH DIST. AGR. ASS'N v. WRIGHT et al. (L. A. 2,028.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 8, 1908.)

1. AGRICULTURE — AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS—ORGANIZATION—PROCEEDINGS—CONVEYANCES—MISNOMER.

Act April 15, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 62, c. 69), divided the state into agricultural districts, and authorized the formation therein of agricultural associations, such association to be known by the name of "_____ Agricultural Association." The property in controversy was conveyed to an association in the Sixth agricultural district, designated in the deed as "6th Dist. Agricultural Association." Thereafter, a question having arisen as to the legality of the formation of the association, it was reorganized under the name of "Agricultural District Number Six," and a new deed of the property was executed to "District Agricultural Association Number Six of California." Held, that the slight difference in the name given the association in the two proceedings was immaterial, as the words "Sixth District," to precede the words "Agricultural Association" would be supplied, under the statute and the misnomer of the grantee in the second deed was not fatal, as the misnomer of a corporation will not invalidate a conveyance to it, if it appears that it was the corporation intended.

2. STATES — STATE INSTITUTIONS — AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.

An agricultural association incorporated under Act April 15, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 62, c. 69), substantially re-enacted by St. 1891, p. 138, c. 126, dividing the state into agricultural districts, authorizing the organization in each district of such an association, its real estate to be used for the purpose of holding exhibitions of live stock, etc., with a view to the improvement of industries in the district, providing for a district board of agriculture appointed by the Governor, and declaring such association when formed to be a state institution, and that such board shall have exclusive control of the association in the name of the state, is a public agency of the state, charged with the performance of a part of the functions of the state government.

3. SAME — DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC PROPERTY — GIFT BY LEGISLATURE.

Act April 15, 1880 (St. 1880, p. 62, c. 69), divided the state into agricultural districts, and authorized the organization in each district of an agricultural association, its real estate to be used for the purpose of holding exhibitions of live stock, etc., provided for a district board of agriculture appointed by the Governor, and declared such associations, when formed, to be state institutions, and that such board should have exclusive control of the association in the name of the state, which was substantially re-enacted by St. 1891, p. 138, c. 126. Act Feb. 18, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 14, c. 8), added to the former act section 10½, providing that such associations which had theretofore issued alleged certificates of capital stock which had been accepted by the members in lieu of certificates of membership might elect to have a capital stock, and issue certificates of stock in the same manner as private corporations, and thereafter such association should be possessed of all rights and powers as if it had been originally created a corporation with a capital stock, including the right to control the property of the association, etc., but should not sell any portion of its real estate necessary for the permanent use of the association, and, where it accepts state aid, the funds shall be held under the control of the district board of agriculture. Const. art. 4, § 31, prohibits the Legislature from making any gift of public money or thing of value to any individual or corporation. Held, that the amendment of 1895 authorized the formation within the association, constituting a public corporation, of a private corporation, and transferred thereto without consideration the property of the agricultural association to be managed for its own use and benefit, with power to declare dividends from the profits, and was an attempted gift of public property, which was void.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — LIMITATION AS AGAINST STATE — AGRICULTURAL ASSOCIATIONS.

Property held in trust by a district agricultural association being property held by a state institution or public agency for a public use, the statute of limitations does not run against an action to recover such property and it is immaterial whether the record title to such property be held by the state at large, or by a county or other official body, if the property is set apart or reserved for public use.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by the Sixth District Agricultural Association against E. T. Wright and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Judgment modified, and affirmed as modified, and order affirmed.

J. S. Chapman, Ward Chapman, J. W. McKinley, H. W. O'Melveny and John D. Works, for appellants. Scarborough & Bowen and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying the defendants' motion for a new trial. The action was one by plaintiff, alleging itself to be an agricultural association under the laws of the state of California, providing for the formation of agricultural districts and for the organization of agricultural associations therein, and for the management and control of the same by the state, against E. T. Wright and others, who, it was alleged, for the purpose of converting the same to their own use, had taken possession of all plaintiff's land and other property, and retain and use the same for their own profit and gain, to compel the defendants to account for and pay over and deliver all said property, and for a decree adjudging the defendants to be without interest in any of said property. The defendants claimed that plaintiff never was an agricultural association or corporation organized under any law, has no legal capacity to sue or hold property, and never owned any of the property described in the complaint. They further claimed that what they style "District Agricultural Association No. 6" is a corporation duly organized under the laws of the state, that it owns the property in suit, and that the directors elected by the stockholders thereof are entitled to the possession, management, and control of such property; all of the defendants except defendant Lynch being so-called directors elected by such stockholders. The findings of the trial court were in accord with plaintiff's allegations, and judgment was in favor of plaintiff for the possession of the real property, and for $5,584 on account of moneys received by defendants as rents, issues, and profits of such real property found by the court to be in their possession at the time of judgment herein.

It is essential to an understanding of the questions involved that a statement of what we deem to be the material facts should be made. The real property in controversy, situated in Los Angeles county, was originally the property of the Southern District Agricultural Society, a private corporation, and was subject to a mortgage executed by it to one W. W. O'Melveny. This mortgage was foreclosed, the decree of foreclosure being entered November 12, 1879, and the property was sold under the decree to one Isaac N. Moore for $9,191.70, who received a sheriff's deed therefor on August 9, 1880. In the meantime, early in 1880, it had been attempted to form an agricultural association under the provisions of the act of April 15, 1880 (St. 1880 [Official Ed.] p. 621, c. 69; Bancroft Ed. p. 238), for Agricultural District No. 6, created by said act and comprising the counties of Los Angeles, San Diego, San Bernardino, Santa Barbara, Ventura, and Inyo, and in May, 1880, notice was given to the Governor of the state by one George Rice, purporting to act as "Sect.," "by order of the committee," that such association had been formed, and requesting the appointment by him of the members of the district board of agriculture for said district to manage and control said association. Such appointments were thereupon made by the Governor, and the appointees duly qualified and organized, and assumed control of the affairs of such purported association. Even since then directors of said district have been appointed by the Governor of the state as the time of the old directors expired or vacancies otherwise occurred, and the directors in office have at all times managed and controlled the affairs of the agricultural association thereof except in so far as is hereinafter stated. Except for the written notice aforesaid to the Governor, and what are styled "Articles of Association 6 District Agricultural Association" signed only by William Niles as chairman, and filed in the office of the Secretary of State on May 20, 1880, there was no record evidence of the formation of the association at this time, but there was parol evidence sufficient to sustain a conclusion that 50 or more persons representing a majority of the counties of the district had at a meeting held for that purpose ordered the formation of the association. In the same year there was subscribed some $13,000 by persons desirous of re-establishing an agricultural association and devoting the property of the old Southern District Agricultural Society to the purposes thereof. It does not appear to be controverted that by aid of the money thus subscribed, and by direction of the subscribers, the title to the property in controversy was conveyed in the year 1884 by said Isaac N. Moore to W. J. Broderick, William Ferguson, and E. L. Mayberry, in trust, to convey to the Sixth District Agricultural Association upon the following trusts: "That is to say, the said land shall be held in perpetuity as a place for holding agricultural exhibitions or fairs, and shall be managed and controlled by the said association for that purpose, and also for the purpose, so far as consistent therewith, of renting or otherwise managing the said property so as to raise a revenue for meeting the expenses of holding such exhibitions or fairs, and, especially, so far as consistent with the above purposes, for the purpose of holding exhibitions of horses, cattle, and other stock, and of the agricultural, horticultural, viticultural, mechanical, manufacturing and domestic products of Agricultural District Number Six, with a view to the improvement of all the industries in the same"—being the purposes for which associations existing under the act of April 15, 1880, are expressly declared by said act to hold real estate acquired by them. The deed to such trustees, Broderick et al., provided that the conveyance to said agricultural association should be made only if the same be found to be a legally constituted association, capable of taking and holding real estate upon such trusts, and if this were not found to be the case, or if it declined to take the property on said trusts, the land should be conveyed on the same trusts to a corporation or association to be formed for said agricultural district under the laws of this state for the same purposes. On May 7, 1885, the trustees executed such a conveyance to the "6th Dist. Agricultural Association." In the year 1888, some question having arisen as to the legality of the proceedings for the formation of such association, pursuant to a call of the directors of the district, then reduced by amendment to the statute to Los Angeles, San Bernardino, and Ventura counties, acting as directors of the association, a meeting was held on March 13th for the purpose of reorganizing and forming an agricultural association for the district under the act of April 15, 1880. The proceedings had were in entire compliance with the provision of said act. Articles of association were there signed by more than the requisite number of persons from the various counties included in the district. The only respect in which these articles appear erroneous is in the statement of the name of the association, which is declared to be "Agricultural District Number Six," the act of April 15, 1880, itself prescribing the name of all associations formed thereunder as "—— Agricultural Association." This organization having been perfected, on May 29, 1888, a new deed of the said property on the same trusts was executed by said Broderick et al., as trustees, to "District Agricultural Association Number Six of California," and on January 27, 1890, another deed of the same property on the same trusts was executed by the said trustees to "Agricultural District Number Six of the State of California"; it being recited in the first of these deeds that it was given to correct and to confirm the deed of May 7, 1885, to the Sixth District Agricultural Association, and in the second that it was given for the purpose of ratifying and confirming two prior deeds whereby said trustees "pretended to convey to said second parties" said premises. The record establishes beyond a shadow of a doubt that the sole object of all these proceedings was to perfect the organization of a then existing agricultural association for such district, and to perfect the title of such association to the real property in controversy. From the time of these proceedings until the year 1897, the property was managed and controlled by the directors of "Agricultural District Number Six," appointed by the Governor of the state, in accord with the provisions of the act of 1880, and a subsequent act to the same effect (St. 1891, p. 138, c. 126), which, although reducing District 6 so as to restrict it to Los Angeles county alone, continued in force agricultural districts theretofore established, and made them agricultural associations under said act.

By act approved February 18, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 14, c. 8), the Legislature added a new section, numbered 10½, to said act of 1891, providing substantially as follows: Every such association which has heretofore issued certificates alleged to be certificates of the capital stock of such association, which have been accepted by the members thereof in lieu of certificates of membership, may elect to have a capital stock and may issue certificates of stock therefor in the same manner as private corporations. To effect such change, a meeting of the holders of the alleged certificates might be called by certain notice, such holders of the same to have one vote for each share of stock appearing in their names on the books of the association. At such meeting, should the holders of a majority of the shares of such alleged capital stock vote in favor of having a capital stock, and fix the amount thereof and the number of shares into which it shall be divided, then such corporation shall issue certificates of capital stock to the holders of such alleged capital stock, in the same proportion as such alleged stock appears in the names of such holders, respectively, upon the books of such association. A copy of the proceedings must be filed with the Secretary of State and the clerk of the county where such association has its principal place of business. "Thereafter such association shall be possessed of all rights and powers, and shall be subject to all the obligations and restrictions, as if it had been originally created a corporation with a capital stock, including the right to elect a board of directors authorized to exercise such control of all the property of such association" as provided in the Civil Code relating to corporations, provided that the association shall have no authority to sell any portion of its real estate which may be necessary for the permanent use of such association for the purposes of the act, and provided that, where aid is accepted by the association by vote of its elected board of directors for the purpose of holding an annual district fair, such fair shall be held under the control and management of the district board of agriculture of such district; "but said district board of agriculture shall have no other authority, control, or management of or over the property of such association, and the authority which it may exercise over such property shall continue only during the time occupied in holding the said district fair, which time shall not extend over more than one week annually." A similar provision was incorporated in the general agricultural district act of March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 304, c. 224), which also continued in force agricultural associations theretofore established, and made them associations under said act. The agricultural association in District 6 was of the class described in this amendment. The evidence very clearly shows that, beginning with the year 1881, it issued alleged certificates of shares of stock to various persons who subscribed money for the purpose of re-establishing an agricultural association, in proportion to the amount subscribed, and kept a stock book showing the stock issued and transfers thereof from time to time. In January, 1897, acting under this amendment, the then holders of the shares of stock evidenced by the original certificates issued in 1881, held a meeting after due notice, and, in strict accord with the provisions thereof, determined that "District Agricultural Association No. Six" elected to have a capital stock, the amount thereof to be $12,600, divided into 126 shares of the par value of $100 each, and assigned the same to holders of the alleged capital stock, in the same proportion as such alleged stock appeared in the names of such stockholders on the books of the association. The proceedings were in full accord with the requirements of said amendment, and copies of the record thereof were filed in the offices of the Secretary of State and the county clerk of Los Angeles county. Thereupon the stockholders elected a board of directors, and, upon the theory that the amendment was valid, the directors of Agricultural District No. 6 appointed by the Governor, a majority of whom were also stockholders and elected directors of such association, delivered to the elected board of directors all the property of the association, including the land in controversy. The directors so elected, and their successors in office, also elected by the stockholders, have ever since had possession of such property, managing and controlling the same and all proceeds thereof for the benefit of the stockholders, except during the time of the annual fairs given with state aid, for which times the portion of the land used for fair purposes was leased to the district board of agriculture appointed by the Governor, the stockholders' board receiving as rental therefor, for the benefit of the stockholders, all receipts from gates and any and all privileges. In the latter part of 1903 and in the early part of 1904 there were on the board of directors of the agricultural district for the first time a majority who were not stockholders of said association, and on or about July 25, 1904, this board, acting for plaintiff, demanded of defendants the possession of all said property, and an accounting of the affairs thereof, which was refused. Thereupon this action was commenced.

Upon the foregoing facts, it appears to us that the important question in the case is as to the validity of the amendment of 1895, carried into the act of 1897, purporting to authorize the issuance of capital stock by such an association, and the control and management of the property thereof by the stockholders for their own benefit through their elected board of directors. The plaintiff is undoubtedly an agricultural association organized under the act of April 15, 1880, and is the owner of the real property in controversy for the purposes defined in said act and also in the conveyance thereof made to it. It is immaterial in this connection whether or not the proceedings had in the year 1880 were effectual to create an association under the act, or whether or not, if no such association was then legally formed, plaintiff was nevertheless a de facto association. Undoubtedly, if the proceedings then had were ineffectual for any purpose, the proceedings had in the year 1888 were effectual to create such an association under the act of April 15, 1880. In either case it acquired the property in controversy. If it existed prior to the proceedings or 1888, it took the title under the first deed made by the trustees, that of May 7, 1885. If it did not come into existence until the proceedings of 1888 were had, it took under the deeds made by said trustees in the years 1888 and 1890. The slight difference in the name given to the association in the two proceedings and the two sets of deeds is of no moment. The act of April 15, 1880, contemplated a single association for each agricultural district, which should be a public corporation or state agency to carry on one of the objects committed to the state government by the State Constitution. People, etc., v. San Joaquin, etc., Ass'n, 151 Cal. 797, 91 Pac. 740. It expressly declared that any association so formed should be known and designated by the name of "—— Agricultural Association," leaving a blank for the insertion of a number or name which should distinguish it from the associations of other districts, and the same is true of the subsequent acts on the same subject. Any association formed under that act necessarily assumed the name so far as it was then declared by the act, and those forming the association had no power to provide otherwise. In the absence of other special designation by those forming or composing the association to precede the words "Agricultural Association" to distinguish it from the associations of other agricultural districts, we have no doubt that the words "Sixth District" would be supplied by law by reason of the provisions of the act, and that by such name and style the said association existed, with power to sue and be sued and to purchase, hold, and lease real estate for the purposes defined in said act. Section 12 of said act. So far as the second set of deeds is concerned, the misnomer of the grantee was not fatal. The general rule is that misnomer of a corporation will not invalidate a grant or conveyance to or by it, if it appears from the instrument itself, or is shown by such evidence as is admissible upon the question, that it was the corporation intended. Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 52. There can be no doubt upon the record before us that these conveyances were to the agricultural association for this district, and that any and all proceedings subsequently had by or on behalf of the association styled "Agricultural District Number Six" or the members or so-called stockholders thereof were had by or on behalf of the same association.

It appears to necessarily follow that the right of defendants to hold and manage the property is dependent upon the validity of the amendment of 1895, before referred to. If such amendment is invalid, the management of the association is in the hands of the district board of agriculture, which, under the provisions of the act, has "the exclusive control and management of such institutions for and in the name of the state," and has "the possession and care of all the property of the association."

It is claimed that this amendment was in violation of several constitutional provisions. Learned counsel for defendants have not attempted to reply to the argument of plaintiff's counsel in this behalf, except in regard to the claim that the amendatory act is invalid for the reason that it is in violation of the constitutional provision that every act shall embrace but one subject which shall be expressed in its title. It is unnecessary to discuss this objection in view of our conclusion that the amendment is clearly unconstitutional for another reason.

There can be no question as to the status of any such association, and the character of the property held by it, at the time of the enactment of this amendment. This matter was exhaustively discussed and decided in a very recent case. People, etc., v. San Joaquin, etc., Ass'n, supra. It was, as expressly declared by the acts of both 1880 and 1891, a "state institution"—a public agency of the state, which was within the exclusive management and control of the state and charged with the performance of a part of the functions of state government—a public corporation formed for the government of a portion of the state in the matter of the improvement of the material industries therein. Its property was public property dedicated to the purposes of such public corporation, and accepted therefor by the state. There was nothing in the law relative to any such association which authorized it to have a capital stock or to issue certificates of stock, as is fully recognized in the amendment of 1895, or which contemplated a retention of any interest in or control of any portion of such property by the persons forming such association or dedicating money or other property to its purposes.

It is provided in section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution that the Legislature shall have no power "to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever," except as prescribed in section 22 of the same article, which section has no application here. It appears to us, in view of the facts already stated, that the amendment of 1895 is clearly in conflict with this provision. The plain practical effect thereof was to authorize the formation within the association constituting a public corporation by persons having no interest in the property of the association, of a private corporation, and the transfer, without consideration, of all the property of the association to this private corporation to be managed and disposed of by it for its own use and benefit, in the same manner that property of private corporations is ordinarily managed and disposed of, subject only to the limitation that it should have no authority to sell any portion of the real estate which may be necessary for the permanent use of the association for the purpose of the act, which we take to be the real property necessary for the purposes of holding annual exhibitions of horses, etc., and also subject to the limitation that, if it elect to receive aid from the state for any such annual exhibition, it must allow such exhibition to continue for not exceeding one week annually, to be held under the control and management of the state, through its district board of agriculture. If it elected not to receive such aid from the state, it was apparently given authority to exclude the state officers from all management and control even for the week of the annual fair, and to hold the same at all times for its own use and benefit. In the case at bar, it assumed the right, while accepting such state aid, to receive for its own benefit the profits of such annual fairs, and also the right to declare dividends for the benefit of its stockholders, and we are not warranted in holding that in either of these cases was it exceeding the powers attempted to be conferred by the amendment. Certainly the power to declare dividends from the surplus profits of the corporation was one of the powers so attempted to be conferred. To our minds the amendment is a clear case of an attempted gift of public property, and therefore void.

All of the defendants, except the defendant John C. Lynch, pleaded that the action was barred by certain sections of the Code of Civil Procedure. As we have seen, however, the property was held in trust by a state institution or public agency for a public use, which public use has not been discontinued or abandoned by any lawful act of public authority. As to such property, it is well settled that the statute of limitations has no application. As heretofore said: "It is immaterial where the title—that is, the record title—is held, whether by the state at large, or by a county, or by some municipal department or other official body. There can be no adverse holding of such land which will deprive the public of the right thereto, or give title to the adverse claimant, or create a title by virtue of the statute of limitations. The rule is universal in its application to all property set apart or reserved to the public use, and the public use for which it is appropriated is immaterial." See People, etc., v. Kerber (Cal.) 93 Pac. 878, and cases there cited.

The judgment against the defendants for the sum of $5,584 was based upon the finding that said defendants "had in their hands of the money received and collected by them as the rents, issues, and profits of said real property, over and above all expenditures made by them for the care and maintenance thereof, the sum of $5,584." This finding is, of course, a sufficient support for the judgment in regard thereto. It does not appear to be urged in the brief of learned counsel for defendants that this finding is not supported by the evidence, except in so far as defendant John C. Lynch is concerned. It did clearly appear that whatever amount was so on hand was in the hands and under the control of the so-called private directors elected by the stockholders. Lynch, while as a stockholder asserting the claims of the stockholders and the elected board of directors, denied in his answer that he was a director, and the evidence showed without conflict that, although Lynch was originally such a director, he had ceased to be such, and at the time this proceeding was instituted was only a holder of some of the stock which had been issued. The evidence, therefore, does not warrant this finding as to Lynch. It is admitted by the brief of defendants that the other defendants were directors elected by the stockholders, and as such were in possession of all property claimed by the so-called Agricultural District No. 6. Under the views we have declared, the material findings of the trial court are sustained by the evidence, except in so far as defendant Lynch is found to be in possession with his codefendants of the sum of $5,584 belonging to plaintiff.

In so far as the judgment is against defendant John C. Lynch for $5,584 or any part thereof, it is reversed, Lynch to recover such costs of appeal as he has personally incurred. In all other respects the judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

MANSFIELD v. DISTRICT AGR. ASS'N NO. 6 (FERGUSON, Intervener). (L. A. 2,051.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1908.)

1. TRUSTS—DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY—TRANSFER WITHOUT "SALE"—AUTHORITY—"DISPOSE OF."

Land was conveyed to a district agricultural association in trust as a place for holding agricultural exhibitions, a part thereof to be sold or disposed of to the best advantage for the purpose of improving the agricultural grounds and for meeting the expenses of the trust, including the expenses of litigation. The trustees of the association thereafter deeded part of the latter tract to B. in payment of legal services rendered the association and of services to be rendered in future. Held, that the power of disposition of the tract was not limited to a sale for cash, and even giving the word "sale" the definition of Civ. Code § 1721, as an exchange of property for a money consideration, the association was also authorized to "dispose" of the property which would empower it to transfer the property itself in payment of legal expenses.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2114-2118.]

2. SALES—NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

While the word "sale," in transactions relating to personal property, usually has reference to a money consideration, yet it will be given a broader significance when the meaning of the law or of a private contract demands it, and the much more generally accepted definition of a sale is an exchange of an interest in real or personal property for money or its equivalent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 1.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 6291-6306; vol. 8, p. 7793.]

3. TRUSTS—DISPOSAL OF TRUST PROPERTY—SALE—DISCRETION OF TRUSTEE.

Where the board of an agricultural association was authorized to dispose of land held in trust by it to meet expenses of litigation, in the absence of fraud or gross abuse of discretion, the board is the exclusive judge of the necessity for such disposal, and its discretion will not be controlled.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR — PRESENTATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW—FINDING OF TRIAL COURT.

A finding of the trial court that the title of a grantee was derived from a deed of trust, and not from a decree of court, which is not assailed either by appellant or respondent, is final on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3955-3969.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by J. M. Mansfield against the District Agricultural Association No. 6, in which William Ferguson intervened. From a judgment for one of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Judgment directed for plaintiff.

Hunsaker & Britt and Scarborough & Bowen, for appellant. J. W. McKinley and H. W. O'Melveny, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This was an action brought to quiet title to three one-acre lots, designated "T," "U," and "V," of the agricultural park tract in the county of Los Angeles. William Ferguson intervened, but the findings and judgment of the court were against the intervener, and he has not appealed.

The court found that defendant District Agricultural Association No. 6 had no title to the land in controversy; that title was in the Sixth District Agricultural Association; that the Sixth District Agricultural Association had conveyed the land in controversy to plaintiff's grantor, W. M. Bowen, but that its deeds were void because made in violation of the terms of the trust under which the Sixth District Agricultural Association took and held title to the land. Whether or not the deeds of the Sixth District Agricultural Association to W. M. Bowen were void is the sole question presented for consideration upon this appeal.

The history of District Agricultural Association No. 6 and of the Sixth District Agricultural Association has recently been discussed by this court in Sixth District Agricultural Association v. E. T. Wright et al., 97 Pac. 144, filed August 8, 1908. With this reference to that case there is need here to say no more than that the Sixth District Agricultural Association took certain lands under a deed of trust. The lands were, first, a described tract, designed to be used for "holding agricultural exhibitions or fairs"; and, second, certain one-acre lots designated under the letters of the alphabet from A to Y, inclusive. The deed of trust declared that these lands were conveyed to the Sixth District Agricultural Association, "to have and to hold all and singular the premises and appurtenances unto the party of the second part, and its successors forever; in trust, nevertheless, for the following uses and purposes, to wit: that is to say: that the said land first hereinbefore described shall be held in perpetuity as a place for holding agricultural exhibitions or fairs, and shall be managed and controlled by the party of the second part for that purpose; * * * and that the lands secondly hereinbefore described, to wit: the 1-acre lots, shall be sold or disposed of by the party of the 2d part to the best advantage for the purpose of beautifying and improving the said Agricultural Park grounds, and for the purpose of meeting the expenses of this trust, including the expenses of litigation." The court finds that the ownership of all the real property in the foregoing deed described became vested in the Sixth District Agricultural Association "for the purposes, subject to the uses and upon the trusts in said deed set forth." The deed of the Sixth District Agricultural Association to Bowen was executed in pursuance of a resolution of the board of directors of the association, which resolution recited that W. M. Bowen, as attorney for the board, had rendered valuable services during the last two years in protecting the rights of the board, had advised the board upon many important legal matters; that he had received no compensation for his services, and that the board had no ready money with which to compensate him; that the board had contemplated the selling of certain of its one-acre lots, and it directed conveyance to the said Bowen of lots T, U, and V on account of the services performed and to be performed in the future in looking after the suits now pending and all other suits that the board may direct and deem advisable to bring in the future, and any and all other legal matters that may arise from time to time in connection with its property.

It may not be disputed, and indeed is not disputed, that the estate which the Sixth District Agricultural Association took under the deed of trust was limited by the terms of the grant, as the court found. Not that only, but the trust itself was one which the Sixth District Agricultural Association, as a municipal or quasi-municipal corporation, had the power to accept and execute. But was the court correct in holding that the power of disposition of the one-acre lots was limited to a "sale for cash"? Clearly not. By the very terms of the trust, these lots were to be sold or disposed of by the association to the best advantage, for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the trust, including the expenses of litigation. By this language, giving to the word "sale" its narrowest application, that of an exchange of property for a money consideration (Civ. Code § 1721), still the association was not restricted in its disposition of the property to sales alone; for it was equally empowered to "dispose" of the property to its best advantage. It may not be said under the rule of noscitur a sociis that to "dispose of" the property in this connection means to sell it, for this renders the phrase superfluous and meaningless. The grantors clearly intended to confer upon the association the power to sell or otherwise to dispose of the property. Though the word "sell" itself in transactions touching personal property usually has reference to a pecuniary or money consideration, yet courts have never hesitated to give the word a broader significance, when the meaning of the law or of a private contract seemed to call for it, and the much more generally accepted definition of a sale is the exchange of an interest in real or personal property for money or its equivalent. Webster's Unabridged Dictionary and Standard Dictionary; Borland v. Nevada Bank, 99 Cal. 89, 33 Pac. 737, 37 Am. St. Rep. 32; Howard v. Harris, 8 Allen (Mass.) 297; Western Massachusetts Insurance Co. v. Riker, 10 Mich. 279; Spiegle v. Meredith, 4 Biss. 120, Fed. Cas. No. 13,227; Stokes v. Stokes, 66 Miss. 456, 6 South. 155; Thurmond v. Faith, 69 Ga. 833; Hughes v. Washington, 72 Ill. 84; Davis v. Middleton, 14 Cal. 540. In Stokes v. Stokes, supra, the executor took a devise in trust, with power to sell any of the lands when advisable for support of the testatrix's children. The executor made a deed to one Stokes of the land in controversy, reciting as a consideration the discharge of a debt due Stokes for money loaned by him to the testatrix and used by her for the support of herself and family. The children sought to have that conveyance set aside. Their bill was dismissed; it being held the discharge of this debt by deed came within the power of sale conferred. In Hughes v. Washington, supra, the will conferred power upon the executor "to sell any property * * * in such manner, and on such terms as may seem best for the interest of my children." The executor here conveyed a part of the land to an attorney for services rendered on behalf of the estate, and the court said, upholding the transfer: "If the executor had sold a definite piece of the Cook county lands, and obtained money, and used it in the defense of the suit, appellees would not have complained. In lieu of this the executor contracted to give Hughes one-third of the lands for the services. Practically it could make no difference whether the executor sold a portion of the lands to a stranger, and used the money to defend against the suit, or gave directly a part to the one employed to defend." In Thurmond v. Faith, supra, the language of the trust was precisely that here employed. It was made lawful for the legal guardian of the parties "to sell and dispose of said lots or parcels of land" whenever in the discretion of such guardian the same shall be necessary for the support, maintenance, and education of the parties of the second part. The guardian exchanged the lands of the minors for other lands. The court said, in answering the objection that this exchange was not a sale: "Had the power of the guardian been limited to the sale of the land only, there might have been some force in the point; but it must be noted that the guardian is clothed with the power to sell and dispose of, which, as therein, included not only the power to sell, but the power of disposition, such as was made by the guardian. Indeed, the transaction was simply a sale with payment in land instead of money." Under an act empowering them to sell at public sale, or to lease the property which was conveyed to them, and "apply the proceeds of such sale or lease to the liquidation of the floating debt of said city," the commissioners of the funded debt of San Francisco sold a piece of land and took in payment therefor 3 per cent. scrip, which was a part of the floating debt. It was there argued that they could sell only for money, but it was held that the sale as indicated was within their power. Davis v. Middleton, 14 Cal. 540. In Roberts v. Northern Pacific Railroad Company, 158 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 756, 39 L. Ed. 873, the Supreme Court of the United States say: "It is indeed urged that the country authorities could only sell its land for money. We do not accede to this proposition. If they possess the power to sell for money, we are pointed to no express provision of law that restricts them from selling for money's worth. * * * The amount, as well as the nature of the consideration received by the county in exchange for its lands, if it had the power to sell them, was a matter that concerned the county only." As the association in this case was not even restricted to selling, but could otherwise dispose of the lands for its best interests, and as one of the very designated purposes for which such disposition could be made was to meet "expenses of litigation," clearly the Sixth District Agricultural Association, as owner of the lots in question, was acting not in violation of, but within the express terms, of its power and trust in conveying the land as it did. No question of fraud is here presented, nor even that of a gross abuse of discretion, and, in the absence of such a showing, as was said by this court in Ellis v. Commissioners of Funded Debt, 38 Cal. 629: "The commissioners are the exclusive judges of the necessity for such sale or lease until the trust is finally closed, and their action in this respect cannot be impugned nor their discretion controlled by the city or its grantee, except on the ground of fraud or a gross abuse of discretion by the trustees."

The argument of respondent that the title of the Sixth District Agricultural Association is derived from the decree of the court, rather than from the deed of trust, and that the deed to Bowen does violence to that decree, may not here be considered. The finding of the court is that the title and the powers of the association are derived from the deed of trust, and, neither appellant nor respondent assailing this finding, it is a finality so far as this appeal is concerned.

It follows herefrom that a new trial is not necessary, but that upon the findings made by the trial court judgment should have been given for plaintiff. It is ordered accordingly.

HOFFMAN-MARKS CO. v. SPIRES et al.
(L. A. 1,990.)

1. MECHANIC'S LIENS — RIGHT TO LIEN — ABANDONMENT BY CONTRACTOR.

Under a building contract the price was to be paid in six payments, the first five to be made at certain stages of the work, and the last payment 35 days after acceptance. The contractors received the first three payments, when they abandoned the contract, and the owner completed the building, as he was authorized to do by the contract. The owner paid a sum in completing the work, together with the payments made, greater than the contract price. Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, provides that, if the contractor abandons the work before completion, the portion of the price applicable to liens shall be fixed by deducting from the value of the work and materials already done and furnished the payments then due and paid under the contract, and the remainder shall be applicable to such liens. Section 1184 requires at least 25 per cent. of the whole contract price to be paid at least 35 days after completion of the contract. Held, that the payments made at the time the contract was abandoned having exceeded the value of the work and materials then done and furnished, the claimants were not entitled to a lien under section 1200.

2. SAME.

The liability of an owner who has complied with the terms of the contract is limited to the price he agreed to pay therefor, and, where the contractor abandons the undertaking, the owner is liable only for such proportion of the contract price as represents the work already done; and, where he is compelled to himself complete the building, he need not pay to the original contractor or those claiming under him that part of the contract price represented by the work left undone.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS OF TRIAL COURT—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where there was evidence that specifications were attached to a building contract at the time of filing and were filed with it, the Supreme Court is bound by the trial court's finding that such was the fact.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3979-3982.]

4. MECHANICS' LIENS—RIGHT TO LIEN.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, providing that, where a contractor abandons the contract before completion, the portion of the contract price applicable to liens shall be fixed by deducting from the value of the work and materials then done and furnished the payments then due and actually paid under the contract, etc., and the remainder shall be applicable to such liens, where a building contract was abandoned and the work completed by the owner, the value of the completed building in determining the proportion of the contract price applicable to liens was properly arrived at by adding to the actual value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of abandonment the reasonable cost of completing the building.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Actions by the Hoffman-Marks Company, a corporation, and by F. O. Wyman and others, and by the Inman-Poulsen Lumber Company, a corporation, against Mary H. Spires and others to establish a mechanic's lien, and by Mary H. Spires against L. McKown and others, all of the actions being consolidated and tried together. From a judgment for defendants in the first three actions and for plaintiffs in the last action, denying the right of the claimants to liens, they appeal. Affirmed.

Borden & Carhart, Edward F. Wehrle, Percy B. Lloyd, and Percy R. Wilson, for appellants. John D. Pope, Charles Wellborn, W. D. McConnell, McNutt & Hannon, and Trustin P. Dyer, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Three of the four actions involved in these appeals were commenced to foreclose mechanics' liens upon a lot and building in the city of Los Angeles. Mary H. Spires, the owner of the property, answered the complaints in said actions, and commenced, as plaintiff, a separate action against all of the lien claimants and the original contractors. In this action she prayed for a decree adjudging that none of the claimants was entitled to any lien against her property, and that there was no fund in her hands for the payment of the laborers or materialmen. The four actions were consolidated and tried together.

The findings, so far as it is necessary to state them, were as follows: On September 6, 1904, L. McKown, H. M. Baird, H. Stone, and H. J. Hoover, copartners under the firm name of L. McKown & Co., entered into a contract with Mary H. Spires to build for her a house on the lot in question for the sum of $8,183. The contract was in writing, and was before the work was commenced thereunder filed in the office of the county recorder. With said contract, and as part thereof, there were filed plans and specifications referred to in the contract and signed by the parties. The contract price was, by the terms of the contract, made payable as follows: First payment, the sum of $1,227.45, when the second floor joists are in place. Second payment, the sum of $1,227.45, when the roof is ready for metal covering and chimney built. Third payment, the sum of $1,227.45, when the building is inclosed, brown coated and rough plumbed. Fourth payment, the sum of $1,227.45, when the last coat of mortar is on, and sash and glass and cement steps are in place. Fifth payment, the sum of $1,227.45, when building is accepted by architect and owner. Sixth payment, the sum of $2,045.75, when 35 days have expired after acceptance by architect and owner, etc. McKown & Co. commenced to build said house and progressed to the point when said building was inclosed, brown coated, and rough plumbed. The first, second, and third payments provided for in the contract, amounting in all to $3,632.35, were made by Mrs. Spires to McKown & Co. Thereafter McKown & Co., having failed to proceed under their contract with proper dispatch, received from Mrs. Spires on December 21, 1904, notice that unless they so proceeded she would within three days proceed to complete the work, as she was by the contract authorized to do. They (McKown & Co.) failed to proceed, and abandoned the contract, whereupon Mrs. Spires proceeded with the work and completed the building according to the provisions of the contract. At the time of the abandonment by McKown & Co. the value of the work and materials already done and furnished, including materials then actually delivered on the ground, estimated by the standard of the whole contract price, was $3,105. The fair and reasonable expense and cost of completion of the house was $7,581.79, and Mary H. Spires paid that sum in completing the work. It was also found that certain sums, which it is not necessary to specify, were due to respective lien claimants (appellants here) by McKown & Co. for materials and labor furnished to be used and used in said building. From these facts the court drew the conclusions of law that the lien claimants were not entitled to liens upon the premises nor to any judgments against Mary H. Spires, but that they were entitled to judgments against the copartners constituting the firm of L. McKown & Co. for the sums found to be due to them, respectively. Mary H. Spires was declared to be entitled to a judgment that the various claimants be decreed to have no lien or liens against her premises. A judgment followed in accordance with these conclusions.

Some of the lien claimants moved for a new trial, and, their motion having been denied, they now appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial. On the facts as declared in the findings, the court properly concluded that the claimants were not entitled to liens or to judgments against Mary H. Spires. It is found that a valid contract in writing had been executed and filed; that work under this contract had been abandoned by the contractor before completion; and that the payments made by the owner pursuant to the contract amounted, at the time of the abandonment, to more than the value of the work and materials then done and furnished, estimated by the standard of the whole contract price. Under the rule declared in section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there was therefore no part of the contract price applicable to the payments of liens. That section reads as follows: "In case the contractor shall fail to perform his contract in full, or shall abandon the same before completion, the portion of the contract price applicable to the liens of other persons than the contractor, shall be fixed as follows: From the value of the work and materials already done and furnished at the time of such failure or abandonment, including materials then actually delivered or on the ground, which shall thereupon belong to the owner, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price, shall be deducted the payments then due and actually paid, according to the terms of the contract and the provisions of sections 1183 and 1184, and the remainder shall be deemed the portion of the contract price applicable to such liens." In McDonald v. Hayes, 132 Cal. 490, 495, 64 Pac. 850, this court said: "Where there is a valid contract between the owner and contractor, it is the measure of the owner's liability. Greig v. Riordan, 99 Cal. 319, 33 Pac. 913; Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 175, 177, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588; Walsh v. McMenomy, 74 Cal. 359, 16 Pac. 17, and cases cited. But in cases where, as here, the contractor fails to perform his contract, section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides the mode of determining the owner's liability. * * *

If, upon making the computation directed by section 1200, no balance remains, there is nothing available for lien claimants, and they must look to their personal claim against the contractor.

It is argued by appellants that the final payment of at least 25 per cent. which, under the Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, must be made payable not less than 35 days after the final completion of the contract, constitutes in all cases a fund specially set apart for the satisfaction of liens, and that this fund cannot be impaired in any way. Accordingly it is contended that the amount of $2,045.75, the sixth and last payment provided for in the contract here involved, must be applied to the satisfaction of appellants' liens, notwithstanding the fact that the contractor abandoned his contract, and the owner in completing it was compelled to expend a sum which, added to the payments already made, exceeded the whole contract price. We think the statute affords no foundation for this contention. It may, no doubt, be said in general terms that the mechanics' lien law has set apart the 35-day payment as a fund for lien claimants, and that this fund must remain intact for them, unaffected by any offsets or claims on the part of the owner. Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 729, 84 Pac. 200. This rule has reference to cases where the contractor has substantially performed his contract, and has earned the contract price. But for the specific case of a failure by the contractor to fulfill his contract the Legislature has in section 1200 provided a different method of determining the amount payable by the owner. In every such instance the method so provided must prevail; and the section setting apart the 35-day payment as a fund for lien claimants has no application. Any other conclusion would result in imposing upon the owner the burden of paying much more than the contract price, although he had performed every stipulation of his contract.

The general constitutional principle underlying the mechanics' lien law is that the liability of an owner, who has on his part complied with all the terms of a valid contract, is limited to the price which by his contract he has agreed to pay. Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 179, 22 Pac. 509, 6 L. R. A. 588; Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 122, 68 Pac. 481, 57 L. R. A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116; Latson v. Nelson (Cal.) 11 P. C. L. J. 589. Where the contractor fails to perform his undertaking, the owner is made liable for such proportion of the contract price as represents the value of the work already done. When he is, without any default on his part, burdened with the cost of completing the building, it is but fair and just that he should be relieved of the obligation of paying to the original contractor, or those claiming under him, so much of the contract price as corresponds to the portion of the work left undone. In no other way can he be protected in his constitutional right to have his liability limited to the amount which, by a valid contract, he has agreed to pay.

It is true that in the opinion in Hampton

v. Christensen, supra, there is some general language to the effect that the final payment cannot lawfully be depleted to the injury of the lien claimant, and in the course of the discussion the expense of completion in case of abandonment is not distinguished from other claims of the owner against the contractor which, as is held, cannot be charged against the 35-day payment. But Hampton v. Christensen was not a case of abandonment. The court made no reference to section 1200, and had no occasion to consider its effect. The decision is not to be understood as holding that section 1200 does not furnish ample and complete provision for cases falling within its terms. In such cases, as we have said, the balance, computed according to the method prescribed by the section, is all that the owner is required to devote to the discharge of lien claims. Stimson Mill Co. v. Nolan, 5 Cal. App. 754, 91 Pac. 262, is cited by appellants, but is not in point, since in that case there was no valid contract, and therefore the claimants were, by the provision of section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled to liens for the value of the labor done and materials furnished.

Several of the findings are attacked upon the ground that they find no sufficient support in the evidence. It is contended that the evidence shows that the specifications referred to in the contract and made a part thereof were not filed with the contract, and that the contract was therefore void. Pierce v. Birkholm, 115 Cal. 657, 47 Pac. 681. But there was direct testimony to the effect that the specifications were attached to the contract at the time of filing, and were filed with it. Whether this testimony was true was a question for the trial court, and this court is bound by the finding that it was true.

The appellants also assail the finding that the value of the work done and materials furnished up to the time of the abandonment, estimated according to the rule laid down in Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, was $3,105. Their contention is that the value of such work and materials was a much greater sum, and that it exceeded the amount of the payments made by the owner to McKown & Co. In their brief they quote the opinion of the judge of the trial court, showing that he reached the figure of $3,105 by taking such proportion of the actual value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of the abandonment as the total contract price bore to the value of the building as completed. The value of the completed building was arrived at by adding to the actual value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of the abandonment the reasonable cost of completing the building. This method, assuming the items used in the computation to have been correct, was a compliance with the provision of section 1200, requiring the value of the work done and materials furnished to be "estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price." Dunlop v. Kennedy, 102 Cal. 443, 444, 36 Pac. 765. To estimate such value, it is proper to consider not only the value of the work done at the time of abandonment, but also of that left undone, so that the whole may be compared with the contract price. The actual value of the work done at the time of abandonment, without reference to the contract, is not found by the court, but is stated in the opinion above referred to to have been $4,500. The cost of completion (which is found to have been the fair and reasonable expense) is declared by the findings to have been $7,580.79. It is urged by appellants that the first of these figures is smaller and the second larger than is justified by the evidence. The record is not so complete or clear on these points as might be desired, but, after a careful examination, we are satisfied that the amounts cannot be said to be so far wrong as to materially alter the situation so far as the lien claimants are concerned. That is to say, if we increase the actual value of the work done at the time of abandonment to $5,000 (the utmost that can be contended for) and deduct from $7,581.79, found to be the reasonable cost of completion, all items clearly appearing to have been improperly included, the value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of abandonment, measured by the standard of the whole contract price, would still be less than the payments already made to the contractors, and there would still be no balance applicable to the payment of lien claimants. With regard to the value or cost of work done by the contractors before, or by the owner after, abandonment, the only material part of the finding is that the value of the work at the time of abandonment, measured by the rule declared in section 1200, was less than the payments made, and to this extent at least the findings are sustained by the evidence.

There is no force in the attack made upon the finding that McKown & Co. abandoned the contract. The written agreement of December 29, 1904, relied on by appellants, is not inconsistent with an abandonment. On the contrary, it is in effect a concession by the contractors that such abandonment had taken place.

The witness Baird, called by appellants, was asked to explain an item in a supplemental sheet attached to the contract. An objection to the question was sustained, and appellants excepted. The contract itself is not incorporated in the statement on motion for new trial, and without it we cannot say that the supplemental writing described in the record as a portion of the contract presented such ambiguity as to authorize the admission of oral testimony to explain the terms of the writing.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(L. A. 2,109.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1908.)

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by the H. Raphael Company, a corporation, and others, against Peter Grote and others, to establish a mechanic's lien. From a judgment for plaintiffs, a part of defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded.

John W. Kemp and Kemp & Collier, for appellants. Chas. L. Batcheller, El. E. Mellette, O. P. Widaman, A. L. & J. E. Stephen, Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, G. C. De Garmo, and N. S. G. McCartney, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll alone from a decree foreclosing certain mechanics' liens. The contract between the owner and the contractor was admittedly valid. One-half of the contract price had been paid by the owner, when, upon the contractor's failure to proceed further with the work, the owner, under a clause in the contract reserving him the right so to do, entered and supplied the necessary material and labor to finish the building. The lien claimants are those who furnished labor and material to the contractor before abandonment. They contend, and the court found with their contention, that the final payment of 25 per cent. under the terms of the contract was available and applicable to the payment of their liens. This was error. The question has recently been considered at length by this court in bank, and it is unnecessary here to repeat the reasoning. Hoffman-Marks Co. et al. v. Mary H. Spires et al. (L. A. No. 1,990, filed August 8, 1908) 97 Pac. 152. Section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure furnishes the rule in cases such as this.

A reversal thus becoming necessary, it is proper to add that upon a retrial the court should find upon the issue tendered as to the priority of the lien of the Bankers' Savings Union. The allowance of attorney's fees was also improper. Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193.

The judgment is therefore reversed and the cause remanded.

C. SCHEERER & CO., Inc., et al. v. DEMING
et al. (L. A. 1,938.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 10, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — RIGHT TO LIEN — ABANDONMENT BY CONTRACTOR—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE.

Construing Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, to limit the right to mechanics' liens, against the owner of a building, of persons who have furnished labor and material to the contractor, where the contractor abandons work under a valid contract, to the value of the work done and materials furnished at the time of the abandonment, in excess of what had then been paid to the contractor pursuant to the terms of the contract, does not violate the provision of the Constitution recognizing the right to mechanics' liens.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

A statute will not be held to invade the constitutional rights of the owner of property, where the only owner of property in the case claims under the statute, and insists on its validity, and the claim of invalidity is made by strangers, filing a brief as "friends of the court."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 39.]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

Any error in excluding a question as calling for a conclusion is harmless, where the subject of the excluded question was fully covered by answers of the witness to other questions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4194-4199.]

4. SAME—BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR.

One complaining of exclusion of evidence of a custom to do work in a certain way must show that the contract for doing the work in question did not provide for its being done in another way; so that, the record not showing the contract, the exclusion cannot be held error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3670, 3671.]

5. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

Refusal to permit a witness to give his estimate of the reasonable cost of completing a building according to plans is harmless; his answer being deducible by simple arithmetical computation from elements already testified to by him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4194-4199.]

6. EVIDENCE—OPINIONS.

Allowing a witness to testify that in his opinion one-fourth of the work on a building had been done when work was abandoned is not error, he having qualified as an expert, and stated that he was familiar with the building, as well as the plans and specifications, though he based his estimate, at least in part, on his view that, "when the brick wall is done and the roof on, we consider it is about one-quarter done"; as, while this might affect the value of his opinion, it could not render it incompetent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2376.]

7. SAME—LAYING FOUNDATION.

Foundation is laid for the opinion of a witness as to the proportion of the work done on a building at the time of abandonment; his qualifications as an expert being admitted, by his testimony that he had examined the building a few days after the abandonment, and had examined the plans and specifications.

8. TRIAL—INTRODUCTION OF EVIDENCE—REBUTTAL.

In an action for a mechanic's lien by persons who had done work and furnished materials to the contractor, who had abandoned the work, plaintiffs, having properly introduced, as part of their case in chief, under the pleadings evidence regarding the amount and value of the work done up to the time of abandonment, were not entitled, after defendant had closed his case, to introduce further testimony on the same line in rebuttal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 151, 152.]

9. MECHANICS' LIENS—RIGHT OF MATERIALMEN—ABANDONMENT BY CONTRACTOR—COST OF COMPLETION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1200, the rights of the parties, in an action for a mechanic's lien by persons who had furnished labor and material to the contractor, who had abandoned the work, being fixed by the value of the work done at the time of the abandonment, the issue of the reasonable cost of completing the building is immaterial, so that failure to find thereon is not error, though evidence of such cost is properly considered in determining the value of work done by the contractor, measured by the rule of such section.

In Bank. Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Six actions by C. Scheerer & Co., Inc., W. D. Newell, Hoffman-Marks Company, Nofziger Brothers' Lumber Company, Union Lime Company, and I. H. Hill, respectively, against Henry C. Deming and Allen D. Butt, consolidated by order of court. From a judgment for defendant Butt, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. L. Batcheller, Jones & Weller, W. D. McConnell, Scarborough & Bowen, E. E. Mellette, P. B. Lloyd, and Henry C. Deming, for appellants. D. L. Horton, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Appeals by plaintiffs in six actions to foreclose mechanics' liens. The actions were consolidated by order of the court, and judgment went in favor of the defendant Allen D. Butt, the owner of the property involved. The lien claimants appeal from the judgment, and from an order denying a new trial.

On April 14, 1904, the defendant Henry C. Deming as contractor, entered into a written contract with the defendant Butt, as owner, for the construction of a three-story and basement brick building, in accordance with certain plans and specifications. The contract price was $24,000, payable as follows: $2,000 when the foundation and basement walls should be up and the first-floor joists laid; $2,900 when the first-story walls should be up, the iron work up, and the second-floor joists laid; $2,900 when the second-story walls should be up and the third-floor joists laid; $2,900 when the third-story walls should be up and the roof on; $2,900 when the plastering was completed; $2,900 when said building was completed, and $7,500 36 days after the notice of completion should be filed. The contract was duly filed in the office of the county recorder before any work, labor, or materials were done or furnished upon said building. Deming commenced work under the contract, and continued in the construction of the building up to the 23d day of September, 1904, when he abandoned the contract, and ceased work thereunder. At that time there had been paid to him the sum of $10,700, the first four payments mentioned in the contract. The owner took possession of the building upon its abandonment by the contractor, and completed it according to the plans and specifications, at a cost greater than the balance in his hands under the contract. The plaintiffs had respectively furnished to Deming labor and materials to be used, and which were used, in the building, to the amounts claimed in their complaints, and there remained due to them sums aggregating between $5,000 and $6,000. They had duly filed their claims of lien. The foregoing facts were found by the court on the stipulation of the parties or on uncontradicted testimony. The only material issues concerning which there was any dispute at the trial were those relating to the value of the work done by the contractor up to the time of abandonment. In this regard the court found "that the value of the work and materials already done and furnished by the said Henry C. Deming under said contract, at the time of said abandonment, including the materials then actually delivered or on the ground, estimated as near as may be by the standard of the whole contract price, was and is, the said sum of $10,700.00." Since this sum did not exceed the amount which had been paid to the contractor, pursuant to the terms of the contract, before the abandonment of the work, the necessary conclusion was the one drawn by the court, namely, that nothing was due from the owner to the contractor, or to any of the claimants who had furnished labor and materials to the contractor. This is the result of the provisions of section 1200 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, as we have held in an opinion filed within a day or two, defines the exclusive method of determining the liability of the owner in cases where the contractor abandons work under a valid contract. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, 97 Pac. 152. The discussion of the question in that case fully states the reasons for the construction we have placed upon section 1200 and other code sections, and, in our opinion, sufficiently answers the contention of appellants that this construction, in so far as it limits their right of recovery, is in violation of the provision of the state Constitution recognizing the right of mechanics and others to liens. In this connection we may remark that, since the submission of this cause, there has been filed by certain counsel, as "friends of the court," a brief suggesting that the rule of section 1200 is an invasion of the constitutional rights of the owner. The brief is answered by the owner (respondent), who insists upon the validity of the section and claims its protection. On the plainest principles the point made cannot be considered. Constitutional guaranties for the protection of person or property can be invoked only by parties whose rights are injuriously affected by the alleged disregard of such guaranties. 8 Cyc. 787; Cooley on Const. Lim. (7th Ed.) 232; 10 Cent. Dig. Col. 1284 et seq.; see Davidson v. Von Detten, 139 Cal. 467, 73 Pac. 189. It would be an extraordinary thing to hold a statute void because it is asserted by strangers to impair the constitutional rights of the very party who claims under it.

While the appellants offered testimony tending to show that the value of the work done by Deming (estimated according to the rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 1200) exceeded the payments made under the contract, it is conceded by them that the finding that such value was $10,700 is supported by sufficient evidence to protect it from attack in this court. The main ground urged for reversal is that the court erred in a number of rulings admitting or excluding evidence. Forty-five assignments of error of this nature are presented by appellants in their briefs. Those which appear to us to have any importance will be discussed briefly.

(1) There was evidence to the effect that the work, up to the time of abandonment, had not been done in accordance with the plans and specifications. The brick walls were thinner, and some of the studding was of smaller sizes than specified. The contractor, Deming, was called by plaintiffs as a witness, and was asked: "State whether or not these changes were made of your own volition, or whether Mr. Butt or Mr. Haley (the architect) had anything to do with them?" An objection to the question, "as calling for the conclusion of the witness," was sustained. If this ruling was error, it was harmless. The witness had testified to the changes that were made. He had stated that he had been instructed by Mr. Butt and Mr. Haley to make the changes in the thickness of the brick walls. He answered, without objection, the question, "How did the other changes you speak of happen to be made?" and, in answering it, referred in detail to a large number of changes made, as he said, at the direction of Mr. Butt. He further stated that he could not remember whether there were any other changes. It appears, therefore, that the subject of the excluded question was fully covered by testimony which the witness was allowed to give. The same reasoning applies to nine assignments of error, in addition to the one under discussion. In each instance the question objected to called for statements from the witness as to whether or not the changes had been made by him with the knowledge or under the direction of Butt.

(2) After the introduction of testimony showing that, in sheathing a light-court, the contractor had used lumber which had previously been used for concrete work, a witness was asked whether "it is usual in building to use lumber that was first used for curbing and concrete work." Respondent's objection to the question was sustained. It cannot be said that this ruling was erroneous. A custom to do work in a particular way, if relevant under any circumstances could certainly not prevail as against a contrary provision of the contract. The record does not contain any copy of either contract or specifications; and, in their absence the appellants, upon whom is the burden to show error, have not presented us with the data upon which to determine the materiality of the question.

(3) It is urged that the plaintiffs' witness Smith should have been permitted to give his estimate of the reasonable cost of completing the building according to the plans and specifications. He had, however, testified that to complete the building would cost one-half of the cost of the portion already done, and had given a figure at which, in his opinion, the entire building could, at the time of abandonment have been completed according to the plans and specifications. From these elements the answer to the main question was deducible by simple arithmetical computation.

(4) There was no error in permitting the witness McNally to testify that in his opinion one-fourth of the work had been done at the time of the abandonment. He had duly qualified as an expert, and had stated that he was familiar with the building, as well as the plans and specifications. The fact that he based his estimate, at least in part, upon his view that, "when the brick wall is done and the roof on, we consider it is about one-quarter done" might affect the value of his opinion, but could not render it incompetent. The objection that no foundation was laid for the testimony of witness Childs is not maintainable, in view of the facts that his qualifications as an expert were admitted, and that he testified that he had made an examination of the building within a few days after the abandonment, and had examined the plans and specifications. Without reviewing the testimony, it may be said that the qualifications of witnesses Harrington and Haley were sufficiently shown.

(5) After defendant Butt had closed his case, the appellants offered testimony regarding the amount and value of the work done up to the time of abandonment. This was properly excluded on the ground that it was not rebuttal. Evidence on this point had been introduced, and, under the pleadings, properly introduced, by plaintiffs as a part of their case in chief. They were not entitled to offer further testimony on the same line in rebuttal.

It is urged that the court erred in failing to find the reasonable cost of completing the building. The issue was not material. The ultimate and important fact is the value of the work done by the contractor, measured by the rule of section 1200. In determining what that value is, it is proper, as a matter of evidence, to consider the reasonable cost of completion. Hoffman-Marks Co. v. Spires, supra. But, under the statute the rights of the parties are fixed by the value of the work done at the time of abandonment, and the amount expended in completing the building, whether more or less than the balance of the contract price remaining in the owner's hands, would not affect those rights.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 483

BELL v. THOMPSON. (Civ. 500.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
July 1, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS—MATTERS SHOWN BY RECORD.

Where, so far as the record on appeal discloses the only judgment rendered against appellant was for a sum taxed as the adverse party's costs, it will be assumed that it was from this judgment that the appeal was prosecuted.

2. COSTS—TAXATION—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE TO ADVERSE PARTY—STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1033, provides that the party in whose favor judgment is rendered, and who claims his costs, must deliver to the clerk and serve upon the adverse party a memorandum of the items of his costs and necessary disbursements, and a party dissatisfied with the costs claimed may within five days after notice of filing of the bill of costs file a motion to have them taxed by the court, etc. Held, that where an unsuccessful plaintiff had actual knowledge of the filing of defendant's cost bill, a copy of which she had received and the amount of which was inserted in the judgment from which she appealed, her rights under the section were fully protected, and she could not nearly four years after the rendition of the judgment, and after it had been affirmed on her appeal, have the costs taxed by the court, because she had no written notice of the filing of the memorandum of costs.

3. SAME—WAIVER OF NOTICE OF FILING MEMORANDUM OF COSTS.

Plaintiff by appealing from the judgment wherein it was adjudicated that defendant recover from her the amount of costs specified in the memorandum, a copy of which she had received, waived written notice that the memorandum had been filed.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—DETERMINATION—EFFECT.

The question of costs being involved in the appeal, plaintiff is estopped from further litigation of that question, since it must be presumed that all questions respecting the amount thereof or the regularity of the proceedings upon which the judgment for costs was based were included therein and litigated on the appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4651.]

5. SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM—AGAINST JUDGMENT—ON MOTION TO TAX COSTS.

On the hearing of a motion by the unsuccessful party for an order of court taxing the costs, the party's right to a set-off of an alleged unliquidated claim against the amount of the judgment cannot be determined.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by Teresa Bell, administratrix of Thomas Bell, against Louisa J. Thompson. From an order denying plaintiff's motion to recall and quash an execution, and for a taxing of defendant's costs, and for an order setting off the amount due plaintiff from defendant for money had and received, etc., plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. Drown, Leicester & Drown, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiff's motion "for an order of court recalling and quashing the execution issued in the above-entitled action to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, and against Teresa Bell as an individual, and also for an order of court taxing the costs of the defendant, and for an order of court setting off the amount due the said plaintiff from the said defendant for money had and received by said defendant for the use and benefit of said plaintiff and the estate of said Thomas Bell, deceased."

The facts, as shown by the record, are: That on June 26, 1902, judgment was rendered in said action in favor of defendant. That on June 28, 1902, there was duly served upon plaintiff's attorney a written notice of the court's decision in said action, which notice, among other things, contained the following: "Also that the defendant in said action claims her costs and disbursements expended and incurred therein, and that the defendant's bill of costs in said action has been filed, and a copy thereof is served upon you herewith. Also that judgment has been entered in said action. Dated June 28, 1902. Drown, Leicester & Drown, Attorneys for Defendant in said action." That the memorandum of costs and disbursements claimed by defendant was duly served on plaintiff's attorney on June 28, 1902, and service thereof admitted by an indorsement thereon, as follows: "Service and receipt of a copy of the within bill of costs, at San Francisco, this 28th day of June, 1902, is hereby admitted. T. Z. Blake-man, Attorney for Plaintiff." Indorsed on said memorandum of costs and disbursements is the following: "Filed, June 30, 1902. C. A. Hunt, Clerk."

The only part of the judgment brought up in the record is the concluding portion thereof, as follows: "And that the defendant Louisa J. Thompson have and recover from the plaintiff herein her costs and disbursements herein, amounting to and taxed at the sum of one hundred and ninety-five and 35/100 dollars. Dated at Santa Barbara, Cal., this 26th day of June, A. D. 1902. [Signed] W. S. Day, Judge of said Superior Court." Thereafter, on July 28, 1902, plaintiff gave notice of her intention to move the court to vacate and set aside the judgment and grant her a new trial, upon a bill of exceptions which was thereafter settled and allowed, and on December 19, 1902, the motion made thereon was denied. Whereupon plaintiff appealed from said judgment and order denying her motion for a new trial. That upon the hearing of such appeal the judgment and order were affirmed. Thereupon, on March 2, 1906, defendant caused an execution to be issued upon the judgment and against the plaintiff and placed in the hands of the sheriff to collect the amount thereof.

So far as the record discloses, the only judgment rendered against plaintiff was that for the sum of $195.35, taxed as defendant's costs. We must, therefore, assume that it was from this judgment that plaintiff prosecuted her appeal. After a lapse of nearly four years from the rendition of judgment, during which time appellant has prosecuted an appeal therefrom resulting in an affirmance thereof, she insists that having had no written notice of the filing on June 30, 1902, of the memorandum of costs claimed by defendant, she is now entitled to have the same taxed by the court. We are of the opinion that the rights accorded to plaintiff under the provisions of section 1033 of the Code of Civil Procedure were fully protected.

It is apparent that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the filing of the cost bill, the amount of which was inserted in the judgment from which she appealed. She does not claim to the contrary. In Barron v. Deleval, 58 Cal. 95, the court, in discussing the necessity of notice of the overruling of a demurrer required by section 476 of the Code of Civil Procedure, says: "The object of the notice, and the only purpose it can subserve, is to bring home to the attorney knowledge of a fact upon which he is called upon to act. But the right to a written notice, like any other civil right, may be waived * * * Civ. Code, § 3513. * * * Section 3532 declares that 'the law neither does nor requires idle acts.' * * * What purpose would a written notice of a fact of which the attorney had direct and positive knowledge have subserved?" Mullally v. Benevolent Society, 69 Cal. 559, 11 Pac. 215; Wall v. Heald, 95 Cal. 364, 30 Pac. 551; Mallory v. See, 129 Cal. 356, 61 Pac. 1123; Forni v. Yoell, 99 Cal. 173, 33 Pac. 887. Having actual notice of the fact that the cost bill had been filed, plaintiff appealed from the judgment wherein it was adjudicated that defendant recover from her the amount of cost specified in this memorandum, copy of which she had received. Conceding the notice of the filing, served two days before the actual filing thereof, to have been insufficient, the facts of the case, as evidenced by plaintiff's conduct and acts, constitute a waiver of such notice. Moreover, as an appeal was had from the judgment it must be presumed that all questions respecting the amount thereof, or the regularity of the proceedings upon which the judgment for costs was based, were included therein and litigated on such appeal. Therefore appellant is estopped from further litigating a question involved in such appeal. Van Rensselaer v. Kidd, 5 How. Prac. (N. Y.) 242; Guckenheimer v. Angevine, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 453; Pfaudler Co. v. Sargent, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 154.

There is no merit in appellant's further contention that, in any event, she was entitled to set off against the amount of the judgment an alleged unliquidated claim against respondent. The merits of such controversy could not be determined upon the hearing of the motion.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MITCHEL et al. v. GRAY. (Civ. 454.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
June 23, 1908. Rehearing Denied by
Supreme Court Aug. 20, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—NOTICE OF APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY—CLERICAL ERRORS.

A notice of appeal from an order, as it appeared in the transcript, stated that "plaintiffs above named do hereby appeal to the Supreme Court * * * from an order made and entered in the above-entitled cause in said above-entitled court on the 26th day of June, 1906, refusing and denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial herein, and from the whole of said order." The minutes of the court as presented in the transcript showed that the judgment was entered on the 9th day of June, 1906, and that on June 13, 1906, a notice of motion for a new trial was served and filed; that on January 26, 1907, the motion for new trial was heard and denied; that on March 26, 1907, notice of appeal from an order "made and entered on the 26th day of June, 1906," denying a new trial, was served and filed. Held, that the record sufficiently showed that the appeal was intended to be from the order made on January 26, 1907; it being clear that the insertion of the word "June," in place of "January," and the figure "6," instead of "7," in designating the year in the notice of appeal, was due wholly to a clerical mistake.

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—ESTABLISHMENT OF RELATION—REVOCATION—CONTRACT—CONSTRUCTION.

S., the owner of a mine, entered into an agreement with M., by which the latter was given "an option on the terms herein stated for the period of ninety days from date of this agreement" to purchase or sell the mine, and it was provided that, if M. failed to get persons interested in 90 days from date of the agreement, it should become null and void. Contemporaneously with the execution of that agreement, the parties entered into another written agreement, whereby S. agreed to pay M. 10 per cent. of all money received from any persons M. should get interested in the mine within the time mentioned in the other agreement. "Such per cent. is for payment of his effort to get parties to buy said mine." Held, that the agreements together constituted one transaction, and established only the relation of principal and agent between S. and M., giving M. power to sell the property within the time limited and obtain a commission, and, the agency not being coupled with an interest, S. had power to revoke it at any time before a sale had been completed thereunder, and make a sale on his own account.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 55.]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—OPTIONS NOT ON CONSIDERATION—POWER TO REVOKE.

Even if the first agreement be considered as amounting to an option, independently of the second agreement, it could have been withdrawn when S. made a sale; it appearing that it was not supported by a consideration, and that it had not been accepted by M., since up to the time of acceptance such a contract, unsupported by consideration, and no binding obligation having been entered into, is a nudum pactum.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—REJECTING JURY'S ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS OF FACT IN EQUITY CASE.

Since, in an equity suit, the court has the right arbitrarily to reject the findings of a jury and adopt its own, the action of the court in submitting special questions of fact to the jury, and in rejecting or accepting the jury's answers thereto, is not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; J. S. Beard, Judge.

Action to rescind a contract by Charles A. Mitchel and another against George V. Gray. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Gillis & Tapscott, Jas. F. Farrahar, and Jas. D. Fairchild, for appellants. R. S. Taylor, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiffs brought this suit for the purpose of rescinding a certain contract by which the defendant bought from the appellant Skillen a mine known as the "Lanky Bob Quartz Mine," situated in Siskiyou county. The court, as advisory to it upon the questions of fact, called to its aid a jury, to which, upon the conclusion of the adduction of evidence and the arguments, it submitted some 40 special questions of fact, covering all the material points brought out by the evidence addressed to the principal issue tendered by the pleadings. To some of these questions the jury made affirmative answers and to the others negative. The court adopted a number of the answers and rejected the others, and made findings of its own in favor of the defendant. A decree was accordingly entered; and this appeal is by the plaintiffs from the judgment and the order denying plaintiffs a new trial.

1. Objection is urged by respondent against a consideration of the appeal from the order because, as claimed, it does not appear from the record that an appeal from the order has been taken. The notice of appeal from the order, as it appears in the transcript, stated that "the plaintiffs above named do hereby appeal to the Supreme Court * * * from an order made and entered in the above-entitled cause in said above-entitled court on the 26th day of June, 1906, refusing and denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial herein and from the whole of said order." The minutes of the court, as presented in the transcript, show that the judgment was entered on the 9th day of June, 1906, and that on June 13, 1906, a notice of motion for a new trial was served and filed; that on January 26, 1907, the motion for a new trial was heard and denied by the court; that on March 26, 1907, notice of appeal, from an order "made and entered on the 26th day of June, 1906," denying a new trial was served and filed. There can be no doubt that the appeal from the order was intended to be from the order made on the 26th day of January, 1907, and that the statement in the notice of appeal that the appeal is from the order "made and entered on the 26th day of June, 1906," is a clerical misprision. In fact, it is so clear that it is beyond dispute that the insertion of the word "June" in place of "January" and the figure "6," instead of "7," in designating the year in the notice of appeal, was due wholly to a clerical mistake, or to what may properly be termed "absent mindedness" on the part of the party writing the notice.

2. The contention of the appellants is, and the complaint alleges that, on the 21st day of July, 1905, plaintiff Skillen, in writing, agreed to sell to plaintiff Mitchel and that the latter in said writing, agreed to purchase from the former the said "Lanky Bob" quartz mine, and that before the expiration of the time within which said sale was, by the terms of said agreement, to be consummated, the defendant, Gray, by certain "false and fraudulent representations and statements" made to plaintiff Skillen, induced the latter to sell said mine to him (Gray), and thus violate the terms of the agreement between the plaintiffs. It is further argued by appellants that if the agreement between themselves, as pleaded in the complaint, cannot be construed as an absolute sale of the mine by Skillen to Mitchel, it is at least an option, and that in that view the sale of the property to the defendant prior to the expiration of the time stipulated in said agreement was beyond the power of Skillen, and therefore said sale was void. The answer admits the making of the pleaded agreement between the plaintiffs. It is, however, alleged therein, and such is the contention of the respondent here, that said agreement was not one for the sale and purchase of the property, but that by the terms thereof Mitchel was simply invested with the power of an agent to sell the mine for Skillen upon a certain stipulated commission for his services in negotiating and consummating such sale; that prior to the time at which Mitchel sold the mine the defendant had purchased the same absolutely from Skillen, paying the latter under said contract of sale the sum of $5,000, and had been let into the possession of said mine; that, antecedently to said sale to Gray, Skillen had notified Mitchel of his rescission and cancellation of the contract by which Mitchel became the agent of Skillen.

The principal contention of appellants arising in the form of an attack upon certain findings of the court, involves the construction of the agreements entered into between the plaintiffs relative to the mining property concerned in this controversy. The claim is that the construction of said agreements by the court below is incorrect. It will not be necessary to deal extensively with the testimony, because we regard the point concerning the legal relations between Skillen and Mitchel, as established by their written agreements, as the most serious vital one presented, and therefore, if it can be said that the construction by the court below of said agreements as to their legal effect is correct, then, under our view of the entire record, nothing remains to be done but to uphold the findings, the judgment, and the order of the court refusing appellants a new trial. The evidence discloses, and the court found that, on the 21st day of July, 1905, the plaintiff Skillen, as the owner of the Lanky Bob Quartz mining claim, entered into an agreement with plaintiff Charles A. Mitchel, by which the latter was given, to use the language of said agreement, "an option on the terms herein stated for the period of ninety days from date of this agreement" to purchase or sell said mine; that contemporaneously with the execution of said agreement said parties entered into the following agreement in writing, the same having been written by the plaintiff Mitchel: "George G. Skillen agrees to pay Charles A. Mitchel 10 per cent. of all money received from any parties he gets interested in the Lanky Bob Mine within the time of an agreement made with this 21st day of July, 1905, said per cent. to be placed to his credit in the Siskiyou Co. Bank at time of each payment. Such per cent. is for payment of his effort to get parties to buy said mine." The court further found that there was no consideration passed for these agreements, or for either of them, if considered separately. As to these agreements between the plaintiffs, the court found as a conclusion of law "that the contracts made between Skillen and Mitchel July 21, 1905, in relation to the Lanky Bob mine, when taken together, constituted a contract of agency whereby Mitchel was given the authority within the time stated to sell the property described upon an agreed compensation of 10 per cent. of the purchase price; that such agency was not an agency coupled with an interest, and therefore revokable at any time before a sale had been completed thereunder." As we have seen, the contention of the appellants is that the foregoing construction by the court of the agreements in question is erroneous; that the first-mentioned writing constituted a contract by which Skillen agreed to sell the mine to Mitchel for a certain agreed price, said sale to be completed and closed at any time within 90 days from the date of said agreement. But we think the court was clearly right in its construction of the agreements. The two agreements were properly construed together as representing and constituting, as they certainly did, one transaction. The first writing or agreement declares that the same is an option, the life of which was to exist for the period of 90 days. But the concluding covenants thereof are as follows: "Party of first part will make deed to any party or Co. said second party shall name upon making first payment and said time of one year from date of payment. If party of second part fail to get parties interested in ninety days from date of this agreement it becomes null and void." It thus appears clear, even without the aid of the writing or agreement fixing the commission of Mitchel for the sale of the property, that said so-called "agreement of option" was not intended, nor could it have been understood to be, by the parties as having any other effect than to clothe Mitchel with the power of an agent to sell the property to other parties within the time limited by said agreement. The other or second writing, however, is, in our judgment, conclusive as to the relations in legal effect intended to be created and in fact established between the plaintiffs by the transaction of which the writings are evidence. Said writing was made and executed at the same time that the other writing was made and signed by the parties, and obviously was intended as a part of the transaction. The testimony of Skillen reveals that it was made "right after" the agreement of "option" was made, and written by Mitchel himself, and there is no other reasonable conclusion than that its purpose was to render absolutely clear and unquestionable the nature of the relations between the parties established by and through the transaction. It itself constitutes an interpretation of the first writing, and the character of the relations of the parties concerning the property to which the transaction culminating in the writings related. Moreover, the testimony of plaintiff Skillen himself adds support to the court's construction of the agreements between the plaintiffs.

The evidence shows, and the court found, that Gray first opened negotiations for the purchase of the mine with Mitchel in the latter part of the month of September. It appears that on that occasion Mitchel stated to Gray that he (Mitchel) was endeavoring to sell the mine to certain Chicago parties, and promised Gray that, in the event said parties did not respond within 10 days, the latter would be given an opportunity to purchase the property. At the time of which we are speaking, Mitchel gave Gray permission to visit and inspect the mine. At the end of the 10 days Gray again called on Mitchel, reminding him that the 10 days had expired and proposed to buy the mine. Mitchel in reply declared that Gray could not buy the property, as the Chicago parties had telegraphed that they would take it. Thereafter Gray personally conducted negotiations with Skillen, and on the 3d of October, 1905, these two entered into a written agreement by the terms of which Gray became the purchaser of the mine for the consideration of $12,000, of which $5,000 was paid upon the execution of said agreement. The court found, and the evidence justifies the finding, that Skillen notified Mitchel in writing of his withdrawal and revocation of Mitchel's agency to sell the mine before Mitchel received and accepted (as the latter claimed that he did) a $5,000 payment from the Chicago parties with whom he had been negotiating for the sale of the mine. Skillen testified, and the court found, "that before the said tender to defendant Gray [referring to the tender to Gray by Skillen before the commencement of this suit of the $5,000 paid Skillen by Gray under their agreement of sale] plaintiff Skillen offered to pay plaintiff Mitchel the 10 per cent. commission he had agreed to pay him in case Mitchel had obtained a purchaser for said property, but plaintiff Mitchel refused to receive it." Skillen, upon this point, testified that he offered Mitchel 10 per cent. on the sum for which he had sold the mine to Gray, or, in other words, $200 more than Mitchel would have received as a commission under his own agreement. Counsel for appellants lay much stress upon the proposition, as purporting to prove which some evidence was offered and received, that the respondent, after failing to purchase the mine through Mitchel, proceeded to overthrow the force of and set at naught the agreement of the latter before the expiration of the time agreed upon by declaring to Skillen that the same was not legal or binding upon him, and, in short, that respondent's successful transaction with Skillen was founded upon alleged fraudulent representations on the part of the defendant. If, as we have held, the agreements made by Skillen and Mitchel established only the relations of principal and agent between them, and that the sole benefit to be derived thereunder by Mitchel was a mere commission or percentage on the maximum amount for which the property was to be sold, then clearly it becomes unimportant what the representations were, whether true or false, upon which Gray succeeded in inducing Skillen to sell him the mine, or what he might have done to accomplish his purpose to buy the property over the agreement with Mitchel. The latter could not be concerned except to the extent of the commission to which he was entitled from Skillen. If the latter had been beguiled into selling the mine to Gray by the misrepresentations and fraud of Gray, and was thereby defrauded and injured, then the matter would be one to be settled between Skillen and Gray. The Chicago parties are not complaining here, nor is there anything in the pleadings or the record indicating that they are interested in the event of this litigation.

As to the claim that the Mitchel agreement amounted to an option (and the first writing considered independently of the "commission" agreement executed at the same time could no doubt be held to be an option), it is to be said that, even viewed in that light, it was, according to the undisputed testimony of Skillen, unsupported by a consideration. When the sale was made to Gray there had been no acceptance of the alleged "option" or "offer to sell," and therefore Skillen had the right, conceding it to be an option, to withdraw it. "Up to the time of acceptance, a contract such as this, where no consideration has been parted with, no binding obligation of any kind entered into, is a nudum pactum. Brown v. San Francisco Sav. Union, 134 Cal. 448, 66 Pac. 592.

3. Certain rulings of the court during the course of the trial are specified as errors, but we think they are not of sufficient importance to require special notice. The contention is made that the court erred in submitting to the jury certain of the large number of special questions of fact, as to which the court asked for the judgment of the jury, and that in the rejection and acceptance of some of the answers returned by the jury the court erred to the prejudice of appellants. We think the action of the court in the respect complained of, whether erroneous or not, is without prejudice, because immaterial. The suit here is purely one in equity, and a jury, therefore, was not allowed as of right, but only as of grace and as advisory to the court. The court had the right arbitrarily, if it so pleased, to reject the findings of the jury and adopt its own.

We find no prejudicial error in the record. The judgment and order are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 384

MARSH v. LOTT. (Civ. 505.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 20, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONTRACTS—OPTIONS—CONSIDERATION.

If there is no sufficient consideration for an option to buy property, its revocation by the person giving it, notwithstanding a promise to the contrary is effectual to terminate any right of the other person to consummate the purchase; but, if the offer is to remain open a fixed time, and is upon a valuable consideration, equity will treat a subsequent acceptance, made within the time limited, as if no attempted revocation had been made.

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONSIDERATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Civ. Code, § 3391, subd. 1, making an adequate consideration for a contract a condition for the specific enforcement thereof, has reference to the consideration to be paid for the property, and has no application to the sufficiency of the consideration paid for an option to purchase the property at a stipulated price.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—OPTION—NATURE OF CONTRACT.

The sale of an option is an executed contract.

4. SAME—ADEQUATE CONSIDERATION.

From the very nature of the case, no standard exists whereby to determine the adequate value of an option to purchase specific real property, and any money consideration, however small, paid and received for an option to purchase property at its adequate value, is binding upon the seller thereof for the time specified therein, and the option is irrevocable for want of adequacy of consideration.

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"PURCHASE."

The word "purchase" implies acquisition.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 7, pp. 5853-5857; vol. 8, p. 7775.]

6. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONTRACTS ENFORCEABLE—DEGREE OF CERTAINTY REQUIRED.

Where a contract is to be specifically enforced, a greater degree of certainty is required than where it is made the basis of an action at law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 61-63.]

7. SAME—UNJUST AND UNREASONABLE CONTRACTS.

The owner of premises gave an option to purchase them for "$100,000, payable $30,000 cash, balance on or before four years, four and one-half per cent. net," and agreed to convey, free from incumbrance, by deed, etc. The contract was signed only by the owner. The purchaser tendered $30,000, and demanded a conveyance to him by deed. Held that, if the payment or tender of the $30,000 was full performance on the purchaser's part under the contract, the contract was not a just and reasonable one, since all the owner would have as evidence of her claim to the deferred payment of $70,000, not payable for four years, would be the contract unsigned by any one charged with the payment thereof, and without any security therefor; and hence under the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 3391, subd. 2, it could not be specifically enforced against the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 152-154.]

8. SAME.

Should the contract be interpreted to contemplate the payment of $30,000 and the execution of a deed upon payment of the balance of $70,000, with 4½ per cent. interest per annum, the owner meanwhile to hold possession, an action for specific performance upon tender of the $30,000 only would be premature.

9. SAME.

Should the contract be construed to contemplate that the balance of $70,000 was to be evidenced by a note secured by mortgage, the intention of the parties was not sufficiently incorporated in the contract, there being nothing to show in what manner the $70,000 balance should be evidenced, nor by what means the owner's interest should be protected from default in the payment of taxes, etc., and it could not be specifically enforced under Civ. Code, § 3390, subd. 6, providing that an agreement, the terms of which are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable, cannot be specifically enforced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Specific Performance, §§ 61-85.]

10. SAME—NECESSITY FOR TENDER OF PERFORMANCE—REPUDIATION OF EXECUTORY CONTRACT.

The general rule that repudiation of an executory contract by one party relieves the corresponding obligor from the necessity of tendering performance as a prerequisite to maintaining a suit to enforce specific performance is not applicable to a unilateral contract giving an option to purchase property within a certain period at a specified price, since, until the holder of the option accepts the offer contained therein, there is no mutuality and no contract obligating the giver of the option to be specifically enforced. Civ. Code, § 3386, providing that neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party thereto has performed, or is compellable specifically to perform, everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation, either completely or nearly so with full compensation for any want of entire performance.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—FINDINGS NOT SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE.

A finding of the court, though not supported by the evidence, is harmless error where, had the finding been the other way, the result would not have been changed.

Taggart, J., dissenting in part.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Robert Marsh against M. A. Lott. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank James and A. B. McCutchen, for appellant. J. Wiseman MacDonald, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Action for specific performance of a contract, whereby plaintiff asserts that in consideration of 25 cents he was given an option to purchase, for the sum of $100,000, certain real estate owned by defendant. Judgment was rendered for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The contract, specific performance of which is sought, is as follows: "For and in consideration of the sum of twenty-five cents to me in hand paid, I hereby give Robt. Marsh & Co. an option to purchase, at any time up to and including June 1st, 1905, with privilege of 30 days extension, from date hereof, the following described property, to wit: South $\frac{1}{2}$ of lot 9 & all of lot 8, block 101, Bellevue Terrace tract, and all of the property owned by myself in above block, for the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, payable thirty thousand cash, balance on or before 4 years, $4\frac{1}{2}\%$ net. I agree to furnish an unlimited certificate of title showing said property to be free from all incumbrance, and to convey the same in such condition by deed of grant, bargain and sale, & pay regular commission. M. A. Lott. [Seal.] Date: Feby. 25th, 1905. Property: 90x165. Building: 6 flats—2 cottages. Rents: \$260.00." On June 1, 1905, plaintiff notified defendant in writing that he exercised the right accorded by said contract regarding the extension of time therein specified, and elected to extend the same for a period of 30 days. On June 2, 1905, defendant, by a written instrument served upon plaintiff, revoked said option, and notified him that she withdrew said property from sale. On June 29, 1905, within the extended time, plaintiff left at the residence of defendant an instrument, of which the following is a copy: "June 29, 1905. Mrs. M. A. Lott, 507 South Olive street, City. Dear Madame: Referring to your agreement with me dated February 25, 1905, by which you gave me the privilege of purchasing the south half of lot nine and the whole of lot eight, in block one hundred and one, Bellevue Terrace tract, in this city, I again tender you in gold coin of the United States the sum of \$30,000 as provided in said agreement, and demand of you performance on your part as in said agreement provided. This tender will also be made to your attorney, J. Wiseman MacDonald, Esq., as per request this morning when I tendered you \$30,000 in gold coin at your residence on said property. Yours truly, Robert Marsh & Company." The contention of appellant is that certain findings are not supported by the evidence. The findings material to a consideration of the case are as follows: The court found that the sum of 25 cents paid for the option was an inadequate and insufficient consideration for the same, and that the said option contract was not just and reasonable to defendant and no adequate consideration was paid to her for it. By finding 9 it appears that "after such revocation and withdrawal of said option, plaintiff, under the name of Robert Marsh & Co., on the 29th day of June, 1905, in an instrument left at the defendant's house, offered to pay to the defendant the sum of \$30,000, and under the said name demanded from defendant a conveyance of the said property, but plaintiff did not at any time actually tender \$30,000, or any sum at all in cash, to the defendant, nor did he, in his, or any other name, at any time, tender or offer to defendant any note or mortgage, or other evidence of indebtedness in the amount of \$70,000, or any sum at all, either carrying interest at $4\frac{1}{2}\%$ per cent. net, or at any rate at all, nor did he, in his own name, or any other name, at any time, offer to pay defendant the balance of \$70,000, on or before four years from the date of said option, or at any time, with interest at $4\frac{1}{2}\%$ per cent. net, or with or without interest." And by finding 10 it appears that "plaintiff has not duly or at all performed all and every provision and thing on his part in said option agreement contained. He has made no tender or offer to defendant, save as is set forth in finding No. 9 hereof. Plaintiff is willing to perform the matters on the part of Robert Marsh & Co. to be performed according to the terms of the said option, and is able to pay the sum of thirty thousand dollars."

If there was no sufficient consideration for the option, then it was a mere nudum pactum, and defendant's revocation thereof, notwithstanding her promise to the contrary, was effectual in terminating any right of plaintiff to consummate the purchase. Page on Contracts, § 35; Wristen v. Bowles, 82 Cal. 84, 22 Pac. 1136; Brown v. San Francisco Savings Union, 134 Cal. 448, 66 Pac. 592. If, on the other hand, the offer was to remain open a fixed time and was made upon a valuable consideration, equity will ignore the attempted revocation, and treat a subsequent acceptance, made within the time defined in the option, exactly as if no attempted revocation had been made. Page on Contracts, § 35; Ross v. Parks, 93 Ala. 153, 8 South. 368, 11 L. R. A. 148, 30 Am. St. Rep. 47; Black v. Maddox, 104 Ga. 157, 30 S. E. 723; Mueller v. Nortmann, 116 Wis. 468, 93 N. W. 538, 96 Am. St. Rep. 997; Guyer v. Warren, 175 Ill. 328, 51 N. E. 580. Subdivision 1 of section 3391, of the Civil Code makes an adequate consideration for the contract one of the conditions for the specific enforcement thereof. The provision, however, has reference to the consideration to be paid for the property, the right to purchase which at a stipulated price within a given time is the subject of the option. It has no application to the sufficiency of the consideration paid for the executed contract, whereby defendant transferred to plaintiff the right to elect to purchase at the stipulated price. It is not the option which it is sought to enforce, but that which, by plaintiff's acceptance of defendant's offer, has ripened into an executor-contract, whereby, for an adequate consideration, the one agrees to buy and the other agrees to sell. "The sale of an option is an executed contract; that is to say, the lands are not sold, the contract is not executed as to them, but the option is as completely sold and transferred in presenti as a piece of personal property instantly delivered on payment of the price." Ide v. Leiser, 10 Mont. 5, 24 Pac. 695, 24 Am. St. Rep. 17. From the very nature of the case no standard exists whereby to determine the adequate value of an option to purchase specific real estate. The land has a market value susceptible of ascertainment, but the value of an option upon a piece of real estate might, and often-times does, depend upon proposed or possible improvements in the particular vicinity. To illustrate: If A., having information that the erection of a gigantic department store is contemplated in a certain locality, wishes an option for a specified time to purchase property owned by B. in the vicinity of such proposed improvement, and takes the option on B.'s property at the full market price at the time, must he pay a greater sum therefor because of his knowledge and the fact of B.'s ignorance of the proposed improvement? It is not possible that B., upon learning of the proposed improvement, can, in the absence of facts constituting fraud, etc., revoke or rescind the option upon the claim that he sold and transferred the right specified therein for an inadequate consideration. In our judgment any money consideration, however small, paid and received for an option to purchase property at its adequate value is binding upon the seller thereof for the time specified therein, and is irrevocable for want of its adequacy.

The provisions of section 3391, Civ. Code, are but a codification of equitable principles that have existed from time immemorial, and the sufficiency of the price paid for an option has never been measured by its adequacy. In Warvelle on Vendors (2d Ed.) § 125, it is said: "If the option is given for a valuable consideration, whether adequate or not, it cannot be withdrawn or revoked within the time fixed, and it will be binding and obligatory upon the owner, or his assigns with notice, until it expires by its own limitation." In Mathews Slate Co. v. New Empire Slate Co. (C. C.) 122 Fed. 972, it is said: "This court is of the opinion that if two persons enter into a contract in writing under seal, by which the one party, in consideration of $1, the payment of which is acknowledged, agrees to sell and convey to the other party within a specified time certain lands and premises, on payment by the other party of a specified consideration, such contract is valid and binding, and ought to be and may be specifically enforced. The seller has the right to fix his price, and covenant and agree that, on receiving that price within a certain time, he will convey the premises, and, if within that time the purchaser of the option tenders the money and demands a conveyance, he is entitled to it. To hold otherwise is to destroy the efficacy of such contracts and agreements." Mr. Freeman in his note to the case of Mueller v. Nortmann, 96 Am. St. Rep. 997, says: "An option given by the owner of land for a valuable consideration, whether adequate or not, agreeing to sell it to another at a fixed price if accepted within a specified time, is binding upon the owner and all his successors in interest with knowledge thereof." See, also, Tibbs v. Zirkle, 55 W. Va. 49, 46 S. E. 701, 104 Am. St. Rep. 977; Cummins v. Beavers, 103 Va. 230, 48 S. E. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 881; Mueller v. Nortmann, supra; Johnston v. Trippe (C. C.) 33 Fed. 530. It therefore follows that the purported revocation made by defendant on June 2, 1905, was ineffectual for the purpose of terminating plaintiff's right to exercise the privilege of electing to accept the offer prior to the time designated therein for its expiration.

All that plaintiff did in the way of performance is embodied in his written offer, dated June 29, 1905, hereinbefore set out. In this letter he says: "I again tender you in gold coin of the United States the sum of $30,000 as provided in said agreement, and demand of you performance on your part as in said agreement provided. This tender will also be made to your attorney, J. Wiseman MacDonald, Esq., as per request this morning when I tendered you $30,000 in gold coin at your residence on said property." There is no room for contending that plaintiff had made any previous tender, or that defendant had requested that a tender be made to her attorney. It is true that he called at the residence of defendant, having with him $30,000, but he made no effort to disclose the purpose of his visit, or that he had in his possession the money wherewith to make the tender. It may be conceded, however, that the written offer made under section 2074, Code Civ. Proc., was equivalent to an actual tender of the $30,000, for it was not accepted. At most, he tendered the $30,000 only and demanded performance on defendant's part as in said agreement provided. By reference to said agreement, we find that she gave plaintiff an option to purchase her property. The word "purchase" implies the acquisition of (Greer v. Blanchard, 40 Cal. 194); so that he was given the right to acquire the property of defendant, which in this case could not be otherwise than by a deed of conveyance. It thus appears that the performance demanded from her in the written offer was just what he demanded in the prayer of his complaint, namely, a conveyance to him from her by deed of the real estate. If the payment or tender of the $30,000 was full performance on his part, it necessarily follows that, under this view of the contract, all that defendant would have as evidence of her claim to the deferred payment of $70,000, not payable until the expiration of four years, would be the contract unsigned by any one charged with the payment thereof, and without any security therefor. The court found that the contract as to the defendant was not just and reasonable. Subdivision 2 of section 3391 of the Civil Code provides that a contract cannot be enforced against a party if it is not just and reasonable. Agard v. Valencia, 39 Cal. 292; Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 Pac. 62; Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 Pac. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548; Cooper v. Pena, 21 Cal. 403.

The interpretation implied in appellant's contention, that the tender of the sum of $30,000 constituted performance on his part, renders the contract as to defendant so unjust and unreasonable that a court of equity cannot decree specific performance thereof. Counsel for appellant in his brief suggests still another view of the contract. The meaning of the contract, he says, is clear "that plaintiff was to pay defendant $30,000, and that when he paid the balance of $70,000, with interest at 4½ per cent. per annum, the defendant was to make her deed of conveyance to plaintiff for the property in question"; and that meanwhile defendant would have the right to possession, carrying with it, we assume, the rentals of $260 mentioned in the contract, until the balance was paid. If this view should be accepted, it must follow, conceding the tender of $30,000 and the balance of $70,000 to be unpaid, that the action is premature. Defendant is presumably in possession, the $30,000 is claimed to have been tendered, but it does not appear that the $70,000 has either been paid or tendered. Hence, under this view, there is no ground for asking the interposition of a court of equity to enforce the execution and delivery of a deed, to which plaintiff is not entitled for the reason that he has not paid the $70,000.

Still another interpretation of the contract, asserted in the answer and suggested by the findings, is that the $70,000 was to be evidenced by a promissory note, but by whom signed does not appear, and payment thereof secured by first mortgage on the real estate in question. There is absolutely nothing in the contract indicating that the deferred payment should be evidenced by note, or in any manner secured by mortgage, deed of trust, or otherwise, upon any property. Doubtless the parties contemplated that payment of the amount should be secured, for defendant testifies that during the negotiations for the purchase of the opinion plaintiff said "that 5 per cent. was a large amount of interest for good security and for that amount." This is the entire evidence touching the subject. If they did contemplate that it should be secured, they failed to incorporate in the contract any provision sufficiently certain and definite to enable a court of equity to declare a specific performance of their intentions. Subdivision 6 of section 3390 of the Civil Code provides that "an agreement, the terms of which are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable," cannot be specifically enforced. Where a contract is to be specifically enforced, a greater degree in certainty is required than where it is made the basis of an action at law. Pomeroy on Specific Performance, § 159; Willard's Equity Jurisprudence, 267; Burnett v. Kullak, 76 Cal. 536, 18 Pac. 401; Jones v. Wells, 31 Mich. 170; Sturgis v. Galindo, 59 Cal. 30, 43 Am. Rep. 239. If this last interpretation be accepted, it follows that plaintiff did not perform fully or tender full performance on his part, and the finding of the court upon the question of performance is fully supported by the evidence. In our judgment the only construction of which the contract is susceptible renders it manifestly unjust and unreasonable as to the defendant. Viewed from any other point, it is too uncertain, vague and indefinite as to the manner in which the $70,000 due defendant should be evidenced, and payment thereof with interest thereon secured; nor can it be ascertained therefrom by what means defendant's interest in the real estate should be protected from default in the payment of taxes, assessments, etc.

Appellant makes the further point that, defendant having revoked the option and repudiated the contract, he was by such fact relieved from the necessity of any tender of compliance. Even if this were true, it could not avail plaintiff under the views herein expressed. We will, nevertheless, briefly advert to it. The general rule is that repudiation of an executory contract by one party relieves the corresponding obligor from the necessity of tendering performance as a prerequisite of maintaining a suit to enforce specific performance. This rule, however, is not applicable to unilateral contracts of the character under discussion. As we have seen in discussing the consideration for the option, there was no contract to repudiate. Section 3386, Civ. Code, provides: "Neither party to an obligation can be compelled specifically to perform it, unless the other party thereto has performed, or is compellable specifically to perform, everything to which the former is entitled under the same obligation, either completely or nearly so, together with full compensation for any want of entire performance." See, also, Pomeroy on Specific Performance, § 162. Until plaintiff accepted the offer, there could be no mutuality, in fact, no contract, whereby plaintiff was obligated in any way. He could only signify his acceptance in accordance with the terms of the contract, and subject to all, not part, of the conditions imposed thereby. 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 930. If, by the terms of the contract, he was to pay $30,000 and give his note for the balance, then the tender of such note and security was just as important as the tender of the money. Clarno v. Grayson, 30 Or. 111, 46 Pac. 426. In Hay v. Mason, 141 Cal. 723, 75 Pac. 300, in discussing a similar question, it is said: "It is therefore evident that at no time prior to the making and tender of the deed by plaintiffs could either party have enforced specific performance of the contract." An examination of the cases cited in support of appellant's proposition discloses the fact that all of them refer to bilateral contracts, or cases wherein the party seeking to enforce the contract has performed or tendered performance in strict accordance with the terms of the contract, and thereby assumed the corresponding obligation, performance of which might then be enforced against him.

The finding that the consideration paid for the option was inadequate, while not supported by the evidence, is nevertheless harmless error, for the reason that had the court found in accordance with appellant's contention it could not, according to the view we take of the case, have changed the result.

There are other points ably presented by the learned counsel for appellant, but, as a consideration of such points discloses no reason for reversing either the judgment or order, it seems unnecessary to discuss them.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

ALLEN, P. J. I concur.

TAGGART, J. I concur in the conclusion reached and in most of the views expressed in the foregoing opinion, but I am of the opinion that there is evidence to support the finding by the trial court that the consideration for the option was inadequate. I concur specially that I may express my dissent from any portion of the leading opinion which is predicated upon there being no evidence to support this finding, and in order that I may assign my position on this question as an additional reason for affirming the judgment.

8 Cal. App. 397

TEICH v. SAN JOSE SAFE DEPOSIT BANK OF SAVINGS. (Civ. 450.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. June 22, 1908.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—STIPULATIONS—AUTHORITY OF ATTORNEY TO MAKE—EVIDENCE.

Pending a suit to establish and foreclose an equitable mortgage, the attorney for plaintiff therein wrote his client that he thought the property should be redeemed from a tax sale of the property, and that, if the client thought it wise, he, said attorney, would see H., attorney for defendants, and have a stipulation with him that it be redeemed, the party redeeming to have a lien for the redemption money. Plaintiff replied, agreeing the redemption should be made, inclosing check for amount necessary, and saying: "As to seeing H., you are the best to decide that. * * * We place the whole matter in your hands." Held, that the attorney was authorized to stipulate as to the redemption.

2. TAXATION—ACTION TO AVOID TAX DEED FOR FRAUD—RELIANCE ON STIPULATION.

A party need not have relied exclusively on a stipulation in order to be entitled to relief, on the ground of fraud, for its breach; so that where pending suit to establish and foreclose a mortgage plaintiff therein stipulated with the defendants that he would redeem the property from a tax sale to the state, he to be reimbursed if he was unsuccessful in the suit, they having relied thereon, may have relief where he did not redeem, but bought from the state, though they had asked the tax collector to inform them of any sale by the state and he had assured them that he would, but failed to do so.

3. STIPULATION—CONSTRUCTION.

A stipulation, pending a suit to establish and foreclose a mortgage, reciting that plaintiff therein was desirous of paying the taxes on the property if it be ultimately determined that he had a mortgage, and providing that he might effect a redemption from tax sales, and that, if it be decided that he had a mortgage, he should be charged with the amount which should have been assessed against his mortgage interest, and that, if it be determined that he had no mortgage, he should be reimbursed by defendants for any money paid by him to redeem from tax sales or to pay any tax, justified defendants in relying on plaintiff redeeming, and, if it be considered as only giving an option, required plaintiff on charging its purpose, and before buying from the state, instead of redeeming, to give notice, so that defendants might protect themselves.

4. TAXATION—ACTION TO AVOID TAX DEED FOR FRAUD—TENDER.

Plaintiff, in an action to establish and foreclose an equitable mortgage, having pending the action stipulated to redeem the property from tax sales, defendants, under the rule requiring one seeking equity to do equity, to be entitled to relief from plaintiff's fraud in taking title from the state, instead of redeeming, must pay the equitable mortgage arising out of a loan to redeem the property from other mortgages, though the mortgage be barred by limitations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; H. C. Gesford, Judge.

Suit by Annie E. Teich against the San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

N. C. Caldwell, M. K. Harris, and S. L. Strather, for appellant. F. A. Fee and Frank H. Short, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The main contention in this cause hinges upon the following stipulation: "In the Supreme Court of the State of California. San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings [a corporation], Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Bank of Madera [a corporation], et al., Defendants and Appellants. Whereas, there is now pending in the Supreme Court of the state of California an action entitled San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. Bank of Madera, et al., Defendants and Appellants, * * * said action being prosecuted by the plaintiff for the purpose of foreclosing what is claimed by plaintiff to be an equitable mortgage upon the property described in the complaint in said action, to wit, lot four (4) block forty (40) of the town of Madera, California, and, whereas, pending the litigation concerning said property, certain taxes have accumulated thereon, and certain tax sales have been made of said property for taxes levied and assessed for state, county, and municipal purposes, and there is now due and owing certain taxes on said property, the plaintiff in said action is desirous of paying the amount of taxes which should be levied and assessed against said mortgage interest in said property if it should ultimately be determined that plaintiff has an equitable mortgage on said property, but no assessment of said mortgage interest has ever been made or levied against the same. It is therefore stipulated by and between the plaintiff herein, and the defendants and Annie E. Teich, the owner of said property, that the plaintiff, San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings, may effect a redemption of said property from any and all tax sales made of the same upon any legal and valid assessment of said property and pay and discharge any taxes now due thereon upon any valid and legal assessment thereof. And it is further stipulated that any amount of money which may be necessary for said plaintiff to pay for the purpose of effecting such redemption or of discharging any valid assessment against said property shall be reimbursed to plaintiff by the defendants in said action or by the owner of said property, to wit, Annie E. Teich, it being understood, however, that in the event that it be finally determined that the San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings has an equitable mortgage on said property, that in making such reimbursement the said plaintiff shall be charged with the taxes which should have been levied and assessed against its mortgage interest therein * * * for the several years since the date of its equitable mortgage, to wit, since the 18th day of February, 1895, and, if it should be determined that plaintiff has no equitable mortgage, or any claim against the same, then the said Annie E. Teich agrees to reimburse said plaintiff for any money it may have paid out to redeem said property from any tax sales, or to pay and discharge any valid tax thereon. Any amount of money advanced by plaintiff for the purpose hereinbefore mentioned which the event of said action shall determine to be on defendant's account, or account of said owner shall draw interest from the date of such payment by it, at the rate of 3% per annum. [Signed] F. A. Fee, Attorney for Plaintiff and Respondent. M. K. Harris, Attorney for Defendants and Appellants. Dated Nov. 1903."

It seems that plaintiff received a deed to the property February 17, 1902, from her mother, Mary Dworack, her brother, Charles A. Dworack, and from the Bank of Madera, the defendants in the said action mentioned in the stipulation as pending in the Supreme Court, and which action has been decided this day by this court. Upon the 26th day of June, 1897, the property was sold to the state for delinquent taxes for the fiscal year of 1896. As the property was not redeemed, a deed was executed to the state on the 24th day of January, 1903. No taxes had been paid upon the property since 1895, and no redemption from the state had been effected by any one, and so, in pursuance of the written authorization of the State Controller dated July 11, 1904, the tax collector of Madera county, proceeding according to law, on the 6th day of August, 1904, sold the property for $950 to defendant herein.

The plaintiff claims that by virtue of said stipulation the property is charged with a trust, and that the bank holds it for her use and benefit. The circumstances under which the said purchase was made are as follows: On August 6, 1904, Mr. Fee saw in a newspaper the notice of the sale of the property to take place at 10 o'clock that day. Some time before, he had requested the tax collector to inform him if any one made application for the sale of the property. This the tax collector promised to do, but failed to keep his promise. Mr. Fee sought Judge Ostrander, attorney for the party desiring to purchase, and asked him if he proposed to bid on the property. On receiving an affirmative answer, Mr. Fee stated that the defendant herein had trusted him implicitly in the matter, that he had assured the bank that he would not permit a sale of the property; that the whole matter had been intrusted to his care; that he would like to have the property sold provided he could buy it for his client; that if the judge would bid the amount of the tax and allow Mr. Fee to make a further bid, and become the purchaser, the latter would compensate the former for his services. This was agreed upon and Judge Ostrander loaned Mr. Fee $950, the purchase price, and received $250 for his services. The money was paid by the defendant and it received the said tax collector's deed dated August 6, 1904. The contention of appellant, as before intimated, is that, in consequence of its violation of said stipulation upon which plaintiff relied, defendant by its purchase of the land became the involuntary trustee of the same for the benefit of plaintiff, and that the said purchase should be considered as though made expressly for her benefit.

The particular section of the Civil Code embodying the doctrine of appellant's position is 2224, providing that "one who gains a thing by fraud, accident, mistake, undue influence, the violation of a trust or other unlawful act, is, unless he has some other and better right thereto, an involuntary trustee of the thing gained for the benefit of the person who would otherwise have had it." The only one of these grounds upon which with any kind of plausibility plaintiff can base her claim for relief is embraced within the one relating to fraud. The different phases of recognized fraud have been considered so often that we deem it inadvisable at any length to discuss the subject in the abstract. It is sufficient to say that, if it be anything condemned by the law, the act of defendant in said purchase constituted constructive fraud described in section 1573, subd. 1, Civ. Code, as consisting "in any breach of duty which without any actual fraudulent intent, gains an advantage to the person in fault, or any one claiming under him, by misleading another to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of any one claiming under him." In 1 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 155, the author with his usual clearness states the intent and purpose of the rule, as follows: "Constructive trusts are raised by equity for the purpose of working out right and justice, where there was no intention of the party to create such a relation, and often directly contrary to the intention of the one holding the legal title. * * * If one party obtains the legal title to property, not only by fraud or by violation of confidence or of fiduciary relations, but in any other unconscientious manner, so that he cannot equitably retain the property which really belongs to another, equity carries out its theory of a double ownership, equitable and legal, by impressing a constructive trust upon the property in favor of the one who is in good conscience entitled to it, and who is considered in equity as the beneficial owner."

The question then arises whether by failing to redeem and by purchasing the property defendant acted inequitably in an unconscientious manner to the prejudice of plaintiff, so that she is considered in equity the beneficial owner? An affirmative answer, it is conceded, requires that these propositions be established: (1) That the making of the stipulation by F. A. Fee was authorized by the defendant the San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings. (2) That plaintiff relied upon said stipulation. (3) That neither plaintiff nor her agent or attorney ever received any notice that the stipulation had been disavowed or repudiated by the defendant. (4) That the plaintiff was misled by said stipulation and damaged by its violation on the part of defendant.

As to the first of these propositions, we cannot resist the conclusion that Mr. Fee was authorized by the bank to enter into the stipulation and that the finding to the contrary is therefore unsupported by the evidence. His authority did not follow from his general retainer as attorney within the purview of section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but he was specially empowered to enter into the stipulation and deal with the matter according to his own judgment. October 24, 1903, Mr. Fee wrote to Mr. McLaughlin, the president and general manager of the bank, among other things, as follows: "I think this property should be redeemed as it is not at all unlikely that some one here may apply to the Controller to have the same offered for sale. * * * If you think it wise, I might see Judge Harris, counsel for the Dworacks, and have a stipulation with him that this property be redeemed the party redeeming to have a lien for the redemption money. Whatever you desire done at this end of the line I will of course attend to. I think, however, that you will agree with me that a redemption of the property should be at once effected." On October 29th Mr. McLaughlin replied, saying: "We agree with you that the property should be redeemed; make out it will cost about $173. * * * As to seeing Judge Harris, you are the best to decide that. * * * We send you a check for $175 to deal with the redemption as you think best. Take no chances. We place the whole matter in your hands and appreciate your efforts. Any further costs please advise and we will remit." After receiving that letter, Mr. Fee wrote to Judge Harris, the attorney for the defendants in the said case of San Jose Safe Deposit Bank of Savings v. Bank of Madera et al., and who was the attorney in fact for Annie E. Teich. In that letter Mr. Fee says: "My client is desirous of paying any taxes it should pay by reason of its mortgage interest in said property, if it should ultimately be determined that it has such. * * * We are desirous of paying and discharging the taxes on the property, and herewith inclose a stipulation, which I think will be found agreeable to you. * * * I think you fully appreciate the fact that the taxes should be paid on this property, and, as the stipulation is fair to both sides, I hope you will see your way clear to sign the same, as my people are desirous of paying whatever they may be legally obliged to pay in the matter." We do not see how more apt words could have been chosen to authorize Mr. Fee to stipulate as to the redemption of the property. He concluded that to protect the interest of his client it would be best to enter into the stipulation, and he so informed the bank. What is the meaning of the reply: "As to seeing Judge Harris you are the best to decide that. * * * We place the whole matter in your hands"? We may not fully appreciate, of course, the significance of the language used, but it seems to us that any man of ordinary understanding would be justified in reaching the conclusion, as Mr. Fee did, that he was authorized to stipulate as to the redemption of the property. No particular formula of words was required to confer authority, and it appears as clear as noonday that the matter was left to the discretion of Mr. Fee in whom, as is shown by the correspondence, the bank had implicit confidence.

Again, the court has found that plaintiff did not rely upon said stipulation. We cannot so read the evidence. Judge Harris testified that he did rely upon it, and we think he was amply justified in doing so. It is true that he had also the additional assurance of the tax collector that he would inform him as to any sale of the property, but the tax collector failed to do so. But the promise of the latter could in no wise affect the significance or potency of the stipulation or in a legal sense derogate from the confidence to which it was entitled from Judge Harris. The law does not require that he should have relied exclusively upon the stipulation to avail himself of the remedy sought in this action. If so, in case A. had confidence in B. and C. and relied upon their several promises, and both misled him to his disadvantage, he could recover against neither, which is not only inequitable, but absurd. We think the stipulation justified Judge Harris in believing that the defendant for its own protection desired to redeem the property; that this was its purpose in order that it should not lose the fruits of its victory in case it finally prevailed in the establishment and foreclosure of its equitable mortgage; that it was willing to agree to so redeem in consideration of plaintiff's permission for it to do so and of her promise to refund to defendant whatever might be found due according to the final decision in the foreclosure suit; and that he could safely rely upon defendant's fulfillment of its covenants, and rest in the assurance that no loss could come to plaintiff through the voluntary act of defendant. We do not understand that under the stipulation defendant had merely an option to redeem. The language used indicated its desire and intention to redeem, and, besides, if it considered that it had any choice it was its duty, when it changed its purpose, to notify plaintiff in order that she might protect herself.

As to the third proposition, it is found by the court that neither plaintiff nor her attorney received any notice that the stipulation had been repudiated or disavowed by the defendant. This finding is in favor of appellant, and, not being assailed, is, of course, not subject to review. That the plaintiff was misled by the stipulation and damaged by the act of defendant in failing to keep its agreement has sufficiently appeared in the foregoing. If plaintiff had not understood that the property would be redeemed by defendant, it seems hard to believe that she would have allowed it to be sold, although it must be conceded that she and her predecessors temerarily permitted the taxes to go by default for many years, and thereby manifested no small degree of indifference as to the legal title to the property. Looking at the record as it is presented, we think it would be inequitable to uphold the judgment of the lower court and would be establishing a dangerous precedent. It is true, no doubt, that the "forum of conscience" is a somewhat variable quantity affected more or less by the personal equation and the moral considerations to which equity so constantly looks are in a sense conventional and cannot be defined with mathematical precision, and therefore, in cases like this, the determination of the question whether a particular transaction is unconscionable and indefensible is not governed entirely by hard and fast rules, but is committed largely to the enlightened conscience of the individual chancellor, subject, however, to the revisionary action of the appellate tribunal. We are brought somewhat reluctantly to a conclusion different from that reached in the court below, as upon the assumption that the proofs, if received, would support defendant's special defense of an equitable mortgage growing out of the loan by it of nearly $4,000 to effect the redemption of the property from a foreclosure sale to one Return Roberts, a former mortgagee, plaintiff, in order to prevail, should be required to do more than she has offered to do. However, the court declined to receive evidence or to make any finding as to said defense and its action in that respect obviously cannot be corrected on this appeal.

It makes no difference that the mortgage is subject to the statute of limitations. Under the familiar principle that he who seeks equity must do equity, plaintiff is not entitled to have a conveyance of the property until she has refunded to defendant all that it has paid out in good faith to protect the property, including the amount loaned to Mary A. Dworack to redeem from the foreclosure sale. It might be otherwise if plaintiff were an innocent purchaser for value without notice, but, assuming the allegations of the answer to be true, any other view we consider intolerable in a court of equity. But this consideration must be relegated to another trial.

The judgment is reversed.

BREEN v. ROY. (Civ. 467.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
July 1, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 27, 1908.)

1. BROKERS—CONTRACT—PERFORMANCE — ACTION FOR SERVICES.

Where brokers, having a contract which would have entitled them to recover commissions if they had found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to pay the price named in the contract, performed services thereunder in good faith, while the contract was in force, and the defendant before the contract term expired, on being permitted to cancel the contract, promised to pay for the services rendered, the broker's assignee was entitled to recover for such services in indebitatus assumpsit.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—CONTRACT—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the assignee of certain real estate brokers sued in assumpsit to recover compensation for the broker's services, rendered under a written contract with defendant, which defendant had canceled before the termination of the contract term, the contract was admissible in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by Peter A. Breen against G. M. Roy. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bert Schlesinger, for appellant. R. H. Countryman, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover $350 for services alleged to have been rendered and performed by the assignors of plaintiff for defendant, at his special instance and request. The complaint alleges that defendant promised and agreed to pay to plaintiff's assignors the said sum of $350 for such services. The answer denies that the plaintiff's assignors ever rendered or performed any services for defendant at his special instance or request, or otherwise, or that defendant ever promised to pay $350, or any other sum for any such services, or for any services. The case was tried before the court with a jury duly impaneled. Plaintiff, in order to prove his case, introduced without objection an agreement in writing, signed by defendant, which is as follows: "San Francisco, California, August 27, 1906. I hereby authorize Sullivan, Feder & Kahn exclusively for the term of five days from date to sell and enter into and sign a writing contract in my name and for me, for the sale and conveyance of the following described property: Situate in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, to wit, on the north line of Geary street 141³/₁₂ feet east of Fillmore street 25 by 127⁶/₁₂ feet, with the improvements thereon in course of alteration; leased for five years from Oct. 1, 1906, at $300 per month. Cost of alterations to be paid by purchaser. And I agree to accept the sum of fourteen thousand dollars ($14,000.00) in U. S. gold coin, and I agree to pay Sullivan, Feder & Kahn 2¹/₂ per cent. commission on the sale price thereof.—G. M. Roy." Mr. Feder was called by plaintiff as a witness, and testified that on the 29th day of August, 1906, the defendant came into the office, and asked that no further efforts be made to sell the property under the contract, and that defendant then and there said to witness, "Dan O'Callaghan has an offer for this property. He has a deposit of $500, and I believe that he will sell it, and therefore, if he does sell it, I will get $500 over and above what your price calls for." While this witness was on the stand and plaintiff's counsel was further examining him, the following took place: "Q. After getting that contract what did you do? A. I immediately proceeded to find a purchaser. Mr. Schlesinger: Q. Did you and members of the firm submit it to several prospective purchasers about town? Mr. Countryman: We object to that as leading. The Court: Sustained. Mr. Schlesinger: While this contract was in force did you have any talk with Mr. Roy, any further talk? A. I did. Mr. Schlesinger: Maybe the position we assume and my statements are not quite clear. Sullivan, Feder & Kahn made for the sale of this property a five days' contract. Roy went to them and said, 'I want to withdraw the property from you people; I will withdraw the property and pay you your commission.' That is our case. The Court: Nothing to it. Mr. Schlesinger: Now I hope—I don't think that is proper to the plaintiff at all. Your honor is in the wrong on this proposition. We have a written contract in evidence, but you let it go. We sue for services. The Court: Why don't you bring a different action then? Mr. Schlesinger: We cannot sue upon the contracts. The Court: There is no use in talking to me upon a proposition of law like that. Gentlemen of the jury, I instruct you to bring in a verdict for the defendant. Mr. Schlesinger: I protest against the judgment going for the defendant. Will your honor allow us to submit offer of proofs? Mr. Countryman: We object to these offers of proofs, and ask for judgment for the defendant. Mr. Schlesinger: We have not closed our case. The Court: You don't have to. This gentleman has proved himself out of court. Take your exceptions if you wish. Mr. Schlesinger: We certainly do take an exception. The Court: Gentlemen of the jury, select a foreman. (Mr. P. H. Flood chosen as foreman.) Now, gentlemen of the jury, I will instruct you to bring in a verdict for the defendant." The jury accordingly returned a verdict for the defendant, upon which judgment was entered. This appeal is from the judgment.

The ruling of the court was to the effect that, although the plaintiff's assignors had a contract in writing authorizing them to sell the defendant's land, and agreeing to pay them a commission therefor, the plaintiff would not be allowed to prove that his assignors performed services for defendant under the contract before it was withdrawn, nor to prove the reasonable value of such services, nor the agreement of the defendant to pay for the services. In this we are of opinion that the court was in error. The foundation of the plaintiff's claim was the written contract. Under that contract his assignors would have been entitled to recover commissions if they had found a purchaser ready, willing, and able to pay the price named in the contract. If in good faith they performed services, or expended money in endeavoring to obtain a purchaser, while the contract was in force, and the defendant under such services went to them before the time named in the contract had expired, and promised to pay for those services, and being permitted to withdraw the contract, and upon such promise the contract was withdrawn, we can see no reason, either in law or in morals, that would preclude a recovery. The performance of the contract having been prevented by the defendant, the action was brought in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not directly upon the contract. This might be done, as the contract was the basis upon which the cause of action arose, and was admissible in evidence. Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 106. In fact the contract was admitted in evidence without objection.

No objection was made to the form of the action. The ruling then went to the very essence of the case. In effect it held that, conceding the facts to be true which the plaintiff was attempting to prove, yet he could not recover. It is said in Mechem on the Law of Agency (section 620): "Thus if, after a broker employed to sell property had in good faith expended money and labor in advertising for and finding a purchaser, and was in the midst of negotiations which were evidently and plainly approaching to success, the seller should revoke the authority with the purpose of availing himself of the broker's efforts, and avoiding the payment of his commissions, it could not be claimed that the agent had no remedy. In these cases it might well be said that there was an implied contract on the part of the principal to allow the agent a reasonable time for performance; that full performance was wrongfully prevented by the principal's own acts, and that the agent had earned his commission." In the case of Lane v. Albright, 49 Ind. 279, where the owner of the real estate sold it pending negotiations in making a sale, and prior to the expiration of the time given by the owner to the agent, and where the agent within the time given did find a purchaser, the court said: "The appellant performed all that he was required by the contract to do, and was prevented by the appellee from selling the land. The appellee disabled himself from carrying out the contract of sale made by the appellant. The fact that the appellee had authorized the appellant to sell his land did not deprive himself of the power of selling it, but he could not thereby avoid his liability to appellant." In Kimmell v. Skelly, 130 Cal. 561, 62 Pac. 1067, it is said: "The brokers here did not agree to find a purchaser, but, being employed to find one, they were agents of defendant to that end, and were legally bound to use their time and labor for the benefit of their principal; and it is the use of this time and labor that forms the consideration to support her promise to pay them the compensation mentioned in the agreement." See, further, Toomy v. Dumphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 Pac. 130, Maze v. Gordon, 96 Cal. 61, 30 Pac. 962, and Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251, 26 Pac. 906. The plaintiff was entitled to prove, if he could do so, the facts claimed by him to exist. Of course, if the court had heard the evidence, and the jury had concluded that the assignors of plaintiff performed no services or earned no commissions, and that the defendant made no promise to pay as claimed by plaintiff, these would have been matters for the jury to pass upon. It was error for the court to take the case from the jury and to preclude plaintiff from introducing his testimony.

The judgment is reversed.

KRASILNIKOFF v. DUNDON. (Civ. 406.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
June 22, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 20, 1908.)

1. SALES—BREACH OF WARRANTY—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The general rule is that damages, in case of a breach of warranty of quality of personal property sold, are to be estimated with reference to values at the time and place of delivery; but, where personal property is sold on a warranty to be used at some place other than the place of sale and delivery, and this is known to the seller, damages may be estimated with reference to values at the place where the property is to be used, and in such case the conditions existing at that place are presumed to be within the contemplation of the parties in making the contract of warranty.

2. SAME.

Defendant agreed to make two boilers for plaintiff, according to a design originated and patented by defendant. With full knowledge that the boilers were to be sent to Siberia, and used on boats on the Amoor river, he warranted that they would generate steam of 200 pounds pressure, with a certain designated consumption of fuel. They failed to do so, and in Siberia at least were of no value. The boilers were to be tested in defendant's shop, and when satisfactory were to be taken down and delivered at the wharf in San Francisco for shipment. Plaintiff had returned to Siberia before shipment was made. Held, that plaintiff was not, as a matter of law, wanting in diligence in not discovering the breach of warranty until the boilers were attempted to be used in Siberia; and, under the rule that the time to which the warranty refers is the time when the breach thereof is, or with due diligence might be, discovered by the purchaser, plaintiff was entitled to receive compensation for his damages, with reference to values in Siberia.

3. SAME—DAMAGES—INTEREST—BREACH OF CONTRACT INVOLVING UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

The damages not being certain on the face of the contract, and being ascertainable only upon evidence as to values in Siberia, interest should not be allowed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 1293.]

4. SAME—BREACH OF WARRANTY—FRAUD—PLEADINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF FRAUD—"ACTUAL FRAUD."

In an action for breach of warranty of the quality of boilers purchased, allegations that defendant represented the boilers to be a great improvement over all other boilers, and that they were superior to all other boilers, and were able to perform the work for which they were to be made, are allegations of the statement of opinion and "puffing," and are not sufficient to sustain a judgment for interest under Civ. Code, § 3288, providing that, in an action for fraud, interest may be given in the discretion of the jury, especially where the complaint does not allege that the statements were made with intent to deceive plaintiff or induce him to enter into the contract; Civ. Code, § 1572, defining "actual fraud," in connection with the consent of parties to a contract, as an act committed by a party to a contract with intent to deceive another party thereto, or to induce him to enter into the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by C. E. Krasilnikoff against P. F. Dundon. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Order affirmed. Judgment modified and affirmed.

Mullany, Grant & Cushing, Garrett W. McEnerney, and Cushing, Grant & Cushing, for appellant. J. N. Young, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appellant takes the position that the action is one for damages for breach of warranty as to the efficiency of two certain boilers manufactured by defendant for plaintiff. He concedes that the evidence sustains the finding of the court that there was a breach of such warranty, but insists that the evidence does not sustain the finding as to the amount of the damages. The boilers were constructed at San Francisco, under a contract which required them to be delivered at the wharf in San Francisco, but it was well understood by defendant that they were to be sent to and used at a place on the Amoor river in Siberia, 13,000 miles from San Francisco. The court found that the plaintiff had been damaged in the sum of $7,200, the price he paid for the boilers, and gave him judgment for such sum, together with interest thereon at the legal rate from the 10th day of October, 1900.

Treating this case as an action for damages for breach of warranty as to quality of personal property, as insisted by appellant, the measure of damages is fixed by section 3313 of the Civil Code as "the excess, if any, of the value which the property would have had at the time to which the warranty referred, if it had been complied with, over its actual value at that time." It is thus seen that the statute does not, in terms, fix either the time or place at which the valuation is to be made. It is insisted by appellant that the damages under the contract and circumstances of this case should be fixed with reference to values at San Francisco, and not with reference to values at the place in Siberia, to which the boilers were sent and where they were to be used. There can be no doubt, we think, that, if the values in Siberia control, the evidence amply justifies the finding of the court. Plaintiff paid to the defendant as the cost of the boilers $7,200 at San Francisco, and in addition $3,200 freight money to get them to the place in Siberia where they were to be used. After being set up, and an attempt made to use them, it was there found that they did not comply with the warranty as to their potentiality. This probably was because the design or plan upon which they were built was wrong. Testimony was given that they were of no value and were worthless. Viewing this testimony as relating to their value in Siberia, it amply supported the finding as to damages in the sum of $7,200.

Testimony, however, was given to the effect that changes could be made in the boilers at San Francisco at a cost of $500, which would have corrected the defects in the boilers so that they would have complied with the warranty.

The general rule undoubtedly is that damages, in case of a breach of warranty of quality of personal property sold, are to be estimated with reference to values at the time and place of delivery. But to this rule there are exceptions. Where personal property is sold on a warranty to be used at some place other than the place of sale and delivery, and this is known to the seller, damages may be estimated with reference to values at the place where the property is to be used. In such case the conditions existing at the place where the property is to be used are presumed to be within the contemplation of the parties in making the contract of warranty. The rule is thus stated in Sutherland on Damages (section 671): "Where a contract is made by one to furnish to another a specific article of a designated description, to be used for a particular purpose, or for use at another place, and the destination, purpose, and use are known to him who agrees to furnish it, and the article furnished is defective for the purpose, and not according to the contract, the damages occasioned by reason of such defects, with reference to the purpose and place, are direct and recoverable. The measure is the difference between the value of the article received and of that contracted for at the place and for the purpose contemplated." In the case of Bridge v. Wain, 1 Starkie, 504, an action for damages for breach of warranty on goods sold in England for resale in China, it was held that damages should be assessed with reference to values in China. In Converse v. Burrows, 2 Minn. 229 (Gil. 191), the action was for damages for breach of warranty of the quality of pork sold and delivered at Davenport, Iowa, but for use at Ft. Ridgley, Minn. It was held that the damages were to be assessed with reference to values at the place where the pork was to be used. The court cited Bridge v. Wain, supra, and said, "The general rule of damages on a breach of warranty on a sale of personal property * * * is the difference between the article sold in its defective condition and the market value of the article at the place where it was to be used in the condition represented by the vendor." The same principle was applied in the case of Thorne v. McVeagh, 75 Ill. 81, where hams were sold in Chicago to supply a customer of the purchaser at Salt Lake City. The same rule is supported by Reese v. Miles, 99 Tenn. 398, 41 S. W. 1065; Lewis v. Rountree, 79 N. C. 122, 28 Am. Rep. 309, and Messmore v. N. Y. Shot & Lead Co., 40 N. Y. 422. In the case at bar the defendant agreed to make two boilers for plaintiff, according to a design, originated and patented by defendant. With full knowledge that the boilers were to be sent to a distant point in Siberia, where they were to be set up and used to operate engines on boats on the Amoor river, he warranted that they would generate steam of 200 pounds pressure, with a certain designated consumption of fuel. The evidence shows that they utterly failed to do it, and, in Siberia at least, were of no value. Under these circumstances there can be no doubt that plaintiff in fact suffered much more damage than the cost price of the boilers in San Francisco, for in addition he paid $3,200 freight money to get the boilers to the place where they were to be used.

Unless plaintiff was charged with the duty of ascertaining in San Francisco whether or not the warranty had been fulfilled, it would seem that the plainest principles of justice require that he should receive compensation for his damages, with reference to values in Siberia. In this connection it has been urged very earnestly by appellant that plaintiff, under the contract and the circumstances of this case, should have ascertained at San Francisco whether or not a breach of warranty had occurred, at least to the extent that, if he did not, he could only recover damages with reference to conditions and values at San Francisco. At the time the contract was made plaintiff was at San Francisco. Defendant by the contract agreed that "every endeavor shall be made to ship the boilers in May, 1898," but in fact did not have them ready for shipment until about a year later than the expected time. In the meantime plaintiff had returned to Siberia. The contract contained a provision as follows: "Boilers to be set up complete in shop, and tested to 300 lbs. cold water pressure, and all made tight, and then steam to be got up, and after all is made tight and satisfactory, take down and mark all the parts," etc. The primary purpose of this test seems to be to ascertain the tightness of the joints and strength of boilers as to bursting point. At any rate it is not at all certain that by such test the defect of the boilers as to their potentiality could have been ascertained. Indeed the defendant himself testified that the test required by the contract was made in his presence, and he discovered no defect in the boilers as to their potentiality. Yet when the test of actual use in the operation of an engine was applied in Siberia, the boilers did not meet the requirements of the warranty. After the boilers had been taken down and prepared for shipment, as required by the terms of the contract, the only reasonable opportunity of ascertaining whether or not the boilers came up to the warranty would be in Siberia. This brings this case within the doctrine of Shearer v. Park Nursery Co., 103 Cal. 415, 37 Pac. 412, 42 Am. St. Rep. 125, where it is said "that the time to which the warranty refers is the time when the breach thereof is, or with due diligence might be, discovered by the purchaser." Under the facts of this case we cannot say, as a matter of law, that plaintiff was wanting in diligence in not discovering the breach of warranty until after the boilers were attempted to be used in Siberia. The finding of the court that plaintiff was damaged to the amount of $7,200 is therefore sustained by the evidence.

The court found the amount of plaintiff's damages to be $7,200, together with legal interest thereon from October 10, 1900, for which judgment was entered accordingly. Appellant insists that, this being an action to recover unliquidated damages, no interest should have been allowed on the amount found as damages. This contention we think must be sustained. The damages in this case were not certain upon the face of the contract, and could not be made certain by calculation. They could not be determined except from evidence as to values in Siberia. The fact that the court, after hearing the evidence, fixed upon the price paid by plaintiff as the amount of the damages does not show that the damages, until so fixed, were certain or could be made certain by calculation. This case as to interest seems to be fully covered by Hewes v. German Fruit Co., 106 Cal. 441, 39 Pac. 853, which was an action for damages for refusal to accept and pay for raisins; and it was held that the damages to the seller was the difference between the contract price and the value of the property, but without interest. See, also, Brady v. Wilcoxson, 44 Cal. 239; Coburn v. Goodall, 72 Cal. 498, 14 Pac. 490, 1 Am. St. Rep. 75; Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164; Ferreira v. Chabot, 121 Cal. 233, 53 Pac. 689, 1092. Respondent urges that the judgment for interest may be sustained under section 3288 of the Civil Code, upon the theory that the complaint alleges fraud. The allegations of the complaint are not sufficient to sustain a complaint for fraud. The allegations relied on are purely as to matters of opinion, and are not sufficient to charge a fraud. Rendell v. Scott, 70 Cal. 514, 11 Pac. 779; Nounnan v. Sutter County Land Co., 81 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 515, 6 L. R. A. 219. In Rendell v. Scott, supra, the allegations relied on to support a charge of fraud were that certain land was the best ranch in Ione valley, and was very rich and productive, and would produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre, that a portion was good alfalfa land, and that another portion was rich in mineral deposits, all of which were said to be merely matters of opinion. In the case at bar the allegations pertinent to this question are that defendant represented that the boiler in question was a great improvement upon all other boilers, and was superior to all other boilers, and was able to perform the work for which it was to be made. All of this was clearly matter of opinion and "puffing." Besides, the complaint fails to allege that any of these statements were made with intent to deceive plaintiff, or to induce him to enter into the contract. Civ. Code, § 1572. The complaint does not state a case of fraud, and the judgment for interest cannot be supported on that theory, and the judgment should be modified by reducing the same to the sum of $7,200, as of the date of the entry of said judgment.

There are no other questions that merit discussion.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed, and the judgment is modified, as of the date of the entry thereof, to wit, March 7, 1903, so as to read as follows: "Wherefore, by reason of the law and the finding aforesaid, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that C. Krasilnikoff, plaintiff, have and recover from P. F. Dundon, defendant, the sum of $7,200, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum, from this 7th day of March, 1903, until paid, together with said plaintiff's costs and disbursements incurred in this action, amounting to the sum of $89"; and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

Defendant recovers his costs of this appeal.

PEOPLE v. EVERETT. (Cr. 72.)

The requirements of Pen. Code, § 1174, that extension of time for presentation of bill of exceptions may be had only on affidavit and two days' written notice, if jurisdictional, as has been held, cannot be waived, as jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent.

2. PROHIBITION—REMEDY BY APPEAL.

Prohibition is not the proper remedy to prevent settlement of a bill of exceptions, on the ground that the extension of time for presenting the same was without compliance with jurisdictional requirements; there being an adequate remedy by appeal.

Code, Civ. Proc. § 473, authorizing relief to a party from his default through mistake or inadvertence, applies where he procured extension of time, in a criminal case, for presenting bill of exceptions, without compliance with the jurisdictional requirements of an affidavit and written notice.

Petition by the people, on the relation of the district attorney of Calaveras county, for writ of prohibition against Luther Everett, to restrain settlement of bill of exceptions in the case of the people against Luther Everett. Denied.

James Keith, Dist. Atty., for the People. Solinsky & Wehe, John Hancock, Snyder & Snyder, and C. E. McLaughlin, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is a proceeding instituted by the district attorney of Calaveras county to secure a writ of prohibition restraining the judge of the superior court of said county from settling a bill of exceptions in the above-entitled cause. The application is based upon the ground that the said judge extended the time within which defendant might prepare and present his bill beyond the statutory period, and that "neither the defendant nor his counsel nor any person in his behalf either made, or presented, or filed, as required by section 1174 of the Penal Code, any affidavit of any kind or character with the judge of the said superior court or with the district attorney, or with any person for said judge, showing any necessity or reason for any extension of time within which to prepare and present said bill of exceptions, and that neither the defendant nor his counsel, nor any person on his behalf, notified or served upon the district attorney any notice of any kind or character at any time prior or subsequent to the securing of the order extending the time in which to prepare and present said bill of exceptions." There were three separate orders made, the first extending the time for 30, the second for 10 additional, and the third for 4 more days, and the bill was actually presented 23 days after the statutory period had expired. Section 1174 of the Penal Code provides: "The time specified in this section and section eleven hundred and seventy-one, within which the draft of a bill of exceptions must be presented to the judge or delivered to the clerk, may be extended for a reasonable period by the trial judge, or in his absence from the county or inability to act, by a justice of the Supreme Court, but only for good cause and, upon affidavit showing the necessity therefor, presented upon written notice of at least two days to the adverse party who shall have the right to file counter affidavits."

The contention of respondent is that there was a substantial compliance with the requirement of the statute in that the district attorney was present in court, and consented to the continuance, and that good cause was shown to the court, although not by affidavit, why the order should be made. It is asserted that the requirement that the district attorney be given 2 days' notice is for the protection of this official, and that the affidavit is for the benefit of the court, and that an opportunity to make a timely objection, if no advantage is taken of it, constitutes a waiver of these requirements. It was held, however, by this court in People v. Blis, 3 Cal. App. 309, 84 Pac. 676, and People v. Simmons (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 48, that these requirements are jurisdictional. If so, they cannot be waived, and it is well settled that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent. In People v. Soto (Cal. App.) 96 Pac. 913, Mr. Justice Taggart, of the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, expresses a somewhat different view, in which Presiding Justice Allen concurs, as follows: "The court being in session, the counsel for the respective parties being present, and the district attorney making a statement of the facts relative to the possibility of having the record of the proceedings upon the trial transcribed in time to prepare the bill, this was a statement of fact which the court was entitled to consider as a showing of cause and equivalent to the affidavit required by section 1174. The district attorney being present and consenting to the order, when there was still abundant time for the defendant to comply with the statutory provision as to service of notice, was a waiver of service of notice, and gave the court jurisdiction." My own judgment, however, yields assent rather to the views expressed in the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice Shaw. To say that in that case or in this there was a substantial compliance with the provisions of the statute is to declare, it seems to me, that the opinion of the judge as to what is necessary to give the court jurisdiction is to be substituted for the will of the Legislature, and that the latter did not mean what its plain language imports. This would be a judicial usurpation of the legislative function. The requirements are simple, within the legislative authority, are provided for a wise purpose, and they should be observed.

But it has been held that prohibition is not the proper remedy. As pointed out in the said concurring opinion in the Soto Case, supra, petitioner has an adequate remedy by appeal. Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal.

220, 74 Pac. 765; Cross v. Superior Court, 2 Cal. App. 342, 83 Pac. 815; Hayes v. Board of Trustees, etc. (Cal. App.) 92 Pac. 492.

Again, basing its action upon affidavits filed on behalf of defendant, the court made an order relieving him of his default, as provided in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It was held in the Soto Case, supra, that said section is applicable to proceedings of this character, and while the neglect of defendant to comply with the requirement of the statute in presenting the bill of exceptions is manifest, we cannot say it was inexcusable, or that the trial court abused its discretion in setting aside the default.

The alternative writ is dismissed, and the petition denied.

I concur: HART, J.

CHIPMAN, P. J.

I concur.

In People v. Blis the question as to whether prohibition is the appropriate remedy in such a case as this was not pressed nor was it seriously considered by the court. The main object of both parties was to obtain a construction of the statute for the first time brought to the attention of the appellate court.

There is a growing disposition, which should not be encouraged, to take advantage of original writs, notwithstanding that by an appeal a plain, speedy and adequate remedy is furnished.

There are no special or peculiar circumstances in the present case which should take it out of the operation of the rule governing the issuance of the writ.

CENTRAL OIL CO. OF LOS ANGELES v.
SOUTHERN REFINING CO.

(L. A. 2,073.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1908.)

1. CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—BREACH—EFFECT—"VOID AND OF NO EFFECT."

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1511, 1512, 1514, declaring what acts shall excuse performance, and providing that, where performance is prevented by the creditor, the debtor is entitled to all the benefits which he would have obtained if the obligation had been performed by both parties, etc., a provision in a contract for the sale and purchase of a designated quantity of oil, as ordered by the buyer from month to month, that a violation thereof shall render the agreement "void and of no effect," only means that a party, by violating the contract, loses his rights under it, but the contract remains in force to protect the rights of the other party, who may maintain an action for damages for such violation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7339-7340.]

2. SALES—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract for the sale and purchase of from 60,000 to 108,000 barrels of oil, to be delivered as ordered by the buyer, provided that not less than 5,000 nor more than 9,000 barrels shall be delivered in any month, requires the buyer to take a minimum of 5,000 barrels each month, and the buyer, ordering the maximum quantity during certain months, is not relieved from the necessity of purchasing the minimum quantity in succeeding months.

3. DAMAGES — INTEREST — LOST PROFITS — BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 3287, providing that one entitled to damages capable of being made certain by calculation is entitled to interest from the day the right to recover vested in him, a seller in a contract for the sale of oil to be delivered monthly, as ordered by the buyer, is entitled to interest on the profits lost by the buyer failing to take the oil in accordance with the contract, to be reckoned from the date of the filing of the complaint in an action by the seller.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 141.]

4. SALES—VALIDITY—EXISTENCE OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

A contract for the sale and purchase of oil produced from the seller's wells, to be delivered as ordered by the buyer, provided that not less than 5,000 nor more than 9,000 barrels shall be delivered in any month during the term of the contract, which shall commence on a designated date and continue monthly for one year, is an agreement to sell and deliver in the future, and is authorized by Civ. Code, §§ 1726, 1729, 1730, 1754, providing that any property which, if in existence, may be the subject of sale, may be the subject of an agreement of sale, whether in existence or not, etc., and is not void under section 1722, declaring that the subject of sale must be property, the title to which can be immediately transferred.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Action by the Central Oil Company of Los Angeles against the Southern Refining Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McNutt & Hannon and B. M. Marble, for appellant. Percy R. Wilson and W. W. Middlecoff, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff and defendant entered into a contract whereby plaintiff agreed to deliver to defendant oil produced from plaintiff's wells, as follows: "From sixty thousand (60,000) to one hundred eight thousand (108,000) barrels of forty-two (42) gallons each, to be delivered as ordered by second party (Southern Refining Company), within one year from the first day of July, 1904, provided that not less than five thousand (5,000) nor more than nine thousand (9,000) barrels shall be delivered in any month during the term of this contract.

* * * This contract shall commence with the 1st day of July, 1904, and continue monthly thereafter for the period of one year and the violation of any of the terms or conditions thereof by either party hereto shall work a forfeiture thereof, and this agreement shall thereupon become void and of no effect." Plaintiff sued for damages for breach of this contract, the breach consisting in the failure and refusal of defendant to take the oil in accordance with the terms of the contract. The court found the breach, and awarded damages based upon the difference between the contract price of the oil and the market price of oil at plaintiff's wells for the months during which defendant refused to take plaintiff's product.

Upon appeal appellant's first and principal contention is that by force of the terms of the contract itself, when defendant violated it, the agreement became "void and of no effect," that this provision means that the violation terminated the contract, and that consequently plaintiff had no right of recovery under it. Clearly appellant misconstrues the force of the language upon which it relies. That language means that, by a violation of the terms of the contract, the rights of the party violating it cease, and, as to that party and to that extent, the agreement becomes void and of no effect. It would be an extraordinarily unreasonable construction to give the language the meaning for which appellant contends. It would work the destruction of the contract itself and leave this solemn writing as an expression of the mere whim of the parties, for "a promise which is made conditional upon the will of the promisor is generally of no value, for one who promises to do a thing only if it pleases him to do it, is not bound to perform it at all." 9 Cyc. of L. & P. p. 618. Performance by the party not in fault is always excused by the wrongful refusal to perform by the other party. The rights of the party in fault come to an end, but the contract is nevertheless kept in force so as to protect the rights of the innocent party and to enforce the obligations of the delinquent party. Civ. Code, §§ 1511, 1512, 1514. Such has uniformly been the construction put upon language such as this when found in contracts. Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 Pac. 629, 52 Am. Rep. 310; Mancius v. Sergeant, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 271, note; Dana v. St. Paul Investment Co., 42 Minn. 196, 44 N. W. 55; Westervelt v. Huiskamp, 101 Iowa, 202, 70 N. W. 125; Raymond v. Caton, 24 Ill. 123.

The court construed the contract as requiring defendant to take a minimum of 5,000 barrels of oil each month, and refused to allow any excess over the 5,000 barrels which defendant might have taken in any month to be considered as applicable to the purchases of succeeding months. To illustrate, if defendant had used 40,000 barrels in the first six months, the minimum which it was required to use being only 30,000 barrels, the court refused to treat the excess of 10,000 barrels as covering purchases for the two succeeding months. In this we think the court was clearly right. Defendant was entitled to purchase up to the amount of 9,000 barrels every month, but the fact that it purchased 9,000 barrels for two or three or four months, when perchance the price of oil was high, would not relieve it from the necessity of purchasing 5,000 barrels for each succeeding month, when perchance the price of oil had fallen below the contract price. In making its computations the court seems to have fallen into a clerical error amounting to $250. In other words, it found the lost profits of plaintiff to be $6,500, when the lost profits were actually $6,250. Respondent contends that it was entitled to interest from the date of the filing of the complaint upon the $6,250 actual profit, and that this interest far exceeds the $250 allowed. Respondent's contention in this respect is sound. Civ. Code, § 3287; Cutting Fruit Packing Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 692, 75 Pac. 564.

The final contention of appellant is that the sale was void under sections 1722 and 1730 of the Civil Code; it purporting to be a sale of property in esse, but the contract on its face is clearly an agreement to sell and deliver in the future. Such a contract is expressly authorized by sections 1726, 1729, 1730, and 1754 of the Civil Code. Section 1730 provides that any property which, if in existence, might be the subject of sale, may be the subject of an agreement of sale, whether in existence or not.

For which reasons the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; LORIGAN, J.

STRONG et al. v. BALDWIN et al. (L. A. 2,069.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1908.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—RIPARIAN RIGHTS—CONVEYANCES.

Where a tract of land abuts on a stream and a parcel thereof not contiguous to the stream is conveyed by the owner, the riparian right of the portion so conveyed may also be conveyed; and, when that is done, the riparian right remains, and is parcel of the land.

2. SAME.

Where a tract of land abutting on a stream is partitioned in court proceedings, and appropriate provision for riparian rights is made in the decree as to the parcels allotted thereby which do not abut on the stream, the riparian rights remain and constitute a parcel of the land so allotted.

3. SAME.

An owner of land abutting on a stream conveyed parcels not abutting thereon by deeds purporting to convey with the land "the same rights to the use of water that appertained" to the land in the hands of the owner, or by deeds conveying the land "together with the water rights and privileges as pertaining to the settlement of" the grantor, etc. The lands conveyed were dependent for water on the stream. Held, that the deeds made the riparian rights parcel to the land conveyed, and such rights passed as such in all subsequent conveyances of the land.

4. SAME.

Where land conveyed abutted on a river, no special provision was necessary to carry the riparian rights.

5. SAME.

An owner conveyed land abutting on a river. A decree of partition allotted with each parcel of land "all riparian rights and privileges." Held, that parcels of land not abutting on the stream were entitled to riparian rights as parcels of the land.

6. SAME—WATER RIGHTS—ACQUISITION—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHTS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to justify a finding that owners of land had prior to a designated year acquired by prescription title to a ditch over the land of another, together with the right to conduct through it a designated quantity of water for purposes of irrigation.

7. ADVERSE POSSESSION—PAYMENT OF TAXES—NECESSITY—STATUTES.

Where a title by prescription was complete prior to the amendment of 1878 to Code Civ. Proc. § 325, making the payment of taxes an element of adverse possession, the amendment has no application.

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHTS—EXTINGUISHMENT.

Owners of land acquired by prescription title to an irrigation ditch through the land of a third person, with a right to conduct through it a designated quantity of water. The third person subsequently executed leases of the right to carry water through the ditch, which leases were signed by persons purporting to represent the owners of the land irrigated from the ditch, but who were not connected with the owners. The leases were for a nominal rent. Other leases were executed to and signed by persons purporting to act as water commissioners for a district for a mere nominal rent, and other leases were executed to a corporation organized for the irrigation of lands. The owners were in possession of the property at the time of the execution of all the leases. Held, that their prescriptive rights were not extinguished under Civ. Code, § 811, providing that a servitude is extinguished by disuse for the period prescribed for acquiring title by enjoyment, etc.

9. LANDLORD AND TENANT — ESTOPPEL OF LESSEE TO ASSERT TITLE AS AGAINST LESSOR—APPLICATION OF DOCTRINE.

An owner of realty accepting a lease thereof from a claimant thereto, while he himself is in possession, and who has not at any time received the possession from the lessor, is not estopped by the lease from asserting his title as against the lessor, and this rule applies in cases of water rights.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Landlord and Tenant, § 154.]

10. EASEMENTS — ACQUISITION — PRESCRIPTION—EXTINGUISHMENT.

A title by prescription is as effectual and complete as one obtained by a conveyance, and, unless extinguished by virtue of special statutory provisions like Civ. Code, § 811, prescribing the conditions for the extinguishment of a servitude, continues until conveyed by the possessor or lost by another adverse possession for the required time.

11. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—PRESCRIPTION—RIGHTS ACQUIRED.

Owners of land acquired by prescription title to an irrigation ditch over the land of another, with a right to carry through it a specified quantity of water. The third person subsequently claimed to be the owner of the ditch, and executed leases therefor. The owners were in possession of the property at the time of the execution of the leases, and never entered into possession under the third person. Held that, though the effect of the leases might be to prevent the acquiring of title by prescription, they did not operate to divest a title acquired by prescription.

12. SAME—ISSUES—DECREE.

Where the real object of a suit was to obtain a decree declaring that certain parties were without any right to the waters of a stream, and persons not parties to the action owned land bordering on the stream, and the evidence was not sufficient to enable the court to determine the relative rights of the parties to the waters of the stream, the court did not err in refusing to determine the quantity of water the respective parties were entitled to use as riparian owners.

13. SAME.

Where a judgment did not purport to define the extent of the riparian rights in a stream, the question whether the allegations in the pleadings were sufficiently certain as to the extent of the riparian rights was immaterial.

14. SAME.

In a suit to obtain a decree enjoining a party from interfering with the use of an irrigation ditch, a pleading which clearly sets forth the facts constituting the basis of the claims of the parties to the waters of the stream and the right to have the same pass through the ditch is sufficient, though it is uncertain whether the parties are entitled to the waters as riparian owners or by adverse use.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by Harriet W. R. Strong and another against E. J. Baldwin and another, in which E. J. Baldwin filed a cross-complaint against plaintiffs and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs and cross-defendants, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See 137 Cal. 432, 70 Pac. 288.

Works, Lee & Works, for appellants. C. L. Batcheller, J. S. Chapman, and Ward Chapman, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was instituted by Harriet W. R. Strong and Julius B. Cohn, the owners of certain parcels of land in the Rancho Paso de Bartolo Viejo, sometimes known and hereinafter designated as the "Ranchito," in Los Angeles county, against E. J. Baldwin and H. A. Unruh (who is simply an agent of said Baldwin and has no other interest in the subject-matter of the litigation), to obtain a decree enjoining them from interfering with plaintiffs in their use and control of a certain water ditch known as the "Rincon ditch," connecting with the San Gabriel river at a point on the Rancho La Puente, which is owned by Baldwin, and extending for a distance of about a mile on said Rancho La Puente to and into said Ranchito, and used by various property owners in said Ranchito for obtaining water for irrigation and domestic purposes, and also enjoining them from interfering with plaintiffs in the diversion of the waters of said river by means of said ditch.

The theory of the complaint was that the plaintiffs and other owners of property in said Ranchito and their predecessors in title had acquired by prescription the ownership of said ditch for the purpose of diverting to their lands for irrigation purposes waters of the San Gabriel river to the full capacity of the ditch, alleged to be 600 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, and the right to divert that amount of water by means of the ditch. Defendants by their answer denied the alleged ownership of plaintiffs and other owners of property in the Ranchito in either ditch or water, alleging Baldwin to be the sole owner thereof, and that any use by them of such water was had solely by and with his consent and for an annual rental. Baldwin also filed a cross-complaint against plaintiffs, and other persons, hereinafter called cross-defendants. In this he alleged his ownership of the Puente Rancho and other tracts; that the same border upon and are riparian to the San Gabriel river, and that all of the waters of said river are needed for the proper irrigation of his said land and for domestic purposes; that he is the owner of the Rincon ditch so far as the same is on the Puente Rancho; that the plaintiffs and cross-defendants, owners or claimants of real estate near the San Gabriel river but not riparian thereto, claim to be owners of said ditch and the waters diverted thereby, but have no interest therein; and that their claim is wholly without right. He asked that they be required to show by what right they claimed any such interest, and that it be decreed that he is the owner of said ditch and all the waters therein. The plaintiffs and cross-defendants answered this cross-complaint, denying that all of said water was necessary for the irrigation of his lands, and also denying Baldwin's allegations as to the ownership of said ditch and water, admitting that some of them were not owners of land riparian to the stream, but alleging that others of them were owners of such land, without stating which of them owned riparian land and which nonriparian land, and alleging that they were the owners by prescription of said ditch with a right to divert and carry through the same to their lands for purposes of irrigation the waters of the San Gabriel river to the full capacity of the ditch.

Upon a trial of the issues thus made, the superior court found that the ditch was constructed by the predecessor in title of plaintiffs and cross-defendants more than 40 years before the filing of the cross-complaint, and that ever since its construction it had been adversely used by them and their predecessors in title to the extent of its capacity, found to be sufficient to deliver upon their lands 400 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure constant flow, for the purpose of diverting to their lands for irrigation purposes the waters of said river, and that they were the owners by prescription of said ditch and the right to divert therethrough, for irrigation and domestic purposes, the waters of said river to the extent aforesaid. Judgment was given accordingly. Upon an appeal to this court by defendants and the cross-complainant, this judgment and an order denying a new trial were reversed. It was held upon the evidence then before the court that unless there was sufficient evidence to support a conclusion that the enjoyment of the easement had ripened into a title thereto by prescription prior to the year 1882, when Baldwin had become the owner of the Puente Rancho, the conclusion of the trial court could not be upheld. Passing the question whether the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conclusion that the ditch had been used prior to 1882 for a length of time sufficient to create a prescriptive right to its use, this court held that the evidence did not sustain a finding that it had been so used; "to an extent sufficient to deliver upon the lands of the respondents 400 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure constant flow." For this reason the judgment and order were reversed. See Strong v. Baldwin, 137 Cal. 432, 70 Pac. 288. In view of the disposition of the case on the trial, the question of riparian rights on the part of respondents was not discussed by this court further than to point out, in speaking of a demurrer interposed by Baldwin to the answers to the cross-complaint on the grounds of uncertainty and ambiguity, that a pleading which simply denied that "all of the said parties defendant * * * are owners of tracts of land not riparian to the said stream," and alleged that "many of the said parties are the owners of land through which the said stream flows" was uncertain in not alleging which of said defendants are the owners of riparian land or the quantity of water required for any of their lands as such riparian owners, and that Baldwin was entitled to have their claims in this regard specifically stated.

Upon the going down of the remittitur, the plaintiffs and cross-defendants filed amended answers to such cross-complaint, for the purpose of conforming to this suggestion of this court. In these answers, in addition to the former allegations, the land of each was specifically described, and it was alleged that each was the owner of land riparian to the stream and entitled to riparian rights, whether their tracts actually bordered upon the stream or not, by reason of the fact further alleged that all such land was a part of the original Ranchito through the entire length of which the river has always flowed, and that, in the segregation of said rancho, the riparian rights of said rancho were apportioned among the various tracts of land. They further averred that the waters of said river to the full extent of the capacity of the ditch were necessary for the irrigation of their lands and other lands in said Ranchito having such riparian rights, the owners of which had not been made parties.

On the second trial the trial court found in accord with these allegations of the amended answers. The specific facts found as to the riparian rights were that the whole Ranchito was riparian to San Gabriel river; that the same was the property of Pio Pico under grant from the Mexican government; that said Pico first conveyed divers tracts of said land to divers parties and in making said conveyances also conveyed with the lands proportional interests in the waters of the river belonging to said Ranchito; that he then sold all the unsold portion of the Ranchito consisting of 3,785 acres, shown by the evidence to be riparian to said river, to one B. Cohn, who acquired the same in trust for himself and defendants Broderick and Prager; and that said 3,785-acre tract was subsequently partitioned among the owners thereof in an action brought for that purpose, the decree in such action allotting, as the evidence shows, with each parcel of land "all riparian rights and privileges." The plaintiffs and cross-defendants were found to be the successors in title under said Pico. It was further found that the ditch was capable of carrying 450 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure, and had been adversely used by plaintiffs and cross-defendants and their successors under said deeds of Pico, and their predecessors in title, to the extent of its capacity, for the diversion of the waters of said river for the irrigation of their lands and domestic purposes, for the period of time sufficient to give them title by prescription to such ditch, with the right to take such amount of water therein for such purpose. With respect to the right of the use of the waters of the river as distinguished from the ditch itself, the court found that the use by respondents was not adverse to Baldwin, that all the parties to the action have rights to the use of the waters of San Gabriel river as riparian owners, but that the evidence before the court was not sufficient to enable the court to make findings as to the relative rights of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants on the one hand, and of Baldwin on the other. The conclusion of the trial court, as shown by the judgment, was that plaintiffs and the cross-defendants are the owners of said ditch over the land of Baldwin, with the right as riparian owners to divert the waters of the river by means thereof to the extent of 450 inches measured under a 4-inch pressure, and to conduct the same through said ditch to their lands and the lands of their co-owners in said ditch, for irrigation and domestic purposes, subject to the limitation that the right to the use of the waters to such extent is not to be construed as a prior or paramount right to the waters of said river, or a prior or paramount right to take the same at the point of diversion, "except when such amount is not in excess of the rights of the owners of said Rincon ditch as riparian proprietors in the waters of the river." It was further expressly adjudged that all the parties, including Baldwin, are riparian owners on said river, and as such entitled to divert waters therefrom for use on their lands, "but nothing herein contained shall be construed as adjudging or determining the quantity to which either of them is entitled, or the proportion of such water which either is entitled to divert or use as against the others."

This is an appeal by defendants from the judgment thus given, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

1. With respect to the question of riparian rights on the part of plaintiffs and cross-defendants, the findings of the trial court that all of such parties have riparian rights in the waters of the San Gabriel river are attacked as not being supported by the evidence. As we have seen, the land of some of these parties does not border upon the stream, but it does not necessarily follow that such land is without such riparian rights. When a tract of land abuts on a stream and a portion thereof not contiguous to the stream is conveyed by the owner, the riparian right of the portion so conveyed in the stream may also be conveyed with the land, as is fully recognized in the case cited by learned counsel for appellants (Anaheim, etc., Co. v. Fuller, 150 Cal. 331, 88 Pac. 978), and, when so conveyed, is still a riparian right with all the attributes of such right, and is in strict technical language "parcel of the land" conveyed. The same is necessarily true where a tract of land abutting on a stream is partitioned in court proceedings among the owners thereof, and appropriate provision for riparian rights is made in the decree as to the portions allotted by the decree which do not abut on the stream. See Rose v. Mesmer, 142 Cal. 322, 75 Pac. 905; Verdugo, etc., Co. v. Verdugo (Cal.) 93 Pac. 1021. This is not a case, as suggested by appellants, of attempting to make riparian lands, which are not in fact riparian, but is simply the preservation of the right which the land has at the time of the conveyance or decree. In the case at bar the land of some of these plaintiffs and cross-defendants abuts on the stream, and as to such land there is, of course, no question. As to the land of the others, we think it sufficiently appears that the riparian rights were preserved. It is clear upon the record that at least a portion of each of such parcels has always been dependent for irrigation on the waters of said river, and has always been irrigated by means of said waters. All the original deeds of conveyance made by Pico for portions of the Rancho which do not abut on the river contained either one or the other of two provisions regarding water. For instance, the deed of Pico to William R. Standifer and A. H. Dunlap, made May 13, 1875, purported to convey with the land "the same rights to the use of water that appertained to said land in the hands of the party of the first part," and the deed from Pico to plaintiff Harriet W. R. Strong, dated October 18, 1867, conveyed 320 acres of land, "together with the water rights and privileges as pertaining to the settlement of Pico, to wit: Sixteen water shares, representing the privileges to water for sixteen times twenty acres, paying for the same as water used in said settlement." In the light of the fact that these lands were then dependent for water on this river, there cannot reasonably be any doubt that it was the intention of each of these provisions to preserve the riparian right of the land conveyed. The effect of such provision in the Pico deeds was therefore, in each case to make the riparian right "parcel of the land" conveyed, and it passed as such in all subsequent conveyances of such land. As we have seen, the 3,785-acre tract conveyed by Pico to B. Cohn, and held by him in trust for himself, Broderick, and Prager, abutted on the river, and therefore no special provision was necessary to carry the riparian right. So far as we have been able to ascertain from the records, no specific portion of this tract had been segregated by conveyance at the time of the partition decree. As already stated, that decree allotted with each parcel of land "all riparian rights and privileges," thus making the same "parcel of the land," as in the case of the conveyances from Pico. All of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants whose land does not abut on the river hold either under such deeds from Pico or under the partition decree. From what we have said, it follows that they are all riparian owners as to the San Gabriel river, even though their land does not abut thereon.

2. The findings as to the adverse use of the ditch to the extent of its capacity by plaintiffs, cross-defendants, their co-owners, and their predecessors in title, for a period of time sufficient to give them title thereto for such purpose by prescription, are also assailed on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to support them. It may be assumed that these findings can be sustained only on the theory that the enjoyment of the easement had ripened into a title by prescription prior to the year 1882. As to the ditch itself, there can be no doubt that there was sufficient evidence to sustain such a conclusion. There was substantial evidence that it was constructed as early as the year 1855, and had ever since been used for the purpose of conducting water from the point of diversion to the Ranchito, then occupied by Pico and his tenants, for the irrigation of the lands thereof. The trial court found it was in fact constructed by Pico, and, while there is no direct evidence to this effect, it is fairly inferable from the location of the ditch and the purpose to which it was devoted that it was so constructed. From that time until the year 1882 the use thereof by Pico and his tenants and successors was continuous, open and notorious, with the full knowledge of the owners of the Puente Rancho, at least from the year 1861. Those interested in the Ranchito during all this time apparently claimed and treated the ditch as their own property, and there is nothing to indicate that any consent to such use on the part of the owners of the Puente Rancho was ever obtained or sought. But it is specially urged that there was no foundation in the evidence for the conclusion that a prescriptive right to conduct through said ditch 450 inches of water measured under a 4-inch pressure existed in the year 1882, shortly after Baldwin acquired the Puente Rancho. This, it will be remembered, was the matter by reason of which the former judgment was reversed; the superior court then finding an adverse use to an extent sufficient to deliver 450 inches of water on the Ranchito. Upon the second trial, additional evidence on this matter was presented. Frederick Lambourne, who was on the Puente Rancho as private tutor and manager of the ranch for 14 years, from 1861 to 1875, and who was very familiar with the ditch, had examined it after the first trial, and testified that it was the same ditch virtually, and that he could not tell that there was any difference in the size. Mr. Rowan, a civil engineer, testified that he measured the waters therein on the Ranchito on October 25, 1903, and found flowing therein 149½ inches, and that the ditch was not more than one-third full. Mr. A. H. Dunlap testified that he knew the ditch from 1873, and that the water had been conducted through it to the extent of 600 inches from 1873 down, when the water was in the river to get; that in the early spring the ditch was full of water usually, and had 600 inches of water or over, diminishing as the year advanced; that there had been no general enlargement of the ditch since 1873; that it is just about the same now as when he first knew it. Mrs. Strong testified that the ditch is not quite as large now as it was in the early 70's. In addition to this, all the testimony given on the first trial was read in evidence on the second trial, and this showed from 400 to 500 inches running in the ditch in 1896 and 1897. There was in all this sufficient support for a conclusion that the ditch had been continuously used by the occupants of the Ranchito during the portions of each year when irrigation was required and the water to be had, up to the year 1882, in conducting water to the extent of its capacity. The findings upon this branch of the case were, therefore, not contrary to the evidence. There is nothing in the opinion on the former appeal, as we read it, that precludes us from so holding.

It appears that this ditch has never been assessed separately from the land, but that the Puente Rancho was always assessed wholly to Baldwin, and that he paid the taxes thereon. It is urged, in view of these circumstances, that under section 325, Code Civ. Proc., title by prescription could not have been acquired by plaintiffs and cross-defendants. A sufficient answer to this claim is that their title by prescription was complete prior to the amendment of section 325, Code Civ. Proc., making the payment of taxes an element of adverse possession, which amendment was enacted in 1878, and that such amendment therefore has no application. Lucas v. Provines, 130 Cal. 270, 62 Pac. 509. From what has been said, it appears that respondent must be held to have had a perfect title by prescription in the year 1882, which was one or two years after Baldwin acquired the Puente Rancho.

It is contended, however, that, even, if such title was so acquired by plaintiffs and cross-defendants, it has been lost by nonuse or abandonment, and also that Baldwin has regained it by adverse user of more than five years. It is admitted that there never has been any cessation in the use by respondents of either ditch or water. To the extent of the use had prior to 1882 and for all the purposes of said use they have been in possession of the ditch ever since 1882, conducting water therein for the purpose of irrigating their lands, and using the same for such irrigation. The claim of abandonment and nonuse on the part of the respondents, as well as the claim that Baldwin has regained the title by adverse possession, is based on the fact that from the year 1882 Baldwin claimed to be the owner of this ditch, and that from the year 1882 to the year 1895 so-called leases of the right to carry water through this ditch were executed by him, one signed by persons using water for irrigation on the Ranchito, and others by persons purporting to represent the owners of the land irrigated from said ditch. The first of these leases, that of 1882, was signed by T. F. Borley and W. T. O'Brien, who, so far as appears, were in no way connected with any of the parties to this action, and was for a mere nominal rent. From 1884 to 1889 such leases were executed to and signed by persons purporting to act as water commissioners of the Rincon Ranchito district, for a mere nominal rental, and for the years 1893, 1894 and 1895, all within five years of the commencement of this action, and the filing of the answers to the cross-complaint, they were executed to the Strong irrigation district, a public corporation organized in 1893 under the laws of this state for the irrigation of the land supplied by the Rincon ditch, for the specific rental of $700, $500, and $675. No conveyance of their rights in either ditch or water was ever made to such irrigation district by any of the property owners, but the district, through its officers and for the property owners, for several years managed and controlled the ditch and distributed the waters to the property owners. Leases for the other years between 1882 and 1895 were not introduced in evidence. In the year 1896 the respondents refused to pay further for the privileges, and, Baldwin interfering with their enjoyment of the ditch, this action was commenced.

It is apparent, we think, that there was in all of this no extinguishment of the right of respondents by reason of any of the provisions of section 811, Civ. Code. So far as relied on by appellants, that section is as follows: "A servitude is extinguished: * * *

(3) By the performance of any act upon either tenement by the owner of the servitude, or with his assent, which is incompatible with its nature or exercise; or (4) When the servitude was acquired by enjoyment, by disuse thereof by the owner of the servitude for the period prescribed for acquiring title by enjoyment." Manifestly subdivision 3 has no application whatever, and the disuse mentioned in subdivision 4 means simply the failure to use the thing itself theretofore used. There has been, as we have seen, no cessation whatever in the use by respondents of this ditch. We must, therefore, look elsewhere for a basis for the conclusion that by reason of these leases they have lost their title acquired by prescription. These instruments could not, of course, operate as a transfer of such title to Baldwin, and can be effectual only as admissions against claim of title and by way of estoppel. It is established in this state, however, that the owner of real property who accepts a lease thereof from another claimant, while he himself is in possession, and who has not at any time received the possession from the lessor, is not estopped by the lease from asserting his title as against such lessor (Pacific Mutual, etc., Co. v. Stroup, 63 Cal. 150; Baldwin v. Temple, 101 Cal. 396, 35 Pac. 1008. See, also, Wood on Limitations [3d Ed.] note p. 614), and this rule has been applied in the case of water rights. See Oneta v. Restano, 89 Cal. 63, 26 Pac. 788 and cases there cited. As before stated, it cannot be held that there ever was any change in the possession of this ditch. It was always used exclusively to convey water to the Ranchito, to be used thereon for irrigation purposes, and for that purpose was always in the possession of respondents and their predecessors, either personally or through their agents, the water commissioners and the irrigation district. The continuity of the possession was not broken by reason of the fact that the ditch was in fact used for conveying water only during the portion of each season when the water was needed for irrigation purposes. See Hesperia, etc., Co. v. Rogers, 83 Cal. 10, 23 Pac. 196, 17 Am. St. Rep. 209. The decisions cited above are therefore applicable. As admissions against any than claim of title, the effect of the leases might be to prevent the acquirement of a title by prescription, but such admissions could not operate to divest a title already acquired. A title so acquired is as effectual and complete as one obtained by a conveyance, and, unless extinguished by virtue of some special statutory provision such as section 811, Civ. Code, continues until conveyed by the possessor or lost by another adverse possession for the required time. Cannon v. Stockmon, 36 Cal. 535, 95 Am. Dec. 205, and cases there cited. See, also, School District, etc., v. Benson, 31 Me. 381, 52 Am. Dec. 618. In view of what must be held to have been a continuous actual possession of the ditch by respondents for the purpose stated, we do not see how Baldwin can be held to have regained the title by adverse possession. Respondents were the absolute owners, and in possession of the property at the time of the execution of all these leases, and never entered into possession under Baldwin, and their possession was not, under the circumstances here existing, his possession.

3. Complaint is made of the failure of the court to find and decree the quantity of water the respective parties were entitled to use as riparian owners, and especially its failure to make findings as to the relative rights in such matter of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants on the one hand, and of Baldwin on the other. The case is manifestly one where the pleading of the party complaining was not presented for the purpose of obtaining an apportionment of certain waters among the riparian owners. It was not drawn on any such theory, and does not recognize the cross-defendants as riparian owners at all. The real object was to obtain a decree declaring the other parties to be without any right whatever in such waters. It may be conceded that the allegations of the pleadings were broad enough to have permitted the determination of this matter if sufficient evidence had been presented thereon. The court was not compelled, however, to determine this question in the absence of evidence sufficient to enable it to do so. It was stipulated on the trial that, as alleged in the answers to the cross-complaint, there were as many as nine persons not parties to the action who owned land in the Ranchito bordering on the river. The extent of the riparian rights of the parties to this action could not be determined without taking into consideration the rights of these other riparian proprietors, as to which there was no evidence whatever, and concerning which there could, of course, be no binding determination in the absence of such owners. But, even if there were no such other owners, our examination of the record has satisfied us that the evidence introduced was not sufficient to enable the court to intelligently determine the relative rights of Baldwin on the one hand, and those of the remaining parties on the other, in the waters of this river. Under such circumstances, the trial court did all that it properly could do by determining that the various parties were riparian owners and leaving the question of the proportions of the water to which each is entitled to be determined in the future. See Bathgate v. Irvine, 126 Cal. 135, 58 Pac. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 158; Coleman v. Le Franc, 137 Cal. 214, 69 Pac. 1011.

4. The trial court overruled demurrers interposed by Baldwin to the amended answers to his cross-complaint on the ground of uncertainty. In view of the disposition of the case by the trial court, it is apparent that it is now immaterial whether the allegations of these answers were sufficiently certain as to the extent of the riparian rights of the plaintiffs and cross-defendants in the waters of the river. The findings and judgment do not purport to define the extent of such right as to any part in the action. It was also urged that such answers were uncertain in not showing whether the pleaders claimed to be the owners or entitled to the waters of San Gabriel river as riparian owners or by adverse use. The answers clearly set forth the facts constituting the basis of the claim of the parties to these waters, which was all that was necessary. According to these allegations, they were all riparian owners, entitled as such to divert from the river water to the extent of the capacity of the Rincon ditch, and had been ever since the construction of said ditch so diverting and using such water openly, notoriously, continuously and under claim of right as against the world. There was no element of uncertainty as to the nature of the claim alleged.

5. Complaint is made that the finding that the Rancho Santa Anita, one of Baldwin's ranches, is not riparian to either the old or the new San Gabriel river, is not sustained by the evidence. This finding is important only in so far as it may bar Baldwin in any future proceeding to determine the extent of the rights of the parties in the waters of the San Gabriel river, from making any claim on account of this ranch. As we understand the evidence given upon this matter, the Santa Anita ranch borders only on the Santa Anita creek by which it is traversed, and which, after running through said ranch, runs over a portion of the San Francisquito ranch. At times of unusually high water or floods, some of the surface water runs into San Gabriel river above the point of diversion by the Pincon ditch, but ordinarily this is not the case. All of the water of the Santa Anita creek available for irrigation purposes is used on the Santa Anita and San Francisquito ranches, and there can be no question as to the rights of the owners thereof to use so much of said water as may be necessary for the irrigation of the lands through which it flows. It could not have been the intention of the trial court to hold otherwise, and we are satisfied that the finding on this question must be construed as not foreclosing the riparian right of the owner of the Santa Anita ranch in the waters of the Santa Anita creek.

The evidence fully sustains the finding that the plaintiffs and cross-defendants never conveyed nor transferred any of their rights in either ditch or water to the Strong irrigation district. So far as that corporation controlled and managed the property, it acted merely as the agent of the owners, and had no interest in the property here involved.

In view of our conclusions upon the matters already discussed, other findings attacked by appellants are immaterial, and there is no other matter discussed by learned counsel that requires attention.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

In re PEABODY'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,221.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 19, 1908.)

1. WILLS — CONSTRUCTION — NATURE OF ESTATE CREATED — CHARITABLE DEVISE — "TRANSFER."

A will drawn entirely by the testatrix, who was an aged woman of education, but unused to technical legal terms, stated her purpose to devote her entire estate to founding and maintaining a temporary resting place for missionary workers, to be called "The House of Rest," and contained the following provisions: "Secondly, I do now give, devise and bequeath all my real estate [describing both real and personal property] to my executors, to be transferred by them to the Woman's Occidental Board of Missions * * * with the executive committee of the Woman's Presbyterian Mission Society of the Los Angeles Presbytery as trustees and managers thereof. * * * Ninthly, all the residue of my property * * * together with real estate which may be sold at any time, it is my wish to have invested as a permanent fund, allowing the income only to be used in aiding to meet the expenses of the House of Rest." Held that, construed in accordance with the statutory rules governing such wills, it was not the intention of the testatrix by the use of the word "transferred" to create an estate in the executors to be by them conveyed to the trustees, but that the executors should take possession and control of the property for administration under the laws of the estate, and in due course of administration should transfer it on final distribution to the trustees, and that, as so construed, the disposition was valid to the extent of one-third of the estate as limited by Civ. Code, § 1313, forbidding charitable devises to the extent of more than one-third of the estate of one leaving heirs.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 36.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 7064-7070, 7819.]

2. CHARITIES—VALIDITY OF TRUST — EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY OF DEVISE.

The fact that a charitable devise or bequest is smaller than intended by a testatrix because under the statute it is limited to one-third of the estate does not render it invalid, where, under the doctrine of cy pres, the courts may authorize its employment to effect the general charitable purpose of the testatrix.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

Appeals from final order of distribution of the estate of Helen Peabody, deceased. Reversed.

Edwin Baxter, for appellants. Hahn & Hahn, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The record presents appeals from the final order of distribution of the estate of Helen Peabody, deceased, and also from the order denying a new trial. The sole question presented is the validity of the disposition of the property of the estate by the will of the deceased. The will purports to give the entire estate in trust for charitable uses. Section 1313 of the Civil Code provides that no such devises or bequests shall collectively exceed one-third of the estate of a decedent leaving legal heirs, and that all dispositions of property to the contrary shall be void. The appellant concedes that under this clause the disposition to charitable uses is void as to two-thirds of the property belonging to the deceased, but contends that it is valid as to the remaining one-third. The will was made on May 23, 1904, more than a year prior to the death of the testatrix, and hence the second clause of section 1313, forbidding all testamentary dispositions to charity, unless the will is executed at least thirty days before the decease of the testator, does not apply.

The serious question presented concerns the validity of the disposition under the rule settled by the decision in Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70, and the subsequent cases following it, to the effect that a disposition of real property to trustees, in trust to convey to another, where there are no words which can be construed to accomplish a direct disposition from the donor or testator to the other person, is void by reason of the provisions of the Civil Code prohibiting such trusts to convey. Estate of Sanford, 136 Cal. 98, 68 Pac. 494; Sacramento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal. 745, 81 Pac. 138; Estate of Dixon, 143 Cal. 513, 77 Pac. 412; Hofsas v. Cummings, 141 Cal. 527, 75 Pac. 110; McCurdy v. Otto, 140 Cal. 51, 73 Pac. 748. Certain rules of interpretation applying particularly to wills and established by the authorities and by the Civil Code have an important bearing on the construction of this will. The important thing is the intention of the testator. Section 1317. This is to be ascertained from the words of the will, taking into view the circumstances under which it was made. Section 1318. All parts of the will are to be considered in relation to each other so as to form, if possible, a consistent whole. Section 1321. Words are to be taken in their ordinary grammatical sense, unless a clear intent to use them otherwise is apparent, and that sense can be ascertained. Section 1324. Technical words are not to be taken in their technical sense if it satisfactorily appears that the will was drawn solely by the testator, and that he was unacquainted with such technical sense. Section 1327. "A technical construction of words and phrases, although prima facie the one which should prevail, will not go to the extent of defeating any obvious general intention of the testator, since wills are often prepared by those wholly unacquainted with the precise technical force of legal formulas." 1 Redp. on Wills, p. 435, § 22. See, also, Estate of Bennett, 134 Cal. 322, 66 Pac. 370; Richardson v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 60, 3 Am. Dec. 24; Homer v. Shelton, 43 Mass. 198; Brimmer v. Sohler, 55 Mass. 129; Carr v. Green, 2 McCord (S. C.) 84; DeKay v. Irving, 5 Denio (N. Y.) 654.

The parts of the will bearing upon this question are as follows:

"First. I wish to testify that my entire, though small estate is the fruitage of a little investment made in 1855, the date of my entering upon my work of thirty-three years of blessed, benevolent labor in the Western Female Seminary, Oxford, Ohio, a work which I laid down in June, 1888.

"Secondly. I do now give, devise and bequeath all my real estate [describing here both real and personal property, including one house and lot in St. Louis, Mo.] to my Executors to be transferred by them to the Woman's Occidental Board of Missions, whose headquarters are now located at 920 Sacramento St., San Francisco, Cal., with the Executive Committee of the Woman's Presbyterial Missionary Society of the Los Angeles Presbytery as trustees and managers thereof.

"Thirdly. This property to be used as a temporary resting place, not for invalids, who can be cared for better elsewhere, but for weary Christian workers, in limited circumstances from either the Home or Foreign field. * * *

"Fifthly. This Home shall be called, The House of Rest. [Here follow other provisions declaring who may be admitted as inmates of The House of Rest and the charges to be made.] * * *

"Ninthly. All the residue of my property, now in bonds, a list of which will be enclosed with this document, together with real estate which may be sold at any time it is my wish to have invested (after paying all debts) as a permanent fund, allowing the income only to be used in aiding to meet the expenses of 'The House of Rest.'"

If the provisions above quoted disclosed an intention to create an estate in the executors to be by them conveyed to the trustee, the case would come within the rule of the Fair Case, but we do not think the testatrix intended such a consequence. The will construed in the Fair Case was drawn with great care, in language of definite technical significance, by some person skilled in law and in the use of legal technical terms, and the intention to vest the title to the real property in trustees, to be afterwards conveyed by them to the remaindermen, was so clearly and accurately expressed that no other interpretation was possible. The court in that case say (132 Cal. 530, 60 Pac. 455, 64 Pac. 1000 [84 Am. St. Rep. 70]): "It is perfectly clear, beyond even a reasonable doubt, that the testator did not intend to devise estates in remainder to persons of the named classes, but intended to devise the whole fee to his trustees, upon trusts to convey, after the expiration of a probably very long period of time, to those persons, so that the latter would receive new estates created by the conveyances." The testatrix in the case at bar wrote the entire will with her own hand. It appears therefrom that the active period of her long life had been spent in teaching in the state of Ohio, and that, although she was cultivated and refined, she was not accustomed to the use of legal terms nor familiar with their technical significance. The words which it is claimed create a trust to convey are these: "I do now give, devise and bequeath all my real estate [describing both real and personal property] to my executors to be transferred by them to the Woman's Occidental Board of Missions." In drawing our Civil Code the codifiers made free use of the word "transfer" to indicate a passing of title to property from one living person to another. Civ. Code, § 1039. It is used in this sense in many sections of the Civil Code, but it is not a word of general use in conveyancing to signify a conveyance of title to property, and outside of this state it cannot be said to have a well-defined technical legal meaning, especially when used as a verb. In ordinary language it has a very general meaning, applying either to the removal of a thing or rights from one place or person to another, the changing of the control or possession of things, or to the conveyance of title. See Webster's Dict. As the life of the testatrix was chiefly spent in teaching in the state of Ohio, it is not reasonable to suppose that she was aware of the legal technical meaning of the word "transfer" in California arising from its use in our Civil Code. Her general intention that the Woman's Occidental Board of Missions should have all her property, and that this property was to be used to establish and maintain "The House of Rest" which she contemplated, is plainly apparent from the entire will. We think, taking the will as a whole, and considering the life and character of the deceased and the circumstances surrounding its execution, that the testatrix meant nothing more by this clause than that the executors, in their representative capacity, should take possession and control of the property for administration under the laws of this state, and in due course of administration should transfer it upon final distribution to the trustees in whom she desired that the title should vest, to be applied to the charitable use she describes. In writing the phrase "to be transferred by them" she was, as she supposed, merely describing the legal process of administration by which the property was to be transmitted to the trustee. Thus understood, the will is harmonious, no trust to convey is created, and her intended disposition is valid, except as to the two-thirds which the law withholds from charitable uses.

It is urged that the amount of the estate applicable thereto is so small that it would be inadequate for the purpose contemplated, and that the disposition is void for that reason. We do not know the value of the house and lot in St. Louis, nor whether, under the law of Missouri, the whole devise is effectual as to that property. The mere fact that one-third only of the California property can be devoted to the establishment of "The House of Rest," and that hence the establishment may be much smaller than the testatrix intended, does not make the devise invalid. The will does not declare that any particular parcel of the land devised shall constitute "The House of Rest," nor where it shall be situated. In aid of the general design it may properly be construed to authorize one-third of the proceeds of all the parcels to be used in procuring a house for that purpose. An inexpensive cottage of a few rooms would answer the purpose to the extent of its capacity. It is not claimed that the amount available will not suffice to accomplish that result. "Courts look with favor upon all attempted charitable donations, and will endeavor to carry them into effect, if it can be done consistently with the rules of law." Estate of Willey, 128 Cal. 12, 60 Pac. 471; Estate of Merchant, 143 Cal. 540, 77 Pac. 475; Fay v. Howe, 136 Cal. 602, 69 Pac. 423. As this court said in Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 512: "We entertain no doubt that in the general devolution upon the courts of this state of all judicial power, with respect to charities, is included the power cy pres, so far as the same may be employed in directing trustees named in a will or deed to carry into effect the general lawful and charitable intent, when the particular scheme is impracticable." Under this power the court would be authorized to direct the trustees to sell the undivided one-third interests and use the proceeds in the manner above indicated to carry out the intent of the testatrix, although not precisely in the manner she may have contemplated.

The judgment and order are reversed.

HUMPHRY v. PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH, DIOCESE OF LOS ANGELES et al. (L. A. 2,050.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 19, 1908.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—DECREE FOR DISTRIBUTION—SCOPE—PROPERTY NOT DESCRIBED.

In a proceeding for final distribution of the property of an estate, the res over which the court acquires jurisdiction is the entire remaining property of the estate, and not merely that specifically enumerated in the petition, and it is the duty of the court to distribute all to the persons entitled thereto.

2. SAME—CONSTRUCTION OF DECREE—TITLE TO REAL PROPERTY.

A decree of final distribution of an estate which distributed to plaintiff "the residue of said estate hereinafter particularly described, and any other property not now known or discovered which may belong to said estate or in which said estate may have an interest," passed title to plaintiff to lands owned by the estate, although omitted from the particular description.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by Emily A. Humphry against the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Los Angeles and others. Judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wm. G. Griffith, for appellant. B. F. Thomas, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to determine title to an undivided one-tenth interest in lot No. 11 of the Oceanside tract, in the county of Santa Barbara. The facts as to the title, over which facts there is no dispute, are the following: Lot 11, with other lots, was owned by Elizabeth A. Humphry at the time of her death. Upon her death, intestate, an undivided one-tenth descended to her sister, Mary E. Richardson. Defendant acquired title to the other undivided nine-tenths. Mary E. Richardson died testate before defendant had been able to secure a deed to her one-tenth. Defendant did secure a deed to this one-tenth from Mrs. W. N. Clothier, sole heir at law of her mother, Mrs. Mary E. Richardson, but by her will Mrs. Richardson had specifically devised her interest in this lot in trust for the maintenance of her brother, George Ellery, empowering the trustees to sell any or all real estate whenever it might appear to them for the best interest of the estate so to do. If this trust was valid, Mrs. Clothier's deed to defendant conveyed nothing. The defendant likewise obtained a deed to the same undivided one-tenth from George Ellery, the beneficiary under the trust, but indisputably George Ellery had no title to convey, being a mere beneficiary entitled to the income or such portion of the principal as the trustees might award for his support. Thereafter Emily A. Humphry, this plaintiff, obtained a conveyance from the executor and trustee of the estate of Mary E. Richardson of all right and title to the land in question, and she obtained a like deed from all of the heirs at law of Elizabeth A. Humphry. Subsequently, after settlement of the final account in the estate of Mary E. Richardson, a petition for final distribution was filed, and the property was distributed. The petition for distribution asked for the distribution of the residue of the estate remaining in the hands of the petitioner, and set forth in its schedule certain parcels of real estate, amongst which was not enumerated lot eleven. It alleged the transfer by deed of all the interest of the estate in all the residue of the estate to Emily A. Humphry, and prayed that there be distributed to Emily A. Humphry "the whole of the said residue of the estate of said decedent situated in said counties of Ventura and Santa Barbara of the state of California." The decree of distribution adjudged "that the residue of said estate hereinafter particularly described, and any other property not now known or discovered, which may belong to said estate, or in which said estate may have an interest, be and the same is hereby distributed to the said Emily A. Humphry." The decree in the estate of Elizabeth A. Humphry likewise decreed distribution to this plaintiff of all of the residue of the estate of the said Elizabeth A. Humphry. Upon the trial plaintiff relied for her title upon the decree of distribution, contending that, under the clause above quoted, she obtained title to the undivided one-tenth interest in lot 11, even though it had not been particularly described in the petition for distribution. By defendant it was contended that there was not only a failure to distribute this interest to plaintiff, but an intent not to distribute it, and that, therefore, she took no title. The court decreed that neither plaintiff nor the defendant had title to the disputed one-tenth, and gave judgment for costs. From this judgment, plaintiff appeals.

If the decree of distribution is to be construed according to its language, it certainly, in conforming title to Emily A. Humphry, to "any other property not now known or discovered" vested her with the title to the disputed undivided one-tenth of lot 11. The attack upon this decree of distribution being collateral, its invalidity or insufficiency in any respect must be made to appear on its face. Respondents' contention that there was a manifest design upon the part of the court in probate not to distribute this undivided one-tenth draws support only from the fact that in the petition for distribution this undivided one-tenth was not specifically described. The argument in this connection is that the proceeding is one in rem; that an initiatory step to the obtaining of jurisdiction is the filing of the petition; that the res over which the court acquires jurisdiction is the property, and only the property, described in the petition for distribution. But herein respondents are in error. The res in this case was the residue of the estate, and, notwithstanding the omission of the petition specifically to describe the undivided interest in this lot, that the court intended to distribute the whole residue whether described or undescribed, known or unknown, is made plainly manifest from the language which it employs. Moreover, upon final distribution, it is the duty of the court to distribute all of the residue to the persons entitled (Code Civ. Proc. § 1665), and its order and decree in this regard is conclusive as to the rights of the heirs, legatees, or devisees and those holding under them. Code Civ. Proc. § 1666. This is the precise construction which was put upon a like decree of distribution in Smith v. Biscalluz, 83 Cal. 344, 21 Pac. 15, 23 Pac. 314. There, too, the decree distributed "other property not known or discovered which may have belonged to the decedent and in which his estate may have an interest," and it was held that such a decree passed title to lands of the decedent omitted from the particular description; that it was not void for uncertainty of description, the general description being sufficient upon collateral attack to include omitted lands which might be shown by evidence aliunde to have in fact belonged to the decedent at the time of his death.

It is not seriously disputed by respondents that if the decree of distribution be held to cover the disputed one-tenth interest, and to have in fact confirmed title to that interest in the plaintiff, such decree is free upon this collateral attack from any question as to the validity of the trust to George Ellery. It having been determined, as above set forth, that the decree does dispose of this land, it follows that the judgment of the trial court was erroneous. It is therefore reversed and the cause remanded.

Ex parte MURPHY. (Cr. 1,484.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 17, 1908.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS — PROCEEDINGS — ADMISSION TO BAIL PENDING DETERMINATION — RETURN OF OFFICER TO WRIT.

Pen. Code, § 1476, as amended by St. 1905, p. 476, c. 376, empowers the court or judge who directs the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus to admit the prisoner to bail pending the determination of the proceeding. Held that, where a prisoner has been so admitted to bail, and the officer who had him in custody therefore cannot produce his body in court in obedience to the writ, he need only show by his return that his prisoner has been discharged under the terms of the court's order, and he need not personally appear in court for the purpose of making such return.

2. SAME — NECESSITY FOR ATTENDANCE OF PRISONER OUT ON BAIL.

Pen. Code, § 1476, as amended, having necessarily superseded sections 1481, 1482, requiring the prisoner's body to be produced on a writ of habeas corpus, except in specified cases, it is no longer necessary, in order to confer jurisdiction, that the prisoner be personally present, his undertaking or cash deposit having, for jurisdictional purposes, been substituted for his personal presence.

In Bank. Application by J. L. Murphy for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ granted.

E. W. Rice and H. C. Millsap, for petitioner. John E. Carson, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. In view of the amendment to section 1476 of the Penal Code, adopted in 1905 (St. p. 476, c. 376), empowering the court or judge who directs the issuance of a writ of habeas corpus to admit the prisoner to bail pending the determination of the proceeding, the order for the issuance of the writ in this case furnishes a proper occasion for a statement by the court of its views concerning the return to be made to the writ where the prisoner has been set at liberty, upon filing an undertaking of sureties or depositing cash before the return day of the writ. In such case it is obvious that the officer who had the custody of the prisoner cannot produce his body in court in obedience to the writ, and that he can do no more than to show by his return that his prisoner has been discharged under the terms of the court's order. For the purpose of making such return it is equally obvious that the personal attendance of the officer is not required.

As to the prisoner himself, he can always attend, at his own expense if he so desires, but in the view of the court his attendance — when he is at large upon bail — is no longer necessary in order to confer jurisdiction; for the amendment under which he has given bail has necessarily superseded sections 1481 and 1482 of the Penal Code, and for jurisdictional purposes has substituted his undertaking or cash deposit for his personal presence. We make this announcement of our views regarding this matter in order that the counties and municipalities of the state may no longer feel obliged in this class of cases, to incur and defray the useless expense of transporting prisoners or officers to and from the place where the court is sitting.

Ex parte COLLINS. (Cr. 91.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.

June 18, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — STAY OF EXECUTION.

Unless otherwise provided by law, the court has inherent power to stay execution in a criminal case, and such power, being exercised for the benefit of the defendant, will be presumed to have been with his consent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2554.]

2. SAME—PROBATIONARY POWERS.

Under Pen. Code, § 1203, conferring probationary powers on the court in criminal cases, suspension of the execution of a sentence is restricted to sentences to pay a fine with imprisonment as an alternative, while suspension of sentence is the general rule in cases in which the defendant is over 16 years of age.

3. SAME—"JUDGMENT"—TIME OF EXECUTION.

The time at which a judgment or sentence of imprisonment shall be carried into execution, forms no part of the "judgment" which is the penalty of the law, as declared by the court, while the direction with respect to the time of carrying it into effect is in the nature of an award of execution, so that, where the penalty is imprisonment, the sentence may be satisfied only by the actual suffering of the imprisonment imposed, unless remitted by death or some legal authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3827-3842; vol. 8, pp. 7695, 7696.]

4. SAME — REARREST — EXECUTION OF JUDGMENT.

Where a convicted defendant is at liberty, and has not served his sentence, if there be no statute to the contrary, he may be rearrested as an escape, and ordered into custody on the unexecuted judgment.

5. SAME—STATUTES.

Pen. Code, § 670, provides that the term of imprisonment fixed by the judgment in criminal actions does not commence to run until the defendant is actually delivered at the place of imprisonment. Section 1213 declares that when a judgment other than death has been pronounced, a certified copy of the entry thereof must be forthwith furnished to the officer whose duty it is to execute the judgment, and section 1455 provides that when a judgment of imprisonment is entered, a certified copy must be delivered to the sheriff, marshal, or other officer, which is sufficient warrant for its execution, and section 1216 declares that if the judgment is for imprisonment in the state's prison, the sheriff, on receipt of a certified copy thereof, shall take and deliver the defendant to the warden of the state's prison. Held, that while a defendant sentenced to a term of imprisonment is entitled to immediate incarceration thereon, yet if he does not object to the suspension of execution by the court, the judgment during such suspension remains unexecuted, and he may not thereafter object to his incarceration thereunder.

Application by Herbert L. Collins for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ dismissed. Petition denied.

Rowen Irwin, for petitioner. W. V. Buckner and J. L. C. Irwin, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. On June 1, 1907, Herbert L. Collins pleaded guilty to a charge of vagrancy, waived time for sentence on the charge, and a judgment of imprisonment for the term of six months in the county jail was rendered and entered against him thereon. The judgment was not executed at the time. The justice of the peace before whom the proceedings were had merely made an entry in his docket of "commitment withheld," and allowed the defendant to have his liberty. On February 29, 1908, a commitment in execution of said judgment was issued by the justice, and by virtue thereof the sheriff took the defendant into custody, and confined him in the county jail. It is from this confinement his release is sought. Application for such release was made to the superior court of Kings county, in which county defendant was confined, and after a hearing his application was denied. It was thereupon renewed in this court.

Both demurrer and answer to the petition are presented upon the return. Only one issue of fact is raised by the latter, and no evidence was offered by either party in relation thereto. The petition alleges that at the time the order was made withholding the commitment the defendant was present in court, and ready and willing to surrender himself in execution of the judgment. The answer denies that he was ready or willing, but avers that he was present, and consented to the making of the order. It appears from the declarations of the courts in some jurisdictions that at common law it was competent for a court, having the authority to imprison as a penalty for crime, to make an order staying execution, and the power to do this is held to be inherent in the court. The practice was recognized and followed in England, where there was no appeal, as a matter of right, from a conviction for crime. For this reason, it is said to follow that, unless otherwise provided by statute, the power to stay execution exists in the court, and, being exercised for the benefit of the defendant, will be presumed to have been done with his consent. Webster v. State, 58 Ohio St. 616, 51 N. E. 116, 41 L. R. A. 472; People v. Court, Monroe Co., 141 N. Y. 288, 36 N. E. 386, 23 L. R. A. 856.

The application of the rule expressio unius, etc., to the provisions of section 1203 of the Penal Code would justify a distinction between the exercise of the probationary powers of the court in suspending sentence and in staying execution after sentence. The suspension of sentence appears to be the general rule in cases in which the defendant is over 16 years of age, while suspension of execution of sentence appears to be restricted to sentences to pay fine with imprisonment in the alternative. This special provision for a stay of execution justifies the further inference as to the legislative intent to limit the power to specially provided cases. If the rule were applicable here, the absence of statutory authority would render the order, "commitment withheld," void. This same rule is invoked by the respondent in connection with the sections of the Code relating to stay of execution on appeal, but we do not think it material to the question before us whether the order be void or not. It may even be conceded that the rule declared in those cases in which the plea of guilty or verdict of conviction has been entered, but no sentence imposed, to wit, that an agreement or condition that the defendant may remain at large unsentenced is void, and that the suspension of the sentence entered by consent is unauthorized (Gray v. State, 107 Ind. 177, 8 N. E. 16; People v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 287, 67 N. E. 23, 63 L. R. A. 82, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230), is applicable here, and the invalidity of the subsequent order staying execution be admitted for that reason, yet this would not avoid the original judgment (Sylvester v. State, 65 N. H. 193, 20 Atl. 934). It would still be a valid, substituting, unexecuted judgment. The time at which a judgment or sentence shall be carried into execution forms no part of the judgment of the court. The judgment is the penalty of the law, as declared by the court, while the direction with respect to the time of carrying it into effect is in the nature of an award of execution. Where the penalty is imprisonment, the sentence of the law is to be satisfied only by the actual suffering of the imprisonment imposed, unless remitted by death or by some legal authority. The expiration of time without imprisonment is in no sense an execution of the sentence. State v. Cockerham, 24 N. C. 204; Dolan's Case, 101 Mass. 222.

Where the convicted defendant is at liberty and has not served his sentence, if there be no statute to the contrary, he may be rearrested as an escape, and ordered into custody upon the unexecuted judgment. 1 Bishop, New Crim. Proc. § 1384; In re Shaw, 31 Minn. 44, 16 N. W. 461; Ex parte Vance, 90 Cal. 208, 27 Pac. 209, 13 L. R. A. 574; People v. Patrich, 118 Cal. 332, 50 Pac. 425. Not only may the justice of the peace in such a case issue a commitment, but he may even be compelled to do so by mandamus in a proper case. Mann v. People, 16 Colo. App. 475, 66 Pac. 452. Says the Colorado court: "The judgment of conviction did not become void because the respondent failed to issue a writ of commitment. * * * It is immaterial that more than 60 days had elapsed since the conviction. Graham was not in prison during that time, and the judgment could be satisfied only by his actual imprisonment for the adjudged period. The duty to issue the writ was mandatory." Section 670 of the Penal Code of this state provides that the term of imprisonment fixed by the judgment in a criminal action does not commence to run until the defendant is actually delivered at the place of imprisonment, and that any time that he is temporarily at large by any legal means must not be computed as part of the term. It was by the application of this section that it was held in Ex parte Morton, 132 Cal. 346, 64 Pac. 469, that a sentence to commence after the date of the delivery of the defendant at the place of imprisonment, if not within the provisions of sections 669 of the same Code, was invalid. If a person who has entered a plea of guilty, or who has been convicted of a crime, desires that his sentence shall begin, he can, if not in custody, compel the issuance of the commitment (Mann v. People, supra), or, if he be in custody, may have a writ of habeas corpus to direct his imprisonment upon such sentence, in the proper place, that his term may begin to run under section 670. If he be serving a sentence for a misdemeanor in the county jail, and be sentenced upon conviction of a felony, he is entitled to be removed to the state prison forthwith, by virtue of the requirement of section 1216, Pen. Code, to that effect. Ex parte McGuire, 135 Cal. 339, 67 Pac. 327, 87 Am. St. Rep. 105. While a comparison of section 1213 with section 1455 discloses an absence of the element of time in the provisions for the execution of a judgment under the last section, and the former shows a right of the defendant to immediate action by the sheriff, and it was upon this statutory right to be taken forthwith that the action of the court Ex parte McGuire was based, it is unnecessary in support of the court's action, to hold that any difference in the practice was intended by the Legislature. There was a valid, subsisting judgment unexecuted against the defendant on the 29th of February, 1908. The record does not disclose that any objection was made by him to the suspension of sentence, or any effort to have the court execute the judgment. That he was ready and willing to have the sentence executed did not cause him to demand its execution, or to refuse to accept the benefits of the order now claimed to be void. The judgment being valid and the sentence unserved, the commitment of the defendant in execution of the judgment was a legal and valid imprisonment.

Writ dismissed and petition denied.

HEMENWAY v. ABBOTT.
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
June 27, 1908. On Rehearing, July 27, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Aug. 24, 1908.)

1. DEEDS—VALIDITY—UNDUE INFLUENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence considered, and held to justify a finding by the trial court that a deed to real estate for an expressed consideration of $10, made by a man 81 years old to a woman in whose lodging house he resided, and who was a relative of his deceased wife, was not voidable as having been obtained by undue influence, nor because of mental incapacity of the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, §§ 638, 641.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—DEALINGS BETWEEN—VALIDITY.

An agent and his principal are not prohibited from dealing with each other; but the rule is that in all their dealings respecting the subject-matter of the agency the utmost good faith is required, and the burden of proof is on the agent to show affirmatively that he acted in good faith, fairly, and honestly.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 183.]

3. SAME.

Equity treats the relation of principal and agent in the same general manner, though not with quite the same strictness, as that of trustee and beneficiary; and in any contract of purchase or sale with the principal, or other transaction by which the agent obtains a benefit, a presumption arises against its validity which the agent must overcome, but this presumption is not so weighty or strong as in the case of a trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 183.]

4. SAME—CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY FROM PRINCIPAL TO AGENT—VALIDITY.

Plaintiff's testator, when 80 years old, went to live in a lodging house kept by defendant, who was a cousin of his deceased wife, where he continued to reside until his death in a street car accident something more than a year later. Shortly after going there, he executed a power of attorney to defendant to sell certain real estate he owned and while such power was still in force, and a few months prior to his death, he made a deed conveying the property to her for an expressed consideration of $10, which deed defendant recorded during his lifetime. It did not appear that she had made any effort to sell the property under the power of attorney, and there was evidence tending to show that decedent was physically and mentally active for a man of his years, and capable of forming an independent judgment as to his affairs; also, that there was no undue influence exercised over him by defendant, but that the deed was prepared at his request, and that he stated to others that he had previously done well by his children. In an action to set aside a deed made by a principal to one holding his power of attorney to convey the same land conveyed by the deed, evidence considered and held to warrant a finding that defendant took no advantage of her relation as agent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Alice Hemenway, administratrix, against Sabrina L. B. Abbott. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lippitt & Lippitt, for appellant. Charles G. Lamberson and Frank Lamberson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This action was brought to cancel a deed to certain real property, made by plaintiff's testate, George W. Proctor, to defendant. Judgment passed for defendant, from which and from the order denying her motion for a new trial plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff was duly appointed administratrix of the estate of said deceased, with the will annexed, and brings the action as such administratrix. She alleges in her amended complaint that on May 5, 1904, the said Proctor was the owner of certain described real property situated in Kings county; that prior thereto, to wit, on July 29, 1903, the said Proctor executed and delivered to defendant his power of attorney "to sell or negotiate for sale or rent" the said lands above referred to, and also certain other lands situated in San Luis Obispo county; that said power of attorney "was in full force and effect on said 5th day of May, 1904." The foregoing facts are found by the court to be true.

It is then alleged that on said May 5, 1904, said Proctor conveyed to defendant by an instrument, purporting to be executed by him, the said Kings county land, in which said deed is also described the said land situated in San Luis Obispo county; that on said May 5, 1904, the said Proctor was of the age of 81 years, and "was then and for many years prior thereto had been infirm in body and mind"; that he was practically deaf, blind in one eye, and the sight of his other eye greatly impaired; "that he was easily influenced by flattery, especially at the hands of women, and was by reason of age, infirmities, and mental weakness unfit to transact business"; that defendant, "well knowing the condition, mental and physical, of said George W. Proctor, and at a time when she was occupying toward him the confidential and fiduciary relationship of his agent as aforesaid, did prepare or cause to be prepared, and did, by and through undue influence and for the purpose of benefiting herself, and for illegal and unlawful purposes and objects, cause, compel, and have said George W. Proctor execute, acknowledge, and deliver to her, said defendant, a certain instrument of writing, purporting to be the deed of said George W. Proctor conveying to said defendant the land hereinabove described, together with the said lands in San Luis Obispo county"; that said deed "was made, * * * if at all, by said Proctor to said defendant for a grossly inadequate consideration, to wit, the sum of $10; that no other or further consideration was paid to or received by said Proctor for said purported deed"; that said lands described in said deed are of the value of $2,000, and that the said consideration was fictitious, and was, as plaintiff is informed and believes, afterward returned by said Proctor to defendant; that the said deed is void and a nullity "for the reason that the same was made, * * * if at all, for the purpose of creating and upon certain secret trusts, and to be held, retained, and used for the use of said George W. Proctor, and to enable said Proctor to sell, handle, and dispose of said premises through and by his said agent, Sabrina L. B. Abbott"; that the said deed is void because the purposes for which it was made are not expressed therein, and is void because executed "by reason of the undue influence of said defendant over said Proctor, for a grossly inadequate consideration, through the fraud, importunities, and duress of said defendant, and for unlawful and illegal purposes and objects"; that said deed was executed by said Proctor, "if at all, wholly without advice or assistance of counsel or relatives, and wholly by the direction, assistance, and advice of the defendant"; that defendant has never carried into effect the objects for which said deed was executed, and it is now impossible for her to do so. The foregoing are substantially all the averments constituting plaintiff's cause of action. Defendant answered the complaint without demurring thereto, and denied specifically plaintiff's averments of the said Proctor's mental and physical incapacity; denied that he was induced to make said deed through the undue influence, fraud, and like alleged influences of defendant; denied that the consideration for said deed was fictitious or grossly inadequate, or was upon any secret or other trust or purpose other than expressed upon its face, or was made for the benefit of said Proctor; averred that said deed was made without any undue influence exercised by said defendant, and without any fraud, and for the sole and only lawful purpose of conveying title to defendant to the property therein described. The court made findings negating all the alleged facts set up by plaintiff as ground for the cancellation of said deed, and made findings affirming the truth of defendant's allegations. The findings are challenged as unsupported by the evidence, and it is also claimed that the findings do not support the judgment.

We learn nothing of Mr. Proctor's life from the evidence prior to 1902, nor as to his characteristics, mental or physical. Defendant was said to be related (a cousin) to the second deceased wife of Proctor, and is first mentioned in connection with his family when she visited at Petaluma a daughter of Mrs. Hemenway in the latter part of 1902. Proctor was living with his daughter, Mrs. Hemenway, at that time. Mrs. Hemenway testified that defendant came to her house quite often: "She treated my father very pleasantly during that time. At first she did not treat him in any way that a mere acquaintance would not; only towards the last it was different. She would come to the door, and ask where he was. He would be puttering around. I had 2½ acres of ground, and she would go out where he was and talk with him." She was asked if she ever saw her "display any marks of affection for him at that time," and answered: "I have seen them stand in the yard with her arm over his shoulder." This is the extent of her exhibitions of affection towards him at Petaluma, or elsewhere for that matter, so far as appears. The witness testified that her father and defendant went to San Francisco "several times, and were gone a couple or three days and then came back." It appeared that about this time, in the early part of 1893, defendant took a lodging house in San Francisco, and these visits may have had something to do with that. The evidence furnishes no other probable explanation of the purpose of the visits; for it will not be presumed and is not suggested by plaintiff that they had an immoral purpose, and the evidence shows that he took considerable interest in defendant's establishing a lodging house in San Francisco. The witness testified that her father left her house in March or April, 1903, "just simply because he preferred to live in the city. He could not see very well, and he could see things in the city that amused him. * * * He did not have any means to invest in a lodging house at the time he went to San Francisco; nothing that could buy a lodging house. He had a little money that my brother Frank sent him." It appeared that Mrs. Hemenway called to see her father while he was lodging at defendant's house, and was shown her father's room by defendant, with whom she said "the conversation was on general lines." Her father visited her several times, she testified, after he went to San Francisco. Of the condition of his mind, in reply to a question she testified: "Well, I think like anything that is growing old, or any old person, it wasn't what it should be. One of his hobbies was trying to appear young and agile." She said he had the hobby of trying to live on five cents a day when there was no necessity for it; another was to answer patent medicine advertisements. The record discloses no evidence whatever in support of the alleged menace, duress, and force as operating causes leading up to the deed from Proctor to defendant; nor is there any evidence of actual fraud surrounding the execution of the deed, unless it can be found in the facts and circumstances brought into the case in support of the alleged undue influence. Such influence is a species of fraud when exercised in the accomplishment of an unconscionable and unfair advantage over the person upon whom it operates. Considering this feature of undue influence and apart from the constructive fraud arising alone out of the admitted pre-existing agency, we think there is evidence justifying the findings of the court upon it.

Bearing upon the question, it is claimed that Proctor was old and physically infirm; that he was susceptible to flattery, especially at the hands of women, was deaf and practically blind, incapable of transacting business by reason of weakness of mind and that he executed the conveyance involved without independent advice and for an inadequate consideration. Upon all these points, except as to his age, the court found against plaintiff's contention. The witnesses all agree that Proctor was physically very active, unusually so far a man 81 years old. He suffered from asthma, but otherwise his health was unimpaired. His ailment did not prevent his taking active exercise, nor did it affect his mind, or weaken him physically to any extent. He was not deaf, but "was quite hard of hearing." Witnesses for both parties, however, testified to conversations with him carried on apparently without much difficulty. He was practically blind in one eye, but the evidence was that he could read and did read books and the newspapers and wrote letters, and found his way around the streets of San Francisco alone and unaided. He met his death by being run over by a street car when he was out sight-seeing and taking exercise in that city. There is no substantial conflict in the evidence as to the foregoing facts, and they may be at once dismissed from further consideration.

His son-in-law, Overton, testified that Proctor "was a man susceptible of being led or influenced very easily. Flattery would lead him almost anywhere." On the contrary, witness Mrs. Barnes testified that "he was stubborn. Anything he made up his mind to do he would do, and anything he made up his mind not to do he would not do. He was very obstinate. In fact, he prided himself on being so. He often told me that no one could influence him to do anything that he did not want to do." Witness Overton was asked his opinion as to whether Proctor was a person easily influenced by women, but the court sustained an objection to the question as not within any of the material issues in the case, and there was no evidence upon the point. Overton, however, was permitted to testify that his "general conversations seemed to dwell upon women—upon sexual intercourse with women. He stated to me that, when he had passed that condition, he was ready to die." If this testimony has any pertinence, it goes to show physical vigor in the old man. There was not the slightest evidence of any immoral relations between him and defendant. He frequently said that she took good care of him, and made her house a comfortable and very agreeable home for him, and that he was happier and more contented there than when living with his daughter at Petaluma. But the law is not so uncharitable as to attribute sinister and fraudulent motives to what appeared to be simple acts of kindness and consideration. Nor will the law compel the inference that, because he chose to reward her considerate treatment, he did so while under some undue influence exerted by defendant, and that this influence was the moving cause for the reward bestowed. His daughter, Mrs. Hemenway, called upon defendant while he was living at defendant's house, and was shown his room. If she discovered any evidence of defendant's unusual influence over him it does not appear. His daughter-in-law, Mrs. Frank Proctor, had some knowledge of the way he was living while with defendant and of the treatment he received at her hands. She wrote defendant a letter dated March 22, 1904, addressing her as "Dear Cousin," saying, among other things: "I thought when you so kindly wrote me of our dear father's safe arrival there that I would write you at once, but so take the will for the deed, and here I am to thank you for your many kindnesses to father. I don't think I would have tried to write you after so many months of delay only father in his last letter as good as said he was on one of his pet fits of starving, and I want you to see he gets everything he needs. I am going to send the check to you and you keep out enough to board him well; say twenty per month would buy and pay you for cooking for him. I know money could not pay for the attention you give him, and kindness can't be paid for. * * * I am glad father has the home he has, for I could not do for him as you do and he has no amusement here. * * * Lots of love to you both. * * * Now write me soon, and believe me your friend and cousin, Mrs. Frank L. Proctor." This letter was written a few months after Proctor had returned from Cananea, Mexico, where he had been visiting his son Frank. Its statements are inconsistent with some of Mrs. Proctor's testimony by which she seemed to place an entirely different complexion upon the conduct of defendant toward her boarder. The "pet fit" to which she alludes in the letter is explained by her testimony, and that of Mrs. Hemenway, that their father had a notion that people ate too much, and that he could prove it by living on five cents a day and retain his strength.

There is very little testimony bearing upon Proctor's mental condition. Witness Overton testified: "As to his mentality, for an old man he appeared to be very bright, but sometimes he appeared to be very childish; but as a general thing he appeared to be very bright." The only business transaction testified to in which Proctor was interested was a deal in land, and occurred in 1894 or 1895. This resulted in loss, but it was not attributable to weakness of mind, but rather to mistaken judgment not unusual with men in perfect mental health. In the later years of his life Proctor was not engaged in any business, and was supported by his children.

Proctor visited his son Frank in Mexico the latter part of 1903. Frank Proctor testified that in his opinion his father was at that time "not competent to any extent to transact business"; that he would not trust him "with any amount of money to do business on." It appeared, however, that, when he returned to San Francisco, Frank and his wife gave the old man $780 for his personal use, and purchased a return ticket for him. It would not necessarily follow from this opinion of Proctor's mental capacity to transact business "to any extent" that he could not and did not fully understand the nature of the transaction complained of, or that he was incapable of exercising a free and independent judgment concerning it.

Upon the question of independent advice there was no evidence that Proctor had any. The finding of the court is in accordance with the evidence that defendant prepared the deed at the request of Proctor, and that it was not made "wholly or at all by the direction or advice of defendant." It appears from the testimony of Mrs. Barnes, who lived next door to defendant, that her husband was called in to witness the execution of the deed, and that Proctor, defendant, and Mr. and Mrs. Barnes were present and the deed shows it was "signed, sealed, and delivered" in the presence of Barnes. She testified that the deed was not mentioned, but her husband did not witness the signature to the power of attorney and did witness the execution of the deed. Reading her testimony in its entirety, there can be no doubt but that it was the deed in controversy to which she referred. Mrs. Barnes testified that Proctor told her he wished to provide for Mrs. Abbott. "He told me that she had made a home for him, and made him much happier than he had been anywhere since his wife died, and for that reason and that she was not a very strong woman he wanted to provide for her as far as he could. He said: 'Mrs. Barnes, I did a good deal for my children when I had money, and I think they should leave me alone and let me be where I am happy.'" Her testimony shows that Proctor knew what he was doing and intended to do what he did in the matter. Mrs. Barnes testified further: "Mr. Proctor was a very bright man, and was at that time and up to the time of his death. I saw him daily, and I considered him a very bright man for a man of his years. * * * He often told me that no one could influence him to do anything that he did not want to do." He lived at Mr. Barnes' house during the last month of his life, and was stopping there when he died. The court was justified, we think, from the testimony of this witness in concluding that Proctor was capable of disposing of his property without the aid of an attorney or other independent advice.

The money consideration paid, as shown by the deed, was but $10, but the court found on sufficient evidence that Proctor desired defendant "to have and to hold said real property described in said deed as her own property," in consideration, also, for the kind treatment he had received at her hands. Witness Overton was asked: "Did she [defendant] ever state to you what consideration she had given for these deeds, if any? A. As far as I can recollect, she told me that it was simply conveyed to her for the purpose of getting a lodging house; for the benefit of the two of them. She was to run the house and they were to have a kind of partnership." The trial court evidently accepted the more direct and positive testimony of Mrs. Barnes.

Witness Frank Proctor deposed to having received a letter from defendant "in the early part of 1903." He had not the letter, but he deposed to its substance as follows: "Mrs. Abbott made me a proposition that if I would furnish money for her to buy a lodging house in San Francisco that she would marry my father; that he had proposed to her, and her proposition was to me that she would marry him and take care of him during his lifetime if I would furnish her this money for the lodging house, and allow her—provide for her after his death should he die first, during her lifetime—and then that this property would revert back to me." He answered that he "would not do anything; that he would always provide a home for his father." Later, when his father visited him, he testified that he showed this letter to him, but did not remember what his father said about it. "He talked with me at that time about my furnishing money for a lodging house in San Francisco. He approached the subject in some way, but I never would talk to him about it."

Mrs. Frank Proctor in her deposition also speaks of her father importuning her husband for money to buy a lodging house in San Francisco, and she also testified to having seen a letter from defendant to her father in which defendant urged him "to bring back the money." What credence was given to this testimony by the trial court we cannot know. It bears upon some phases of the case, but the circumstances occurred several months prior to the date of the deed in question, and it was some months later that Mrs. Proctor wrote the letter already referred to.

To one other circumstance, upon which appellant lays stress, our attention is especially invited. Proctor made an olographic will, couched in few words, on May 22, 1903, to which he appended a codicil on May 28, 1903. Appellant urges that this shows a recognition of his obligation to and affection for his children, and manifests his intention as to the disposition of his property. This will was executed about the time his daughter, Mrs. Hemenway, says he went to San Francisco, and a year before he conveyed the property to defendant. As tending to show his state of mind towards his children or defendant a year later, it has slight probative force. Indeed, it would be difficult to make much meaning out of this document because of its incoherency, except as an exhibition of illiteracy.

The learned trial court doubtless felt itself brought by the evidence to the consideration of the case in the light of the relation of principal and agent alone between Proctor and defendant, and, as there was evidence justifying its conclusion, this court cannot interfere.

This relation is shown by a power of attorney given by Proctor to defendant which is dated July 29, 1903. It was duly acknowledged before Justin Gates, a notary at San Francisco, and appears to have been witnessed by him, but was not recorded. The circumstances under which this power was given do not appear, nor does it appear that defendant ever acted under it or made any effort to sell the property by virtue of it. It was in existence, however, when the deed in controversy was executed and delivered, and the court so found. The deed in question was executed May 5, 1904, was acknowledged at San Francisco before F. C. Ford, notary, on the same day, and purports to have been "signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of R. L. C. Barnes." It was recorded at the request of defendant in Kings county on July 9, 1904, more than a month prior to Proctor's death, and manifestly not in anticipation of his death, for it occurred by accident.

We may with propriety state some of the principles applicable to cases of this character. The agent and his principal are not prohibited from dealing with each other, but the rule is that in all their dealings respecting the subject-matter of the agency the utmost good faith is required; and the burden of proof is on the agent to show affirmatively that he acted in good faith, fairly, and honestly. See the subject quite fully discussed and the authorities cited in Curry v. King (Cal. App.) 92 Pac. 662. "The rule is well settled that where the parties were both in a situation to form an independent judgment concerning the transaction, and acted knowingly and intentionally, mere inadequacy in the price of the subject-matter, unaccompanied by other inequitable incidents, is never of itself a sufficient ground for canceling an executed or executory contract." Pom. Eq. Juris. § 926. "If there is nothing but inadequacy of price, the case must be extreme, in order to call for the interposition of equity." Id. § 928. The fact that a conveyance or other transaction was made without professional advice or consultation with friends, and was improvident, even coupled with an inadequate price, is not of itself a sufficient ground for relief, provided the parties were both able to judge and act independently, and did act upon equal terms, and fully understood the nature of the transaction, and there was no undue influence or circumstances of oppression. Id. § 928. "The equitable conception of true consent assumes physical power of the party, an intellectual and moral power, and that he exercised these powers freely and deliberately." It is difficult to formulate any rule determining the amount of mental weakness which will destroy the person's capacity to devise or convey property. The following has been adopted and is stated by Mr. Pomeroy to be clearly just: "Had the testator a disposing memory? Was he able, without prompting, to recollect the property he was about to bequeath, the manner of distributing it, and the objects of his bounty? To sum up the whole in the most simple and intelligible form: Were his mind and memory sufficiently sound to enable him to know and understand the business in which he was engaged at the time he executed the will?" The same rule applies to conveyances and other agreements inter vivos. Pom. Eq. Juris. § 947, note 1. "It is equally certain that mere weak-mindedness, whether natural or produced by old age, sickness, or other infirmity, unaccompanied by any other inequitable incidents, if the person has sufficient intelligence to understand the nature of the transaction, and is left to act upon his own free will, is not sufficient ground to defeat the enforcement of an executory contract or to set aside an executed agreement or conveyance." Id. Undue influence and fiduciary relations constitute different doctrines. Id. § 965. Equity treats the relation of principal and agent in the same general manner, though not with quite the same strictness, as that of trustee and beneficiary. In any contract of purchase or sale with the principal, or other transaction by which the agent obtains a benefit, a presumption arises against its validity which the agent must overcome, but this presumption is not so weighty or strong as in the case of a trustee. Id. § 959. A gift by a principal to his agent may be valid and be sustained, if the absolute good faith, knowledge, and intent of both parties is clearly established. Id. With these principles in view, we think the findings of the trial court are supported by the evidence and that the findings support the judgment.

We discover no prejudicial error in any of the rulings of the court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

On Rehearing.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Petition for rehearing. The principal ground upon which we are asked to open the case is that it falls within the rule laid down by this court in Nobles v. Hutton (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 289, where the court said: "It is a well-established principle that persons standing in a confidential relation toward others cannot entitle themselves to hold benefits which others may have conferred upon them, unless they can show to the satisfaction of the court that the person by whom the benefits have been conferred had independent advice in conferring them"—citing, also, Yordi v. Yordi (Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 348. It was said in Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 493, 497: "The phrases 'confidential relation' and 'fiduciary relation' seem to be used by the courts and law writers as convertible terms. It is a peculiar relation which undoubtedly exists between client and attorney, principal and agent, principal and surety, landlord and tenant, parent and child, guardian and ward, ancestor and heir, husband and wife (naming some others). In these and the like cases the law, in order to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence, affection, or sense of duty which the relation naturally creates, requires the utmost good faith (uberima fides) in all transactions between the parties." 1 Story's Eq. Jur. 218. In Scattergood v. Kirk, 192 Pa. 263, 43 Atl. 1030, 1032, it was held that "the term 'confidential relation' is not confined to any specific association of the parties to it. While the most frequent illustrations are between persons who are related as trustee and cestui que trust, guardian and ward, attorney and client, parent and child, husband and wife, it embraces partners and copartners, principal and agent, master and servant, physician and patient, and generally all persons who are associated by any relation of trust and confidence." As further illustrating the meaning of these terms, it was held in Thomas v. Whitney, 186 Ill. 225, 57 N. E. 808, 810, that "the relation exists and relief is granted in all cases in which influence has been acquired and abused in which confidence has been reposed and betrayed. The origin of the confidence and the source of the influence are immaterial. The rule embraces both technical fiduciary relations, and those informal relations which exist wherever one man trusts in and relies on another."

Assuming that the power of attorney given to plaintiff by Proctor created a confidential relation between them in respect of the property, it does not necessarily follow that the principal could not sell or give the property to the agent except under the guidance of independent advice. The cases where the courts have attached importance to the fact that the party, alleged to have been overreached, received no independent advice, are cases in which the recipient of such party's favor had some overmastering influence, actual or presumptive, over the latter by reason of their natural relation or because of some physical or mental infirmity by means of which the beneficiary was enabled to obtain an undue advantage. For example where a child under majority conveys valuable property to the parent or releases his interest in some expectancy of value, "the law," as said by Judge Story, "in order to prevent undue advantage from the unlimited confidence, affection, or sense of duty which the relation naturally creates, requires the utmost good faith in all transactions between them," and the absence of independent advice in such case might be given special significance. So, also, where the relation is that of husband and wife. But we do not think that it has ever been held that before such a transaction can be shown to be valid and binding it must appear in every case as indispensable that the child or wife had independent advice. Nobles v. Hutton and Yordi v. Yordi, supra, were cases where the court, because of the peculiar relationships of the parties, and the circumstances shown, attached special significance to the failure to show that the persons conferring the benefit acted under independent advice. But it was not intended to lay down the hard and fast rule that under no state of circumstances can a conveyance made by a minor child to his parent or wife to her husband be upheld unless it be shown to have been executed upon independent advice. An examination of the case of Nobles v. Hutton will show that the principle above quoted was enunciated with reference to the peculiar and controlling circumstances of the case. So, also, was it in Yordi v. Yordi. The rule certainly cannot be more rigid when applied to the ordinary relation of principal and agent. To show that the principle contended for does not necessarily apply in all cases where the relation, for example, is that of parent and child, let us suppose a conveyance by the parent to his child. Here we have the relation, but the situation of the parties to the transaction is reversed and the rule would not ordinarily apply. And yet it might appear that the parent was of great age and of weak mind; that the child had the power to and in fact did exercise undue influence over his parent; and that these facts and other circumstances attending the transaction would require that the act of the parent should be shown to have been performed under the direction of independent advice; i. e., by some impartial person or persons. Speaking of gifts by a child to a parent, Mr. Pomeroy says: "The law on the subject is well settled. A child makes a gift to a parent, and such a gift is good if it is not tainted with parental influence. A child is presumed to be under the exercise of parental influence as long as the dominion of the parent lasts. Whilst the dominion lasts, it lies on the parent maintaining the gift to disprove the exercise or parental influence by showing that the child had independent advice, or in some other way. When the parental influence is disproved, or that influence has ceased, a gift from a child stands on the same footing as any other gift; and the question to be determined is whether there was a deliberate, unbiased intention on the part of the child to give to the parent. Where the positions of the two parties are reversed, where the parent is aged, infirm, or otherwise in a condition of dependence upon his own child, and the child occupies a corresponding relation of authority, conveyances conferring benefits upon the child may be set aside. Cases of this kind plainly turn upon the exercise of actual undue influence, and not upon any presumption of invalidity." 2 Pom. Eq. Juris. § 962 and note 3. In the present case there is but slight, if any, evidence of actual undue influence exercised by plaintiff over Proctor. Aside from her personal attention to his wants, in a way to excite in him a sense of gratitude for her kindness, there is little, if any, evidence, and in this treatment no ulterior motive to possess his property is shown. His manifestation of trust and confidence in her is shown by the power of attorney to sell the property, but that she had some overmastering power over him or could unduly influence him in matters of business there is no evidence. The witness Overton testified that she told him the property "was simply conveyed to her for the purpose of getting a lodging house; for the benefit of the two of them. She was to run the house and they were to have a kind of partnership." But this was in conflict with other evidence and the trial court did not accept this as a statement to be believed, or, at least, as affecting the conviction of the court based upon the testimony of Mrs. Barnes and other evidence in the case.

It is further urged as ground for a rehearing that the court failed to comment upon the fact that defendant did not testify in the case. Why she was not called as a witness does not appear. It would doubtless have been more satisfactory had she made a full explanation of her relations with Proctor, but it cannot be said as matter of law that her failure to testify destroyed the probative force of the evidence submitted in the case in her behalf.

We are unable to discover sufficient ground for granting a rehearing, and it is therefore denied.

CITY OF ESCONDIDO v. ESCONDIDO LUMBER, HAY & GRAIN CO.
(Civ. 499.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 26, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — TAXATION —
TIME FOR ASSESSMENT—POWER OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES TO FIX.

Municipal Corporation Act, § 871 (St. 1883, p. 273, c. 49), under which a city of the sixth class was created, provided that the board of trustees should have power, and it should be their duty, to provide by ordinance a system for the assessment, levy, and collection of all city or town taxes, not inconsistent with the provisions of the chapter, which system should conform as nearly as possible to the law as to the assessment, etc., of state and county taxes, except as to the officers by whom such duties are to be performed. The city by ordinance adopted a tax system for city taxes, and provided that property should be assessed as of May 1st, instead of the first Monday in March as in state and county assessments. Pol. Code, §§ 3628-3630. Held, that by section 871, as to matters not within the exception, the board was given discretion to make such changes in the law of state and county assessments as might be warranted by the facts; and, in the absence of anything to the contrary, it must be presumed that circumstances justified the provision that the assessment should be made as of May 1st, instead of the first Monday in March, since the law presumes that public officers have not neglected their official duties, and where the public's rights require it, the presumption is strong.

2. SAME.

Municipal Corporation Act, § 871 (St. 1883, p. 273, c. 49), provides that all taxes assessed shall constitute liens on the property assessed from the first Monday in March of each year. Held, that the provision is not inconsistent with the power given the board to fix a day other than the first Monday of March to which the assessment shall relate; taxes not being a lien unless expressly made so by statute, and the time when the lien will attach, if at all, being determinable by the statute.

3. STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION — EFFECT TO BE GIVEN TO EVERY PART.

In construing a statute, effect should be given to every part thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 283.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — TAXATION —
CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION.

Const. art. 13, § 8, providing that the Legislature shall require each taxpayer in the state to deliver to the county assessor annually a sworn statement setting forth the property owned by him, or in his possession or control, at 12 o'clock M. on the first Monday of March, has no application to the assessment of property in incorporated cities for local purposes.

5. SAME—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Municipal Corporation Act, § 871 (St. 1883, p. 273, c. 49), is the general law for cities of the sixth class, enacted in pursuance of Const. art. 11, § 12, making it the duty of the Legislature, by general laws, to vest in the corporate authorities of municipalities the power to assess and collect taxes for municipal purposes.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by the city of Escondido against the Escondido Lumber, Hay & Grain Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haines & Haines, for appellant. F. P. Willard, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This action was instituted by the city of Escondido, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, created under the Municipal Corporation Act of 1883 (St. 1883, p. 266, c. 49) to recover from defendant certain taxes for the fiscal year 1904, together with penalties and costs. Judgment was rendered for plaintiff, from which, and a denial of its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

By ordinance of the city the fiscal year is made identical with the calendar year. The due making of the assessment for the year 1904, which forms the basis of the action, is alleged in the complaint, and this allegation is denied in the answer. To sustain the allegation plaintiff tendered in evidence an assessment book or assessment roll, which at the time defendant admitted was the one prepared by the city assessor of the city of Escondido for said city for the year 1904, and stipulated that said book or document constituted the assessment roll for said city as the same was made out by said city assessor for said year 1904 and by him delivered to the city marshal of said city. Attached to said assessment book or roll were two affidavits; one made by the city clerk, the other by the assessor, the said clerk being ex officio assessor. Defendant objected to the reception of said book, or any part thereof, in evidence, upon the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial: "First, because the complaint does not state a cause of action; second, because said book purports to be an assessment for the years 1904-05, and not for the fiscal year 1904, as alleged in the complaint; third, because the assessment book is not authenticated by the affidavit required by section 3732 of the Political Code, which was, when said alleged assessment was made, a part of the tax system of the city of Escondido; and fourth, because said assessment book is not authenticated by the certificate required by section 872 of the Municipal Corporation Act of 1883." This objection was overruled. The ordinance levying taxes for the year 1904-05 was offered in evidence, and defendant's objection upon the ground that it purported to be a levy of taxes for the year 1904-05, and not for the fiscal year of 1904, as alleged in the complaint, was likewise overruled. Appellant assigns these rulings as error. Reference to the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of the City of Escondido v. Wohlford (Cal.) 94 Pac. 232, sufficiently answers ap-pellant's contention on these points. The action there was to recover taxes based on the identical assessment, affidavit, and ordinance received as evidence in the case at bar. The record before the court was identical with the record here, save that the trial court in that case had sustained defendant's objection to the documents in question. The Supreme Court reversed the ruling of the trial court, thus establishing the validity and regularity of the proceedings so far as these points are concerned.

Another point urged by appellant merits further consideration. It is alleged in the complaint, and the court finds, "that in said list [referring to the list of taxable property prepared by the city assessor] the assessor described said property assessed and the value thereof, and listed all of said property upon the assessment roll of said city for said year in the name of the person who owned it or in whose possession or under whose control it was on the 1st day of May of said year." Section 871 of the Municipal Corporation Act, under which the city of Escondido was created, as it stood when the proceedings under consideration were taken, provided that: "The board of trustees shall have power and it shall be their duty to provide by ordinance a system for the assessment, levy, and collection of all city or town taxes not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter, which system shall conform as nearly as the circumstances of the case may permit to the provisions of the laws of this state in reference to the assessment, levy, and collection of state and county taxes, except as to the times for such assessment, levy, and collection, and except as to the officers by whom such duties are to be performed." Pursuant to this provision of said section 871, the board of trustees of the said city of Escondido adopted an ordinance, whereby it provided a system for the assessment, levy, and collection of city taxes; and, among other things, it was provided by said ordinance that the words "first day of May" should be substituted for the words "first Monday in March," wherever they occurred in sections 3628, 3629, and 3630 of the Political Code; and that the words "first day of May" and "first day of August" should be substituted for the words "first Monday in March" and "first Monday in July," wherever they occurred in said sections; the purpose being to assess the property in the city according to its status at 12 o'clock M., May 1st, instead of 12 o'clock M., the first Monday in March. The question, therefore, is whether the assessment of the property as of May 1st, as provided by the ordinance, instead of as it stood the first Monday in March, is a valid assessment. Section 871, supra, provides that the system adopted by the board of trustees "shall conform as nearly as the circumstances of the case may permit to the provisions of the laws of this state in reference to the assessment, levy, and collection of state and county taxes, except as to the times of such assessment, levy and collection, and except as to the officers by whom such duties are to be performed." It will be noted that, as to those matters falling within the exception, no limitations are placed upon the action of the board. As to other matters not thus enumerated power is conferred upon the board in its discretion to make such changes in the provisions of the law, applicable to state and county assessments, as in its judgment may be warranted by the facts presented. In the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, we must presume that circumstances did exist which justified the board in providing that the assessment for the year 1904 should be made as of date May 1st, instead of relating to the first Monday in March. "The law constantly presumes that public officers charged with the performance of official duty have not neglected the same, but have duly performed it at the proper time and in the proper manner. * * * Where the rights of the public require it, the presumption in favor of due performance is liberal, and the evidence to overthrow it must be clear." Mechem on Public Officers, § 579.

It is further provided in said section 871 that all taxes assessed shall constitute liens on the property assessed from and after the first Monday in March of each year. We do not regard this provision as inconsistent with the power given the board of trustees to fix a day other than the first Monday in March to which the assessment shall relate. The status of the property, so far as its valuation and ownership are concerned, is assessed upon the conditions existing May 1st, but the lien for the tax, not levied upon such assessment until September 6, 1904, and under which the property may be sold for nonpayment of taxes, attached on the first Monday in March. The general rule is that taxes are not a lien unless expressly made so by statute (Cooley on Taxation, p. 865), and the time when the lien will attach, if at all, must be determined by the statute. Under the rule in question, inconvenience and inequalities might arise in isolated cases, but we perceive no constitutional inhibition against the adoption of such system. In thus construing the section adherence is had to the rule that effect should be given to every part thereof in interpreting a statute. Section 8, art. 13, of the Constitution, has no application to the assessment of property in incorporated cities for local purposes. Section 12 of article 11 makes it the duty of the Legislature, by general laws, to "vest in the corporate authorities thereof [the municipalities] the power to assess and collect taxes for" municipal purposes. This general law for cities of the sixth class is embodied in said section 871, supra, pursuant to which the board of trustees of the city of Escondido adopted a revenue system conforming as nearly as the circumstances would permit to the provisions for state and county assessment, levy, and collection of taxes.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. NUISANCE — BILLIARD HALL AND POOL-ROOM.

The business of conducting a public billiard hall and poolroom is not per se a nuisance, though it may become such by reason of its environment or surrounding conditions.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POLICE POWER — CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

While the power of a municipality, as to a class of business recognized as necessary and useful employments, the character of which renders their operation obnoxious to the health, welfare, or comfort of others in the community, extends to regulation only, and the question of the reasonableness of ordinances regulating the conduct of such business and excluding their operation from, or confining it to, certain prescribed limits, as well as the uniform operation of the ordinances, is always a proper subject of judicial inquiry, the citizen having a fundamental right to engage therein, the power of the municipality over nonuseful callings is much broader, as the citizen possesses no inherent right to conduct for profit a public place intended purely for the amusement of its patrons, the tendency of which is immoral or vicious, and under Const. art. 11, § 11, providing that any county, town, or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws, a city may, in the absence of a general law, prohibit entirely the maintenance of a public billiard hall and poolroom for hire.

3. SAME—ORDINANCES — UNIFORMITY OF OPERATION.

An ordinance prohibiting the maintenance of billiard or pool tables for hire or public use, but allowing the proprietors of hotels having 25 bedrooms and upwards, furnished as such, to obtain permits from the board of trustees to maintain such tables for the use of regular guests only, is not invalid as special and class legislation, since it applies to all who keep such tables for hire or public use as a class.

4. SAME.

Even if the ordinance in its application to the proprietors of such hotels and others was not uniform, it would not be invalid, since, as the municipality can prohibit the business altogether, it may impose such conditions upon its existence as it pleases.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1328.]

5. SAME.

For the same reason, the arbitrary power to grant permits to hotels could be properly vested in the board of trustees.

Application of J. L. Murphy for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Lawler, Allen, Van Dyke & Jutten, and H. C. Milsap, for petitioner. John E. Carson, City Atty., for respondent.

SHAW, J. Ordinance No. 262, duly adopted by the city of South Pasadena, and entitled "An ordinance for police regulation, relating to billiard halls, poolrooms, and places where billiard and pool tables are kept for hire or public use in the city of South Pasadena," provides:

"The board of trustees of the city of South Pasadena do ordain as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be, and is hereby made unlawful for any person or persons, individually or by association with others, either as owner, principal, clerk, agent, servant or employé, to establish, open, keep, carry on, or assist in carrying on, or maintain, or assist in maintaining any billiard hall, or poolroom, or other place in the city of South Pasadena, where any billiard, pool, or combination billiard and pool table, or tables, is or are kept for hire or public use, and any person or persons opening, keeping, carrying on, or assisting in carrying on, maintaining, or assisting in maintaining, any such place, herein specified, in said city of South Pasadena, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and every act in violation of this section shall separately, or for each day of its continuance, be deemed a separate offense.

"Provided, however, that nothing in this ordinance shall be construed or understood as prohibiting the owner, manager or lessee of any hotel, universally recognized as a hotel, using a general register for guests, and having twenty-five bedrooms and upwards, furnished as such, from keeping and maintaining any billiard, pool, or combination billiard and pool table, or tables, for the use of regular guests only of said hotel, in a room provided for that purpose in the building in which said hotel is located, and at no other place, on receiving a permit so to do from the board of trustees of the city of South Pasadena. Application for such permits shall be in writing, and filed with the board of trustees at least five days before the same is granted. If, on investigation, said board finds the hotel for which such permit is desired, equipped and conducted as herein specified, it may, in its discretion, grant and issue such permit, without charge, and for such time as desired by the applicant, but in no event to extend beyond the date of the next succeeding municipal election; provided, if said board of trustees shall at any time become satisfied that any person to whom any such permit is granted, his clerk, agent or employé, has permitted any person other than a regular guest of said hotel, or any person who has not in good faith become a regular guest of said hotel, or is guilty of a violation of any provision of this ordinance, they shall cancel, revoke, and withdraw such permit and all rights thereunder, and no other permit shall thereafter be granted to said person."

On January 18, 1908, petitioner was arrested, upon a complaint which charged "that on the 17th day of January, 1908, at said city of South Pasadena, in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, the crime of violating Ordinance No. 262 of said city of South Pasadena was committed by J. L. Murphy, who at the time and place last aforesaid, did willfully and unlawfully engage in, establish, open, keep, carry on, assist in carrying on, maintain and assist in maintaining, a billiard hall and poolroom and place, by then and there keeping billiard, pool, and combination billiard and pool tables for hire and for public use." An answer was filed controverting certain allegations of the petition regarding the manner in which the business was conducted by petitioner, the character of those who frequented the place, and the fact that the conduct of the business was disassociated from any practice tending to encourage profligacy or injuriously affect the good morals of the community. Inasmuch, however, as, according to our view, the validity of the ordinance is unaffected by such alleged facts, conceding them to be true, it is therefore unnecessary to discuss the issues thus raised.

The sole question relates to the validity of the ordinance, disassociated from any consideration of extrinsic questions affecting its reasonableness. Petitioner contends that the ordinance is unconstitutional and void, for the reasons: First, that poolrooms are not a nuisance per se; second, that it is not within the power conferred upon municipalities by section 11, art. 11, of the Constitution of the state of California; third, that it vests arbitrary power in the board of trustees; and, fourth, that it is special and class legislation, in that it confers privileges and immunities upon certain citizens which it denies to others, thus creating a monopoly in the one class. An inspection of the ordinance makes it apparent that it is not a measure adopted for the purpose of raising revenue; hence not an exercise of the power given cities of the sixth class, to which South Pasadena belongs, under the provisions of subdivision 10 of section 862 of the municipal corporation act (St. 1883, p. 270, c. 49), which authorizes such cities to "license, for the purpose of revenue and regulation, all and every kind of business authorized by law, * * * and lawful games carried on therein. * * *" Its purpose is not to license, but to prohibit. Merced Co. v. Helm, 102 Cal. 159, 36 Pac. 399. Authority to enact this ordinance, if it exists at all, is found in section 11, art. 11, of the Constitution of the state of California, which provides: "Any county, city, town, or township, may make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Under this provision the city's power to legislate upon all matters included within its terms is limited only by its territorial boundaries, provided that such legislation shall not conflict with general laws. As said in Odd Fellows' Cem. Ass'n et al. v. San Francisco et al., 140 Cal. 226, 73 Pac. 987, subject to these limitations, the power of the city "is as broad as that of the Legislature itself." There can be no doubt that under this constitutional grant municipalities may, in proper cases, exercise the power therein conferred to the extent of prohibiting the carrying on of a business altogether. Illustrations of the exercise of such power are seen in ordinances for the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors, the suppression of gambling and bawdy houses. Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 279; Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 589, 27 Pac. 933; Odd Fellows' Cem. Ass'n et al. v. San Francisco et al., supra; Merced Co. v. Helm, supra.

We may concede at the outset that the business of conducting a public billiard hall and poolroom is not per se a nuisance. In the case of Ex parte Meyers (Cal. App.) 94 Pac. 870, this court, in considering the validity of "an ordinance prohibiting minors from visiting * * * public billiard and poolrooms, * * *" said: "That a billiard hall is immoral per se because it is public will hardly be contended by any one." Petitioner insists that, unless the business is held to be immoral, or a nuisance per se, it is not subject to the exercise of the city's police power to the extent that it may be prohibited. His contention is that billiard halls and poolrooms fall within that class of cases, the conduct of which might, by reason of the character of the business, prove obnoxious or injurious to health, or affect the comfort and welfare of others, such as laundries, tanneries, and soap factories; that as to those the power of a municipality is to regulate only. This is true as to that class of business recognized as necessary and useful employments, but the character of which renders their operation obnoxious to the health, welfare, or comfort of others in the community. The question of the reasonableness of ordinances regulating the conduct of such business, and excluding their operation from, or confining it to, certain prescribed limits, as well as the uniform operation of the same, is always a proper subject for judicial inquiry. Such avocations being necessary and useful, the citizen, under proper restrictions, has a fundamental right to engage therein. Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 82 Pac. 429, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588. When dealing with a nonuseful calling, the power of the municipality is much broader. The citizen possesses no inherent right to conduct for profit a public place intended purely for the amusement of its patrons, the tendency of which is immoral or vicious. In all such cases the question arises, what is the effect of the conduct of the business upon the morals and public welfare of the community? "That a public pool and billiard hall," says petitioner's counsel, "is a proper subject for police regulation is not denied," and concedes that "stringent rules undoubtedly may be enacted to regulate the said business." Referring again to the case of Ex parte Joseph Meyers, supra, wherein this court held that a poolroom was not per se a nuisance, it was said: "That it may become such by the presence of the professional billiardist and gambler, ready to fleece the unwary and to inculcate the gambling habit in the youth of the city, must be admitted." In the case of Tarkio v. Cook, 120 Mo. 1, 25 S. W. 202, 41 Am. St. Rep. 678, it is said: "Public billiard halls are regarded by many as vicious in their tendencies, leading to idleness, gambling, and other vices." In Goytino v. McAleer et al., 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991, Mr. Justice Allen, expressing the views of this court, said: "Nor can it be said that, as ordinarily, if not invariably, conducted, such business might not within the limits of reasonable probability be attended with uses injurious to the public peace and morals." "Any practice or business, the tendency of which as shown by experience is to weaken or corrupt the morals of those who follow it, or to encourage idleness instead of habits of industry, is a legitimate subject for regulation or prohibition." Ex parte Tuttle, 91 Cal. 589, 27 Pac. 933; Ex parte Lacey, 108 Cal. 326, 41 Pac. 411, 38 L. R. A. 640, 49 Am. St. Rep. 93; State v. Thompson, 160 Mo. 333, 60 S. W. 1077, 54 L. R. A. 950, 83 Am. St. Rep. 468. It thus appears that a public billiard hall and poolroom may, by reason of its environment or conditions existing in some communities, constitute a menace and danger to the morals and well-being of the citizens thereof; and it is therefore a subject for regulation or absolute prohibition, notwithstanding the fact that it is not a nuisance per se; the right of the city depending upon a question of fact, the existence of which it is conclusively presumed the board of trustees has properly passed upon, and the courts cannot go behind such finding. Ex parte Shrader, 33 Cal. 279. Regulation measures, not extending to the stringency of prohibition, might afford adequate protection in some communities, while in others conditions might exist by reason of which the public welfare demanded the absolute suppression of the business. In all cases, however, the extent to which the power shall be exercised is a matter for the legislative body of the municipality to determine. The power of the legislative body of the state, under its police power, to enact general laws prohibiting poolrooms and billiard halls cannot be questioned, and it must follow, in the absence of such general laws, that the police power of a municipality, within its territorial limits, under section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution, is coextensive with that of the state. Cases from other jurisdictions, cited by petitioner in support of the proposition that the power conferred by said section 11, art. 11, extends only to the right to regulate, are inapplicable to the case at bar, for the reason that the questions involved were under charters containing special and limited grants as to the exercise of police power.

Petitioner insists that the ordinance is obnoxious by reason of its being special and class legislation, in that its provisions do not apply to the proprietors of hotels having 25 or more furnished bedrooms, and using a general register for guests. There is no merit in this contention. The ordinance is directed at those persons who keep billiard halls and poolrooms for hire or public use, and its provisions apply to all alike falling within this class. It prohibits every one from engaging in such business. The provisions do not apply to the individual who keeps a pool table in his house for the use of himself and guests, nor to the hotelkeeper who maintains tables for use of bona fide guests only. In neither case can it be said to be public, nor that it creates in either a monopoly of the business. All are alike amenable to the law prohibiting them from conducting such place for hire or public use. Even accepting petitioner's theory as to the effect and operation of the ordinance, there is no force in the objection. As we have seen the city may prohibit altogether, "and if the governing power can prohibit a thing altogether, it can impose such conditions upon its existence as it pleases." Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747. And as said in Ex parte Kidd, 5 Cal. App. 159, 89 Pac. 987: "Let the correctness of his [petitioner's] conclusions be assumed, and we have a case where the lawmaking power is regulating a business, the tendency of which is injurious to the public morals, safety, and welfare." It for the legislative body to determine whether the business shall exist at all, and, if so, under what restrictions. It is quite apparent that keeping billiard and pool tables in a hotel for the exclusive use of its guests would be, to a very great extent, if not altogether, free from the resultant evils and vicious tendencies connected with the public poolroom. If there be a diversity in such legislation, this fact suggests a rational reason for such classification. Counsel for petitioner has cited many authorities in support of his contention. These citations almost without exception, relate to the operation of laws licensing or regulating the conduct of the ordinary and useful avocations of life; that is, those the conduct of which is not recognized as having injurious tendencies. Such cases are wholly inapplicable to the case at bar, for the reason that the inherent and fundamental right of the citizen to conduct the business in the one class of cases is wholly wanting in the other. In the case of In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 328, 81 Pac. 955, Mr. Justice Van Dyke, in discussing the uniform operation of laws, said: "There is no constitutional provision which expressly requires the uniform operation of municipal ordinances. Nevertheless where they unjustly discriminate, they are sometimes declared unreasonable and therefore void. A law is general which applies to all of a class, the classification being a proper one, and the requirement of the constitutional provision in question is satisfied if it applies to all the class alike. The word 'uniform' in the Constitution does not mean universal. The section intends simply that the effect of the general laws shall be the same to and upon all persons who stand in the same relation to the law; that is all the facts of whose cases are substantially the same." In addition to the cases already cited, see Sonora v. Curtin, 137 Cal. 583, 70 Pac. 674; California Reduction Co. v. Sanitary Reduction Works, 126 Fed. 29, 61 C. C. A. 91; Ex parte Koser, 60 Cal. 177; Ex parte Drexel, 147 Cal. 763, 82 Pac. 429, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588; Crowley v. Christensen, 137 U. S. 86, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 34 L. Ed. 620.

That portion of the ordinance relating to hotels keeping billiard and pool tables provides that the board of trustees may, in its discretion, grant permits therefor to such hotels. It is contended that the ordinance is void by reason of the fact that it vests an arbitrary power in the board. Conceding this to be true, nevertheless, since the governing power can prohibit altogether, it may impose any restrictions deemed proper and necessary as a condition of granting permits to conduct such business. In discussing this point in his opinion the late Judge Smith, of the superior court of Los Angeles county, very properly stated, in denying the application of petitioner for a similar writ: "But we have seen that the conducting of a poolroom is not a useful occupation, and does not come within the purview of any of the authorities quoted by the petitioner upon his proposition. The law is well settled in this state, as has been shown by the authorities already cited, that where a business is not a useful occupation, such as conducting a saloon and many kindred places, the Supreme Court has always upheld the power that has been vested in a board or in a person to say whether such person shall have a license or not. Consequently, the many authorities cited by petitioner have to do with lawful and useful businesses, such as referred to in the Yick Wo Case, 118 U. S. 356, 6 Sup. Ct. 1004, 30 L. Ed. 220, which was a laundry case, State v. Mahner, 43 La. Ann. 496, 9 South. 480, which was a dairy case, and other cases of similar character; consequently there is no application to this case." Moreover, petitioner does not bring himself within the class who could be affected by the exercise of such arbitrary discretion, and hence is not affected thereby. Ex parte Kidd, supra.

We find no valid objection to the constitutionality of the ordinance. The writ is denied, and petitioner is remanded to the custody of the city marshal.

PEOPLE v. SILVA. (Cr. 84.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
June 5, 1908. Rehearing Denied
July 9, 1908.)

1. LEWDNESS—INDICTMENT—"ADULTERY."

Pen. Code, § 269a, provides that every person who lives in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor, and Civ. Code, § 93, defines "adultery" as the voluntary intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife. Held, that an indictment charging defendants with the crime of living "in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery with each other," they, the said defendants, not being then and there married to each other, was not defective for failure to allege that either of the defendants was married to another.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 1, pp. 212-214.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED.

Where the evidence is not brought before the appellate tribunal, an objection that certain instructions given were not justified by the evidence could not be reviewed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2941.]

3. SAME—PREJUDICE.

In a prosecution for living in notorious cohabitation and adultery, defendants were not prejudiced by the court embodying the substance of Pen. Code, §§ 31, 659, defining principles and declaring that, whenever an act is declared a misdemeanor, and no punishment for counseling or aiding in the commission thereof is prescribed by law, every person who counsels or aids is guilty of a misdemeanor, in its instructions, though such sections were inapplicable to any issue in the case.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Manuel Silva was convicted of living in open and notorious cohabitation and adultery with another, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Lamy & Putnam, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The appellant, Manuel Silva, and one Mary Rodrigues were jointly charged by indictment, under section 269a, Pen. Code, with the crime of living "in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery with each other, said parties not being then and there married to each other." The indictment contained no direct charge that either of said parties was married at all. A demurrer was interposed to the indictment, upon the grounds, among others: First, that the facts stated in the indictment did not constitute a public offense; and, second that the indictment did not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952, Pen. Code. The demurrer was overruled, and the trial resulted in the conviction of appellant, who thereupon made a motion in arrest of judgment, on substantially the same grounds specified in his demurrer. The motion was denied. The appeal is on the judgment roll.

Section 269a provides that "every person who lives in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery is guilty of a misdemeanor." The indictment charges that "the said Manuel Silva and said Mary Rodrigues, before the finding of this indictment, and between the 1st day of February, 1907, and the 14th day of January, 1908, and at and in the county of San Luis Obispo, state of California, did willfully and unlawfully live in a state of open and notorious cohabitation and adultery with each other, and the said Manuel Silva and the said Mary Rodrigues not being then and there lawfully married to each other, contrary," etc. The general rule is that an indictment is sufficient which charges the offense in the language of the statute. "When the statute defines or describes the acts which shall constitute a particular offense, it is sufficient in an indictment to describe those acts in the language employed in the statute, applying them, of course, concretely to the person charged." People v. Ward, 110 Cal. 369, 42 Pac. 894. This is particularly true where the words used in the statute in defining the offense have a well-recognized or technical meaning. In this case, not only does the statute specify just what acts shall constitute the offense, but in so doing employs words the meaning of which is furnished by the Codes. Section 93, Civ. Code, defines adultery as "the voluntary sexual intercourse of a married person with a person other than the offender's husband or wife." The exception to the rule is well stated by Mr. Justice Lorigan in People v. Perales, 141 Cal. 583, 75 Pac. 170, where it is said: "When, however, the words or terms used in the statute have no technical or precise meaning, which of themselves imply the offense, or where the particular facts or acts which shall constitute it are not specified, but, from the general language used, many things may be done which may constitute an offense, it is then necessary, in charging an offense claimed to be embraced within the general language of the statute, to set forth the particular things or acts charged to have been done, with reasonable certainty and distinctness, so that the court may determine whether an offense within the statute is charged, or one over which it has jurisdiction, and so that the defendant may be advised of the particular nature of it, in order to defend against it, and to plead in bar a judgment of conviction or acquittal thereof, if subsequently prosecuted." The indictment used the language of the statute in charging appellant with all the acts and facts which the Legislature has said shall constitute the offense, and this was sufficient to apprise defendant of the nature of the accusation. It was not necessary to allege therein that he had a lawful wife. The allegation is implied by the charge in the indictment (State v. Hinton, 6 Ala. 864), which fully answers the requirements of subdivision 2 of section 950, Pen. Code, in that it contains "a statement of the acts constituting the offense, in ordinary and concise language, and in such manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended" (People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 136, 25 Pac. 1110; People v. Mahony, 145 Cal. 104, 78 Pac. 354).

It is next contended that the court, at the request of the state, erroneously embodied the substance of sections 31 and 659, Pen. Code, in the instructions given the jury. As the evidence is not before us, we cannot say that it did not, upon some theory of the case, justify the instructions given. Moreover, conceding the instructions were not applicable to any issue, it is difficult to conceive how the substantial rights of defendant could have been prejudiced by the giving of the same. Blashfield on Instructions to Juries, § 91; People v. Cain (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 1037.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Evidence held to support findings that a contract of one partner to sell his interest in vegetable gardens to another partner was conditioned upon the consent of the remaining partners, and that they refused to consent thereto.

On cross-examination he testified that two of the other partners were present. Held, that it was proper to ask him, on cross-examination, if any of those present had said that the sale could not be made without the consent of the partners, since the question related to the subject-matter, as to which the witness had testified in chief, and defendant had a right to the whole conversation, and to test the witness' memory and accuracy in regard to the agreement to sell, and to the things he said were done.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Davide Gondolfo against Giovanni Garbarino. From a judgment for defendant, and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto & Richardson, for appellant. C. L. Patton and Eugene Bianchi, Jr., for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The complaint alleges that the defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff an undivided one-fifth interest in and to certain vegetable gardens, known as the "Stagnaro Gardens," near the Six-Mile House in the city and county of San Francisco, for the sum of $300, and the plaintiff paid to defendant $100 on account of such purchase price; that plaintiff has tendered the balance of the purchase price, but that defendant has at all times refused to accept the balance of $200, or to convey the interest to plaintiff as he agreed. Judgment is prayed for $1,500 for breach of the alleged contract.

The answer alleges, by way of affirmative defense, that at the time of the agreement to sell the said vegetable gardens were partnership property, and owned by the following partners, to wit: Emanuele Stagnaro, Giovanni Queirolo, B. Costa, Giacomo Barga-glotti, Fortunato Gotelli, Giovanni Garbarino, Davide Gondolfo, Stefano Ghiorso, and Marco Ghiesa; that the agreement to sell was made upon the express condition and understanding that the other partners should consent and agree to the said sale, or it should not be binding upon defendant, and that the other partners of defendant refused to consent to such sale; that the defendant, upon ascertaining that his partners would not consent to such sale, tendered to plaintiff the $100 that had been paid to him, and that plaintiff refused to accept it.

The case turned upon the question as to whether or not the agreement to sell was conditional upon the consent of the other partners being obtained. The court found as follows: "(3) That on said 20th day of May, 1906, defendant agreed to sell to plaintiff, and plaintiff agreed to purchase from defendant, one-fifth of the vegetable garden and other property described in paragraph 1 of the complaint herein for the sum of $300, upon the express condition, however, that the other partners, owning seven-tenths of said vegetable garden and other property (as set forth in finding No. 1) should consent and agree to the sale of defendant's one-fifth interest therein to plaintiff. * * * (5) That the partners of plaintiff and defendant have refused to consent and agree, and did not and do not consent and agree, to the transfer or sale of defendant's interest in said vegetable garden and property described in paragraph 1 of the complaint herein to plaintiff." It is claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the above findings; but, after a careful examination, we conclude that it is sufficient. The defendant testified that at the time of the agreement to sell plaintiff said to him that he would pay the deposit, and, if the other partners were not satisfied, defendant would have to return the deposit, and that the sale was upon the condition that the other partners would consent; that if they did not consent he would return the deposit to plaintiff. Ghiesa, one of the partners, testified that he was present at the time of the agreement to sell; that he told the parties that they could not sell out unless the partners were satisfied; and he further testified that he refused to give his consent to the transfer or the contemplated sale. Ghiorso, another partner, testified that he told the parties that the sale could not be made without the consent of all the partners; that he was not content with the sale, for the reason that defendant is the head man, who plants all the vegetables.

It is not necessary to notice the other several findings, for the reason that the findings discussed go to the merits of the whole case, and dispose of it.

It is unnecessary to discuss the question as to whether or not a contract, by which one partner is prohibited from selling his interest in the partnership assets, would be void as against public policy. This is not such case, but one of a condition, annexed to the sale, to the effect that it should not be consummated or valid unless the other persons were satisfied. There certainly is nothing unlawful or contrary to public policy or morals for one partner to agree to sell if his partners are satisfied and will consent, at the same time saying that he will not sell unless they are satisfied.

Plaintiff's counsel claim that the court erred in overruling certain objections made by them to questions asked by defendant's counsel, and in regard to certain rulings in other respects, in the admission or exclusion of testimony. A sample of such alleged errors is the first one, in which it is claimed that the court erred in overruling the plaintiff's objection to a question asked of plaintiff himself in cross-examination. Plaintiff had testified, in direct examination, as to the agreement to sell, the payment of $100 to defendant, and the conversation that took place at the time. In cross-examination he testified that Ghiesa and Ghiorso, two of the partners, were present. Counsel for defendant then asked the plaintiff in cross-examination the following question: "Did any of those present say that this sale could not be made without the consent of the partners?" Plaintiff's counsel objected to the question as irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and not proper cross-examination. The objection was overruled, and plaintiff's counsel duly excepted. In view of the direct examination the question was proper. It related to the subject-matter concerning which the witness had testified in chief. The defendant had a right to the whole of the conversation, and to test the memory of the witness, and the accuracy of his statements in regard to the agreement to sell, and in regard to the matters and things that he said were done. But, aside from this, the answer was harmless. The witness answered the question as follows: "I never heard anything about that, and I went away." It is apparent from what has been said that the matter is too trivial for further discussion.

The other objections are equally without merit, and we will not discuss them further. The judgment and order are affirmed.

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF CONTRACT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, which provides that "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission is invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent," it is not essential that the employment should be evidenced by a written contract, but merely that there should be some note or memorandum thereof, signed by the party to be charged; nor is it necessary that the real estate should be fully and accurately described therein, but it is sufficient if it contains a description by which the land can be identified. A letter giving the price on property described as the "Yorba Ranch," and promising to pay a commission in case of sale, is sufficient, under the statute, to sustain an action for the commission on a sale of such ranch.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Action by J. B. Sanchez against P. J. Yorba. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Variel & Hannon, for appellant. Avery & French, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to recover a real estate broker's commission for services, alleged to have been performed in making a sale of certain lands owned by defendant and his sister. It is alleged that the employment was, by a written instrument, subscribed by defendant, whereby defendant employed plaintiff's assignor, T. G. Yorba, to sell certain real estate situated in Orange county, Cal., known as the "Yorba Ranch," and consisting of lots one to six, inclusive, of the Trinidad Yorba Estate, as shown by a certain map of the Rancho Cañon de Santa Ana, and whereby defendant also agreed to pay said T. G. Yorba regular commission fees in case of a sale thereof. The complaint alleges: "That said T. G. Yorba, in pursuance of said agreement, himself and by his agents and employés did, on or about the 5th day of February, 1906, find and procure a purchaser therefor in one Jacob Stern, and caused said defendant and said Stern to come into communication with one another regarding a sale thereof; that said Stern was ready, able, and willing to purchase said land, and did, on or about the 10th day of May, 1906, purchase lots numbers 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6 thereof, containing 1,378.86 acres, through the said efforts of said T. G. Yorba"; that said sale was made for $69,000; that the regular commission fees for making such sale was 5 per cent. on the sale price thereof—followed by allegations of nonpayment and due assignment of the claim to plaintiff. The complaint contains a second count for the reasonable value of the services rendered by T. G. Yorba, at the special instance and request of defendant, in writing, in aiding and procuring the sale of said lands, with like allegations of nonpayment and assignment of the claim to plaintiff. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Defendant's demurrer interposed to the complaint was overruled. This ruling is assigned as error, defendant contending that the complaint is insufficient, by reason of the fact that it fails to allege that defendant was the owner of the real estate, which it is alleged he employed plaintiff's assignor to sell. In support of this contention he cites, among other cases, Crane v. McCormick, 92 Cal. 176, 28 Pac. 222, where it is said: "A real estate agent's right of recovery depends entirely upon his contract with the owner of the land." And McCarthy v. Loupe, 62 Cal. 302, where it is said, in order to justify a recovery, "it is indispensable that he [the agent] should show that he was employed by the owner to make the sale." Neither of these cases constitutes authority in support of appellant's contention. In the former case the point at issue was whether the facts entitled the agent to recover under the terms of the contract. The effect of the decision is to hold that the right of recovery in the agent must be measured by the contract, which in that case was made with one who was the owner of the land. In the latter case the alleged agent, in the absence of any writing, sought to recover upon an implied promise, and in deciding that he could not recover thereon the court used the language quoted, the meaning of which, when applied to the facts, is quite clear and unambiguous. Subdivision 6 of section 1624, Civ. Code, provides that: "An agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission is invalid unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed [not by the owner but] by the party to be charged, or by his agent." Under the construction for which appellant contends, ordinary prudence would require an agent in his dealings to procure an abstract of title, or resort to other means of ascertaining whether his principal had a clear and marketable title to the land which he was employed to sell. Under said section 1624, Civ. Code, there is no reason why A. should not by contract charge himself with the duty of paying C. a commission for selling or finding a purchaser for the lands of B. It is purely a matter of contract, and it is immaterial so far as concerns the agent's right to recover, whether the party to be charged therein is or is not the owner of the land which the agent is employed to sell. It is unnecessary to discuss other grounds of demurrer; suffice it to say there is no merit in them.

Appellant attacks a number of findings and insists that they are unsupported by the evidence. The chief question involved is the sufficiency of the written instrument under which it is sought to charge defendant with the payment of commissions. As said in Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 640, 25 Pac. 131, "the employment is the chief element in the contract"; and, in 1 Lawson's Rights, Remedies, and Practice, § 226, it is said: "To entitle a real estate agent to recover the commissions for the sale of property he must show the employment." For the purpose of showing that defendant did employ plaintiff's assignor, a letter, addressed to T. G. Yorba, by defendant, was offered and admitted in evidence, over objections of the defendant. This letter, which forms the basis of this action, is as follows:

"Lordsburg, Calif., 12—12—1905.

"T. G. Yorba, Whittier, Calif.—Dear Uncle: Yours received. I saw Francesca, and she said $125 per acre is her price on her 44-acre lot. With regards to the price on the Yorba Ranch, $50 per acre is all right, and we also agree to pay regular commission fees in case of sale. Remembrance to all the family. Your nephew, P. J. Yorba."

The statute does not require that the employment or authorization shall be evidenced by a written contract, but merely that there shall be some note or memorandum thereof, signed by the party to be charged. In the case of Grant v. Ede, 85 Cal. 418, 24 Pac. 890, 20 Am. St. Rep. 237, the principal had in a letter, after referring to a conversation wherein the agent stated he could get $30,000 for a piece of property, said: "We will sell at that price, * * * and allow you 2½ per cent. on said price, and if no sale is made, no expenses made to us. William Ede." The agent, under the authority of this letter, executed a contract of sale to a proposed purchaser and it was sought to enforce the same. The court, in holding that the letter did not empower the agent to make a contract of sale binding upon his principal, in the course of its opinion, stated: "Without this written memorandum signed by the party to be charged, Martin [the agent] could not have recovered compensation for negotiating the sale of the property." It is true the question of recovery on the part of the agent was not involved in the action, but the language of the court is, nevertheless, significant. See, also, Lindley v. Fay, 119 Cal. 239, 51 Pac. 333. Appellant lays much stress upon the letter involved in the case of Mendenhall v. Rose (Cal.) 33 Pac. 884, but reference to this case shows that it bears no analogy to the case at bar. The court very properly held that the letter there considered did not purport to employ the agent to sell a certain tract of land, referred to by the writer as the "Hoza Bernal Tract." The letter in the case at bar must be construed as a sufficient note or memorandum, whereby T. G. Yorba was authorized to sell the land for the price named, and constitutes an agreement on defendant's part to pay him, in case of a sale, regular commissions therefor. Under this view, it was properly admitted in evidence as proof of the employment of plaintiff's assignor by the defendant, and fully supports the finding of the court with reference to the employment.

There is nothing in the point that the note or memorandum should have contained a full and accurate description of the land. The uncontroverted allegations of the complaint and evidence admit of no question as to the identity of the property sold with the Yorba Ranch mentioned in the letter. Defendant himself testifies that the land described in the deed, whereby he conveyed it to one Ray acting for Stern, the purchaser, is the Yorba Ranch. The description of the land as the Yorba Ranch furnishes the means for readily identifying the property. Ontario, etc., Assn. v. Cutting F. P. Co., 134 Cal. 21, 66 Pac. 28, 53 L. R. A. 681, 86 Am. St. Rep. 231; Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 208, 20 Pac. 386; Browne on Stat. of Frauds, § 385. In the case of Mendenhall v. Rose, supra, cited by appellant in support of his contention on this point, the court clearly points out wherein the letter there furnished no means for identifying the property.

The court found that T. G. Yorba, in pursuance of said agreement, himself and by his agents and employes, and on or about February 5, 1906, did find and procure a purchaser for said land in one Jacob Stern; that said Stern was ready, willing, and able to purchase said land; and appellant contends that this finding is unsupported by the evidence. The evidence shows that on January 2, 1906, T. G. Yorba and J. B. Sanchez, plaintiff in the action, entered into a contract, whereby, after reciting that defendant had, in writing, authorized T. G. Yorba to sell the land in question, and agreed to pay him the usual commissions therefor, it was agreed that said T. G. Yorba and Sanchez should combine their efforts in an endeavor to sell the property, and, in case they succeeded, they would divide the commissions as therein provided. The evidence also tends to show that subsequent to this arrangement Sanchez had a conversation with defendant, wherein defendant said that his price for the land was $50 per acre, in accordance with his letter to T. G. Yorba. That on the 6th day of February, 1906, Sanchez notified defendant by phone that he had a man by the name of Stern who wanted to buy the ranch, and asked defendant if he knew him. Receiving an affirmative answer, he then asked defendant: "Do you think it will justify me in taking him out; has he got any money?" Defendant replied: "Yes; he has got money. You take him out"—to which Sanchez replied: "All right; I take him out to-morrow. On the following day Sanchez met Mr. Stern and others at Fullerton, and provided conveyances, in which they were conducted by him to and over the property, Sanchez pointing out the corners. There is abundant testimony to show that Sanchez and Stern met frequently during a period of several weeks, the object of such meetings being the discussion of the proposed sale of the property to Stern. On one of these occasions, according to plaintiff's testimony, he (Stern) brought with him his partner, and asked plaintiff to give him the price of the land, to which plaintiff replied: "You can talk to Mr. Yorba in person. I will call him up." Stern replied: "No; I will think it over, and will come in again." On May 10, 1906, defendant gave Stern an option on the land at $48.75 per acre, followed later by a deed of transfer. The evidence is ample in showing that both T. G. Yorba and plaintiff labored jointly in an effort to dispose of the property, and that defendant was fully aware that both parties were laboring to that end. Defendant himself testifies that at one meeting with a party who offered him $40 per acre T. G. Yorba was present. This was a meeting in response to a message from Sanchez, telling him that he had a purchaser, and had $500 to close the deal.

Appellant attacks the finding that Stern was ready, willing, and able to purchase the land. A sufficient answer to this contention is that the evidence conclusively shows that he did purchase that portion known as the "Yorba Ranch," and at a price satisfactory to defendant.

Appellant assigns error in the rulings of the court in the admission and exclusion of testimony, nearly all of which alleged errors, however, are based upon appellant's theory of the insufficiency of the letter to constitute an employment. What has been said upon this subject sufficiently disposes of these errors; suffice it to say that we find no prejudicial error in the rulings of the court in admitting evidence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

LITCH et al. v. O'CONNOR et al. (Civ. 444.)
(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
July 7, 1908.)

1. COURTS — APPELLATE COURTS — JURISDICTION — EQUITY CASES — "EQUITABLE ACTION."

An action to set aside a default entered in a foreclosure proceeding, and to have the decree entered therein vacated and declared void, is an equitable action within Const. art. 6, § 4, giving the Supreme Court jurisdiction in equity cases; and hence an appeal in such action was improperly brought to the Court of Appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, p. 2433.]

2. SAME—TRANSFER OF CAUSES—CASES APPEALED TO WRONG COURT.

Under Const. art. 6, § 4, providing that no appeal taken to a Court of Appeal shall be dismissed because it was not taken to the proper court, but shall be transferred to the proper court, an appeal in an equity case improperly brought to the appellate court is not lost, but will be transferred to the Supreme Court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Courts, § 1303.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; K. S. Mahan, Judge.

Action by A. G. Litch and another against Charles A. O'Connor and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Cause transferred to the Supreme Court.

L. F. Eggers, for appellants. Park Henshaw, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The record in this case is called to our attention by a motion to dismiss the appeal as prematurely taken and also as taken from a nonappealable order.

The action is to set aside a default entered in a foreclosure proceeding, and to have the decree of foreclosure entered therein vacated, and declared null and void. The action is clearly in equity. The appeal is taken directly to this court, whereas by the provisions of section 4, art. 6, Const., appellate jurisdiction is given to the Supreme Court. The appeal, however, is not lost, but the same section of the Constitution provides that the cause be transferred to the proper court.

It is therefore ordered that the cause be transferred to the Supreme Court.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS HOME ASS'N OF CALIFORNIA v. NYE, State Comptroller. (Civ. 447.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. July 11, 1908.)

1. STATES—ACT APPROPRIATING MONEY TO CHARITABLE INSTITUTION—CONSTITUTIONALITY—STATE INSTITUTIONS—"INSTITUTION UNDER EXCLUSIVE MANAGEMENT AND CONTROL OF STATE."

By St. 1897, p. 447, c. 274, an appropriation was made for the support and maintenance of certain classes of inmates of the home at Evergreen under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, which was then a private corporation. The act further provided that the home should be managed by a board of directors, to be appointed by the Governor, who was empowered to fill all vacancies therein and remove any director for cause; that the board should keep accounts of all receipts and expenditures and report annually to the Governor; and that all claims under the appropriation made should be presented and audited as other claims against the state. Held, that such act made the home a state institution under the exclusive management and control of the state, within the provision of article 4, § 22, Const. Cal., that with certain exceptions no money shall be appropriated or drawn from the state treasury "for the use or benefit of any corporation * * * or any other institution not under the exclusive management and control of the state as a state institution."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, States, § 118.]

2. SAME—APPROPRIATIONS—GIFTS.

An act making an appropriation for the support, in the Home of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, of ex army nurses and certain female relatives of veterans of the Civil War, which provides that no inmate for whose support there is paid, independent of state aid, $12.50 per month or more, shall be entitled to any aid under the act, and that, where less than $12.50 a month is paid, state aid may be had to raise the amount for support to that sum, cannot be held a gift within Const. art. 4, § 31, forbidding the Legislature to make any gift of any public money to any individual or corporation, when the duty of the state to care for its citizens who are unable to support themselves is considered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, States, § 118.]

3. STATUTES—SPECIAL LEGISLATION — POWER TO MAINTAIN INSTITUTIONS FOR SUPPORT OF VETERAN SOLDIERS AND DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

Under the general power of the state to provide for the maintenance of those citizens who are unable to care for themselves, and the implied power given to the Legislature by Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 33, to enact special laws where a general law cannot be made applicable, the Legislature may lawfully provide for the maintenance and support, in a different manner from others of such general class, of veteran soldiers and their dependent relatives, who constitute a special class having peculiar claims upon the state, as well as the nation, and may also provide for the support of ex army nurses and dependent female relatives of veterans in a separate institution and in a different manner from the veterans themselves, and an act appropriating money for the support of such ex-nurses and female relatives in the home established at Evergreen by the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, which has been made a state institution, is not unconstitutional as special legislation.

4. SAME—APPLICABILITY OF GENERAL LAW.

Under Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 33, providing that the Legislature shall not pass a local or special law in cases where a general law can be made applicable, the question whether in a given case a general law can be made applicable is a matter for decision by the Legislature, and the courts cannot interfere except in case of a clear disregard of the constitutional requirement.

Petition by the board of directors of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association of California against A. B. Nye, State Controller, for writ of mandamus. Writ granted.

H. C. Dibble and Oliver Dibble, for petitioners. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HART, J. This is a direct application to this court by the petitioners for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent, as State Controller, to draw his warrant on the State Treasurer for the sum of $784.50, which said sum is alleged in the petition to be an unexpended balance of the sum of $10,000 appropriated by the Legislature of 1903 for the support and maintenance of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, located at Evergreen, Santa Clara county, Cal. It is alleged in the petition that the petitioners presented to the state board of examiners a duly verified account and demand for the payment of said sum of $784.50, and that said board, on the 15th day of February, 1908, allowed and approved the said account and demand for said sum, and on the same day presented the same to the respondent, with the request that he draw his warrant upon the State Treasurer in favor of the petitioners for the payment of said claim; and that said respondent, as State Controller, refused to draw his warrant on the State Treasurer for the same. Annexed to and made part of the petition is a letter from the respondent addressed to the attorney for the petitioners herein, giving his reason for refusing to draw his warrant on the treasurer for the claim. Said letter reads: "Referring to your letter of February 25th, relative to the claim of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, I beg to say that there was this day received in this office a claim for support for the half year ending December 31st, 1906, amounting to $784.50; such claim having been passed by the state board of examiners. After giving due attention to this claim, I have reached the conclusion that I cannot draw a warrant for the payment of the same, because I am not fully satisfied that the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association is a state institution." The ground upon which the respondent refuses to draw his warrant, as intimated in the foregoing letter, is that the act making the appropriation for the support and maintenance of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association is repugnant to certain provisions of the Constitution. The Attorney General, representing respondent, has interposed a demurrer to the petition, and thus the questions necessary to be considered and decided are presented.

The Legislature of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 447, c. 274) passed an act, and the Governor approved the same, the purpose of which may best be exhibited by reference to the provisions thereof. Section 1 provides for the appropriation of the sum of $10,000 "for the support and maintenance of the ex army nurses and the widows, wives, mothers, and dependent destitute maiden daughters or sisters of Union veterans who served honorably in the Civil War, residing in the home at Evergreen, Santa Clara county, under the auspices of the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the state, in the manner following, to wit: The sum of $150.00 per annum for each ex army nurse, widow, wife, mother, or maiden daughter or sister, duly admitted and residing in such home; provided, the whole of said sum shall not be expended in any one year for such support and maintenance." Section 3 of said act provides that the management and control of said home shall be by a board of 11 directors, to be appointed by the Governor, 6 of whom shall be appointed for two years and five of whom for one year, and section 4 provides that "as the terms of office of directors shall expire, or in case of vacancy, the Governor shall appoint their successors. The Governor shall have power to remove any director for cause." Section 5 requires that "each member of the board of directors shall take and file with the Secretary of State the oath of office as provided by law." The third, fourth, and fifth subdivisions of section 6 make it incumbent on the board to keep a full record of its meetings, a book containing the monthly accounts, in which shall be entered all moneys received from any and all sources, all disbursements made and the purpose for which made; to keep a pay roll of the employes and the amount disbursed to each, at what rate of wages and for the length and kind of services, and to forward to and file with the state board of examiners, at the time of making demand or presenting claims for state aid, a transcript of such books and pay roll, verified by the oath of the president or secretary of said home. Section 7 reads: "Every claim for aid under this act shall be presented to and audited and allowed by the state board of examiners, and when allowed, in whole or in part, by said board of examiners, it shall be the duty of the Controller to draw his warrant for the amount thereof in favor of the president and treasurer of the board of directors of said home association, and it shall be the duty of the State Treasurer to pay the same on due presentation." Section 9 provides: "The board shall cause to be made a verified report on the fifteenth day of August of each year to the Governor, containing a statement of all receipts and expenses, the condition of the home, the number of inmates during the year ending June 30th, and such other matters as may be required by him. All reports shall be verified by the oath of the president and secretary of the board."

The assault upon the act by the respondent involves, principally, two questions, to wit: (1) Is the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association, by the provisions of said act, placed under the exclusive management and control of the state as a state institution? (2) If the act does make said home a state institution to be exclusively managed and controlled as such by the state, assuming that in view of its purposes it can be made one, did the Legislature violate certain provisions of the Constitution in the enactment of such legislation?

The fact is conceded that prior to the passage of the act in question the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association existed as a private corporation; it having been organized under the laws of the state. It is claimed by the Attorney General that the act does not make the home a state institution, hence it is contended that the appropriation made by said act is in direct contravention of section 22 of article 4 of the Constitution. Said section, among other things, provides: " * * * No money shall ever be appropriated or drawn from the state treasury for the use or benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution not under the exclusive management and control of the state as a state institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property ever be made thereto by the state; provided, that, notwithstanding anything contained in this or any other section of this Constitution, the Legislature shall have the power to grant aid to institutions conducted for the support and maintenance of minor orphans, or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances—such aid to be granted by a uniform rule, and proportioned to the number of inmates of such respective institutions." It will be observed that the first part of the foregoing provision of the Constitution prohibits the Legislature from making appropriations for the use of corporations, etc., not under the exclusive control of the state as state institutions; while the latter part expressly excepts from the operation of said provision institutions having the care, maintenance, and support of minor orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, and aged persons in indigent circumstances, although such institutions are not under the exclusive management and control of the state as state institutions.

It is contended by the respondent that the Woman's Relief Corps Home is still a private corporation, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 447, c. 274) purporting to place the home under the control of the state as a state institution; that the Legislature, assuming the act in question to involve the exercise of competent legislative power, has utterly failed to make it a state institution, etc. We are unable to agree with the learned Attorney General in this contention. In 1889 the Legislature made an appropriation of $25,000, of which $10,000 were to be expended in the construction of buildings and $15,000 for the support of the widows, wives, etc., of veterans and army nurses in indigent circumstances who were or were to become inmates of the home so provided for. At that time the home was a private corporation; but the circumstance of the making of said appropriation by the Legislature is important here in determining whether the Legislature, by the act under consideration, intended to make the home a state institution, to be under the exclusive management and control of the state. By that act (St. 1889, p. 418, c. 268) it was made manifest that the legislative department of the state government recognized, as the federal government had already done for itself, the duty of contributing toward the support and maintenance of such of those citizens as might require it who fought the battles of their country when the dark clouds of Civil War enveloped it and threatened the destruction of its Constitution and its institutions. To carry out this policy founded in a strong moral duty, it was, of course, necessary that there should be legislation, and that whatever legislation might be required should be enacted, if it could be done, in accordance with the commands and the terms of the Constitution of the state. In 1897 the Legislature, in pursuance of this policy, passed the law, the constitutional validity of which is questioned in this proceeding. That the Legislature by the last-mentioned act intended to adopt the Woman's Relief Corps Home Association as a state institution, of which it intended that the state should exercise exclusive management and control, I do not entertain the slightest doubt. The act provides, as seen, for the appointment of a board of directors of said home by the Governor of the state. It provides that the executive shall fill by appointment all vacancies occurring in the board of directors from whatever cause. It requires the board and other officers to keep an account of its receipts of money and of all expenditures, and provides that no money shall be drawn on the fund established by legislative appropriation for its support or the support of its inmates, except it be done in the manner authorized by law for the payment of all other claims against the state. It provides that a verified report, containing a statement of the receipts and expenses of the home and the condition thereof, etc., shall be by the board of directors transmitted to the Governor on the 15th day of August of each year. The Governor is given by the act the power to remove any director for cause. I cannot perceive how the Legislature could have more plainly demonstrated its intention to make the home a state institution, as much under the control and supervision of the state as are the state hospitals and other like institutions, than by the provisions to which I have just referred. It is true that there is no language in the act expressly declaring the home to be a state institution, or that its management and control shall be exclusively vested in the state. But I do not apprehend that, in order to make it so, it must be specifically labeled as such. It is sufficiently known by the clothes that it wears. The single fact that the power of the removal of a director is placed by the act with the executive of the state is itself plainly indicative of the intention of the Legislature to make it a state institution under the exclusive management and control of the state. The other provisions of the act emphasize this intention. The Legislature found in the home a mere private corporation, organized under the laws of the state for eleemosynary purposes, and by an act deprived it of the character of a private corporation by impressing it with all the essential qualities of a state institution. The very argument of the Attorney General tends to establish the soundness of this proposition, for he correctly declares that, if the home still remains a private corporation, the mode of appointing the directors authorized by the act would be in conflict with the thirty-third subdivision of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution, providing that the Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in cases where a general law can be made applicable. It is not to be assumed that the Legislature would deliberately attempt to invalidate a private corporation, already duly organized according to the laws of the state, by annexing to it a mode of selecting its directors plainly and palpably in violation of the requirements of the Constitution. It will no doubt be conceded that the Constitution contains no language prohibiting the Legislature from converting a private corporation into a state institution and placing it under the exclusive management and control of the state, provided, of course, that the purposes sought to be achieved by such corporation are within the general legislative power or involve some duty or function of government. Melvin v. State, 121 Cal. 16, 55 Pac. 416.

In dismissing this point I feel no reluctance in confessing that if the language of the statute under consideration does not make the home a state institution under the exclusive management and control of the state, within the meaning of section 22 of article 4 of the Constitution, then I am at a loss to understand what the Legislature meant or intended to accomplish by the enactment of the law. For the purposes of the discussion of this point, I have assumed, as before observed, that the Legislature possesses the constitutional right and power to establish the home as a state institution—a proposition, the consideration of which I now approach fully sensible of its great importance, both as to the legal questions involved as well as to the significance of the consequences of the decision, whatever it may be. If, on the one hand, it should be found necessary to declare that the act under review represents an exercise of unauthorized power by the Legislature, the effect of such decision will react not alone upon the institution here involved, but will, of necessity, operate upon and destroy, as a state institution, the veteran's home for United States soldiers and sailors, at Yountville, this state, the same having been established and declared a state institution by the Legislature of 1889. St. 1889, p. 418, c. 268. The two institutions must stand or fall upon the same identical principles. On the other hand, the provisions of the Constitution cannot be lightly brushed aside because certain persons or set of persons may, to some extent, suffer by their proper enforcement. They should, of course, be enforced, as it was intended that they should be, without regard to the consequences which may follow such enforcement.

Among the provisions of the Constitution to which the Attorney General insists that the act in question is repugnant are the following: " * * * Nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens." Article 1, § 21. "(2) The Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say: * * * Granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege or immunity." Article 4, § 25, subd. 19. "(3) * * * Nor shall it (the Legislature) have power to make any gift, or authorize the making of any gift, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever." Article 4, § 31. The foregoing provisions, it is claimed, were disregarded by the Legislature in the enactment of this law. To uphold the enactment, it is urged, the courts must close their eyes to the plain mandates of the Constitution. The Attorney General argues that the purposes of the home are entirely nongovernmental, and that it is in excess of the power of the Legislature to convert or undertake to transform such a corporation into a state institution, or place it as such under the exclusive management and control of the state; that the mere fact that the Legislature has attempted to invest it with the character of a state institution does not necessarily make it so, since only those institutions which are the instruments through which some governmental functions are to be performed can the Legislature make state institutions under the exclusive management and control of the state. Therefore it is argued an appropriation of money by the Legislature for the use and benefit of such an "institution" would amount to a gift contrary to the provisions of section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution. This position, if the premise be well founded, would perhaps be sound. And it is further contended that even if the objects of the home are germane to the functions of government, and are therefore within the legislative power, the legislation involved in the act is special, and consequently unconstitutional, because it does not apply "equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or intrinsic or constitutional distinction." Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 251, 27 Pac. 604; Darcy v. Mayor of San Jose, 104 Cal. 642, 38 Pac. 500; Marsh v. Supervisors, 111 Cal. 372, 42 Pac. 975; Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 468, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664; Johnson v. Goodyear Mining Co., 127 Cal. 4, 59 Pac. 304, 47 L. R. A. 338, 78 Am. St. Rep. 17. In other words, it is claimed that the act attempts to provide for the care of certain persons arbitrarily selected from the body of the people.

As a matter of course, no one will dispute the proposition that the support of paupers and the giving of assistance to those who, by reason of age, infirmity, or disability, or inability for any reason to take care of themselves, might become such, is, by the practice and common consent of civilized countries, a public purpose, and within the general legislative power. As is said by Judge Cooley, in his work on Taxation, p. 205, speaking of the establishment of hospitals where dependent classes can receive medical aid and assistance, asylums where the deaf, the dumb, and the blind may be supported and taught, and where the insane may be kept from doing or receiving harm and can have such careful and scientific treatment, with a view to their restoration, as they would not be likely to receive elsewhere: "He would be a bold man who, in these days, should question the public right to make provision for these benevolent purposes." There is, of course, no question raised here of the right and duty of the state to provide for those who, through physical or mental disability, are unable to provide for themselves; but the power sought to be exercised by the act under consideration is the same as the power spoken of by Judge Cooley, although such legislation, when applied to the persons concerned here, proceeds less upon the principle of benevolence than upon the consideration that aid accorded by the state to those who defended and preserved the governments of our country, when, as supposed to have been originally constituted, they were threatened with complete annihilation, is rather in the nature of some reward for a service, the value of which can scarcely be estimated. The general scheme and the paramount purpose of the act appear to be the establishment of a refuge or a permanent home, where the comforts of home life may, to some extent, be had, for the ex army nurses and certain relatives of ex Union soldiers, who served honorably in the Civil War, who are unable to provide homes for themselves. Section 8 provides that "no inmate for whose support there is paid, independent of state aid, the sum of twelve dollars and fifty cents or more per month, shall be entitled to any aid under this act. But if such sum be less than twelve dollars and fifty cents per month, aid shall be granted for such sum only as is necessary to make the full amount for support, including the state aid, twelve dollars and fifty cents per month." St. 1897, p. 449, c. 274. By this provision of the act it is made perfectly clear that only such persons as have no income whatever or who have an income not equal to the sum of $12.50 per month shall receive any financial aid from the appropriation provided for by the act. Of course, as already shown, ex Union soldiers and their families, if in a condition in which, by reason of old age or other physical disability, they are unable to properly take care of themselves, and are without means with which to provide for their proper care and support, and there are no relatives financially able, who are obligated by the law to contribute to their support and care, would be entitled to be supported and maintained at the expense of the public under the general duty and power of the state government to support paupers and those who are likely to become such for the reasons stated. In other words, the persons provided for by the act here, being unable to take care of themselves, would be entitled to be cared for by the public in some form, and the power is therefore vested in the Legislature to make some sort of provision for them. From this it, of course, follows that the contention of the respondent that the appropriation provided for by said act amounts to a gift within the meaning of section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution cannot be sustained. See case of Yosemite Stage, etc., Co. v. Dunn, 83 Cal. 265, 23 Pac. 369, as to what constitutes a gift within the purview of said provision of the Constitution. The only question, then, is: Has the Legislature, by the manner in which it has exercised or attempted to exercise its right to provide for the care and support of the persons eligible to become inmates of the home, violated any other of the provisions of the Constitution?

At the outset, it may be conceded that the act in question is a special law, because it provides only for certain members of what I regard as a class within the definition of that term as given by the Supreme Court in the cases of Pasadena v. Stimson, supra, Darcy v. Mayor of San Jose, 104 Cal. 642, 38 Pac. 500, Marsh v. Supervisors, 111 Cal. 372, 43 Pac. 975, Ex parte Jentzsch, 112 Cal. 372, 44 Pac. 803, 32 L. R. A. 664, and Johnson v. Goodyear Mining Co., 127 Cal. 4, 59 Pac. 304, 47 L. R. A. 338, 78 Am. St. Rep. 17. In other words, I am of the opinion that the veterans of the Civil War constitute a class founded upon a natural distinction; that is, a distinction arising in the very nature of things. In one of the opinions to which I have referred it is said that the distinction must be founded upon differences which are either defined by the Constitution or natural, and which will suggest a reason which might rationally be held to justify the diversity of legislation. Or, as I understand it, a distinction founded upon the necessity of legislation peculiarly applicable to a particular set of persons who are distinguished from the general body of the people by reason of the possession of some exclusive characteristic or characteristics, common to such set of persons. The "exclusive characteristic" possessed by the veterans of the Civil War consists in the peculiar and extraordinary service performed by them in the defense and preservation of the government of the Union as well as of the governments of the states when those governments were threatened with destruction. The act under consideration is, as stated, a special law for the reason that its provisions do not and by their terms cannot apply to and operate equally upon all belonging to the class to which the persons concerned here belong. That is to say, conceding, as I think must be done, that the relatives of the Civil War veterans and the ex army nurses provided for by the act are members of the class to which the veterans themselves belong, the legislation under attack here is, obviously, designed to operate upon and benefit only a certain portion of said class. The question, therefore, to be determined is: Has the Legislature constitutional power to enact a law specially applicable to the persons concerned here?

It is a fact, of which the courts may take judicial notice, that almost immediately after the close of the Civil War the national government, through its Congress, recognized it to be the duty of the public to take special care of those who, through the most exalted motives of patriotism, devoted themselves to their country's cause, in a civil conflict which meant, if not victorious for the Union, absolute destruction to the principles of government enunciated by the federal Constitution, as the provisions of that instrument were construed by the master minds of Judge Marshall, Webster, and other distinguished adherents of the school of broad construction. To execute this duty

Congress passed laws pensioning ex Union soldiers and otherwise providing for their care, support, and maintenance in all cases of disability from any cause engendered while in the service of the country. Thus Congress established this duty as a policy of the federal government. It must be borne in mind that the government of the Union is one of delegated powers, with no right or authority to exercise any but the express powers granted to it and such implied powers as may be necessary to carry out and execute the former. There is no express provision in the federal Constitution, to which my attention has been called, authorizing the appropriation of public moneys for the pensioning of soldiers who fought to preserve the Union, and it certainly must be admitted that it would require a severe stretch of the imagination to hold that an implied power to do so may be found in the provisions of that instrument authorizing Congress "to declare war," etc., and "to raise and support armies," etc. Nevertheless Congress has exercised the right to give such aid to ex Union soldiers, and whatever may be its authority for doing so, whether a claimed implied or incidental power, or upon the principle of a paramount, overruling duty, the courts have sustained the legislation. Frisbie v. U. S., 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. Ed. 657; Walton v. Cotton, 19 How. 355, 15 L. Ed. 658; U. S. v. Fairchild, Fed. Cas. No. 15,067. There may be no impropriety in suggesting, however, that it is doubtful if much higher authority ought to be required for such legislation by both the nation and the states than is to be found in these memorable words used by the immortal Lincoln in his second inaugural address: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

Nor can I conceive any rational ground for holding that the states, if disposed to exercise the right, should not contribute toward the support and maintenance of these worthy persons in need of assistance. The moral duty to do so undoubtedly rests upon both the federal and state governments, and, if there be any difference as to the responsibility of discharging such duty as between the two governments, it is only in degree, and not in principle. It is only a question of whether the states will recognize this duty by the enactment of appropriate legislation for its performance. It is a familiar historical fact that the loyal states, acting through their Governors, and responding to the call for troops from the government at Washington, drafted into the service of our common country in the Civil War certain of the citizens of such states who made up the great armies which won for the states as well as for the Union on the battlefields what could not be won in the great council halls of the nation. The perpetuity of the states, as members of an unbroken union, was as much at stake as was the maintenance of the Union itself. The states, governed under their present system, could not, of course, have survived if the war had resulted in the establishment of the right of secession. The state of California has, as is shown by the legislation which has from time to time been enacted by its Legislature, adopted as a policy of the state government the duty of contributing toward the support and maintenance of the veterans of the Civil War and their families who are unable, by reason of physical disability, to support and maintain themselves. And are there not sound and unimpeachable reasons for caring for and supporting these persons in a manner different from the mode adopted for the care and maintenance of that class who have no other claim upon the bounty of the government than that they are without ability, physical or financial, to provide for themselves? It surely could not have been intended by the Constitution makers that the Legislature should be powerless, in the treatment of these war veterans or their families, in need of help, to provide for their care and support except under the general power of providing aid for those coming within the category of paupers, or other needy persons who, from physical disability, are apt to become such. The service which these veterans performed, not only distinguishes them as a class from the general body of citizens, but necessarily differentiates them from the members of the other class entitled to the public bounty because they have not the ability to care for themselves. The principle upon which the government should recognize its duty to provide for the veterans of our wars, with whose personal destinies those of the persons concerned here were and are inseparably linked, is a higher and broader one than that which inspires the public duty to care for the other class; for, the idea that those who have performed such extraordinary service for the government, when its preservation depended entirely upon such service, should be succored in times of need under the category of paupers or of those who would become paupers but for aid from the public bounty, is intolerable and so abhorrent to a profound, patriotic sense of gratitude and the sentiments and principles of a justly grateful people that there is hardly reasonable ground for the assumption that the framers of our fundamental law ever intended that the legislative power should be so circumscribed as to prevent legislation appropriately expressive of the great debt of honor due from the state to those loyal defenders of our common country.

Nor is it to be said that such legislation is altogether in the nature of compensation for services performed. The highest and fullest compensation for these great services consists in the realization by themselves, as well as by their countrymen, of the fruition of their patriotic, dauntless, and eminently successful efforts to preserve the Union. Indeed, as I have before suggested, the value of such services cannot be measured by any known standard by which the value of human activities may ordinarily be determined. It involves no mere figure of speech to say that the soldiers who battled to make this a united country, and the federal Constitution the supreme law of the land, are the saviors of our country. They became such, not because they expected reward founded upon a money or commercial basis, but because of high patriotic motives, founded in a firm and impregnable belief in the indissolubility of the Union under the terms of the Constitution given us by our fathers. The service thus performed was, as before observed, a peculiar service, for the reason that it was an extraordinary governmental service, called out only because of the exigencies of overruling necessity. Thus it is essentially different from the ordinary service involved in the civil administration of the affairs of government. Therefore, I think, that those who performed that extraordinary service for the government constitute a class, distinguished by a line clearly segregating them not only from the general body of the people, but also from that other class entitled to be cared for, supported, and maintained at public expense. The consequence of these views is that, in the recognition of its moral duty to aid these persons when they need such assistance, the state has the right, through its Legislature, to enact laws upon the subject whose provisions are peculiarly applicable to them as a class, and that such laws, if operative upon all members of such class, do not offend the constitutional injunction that "all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation."

But, since it is patent, as before observed, that this act is not designed to apply to all belonging to said class, and as it is manifest that a general law could not be made applicable in the case here, it is nevertheless within the constitutional power of the Legislature to enact special legislation to meet the peculiar circumstances of the case. It must at all times be kept in mind that the subject to which this legislation relates is one as to which the Legislature, under its general power, has the right to legislate. It is true that the legislation pertains to a duty, the performance of which is a matter which primarily rests entirely in the discretion of the Legislature. It is different from such duties as are expressly commanded by the Constitution to be performed by the Legislature. It is, as I have attempted to show, a moral duty which the Legislature may or may not discharge. But it is a duty which, in my opinion, it ought to assume. As I have before stated, the difficulty in the legislative solution of the proposition lies in the problem of how or in what manner the Legislature may exercise its right to grant aid to the persons concerned. As previously observed, I believe it has the undoubted right to do so in a manner different from that within its general power to give public assistance to paupers and others unable, by reason of disability of some sort, to take care of themselves. By subdivision 33 of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution it is provided (negatively it may be), and the Supreme Court, construing that subdivision of said section has held, that in all cases where a general law cannot be made applicable the Legislature is authorized to pass a special law for the purpose of meeting the exigencies of the particular case. People v. McFadden, 81 Cal. 498, 22 Pac. 581, 15 Am. St. Rep. 66; People v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 221, 64 Pac. 299. Said section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution, after enumerating 32 subjects upon which local and special legislation is prohibited, provides: "* * * (33) In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." In the Mullender Case, supra, the Supreme Court says: "That the act here in question is both local and special is conceded. But that is not conclusive. The language of said paragraph [referring to the thirty-third subdivision of section 25, art. 4, supra] plainly implies that there are or may be cases where a local or special act may be wise, salutary, and appropriate, and in no wise promotive of those evils which result from a general and indiscriminate resort to local and special legislation. The Constitution submits the question whether a general law can be made applicable in any given case to the judgment of the Legislature, to be determined in the light of the evils intended to be avoided, and with its determination upon that question we may not interfere, unless the disregard of the constitutional requirement is clear and palpable. In Indiana it is held that the Legislature is the exclusive judge whether a general law can be made applicable—citing State v. Tucker, 46 Ind. 358, and cases therein cited. In Iowa it is held that where a local or special law is not within the evil which the Constitution sought to provide against, or where the enactment of a general law would not afford any remedy for or relief from that evil, such local or special law is valid"—citing State v. Squires, 26 Iowa, 340, 345. See, also, State v. Hitchcock, 1 Kan. 178, 185, 81 Am. Dec. 503, and Farrelly v. Cole, 60 Kan. 375, 56 Pac. 492, 44 L. R. A. 464.

From the foregoing interpretation of the power of the Legislature under the thirty-third subdivision of section 25 of article 4 of the Constitution, and from the views heretofore ventured in this opinion as to the right of the Legislature to grant aid in some form to the persons interested in this act, it follows that the law-making branch of the state government, in the exercise of the discretion committed to it by said thirty-third subdivision of said section and article of the Constitution, has not transcended its constitutional power in providing for these persons through a special law; for it is plain to be seen that a general law cannot be made to apply. Unless it appears clear that the Constitution has been violated, this legislative determination is, under the decisions, conclusive upon the courts, and the right to pass a special law to meet the circumstances of the case is authorized under the doctrine of those decisions. The law under attack in the Mullender Case, supra, established a state board of harbor commissioners for the bay of San Diego. Said law does not refer or apply to any of the other harbors within the state, and it involves essentially by the scope and very nature of its provisions, local and special legislation. It was sustained by the Supreme Court as a species of local and special legislation authorized by the subdivision of the section and article of the Constitution referred to. I conclude that, for the reasons stated, the act here, though involving special legislation, is justified and authorized by the Constitution.

But, in addition to the foregoing considerations, it may be suggested that the legislation here could well be sustained upon the principle upon which the Legislatures of the states have often conferred upon municipalities, for instance, the right to appropriate money for the purpose of commemorating the anniversary of important events in the history of our country, as, for illustration, the Fourth of July. Referring to those cases in other jurisdictions in which such appropriations of municipal funds have been held to be not warranted, only for the reason, however, that the power to do so had not been expressly conferred by the Legislature upon such municipalities, the Supreme Court, in the case of Daggett v. Colgan, 92 Cal. 59, 28 Pac. 53, 14 L. R. A. 474, 27 Am. St. Rep. 95, in a well-considered opinion by United States District Judge De Haven, then a member of our Supreme Court, says: "But it has never been doubted that the state could confer upon a city or town the authority to celebrate such important events in the history of the country as an appeal to the patriotism or higher sentiments of the people, and to tax their citizens to pay the expense thereof. * * * These cases are authority for the proposition that the state itself, unless restrained by its Constitution, has the power to make appropriations for such purposes, because unless it possesses the power it could not confer it upon its municipal corporations. Such expenditures are justified under the general power which the state has to provide for the public welfare—the limits of which are perhaps not capable of exact definition—and are the same in principle as appropriations made for the building of monuments to commemorate great historical events, or for the erection in public places of the statues of those who by common consent are classed among the patriots or benefactors of the nation." (Italics ours.) The principle underlying and sustaining the legislation referred to in the foregoing excerpt from said opinion is that from which the Legislature deduces its right to pass laws authorizing the pensioning of police officers of certain cities of the state. Such legislation is founded upon the theory that to hold out such a reward to those engaged in certain branches of the public service, especially those branches in which the service required is beset by perils and danger to the lives and health of those performing it, has a tendency to enhance the efficiency of such service and is consequently in the interest of the public welfare. And the money appropriated for such purpose has been held by our Supreme Court not to be a gift of public money or the legislation authorizing it violative of any of the provisions of the Constitution. Pennie v. Reis, 80 Cal. 266, 22 Pac. 176. Upon a similar principle Congress has assumed the right to pension the widows of former presidents of the United States, as in the case of the widow of the lamented Garfield. It will not be denied that there is no language in the federal Constitution from which it can even be implied that any such power is vested in Congress. Yet such appropriations of the public money are sustained by the common sentiment and patriotism of the whole country, and the right of Congress to make them, in proper cases, will never, in my opinion, be challenged so long as a vestige of gratitude remains in the people of the United States.

I have examined and considered the questions presented here in extenso and with painstaking care because, as before declared, I am deeply sensible of their importance and equally impressed with the conviction that an act of the Legislature granting aid to the necessitous benefactors of our country and the relatives dependent upon them involves legislation for the benefit of the public weal and welfare and within the constitutional power of the Legislature. Such legislation adds strength and durability to the natural patriotism of the people, because it furnishes further proof that the institutions of the country for which they fought and for which others may be called upon to do battle are all that is claimed for them, and as they believed them to be when they willingly and patriotically made every sacrifice to sustain them.

The demurrer of the respondent, for the reasons stated in this opinion, is overruled, and a peremptory writ of mandate ordered in accordance with the prayer of the petition.

8 Cal. App. 515

GOLDTREE v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al.
(Civ. 445.)(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
July 9, 1908. Rehearing Denied Aug. 8,
1908; Denied by Supreme Court
Sept. 7, 1908.)1. MECHANIC'S LIEN—ORIGIN OF RIGHT.

The right to a mechanic's lien is created by Const. art. 20, § 15, declaring that laborers of every class shall have a lien; the mechanic's lien law of the Code being only the statutory provisions for enforcement of the lien which such section of the Constitution required the Legislature to provide.

2. SAME—PUBLIC WORKS.

Under Const. art. 20, § 15, declaring that laborers shall have a lien on the property on which they have bestowed labor, while, for reasons of public policy, a lien may not be enforced against a sewer built for a city, it may be against the fund owing by the city to the contractor for the part of work into which the labor entered.

3. SAME—NOTICE OF CLAIM.

The method provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1184, for giving notice of claim of lien by notice to the holder of the fund earned by the claimant's labor, and not that provided by section 1183, by recording against the property, applies where a lien is claimed for work done on a public improvement.

4. SAME—OTHER REMEDY.

Bond Act 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 201, c. 140) does not exclude the right to a lien for labor on public work by merely giving a cumulative means for securing payment for the claim.

5. SAME—EQUITABLE COGNIZANCE.

A mechanic's lien is of equitable cognizance.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — ACTIONS AGAINST.

Const. art. 20, § 6, providing that suits may be brought against the state in such manner and in such court as shall be declared by laws, has no application to municipal corporations.

7. MECHANICS' LIENS—PERSONAL JUDGMENT.

A laborer doing work for a subcontractor is not entitled, in a mechanic's lien case, to a personal judgment against the contractor.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by S. A. Goldtree against the city of San Diego and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants P. A. Howard and others appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Cassius Carter, for appellants. S. F. Smith and Collier, Smith & Hoff, for respondent.

On Rehearing.

TAGGART, J. It being assumed, upon the former decision of this appeal, that the errors relied upon on the appeal from the judgment were the same as those presented on appeal No. 472, 97 Pac. 218, which was considered with it, the error of the trial court in awarding a personal judgment against the defendants Howard and Long escaped attention. We are satisfied that, while the laborers working for the subcontractor Stabler were entitled to have that portion of the sewer fund earned by their labor applied to the payment of their claims, they were not entitled to a personal judgment against the contractors. In other respects we are satisfied with the opinion of this court, filed in appeals Nos. 472 and 445, on the 10th day of January, 1908, which opinion is as follows:

"Both of these appeals relate to a consolidated action to enforce an equitable lien upon a sewer improvement fund in the treasury of the city of San Diego, claimed by plaintiff as the assignee of 48 laborers, who worked upon the sewer system for which said fund was provided. Judgment was for plaintiff. Appeal No. 445 is by all the defendants other than the city of San Diego, and is from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. No. 472 is an appeal by the city of San Diego from a part of the judgment. These two appeals are brought up on separate records, but were submitted together by consent of the respective parties, and the briefs in each case are considered as if filed in both. Upon the oral presentation of Appeal No. 445 it was stated, by the presiding justice of this court, that if the papers claimed to have been omitted from the transcript were deemed necessary for a full consideration of the cause upon its merits, counsel for appellants would be notified and permitted to supply the same. Since these papers are all before us in the record in No. 472, the causes will be heard as if upon a consolidated record embracing both transcripts, and the objections to the transcript in No. 445 will not be considered. Plaintiff's assignors performed labor to the value of various sums, ranging from $3.96 to $53.46, and amounting in the aggregate to $1,231.96, upon a sewer system constructed by the city of San Diego. This labor was done under an employment by the defendant Stabler, who was a subcontractor under the defendants Howard & Long, who were contractors with the city to construct such sewer system. Stabler defaulted in his subcontract, and discontinued and abandoned work upon the portion of the sewer which he was to construct, and it was completed by said Howard & Long. At the time of the abandonment there was, in the hands of the city of San Diego, then due from it to the contractors, from the fund in its treasury applicable to such sewer construction, the sum of $5,000, and of this sum more than $1,000 was earned by the work done on the portion of the sewer constructed by Stabler. Stabler failed to pay the said 48 laborers for their labor on the sewer, and, immediately upon his abandoning the work, and while said sum was still in the city treasury, they each served notice in writing on the city of their several claims upon said fund, as provided by section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Thereafter the 48 claims were assigned to plaintiff, who brought a single action upon the combined claims, and also separate actions upon each of them, which actions were, by order of the trial court, consolidated, as provided by section 1048 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The first point made by appellants we do not think it necessary for us to consider at length. The validity of the bond given by the contractors is not in question here, as no recovery on the bond is sought by plaintiff. The reference to it in the complaint is to a step in the proceedings taken and had in the making of a valid contract between the city and Howard & Long. The order overruling defendants' demurrers to the complaint, on the ground of want of jurisdiction of the court, must be considered, then, in connection with the objections (1) that the amount sued upon in each of the actions is less than $300; and (2) that service of the notice provided to be given by section 1184 does not create an equitable lien upon that part of the sewer improvement fund in the city treasury which is due and owing, under the contract with Howard & Long, for work done upon that portion of the sewer system constructed by the labor of plaintiff's assignors. The state Constitution (section 15, art. 20) declares that laborers of every class shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor, for the value of the labor done. No exception as to public or municipal property is made by the section. Only because of other constitutional provisions, or by reason of public policy, can the laborer be deprived of the right so created by the people. Without constitutional authority the right to the lien cannot be taken away by the Legislature, either by legislation or lack of legislation. The last clause of section 15 requires the Legislature to provide, by law, for the speedy and efficient enforcement of the liens, the right to which are thereby created. The question of whether or not section 15 is self-executing is not material, since the Legislature in obedience thereto has already provided a good and sufficient procedure whereby the lien may be declared and enforced. Authorities based upon the theory that the lien law is a creation of the statute, in the strict sense of that term, are misleading when the right to the lien is under consideration in this state. Only as the terms 'statute' or 'statutory law' are intended to include the Constitution, as well as the enactments of the Legislature, can they be said to create the right to a mechanic's lien. Spinney v. Griffith, 98 Cal. 149, 32 Pac. 974. The more recent decisions of the Supreme Court recognize the force of the constitutional declaration of the right. Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 737, 84 Pac. 200; Hughes Bros. v. Hoover, 3 Cal. App. 150, 84 Pac. 681. The mechanic's lien law of the Code is the statutory provision made by the Legislature in obedience to the constitutional mandate of section 15, and prescribes the manner in which the right to the lien in each particular case may be declared and rendered effective. Two methods are provided for giving notice of claim of lien; one by recording against the property (section 1183), and the other by notice to the holder of the fund which has been earned by the claimant's labor (section 1184). The former, for reasons of public policy, cannot be enforced against a public building or improvement, but no such objection exists as to the latter. It is contended by appellants that both of these methods were intended by the Legislature to apply only to private owners. To so construe the enactment would be to hold that the Legislature has failed to carry out the command to provide means to render effectual the right created by the Constitution; that it has only partially complied with the requirement of the section. Bond Act 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 201, c. 140) does not recognize a lien, or provide for the speedy and efficient enforcement of one. As a means of securing the payment of the claims of laborers employed upon public work, it is merely cumulative, and does not exclude or do away with the constitutional lien. Section 1184 furnishes the only available method by which the laborer can obtain the benefit of his lien upon public work. It is apparently upon this principle that the decisions in Bates v. Santa Barbara, 90 Cal. 543, 27 Pac. 438, and the cases relying thereon were decided.

"The contention that the lien is not of equitable cognizance because created by law cannot be considered. Such a distinction would destroy all equitable jurisdiction to carry out the provisions of the Code. The remedy for the enforcement of the lien is clearly an equitable one. Weldon v. Superior Court, 138 Cal. 431, 71 Pac. 502. It is not the ordinary action that the plaintiff might have brought against the employer of his assignors for their wages. The right of the plaintiff to serve an ordinary garnishment upon the funds held by the city is not before us.

"The part of the judgment affecting the city of San Diego merely decrees a lien upon the sewer fund found to be owing to the contractors for the construction of the sewer, and orders that there be paid from this fund to plaintiff the amount found to be due to his assignors from the contractors. We are not able to see any distinction, in this respect, between the position of the city of San Diego here and that of the county of Santa Barbara in the case of Bates v. Santa Barbara. It is contended by appellants that in the Bates Case the county was satisfied, while the city of San Diego is contesting in the case at bar. The real contest here is whether the laborers or the contractors shall receive the money earned by the former, and the determination of this question will not affect the amount which the city will be required to pay for its sewer. No reason is apparent why it should not be satisfied, whatever the decision of the court upon the question to whom the money shall be paid. The case of Bates v. Santa Barbara is directly in point because there, as here, the question was to whom should be paid the money due upon a contract for public work, the validity of which contract was not assailed and the obligation of the city to pay for the work undenied.

"We do not think the provisions of section 6 of article 20 of the Constitution are to be construed as extending to municipalities as well as to the state. The judgment here is not against the city, but against the fund, and there is ample authority in this state sustaining the power of the courts to render judgments against municipalities of the character of the judgment in this case. S. F. Gas Co. v. San Francisco, 9 Cal. 453; Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 96, 81 Am. Dec. 96; Water Works v. San Francisco, 82 Cal. 286, 22 Pac. 910, 1046, 6 L. R. A. 756, 16 Am. St. Rep. 116; Contra Costa v. Breed, 139 Cal. 432, 73 Pac. 189; McConoughey v. Jackson, 101 Cal. 265, 35 Pac. 863, 40 Am. St. Rep. 53; Bates v. Santa Barbara, supra.

"We recognize that it has been determined in Mayrhofer v. Board of Education, 89 Cal. 110, 26 Pac. 646, 23 Am. St. Rep. 451, that a mechanic's lien cannot be enforced against a public schoolhouse erected by a public school district, and that it has been declared in Skelly v. School District, 103 Cal. 659, 37 Pac. 643, that trustees of a school district cannot be garnisheed in an ordinary action to recover for work done and materials furnished in the building of a schoolhouse, but we do not think it was necessary to the decision of either case to so construe the constitutional provisions for a mechanic's lien as to exclude laborers upon public works from its benefits, beyond the extent which public policy requires. Under the construction we have given the Constitution and the statute, none of the grounds of public policy urged against the enforcement of a lien against public property are violated. The performance of the public duties of the municipality will in no way be interfered with. The city's only interest in the litigation is that of a stakeholder, and no costs of the litigation can be imposed upon it. Only the fund, not the property, is subject to the lien. In Skelly v. School District, supra, a distinction is drawn by Temple, C., writing the opinion, between the scope of the powers of a school district and those of a city. He says: "They [school districts] may be sued, it is true, but this does not enlarge the scope of their powers. On the other hand, some of the powers of a city may be considered private, as they are for the special advantage of the municipality as distinct from the general public. School districts being, like counties, political subdivisions of the state, can be sued only by permission of the state. Their funds are all devoted by statute to specific purposes"—and therefore cannot be garnisheed. Bates v. Santa Barbara has been and is accepted as establishing the right contended for by the plaintiff, and we think, in so far as there is any conflict or inconsistency between it and the cases last cited, in this respect, the Bates Case is more in accord with the spirit and intention of the constitutional provision and the more recent declarations of the Supreme Court.

"The court finds, and there is evidence to support the finding, that notices under section 1184 of the Code of Civil Procedure were regularly served upon the city by each of plaintiff's assignors, and thereafter their claims were assigned to plaintiff. Whether the lien of these laborers on the sewer fund be considered as a personal right which cannot be assigned until this mere inchoate right has been perfected by service of notice (Mills v. La Verne Land Co., 97 Cal. 254, 32 Pac. 169, 33 Am. St. Rep. 168), or a lien which would be deemed accessory to the obligation secured under section 2909 of the Civil Code, and which would pass by assignment of the obligation by the provisions of section 1084 of that Code (Duncan v. Hawn, 104 Cal. 12, 37 Pac. 626), is immaterial. The notice was given, and the lien attached to the fund before the assignment was made.

"There was no misjoinder either of parties or causes of action, and there is sufficient evidence to sustain the findings against the attacks made by appellants."

It is accordingly hereby ordered that the judgment of the superior court be modified by striking out the names "P. A. Howard, John T. Long," following the words "do have and recover of and from the defendants," in paragraph 2 thereof, and that the judgment as so modified be affirmed.

GOLDTREE v. CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al.
(Civ. 472.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
July 9, 1908.)

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; N. H. Conklin, Judge.

Action by S. A. Goldtree against the city of San Diego and others. Judgment for plaintiff, Defendant city of San Diego appeals. Modified and affirmed.

W. R. Andrews, for appellant. S. F. Smith and Collier, Smith & Hoff, for respondent.

On Rehearing.

TAGGART, J. The reasons for the decision rendered by this court on January 10, 1908, in this appeal and appeal No. 445, 97 Pac. 216, are approved and adopted, but our attention not having been particularly called to the form of the judgment on the former presentation of this appeal, we then overlooked the fact that a personal judgment had been improperly rendered against the defendants Howard and Long.

This matter is not here presented at this time by the appellant city of San Diego, but being presented and considered in civil appeal No. 445, the decision in which is this day filed, and an order to this effect being this day entered in that case, it is hereby ordered that the said judgment be modified by striking out the names "P. A. Howard, John T. Long" following the words "do have and recover of and from the defendants," in paragraph 2 thereof, and that the judgment as so modified be affirmed.

In re MCGEE'S ESTATE. (L. A. 2,200.)
(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1908.)

1. HOMESTEAD—DEVISE—"HEIRS."

Civ. Code, § 1265, provides that a homestead, selected by one spouse in the separate property of the other without the consent of the latter, on the death of the owner goes to his "heirs or devisees." Code Civ. Proc. § 1474, provides that in such case the property passes on the death of the owner to his "heirs," and such section, having been amended in 1880 ten days after the amendment of section 1265 of the Civil Code, must be taken as the last expression of the legislative will, and, since the word "heirs" cannot be construed to include "devisees," as repealing by implication the part of section 1265 of the Civil Code which would permit the owner to dispose of such a homestead by devise to the exclusion of the rights of the surviving spouse or other heir at law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Homestead, § 249.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3241-3264; vol. 8, pp. 7677-7678.]

2. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—HUSBAND AS HEIR OF DECEASED WIFE.

On the death of a married woman pending the settlement of an estate from which she was entitled to an interest in real estate as an heir at law, leaving a husband, but no children, the husband is entitled, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 2, to one-half of the share of his deceased wife in such real property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Descent and Distribution, § 145.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; S. E. Crow, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Hugh Patrick McGee, deceased. From the decree of distribution, the administrator and distributees other than the widow appeal. Remanded for correction of decree.

Henry B. Lister and Richards & Carrier, for appellants. A. J. Bledsoe, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Hugh Patrick McGee died testate in January, 1902, leaving a widow, Catherine McGee and six children, all of whom were over the age of majority. His estate consisted in part of a tract of 154.89 acres of land in Mendocino county, which was his separate property. During the lifetime of the decedent, his wife, Catherine McGee, had made a declaration of homestead upon this land. The decedent did not join in the selection and declaration. The will devised all of the testator's estate to his six children in equal shares. It was duly admitted to probate in the superior court of Santa Barbara county, and at the close of administration a decree was made distributing the homestead tract to the heirs of the decedent, in the proportion of one-third to the widow and two-thirds to the surviving children and to the heirs of those of them who had died pending the administration of the estate. The executor and the distributees other than the widow appeal from the decree of distribution.

The claim of appellants is that as devisees they were entitled to have the homestead property distributed to them, to the exclusion of the widow. Section 1265 of the Civil Code, upon which the appellants place their reliance, provides that a homestead selected as was the one in the case at bar goes, upon the death of the person whose property was selected, to his heirs or devisees. On the other hand, the rule laid down by section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure is that the homestead in such case vests in the heirs of the person from whose property it was selected. The word "heirs" cannot be construed to include "devisees," and section 1474 therefore operates, as was said in construing similar language in section 1468 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "to vest the title to the homestead in the heirs at law, and so to withdraw it from the disposition made by the testator under his will." In re Walkery, 108 Cal. 627, 655, 41 Pac. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 68.

The turning point of the case is, then, whether section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure or section 1265 of the Civil Code shall control where their provisions are conflicting. The question thus presented is no longer an open one in this court. In Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 54 Pac. 254, we said: "The devolution of the title to the homestead premises in case of the death of one of the spouses is provided for in section 1265 of the Civil Code, and also in section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The latter section was amended ten days later than the section of the Civil Code, and is to be regarded as the latest expression of the legislative will." Again in Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 64 Pac. 995, it is said that "this section (1474), in its present form, is the latest expression of the legislative will upon the subject, and supersedes the provisions thereon in section 1265 of the Civil Code. Weinreich v. Hensley, 121 Cal. 647, 54 Pac. 254." If there be any merit in appellants' contention that the declaration in the Weinreich Case was not necessary to the decision, this point certainly cannot be urged as affecting the authoritative force of Estate of Fath. There the superior court had denied a petition of the devisees for distribution, and it was essential to a disposition of the appeal to determine whether the case was governed by the section which gave to the devisees an interest in the homestead property, or by that which vested the homestead in the heirs. It must be taken to be settled that the two Code sections cannot be harmonized, and that, as between them, effect is to be given to the later enactment.

On the question of which is to be regarded as the later, the appellants seek, however, to distinguish the Fath Case. The two sections under consideration were last amended in 1880. These are the amendments referred to in Weinreich v. Hensley. Prior to the amendments of 1880, these sections had been amended in 1874; the amendment of section 1474 antedating that of section 1265 by six days. The amendment of 1880 made no substantial change in section 1265 of the Civil Code.

Section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1874, provided that a homestead, if selected from community property, vested, on the death of one of the spouses, in the survivor, while, if it was selected from the separate property of one of the spouses, it vested, on the death of that one, in his or her heirs. The amendment of 1880 made no change in the case of homesteads selected from community property, but with reference to homesteads selected from separate property it distinguished between those selected by, or with the consent of, the owner of the property, and those selected by one of the spouses without the consent of the other. Those of the former class were made to go to the survivor; of the latter, to the heirs of the person from whose property the selection had been made. Thus the only change made by the amendment of 1880 to section 1474 was with relation to homesteads selected from separate property where the owner of the property made the selection or joined in it. Such a homestead was involved in Estate of Fath. But here we have a case of a homestead selected by the wife from the separate property of the husband without his consent. Such property went to the heirs by the provisions of section 1474 before as well as after the amendment of 1880.

Under the rule declared in section 325 of the Political Code, the portions of an amended section which are not altered "are to be considered as having been the law from the time they were enacted, and the new provisions are to be considered as having been enacted at the time of the amendment." C. P. R. R. Co. v. Shackelford, 63 Cal. 261; Swamp Land Dist. v. Glide, 112 Cal. 85, 44 Pac. 451. Therefore, appellants argue, while section 1474 may be regarded as newly enacted in 1880 in so far as it deals with succession to homesteads selected from separate property by or with the consent of the owner (as in the Fath Case), it must be considered as a mere continuation of existing law in so far as it declares the right of succession to homesteads selected from separate property without the consent of the owner. As to such cases we are, it is claimed, thrown back to the amendments of 1874, whereby the two sections under discussion were first made to contain the conflicting provisions now found in them with reference to homesteads selected from the separate property of a nonconsenting spouse by the other. The amendment of 1874 to section 1265 was approved six days later than that to 1474, and it is argued that the provision of section 1265, vesting the homestead in the "heirs or devisees," was the later, and therefore the controlling, enactment with reference to cases like the one before us. But this argument, while ingenious, is seen, upon consideration, to destroy itself. The ground upon which a later enactment is made to overcome an earlier conflicting one is that it is a repeal by implication of the earlier. If, in 1874, the amendment of section 1265 repealed the conflicting provision introduced into section 1474 six days earlier, the latter provision ceased to be the law. The rule that an amendment of a law is to be deemed a continuation of the portion not changed can have application only to existing laws, not to those that once existed, but have been repealed. In 1880 the provision that a homestead selected from separate property without the owner's consent vested in his or her heirs had not been the law, according to appellants' contention, for six years. The amendment of the section must be regarded as a new enactment as to everything which was not, at the time of the amendment, a living statutory rule. The case is not, therefore, distinguishable from Estate of Fath, and the court below rightly held that the homestead property passed to the heirs of the decedent, rather than to his devisees.

One point remains. Clara C. Parrent, one of the six children of the testator, died intestate during the administration of her father's estate, leaving a husband, Louis Parrent, but no children. By the decree the court awarded to her surviving husband only one-third of her share, instead of one-half, to which, under subdivision 2 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, he was entitled. The cause must be remanded for the correction of this error, by reason of which the shares of all the heirs, except the widow, were increased at the expense of Louis Parrent. But inasmuch as this is a matter affecting only the rights of the appellants among themselves, and in no wise concerning the widow, no costs should be allowed to appellants on this appeal.

The cause is remanded, with directions to the superior court to enter a decree in accordance with the views herein expressed. The appellants shall not recover costs of appeal.

KEATING et al. v. SMITH. (L. A. 2,056.) (Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA—TESTAMENTARY TRUSTS—CONTROLLING EFFECT OF DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION.

A decree distributing the estate of a testator upon a trust created by the will, unappealed from, is conclusive of the validity of the trust, whether originally valid or not, and also as to its terms and the rights of all parties interested under the will, which are thereafter to be measured by the decree, and not by the will.

2. TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTION OF DECREE—VESTED REMAINDER—"To Go."

A decree distributed the residuary estate of a testator to a trustee named in the will, "in trust to manage, control, and care for said property and the accumulations thereof" until the youngest surviving child of the testator reached majority, "and then to go" one-third to the widow and the remainder in equal shares to the surviving children of the testator. It also provided that in the meantime the income should annually be distributed to the widow and children in the same proportions. Held, that the words "to go" were clear words of direct grant or devise, and that under the same the widow took a vested estate in remainder, which on her death intestate before the termination of the trust descended to her heirs, notwithstanding the provisions of Civ. Code, § 863, that "every express trust in real property * * * vests the whole estate in the trustees subject only to the execution of the trust," and that "the beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property, but may enforce the performance of the trust"; the estate which a trustee takes by virtue of such section not being necessarily a fee, but only such estate as is required for the execution of his trust.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Alfred Vincent Keating and George H. Hutton, as trustees, and others, against Isaiah H. Smith, personally and as administrator of the estate of Isabell Keating Smith, deceased. Decree for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Shankland & Chandler, for appellants. Walter J. Horgan and Hutton & Williams, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Andrew J. W. Keating died on August 15, 1901, leaving a will, which was duly admitted to probate by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles on the 16th day of October, 1901. By this will, which bore date the 8th day of May, 1896, the testator gave to a son, William Keating, residing at Taltal, Chile, all of his property at that place. All the residue of his estate he devised and bequeathed to his wife, Isabell Keating, and two of his sons, Alfred Vincent Keating and Arthur Harry Keating, in trust for the following uses and purposes, to wit: "To manage, control and care for said properties and accumulations thereof, and to hold the said property intact, so far as possible, until my youngest son Edward Keating, now aged about six years, shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to convey all of said property, other than the said property hereinbefore devised to my said son William Keating, being said property in Taltal, Chile, to the following persons, and in the following proportions, to wit: An undivided one-third thereof to my said wife Isabell Keating, and an undivided two-thirds thereof to my said children Alfred Vincent Keating, Arthur Harry Keating, Julius Augustus Keating, Henry Keating, Walter Keating, Edward Keating, Helena Keating, and Elvira Keating, share and share alike. And, in case of the death of any of my said children before my said son Edward Keating attains the age of twenty-one years, then to convey the undivided two-thirds of said property to my surviving children, other than the said William Keating. In case my said son Edward Keating dies before reaching his majority, then to convey all the rest and residue of said property (other than the said property in Chile, hereinbefore devised to my said son William Keating), whenever the youngest of my remaining children reaches the age of majority, in the following proportions, to wit: An undivided one-third thereof to my said wife Isabell Keating, and the remaining undivided two-thirds thereof to my said children, then surviving, other than the said William Keating, share and share alike." The wife and sons named as trustees are by the will appointed executors, and are given, as executors and trustees, full power to sell and convey all portions of the testator's estate and to invest the proceeds, all investments to be held in trust in like manner as the property devised to the trustees.

Arthur Harry Keating died prior to the death of the testator. The widow renounced her right to act as executrix, and letters testamentary were issued to Alfred Vincent Keating. At the close of the administration a decree was duly made, distributing all of the residue of the estate to Alfred Vincent Keating as sole trustee; the widow declining to act as trustee. In defining the trusts the decree of distribution differs in some respects from the will. By the decree it is adjudged that the trust was by the will "created and established as an accumulation directed by said will to commence upon the distribution of this estate, and to terminate at the expiration of the minority of said children, * * * and at the termination of said trust as aforesaid all the property of the testator, other than that devised to his son William Keating, * * * should go to and be conveyed to the trustee to said widow and children in the following proportions. * * *" The decree then orders, adjudges, and decrees that the residue of the estate "be, and the same is hereby, distributed according to law and the provisions of said will, as follows: To Alfred Vincent Keating, as trustee, in trust to manage, control, and care for said property and the accumulations thereof, during the minority of the said children, as hereinafter provided, and to terminate at the expiration of their minority, that is to say, upon the attainment of the youngest child of the age of majority, and then to go as follows, to wit: One-third thereof to Isabell Keating, the widow, and the remaining two-thirds thereof to the children of the said deceased (other than the said William Keating) share and share alike, and in case of the death of any of said children before they attain the age of 21 years, then to the surviving children other than the said William Keating, and in case the youngest son, Edward Keating aforesaid, may die before attaining his majority, then to the said surviving children other than the said William Keating, at the time when the youngest of them may reach the age of majority; that is to say, an undivided one-third to Isabell Keating and the remaining two-thirds to the said children other than the said William Keating, surviving at the time the youngest living child may attain the age of 21 years, if said child be a son, or at the time when the youngest child may attain the age of 18 years, if said youngest child be a daughter."

To the decree are attached conditions whereby the court retains authority to confirm all sales made by the trustee, the trustee is required to give a bond, and the entire income derived from the estate is directed to be apportioned by the trustee at least once a year, as follows: One-third of the income to the widow of the deceased, and one-ninth of the income to each of the six surviving children of the deceased, other than William Keating, with a proviso that, if the income over and above the sum of $10,000 a year receivable from one Colton should not be sufficient to pay to the widow $300 a month and to each child $100 a month, then the deficiency should be supplied out of the Colton moneys to the extent necessary to make the payments equal to such monthly sums. The decree became final by lapse of the time within which an appeal could have been taken. By subsequent orders of the superior court Alfred Vincent Keating and George H. Hutton have been appointed as trustees to succeed Alfred Vincent Keating and Henry Charles Keating. On October 24, 1904, Isabella Keating, the widow of the decedent was married to the defendant Isaiah H. Smith. She died intestate on February 24, 1906. Letters of administration were issued to her surviving husband in March, 1906. At the time of her death some of the Keating children were still minors.

This action was instituted against Smith, individually and as administrator of his wife's estate, by the trustees and the children of the decedent named as beneficiaries of the trust. The complaint prays that the defendant be required to set forth his claims against the trust estate, and that it be decreed that the trustees plaintiff are the owners of all the residue of the estate for the benefit of the six children. The action is based upon the theory that by the death of Isabella Keating Smith, the widow of the deceased, before the termination of the trust, her interest in the trust estate lapsed, and that the defendant had no interest therein, either as administrator of her estate or as one of her heirs. The court gave judgment in favor of the defendant, adjudging that the right and interest of Isabella Keating Smith did not cease or terminate at her death, but that all of her right, title, and interest in and to the property in the hands of the trustees is to be held and managed by the trustees, subject only to and in accordance with the terms and provisions of the decree of distribution; that the trustees are to hold all the interest of said Isabella Keating Smith in the said property and in said trust for the defendant Isaiah H. Smith, as administrator of the estate of Isabella Keating Smith, deceased, and, subject to the administration of said estate, for the heirs at law of the said Isabella Keating Smith, deceased, until the termination of said trust. Thereupon all of the interest of said Isabella Keating Smith in said trust is to go to the said defendant Smith as such administrator for purposes of administration, and, subject to such administration, to the heirs at law of the said Isabella Keating Smith, deceased. The court "leaves to the proper court the determination and adjudication of such heirship" in the proceeding in the matter of the estate of Isabella Keating Smith, deceased. The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment. The facts are undisputed, and the only question is whether the death of Isabella Keating Smith so terminated her interest that nothing passed to her heirs or representatives.

The will attempted to create a trust which, considered by itself, was no doubt invalid under the rule declared in Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70. The validity of the trust is, however, no longer open to question. The decree of the superior court distributing the residue of the estate to trustees upon certain trusts is a conclusive adjudication of the validity of the disposition made by the testator. Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 139, 51 Pac. 38; Goldtree v. Allison, 119 Cal. 344, 51 Pac. 561. And it is equally conclusive as an ascertainment and adjudication of the terms of the trust, and of the rights of all parties claiming any legal or equitable interest under the will. Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 51 Pac. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145; Williams v. Marx, 124 Cal. 22, 56 Pac. 603; More v. More, 133 Cal. 489, 65 Pac. 1044. The decree supersedes the will and prevails "over any provision therein which may be thought inconsistent with the decree." Goad v. Montgomery, supra. In determining the rights of the widow, we are, therefore, to look, not to the terms of the will, but to those of the decree of distribution.

The question resolves itself, primarily, into one of construction. Did the terms of the decree of distribution establish in the widow a present interest, which could pass, upon her death, to her heirs or devisees? By the provisions of the clauses above quoted, one-third of the residue is, upon the termination of the minority of the children, to go to the widow. Her right to the possession of the principal of this third is postponed; but, under the language of the decree, she is to receive it in any event. Except in regard to the time when it may come into her possession, there is no uncertainty. The gift is not made contingent upon the occurrence or nonoccurrence of any event whatever. There is no gift over in the event of her death, as there is in the case of the minor children. Furthermore, she is, during the existence of the trust, to receive one-third of the income of the property. That, at common law, this provision for the wife would have been regarded as creating in her a vested estate, and that, in the absence of statutory rule to the contrary, such estate, whether legal or equitable, would pass from her by inheritance or devise, are propositions that are not, and cannot be, questioned. 1 Jarm. Wills (6th Ed.) 756 et seq.; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 933. Nor is it disputed that, under our Code, the estate or interest of the wife, if she took any interest or estate, vested at once. Civ. Code, § 694.

The appellants rely, however, upon section 863 of the Civil Code, providing that "every express trust in real property * * * vests the whole estate in the trustees, subject only to the execution of the trust. The beneficiaries take no estate or interest in the property, but may enforce the performance of the trust." From this it is argued that the beneficiary of such express trust, taking no "estate or interest," takes nothing that is descendible, but only a right to compel the trustees to perform the trust, if the beneficiary should be in existence at the time when the trustees are to perform. The beneficiaries have, it is argued, a "mere possibility, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent," which, under Civ. Code, § 700, is "not to be deemed an interest of any kind," and is not capable of being transferred or inherited. If this be conceded to be a sound construction of sections 700 and 863, its application here is based upon the assumption that the only rights of the beneficiaries are those declared by the will, which makes no direct devise of the residue to any one but the trustees, and gives to the beneficiaries only the right to "receive new estates created by the conveyances" from the trustees. Estate of Fair, supra.

But, as has heretofore been pointed out, the rights of the parties are to be ascertained from an inspection of the decree of distribution, rather than of the will. That decree is the final and conclusive adjudication of the testamentary disposition made by the decedent. By the decree the residue is distributed to the trustees, in trust to manage, control, and care for said property during the minority of testator's children, "and then to go as follows, to wit: One-third thereof to Isabell Keating, the widow," etc. The words "to go" are "clear words of direct devise." Estate of Dunphy, 147 Cal. 95, 81 Pac. 315. The estate which a trustee takes by virtue of section 863 is not necessarily a fee, but only such estate as is required for the execution of his trust. Morfiew v. S. F., etc., R. R. Co., 107 Cal. 587, 40 Pac. 810. Here the trustees are given an estate expressly limited in duration to the minority of the children. The widow takes a legal remainder by virtue of the terms of the decree itself, without the intervention of any conveyance, from the trustees. She succeeds to a portion of the testator's estate which was "not embraced in the trust." Civ. Code, §

866. That her actual possession and control of her interest are postponed is not material. "Future interests pass by succession, will and transfer in the same manner as present interests." Civ. Code, § 699. The case, as regards the widow, is precisely similar to that supposed in the following passage from the opinion of the court in the Fair Case, and the consequences are as there stated (132 Cal. 539, 60 Pac. 458 [84 Am. St. Rep. 70]): "If, in the case at bar, the testator had made a direct devise in remainder to the persons of the classes named in the will, those of the latter who were alive at the testator's death would have immediately taken vested estates. The interests of each would have been a property and ownership in the land, with all the rights, powers, and advantages which legally belong to such an interest."

There being nothing in the decree purporting either to make the widow's right contingent upon her living until the youngest child should attain majority, or divesting her estate in the event of her death during the existence of the trust, the court below rightly held that, upon her dying intestate, the interest owned by her passed, subject to the trust and to the possession of her personal representatives for purposes of administration, to her heirs.

The judgment is affirmed.

INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE v. TAYLOR,
Mayor, et al. (S. F. 4,999.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1908.)

1. MANDAMUS—SCOPE OF REMEDY—TITLE TO OFFICE.

In a proceeding to compel a mayor to appoint members of a board of election commissioners from a certain political party, persons theretofore appointed by him from other political organizations are not proper parties, since they are de facto, if not de jure, members of the commission, and their title to the office cannot be tried in such a proceeding.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, §§ 161, 162.]

2. ELECTIONS—BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS—APPOINTMENT—REPRESENTATION OF POLITICAL PARTIES.

San Francisco Charter, art. 11, c. 1, § 1, vests the management of elections in a board of five election commissioners, to be appointed by the mayor. Two of the five members first appointed shall be chosen from each of the two parties casting the highest vote for Governor or presidential electors, as the case may be, at the preceding general election. Upon the expiration of the term of any commissioner, the new appointee must be chosen from the same party as the retiring commissioner, consistently with the foregoing provisions as to equal representation of the two parties casting the highest vote at the preceding general election. The Independence League, a political party, cast at a general election next preceding the date when two vacancies occurred on the board of commissioners, the second highest number of votes for Governor. Held, that the mayor could be compelled by mandamus to fill the vacancies from members of the Independence League; he having no discretion to appoint members of any other class.

3. CORPORATIONS—LEGAL CAPACITY OF POLITICAL PARTIES.

Political parties, when incorporated under the general laws, are converted into legal entities in all essential respects identical with other corporate bodies not organized for profit, and as such may enforce by an action in their party names the rights conferred upon them by law.

Sloss and Angellotti, JJ., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Mandamus by the Independence League, a political party, to compel Edward R. Taylor, as mayor of the city and county of San Francisco, to appoint as members of the board of election commissioners of that city and county two persons selected from the Independence League. Cameron H. King and another were made parties respondent. Writ granted as to the mayor. Proceeding dismissed as to the other respondents.

Daniel O'Connell and Hugh McIsaac, for petitioner. King & Kirk, for respondents.

BEATTY, C. J. Application for mandate in Supreme Court to Edward R. Taylor, as mayor of the city and county of San Francisco, and others. The object of this proceeding by mandamus is to compel the mayor of the city and county of San Francisco to appoint as members of the board of election commissioners of said city and county two persons selected from said Independence League. The other persons, King and Apperson, who are named as respondents, are members of other political parties who were appointed to fill vacancies in the board of election commissioners at a time when, by reason of their party affiliations, they were ineligible as contended by petitioners, and when members of the Independence League were alone eligible. They are now in the possession of the offices to which they were so appointed, and are at least de facto, if not de jure, members of the commission. They seem to have been named as parties defendant upon the view that the court could, in this proceeding, turn them out and put others in their places; but we are satisfied that we cannot now grant that measure of relief on any view as to the statutory duty of the mayor with regard to the selection of his appointees. If it shall be concluded that it was the imperative duty of the mayor to appoint members of the Independence League, and none others, to the vacancies in the commission, and that the performance of that duty can and ought now to be enforced by a peremptory writ of mandate, the only effect will be that any new appointees of the mayor will be invested with a claim of title to the offices in question which will enable them to contest the right of King and Apperson to continue in possession. This, of course, gives them a contingent and indirect interest in the result of this proceeding, but it does not entitle them to be treated as parties properly before the court. Upon this view of the case, we are relieved of any further consideration of the point to which most of the argument of counsel was addressed, viz., the point urged in behalf of King and Apperson that mandamus is not the proper remedy for the trial of the title to an office. Conceding that proposition, as we do, the simple result is that they are no longer in the case, and the only question we have to decide is whether the mayor can now be commanded to confer a title upon two persons selected by him from the ranks of the Independence League.

On the part of the mayor the case has been submitted on a demurrer, which raises only two questions—first, the legal capacity of the league to maintain the action; and, second, the sufficiency of the facts alleged to warrant the court in granting the relief sought. Among the facts alleged, and by the demurrer admitted, are the following: The Independence League is a political party which was duly organized under the laws of California prior to the general election in 1906. Its candidates for state and for city and county offices were placed upon the official ballot used at that election, and they received, respectively, more than 3 per cent. of the votes cast in the state and city and county at said election, viz., 45,008 votes in the state, and 10,523 votes in the city and county of San Francisco. The vote in the city and county for their candidate for Governor (10,523) was higher than the vote of any other party candidate for that office, except that cast for the Republican candidate. The Democratic candidate received not more than 7,000 votes, the Union Labor candidate not more than 6,000 votes, the Socialist candidate not more than 2,103 votes, and the Prohibition candidate not more than 156 votes. On January 6, 1908, the terms of office of two members of the board of election commissioners expired, creating two vacancies, which it was the duty of the mayor to fill by appointment in accordance with the provisions of the charter. No member of the board was then or had ever been a member of the Independence League, as the mayor well knew, but with this knowledge he appointed to fill said vacancies Cameron H. King, a member of the Socialist party, and C. L. Apperson, a member of the Democratic party. Upon being informed of this fact the Independence League, by its county committee, on March 8, 1908, made a written demand upon the mayor to appoint members of that party, with which demand he refused to comply. There were among the many thousand members of the league a large number of persons fit and proper and duly qualified to be appointed as members of the commission, as the mayor at all times well knew.

With reference to the right of Daniel O'Connell and John S. Kelly to maintain the action in the name of the league, it is admitted that they are, respectively, the chairman and secretary of the county committee of the party, and at a regular meeting of the committee on March 19, 1908, were duly authorized and directed to commence this proceeding. In connection with these facts the petitioners plead section 1 of chapter I of article 11 of the charter of San Francisco, which reads as follows: "The conduct, management and control of the registration of voters, and of the holding of elections, and of all matters pertaining to elections in the city and county, shall be vested exclusively in and exercised by a board of election commissioners consisting of five members who shall be appointed by the mayor, and shall hold office for four years. Each of the commissioners shall receive an annual salary of one thousand dollars. Each member of the board must be an elector of the city and county at the time of his appointment and must have been such for five years next preceding such time. Those first appointed must, immediately after their appointment, so classify themselves by lot that one shall go out of office at the end of one year, one at the end of two years, one at the end of three years, and two at the end of four years. The mayor shall not make any appointment upon the board at any time before thirty days prior to the time when such appointee is to take office. Two of the five members first appointed shall be chosen from each of the two political parties casting in the city and county the highest vote for Governor or electors of President and Vice President, as the case may be, at the last preceding general election. The fifth member shall be chosen from the political party casting the third highest such vote at such election, if there be such third party, and if not, then at the discretion of the mayor. Upon the expiration of the term of office of any commissioner, the appointee must be chosen from the same political party as the retiring commissioner, consistently with the foregoing provisions as to equal representation at all times of the two political parties casting the highest vote at the general election last preceding the appointment in question as prescribed in this section."

Upon the conceded facts, as above stated, it does not seem to us to admit of any doubt that it was the imperative duty of the mayor under this provision of the charter to fill the vacancies which occurred in the election commission in January last by appointing members of the Independence League. The terms of the section are so plain and the policy of the provision so obvious that discussion as to the meaning of the first or the vital importance of the latter would be superfluous. The functions of the board with regard to the whole series of acts from the registration of voters till the canvass of their votes are so numerous and important, and the necessity of making such a body, armed with such powers, representative of the two leading parties in a republican or democratic government is so universally recognized, that no argument is needed to fortify the conclusion that the framers of the charter, and the people who adopted it, intended to deprive the mayor of any discretion to disregard its plain mandate. The policy of the law is to prevent frauds in elections, and not only to secure fairness in their conduct, but to give to the public a practical assurance that they have been fairly conducted and their results honestly declared. The mayor has, and necessarily must have, a discretion in the selection of the individuals to be appointed; but he has no discretion to seek those individuals outside of the designated class of eligibles. To admit that he has such a discretion, and that such discretion is uncontrolled, is to bring about the very condition which the framers of the charter designed to prevent. Upon the facts presented by the petition and demurrer, our conclusion is that the mayor violated the charter in appointing King and Apperson, and that he has neglected and refused to perform an act specially enjoined as a duty resulting from his office in refusing to appoint two members of the Independence League to the places left vacant in January last.

It seems to be argued that, because those places are now occupied by King and Apperson, the court cannot order the respondent to appoint others to the same positions. This argument also reduces the charter provision in question to a mere academic declaration of political ethics, and deprives the leading political parties of any effective remedy for the violation of the important rights it was intended to secure. If its validity were admitted, the mayor might select the members of the commission from a peace club with perfect impunity so far as the courts are concerned.

And this brings us to the other question raised by the demurrer—the question as to the legal capacity of a political party to maintain an action in the party name for the enforcement of rights conferred upon the party in its corporate capacity. It is urged that there is not a single instance to be found in the reported cases in which a political party has been a party plaintiff or petitioner in a legal proceeding. This argument is of little weight, in view of the fact that only within a very few years have political parties been converted into legal entities. That they are such legal entities, when organized under the general laws of this state recently enacted there can be no doubt. They are in all essential respects strictly identical with other corporate bodies not organized for profit, and it would be a startling anomaly to hold that they have no capacity to enforce by ordinary legal process the rights which have been conferred upon them by valid laws.

The demurrer of the mayor is overruled. His answer, already on file, presents issues of fact as to which we have understood that the parties could and would agree. They have not as yet presented any agreed statement, and if they cannot reach an agreement it may become necessary for the court to hear the evidence.

As to King and Apperson—named as respondents—the proceeding is dismissed.

We concur: HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SHAW, J.

SLOSS and ANGELLOTTI, JJ. (dissenting). Except as to the remedy we are entirely in agreement with the views of the court as above expressed; that is to say, we are satisfied, first, that the intent of the charter provision relied upon was to require such appointments to the election board as would secure, as far as possible, an equal representation to the two political parties which had cast the highest vote for Governor or electors at the election next preceding such appointments, and that, upon the facts stated in the petition, it was the duty of the mayor to fill the vacancies in the election commission from members of the Independence League; and, second, that political parties, as such, are legal bodies beneficially interested in securing such appointments, and entitled to maintain legal proceedings in that behalf.

We are not satisfied, however, that where the mayor has made his appointments, and the offices are thereby in fact filled, he can be compelled by mandamus proceedings to make other appointments, until it has first been determined, in some proceeding where it can be effectually determined as to all parties interested, that the appointments already made are illegal. The opinion concedes that no such determination can be made in this proceeding, and for that reason the dismissal of the proceeding as to King and Apperson, the appointees, has been ordered. The question of the eligibility of one elected or appointed to public office to hold such office is ordinarily determined in a contest proceeding provided by statute or in the proceeding of quo warranto, in either of which the party whose right is assailed is a necessary party, and the effect of the judgment therein is to oust him from the office or to establish his right thereto. We have found no decision holding that such question can be determined in any other way, and it may be claimed with much force that, until the question is legally determined in some such proceeding, the appointments cannot elsewhere be held to be absolutely void, and the appointing power compelled to proceed as though no appointments had in fact been made.

However, as a majority of the court has decided in favor of the appropriateness of the remedy of mandamus in this case, a definite expression of opinion on this to us doubtful point is unnecessary.

PEOPLE v. BANK OF SAN LUIS OBISPO
et al. (L. A. 2,106.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 27, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 24, 1908.)

1. STATUTES—VALIDITY—EFFECT OF PARTIAL INVALIDITY.

Act March 30, 1878 (St. 1877-78, p. 744, c. 481) § 11, requires that the attorney general, upon notice from the bank commissioners that a bank was unsafe or had refused to comply with the order of the commissioners to discontinue unsafe practices, shall immediately commence an action to dissolve the corporation, and an amendment of March 10, 1887 (St. 1887, p. 90, c. 80), requires that when any corporation refused to comply with the commissioners' order to discontinue unsafe practices, or if it was unsafe to continue business, the commissioners shall notify the attorney general, who after examination, may commence suit to dissolve the corporation, etc. Act March 26, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 172, c. 147), substantially the same as Act March 24, 1903, § 10 (St. 1903, p. 368, c. 266), provides that upon the failure of a bank to conform to the commissioners' order, requiring the discontinuance of unsafe practices, or if the commissioners decide it to be unsafe for the bank to continue business they shall take control of the bank property and immediately notify the attorney general of their action, who shall then commence suit to prohibit further transaction of business by it. Held, that even if the provisions of section 10, authorizing the commissioners to seize corporate effects and hold them pending the action, were unconstitutional, the right of the attorney general to sue to dissolve the corporation was not affected, as the provision for seizure was collateral to his right to bring the action and was not a condition precedent to notification by the commissioners to the attorney general to commence suit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, §§ 58-66.]

2. SAME—IMPLIED REPEAL—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Act March 30, 1878 (St. 1877-78, p. 740, c. 481), as amended by several subsequent acts, authorized the dissolution of a bank at the suit of the attorney general after notification to him by the bank commissioners that the bank was unsafe, etc. By Const. art. 22, § 1, all laws in force at its adoption not inconsistent therewith shall remain in force until altered or repealed. Defendant bank was organized in 1873, and the Civil Code prescribed certain rights and powers of banking corporations when the Constitution was adopted. Held that any provision of the Civil Code is subject to a subsequent general law in conflict therewith whether such law is contained in the Codes or in a separate act.

3. BANKS AND BANKING—INSOLVENCY AND DISSOLUTION—PROCEEDINGS—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS OF INSOLVENCY.

Act March 24, 1903, § 10, St. 1903, p. 368, c. 266, as amended by Act March 20, 1905, St. 1905, p. 304, c. 296, provides that if the bank commissioners find that a bank is doing business in an unsafe manner, they shall direct the discontinuance of such unsafe practices and if the bank fails to obey, or if the commissioners unanimously decide it is unsafe for the bank to continue business, they shall take control of its effects and notify the attorney general who shall commence suit to dissolve it. In a suit by the attorney general the complaint alleged that the commissioners unanimously found that the bank was insolvent and unable to pay its obligations, and further alleged the fact of insolvency. Held, that, though there was no averment in the language of the statute that it was unsafe for the bank to continue business, the act contemplated that it was unsafe for an insolvent bank to continue business, and an allegation of insolvency was equivalent to an allegation that it was unsafe for it to continue business.

4. SAME.

Act March 24, 1903, § 10, St. 1903, p. 368, c. 266, as amended by Act March 20, 1905, St. 1905, p. 304, c. 296, authorizing the bank commissioners to require banks to discontinue unsafe practices and upon their failure to do so, or if it appear unsafe to allow any bank to continue business, to seize the effects of the bank and notify the attorney general, who shall commence suit to dissolve the corporation, etc., was intended to supersede the general insolvency act so far as it applied to banking corporations.

5. SAME—PROCEEDINGS TO ENFORCE DISSOLUTION—ACTION OF BANK COMMISSIONERS.

Act March 24, 1903, § 10, St. 1903, p. 368, c. 266, as amended by Act March 20, 1905, St. 1905, p. 304, c. 296, provides that upon the failure of a bank to conform to the requirements of the bank commissioners, or if the commissioners unanimously decide that it is unsafe for the bank to continue business, they shall take its property, whereupon the attorney general shall commence suit to enjoin the transaction of business by such bank, the act also providing that there shall be four bank commissioners. Held that the fact that there were only three bank commissioners serving when they decided that a continuance of defendant's bank was unsafe did not prevent a "unanimous" decision under the act, as they could exercise the powers conferred by law so long as there was in office a majority of the number provided by statute.

6. STATUTES — SUBJECTS AND TITLES — EXPRESSION IN TITLE OF SUBJECT.

Act March 24, 1903, St. 1903, p. 365, c. 266, entitled "An act creating a board of bank commissioners and prescribing their duties and powers" and providing that if the commissioners find that a bank is conducted illegally or in an unsafe manner, they shall order the discontinuance of such unsafe practices and on the bank's failure to do so, shall seize its property and notify the attorney general, who shall commence an action to enjoin further business, does not violate Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring every act to embrace but one subject, to be expressed in its title, on the ground that the title did not mention the duties of the attorney general.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 141.]

7. BANKS AND BANKING—INSOLVENCY—RECEIVERS—APPOINTMENT—APPOINTMENT ON COURT'S OWN MOTION.

In a suit by an attorney general under Act March 24, 1903, § 10, St. 1903, p. 368, c. 266, authorizing a suit to enjoin a bank from continuing business if it fails to obey the order of the bank commissioners as to the manner of doing business, or if the commissioners decide it is unsafe for the bank to continue business, the attorney general, on being notified, shall commence an action to enjoin the bank from transacting further business, and the court, if it finds it insolvent, shall order the commissioners to surrender the property to a receiver appointed by the court, it was unnecessary to make an issue as to the appointment of a receiver or to pray for such relief, since the statute authorized such appointment, upon a finding of insolvency, as a part of the relief sought by the action.

8. SAME—NOTICE OF APPOINTMENT.

The appointment of the receiver on the court's own motion, upon a finding of insolvency, was not an appointment without notice to the corporation, as the act itself constituted full notice that such appointment would be made upon a finding of insolvency in such an action.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Proceedings by the people, by the Attorney General, upon the complaint of the state bank commissioners, against the Bank of San Luis Obispo and others. From a judgment for petitioner, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See 92 Pac. 481.

James L. Crittenden, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty Gen., and Geo. A. Sturtevant, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by the defendants, a banking corporation and its directors, from a judgment given in a proceeding instituted under the provisions of an act, entitled "An act creating a board of bank commissioners and prescribing their duties and powers," approved March 24, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 365, c. 266), as amended March 20, 1905 (St. 1905, p. 304, c. 296), to obtain a decree declaring defendant corporation to be insolvent, ordering it into involuntary liquidation, and restraining it from the transaction of any further business, except for the purpose of liquidation. Judgment was given to this effect, and by the judgment one Neil Stewart was appointed receiver of said corporation, and the bank commissioners were directed to deliver to him all the money, property, and effects of said corporation which had come into their hands. The appeal is on the judgment roll alone.

Section 10 of the act of March 24, 1903, is so far as material here, practically the same as section 11 of the former act on the same subject—that of March 30, 1878 (St. 1877-78, p. 740, c. 481), as amended in 1895 (St. 1895, p. 172, c. 147). It provides that if the bank commissioners, on examination of the affairs of any banking corporation, shall find that it has been guilty of violating its charter, the laws of this state, or any of the provisions of the act, or is conducting business in an unsafe manner, they shall direct a discontinuance of the illegal and unsafe practices, and a conformity with the requirements of the law and charter. It then provides: "And if such corporation shall refuse or neglect to conform with such requirements before the expiration of the time in the order specified, or if it shall appear to said commissioners and they shall unanimously decide that it is unsafe for any such corporation to continue to transact business, it shall be the duty of the commissioners immediately to take such control of such corporation, and all the property and effects thereof, as may be necessary to prevent waste or diversion of assets, and to hold possession of the same until the order of court hereinafter mentioned, and to immediately notify the Governor and the Attorney General of their action; and it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney General, upon receiving such notification, to immediately commence suit in the proper court against such corporation, and all the directors or trustees thereof, to enjoin and prohibit them from the transaction of any further business. If, upon the hearing of the case, the court shall find that such corporation is solvent and may safely continue business, it shall dismiss the action, and order that the corporation be restored to the possession of the property, but if the court shall find that it is unsafe for such corporation to continue business, or that such corporation is insolvent, said court shall by its decree order said corporation into involuntary liquidation, and shall issue the injunction applied for, and shall cause the same to be served according to law, and shall order the commissioners to surrender the property of the corporation in their possession to a receiver appointed by the court for the purpose of liquidation in such proceeding, under the order and direction of the court."

This action was commenced by the Attorney General on February 1, 1906. The findings, based on appropriate allegations in that behalf in the complaint, establish the following facts: Defendant corporation was organized on August 28, 1873, and has ever since been engaged in the general banking business at San Luis Obispo, its principal place of business. At all times mentioned in the complaint Messrs. Silver, Blackstock, and Duns-moor were the only bank commissioners holding office under the act; the act providing that there shall be four such commissioners. In November, 1905, the bank was examined by said commissioners, and they determined that it was conducting business in an unsafe manner and ordered certain changes in the conduct of the business. On January 24, 1906, said bank commissioners, without notice to the corporation or its board of directors, found and determined that the corporation had not discontinued its unsafe practices, and unanimously found and determined that said corporation was insolvent and unable to pay its obligations from its own means, as such obligations became due and payable in the ordinary course of business. On the same day said commissioners, without the consent of the corporation, took immediate control of said bank and all the property and effects thereof, and have ever since held the same. On the same day they notified the Governor and the Attorney General of their action. Said bank is, and was, at all times after January 10, 1906, insolvent and unable to pay its obligations from its own means, as such obligations became due and payable in the ordinary course of business.

The principal claim made by defendants is that the provision of section 10, authorizing the bank commissioners, upon their own determination that it is unsafe for the corporation to transact business, made without notice, to take such control of the corporation and of its property and effects as is necessary to prevent waste or diversion, and to hold such possession pending determination of the action to be thereupon instituted, is in violation of various provisions of the Constitution of the United States and that of this state; that the right of the Attorney General to bring any action under the act is absolutely dependent on the validity of the provisions as to seizure and sequestration of the property of the corporation by the commissioners, and can be exercised only after a valid seizure, and that, therefore, this action must fail. We are satisfied that no such result would follow a conclusion that the portion of the section thus assailed is void.

Ever since the adoption of the act of March 30, 1878 (St. 1877-78, p. 740, c. 481), it has been the law in this state that the question of the solvency or safety of a banking institution shall be determined in an action to enjoin the doing of further business, brought by the Attorney General upon notice from the bank commissioners, and that in such action, in the event of a finding of insolvency, or that it is unsafe for the institution to further continue business, the judgment shall prohibit the doing of further business, and the affairs of the institution shall be wound up under the supervision of the court. In section 11 of the original act it was provided that the Attorney General "shall immediately commence" such action upon receiving a communication from the bank commissioners. By an amendment approved March 10, 1887 (St. 1887, p. 90, c. 80), the section was changed so as to provide that when any such corporation refused or neglected to comply with the order of the commissioners to discontinue illegal and unsafe practices or whenever it appeared to the commissioners that it is unsafe for it to continue business, the commissioners shall notify the Attorney General of such fact, "who after examination, in his discretion, may commence suit," etc. On March 26, 1895, the act of March 30, 1878, was again amended by inserting in section 11 what is almost verbatim the portion of section 10 of the act of 1903 that is here assailed. As so added by the amendment to the act of March 30, 1878, it was nothing but a collateral provision for the safe-keeping of the property of the bank for the benefit of all concerned, pending the proceeding authorized by the act, and was not intended in any degree to affect the right of the Attorney General to bring an action upon notice from the commissioners of their determination that it was unsafe for a banking corporation to continue to transact business. The amendment was undoubtedly considered necessary in view of the decisions of this court that the proceeding was purely statutory, and that under the act as it originally existed no injunction could issue until after hearing (Sav. Bank v. Superior Court, 103 Cal. 27, 36 Pac. 1015), and there were no means provided by which the property could be guarded against waste and diversion pending the litigation. It is true that the amendment made it the duty of the Attorney General to commence suit only upon being notified by the commissioners "of their action" in the premises, which, of course, included not only their determination but also their taking possession of the property, where they had done so; but we do not think it is open to serious question that they were not required to take any possession or control of any property of the corporation as a condition precedent to a notification to the Attorney General of their determination that it was unsafe for the corporation to continue business sufficient to require him to immediately commence the action provided for by the act. So far as the Attorney General was concerned, the important thing was that the commissioners had made the required determination as to the safety of the bank and notified him thereof. Thereupon his duty and power to commence an action arose, and it was absolutely immaterial in this regard whether the commissioners had attempted to prevent waste or diversion by a compliance with the provision as to taking possession.

When the act of March 30, 1878, was revised and re-enacted by the act of March 24, 1903, that portion of section 11 relating to the duty of the bank commissioners and the Attorney General in such a case was adopted practically word for word as a part of section 10; notification to the Governor being required in addition to that given to the Attorney General. It means the same thing there that it did when made by amendment a portion of the act of March 30, 1878. If it be invalid, its invalidity would not affect the remainder of the act. Therefore it is not at all essential to the upholding of the judgment herein that the provision of the section as to taking possession of the property of the bank by the commissioners be held a constitutional law. If invalid, the only consequence is that the defendants have, without warrant, been deprived of the possession of their property during the pendency of this litigation, a matter which could not affect the result in this action, and for which invasion of their rights their remedy must be found elsewhere. All that is necessary to sustain the action and the judgment in this case is that it appeared to the commissioners and that they unanimously decided that it was unsafe for defendant corporation to continue to transact business, that they notified the Governor and the Attorney General of their action in the matter, that he thereupon commenced this action, and that as a matter of fact defendant corporation was insolvent.

Eliminating the question of the constitutionality of the provision assailed, the objections made to the judgment are absolutely without merit.

It is urged that the act under consideration is not applicable to the defendant corporation, for the reason that it was organized and received its charter on August 28, 1873, which was prior to the adoption of the substantially similar act of March 30, 1878. The claim is that to hold legislation of this kind applicable to a corporation organized prior to its adoption would be in violation of section 1 of article 22 of the Constitution, declaring that all laws in force at the adoption of the Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force or effect until altered or repealed by the Legislature; the claim as stated being that, as the Civil Code of the state prescribes certain rights and powers of the corporation at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, such rights can be affected only by a modification or amendment of the Civil Code itself, and that a general act adopted by the Legislature, "not made as amendments to the Civil Code," can have no such effect. Of course, there is nothing in this claim. Any provision of the Civil Code is subject to a general law necessarily in conflict therewith subsequently passed, wherever that law may be placed, whether in one of the Codes or in a separate act, and there is nothing in the constitutional provision relied on implying otherwise. No reason is apparent to us why the act of March 24, 1903, is not applicable to every banking corporation doing business in the state, whenever incorporated.

It is claimed that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute an action, in that it did not allege that the bank commissioners unanimously decided that "it is unsafe" for the bank "to continue business," which is the language of the act; the complaint alleging in this behalf simply that "said bank commissioners * * * did further unanimously find and determine that said Bank of San Luis Obispo, a corporation as aforesaid, was insolvent, and unable to pay its obligations from its own means as such obligations become due and payable in the ordinary course of business," and further alleging the fact of such insolvency. We have no doubt that this was a sufficient allegation under the act, an allegation of a determination by the commissioners of what was equivalent to a finding that it was unsafe for the bank to continue business. It is true that the phrase "unsafe * * * to continue to transact business," as used in the act, is broader than the term "insolvent," and that a finding that it is unsafe for a banking corporation to continue business does not necessarily mean that it is insolvent. But the converse of this is not true. The act clearly contemplates that it is unsafe for an insolvent banking corporation to continue business, and that a determination by the commissioners that such corporation is insolvent is equivalent to a finding that it is unsafe for it to continue business. This is shown by the subsequent provision that "if upon the hearing of the case the court shall find that such corporation is solvent and may safely continue business, it shall dismiss the action, * * * but if the court shall find that it is unsafe for such corporation to continue business, or that such corporation is insolvent," it shall order it into involuntary liquidation, etc. As has been uniformly held by this court, the section of the act under consideration was intended, so far as banking corporations are concerned, to supersede the provisions of the general insolvency act (see Crane v. Pacific Bank, 106 Cal. 64, 70, 39 Pac. 215, 27 L. R. A. 562), and to be applicable in all cases of insolvency of such corporations.

As has been seen, the statute requires that the commissioners "shall unanimously decide," etc., and the act provides that there shall be four bank commissioners, to be appointed by the Governor. It appearing that during all the times mentioned there was a vacancy as to one of said commissionerships, and that consequently there were only three commissioners in office, it is urged that there could be no "unanimous" decision of the kind called for by the act. We do not think the act should be construed as meaning that a vacancy in the office of one of the commissioners should suspend the power of the commission in this important matter. As long as the commission has sufficient members to be an effective body at all, which, in the absence of provisions to the contrary, must be the case wherever there are in office a majority of the requisite number, it may exercise the powers and perform the duties allotted by the law, and when the statute provides that if they "shall unanimously decide," etc., they may do certain things, it means no more than that if those then holding the office of bank commissioner, if at least three in number, unanimously so decide, they may then do the thing specified.

It is claimed that the act is unconstitutional in so far as it purports to give any authority to the Attorney General to bring or prosecute this action, for the reason that "the title of the act does not mention duties, authority, or power of the Attorney General," and section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution provides that every act shall embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, and that any act shall be void as to any subject embraced therein which is not expressed in its title. The title of the act of March 24, 1903, is the same as that of March 30, 1878. In People v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 105, 34 Pac. 492, section 11 of the act of 1878, corresponding to section 10 of the act of 1903, providing for such an action by the Attorney General, was assailed on various grounds; one being that the title did not sufficiently express the subject-matter of said section. The court said: "We think that the title of the act sufficiently expresses the subject of the act and is sufficiently general in its scope. It is not necessary that the title to the act should embrace an abstract of its contents. Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226, 24 Pac. 383; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251." We see no reason to doubt the correctness of this ruling.

It is claimed that the appointment of a receiver without any issue made by the pleadings in that behalf, and without any prayer for such relief, and without notice, was erroneous. As we have seen, the act in terms provides that the court in such an action, brought "to enjoin and prohibit them from the transaction of any further business," if it finds that the corporation is insolvent, "shall order the commissioners to surrender the property * * * to a receiver appointed by the court for the purpose of liquidation in such proceeding," etc. This authorized the court to appoint the receiver as a part of the relief sought by the action, in the event of a finding of insolvency, without any allegation of the necessity therefor in the complaint. The appointment of a receiver for purposes of liquidation was a part of the method provided by the act for the winding up of the affairs of the corporation, and, under the terms of the act, necessarily followed the adjudication of insolvency. It cannot be said that this is a case of the appointment of a receiver without notice to the corporation. The act itself constitutes full notice that such an appointment will be made in the event of determination of insolvency by the court in an action wherein the corporation is a party, and as to which it has notice and an opportunity to defend.

The foregoing are all the objections made by appellants to the judgment that merit consideration, except such as go to the question of the validity of the provision as to the taking such control by the commissioners prior to suit of the corporation and its property and effects as may be necessary to prevent waste or diversion, and the holding of such possession pending the litigation. As said before, we do not consider it essential to an affirmation of the judgment that this provision should be upheld, and a consideration of these objections is therefore unnecessary. We do not desire, however, to be understood as intimating that we doubt the validity of the provision. Our failure to consider the question of its validity is due to the fact that, as a general rule, we deem it better to decide constitutional questions only where their decision is essential to a disposition of a pending proceeding. The provision in question has been a part of our law ever since March 26, 1895, and so far as we are advised no question has ever been made as to its validity, except as the same has been made in this case. In view of the well-settled doctrine that the business of banking is a proper subject of legislative control by the state in the exercise of what is known as the "police power," and in view of the decisions as to what constitutes the judicial power that is vested exclusively in the courts under our Constitution, and what constitutes due process of law under our federal and state Constitutions, we are not strongly impressed by the argument of learned counsel for defendant against the validity of this provision; but, as already stated, we consider it preferable not to decide the question in a case where such a decision is clearly unnecessary. The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE ex rel. PECK v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES (L. A. 2,156.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 28, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ANNEXATION—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), provides that new territory may be annexed to any incorporated town by certain proceedings. The council or legislative body of any such municipality upon petition must submit to the electors of the corporation and to the electors residing in the territory proposed by the petition to be annexed the question whether the new territory shall be annexed. Held, that the power to alter the municipal boundaries and to decide upon the shape, size, and locality of annexed territory is conferred directly upon the voters of the territory to be annexed and the annexing municipality, and no authority is conferred on any legislative body or judicial tribunal to review or interfere with their action merely because of the form or extent of the territory annexed, which is purely a political, and not a judicial, question.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 66-71.]

2. SAME—POWER OF COURTS TO REVIEW.

The courts may only interfere where some substantial provision of the law has been violated, or where fraud was perpetrated in the matter of the boundaries or the extent of the annexed district.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 66, 71.]

3. SAME.

Since the law contemplates that cities may become contiguous (St. 1883, p. 97, c. 49, § 7), providing for the consolidation of cities only when so situated, and as existing municipalities can usually be made contiguous only by the extension of their boundaries, the fact that the annexation of outside territory to a municipality accomplishes that result is no objection to the validity of the annexation.

4. SAME.

It is no objection to the annexation of territory to a municipality that the effect of the extension of the city's boundaries will be to compel at some future time the consolidation of smaller cities with the extended city, since under the law the consolidation could not be affected without the consent of the smaller cities.

5. SAME.

It is no objection to the annexation of territory to a municipality that it might prevent future expansion of another municipality in the direction of the annexed territory.

6. SAME—"MUNICIPAL AFFAIR."

Proceedings for annexation of territory to a city are had under Act March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), a general law providing a complete scheme for annexation which, under the Constitution, controls and is superior to city charter provisions, except in "muni-pal affairs," annexation of territory to a city being in no sense a "municipal affair" within the Constitution; and hence an annexation was not void because the ordinance calling the special election on that question and ordering notice thereof to be given, published as provided by the act of 1889, was not published for 10 days as prescribed by the city charter for ordinances calling elections.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 4619; vol. 8, p. 7726.]

7. SAME—ORDINANCES.

The city charter provision for the publication of ordinances ordering elections for 10 days relates only to elections had entirely in the city, and not to annexation elections held partly within the city and partly without.

8. SAME—NOTICE OF ANNEXATION ELECTION—SUFFICIENCY—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

A notice of an annexation election given according to the express requirements of the annexation act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), is not void because too short to permit some electors to register, because registration under Pol. Code, § 1094, is forbidden for a period of 40 days prior to an election, as under the registration law general registration for all elections, which is in progress at all times except for 40 days prior to elections, offers electors ample opportunity to register and vote, and the law makes no provision for special registration for elections.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Quo warranto by the people, on the relation of George H. Peck, against the city of Los Angeles to test the legality of the annexation of certain territory to the city. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, relator appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Karr and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for appellant. Leslie R. Hewitt and Lewis R. Works, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is a proceeding in quo warranto questioning the legality of the annexation of certain territory to the city of Los Angeles. The appeal is taken by plaintiff from a judgment entered against him after declining to amend upon demurrer sustained to his complaint, and the only question is as to the correctness of the order sustaining the demurrer.

From the complaint it appears: That at a city election held November 12, 1906, under the annexation act of March 19, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247), upon a favorable vote of both the electors of the city of Los Angeles and certain unincorporated territory contiguous to said city, such territory was annexed to, and became a part of, the city of Los Angeles. The annexed territory consisted of a wide strip, immediately adjacent to and along the southerly boundary line of the corporate limits of said city, together with a strip about 16 miles in length and about half a mile in breadth, connecting with this wider strip, and extending southerly therefrom to a junction with the municipal territory of the cities of San Pedro and Wilmington, and extending along the western boundary of the latter at San Pedro Bay. That each of said last-named cities were at the time of said annexation municipal corporations of the sixth class situated within the county of Los Angeles near the Pacific Ocean and near San Pedro Bay. That, except the portion of said wider strip of territory immediately adjacent to said city of Los Angeles, all the territory intervening between said city and the cities of San Pedro and Wilmington, including said narrow strip of land annexed to the city of Los Angeles, is agricultural, and not urban, in character. Under this allegation it is insisted by appellant that the annexation as made is void in toto, because contrary to the purposes and intent of the annexation act. He concedes that the annexation as made falls within the letter of the statute, but claims that it is not within its spirit; that the annexation act was intended to provide for ordinary, reasonable changes in the boundaries of a city; that the annexation in question was wholly abnormal and obviously made for the purpose of blocking the expansion of the cities of San Pedro and Wilmington, and particularly to hem in the latter city on its western boundary and prevent its expansion in that direction, and to ultimately absorb both of said smaller cities by consolidation with the greater municipality. The claim of respondent is that it is fairly inferable from the form and extent of the annexation that the extension of the limits of the city of Los Angeles along the westerly boundary of the city of Wilmington was only made to give it a frontage on San Pedro Harbor; that the city of Los Angeles is a large inland city, distant from the seacoast at San Pedro by the length of the territory annexed; that Wilmington and San Pedro are two small cities upon San Pedro Bay, which is a port of commerce that takes its source and life wholly from the city of Los Angeles and the great population in and about that city; that under these conditions it was natural and reasonable that the boundaries of the city of Los Angeles should be extended so as to give it a frontage on San Pedro Harbor, with all the attending commercial and political advantages, and that the extension of its limits for that purpose was both within the letter and spirit of the act. We have stated the position of counsel upon both sides as to the purposes and objects of this annexation, which each claims is reasonably deducible from the facts alleged in the complaint. We make no comment on them because we are satisfied that whether the territory in question, and of the shape, extent, and character fixed, should be annexed to the city of Los Angeles, was purely a political question, which, under the act, was left to the exclusive determination of the voters of the municipality and the territory sought to be annexed.

Counsel for appellant do not assail the shape of the annexation, but only its situation relative to the two municipalities of San Pedro and Wilmington and the purpose and effect of such annexation, particularly upon the city of Wilmington. In this connection it will be observed that the plaintiff relator does not attack the annexation on any grounds personal to himself. He does not claim that any fraud or injustice affecting his rights as a resident or taxpayer in the annexed territory was involved in the proceedings for annexation. It does not appear that he is a resident or taxpayer of the city of Wilmington, or in any manner concerned with the effect that annexation will have on the expansion of that municipality. His plain contention is that the annexation is itself void because no municipality can expand its territory so as to interfere in any direction with the territorial expansion of another city. This position is not tenable. The language of the statute on the subject of annexation is: "The boundaries of any incorporated town * * * may be altered and new territory annexed thereto * * * upon proceedings being had and taken as in this act provided. The council * * * or the legislative body of any such municipal corporation, upon receiving a written petition containing a description of the new territory asked to be annexed to such corporation, * * * must, without delay, submit to the electors of such municipal corporation and to the electors residing in the territory proposed by such petition to be annexed to such corporation, the question whether such new territory shall be annexed to and incorporated in and made a part of said municipal corporation." And it is provided that, should the electors of the municipality and the outside territory vote in favor of annexation, such territory shall be annexed to and become a part of the municipality.

It will be observed from these provisions of the act that there is no limitation whatever expressed in the statute as to the extent or form of the territory to be annexed, and there is nothing from which any limitation can be implied. It has plainly left the matter of the annexation of any territory to a municipality to be determined by the people—the voters of the municipality and the territory proposed to be annexed. The Legislature itself in the very nature of things could not lay down any rule as to the extent, shape, or character of territory which might be annexed to any given municipality. This must necessarily depend on very many reasons—questions of expediency and policy—affecting the various municipalities, and adjacent territory to be annexed, in different ways. Hence it was doubtless concluded by the Legislature in conferring a power of annexation in the general terms used in the statute that the voters in a municipality could best determine whether its growth and the conditions surrounding it called for an extension of its municipal limits by the increase of additional territory and its extent, and that the voters of the territory proposed to be annexed could with equal wisdom determine whether it was of advantage to them to become a part of the municipality to the extent and in the form as proposed. With the wisdom of their determination in the matter the courts cannot interfere. They only interfere where some substantial provision of the law has been violated or where fraud was perpetrated in the matter of the boundaries or the extent of the annexed district. That the extent and shape which the annexed territory shall take is a political, and not a judicial question, is clear from the conclusion announced by this court in the case of People v. Town of Loyaltown, 147 Cal. 774, 82 Pac. 620. In that case it is true that the court had under consideration a question as to the incorporation of a city under the general municipal incorporation act (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), but the principle decided there, that it was exclusively a matter for the Legislature to say what tribunal or how these boundaries should be fixed, is equally applicable to the fixing of the boundaries of territory to be annexed to an existing municipality under the annexation act. It is there held that under the Constitution all questions as to population and extent and character of territory to be included in the incorporation of cities or towns is left entirely to the Legislature, and that, under its power to provide for the incorporation of such municipalities, the question of the extent and character of territory proposed to be incorporated is left, under the general municipal incorporation act, as the Legislature was authorized to leave it, exclusively to the board of supervisors of the county in which the city is to be incorporated, and that the courts have no control of the subject. Under the annexation act the determination of the question is equally left to the voters of the municipality and the territory proposed to be annexed. If, in the one instance, the courts cannot interfere with the action of the board of supervisors on the question as to the territory to be incorporated, it cannot interfere in the other, with the determination of the voters as to the boundaries of territory to be annexed. The authority of the Legislature to provide for the annexation of territory to existing municipalities is derived from the same constitutional provision (article 11, § 6), which authorizes it to provide by general laws for the incorporation of cities. Under the Constitution it is left to the Legislature to determine the mode in which either incorporation or annexation shall be accomplished. What mode should be adopted was, therefore, purely a question of policy and expediency. It could have left the matter of extent and character of territory to be incorporated or annexed either to the determination of some city or county legislative body, or directly to the voters of the locality to be affected. Under the general incorporation act, it left it to the inhabitants of the territory proposed to be incorporated into a city, in the first instance, the right to determine the extent of such territory, limited only by authority granted the board of supervisors to change the boundaries proposed before submission of the matter to the voters by excluding some part of the proposed territory. To this legislative body alone was left the power to finally determine the extent of said incorporation boundaries, and, having done so, no right to interfere with such selection existed in the courts. So in the case of the annexation of territory the power to fix its boundaries is conferred by the Legislature directly upon the voters of the territory to be annexed and the annexing municipality, and no authority is conferred on any legislative body or judicial tribunal to review or interfere with their election upon the subject merely because of the form or extent of the territory annexed. See, also, People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 Pac. 205.

The language used in the annexation act is equally as broad as that contained in the general incorporation act with respect to the territory which may be annexed or incorporated. The size and shape of territory, its adaptability for municipal purposes, its extent and contiguity to another municipality, are all matters which are left to be determined by the people of the territory to be annexed and the annexing municipality. In the annexation act the territory which may be annexed is referred to in general terms "as territory proposed to be annexed" or "the annexed territory," and the only limitation which is imposed as to such territory proposed to be annexed is that no territory which, when the petition for annexation is presented to the legislative body of the city, forms any part of any incorporated city or town, shall be annexed under the provisions of the act. St. 1889, p. 360, c. 247. There is no other limitation. Aside from this there is no limitation as to the size, shape, or character of territory. There is certainly no provision against the annexation of territory so as to make it contiguous to the boundaries of another municipality. Neither is there any rule which requires the annexation act to be construed as prohibiting it. In fact, instead of prohibiting the contiguity of cities, the law contemplates that they may become so because it provides for their consolidation, but only permits it when they are contiguous. St. 1883, p. 97, c. 49, § 7. As existing municipalities can usually be made contiguous only by the extension of municipal boundaries, the simple fact that the annexation of outside territory accomplishes that result can be no objection to the validity of such annexation.

As far as the claim is made that the effect of the extension of the limits of Los Angeles, as accomplished, will be to compel the consolidation of the smaller municipalities with the larger city, the answer is that under the law such consolidation cannot be effected without the consent of the smaller cities, and, if they consent, as the law says they may, no one has any ground of complaint. It may be said, too, that the claim of plaintiff that the effect of the extension of the limits of Los Angeles along the westerly boundary of the city of Wilmington is to prevent the natural expansion of the latter city is, in fact, more fanciful than real. San Pedro Bay naturally prevents expansion southward, but there is nothing to prevent its expansion to the northward and eastward. It has still unlimited power of extension in those directions. And, while it is restricted in its extension to the westward, there is no law which prohibits another municipality, when its present municipal necessities require it, from extending its boundaries by annexation because such extension may possibly prevent future expansion of another municipality. The contiguity of the boundaries does not affect the integrity of the present city of Wilmington, and that it might in the future, if not restricted by proximity to another city, extend in a given direction, is no reason why that other city, one of larger and increasing growth, whose practical and political necessities call for an extension of territory so as to bring it in touch with the seacoast, should be precluded from doing so merely, because at some future time the natural extension of the smaller city might possibly trend in the direction of the annexed territory. While it is claimed that the voters of the annexed territory did not constitute a fair and competent body to pass upon the question of the annexation as made, it is sufficient to say that it was the body to which, with the voters of the municipality, the Legislature left the determination of the matter. There were 213 votes cast in favor of the annexation in question here. In the Loyalton Case, to which we have referred, 79 votes constituted a body sufficiently competent to include in the incorporated city of Loyalton 52 square miles of territory. Certainly 213 voters were a competent body to determine the matter of annexation of a comparatively much smaller territory. If it be unwise legislation to grant the power to voters in the respective localities as broadly as it is conferred under the annexation act, appeal must be made to the Legislature itself. That body has the constitutional power to confer the authority on them to do so and has done it, and, whether it was wise or not, the courts cannot inquire into. Counsel for appellant would have us construe the statute as conferring such power on the court, but it is capable of no such construction. All matters of size, extent, form, and character of territory are committed to the popular vote under the act, and, unless some substantial provision of the law has been violated, as appellant further contends, his attack upon the annexation itself cannot be sustained.

In that line it is insisted that the annexation was void because the ordinance calling the special election on that question and ordering notice thereof to be given was published but once and not for 10 days, the period for which the charter of Los Angeles prescribes that all ordinances calling elections shall be published. There is no merit in this point. The proceedings for annexation were had under the act of 1889, which act provides a complete scheme for annexation, and the provisions of the charter have no bearing on it. The act is a general law and controls and is superior to charter provisions, except only in "municipal affairs." Annexation of territory to a municipality is not, in any view, a municipal affair, as that term is used in the Constitution. It could not be accomplished under any provisions of the charter of Los Angeles, but solely under the general law. People v. City of Oakland, 123 Cal. 598, 602, 56 Pac. 445; People v. Ontario, supra. While it is true that the charter provides that all elections shall be ordered by ordinance, which shall be published 10 days, this only has relation to elections which are had entirely in the city. It cannot have application to an election held at once within and without the city, and which has relation to matters outside of municipal affairs. An annexation election is an election held in the city only to the extent that the city is one of the parties whose electors have a voice in determining the question of annexation. Authority to hold an election at all for that purpose is granted solely by the annexation act, which prescribes the terms, conditions, and mode to be followed in submitting the question to both the voters of the municipality and the territory to be annexed, and, as it provides a perfect scheme for that purpose, its provisions alone govern. All that the act prescribes as to notice of the election is that such notice shall be given by publication for four weeks in one newspaper published in the city and one in the outside territory, if one be published there. It does not direct any method by which the election shall be ordered. The legislative body of the city might have ordered it by either ordinance or by resolution. It was not required to do it by ordinance. It might adopt that method, not on account of any provision of the annexation law requiring it, but because, in the absence of any prescribed method, it could elect to avail itself of such method as it deemed advisable. It could, of course, not be claimed that the publication of the ordinance for 10 days was necessary so as to give legal notice to the voters in the outside territory. As to them, it must be conceded that the provisions alone of the annexation act had application, and the publication of the ordinance as made was all that was necessary. The claim is only that, in order to give legal notice to the electors of the city, the ordinance should have been published for 10 days. It is not pretended that the charter provides any machinery (because it does not) whereby the annexation election could be held entirely under it, but only that this particular provision of it had application and must govern. This, however, would present an anomalous condition of affairs, arising from the application of two different laws; the annexation law governing the procedure as far as the electors in the outside district are concerned, and the charter governing it as to electors in the city. We are satisfied that no such situation is presented. The charter provisions as to elections have relation only to elections held solely in the city. They have no application to an annexation election, which is in no respect a "municipal affair," but a matter entirely outside of such affairs. Such elections are governed by the provisions of the annexation act alone, and in the matter of notice its provision was complied with.

The last point made by appellant is that the notice given of the election was not sufficient, reasonable, nor legal. The notice was published for four weeks prior to the election, as provided by the annexation act. It is conceded that the notice as given filled the express requirements of the act taken by itself, with respect to length of time, but it is claimed that as under section 1094, Pol. Code, in force when the election was held, registration for any election is forbidden for a period of 40 days prior thereto, it was incumbent on the city council of Los Angeles, which called the election, to give notice thereof long enough prior to such period of 40 days, so as to afford every qualified elector a reasonable opportunity to register in the interim; that there is nothing in the annexation act preventing the giving of such a notice as would afford an opportunity to register; and that the act and the section of the Political Code must be construed together as requiring a notice which will give sufficient time for electors to do so. We do not think the point as made has any force. The registration law makes no provision for registration for any particular election. It provides that on the 1st of January of the even numbered years a new registration of voters shall take place. The new register so made is to be used for any election which may be had during these two years, whether it be special or general, and no one may vote at any election held during such time, unless he is registered. No provision is made for a registration for any special election, but simply a general registration, under which the voters may participate in any election which may occur, whether it be special or general, and every voter has notice, because the law so provides, that for any election which may be called during that period, no matter how called or for what purpose, no registration within 40 days preceding it is permitted. Every voter is given the same opportunity to be registered, and so be prepared, at any election which may happen, to exercise his voting privilege. It is of no moment to say that electors do not know that a special election will be had at any particular time. They do know, however, that special elections are had, and in contemplation of law are charged with notice that special elections for annexation of territory and for many other purposes are provided for by law, and may be held at any time, and within a period which will not give them an opportunity to vote thereat, unless registered when the election is called. The registration law makes no distinction as to elections, and does not take at all into consideration special elections as such. Its policy is that electors shall be prepared by previous registration to vote at any election which occurs, whatever its character, and there can be no valid reason presented why a special election called in express conformity to the statute should be annulled merely because notice of it was too short to permit some electors to register and participate in it, when they were already given under the registration law ample time and opportunity to be prepared to do so.

There are very many statutes in force in this state on the subject of special elections for various purposes, some passed prior, and some subsequent, to the amendment to section 1094 of the Political Code requiring registration to cease 40 days before elections, and all permitting elections to be held in much less than 40 days from the date of the notice. Many of these statutes provide for such special elections in order to authorize the issuance of municipal and other bonds for various purposes, and it may be safely said that bonds of the value of millions of dollars are now outstanding the issuance of which have been authorized at such special elections. Many cases have been presented to this court involving the validity of such elections, but the point has never been asserted, which is asserted now, that these elections were invalid on account of insufficiency of notice. If the point was deemed of any special merit, it is hardly to be supposed that in the different cases counsel attacking the validity of such elections would have overlooked it. This, of course, is no reason why, if there is any merit in the point, it cannot be availed of now; but in view of the fact that such point has never been deemed of sufficient importance to be heretofore presented for determination by this court, in cases which involved it as fully as it is involved here, and considering further, the vast present interests to be disastrously affected by now sustaining it, some authority, persuasive in its reasoning, would have to be presented before we would feel constrained to do so. None has been. Counsel for appellant cite and quote from some cases which they claim support this contention. Our reading of them compels a different conclusion. They are all cases relating to violations of plain provisions of statute as to notice, or involving provisions of law which so limited the time within which an elector might register, as to amount to a practical denial of the right to register and vote, or cases where no general registration was provided for and the right to vote could only be given by special registration. They have no bearing on the matter under consideration, where general registration for all elections offers electors ample opportunity to register and vote, and where no provision for special registration for elections is provided for.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

FOGG v. PERRIS IRR. DIST. (HUTCHINGS, Intervener.)

PEOPLE v. SAME. (L. A. 2,032.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 28, 1908.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—IRRIGATION—ORGANIZATION OF DISTRICT—JURISDICTION OF COURT—SUFFICIENCY OF PETITION AND NOTICE.

A writing as follows: "Notice is hereby given that the following petition for the organization of an irrigation district in the counties of San Bernardino and San Diego, to be known as the Perris Irrigation District, will be presented to the board of supervisors of San Bernardino county, state of California, at the court house in the city of San Bernardino, at a regular meeting of said board on the 7th day of April, 1890, at 10 o'clock a. m. Petition for Perris Irrigation District"—followed by a petition, in regular form for the organization of the proposed district subscribed by a requisite number of freeholders in the district, legally performed the double office of notice and petition for the organization of the district; the document being sufficient in form to answer both purposes, and there being nothing in the statutes forbidding such a combination of uses, or prescribing any particular form either for the petition or for the notice.

2. SAME—FRAUD IN PETITION—EFFECT AFTER CONFIRMATION.

The fact that most of the persons who signed the petition to the board of supervisors for the organization of an irrigation district were not bona fide freeholders, but were temporarily given nominal undivided interests in land for the express purpose of qualifying them to sign the petition, while a fraud upon the board if concealed from it, and upon the law and the property owners of the district even if disclosed to the board, and a sufficient cause for declaring the organization of the district invalid if shown to the court on a proceeding for confirmation, would not make the organization absolutely void so as to deprive the court of jurisdiction in that proceeding, but only voidable, and persons dealing with the district after the organization was perfected upon the face of the record would not be presumed to know of the fraud, and, if ignorant thereof, would be protected against it, the purpose of the act of 1889 (Laws 1889, p. 212, c. 178), providing for an adjudication of the validity of such a district, being to furnish a barrier against subsequent attacks upon the ground of such frauds, and thereby to protect its bondholders.

3. SAME—NOTICE OF HEARING OF CONFIRMATION—PROCEEDINGS—SUFFICIENCY—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY AFFECTED.

Notices of a hearing for confirmation of proceedings for the organization of an irrigation district, stating that the board of directors of the Perris irrigation district had filed a petition praying that the proceedings theretofore had for the issue and sale of bonds of said Perris irrigation district be confirmed, and that any person interested in the organization of the district, or in proceedings for the issue and sale of the bonds, might appear and answer or demur to the petition, sufficiently described the real estate to be affected by reference to the district by name, inasmuch as Laws 1887, p. 30, c. 34, § 3, requires that the board of supervisors in organizing an irrigation district shall by minute order "declare such territory duly organized as an irrigation district," and shall "cause a copy of such order, duly certified, to be immediately filed for record" in the county recorder's office of each county in which its lands lie, and, the proceedings for the organization of the district being regular on the face of the record, the district thereby became prima facie a quasi municipal corporation, with defined boundaries, established and recorded, and the record constituted constructive notice of the location of the boundary lines to the inhabitants of the district, as well as to all others.

4. SAME—CHANGE OF DISTRICT BOUNDARIES.

The fact that, after the original organization of the district, changes were made in its boundaries, did not render the mere name of the district insufficient as an identification; since, if the proceedings to change the boundaries were regular and valid on their face, they were matters of record which could be ascertained by examination.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ERROR NOT CAUSING SUBSTANTIAL INJURY.

Where a decree of court confirming, not only original proceedings for the formation of an irrigation district, but also subsequent proceedings eliminating and adding certain territory, and approving bond sales, which was rendered after a prior decree, is valid, any error in the prior decree which confirmed the proceedings up to the order for the sale of the bonds was cured and will not cause reversal; Code Civ. Proc. § 475, providing that no judgment can be reversed for error unless by reason thereof appellant has suffered substantial injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4240.]

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—CONFIRMATION OF PROCEEDINGS TO SELL BONDS—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE AND PETITION.

Laws 1889, p. 212, c. 178, § 1, provides that the board of directors of an irrigation district may commence a special proceeding by which the proceedings of the board and the district authorizing the issue and sale of bonds may be confirmed. Section 2 provides that the prayer of the petition shall, in effect, be that the proceedings may be examined, approved, and confirmed by the court, and shall state generally that the district was duly organized. Section 5 declares that, upon the hearing of the petition framed as aforesaid, the court shall have jurisdiction to determine the validity of, and confirm all the proceedings for, the organization of the district and all other proceedings which may affect the legality of the bonds, the order of sale, and the sale thereof. Held, that a petition and notice asking for the confirmation of the proceedings to issue and sell the bonds were sufficient to support a decree confirming the proceedings to organize the district, though such confirmation was not asked.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence upon a phase of the case is conflicting, a finding thereon is conclusive on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

8. TRIAL—FINDINGS OF FACT—FAILURE TO FIND ON PARTICULAR QUESTIONS.

In an action to set aside decrees of a court, where the facts found by the court conclusively showed the validity of the decrees, findings on other issues were immaterial and unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 941.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; H. S. Torrance, Judge.

Consolidated actions by F. J. Fogg against the Perris Irrigation District, and by the people against the same defendant, in both of which actions J. C. Hutchings intervened. From judgment in each case for defendant and intervener, and orders denying a new trial, plaintiffs in each case appeal. On appeal both cases were by stipulation decided upon the record in the Fogg Case. Affirmed.

Works, Lee & Works, for appellants. John F. Crowe, for respondent. Oscar C. Mueller and William M. Hiatt, for respondent intervener.

SHAW, J. The above-entitled cases were before this court on former appeals from judgments in favor of the defendant and intervener in each case, given upon sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. Those judgments were reversed. People v. Perris Irr. Dist., 142 Cal. 601, 76 Pac. 381; Fogg v. Perris Irr. Dist., 142 Cal. 18, 76 Pac. 1127. Upon the going down of the remittitur the defendant and the intervener, respectively, filed answers in each case. The two cases were tried and submitted on the same evidence, findings and judgment in each case were made and given for the defendant and intervener, and motions of the respective plaintiffs for a new trial were denied. Appeals were then taken to this court in each case from the judgment and from the order. By stipulation all these appeals have been presented and are to be decided upon the record in the case of Fogg v. Perris Irrigation District, and we will in this opinion refer solely to that case.

The object of the action, as shown in the complaint, is to set aside two decrees of the superior court of San Diego county approving, confirming, and declaring valid the proceedings for the formation and organization of the Perris Irrigation district, under the act commonly known as the "Wright Act" (St. 1887, p. 29, c. 34). The first decree was made on December 13, 1890, and it confirms the proceedings up to the order for the sale of certain bonds. The second was made on December 8, 1892, and it purports to confirm, not only the original proceedings for the formation of the district, but also subsequent proceedings eliminating and adding certain territory, and to approve bond sales made after the first decree. Both decrees appear to have been made in pursuance of the act of 1889, St. 1889, p. 212, c. 178. The attacks upon these decrees are based in part on the ground that the court did not possess or acquire jurisdiction to try the actions and give the judgments. As to the second decree it is also claimed that it was obtained by fraud.

Upon the question of jurisdiction to pronounce the decrees, the first contention of the appellant is that the proceedings for the organization of the district were absolutely void in the extreme sense, that they were of no effect whatever, hence, that there was at the time no such district in existence, no subject-matter upon which the court could act in confirmation proceedings, and, therefore, that there could be no jurisdiction or power to confirm the proceedings or declare the validity of a district which had no legal existence. It is argued that if the court had power, in confirmation proceedings under the act of 1889, to make a lawfully organized district out of a wholly void previous attempt to form such a district, it would, in effect, be creating a district by a mere decree of confirmation, a thing which the act of 1889 does not contemplate or authorize; that the purpose of that act was merely to confirm proceedings and cure irregularities, errors, and omissions in the record thereof; but that, if the original proceeding was void for lack of jurisdiction in the board of supervisors, it is beyond the power of cure by means of a judgment confirming and declaring it valid. So far as this argument applies to a lack of jurisdiction of the original proceeding which appears upon the face of the record thereof, we can perceive no good answer to the argument. Respondent makes no attempt to answer it. Without deciding whether it is sound or not, we will for the purposes of the case assume the contention to be thus far correct. We are of the opinion that the record of the original proceeding does not on its face disclose a want of jurisdiction. The only defect claimed rests upon the assertion that no petition for the organization of the district was ever presented to the board of supervisors, and that no notice of the time when a petition would be presented was ever given. This assertion depends upon the force and effect of the papers that were presented to the board. It appears that the petition and notice for the organization of the district were both contained in a single document. This document began as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that the following petition for the organization of an irrigation district in the counties of San Bernardino and San Diego, to be known as the Perris Irrigation District, will be presented to the board of supervisors of San Bernardino county, State of California, at the court house in the city of San Bernardino, at a regular meeting of said board on the 7th day of April, 1890, at 10 o'clock a. m.

"Petition for Perris Irrigation District."

Then follows a petition, in regular form, for the organization of the proposed district, at the end whereof is subscribed the genuine signatures of 55 persons who in the petition declare that they are freeholders owning lands in the district. A copy of this document was published, as the law requires, in a newspaper of the county for two weeks before the time named for its presentation. At the time thus fixed for the presentation, the original document in its entirety was presented to the board as a petition for the organization of the district, and as such it was received and acted on by the board, and the district was formed upon that as a foundation. The contention is that this document could not legally perform the double office of notice and petition; that it was either the one or the other, but could not be both. It is urged that, to constitute a valid notice and petition, there must be two documents, one constituting the notice and the other the petition, and each signed by the petitioners. The argument is that, as this document begins as a notice, it cannot be construed to be anything else, and that, as it has been held that the notice published must bear upon its face the signatures of the petitioners, or show that it was issued by them or given under their authority (In re Central Irr. Dist., 117 Cal. 392, 49 Pac. 354), it can constitute nothing but a notice, and that, having served that purpose, it could not afterwards be used as a petition. This argument appears to us to have little force. We can see no legal objection to this method of embodying the notice and petition in one document and using it for each purpose successively. The only notice required is a notice to be published in a newspaper. Necessarily this publication must consist of numerous printed copies, not of the one original. There is nothing in the statutes forbidding such a combination of uses, or prescribing any particular form, either for the petition or for the notice. The document was sufficient in form to answer both purposes. Its contents sufficiently show that the parties who signed it intended that it should be so used. After copies of it were published as a notice, there could be no substantial objection to the presentation of the original to the board as a petition.

The other objection to the jurisdiction of the board did not appear upon the record. It was alleged on the one hand and denied on the other that 42 of the persons who signed the petition were not bona fide freeholders, but were made freeholders, temporarily and nominally only, by a conveyance to them of undivided interests in two or three five-acre tracts of land in the district, upon the agreement that they were to take the deeds, sign and present the petition, and reconvey to the grantor after the organization was effected, and that the other freeholders who signed the petition did not constitute a majority of the freeholders in the district. The court made no finding upon this issue. We must therefore consider its materiality, if true. We do not doubt that this was a fraud on the board, if concealed from it, as is alleged, or that it would be a fraud upon the law and upon the property owners of the district, even if disclosed to the board, and that, when shown to the court on a proceeding for confirmation, it would be sufficient cause for declaring the organization of the district invalid. It did not, however, make the organization of the district absolutely void, but only voidable. Persons dealing with the district after the organization was completed and perfected upon the face of the record would not be presumed to know of this fraud, and, if ignorant thereof, would be protected against it. The purpose of the act of 1889, in providing for an adjudication as to the validity of the district, was to furnish a barrier against subsequent attacks upon the ground of such frauds in the organization of the district, and thereby to protect its bondholders. It could not have been contemplated or intended that the existence of such fraud would always be open to inquiry, notwithstanding such adjudication, nor that, if subsequently shown, it would prove that the court in the confirmation proceedings had no jurisdiction to act at all, and that its decree was void. We think, therefore, that upon the face of the record jurisdiction of the original proceeding was shown to exist, and that the fraud alleged, although sufficient to have made the organization invalid if shown upon the hearing of the proceedings for confirmation, was not sufficient to deprive the court in that proceeding of jurisdiction to make the adjudication which is here sought to be vacated.

It is further contended that both of the decrees of confirmation were void because no notices of the hearing thereof were given. The record in each case shows that the notices were duly published for the prescribed time. It is claimed that they were each void for the reason that they did not contain any description of the real estate of the district, or that of any owner thereof, nor in any manner indicate its boundaries, so that a landowner therein would be warned thereby that his land would be affected or incumbered as a result of the decree sought. The statute requires that "the notice shall state the time and place fixed for the hearing of the petition, and the prayer of the petition, and that any person interested in the organization of said district, or in the proceedings for the issue or sale of said bonds, may, on or before the date fixed for the hearing of said petition, demur to or answer said petition. The petition may be referred to and described in said notice as the petition of the board of directors of ——— irrigation district [giving its name], praying that the proceedings for the issue and sale of the bonds of said district may be examined, approved and confirmed by said court." The notices fully complied with these provisions. Appellant claims that this is not sufficient; that there must be some description of the land that would give notice to the owner that his land was involved; that otherwise the act would be unconstitutional, in that it would allow a person to be deprived of his property without due process of law. Conceding that the latter proposition is the law for the purposes of this discussion, we think the notices given were sufficient. Each notice stated that the board of directors of the Perris Irrigation district had filed a petition praying that the proceedings theretofore had for the issue and sale of bonds of said Perris Irrigation district be examined, approved and confirmed, and that any person "interested in the organization of said district, or in proceedings for the issue and sale of said bonds," might appear and answer or demur to the petition. The law requires that the board of supervisors of the county in organizing an irrigation district shall by minute order "declare such territory duly organized as an irrigation district," and shall "cause a copy of such order, duly certified, to be immediately filed for record" in the county recorder's office of each county in which its lands lie, and that from the date of such filing the organization of the district shall be complete. St. 1887, p. 30, c. 34, § 3. The proceedings for the organization of the district, as we have seen, were regular on the face of the record. The district thereby became prima facie a quasi municipal corporation, with defined boundaries established and recorded, and this record constituted constructive notice of the location of the boundary lines to all the inhabitants of the district and to the world. The existence of the Perris irrigation district and the location of its boundaries being matters of record, the statement in the notice that the petition was for the purpose of confirming the proceedings for the sale of the bonds of the Perris irrigation district was sufficient to inform any owner of lands situated in the district that his lands would be affected, and that he was interested in the matter to be adjudicated. It was equivalent to a declaration that the lands in the Perris irrigation district would be affected, and any landowner could, by reference to the official records of his county, ascertain whether or not his land was included therein. The name of the district, it having by that name a prima facie legal existence as such, evidenced in the manner prescribed by law by the necessary official record of the proceedings and order upon which it was declared organized, was a sufficient identification of its boundaries. It constituted a prima facie political subdivision of the state for the purposes of an irrigation district, and all persons were required to take notice of the facts shown in the record of its organization.

It is suggested that after the original organization of the district certain changes had been made in its boundaries, and that this rendered the mere name of the district insufficient as an identification. These changes would not make the boundaries of the district, as changed, less definite and certain than before. If the proceedings to change the boundaries were regular and valid on their face, they were matters of record, and the exact extent of the changed boundaries could easily be ascertained by an examination thereof. It is not claimed that they were not regular on the face of the record; hence the description in the notice was sufficient. The argument that the changes in the boundaries were void because the original organization was tainted by concealed fraud is answered by the same considerations upon which we reached our foregoing conclusion that such concealed fraud does not destroy the prima facie legal existence of the district. We have reached the conclusion, as will hereafter be seen, that the second decree, that of December 8, 1892, is valid, and that it conclusively adjudicates and establishes the validity of the proceedings to organize the Perris irrigation district and to issue and sell the bonds thereof, as well as its legal existence as an irrigation district under the "Wright Act" at least so far as is necessary for the protection of the bondholders. See People v. Linda Vista I. D., 128 Cal. 480, 61 Pac. 86. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider alleged errors of the court relating solely to the first decree of confirmation. If we concede that decree to be void, the second decree, if valid, will protect the district and the bondholders against any attack by the plaintiff upon the validity of the district organization or the issuance of the bonds as effectively as would the first decree, and will render harmless any error of the court below in holding the first decree valid. No judgment or order can be reversed for error, unless, by reason of the error, the appellant has suffered substantial injury. Code Civ. Proc. § 475. We will proceed to consider the objections to the validity of the second decree.

It is suggested that the petition and notice upon which the second decree was made asks for the confirmation of the proceedings to issue and sell the bonds, and for nothing else, and hence that so far as that decree purports to confirm and validate the proceedings to organize the district, it went entirely beyond the issues and the matter before the court, and was consequently void. The statute and the record in the case do not sustain this contention. The statute (St. 1889, p. 212, c. 178) provides that the board of directors of the district may commence a "special proceeding in and by which the proceedings of said board and of said district, providing for and authorizing the issue and sale of the bonds of said district" may be judicially approved and confirmed. Section 1. Section 2 provides that the prayer of the petition, in effect, shall be "that the proceedings aforesaid may be examined, approved and confirmed by the court." We have heretofore stated the provisions regarding the contents of the notice. The notice is not required to state that the legal existence of the district, or the validity of the organization proceedings, is to be determined. The petition is required "to state generally that the irrigation district was duly organized"; but need state nothing further in the way of detail on that subject. It is plain, nevertheless, that the question of the validity of the proceedings to issue and sell the bonds necessarily involved and required an inquiry into the validity of the original organization of the district. The statute itself recognizes this necessity and provides for it. Section 5 declares that upon the hearing of the petition, framed as aforesaid, "the court shall have power and jurisdiction to examine and determine the legality and validity of, and approve and confirm each and all of the proceedings for the organization of said district * * * and all other proceedings which may affect the legality or validity of said bonds, and the order for the sale, and the sale thereof."

The petition and notice in question conformed in all particulars to the requirements of this statute. It appears that, after the first decree, numerous sales of bonds had been made. The petition recited these sales at length, and in that respect only it differed from that upon which the first decree was based. The second petition and notice were therefore sufficient, under the statute, to give the court jurisdiction to adjudge the validity and legal existence of the district.

The complaint alleges that the second decree was procured by fraud, in this: that the attorney who had been employed by certain persons owning lands in the district to appear and contest the proceeding was bribed by the directors of the district to absent himself from court at the time of the hearing, and to suffer the decree to be entered by default. The record shows that no one appeared at the hearing on behalf of any objector, and that no objection was filed. Upon the question of the employment of the attorney to appear for the proposed contestants and his alleged bribery by the directors, the evidence was direct and in substantial conflict, and the finding was against the appellant. Under such conditions the finding cannot be reversed on appeal. It is conclusive upon this court. The question whether or not the bond sales set forth in the second petition and which the second decree of confirmation expressly purports to confirm were thereby rendered immune against subsequent attacks based on the ground that they were sold or exchanged in violation of the statute of 1887, as construed in Hughson v. Crane, 115 Cal. 404, 47 Pac. 120, Stimson v. Alessandro Irr. Dist., 135 Cal. 389, 67 Pac. 496, 1034, and Leeman v. Perris Irr. Dist., 140 Cal. 540, 74 Pac. 24, is not involved in this case, and we need not decide it. It may be observed, however, that the decision in Stimson v. Alessandro Irr. Dist., supra, appears to hold that such a decree does not make such bonds valid.

The complaint is made that the court failed to find on all the issues. The findings cover the issues relating to the want of notice on the hearing of the first petition, and also those in regard to the alleged fraud in procuring the second decree; the decision on each issue being against the plaintiff. These facts so found showed conclusively that the decrees were valid, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment and rendered any finding on the other issues immaterial and unnecessary. We need not here determine whether or not the decrees of confirmation, or either of them, were or would be conclusive as to the due organization of the district in any controversy that may arise involving the validity of such organization, but not involving the rights of any bondholder. Even if we should reach the conclusion that these decrees could be of no force except to protect bondholders, they could not be set aside on that ground alone. The force and effect of the decrees, when such other matters alone may be involved, in any action, is to be determined when the question arises in such action. The alleged errors of law in the exclusion of evidence are not in our opinion of sufficient importance to require notice. It is reasonably certain that the excluded evidence could not have affected the decision upon any material fact.

The judgments and orders appealed from in each case are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 563

Ex parte HALLAWELL. (Cr. 98.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
July 18, 1908.)

1. POISONS—SALE—REGULATION.

The act to regulate the sale of poisons and providing a penalty thereof (St. 1907, p. 126, c. 102, § 8), prohibiting the sale of opium, its compounds, and preparations except on a prescription, is within the police power.

2. STATUTES—INVALIDITY IN PART.

Even if the act to regulate the sale of poisons (St. 1907, p. 125, c. 102, § 3), delegating to the board of pharmacy the power to revise the list of antidotes and to further restrict or prohibit the sale of poisons, be void, it being clearly separable from section 8, prohibiting the sale of certain poisons, except on prescription, does not invalidate it.

3. FINES—EXCESSIVE FINES.

The act to regulate the sale of poisons (St. 1907, p. 125, c. 102, § 7), fixing the punishment at a fine of not less than $30 or by imprisonment for not less than 15 days, does not, because fixing no maximum, contravene Const. art. 1, § 6, as to excessive fines; it not providing for the imposition of such fines.

Application by J. L. Hallawell for writ of habeas corpus. Denied.

L. E. Dadmun, for petitioner. Lewis R. Kirby, Dist. Atty., H. S. Utley, Asst. Dist. Atty., and Wright, Schoonover & Winnek, for respondent.

SHAW, J. It appears that petitioner is committed to jail under an information filed by the district attorney of San Diego county charging him with the crime of selling a preparation of opium, the purchaser thereof not having a prescription therefor, as required by section 8 of "An act to regulate the sale of poisons in the state of California and providing a penalty for the violation thereof." St. 1907, p. 126, c. 102.

Petitioner contends that said act is unconstitutional, and hence the sale of the opium compound could not constitute a public offense. Section 8 of the act in question provides: "The sale of morphine, codeine heroin, opium and cocaine, their salts, compounds or preparations is hereby prohibited, unless upon the prescription of a physician, dentist, or veterinary surgeon, licensed to practice in this state, except preparations of opium containing less than two grains of opium to the fluid ounce." The act does not purport to prohibit, but, as indicated in its title, regulates the sale of the medical drugs specified therein by requiring the seller to comply with certain conditions deemed necessary for the protection of the public safety and welfare. Opium and its compounds and preparations are recognized as medicinal drugs of a poisonous nature, the use of which often tends to moral, mental, and physical destruction. Its sale and disposition, therefore, is a proper subject of legislation under the police power of the state, even to the extent of absolutely prohibiting the sale and disposal thereof. Section 11, art. 11, Const. Cal.; Ex parte Yung Jon (D. C.) 28 Fed. 308; State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 50, 40 Am. Rep. 488; section 93, Freund on Police Power; Ex parte Hong Shen, 98 Cal. 682, 33 Pac. 799. Having the power to prohibit the disposal of such drugs altogether, the governing power may impose such restrictions upon the sale or distribution thereof as it pleases. Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747; Ex parte Murphy (Cal. App.) 97 Pac. 199. By section 3 of the act it is provided that the board of pharmacy of the state of California shall have the power to revise and amend the list of antidotes from time to time, as to them may seem advisable; and, by section 4, that: "When in the opinion of the state board of pharmacy, it is in the interest of the public health, they are hereby empowered to further restrict, or prohibit the retail sale of any poisons by rules, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, by them to be adopted." Petitioner contends that this delegation of power to the state board, being void, vitiates the entire act. Conceding said provisions to be void for the reasons assigned, and as to which we express no opinion, it is also true that "nothing is better settled than that if the part of a law or ordinance which is invalid is distinctly separable from the remainder, the latter can stand and the former be rejected." Ex parte Christensen, supra; City of San Luis Obispo v. Pettit, 87 Cal. 499, 25 Pac. 694. The part of the law here attacked as being a delegation of legislative authority is clearly separable from section 8 of the act, and may, therefore, be rejected, so far as petitioner's rights are concerned.

Section 7 of the act fixes the punishment for a violation thereof by a fine of not less than $30, or by imprisonment for not less than 15 days, or by both fine and imprisonment. By reason of the fact that no maximum punishment is specified, petitioner contends that excessive fines may be imposed, contrary to section 6 of article 1 of the Constitution of California. As the act itself does not provide for the imposition of excessive fines, it is not obnoxious to the Constitution on that account. And we cannot assume the court will do violence to the constitutional provisions invoked (applicable alike to both the legislative and judicial departments. Tucker's Constitution of the United States, p. 686) by inflicting a penalty, in case of conviction, wholly disproportionate to the offense charged. As bearing upon the question, see State v. Williams, 77 Mo. 310; People v. Tom Nop, 124 Cal. 150, 56 Pac. 786; People v. Haagen, 139 Cal. 115, 72 Pac. 836.

An examination of other points urged as grounds for entertaining petitioner's application discloses no merit.

The application is denied.

WILLS—PROBATE—PROCEEDINGS TO REVOKE
PROBATE—WANT OF PROSECUTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1337, authorizing the filing of a petition within one year after the probate of a will to contest it, and section 1338, prior to the amendment of 1907, requiring the issuance of citation to named parties without specifying the time therefor, one who files three days before the expiration of a year after the probate of a will a petition to revoke the probate, but who does not for more than six months thereafter take any steps to issue citation nor take any proceedings in the matter, is prima facie guilty of want of diligence, authorizing the dismissal thereof on motion of the executor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

Petition by John Focha and others for the revocation of the probate of the will of Frank J. Focha, deceased. From an order dismissing the petition, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. E. Hewitt, for appellants. D. Kinsell, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order dismissing a petition to revoke the probate of a will for lack of prosecution. Frank J. Focha died, leaving a will, which was probated November 27, 1905. On November 24, 1906, John Focha and others filed a petition for the purpose of procuring the revocation of the probate of said will, but no citation was issued at that time, or at any time thereafter, to the executrix or to any other person. May 17, 1907, the executrix filed a motion to dismiss the petition, upon the ground that there had been an unreasonable delay in its prosecution.

The Code of Civil Procedure (section 1337) provides that a contest of the probate of a will may be commenced by filing a petition in writing "at any time within one year after such probate." The next section, as it existed at the time of these proceedings and prior to the amendment of 1907, provided that a citation must be issued to certain named parties, but mentions no specified time within which it must be issued; and appellant contends that a citation might issue at any time within one year after the filing of the petition for revocation. In support of this contention he cites the case of Bacigalupo v. Superior Court, 108 Cal. 92, 40 Pac. 1055, where it is said that "a citation in its general character is a summons, and under the provisions of the Code, giving section 1328 the widest latitude possible, the power to issue a citation would beyond all question cease one year after the petition for revocation was filed." But the court also added: "Whether it would cease in less than a year we need not here decide." That case, notwithstanding the language just quoted, is authority only to the point that no citation could be issued after the expiration of one year from the filing of the petition. The comparison there made between a citation and a summons was unnecessary for the decision of the case, and the view of the court in that regard was criticised in the case of S. F. Prot. O. A. v. Superior Court, 116 Cal. 446, 43 Pac. 379.

Respondent relies to some extent upon the case of Estate of Sbarboro, 63 Cal. 5. In the case at bar the petition for revocation of the probate of the will was filed but three days before the expiration of the year after probate. Neither then nor more than six months thereafter, when the motion to dismiss was granted, had any citation been issued, nor had proceedings of any kind been taken. The law contemplates a speedy administration and settlement of estates. The facts in this case, unexplained as they are, make a prima facie case of a lack of diligence on the part of the appellant, and furnished ample ground for the dismissal of the petition.

The order is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; G. A. Gibbs, Judge.

Action by the Stimson Mill Company against the Hughes Manufacturing Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. G. Scarborough and Scarborough & Bowen, for appellant. George P. Adams, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant and from an order denying a new trial. The action is to recover for building material alleged to have been sold and delivered to defendant at an agreed price. It is alleged in the complaint that the material was delivered in lots on various dates between November 5, 1904, and January, 1905; that upon delivery of each lot an itemized account was furnished defendant, showing the amount and price and that the same was sold by plaintiff to defendant; that at various dates after the final delivery an account was rendered by plaintiff to defendant, showing the transaction in detail, which defendant retained, and never made objection thereto until May, 1905; and it is alleged that by reason thereof said account became stated, and defendant had agreed and assented thereto, and is accordingly indebted. Nonpayment is alleged. The second count in the complaint is for goods sold and delivered. An issue was raised by the answer as to each and all of the allegations of the complaint. The court found in favor of defendant upon all the issues.

It appears from the record that prior to September, 1903, Hughes Bros. were engaged in conducting a planing mill in Los Angeles; that about the date last mentioned the defendant corporation was organized and took over the business, one of the brothers remaining as general manager of defendant, while the other brother became president. The evidence in relation to the transactions and the contract and agreement with reference to the delivery of the lumber is very conflicting—it being asserted by witnesses for plaintiff that there was an express contract on the part of Grant Hughes, the general manager of the defendant, to buy and pay for the lumber, and he agreed that it might be delivered to one Coffey, a contractor engaged in building certain schoolhouses; that before delivery Grant Hughes agreed for the defendant to pay for such lumber upon a representation to him by plaintiff that it would not deal with Coffey. Upon the other hand, defendant's witnesses testified that no such agreement or contract was made or entered into, and that defendant had no knowledge that plaintiff objected to selling to Coffey; that the only connection that Grant Hughes had with the transaction was in procuring Coffey's consent that plaintiff might bid on the furnishing of lumber, but that at no time was any agreement or arrangement made by which the defendant, or Hughes Bros., ever agreed to become responsible for the material so delivered. The court accepted as true the statements of the defendant's witnesses, and upon this appeal the action of the court, under the well-established rule, will not be disturbed.

Appellant relies chiefly upon the proposition that the itemized account rendered Hughes Bros., by reason of its retention for a long time without objection, makes a stated account; that this stated account became a new contract, and as none of its items were impeached by the answer the same became conclusive against defendant. The doctrine of Terry v. Sickles, 13 Cal. 427, is invoked, where it is said by the court: "If the account be sent to the debtor, and he does not object to it within a reasonable time, his acquiescence will be taken as an admission that the account is truly stated." This is approved in Mayberry v. Cook, 121 Cal. 590. 54 Pac. 95, and many other decisions cited. It will be observed, however, that in these, as in all cases where such a rule is applied, it is necessary that the relation of debtor and creditor should be shown to exist at some period. "An account stated must be founded on previous transactions of a monetary character. * * * It cannot be made the instrument to create a liability where none before existed, but only determines the amount of a debt where liability exists. Austin v. Wilson (Super.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 565." Chase v. Chase, 191 Mass. 556, 78 N. E. 115. That no monetary transaction between plaintiff and defendant existed, in relation to the lumber in controversy previous to the sending of these statements, is found by the court. It should follow, then, that the itemized statements could not be made to create an indebtedness. This is true, had the statements been received by the corporation defendant. The record shows that no account of any kind was rendered defendant; but, on the contrary, on their face the statements purported to state an indebtedness of Hughes Bros., the firm formerly engaged in the business, and from whom the corporation acquired a part of its property.

We find nothing in the complaint or record amounting to a plea or proof of an estoppel. There is no claim that plaintiff was induced to deliver subsequent lots of lumber, relying upon former accounts rendered, retained and acquiesced in, but, upon the contrary, that each and every delivery was based upon an express contract to pay the value thereof, which contract, the court finds, did not exist. In addition, there is nothing in the account as rendered to call the defendant's attention to any claim against it. All the itemized bills appearing in the record were made out to Hughes Bros. for Coffey, or words of similar import. There was, therefore, nothing in this itemized account calling the attention of the corporation to the fact that any claim was being asserted against it. No reasons are suggested why any of the errors of law assigned as occurring at the trial should receive attention, except, perhaps, specification 4 which relates to the omission of the court to make a finding in relation to the delivery of the itemized account to defendant and its retention of the same. As we have before stated we find no evidence of a delivery to the defendant corporation of any such account. The mere fact that it was delivered at the office of the corporation, or may have come into the possession of the general manager of the defendant, would not amount to such delivery to the corporation where upon the face thereof the bill purported to be against Hughes Bros., a copartnership, especially in view of the fact that there is evidence tending to show an agreement between Hughes Bros. and plaintiff through which the former were to act as collectors of the Coffey accounts. A finding is not necessary unless evidence appears in the record warranting the same.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the record and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Court Sept. 21, 1908.)

1. DEEDS — CONSTRUCTION — "EXCEPTIONS" — "RESERVATIONS."

Civ. Code, § 1069, providing that a reservation in any grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor, refers to exceptions made in deeds, as well as reservations; the words "exceptions" and "reservations" being used synonymously in grants.

They conveyed two acres thereof for a schoolhouse, and, if the same should cease to be so used, it was to revert to the grantors. W. and J. conveyed all their interests in the tract, "excepting the portions" sold to others. S. conveyed to defendant all his interest in the tract. Subsequently W. and J. conveyed all their interests in the school land to S., who took as trustee of a resulting trust in favor of plaintiff, who furnished the purchase money, and, in furtherance of the trust, S. conveyed to plaintiff all his interest in the entire tract. Held, that under Code Civ. Proc. § 1864, providing that, when different constructions of a provision are otherwise equally proper, that is taken which is most favorable to the party in whose favor the provision is made, and Civ. Code, § 1069, providing that a reservation in a grant shall be interpreted in favor of the grantor, two-thirds of the reversionary interest in the school land belonged to plaintiff and one-third to defendant, the exception in the deed from W. and J. to S. excepting from the conveyance their interest in the school land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by E. Seligman and another against T. W. Carr and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant J. R. Webb appeals. Affirmed.

Webb, Strother & Strother, for appellant.
M. B. and E. M. Harris, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action to quiet title. Plaintiffs had the judgment. Defendant Carr disclaimed all interest in the cause. Defendant Webb appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion made under sections 663 and 663½ of the Code of Civil Procedure. The appeal is upon the judgment roll which by stipulation includes the findings of the court and its conclusions of law, as well as the judgment. The facts necessary to the decision sufficiently appear in the findings without setting forth the averments of the pleadings.

It appears from the findings that on January 24, 1881, Samuel, William, and John Frey were the owners each of an undivided one-third interest in a certain 20-acre tract of land situated in Fresno county, and on that day conveyed by grant deed to Valley View school district certain two acres of said tract, "as and solely for the purpose of erecting a public schoolhouse for the use of said district." The deed provided that, "in case said land shall cease to be used for school purposes, it shall revert to the grantors herein." On January 30, 1884, William and John Frey conveyed by grant deed to Samuel Frey "all of our interest in and to the undivided one-half of that lot [describing the 20-acre tract], excepting the portions now sold by us to other parties." On November 10, 1884, Samuel Frey conveyed to defendant Carr by grant deed all his interest in the entire 20-acre tract, which the court found included only one-third interest in the school land. Subsequently, January 7, 1904, William and John conveyed all their interest in the school land to Samuel, but the latter took as trustee of a resulting trust in favor of plaintiffs, who furnished the purchase money, and, in furtherance of the trust, Samuel shortly thereafter, January 26, 1904, conveyed to plaintiffs by grant deed, not only all the trust estate, but also all interest he then had in the 20-acre tract. After all these deeds had been executed and recorded, to wit, April 30, 1906, and with full knowledge thereof and of plaintiffs' rights thereunder, defendant Carr conveyed, without any present consideration, all his interest in the 20-acre tract to defendant Webb, appellant.

No controversy arises as to the fee; the only question being: In whom is vested the reversionary interest in the two acres conveyed to the school district, which is designated as the school land? The court found that a two-thirds interest belongs to plaintiffs and that one-third is vested in defendant Webb. The court decided that, in view of the exception or reservation in the deed of William and John to Samuel Frey of January 30, 1884, they conveyed to Samuel only an undivided half of their interest in that part of the 20-acre tract that was not conveyed to the school district, that the school land was excepted from the operation of the deed and hence when Samuel Frey, in November, 1884, conveyed to Carr, his deed conveyed no greater reversionary interest in the school land than he reserved when he deeded to the school district, which was one-third, and this the court awarded to defendant Webb.

Appellant claims that by their deed of January 30, 1884, William and John conveyed to Samuel an additional one-half interest in the land, "making a five-sixths interest in the reversion of the school land." This deed purports to convey, as we have stated, "all of our interest in and to the undivided one-half of that lot [the 20-acre tract] * * * excepting the portions now sold by us to other parties." Appellant contends that the reversionary interest was not excepted by the clause above quoted, but that "the plain and obvious intent of that deed was to convey one-half of all the estate John and William Frey had in the 20-acre tract to Samuel Frey"; that "the only object of the exception was to protect themselves from the warranty against previous conveyances implied by their grant" to the school district; citing, as strongly supporting his contention, the case of Derby v. Hall, 68 Mass. 236. Section 1069 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "A grant is to be interpreted in favor of the grantee, except that a reservation in any grant, and every grant by a public officer or body, as such, to a private party is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor." We must give some effect to the provision in question, if we can, and the obvious meaning, if it be obviously certain, should be adopted. If, however, there be uncertainty or doubt as to the meaning of the exception and it still be capable by construction of receiving some reasonable meaning, the code rule is that it "is to be interpreted in favor of the grantor." Here the grantors granted all their interest in the undivided one-half of the entire 20-acre tract, and but for the exception the deed would clearly have conveyed a like proportion of the reversionary interest in the school land. Why was the excepting clause inserted if not to reserve some interest in the grantors or to take some interest out of the operation of the deed? Some technical distinction is drawn by law writers and in the cases between an exception and a reservation, but the distinction is not material here, for we think the statute refers to exceptions made in deeds as well as to reservations. Sears v. Ackerman, 138 Cal. 579, 586, 72 Pac. 171. It was said in Bowman v. Wathen, 3 Fed. Cas. 1076, 1082, No. 1740: "The words 'exception' and 'reservation' are used synonymously in grants, and have the same effect. The effect does not depend upon the use of one or the other of these terms, but on the facts which they represent." To the same effect is Stockwell v. Couillard, 129 Mass. 231, 233, holding that the words "excepting" and "reserving" are often used indiscriminately, and whether a particular provision is an exception or reservation depends not upon the use of one or other of these terms, but upon the nature and effect of the provision itself. See Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 37, 77 Pac. 712. Code Civ. Proc. § 1864, provides that, "when different constructions of a provision are otherwise equally proper, that is to be taken which is most favorable to the party in whose favor the provision is made." It seems to us that the natural meaning derivable from the language used is that the parties did not intend to include in the deed the land previously sold or conveyed to the school district. But, if this be not so and the language must be regarded as ambiguous or uncertain, calling for construction, we must, under the code rule, interpret it in favor of the grantors. Applying this rule, it seems to us that the learned trial judge was fully warranted in his conclusion.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HUTCHINGS et al. (Cr. 86.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
July 16, 1908.)

1. LARCENY—"GRAND LARCENY"—INDICTMENT—SURPLUSAGE.

Grand larceny, the felonious stealing of property of another, being committed when the property exceeds $50 in value, and is taken from the person of another, or is one of a number of things, among which is a "steer," it is not necessary in case of a steer that it be taken from the person of another or the possession of the owner; so that the allegation of the indictment that it was taken from the possession of the owner is surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3149-3150.]

2. SAME—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

The allegation in the indictment for grand larceny of a steer that it was taken from the possession of the owner is not description of the property, requiring to be proved.

3. SAME—VARIANCE—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

It cannot be contended that there was a variance because of the allegation in the indictment that the steer taken was a large brindle one; there being a mere conflict in the evidence as to its being such.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

On a prosecution for larceny of a branded steer, it was proper to permit the prosecution to introduce a diagram of the brand of the owner, and also a brindle hide; there being evidence to identify the hide as that of the owner's steer, and also as that of the steer killed by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, §§ 135, 136.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—DISCRETION OF COURT.

The admissibility of evidence which depends on the sufficiency of its weight to entitle it to be submitted to the jury rests largely in the discretion of the trial court.

6. LARCENY—EVIDENCE—CONSENT TO TAKING.

The father of the owner of a steer being in control of it when it was stolen, his testimony that he had given no one permission to take it is admissible, as a taking with his consent would have been no crime.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, § 132.]

7. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—SHOWING INJURY.

The matter of instructing the witnesses, excluded, by order of court, from the court room while not under examination, not to talk with each other or others as to their testimony, rests in the sound discretion of the court, so that complaint of its refusal may not be made, in the absence of a showing of prejudice.

8. SAME—HARMLESS ERROR.

While testimony for the prosecution on a trial for larceny of a branded steer that witness had never seen the brand introduced in evidence, and did not know who used it, though he had been in the cattle business for years, and was acquainted with the cattle ranges of the country, and had observed the different brands used all over the county, should have been excluded, it was harmless; its only possible effect being to discredit the alleged owners of the steer that they had cattle branded with such a brand.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3137-3143.]

9. SAME.

Failure to strike out testimony for the prosecution was harmless; the same fact appearing elsewhere in the evidence, besides being testified to by defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3144.]

10. LARCENY—EVIDENCE—RELEVANCY.

Testimony of F. on prosecution for larceny of the steer of W. of a certain brand as to witness being in the habit of making mistakes in branding his cattle, and as to mistakes as to the identity of cattle having been made by others in the neighborhood, was irrelevant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, § 136.]

11. CRIMINAL LAW—DISTINCTION BETWEEN CONFESSIONS AND DECLARATIONS—INDUCEMENT.

Statements made by defendant to officers not having been confessions, but admissions or declarations in conflict with his testimony, were admissible, even if the suggestion of the sheriff to him that it would be best for him to make a clean statement of the entire transaction be regarded as an inducement.

12. SAME—LIMITING EFFECT OF EVIDENCE—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

The attorneys for defendants not having asked that the statements of defendant H. be limited to his case on the admission thereof, nor asked the court to instruct to such effect, the other defendants may not complain that there was no such limitation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2646.]

13. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—LAYING FOUNDATION.

To introduce statements of a witness as impeaching evidence, he should first be asked if he had made the statements before the impeaching witnesses are allowed to testify thereto.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 1233-1236.]

14. SAME—DEFENDANT AS WITNESS.

A defendant by presenting himself as a witness in his own behalf subjects himself to the same rules for testing the truth of his statements as any other witness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1211.]

15. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—HARMLESS EVIDENCE.

The impeaching evidence of one witness introduced without proper foundation, being practically the same as that of another witness, properly admitted, was harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3138.]

16. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

It will be presumed that, had objection been made to testimony that it was not rebuttal evidence, the objection would have been sustained, so far as proper.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3014.]

17. SAME—EVIDENCE IN SURREBUTTAL.

A ruling that evidence sought by questions calling merely for a repetition of the testimony of witness when first on the stand was not in surrebuttal is proper.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1615.]

18. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—REBUTTAL.

When the prosecution has introduced part of a conversation with defendant to impeach him, he may introduce all of it in surrebuttal; he not being limited to such other parts of it as he can elicit from the impeaching witnesses by cross-examination.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1263.]

19. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—NECESSITY OF SHOWING INJURY—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE.

Though the objection or the ground on which evidence was excluded was not good, reversal may not be had if for any reason the ruling was right, or if the evidence could not affect the verdict; and one complaining of a technical error at the trial must show his substantial rights were injured thereby, so that complaint may not be made of the sustaining of objection to a question calling for all of a conversation testified to by impeaching witnesses; it not being shown that anything else was said on the subject that could have modified or affected what was testified to by such witnesses.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3095.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

W. H. Hutchings and others were convicted of grand larceny, and appeal. Affirmed.

White Smith, Frank V. Drake, and P. W. Forbes, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Appellants were charged, jointly with one John Gray, with the crime of grand larceny. The charge was dismissed as to Gray, and appellants were each and all convicted as charged. They appeal from the judgments entered against them, respectively, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

It is contended in support of the appeal that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence, that the court erred in its rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence at the trial, and in giving and refusing to give certain instructions to the jury. The information alleges that the defendants "did * * * steal, take, and drive away [from the possession of one George L. Wallace] one large brindle steer branded, * * * said steer was and being then and there the personal property of said George L. Wallace," etc. It is urged by appellants that, because of the allegation that the animal was taken from the possession of the owner they were entitled to have the jury instructed that, unless the evidence established that the steer was taken from the possession of George L. Wallace, a verdict of "not guilty" should be returned. For the same reason it is contended that it was error for the court to give an instruction to the jury to the effect that if the defendants found the animal running in a field belonging to the mother of one of them, knowing that it was not their property or the property of either of them and intending to steal it, and converted it to their own use, the crime was established. Grand larceny is the felonious stealing of the property of another, and is committed when the property stolen exceeds $50 in value, is taken from the person of another, or is one of a number of things specifically enumerated, among which is a "steer." The property stolen being alleged and proven to be one of a kind named by the statute, it was not necessary that it should have been taken from the person of another in order that its taking should be grand larceny. Neither is it necessary that it should have been taken from the possession of the owner. If this were true, there could be no larceny of an animal temporarily out of the possession of its owner. The allegation in the information that the animal was taken "from the possession of one George L. Wallace" may be treated as surplusage. The rule applied in People v. Handley, 100 Cal. 370, 34 Pac. 853, to the identity and description of the property affected, has no application to this question. The possession of the owner here was neither a necessary element of the offense nor any part of the description of the property alleged to have been taken. People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 442, 48 Pac. 389. Its presence in the information neither added to nor detracted from the force and effect of that pleading. People v. Cleary, 1 Cal. App. 52, 81 Pac. 753. Invoking the rule that though the allegation in the information that the steer taken was a large brindle one was not essential to a statement of the offense, yet having so described it the prosecution were required to prove the animal as described, appellants contend that there is a variance between the allegation and proof, and it is in this respect it is claimed the evidence does not sustain the verdict.

There is no merit in the contention that the evidence discloses that the steer killed by defendants was a red, and not a brindle, one. The animal was clearly identified by the evidence of the prosecution. It was shown by the owner and his father that a brindle steer was missing from their cattle about the time that it is admitted by defendants they killed a steer at the home of one of them, on a ranch adjacent to the pasture where the brindle steer was running when last seen by the owner. It is also admitted that the hide of the steer killed by defendants was given to Gray, one of the defendants, and proven that the latter gave this hide to an Indian, in whose possession it was found a few days afterwards by the sheriff and identified by the father of the owner. The ears, which on the brindle steer were marked, were cut off at the time of the killing and the explanations of one of the defendants as to the animal killed were contradictory, and the jury was justified in discrediting their statements as to the color of the steer killed. That defendants testified that the steer which they killed was a red one only operated to create a conflict in the evidence, and the conflict was conclusively resolved and settled by the verdict of the jury and order of the court denying the motion for a new trial.

Specifications of error Nos. 1, 2, 4, and 8 relate to the reception of testimony over defendants' objections. It was proper to permit the prosecution to introduce in evidence a diagram of the brand of the owner, and also to introduce the brindle hide, as there was sufficient evidence tending to identify it as that of the steer belonging to Wallace and also as that of the steer that was killed by defendants. The admissibility of evidence which depends upon the sufficiency of its weight to entitle it to be submitted to the jury is a question which rests largely in the determination of the trial court. People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 518; People v. Harben, 5 Cal. App. 29, 91 Pac. 398. The father of the owner of the steer being in control of the cattle at the time of the larceny, owing to the illness of his son, it was proper that he should be permitted to testify that he had not given permission to any one to take the steer. If it had been taken with his consent, there would have been no crime committed.

The witnesses not under examination were excluded from the courtroom by order of the court made at the beginning of the trial, and at a subsequent recess defendants requested the court to instruct the witnesses not to talk to other parties about their testimony, or to tell others what their testimony had been, and it was particularly requested that they be instructed not to talk with other witnesses. The court refused to comply with this request, and its refusal is assigned as error. While in a proper case such instructions to witnesses ought to be given, this is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and in this instance it has not been shown that defendants were in any manner prejudiced by the refusal of the court to give the instructions requested.

A witness named Webb was permitted to testify on behalf of the prosecution that he was a stockman and for 18 years was acquainted with the cattle ranges in Inyo and Mono counties, and had observed the different brands used on cattle all over the country; that he never saw the brand introduced in evidence, and did not know who used it. Defendants moved to strike out this testimony. The motion should have been granted, but we are unable to see wherein the defendants were prejudiced by the evidence. The only possible effect it could have had was to discredit the testimony of the Wallaces that they had cattle branded with such a brand, and thus weaken the case for the people.

The voluntary statement of the witness Gray that the other hide which he gave to the Indian Piper at the same time he gave him the brindle hide was received from the defendant "Hambleton quite awhile before" should also have been stricken out upon defendants' motion; but, as this same fact appears elsewhere in the evidence and is testified to by Hambleton himself, its admission in this manner could not have prejudiced the appellants.

Objections to the questions addressed to the witness Ford were properly sustained.

Whether or not the witness was in the habit of making errors and mistakes in branding his cattle, and that mistakes as to the identity of cattle had been made by others in the neighborhood, were alike irrelevant, and the rulings of the court excluding testimony of that character were proper.

The statements made to the officers by the defendant Hambleton were not confessions, but admissions or declarations in conflict with the testimony which he gave upon the witness stand. If the suggestion of the sheriff, that it would be best for him to make a clean statement of the entire transaction, be regarded as an inducement, this would not render the declaration inadmissible. People v. Knowlton, 122 Cal. 357, 55 Pac. 141. As original evidence against the defendant Hambleton, his statements to Collins and Bradshaw were admissible as a part of the case of the prosecution in chief, and need not have been limited to the purposes of impeachment. Attorney for defendants, however, did not ask that the testimony be limited to Hambleton's case upon its admission; nor did he ask the court to instruct the jury to this effect. In order to introduce the statements of the witness as impeaching evidence, it was necessary that Hambleton should have been first asked if he had made these statements before the impeaching witnesses were permitted to testify to the statements. Section 2052, Code Civ. Proc. When a defendant presents himself as a witness on his own behalf, he thereby subjects himself to the same rules for testing the truth of his statements as any other witness. People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 Pac. 175; People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 689, 66 Pac. 976; People v. Oliver (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 172. It is apparent that the trial court considered the evidence as impeaching evidence only, and for this reason struck out all of the testimony of the witness Collins and admonished the jury to disregard such testimony, and required the prosecution to reintroduce Collins' testimony limited to the statements which were called to Hambleton's attention. The testimony of Bradshaw was not stricken out, but it covered practically the same ground as the impeaching evidence of Collins which was properly admitted, and could not have been prejudicial. It was competent evidence in the case for the people, as above stated, and, considered as rebuttal testimony, should have been restricted in its scope to the same subject-matter as that of Collins. No objection was made to it upon the ground that it was not rebuttal testimony, and we must assume that, had there been, the trial court would have sustained such objection to it in so far as it was not proper for the purpose of impeaching Hambleton's testimony.

On surrebuttal it was sought to reintroduce and repeat the testimony of the defendant Hambleton in relation to the statements made by him to the witnesses Collins and

Bradshaw. Objections to two questions addressed to the specific language covered by the testimony of Collins were sustained on the ground that the evidence sought was not in surrebuttal. The witness was then asked: "Q. State all the conversation between yourself and Sheriff Collins and D. A. Bradshaw on the occasion of your arrest, and on your way to Bishop, touching the matter with which you were charged under that warrant of arrest?" To this question an objection was sustained on the same ground. The rulings of the court as to the first two questions were undoubtedly correct, as they called merely for a repetition of the testimony given by the witness when first on the stand. That the defendants were entitled to introduce evidence as to all the conversation that was material, when a portion of it had been given, is beyond question. Section 1854, Code Civ. Proc. The objection to the introduction of the testimony made by the respondent, to wit, that the testimony "was not in surrebuttal," was hardly a proper reason for its exclusion, as the conversation sought to be introduced only became material to defendants' case, if it ever did so, when what appellants now claim was but a portion of it was introduced for purposes of impeachment. To hold the evidence inadmissible on the ground that it was not surrebuttal might be to deprive them of evidence to which they were entitled. The prosecution's contention that the defendants were limited to such other portions of the conversation as they could elicit from the impeaching witnesses upon cross-examination cannot be sustained. But, when a ruling rejecting evidence is relied upon to reverse a judgment, we are not confined to a consideration of the objection made by respondent alone. If for any reason the ruling was proper, even though no objection was made at all, appellants cannot complain because deprived of improper or illegal evidence, or evidence that could not affect the verdict of the jury or prejudice their case. Davey v. Southern Pacific Co., 116 Cal. 325, 48 Pac. 117. Again, we must consider the rule: "That a technical error has intervened at the trial is (therefore) not of itself enough to warrant a reversal. The defendants must go further, and affirmatively show in some way that their substantial rights have been injuriously affected by the error complained of. The burden is upon them to do so." People v. Brotherton, 47 Cal. 388; People v. Clark, 106 Cal. 32, 40, 39 Pac. 53; Pen. Code, § 1258. There is nothing in the record to show that all the conversation between Hambleton and Collins and Bradshaw had not been given, and that the two conflicting versions of it before the jury were not all of the conversation that was material to the subject-matter. Had Hambleton been asked if there was any other conversation relating to the matter in question, he might have replied that there was not. If it had been made to appear by the record that there was anything else said on the subject that could in any manner have modified or affected that which was testified to by Collins and Bradshaw, then error and prejudice might be said to affirmatively appear, but this was not done. On his cross-examination Hambleton denied each and all of the statements testified to by both of the impeaching witnesses; thus negating all conversation purporting to be given by them. In this sense and upon this view of the evidence, it might be said that the subsequent attempt to re-examine him in regard to the conversation was not surrebuttal. But, which ever view is taken of the ruling, we do not think it discloses such error as to justify a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment and order affirmed.

LYNCH v. SWEETLAND et ux. (Civ. 451.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
July 27, 1908.)

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS—CONVEYANCE BY HUSBAND TO WIFE.

A man, over 70 years of age and in poor health, conveyed land to his wife, who had advanced out of her separate funds more than three-fourths of the price for the land. He did not then have any creditors, nor did he contemplate incurring indebtedness. The deed was recorded about three years after its execution. Held, that the conveyance was not fraudulent as against a creditor who became such about three years after the execution thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by George R. Lynch against William Sweetland and wife. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Campbell, for appellant. E. D. Crawford and B. A. Herrington, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to set aside a conveyance made by defendant William Sweetland to his wife, Emma, on the ground that it was made with intent to defraud the plaintiff and other existing and subsequent creditors. Judgment went for the defendants, from which judgment this appeal is taken.

On February 14, 1895, a deed to the property described in the complaint was made to William Sweetland; the purchase price therefor being $1,500, $400 of which was paid by William Sweetland, $500 by his wife out of her separate funds, and the balance, $617, was secured by a mortgage. On December 30, 1897, William Sweetland made and executed a deed of gift to the property to his wife. At that time she was in the state of Kansas attending her father in his last illness. A few days later William Sweetland delivered the deed to his daughter Edith, with instructions to deliver it to her mother upon her mother's return from Kansas. The following month, January, 1898, Emma Sweetland returned, and in accordance with said instructions Edith delivered the deed to her in her father's presence. Subsequently, and with money inherited from her father's estate, Emma Sweetland paid off the mortgage of $617. The deed in question remained in her possession from the time of its delivery until it was recorded in the month of March, 1901. William Sweetland testified as follows: "I am nearly 75 years of age, and am the husband of the other defendant. I made the deed in question on December 30, 1897, because my wife had put in more than I at the purchase of the land and my health was poor." The note referred to in the complaint was given upon the 15th day of December, 1900, and defendant William Sweetland was a co-maker thereof with H. H. Farnham, and was so merely as an accommodation to the said Farnham. From the issues framed by the pleadings, and upon the evidence introduced, the court found in part that the deed was executed and delivered in consideration of love and affection and of large sums of money, and that it was not made with intent to defraud plaintiff or any other person.

There are circumstances in the case which are sometimes indicative of fraud, such as the long delay in the recording of the deed, the assessment of the property for several years after the date of the conveyance in the name of William Sweetland, and the permitting of the insurance on the improvements to stand in his name. But all other circumstances in the case tend strongly to establish the good faith of the transaction. The deed was made by a man over 70 years of age and in poor health to his wife, who had advanced out of her separate funds more than three-fourths of the purchase price. There is no evidence that at the time of the execution of the deed the grantor had any creditors, or contemplated incurring indebtedness; and as far as this plaintiff is concerned his note was not executed until some three years after the deed was made. This case presented a question of fact for the trial court, and we think it was the duty of the court under all the circumstances of the case to find, as it did, for the defendants.

In some of its features this case is like the case of Joy v. Helbing (Cal. App.) 94 Pac. 863, recently decided. The facts there made a stronger case against the conveyance than do the facts in this case, and yet the judgment of the trial court, sustaining the validity of the deed, was affirmed by this court. There Helbing made two gift deeds to his wife of property in San Francisco. At that time and for more than a year thereafter he was out of business. The deeds were not recorded for more than two years after they were made; and in the meantime Helbing, on the representation that he was the owner of the property described in the deeds, bought goods on credit. After the execution of the deeds, and before their recordation, he exercised acts of ownership over the property. He insured part of it in his own name, and on the occasion of a fire which destroyed it he swore to a proof of loss wherein he stated that he was the owner of the property, and he obtained and receipted for the insurance money in his own name. He tried to sell one of the parcels to raise money for his own use. In that case the court said: "The intent of Helbing in making the deed to his wife was for the trial court to determine from all the facts and circumstances in the case. The deed was made at a time when Helbing was solvent, and more than two years before the indebtedness to W. W. Montague & Co. was incurred. There is no direct evidence even tending to show that it was made with intent to defraud any creditor who was such at the time of the execution of the deed. Helbing had the right to execute a deed of gift to his wife, provided by so doing he did not intend to defraud any present or future creditor. The burden was upon the plaintiff to show that the deed was made with the intent to defraud creditors of Helbing. While fraud is sometimes difficult to prove, and while courts grasp at all the facts and circumstances in order to arrive at the ultimate fact as to whether or not fraud was intended, yet it must be proved. The fact that the deed was not recorded for more than two years after it was made is a circumstance tending to cast suspicion on the good faith of the transaction; yet it is not sufficient of itself to show that the deed was made with fraudulent intent. The court, in the absence of testimony clearly showing the fraudulent intent, was in duty bound to find that the deed was executed with no such intent. There is no evidence in the remotest degree, with the exception that the deed was not recorded until long after it was executed, tending in any way to show any fraudulent intent or purpose on the part of Louise Helbing, the wife of Louis Helbing."

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES PRESSED BRICK CO. v
HIGGINS et al. (Civ. 506.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 9, 1908. Modified Opinion, July 23, 1908. On Rehearing, Aug. 8, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 7, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—NATURE AND GROUNDS—CONSTRUCTION OF LIEN LAW.

Const. art. 20, § 15, gives mechanics, etc., a lien upon property upon which they have bestowed labor, or furnished material for the value thereof, and requires the Legislature to provide for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens. Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, gives a lien to contractors, materialmen, etc., and provides that, in case of a contract between the owner and contractor, the lien shall extend to the entire contract price, such contract to operate as a lien to all persons, except the contractor, to the full contract price, and after such liens are satisfied, as a lien for the balance to the contractor. The contract is also required to be in writing when the price is over a certain sum and to state the amounts payable, time, etc., and be filed for record, otherwise the contract to be wholly void and no recovery had thereon by either party. In such case the materials furnished by all persons, except the contractor, are to be deemed furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and materialmen shall have a lien for their value. Held, that the provision in section 1183, making the contract wholly void if not filed, should be construed with the rest of the section, and with Const. art. 20, § 15, and, being penal in its nature, and an arbitrary provision, should not be extended to any contract not expressly within its letter, and that no technical construction should be indulged in to impose a penalty on the owner unless there was a substantial failure to comply with it, but that the lienors should have the benefit of any reasonable doubt as to whether they have complied with it, or as to its construction.

2. CONTRACTS—BUILDING CONTRACT — FAILURE TO FILE—EFFECT.

The failure to file the contract, as required by section 1183, Code Civ. Proc., only renders it wholly void as to materialmen, subcontractors, etc., having valid liens, who thereby become entitled to liens for the full value of their material, but, as between the contractor and the owner, the unrecorded contract determines their substantial rights and remains as the measure and test of the contractor's right to recover.

3. SAME—ENFORCEMENT—ACTIONS TO ENFORCE PERSONAL LIABILITY—SUFFICIENCY OF ALLEGATIONS—REASONABLE VALUE.

In an action by a contractor against an owner upon a contract, not recorded as required by statute, allegations in detail of the labor and materials furnished and required by the contract, the completion of the work according to its terms, and that a certain sum was the reasonable value of the labor and materials were sufficient against attack on appeal, if an allegation of reasonable value was necessary.

4. SAME—FINDING OF REASONABLE VALUE—NECESSITY.

In an action by a contractor against an owner upon a contract, not filed as required by statute, a finding of the contract price agreed upon and the value of labor and materials furnished was a sufficient finding as to the amount the contractor was entitled to recover, and an express finding of the reasonable value of the materials and labor was unnecessary, as the unrecorded contract was not void as between the parties, but remained the measure of their compensation.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS—RIGHT TO LIEN—PERSONS FURNISHING MATERIALS TO CONTRACTORS.

While proceedings to foreclose mechanics' liens may be termed statutory proceedings of an equitable nature, equity raises no lien in favor of the mechanic or materialman, the debt created by furnishing the materials, and the lien given therefor, being distinct matters; and the debt may be enforced as any other debt, while the lien exists only by statute, and must be enforced under the general procedure for foreclosing liens, as expressly required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1198.

6. SAME—ENFORCEMENT—PERSONAL JUDGMENT ON DEBT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1197, providing that nothing in the chapter on mechanics' liens shall be construed to affect the right of any person to whom a debt is due for work or materials to maintain a personal action therefor, a separate action on the debt for materials furnished by materialmen may be maintained.

7. SAME—PERSONAL LIABILITY ON FAILURE OF LIEN—LIABILITY OF CONTRACTOR.

A lien claimant whose lien has been declared invalid may, in an action to foreclose the lien, obtain a personal judgment against the contractor to whom the materials were furnished.

8. SAME—ACTIONS TO ENFORCE PERSONAL LIABILITY—PARTIES—CONTRACTORS.

Since a lien claimant whose lien has been declared invalid may, in an action to enforce the lien, obtain a personal judgment against the contractor, the latter should be made a defendant in the action.

9. SAME — PERSONAL JUDGMENT AGAINST OWNER—RIGHT OF MATERIALMEN.

The owner is rendered liable to materialmen, subcontractors, etc., only by reason of a valid lien and neither is entitled to a personal judgment against him; he being under no obligation to pay for labor, etc., furnished the contractor.

10. DEPOSITS IN COURT—APPLICATION—SUFFICIENCY OF TENDER.

In a consolidated action by contractors, materialmen, etc., to foreclose mechanics' liens, the owner paid a sum claimed by the contractors into court, the tender reciting that the owner "offered to pay into court any sum found justly due from him to the contractors, under the contract, for the benefit of the contractors, and lien claimants," upon discharge of the liens against the property, and the prayer was no broader than the tender. The finding recited that at the commencement of the trial the owner deposited in court a certain sum to be applied in satisfaction of the judgment. Held, that the tender and finding were broad enough to justify the application of the deposit to the payment of a personal judgment in favor of the contractors on failure of their lien.

11. MECHANICS' LIENS — SATISFACTION—APPLICATION OF PAYMENTS—ORDER OF PREFERENCE.

In an action by contractors, materialmen, etc., to foreclose a mechanics' lien, where the owner paid into court the sum claimed by the contractors to pay any sum found due from him to the contractors for the benefit of the contractors and lien claimants, the fund was properly applied, first, to the payment of the valid liens, with the costs properly allowable to such claimants; and, second, to payment of the personal judgment obtained by the contractors on failure of their lien.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR — DETERMINATION — MATTERS NOT NECESSARY TO DECISION.

Where the owner deposited the sum claimed by contractors into court to pay any sum found due to the contractors and lien claimants, and the amount found due the contractors was paid and the liens discharged, the distribution of the sum awarded the contractors among persons obtaining a personal judgment against them was immaterial on appeal by the owner; his right being then only to have the balance of his deposit returned to him after the liens were discharged.

13. MECHANICS' LIENS—ENFORCEMENT—COSTS —ATTORNEY'S FEES.

In proceedings to foreclose mechanics' liens, the payment of attorney's fees to successful lien claimants was erroneous; and the direction that they be paid from the sum deposited for discharging the liens was void.

14. DEPOSITS IN COURT — WITHDRAWAL BEFORE FINAL JUDGMENT—RIGHT.

Where an owner deposited money into court to pay any sum found due to contractors and lien claimants, the terms of the deposit being general, it served the purpose of saving him from costs, and must remain in the court's custody to abide the final judgment on appeal; and the statutes relating to appeals and stay of execution do not authorize the withdrawal of such deposits before that time.

On Petition for Rehearing.

15. MECHANICS' LIENS — CONSTRUCTION OF LIEN LAW.

The statute giving a mechanic's lien to contractors, materialmen, etc., for labor and material furnished, is intended to supply the means of enforcing the lien given by Const. art. 20, § 15, giving liens to such persons, and requiring the Legislature to provide for their enforcement, and will not be considered a general law relating to contracts, but a means whereby a laborer, etc., may exercise his constitutional right and enforce his lien, and will be construed so as to accomplish that purpose.

16. SAME — ENFORCEMENT — PERSONAL JUDGMENT ON FAILURE TO ESTABLISH LIEN.

Where a mechanic's lien fails, it is only in the absence of an express contract that the right of a contractor against the owner, and of the materialmen against the contractor, to a personal judgment, depends upon a quantum meruit, quantum valebant, or implied contract; and the right to recover judgment in such case does not depend upon the constitutional provision giving a lien or upon the mechanic's lien law.

17. SAME—PROCEEDINGS TO PERFECT — FAILURE TO FILE CONTRACT—EFFECT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, giving a mechanic's lien to contractors, materialmen, etc., and providing that, in case of a contract between an owner and contractor, the lien shall extend to the entire contract price, and that such contract shall operate as a lien to all persons, except the contractor, to the full contract price, but, after such liens are satisfied, it shall operate as a lien for the balance of the contract price to the contractor, and providing, further, that, unless the contract is recorded, it shall be wholly void, and no recovery can be had by either party, the failure to record the contract only renders it void as to all valid lien claimants, they then having a right to a lien to the full value of the property, but the failure to record it does not affect the contract rights of the parties or the amount of recovery, but only the funds from which the payments may be paid after the lien is established.

18. SAME — SET-OFF — LIENS SATISFIED BY OWNER—ACTION BY CONTRACTOR.

The statute having provided for the payment out of the owner's property of all valid liens established against it, in an action against the owner by the contractor, the owner may set up such payments as credits in the same manner as he may any defense in an ordinary action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Consolidated actions by the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company against Thomas Higgins and others to establish mechanics' liens. From a judgment for plaintiff, and orders denying a motion to vacate the judgment and amend conclusions of law, and to withdraw a deposit in court, defendant Higgins appeals. Judgment affirmed as modified, and orders affirmed.

R. L. Horton, for appellant. Chas. L. Batcheller, Percy B. Lloyd, Scarborough & Bowen, W. D. McConnell, Munson & Barclay, Jones & Weller, and Hutton & Williams, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. Consolidated actions on mechanics' liens. Appellant Higgins is the owner of a six-story brick building erected for him in the city of Los Angeles by respondents Alpeter, Hall & Alpeter as contractors, in accordance with three separate contracts in writing, to wit: (1) One to construct a four-story building for the sum of $40,500; (2) another to furnish labor and materials for walls, roof and interior bearing partitions of two additional stories, for the sum of $4,700; and (3) the third to complete the fifth and sixth stories of the building according to the plans and specifications therefor, for the sum of $9,200. As found by the court, Al-peter, Hall & Alpeter completed all work and furnished all materials required by said contracts, except as modified by agreement of the parties, which modification entitled the owner to a credit of $220 for bath tubs not furnished, and except as to painting and polishing the floors, upon which the owner expended the sum of $2,354.75 for work not done by the contractors. The contractors also furnished extra labor and material to the value of $2,857. The aggregate value of all labor performed and material furnished was found by the court in the following words and figures: "That the total amount of all of said materials and labors agreed to be furnished in the construction of said building and appurtenances thereto, including the contract prices in said contract and the contract price and reasonable value of such additional labor and material, and less the credit for said bath tubs of $220, is the sum of $57,037." In addition to the $2,354.75, paid for painting and polishing the floors, the owner, prior to the filing of the liens of plaintiffs against the property, had also paid to the contractors the sum of $38,689.01, and was entitled to a total credit on contracts and extras of $41,043.76, leaving a balance unpaid from the owner to the contractors of $15,993.24. The contractors filed a lien against the building for an alleged unpaid balance of $18,617.99, and 13 other persons claiming to have furnished labor and material in the construction of the said building filed liens aggregating an amount in excess of that sum. The several actions brought to foreclose these liens were consolidated for the purpose of trial. The defendant-owner, Higgins, deposited in court the amount of the balance alleged by said contractors to be due to them, to wit, $18,617.99, to abide the order and judgment of the court.

The court finds that contract No. 1 was never filed for record, but that contracts 2 and 3 were regularly filed; that notice of completion of the work under the second contract was filed February 27, 1905, and under the first and third July 10, 1905. The claim of lien of the contractors is declared invalid because the amount due under each contract is not segregated and separately stated, and the same finding is made as to all the lien claimants, except Howe Bros., the Consolidated Lumber Company, and Harry C. Bowers; and, as to the latter, it is found that his assignor, whose lien he is seeking to foreclose, is not entitled to recover because of failure to comply with his contract. The liens of Howe Bros. and the Consolidated Lumber Company are declared valid and entitled to be enforced, and an allowance of attorney's fees made in each of said cases for foreclosure. As conclusions of law, the court finds that Alpeter, Hall & Alpeter are entitled to judgment against Higgins for the sum of $15,993.24, with interest, and that each of the other lien claimants, except Harry C. Bowers, is entitled to a judgment against said contractors for a certain sum stated. Judgment was given in accordance with these conclusions, and it was directed by the judgment that the attorney's fees allowed be paid out of the $18,617.99 deposited in court by the owner, and that the $15,993.24 found due from the owner to the contractors be applied, first, to the payment of the two valid liens, with costs, and the residue applied pro rata in payment of the personal judgments in favor of the other claimants against the contractors. Appellant moved to vacate the judgment and to amend the conclusions of law because not supported by the findings of fact; and also moved the court to permit him to withdraw the deposit made by him and to substitute an undertaking to stay execution in lieu thereof, both of which motions were denied. He appeals from the judgment and the order of the court denying these motions.

His principal contentions on appeal are that, the first contract being void for failure to record it, the contractors must recover from the owner, if they recover at all, for the reasonable value of the materials furnished and labor performed, and that there is neither allegation in the complaint nor finding by the court to support such a recovery; that the claimants who failed to establish valid liens are not entitled to have their personal judgments against the contractor paid in whole or in part out of the fund deposited in court by appellant; and that the allowance of attorney's fees to the two valid lien claimants is void. The clause in section 1183 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing that the failure to file a building contract in the county recorder's office shall render it "wholly void" is penal in its nature. It is to be construed in connection with the rest of the section in which it is found, as well as with regard to the section of the Constitution creating the mechanic's lien, for the enforcement of which the lien law was provided. Article 20, § 15. It is an arbitrary provision, and is not to be extended to any contract not falling strictly within its letter. Kiessig v. Allspough, 99 Cal. 454, 34 Pac. 106. No (merely technical) construction can be indulged for the purpose of visiting a penalty upon the owner, unless there has been a substantial failure to comply with the law, which (such as) if continued would defeat the remedial purposes of the statute; but, if there be a reasonable doubt as to the construction of the statute, or as to whether the defendants complied with it, they should have the benefit of it. Joost v. Sullivan, 111 Cal. 296, 43 Pac. 896.

Appellant's position that the contract is void, even as between the owner and contractors, is sustained by some of the earlier cases in this state; but in the later cases it has been demonstrated that such a construction of the lien law is not essential to the purpose of the constitutional provisions creating the right of lien. Laidlaw v. Marye 133 Cal. 176, 65 Pac. 391. Certain provisions of the statute, formerly considered as effective, have been declared to interfere with the constitutional rights of an owner of property to make contracts relating to its use and enjoyment (Stimson Mill Co. v. Braun, 136 Cal. 122, 68 Pac. 481, 57 L. R. A. 726, 89 Am. St. Rep. 116; Snell v. Bradbury, 139 Cal. 379, 73 Pac. 150), while others have been said to be not necessary to carry out the constitutional requirements as to liens for labor bestowed upon and material furnished to construct or improve property, and have been held to exceed the legislative power (Hughes Bros. v. Hoover, 3 Cal. App. 145, 84 Pac. 681). Every provision of the law which the Legislature may enact must be subordinate to and in consonance with the constitutional provision. Hampton v. Christensen, 148 Cal. 737, 84 Pac. 200.

Speaking of the clause of section 1183 here under consideration the Supreme Court, in the opinion in Laidlaw v. Marye, supra, says: "When the statute declares that the contract shall be wholly void, it means * * * it is wholly void as to the third class above designated (subcontractors, materialmen, artisans, and laborers), who thereupon become entitled to liens for the full value of their material and service, and are deemed to have furnished them to the owner at his special request. * * * As between him (the contractor) and the owner, the contract must remain, if not the basis of his recovery, (but) the measure and test of his right to recover." (We have inserted the word in italics "if," and eliminated the word in parentheses, "but." In distinguishing the case of Kuhlman v. Burns, 117 Cal. 469, 49 Pac. 585, it is said by Cooper, J., of the Court of Appeal for the First District: "But as it has since been held that such contract is not void as between the parties, and is the measure of compensation in an action brought upon it, the doctrine of Kuhlman v. Burns is no longer the law." Camp v. Behlow, 2 Cal. App. 699, 84 Pac. 251. This declaration of the law is rested upon the opinion in Laidlaw v. Marye, and a petition for a rehearing of the case in which it was made was denied by the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court in Sullivan v. California Realty Co., 142 Cal. 201, 75 Pac. 767, an action brought by the owner to have an unrecorded contract cancelled because void, also says: "For the reasons fully given in the late case of Laidlaw v. Marye, 133 Cal. 176, 65 Pac. 391, the plaintiff cannot claim the contract to be void as between the parties to it. The statute was intended for the protection of subcontractors, materialmen, artisans, and laborers, and to preserve to them the right to liens." The complaints in both the Laidlaw and the Camp Cases contained two counts, one stating a cause of action in assumpsit, and the other one based upon the contract. While the complaint of the contractors in the case at bar does not state these two causes of action separately, it alleges in detail the furnishing of the labor and materials required by the several contracts and a completion of the work in accordance with their terms, and this is followed by the allegation that "said sum of $57,307 was, at the time, the reasonable value of said materials and labor so furnished as aforesaid." This was sufficient against the attack made upon the complaint here, if an allegation of reasonable value was necessary. There was, however, no express finding of the reasonable value of the material furnished and labor performed; but since the contract is not void between the parties, but is the measure of compensation, and the measure and test of the contractors' right to recover, this was not necessary. The finding of the contract prices agreed to be paid and of the value of the materials and labor furnished by the contractors in accordance therewith is a sufficient finding of the amount which Alpeter, Hall & Alpeter were entitled to recover.

It is contended by appellant that, to the extent that it attempts to execute the personal judgments of the laborers and materialmen against the fund deposited in court by the owner, Higgins, the decree or judgment finds no warrant in the statute or under the practice in the courts of this state; that these judgments are in no respect different from the ordinary money judgment for services rendered or merchandise sold and delivered, and, as there is no statutory provision authorizing the application of a deposit so made to the payment of such judgments, the direction to that effect therein is void. While for various purposes the proceeding to foreclose a mechanic's lien in this state has been said to be a suit in equity, and may be termed a statutory proceeding of an equitable nature, equity itself raises no lien on behalf of the mechanic or materialman. Ellison v. Jackson, 12 Cal. 555. The debt created by furnishing labor or materials for a building and the lien given therefor are two distinct matters. The former may be enforced, as any other debt, while the lien exists only by statute and must be enforced by the special proceeding provided for that purpose. McNiel v. Borland, 23 Cal. 149. When the case last cited was decided, a "special proceeding" was provided by statute for the enforcement of such liens, while under the Code the general procedure for the foreclosure of liens is made applicable (Code Civ. Proc. § 1198), but a separate action on the debt may still be maintained. Section 1197. A lien-claimant, whose lien has been declared invalid, may, in the action brought to foreclose the lien, obtain a personal judgment against the contractor to whom he furnished materials or at whose instance he rendered service. Marchant v. Hayes, 120 Cal. 137, 52 Pac. 154. For this reason the contractor may and should be made a defendant in the action. Giant Powder Co. v. Flume Co., 78 Cal. 193, 20 Pac. 419. The owner, however, is rendered liable to a materialman, laborer, or subcontractor only by reason of the lien, and neither of these persons is entitled to a personal judgment against him. He is under no obligation to pay such claimants for material or labor furnished by them to the contractor. Adams v. Burbank, 103 Cal. 646, 37 Pac. 640. It has been held that a general creditor is not entitled to a judgment providing that the remainder of the fund due from the owner to the contractor, after the payment of the valid liens, if there be any, shall be distributed to him to the extent of his lien (Kennedy-Shaw L. Co. v. Priet, 113 Cal. 291, 45 Pac. 336); also, that such a general creditor cannot be deemed to be included in an offer of the owner to pay to the persons claiming to be lienholders, in proportion to their respective claims, the amount admitted to be due from him to the contractor, whenever the respective amounts due to each lienholder is determined (Kennedy-Shaw L. Co. v. Priet, 115 Cal. 98, 46 Pac. 903).

The tender in appellant's pleading here (answer to complaint of Alpeter et al.) is: "Said owner hereby tenders and offers to pay into court any sum that may be found justly due from him to said contractors under the terms of the said contracts, for the benefit of the said contractors and the lien claimants, upon a proper discharge and full satisfaction of the said claims of lien and demands as against his said property." The same tender is made in the answers to the complaints of the various plaintiffs, and the prayer, which is substantially the same in this respect in the several answers to the various complaints, is no broader than the tender made. The recital in the finding is: "And at the commencement of the trial the defendant Higgins having deposited in court the sum of $18,617.99 to abide the judgment of the court in these causes, and to be applied in satisfaction of such judgment as the court may direct." It is apparent that the terms of both tender and finding are sufficient to justify the application of the fund to the payment of the personal judgment obtained by the contractors, Alpeter, Hall & Alpeter, notwithstanding the failure of their lien, and that it was competent for the court to impress the fund with the payment, first, of the valid liens with the costs properly allowable to the parties filing them, and, next, with the judgment of Alpeter, Hall & Alpeter after deducting the amounts of the liens of Howe Bros. and the Consolidated Lumber Company, with such costs as the court allowed to them. This would apply the entire $15,993.24 in a manner to which the appellant Higgins under his deposit could not object.

The right of the court, then, to distribute that portion of the sum awarded to the contractors among the persons obtaining a personal judgment against them became a matter which concerned the contractors only, and for the purpose of deciding this appeal it is unnecessary for us to determine whether the trial court was or was not authorized, either by statute or the terms of the deposit, to so apply the fund to which the contractors were entitled. After the ascertainment by the court that there was due to the contractors from the owner of the building the sum of $15,993.24, the only interest of appellant in the sum deposited by him was to have the balance returned to him after paying said sum, with interest thereon from the date of the judgment. The $15,993.24 was applied strictly within the terms of the deposit, to the payment of what was due to the contractors and the discharge and satisfaction of liens regularly established against the property. The allowance of attorney's fees to the successful lien claimants was erroneous (Builders' Supply Depot v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193), and the direction that the same be paid from said sum deposited was void. In all other respects in which the judgment affects the rights of appellant, it appears to be supported by the findings, but in this respect he is entitled to have the judgment modified.

It is, therefore, ordered that the words and figures, "together with the additional sum of $400 as a reasonable attorney's fee for foreclosing their lien," in paragraph 13; "together with the additional sum of $100 as a reasonable attorney's fee for foreclosing their lien," in paragraph 14; "and then to the payment of $400 attorney's fees adjudged to the said Howe Brothers, and $100 attorney's fees adjudged to the said Consolidated Lumber Company, pro rata, until all of said attorney's fees are paid; * * * and said attorney's fees," and "other than the attorney's fees," in paragraph 16; and "and the clerk of this court is directed and ordered to pay therefrom to said Howe Bros. the sum of $400 attorney's fees allowed to them, and to the Consolidated Lumber Company the sum of $100, attorney's fees allowed to them, and," in paragraph 20—be stricken out of said judgment, and the words "out of" inserted in line one of said paragraph 20 after the word "That," and that, as so modified, the said judgment be affirmed. The order denying appellant's motion to vacate the judgment and to amend the conclusions of law, and the order denying the motion to withdraw the deposit, should both be affirmed—the former upon the same grounds as those assigned in the affirmance of the judgment; and the latter for the same reasons and also those assigned by this court in Higgins v. Keyes, 5 Cal. App. 482, 90 Pac. 972, for denying the mandamus there sought. The terms of the deposit being general, the deposit served the purpose of saving the appellant-owner from costs, and must continue to remain in the custody of the court to abide the final judgment in the cause. To permit a deposit so made to be withdrawn pending appeal would be to take away the very support and condition of the court's judgment. No such right is deducible from the statutory provisions relating to appeals and stay of execution, or from the cases upon the authority of which it is claimed the deposit was made. De Camp v. Tolhurst, 99 Cal. 631, 34 Pac. 438; Wilson v. Nugent, 125 Cal. 280, 57 Pac. 1008; Stimson v. Dunham, 146 Cal. 281, 79 Pac. 968. In addition to this it might be said that, in view of the decision above rendered on the appeal, the question is one of no moment in this case.

Judgment, as above modified, and the orders appealed from, affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; SHAW, J.

PER CURIAM. It being made to appear to the court that, by inadvertence, the modification of the judgment herein was made without an appropriate order with reference to the costs on appeal, it is therefore ordered that, in addition to the modification of the judgment as in the opinion designated, a further order be entered, as follows: Costs on appeal to be paid, five-tenths ($\frac{5}{10}$) by Thomas Higgins, defendant and appellant; one-tenth ($\frac{1}{10}$) by the Consolidated Lumber Company; and four-tenths ($\frac{4}{10}$) by Howe Bros.

On Rehearing.

The petition for rehearing should be denied. The law of interpretation relating to mechanics' liens in this state being, or recently having been, in a stage of transition, it may not be amiss for us to restate more in detail our view of the logic of the recent declarations of the Supreme Court in respect to unrecorded building contracts wherein the amount agreed to be paid exceeds $1,000.

The Constitution establishes a right of lien for the benefit of the persons named in section 15 of article 20, and requires the Legislature to provide for a speedy and efficient enforcement of "such liens," that is, the liens provided for by the preceding clause. The statute is intended to supply the means for such enforcement, and will be construed with a view to accomplish the constitutional purpose. In so far as the act affects the right to contract, it will be limited in its operation to the persons whom the Constitution and the statute were intended to protect by giving a lien, and to such contracts of these persons as relate to and affect the lien. In interpreting the mechanics' lien law, it is not to be considered as a general law relating to contracts and contractual relations, but a means provided whereby a laborer, mechanic, or materialman may declare his intention to exercise his constitutional right, and enforce his lien. If an action be brought to foreclose a lien and the lien fail, a contractor may recover a personal judgment against the owner, and the laborer or materialman may recover a personal judgment against the contractor or subcontractor to whom the labor or material was furnished. In both instances, if there be a contract, the recovery depends upon the terms of the contract, and it is only in the absence of an express contract that the right of action rests upon a quantum meruit, quantum valebant, or implied contract. The right to recover the judgment in either case is in no way dependent either upon the constitutional provision or the mechanics' lien law.

The effect, then, of the failure of the contractor or owner to record the contract, is to render the contract void as a limitation of the liability of the owner. The obligation of the owner to pay the laborer and materialman is no longer limited by the contract price if he fail to record, and the penalty as to him is the exercise by lien claimants of a right of lien coextensive with the value of the property. The failure to record the contract does not affect the contractual rights of the parties in any manner. It only affects the funds from which their demands may be paid after a judgment is obtained and a right of lien established. The mechanics' lien law does not enable a lien claimant to recover judgment for any more or any less than the amount which he expressly agrees to take. It has nothing to do with the amount of the judgment which he is entitled to recover, but makes effective the judgment by a lien upon the property upon which he has bestowed his labor or material. Therefore, when the Supreme Court says that the contract is not void as between the parties (because not recorded), we understand that the contract is valid except as to lien claimants establishing their rights under the law, and that the end and purpose of the law and of the provision of section 1183 "that they shall be wholly void" is accomplished by a construction which adds the words, "as to all valid lien-claimants," and thereby prevents the lien provided for laborers and materialmen from being defeated by any act or omission upon the part of the owner or contractor. The right of the contractor to a lien is removed from consideration by the failure to record the contract, but this does not change the basis, measure, or test of recovery of the contractor from the owner. There being no lien to foreclose, the parties are relegated to their legal rights. To say that the contract is the "measure of recovery" and the "test of the right to recover" is to say that we must look to the contract to determine the substantial rights of the parties. This being true, then the recovery must be in an action "brought on the contract" (Camp v. Behlow, 2 Cal. App. 699, 84 Pac. 251), and the contract becomes the "basis of recovery." The law having provided for the payment out of the owner's property of all valid liens established against it, of course, these become credits which the owner is entitled to set up, as he may any defense pleadable in an ordinary action on a contract. Such being the effect of the cases as we read them, we have, in response to a suggestion in the petition for a rehearing that there is an uncertainty in our declaration of the law, restated it so that there can be no misunderstanding of our views on this point.

Petition for rehearing denied.

8 Cal. App. 514

LOS ANGELES PRESSED BRICK CO. v. HIGGINS et al. (L. A. 2,061.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 7, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — ENFORCEMENT — ACTION TO ENFORCE — PERSONAL LIABILITY — REASONABLE VALUE OF WORK — NECESSITY OF FINDINGS.

A contractor cannot recover in an action on a contract not filed and recorded as required by the mechanics' lien law, unless there is a finding under the allegation and proof of the reasonable value of the work done.

2. PLEADING — ANSWER — FAILURE TO DENY — ADMISSIONS — REASONABLE VALUE OF MATERIALS.

Where the contractors' complaint in a consolidated action by contractors, materialmen, etc., against the owner to enforce mechanics' liens alleged that the contracts were recorded, and the answer not only failed to deny this allegation, but averred that they were duly recorded, that fact was established by the pleadings, and no findings of the value of materials, etc., was necessary, as between the contractor and owner, and a finding that the contract was not recorded did not destroy the effect of the admissions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 270-275.]

3. ACTION — CONSOLIDATION — EFFECT.

The consolidation, for the purpose of trial, of actions by contractors, materialmen, etc., against the owner to enforce a mechanic's lien, did not change the issues in the respective cases, or render ineffectual admissions in the pleadings between the contractors and owner that the contracts were recorded, and the finding of the trial court to the contrary would apply only to the other actions.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Consolidated action by the Los Angeles Pressed Brick Company against Thomas Higgins and others to foreclose a mechanic's lien. From a judgment for plaintiff, one defendant appealed. Affirmed.

R. L. Horton and J. Wiseman MacDonald, for appellant. Chas. L. Batcheller, Percy B. Lhoyd, Scarborough & Bowen, W. D. McConnell, Munson & Barclay, Jones & Weller, Hutton & Williams, and T. C. Ridgeway, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The refusal of this court to order this cause transferred to this court for rehearing must not be understood as an approval of the remarks in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, to the effect that a finding as to the reasonable value of the work done on the building was unnecessary to support the judgment in favor of the original contractor against Higgins, the owner, and that he could recover on an unrecorded contract. That judgment was fully supported without such finding, because such finding was unnecessary under the issues presented by the answer of the owner to the complaint of the contractor. That complaint alleged that the contracts were each duly recorded. The answer of the owner thereto not only failed to deny this allegation and therefore admitted its truth for all the purposes of the case, as between those parties, but it also affirmatively averred that they were duly recorded. So far as these parties were concerned, that fact was established, and no finding on the subject was necessary. The finding that the contract, or one of them, was not recorded, was addressed to the issues arising between the other parties, and it could not destroy the effect of the admission to the contrary to support the judgment between the owner and the original contractor. The consolidation for the purpose of trial, of all the cases, did not change the issues in the respective cases, nor render the admissions of the pleadings ineffectual when applied to the particular cases in which they were made. It is unnecessary to express any opinion with regard to the right of the original contractor to recover on his contract notwithstanding the fact that the contract may not have been, in fact, recorded.

KORNBLUM v. ARTHURS et al. (L. A. 2,066.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 2, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — RESCISSION OF CONTRACT — LACHES.

Where plaintiff purchased property for speculative purposes, held, advertised, and offered it for sale at a price above that which he was to pay for it, during a time when the real estate market was feverishly active and he might reasonably expect a sale at an increased price, and after the market suffered a partial collapse and became somewhat stagnant attempted to rescind the contract of purchase because of an alleged misrepresentation made in connection therewith, though he had full knowledge of the facts months before, he was precluded by his laches.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 212, 213.]

2. SAME — CONTRACT TO PURCHASE — FORECLOSURE OF PURCHASER'S RIGHTS — ALLOWANCE OF TIME TO PAY AMOUNT DUE.

Upon a foreclosure of the rights of a contract purchaser of land, it is consonant with equity to allow the purchaser 10 days' time in which to preserve his rights in the property upon payment of the moneys provided in his contract.

3. SAME.

Where the purchaser in a contract for the sale of land had been allowed extensions of time for the making of payments, and had been guilty of laches in bringing an action to rescind the contract, in which a foreclosure of his interest was decreed, a 10-day period in which to preserve his rights to the property by paying the amount due under the contract was not an unjustly short limit of time.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by M. S. Kornblum against Mary

M. Arthurs and another. From an order and a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goldberg & Melly, for appellant. Tanner, Taft & Odell, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to rescind a contract for the purchase of real estate and to recover the portion of the purchase price which he had paid, upon the ground that he was induced to enter into the contract by the false and fraudulent representations made by the vendor. Lot 23 in "Venice of America Tract," which is the subject-matter of this controversy, is one of a series of 12 lots, identical in size, constituting the southwesterly portion of block 2, a business block of the town. The fraudulent representation relied on as the basis for rescission was the alleged statement to plaintiff by defendant Arthurs and her agent that all of these other lots, excepting lot 23, were incumbered by a building restriction which compelled purchasers to begin the erection of buildings thereon within 60 days from the date of purchase, but that lot 23 was free from such building restriction and time limit. The contract made by the agent of said defendant with the plaintiff contained the following: "It is understood that restrictions on this lot place no limit on time bldg. must be completed; otherwise, no sale." The written contract between the parties thus contained no representation as to the status of the other lots, and the representation actually made as to lot 23 was true. It was equally true, however, of the other lots of the block.

Upon conflicting evidence the court found that the representation alleged had not been made. It found, moreover, that extensions of time had been granted to plaintiff at his request for the making of payments on the purchase price of the lot, and that during this time plaintiff advertised the lot for sale at a price greater than that for which he had engaged to purchase it; that the lot was worth at the time of sale, and at the time of the commencement of suit, the amount which the plaintiff had contracted to pay for it; that plaintiff at the time of entering into the contract had every opportunity to inquire into the condition of the title of the other lots in the block, and in fact did make inquiries concerning the same, and that, even if he did not know the fact before, in August he became fully aware of the condition of the title of the other 11 lots; that, notwithstanding this knowledge, he did not claim rescission or offer to rescind until November 1, 1905, the date upon which, under the extension of time which he had asked for and obtained, an additional payment had become due. As has been said, the court found against the alleged fraudulent representation upon sharply conflicting testimony.

Appellant offered to prove that defendants had made the same representations to another agent in placing the property in that agent's hands for sale, and the testimony was refused admission. It may be assumed that this should have been received in evidence, on the ground that, where fraud in the purchase and sale of property is in issue; evidence of other frauds or fraudulent representations of like character committed by the same parties at or near the same time is admissible. Bancroft v. Heringhi, 54 Cal. 120; Kelley v. Owens (Cal.) 30 Pac. 596; Lincoln v. Clafin, 7 Wall. 138, 19 L. Ed. 106; Cary v. Hotailing, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 311, 37 Am. Dec. 323.

But to this and other alleged errors, not necessary here to consider, the sufficient answer is made by respondents that they are one and all, immaterial in this case under the finding of laches, which the court, upon sufficient evidence, declared the plaintiff to be guilty of. The circumstances as found by the court are that the property was purchased by plaintiff for speculative purposes; that he held it, advertised it, and offered it for sale at a price above that which he was to pay for it, during a time when the real estate market was feverishly active and the plaintiff might reasonably expect a sale of the property at this increased price; and that only after the market suffered a partial collapse, and became somewhat stagnant, did the plaintiff make any complaint or effort to rescind, though he possessed full knowledge of all the facts months before. All these matters, as found by the court, justify its refusal upon the ground of laches to award the plaintiff any relief.

The court decreed a foreclosure of plaintiff's interest, allowing him, however, 10 days in which to preserve his rights to the property upon payment of the moneys provided in his contract. This was in consonance with equity. Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 113. Nor can it be said that the 10 days was an unjustly short limit of time, considering the extensions of time and indulgences which had been shown to the plaintiff, and his laches in commencing the action which he finally brought.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

We concur: LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.

DONNELLY v. TREGASKIS. (Sac. 1,632.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 4, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 2, 1908.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE — PROPERTY — HOMESTEAD.

Plaintiff and his wife being in possession of land under a contract of purchase, which was afterwards completed, she recorded a declaration of homestead on the property. Later he deeded to her his interest for a money consideration and removed to another state, and she procured a divorce; the decree awarding her the property. Held that, if the declaration of homestead was invalid, so that the property did not become a homestead, plaintiff's deed divested him of all title, regardless of the court's award in the divorce suit.

2. HOMESTEAD—DECLARATION — DESCRIPTION — ESSENTIALS.

Under Civ. Code, § 1263, requiring a declaration of homestead to describe the premises, the description must be such as will serve to identify the property, and a description locating land by reference to a map made by a specified surveyor is insufficient, in the absence of the production and identification of the map.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Homestead, § 61.]

3. ADVERSE POSSESSION — POSSESSION UNDER DEED.

Defendant having taken possession of land under a recorded deed from a divorced wife, who had legal title and power to convey, subject to the homestead, the deed afforded defendant more than color of title, and she acquired title as against the husband by adverse possession maintained for the statutory time and under statutory conditions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Adverse Possession, §§ 415-429.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; L. G. Harrier, Judge.

Action to quiet title by James Donnelly against Elizabeth J. Tregaskis. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See 94 Pac. 383.

Paul C. Harlan, for appellant. Frank R. Devlin, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to a lot of land in the city of Vallejo. Upon January 7, 1869, plaintiff and his wife were living upon the property in question under a contract of purchase, and subsequently the purchase was completed. Upon that date the wife executed a declaration of homestead upon the property, which was recorded upon the 11th day of the same month. Differences arose between plaintiff and his wife, and in 1891 he executed a deed to her of all his interest in the property; she paying him a money consideration therefor. He left California and took up his residence in the city of New York. Subsequently his wife instituted an action for divorce, and service of summons upon the husband was obtained by publication. She secured her divorce upon September 20, 1897. The affidavit of service by publication declared that the defendant (this plaintiff) resided at No. 695 First avenue, New York City, state of New York. The return of service showed that a copy of the summons, attached to a true copy of the complaint, had been deposited in the post office, directed to "James Donnelly, the said defendant, at No. 695 Fifth avenue, New York City, New York." In the decree awarding Mrs. Donnelly her divorce, the property here in controversy was set apart to her. On the 5th day of October, 1897, Mrs. Donnelly executed to this defendant a deed to the property, receiving therefor its full monetary value. Mrs. Tregaskis has remained in possession of the property ever since, claiming it against the world; her possession being undisputed until this action was commenced November 22, 1905. Appellant bases his claim to the property upon his construction of the provisions of section 1474, Code of Civil Procedure, and section 4 of the homestead act (St. 1860, p. 312, c. 320), as amended in 1862 (St. 1862, p. 519, c. 396), the provisions of which laws he contends give him, as the survivor of the marital community, the absolute title to the homestead. In this connection he argues that the decree of divorce was void for insufficiency of proof of service appearing upon the face of the judgment roll as above noted; that the homestead character impressed upon the land was not destroyed, and could not be destroyed, excepting by joint act of the parties; and that it remained in full force and effect, notwithstanding his deed to his wife and her deed to this defendant.

All of this presupposes the recordation of a valid declaration of homestead. If, however, the declaration of homestead was invalid, so that the property did not become a homestead, then, indisputably, appellant's deed to his wife divested him of all title to the property, regardless of the court's award to her of the property in the divorce proceeding. The declaration of homestead made by the wife recited as to description that she resided with her family "on the lot of land and premises situate, lying and being in the city of Vallejo, county of Solano, state of California, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Being lot No. 14, in block No. 266, according to the map of said Vallejo made by C. W. Rowe, surveyor." A description of the premises is required by the Code as an essential to a valid declaration of homestead. Civ. Code, § 1263; Jones v. Gunn, 149 Cal. 687, 87 Pac. 578. A description of the premises necessarily means such description as will serve to identify the property. To uphold homesteads, which are favored by the law, great liberality in this respect will be allowed; but the rule nevertheless obtains in full force that the description must be sufficient, so that the property may be identified in some legitimate manner. Here the sole description of the property is that it is a numbered lot in a numbered block in the city of Vallejo, which numbered lot and block are located solely by reference to "a map of said Vallejo made by C. W. Rowe, surveyor." No such map was produced in evidence, and the negative was shown by the defense to the effect that no such map was of record. In the absence of the production and identification of the map, it would be impossible for any person to locate the premises sought to be described. It differs essentially in this respect from the description considered by this court in the Matter of the Estate of Caroline Ogburn, 105 Cal. 95, 38 Pac. 498. There the location of the land was fixed as "being the western part of lot No. 5 of said village, as laid out by F. S. Freeman's division of said village, the same being 37 feet front on Main street of said village, and extending back with parallel lines 190 feet deep, it being a part of the southeast quarter of section 21, in township No. 10, of range 2 east." There, besides the reference to the map, the size of the lot is given, its location upon Main street fixed, and its situs as a part of a government subdivision set forth with particularity. In this discussion we do not mean to be understood as holding that to make a sufficient description a deed must refer to a map actually of record. We do mean, however, to declare the unquestioned rule that where a description is dependent for its sufficiency upon some other instrument, such as a map, the map, properly identified, must be produced, or in some manner established, or the description must fail. So it is said in Caldwell v. Center, 30 Cal. 540, 89 Am. Dec. 131: "Although the parties to a deed may describe the property therein conveyed by a reference therein to another deed or map which contains a description, yet the deed and the instrument referred to, when taken together, must be as certain in respect to the description as a description contained in the deed itself." So in Cadwalder v. Nash, 73 Cal. 45, 14 Pac. 385, it is said: "The deed and the map or instrument, however, when taken together, must be as certain in respect to the description as a description contained in the deed itself, and the identity of the map referred to, must be clearly established."

But upon another consideration, equally beyond question, the judgment of the trial court was sound. The defendant pleaded title by adverse possession and the statute of limitations. These pleas were abundantly supported by evidence. As against them, appellant argues that, the decree of divorce being void, the wife's possession was his possession, and that the wife's deed to this defendant, under which she entered, being based upon a void decree, would not serve to initiate an adverse possession under section 323, Code of Civil Procedure. But this defendant founded her claim upon a written instrument—a deed—and took possession of the property under this instrument; the wife at the time indisputably having legal title to the property and (assuming a valid homestead) having power to convey this legal title, subject to the homestead. There can be no doubt that such a deed afforded more even than color of title. The deed was immediately recorded, and possession was taken under it. That possession so taken under such a deed, maintained for the statutory time and under statutory conditions, can ripen into a title by adverse possession may not be questioned, and, indeed, has been decided in McCormack v. Silsby, 82 Cal. 72, 22 Pac. 874, where it is adjudicated that adverse possession for the requisite time and character will extinguish a homestead.

For which reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

154 Cal. 249

BURNETT et al. v. GLAS et al. (Sac. 1,485.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3 and 10, 1908.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS—CONTRACT TO PREVENT LIENS—STATUTORY REQUISITES—"FILING OF THE CONTRACT."

Where a written building contract provides that the building shall be constructed in accordance with plans, drawings, and specifications, referred to as attached or as kept in the office of an architect named therein, such plans, etc., are an essential part of the contract, and must be filed with it, in order to constitute a "filing of the contract," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, which will protect the property from mechanics' liens; and the contract must also provide, as required by section 1184, that "at least 25 per cent. of the whole contract price shall be made payable at least 35 days after the final completion of the contract," otherwise in either case the property will be subject to liens in favor of those doing labor or furnishing materials to the same extent as though there had been no contract and the labor and materials had been furnished at the personal instance and request of the owners.

2. SAME—RIGHT TO LIEN—PERSONS ENTITLED TO LIEN.

The fact that a member of a partnership is surety on the bond of a building contractor conditioned for the delivery of the building to the owner free from liens will not debar the firm of which he is a member of the right to a mechanic's lien on the building for labor or materials furnished, unless it is shown that he signed the bond on behalf of the partnership and with the consent or ratification of his partner.

3. SAME—PRIORITY AS BETWEEN LIEN CLAIMANT AND MORTGAGEE—DATE OF LIEN.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1186, which provides that, where there is no valid contract between the owner and a building contractor, the priority of mechanics' liens is to be determined by the time the work was done "or the materials commenced to be furnished," the time when a materialman commenced delivery fixes his rights as a lien claimant, as between him and a mortgagee, as well as other lien claimants.

4. SAME—FORECLOSURE — SALE — MORTGAGED PROPERTY.

On a foreclosure of mechanics' liens, some of which are paramount to a mortgage and others subject thereto, the decree may properly direct a sale of the property in fee and the application of the proceeds to the payment of all liens in the order of priority, including the mortgage, although it is not due.

5. SAME—INTEREST.

In a decree foreclosing mechanics' liens for labor or materials furnished at an agreed price, the court may properly allow interest prior to judgment; but where the amount due is unliquidated until fixed by the judgment, as where materials were furnished to be paid for at the reasonable market price, interest should not be allowed prior to the judgment.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by J. H. Burnett and others against Frank Glas, Jr., and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Modified and affirmed.

W. H. Larew, for appellants. F. A. Fee, L. L. Cory, and Stanton L. Carter, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by defendants, the owners of a lot of land in the town of Madera, 77½ feet on Yosemite avenue by 150 feet in depth on C street, from a judgment given in several actions for the foreclosure of the liens of certain mechanics and materialmen arising in and about the construction of a building on said land, which actions were consolidated under section 1195, Code of Civil Procedure, and tried as one action. The findings show the material facts to be as follows:

On November 9, 1903, the appellants, as owners, entered into a written contract with one W. J. Sircy, as contractor, for the erection on said land of a one-story and basement brick store building; the contractor agreeing therein "to furnish the necessary labor and materials * * * and perform and complete in a workmanlike manner all the brick work, iron work, plastering, and carpenter work, and other works shown and described in and by and in conformity with the plans, drawings and specifications for the same, made by Julien Mourot, the authorized architect employed by the owner, and are signed by the parties hereto, and are to be kept and remain in the office of said architect, subject to the inspection of the parties hereto and others concerned in said erection." In the contract it was further provided that said building was to be a "one-story and basement brick store building, with corrugated galvanized iron roof, said building to be 77' 6"x80 ft." It was expressly found that the plans, drawings, and specifications mentioned in said contract were a material, important, and necessary part thereof; and this conclusion was manifestly correct. The plans, drawings, and specifications were never filed in the county recorder's office. The remainder of the contract was so filed on November 19, 1903. According to the terms thereof, the consideration of $7,320 was to be paid in five installments of $1,464 each, the fourth installment to be paid when the building was completed and accepted, and the last installment, which was only 20 per cent. of the whole contract price, was to be retained for 35 days after completion. On November 17, 1903, the contractor gave a bond upon said contract, with M. R. Madary and C. J. Craycroft as sureties, by which the sureties guaranteed the performance of said contract and the delivery of the building free of liens. Work was commenced by the contractor in November, 1903, and continued to December 24, 1903, when a further written agreement was entered into by appellant and Sircy, whereby Sircy agreed to construct for $1,318 a second story to said building, the same to be paid when "the story is up ready for the ceiling joists." This writing was never filed in the county recorder's office. The work was continued under these two writings to April 9, 1904, when the building was completed and delivered to and accepted by the appellants. Appellants have paid on account of the contract price $7,387.50, leaving in their hands a balance of $1,250.50.

The various lien claimants, whose liens were allowed by the trial court, furnished to the contractor materials to be, and which were, used in the construction of said building, or performed labor thereon, as follows: J. H. Burnett furnished materials at an agreed price, namely, $300. J. A. Sircy, whose claim was assigned to plaintiff Barrett-Hicks Company, a corporation, performed labor at an agreed price of $3.50 per day, to the extent of $86.70. J. A. Dyer furnished materials under contract with the contractor, for which the contractor agreed to pay "the reasonable market price thereof from time to time as the same were furnished and as the work on said building progressed"; the amount of his allowed claim therefor being $585.45. J. A. Dyer and C. J. Craycroft, copartners under the name and style of J. A. Dyer, furnished the contractor, under contract with him, brick at a fixed price per thousand brick, to be paid for as the same were placed in the building; the balance of their claim, which was allowed, being $717.65. Watkins & Thurman furnished materials "to be paid for at the regular and usual market price in cash upon delivery of the same"; such price being found to be $276.64. The claims of lien of these parties were all filed for record in the office of the county recorder of Madera county within the proper time and were all in proper form. In the claim of Watkins & Thurman, so filed, there was included separately a claim for an amount due them, in addition to the $276.64, for one-half the cost of constructing a party wall; and as to this the court found they should be paid by the other owners of the party wall, and were not entitled to a lien against appellants' property. It, however, found that such claim was made without any wrongful intent, but with an honest belief that they were entitled to a lien for the amount. This finding is not attacked. On November 17, 1903, appellants borrowed from defendant Commercial Bank of Madera the sum of $8,000, and gave their mortgage covering said property to secure payment thereof, with interest at 11 per cent. per annum. This mortgage was duly recorded on the day of its execution. As appears from the mortgage introduced in evidence, the note given for this loan was dated November 19, 1903, and was payable "five years after date." The mortgagee appeared in the actions, and in its answers set up said mortgage, alleged that "no part of the principal sum mentioned * * * has been paid," and that the same, with interest, is wholly unpaid, and is a valid and first lien on said property; but it did not ask foreclosure of its lien. The interest on this note was paid to May 19, 1905. The court found that claimants J. A. Dyer and Dyer & Craycroft both commenced to furnish the materials furnished by them, respectively, on November 13, 1903, a date prior to the attaching of the lien of defendant bank's mortgage. This finding is not attacked. The other liens were confessedly subject to said mortgage. There were claims of lien on behalf of some other parties, which were rejected by the trial court; but these parties have not appealed, and that matter is immaterial here. It was further found that of said land on which the building was constructed, the amount necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the building was 77½ feet on Yosemite avenue by 100 feet in depth on C street. This finding is not attacked.

The trial court concluded upon these facts that the contract between the appellants and Sircy was void for failure to comply with the provisions of sections 1183 and 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, and that under the terms of said sections the labor done and materials furnished by the claimants must be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the appellants, and they were entitled to a lien therefor, regardless of the amount due from appellants to the contractor. It found the amounts due such claimants, allowing interest on all the claims prior to judgment, and also attorney fees. Judgment was given accordingly directing the sale of the portion of the lot found to be necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the building, and the building thereon, and the application of the proceeds as follows, viz.: (1) To the payment of the costs, etc., of sale; (2) to the payment of the amounts due claimants J. A. Dyer and Dyer & Craycroft; (3) to the payment of the amount of the mortgage lien of defendant the Commercial Bank of Madera, being $8,000, with interest from May 19, 1905; (4) to the payment of the amount due on claim of J. A. Sircy (held by plaintiff Barrett-Hicks Company); (5) to the payment of the amounts due on the claims of Watkins & Thurman and J. H. Burnett; (6) any surplus remaining after such payments to be delivered to the appellants. It was further adjudged that the cause of action of Watkins & Thurman for the amount claimed on account of the party wall be dismissed, without prejudice to their right to maintain proper proceedings against the persons liable to collect the amount due thereon.

From this judgment the owners alone appeal.

1. It cannot be doubted, in view of our decisions, that the trial court was justified in its conclusion that by reason of the failure of the parties to the building contract to substantially conform to the requirements of sections 1183 and 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, parties doing labor or furnishing materials must be deemed to have done and furnished the same at the personal instance and request of the owners, and were entitled to a lien for the value thereof. The plans, drawings, and specifications must be held to have constituted an essential part of the written building contract. Where this is so, it is firmly established by our decisions that they must be filed in the county recorder's office with the contract, in order to constitute a filing of the contract under section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure. This is true, even though the contract itself does not refer to them as being annexed, but refers to them, as in the case at bar, as being kept in the architect's office, or in some other place. See Pierce v. Birkholm, 115 Cal. 657, 47 Pac. 681; Holland v. Wilson, 76 Cal. 434, 18 Pac. 412; S. F. L. Co. v. O'Neill, 120 Cal. 455, 52 Pac. 728; West Coast L. Co. v. Knapp, 122 Cal. 79, 54 Pac. 533; Wood v. O. & B. Transit Co., 107 Cal. 500, 40 Pac. 806; Dunlop v. Kennedy, 102 Cal. 443, 36 Pac. 765; Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 233, 29 Pac. 629. Where there is a failure to comply with the requirement as to filing, the section in terms provides that the contract "shall be wholly void," and that "the labor done and materials furnished by all persons, except the contractor, shall be deemed to have been done and furnished at the personal instance of the owner, and they shall have a lien for the value thereof." This penalty has been uniformly enforced by the courts, and there can now be no question as to the validity of the provision. The statute now permits a memorandum of the contract containing certain matters to be filed in lieu of the contract; but it is not claimed or pretended that any memorandum was filed or attempted to be filed. The case of Joost v. Sullivan, 111 Cal. 294, 43 Pac. 896, relied on by appellants, was a case where a memorandum was filed, and this memorandum contained no reference to any plans and specifications, and did not even disclose the fact that there were plans and specifications. It did comply with the requirements of section 1183, Code of Civil Procedure, as to such a memorandum, and was held sufficient. In the case of Willamette, etc., v. College Co., 94 Cal. 234, 29 Pac. 629, speaking of the amendment allowing the filing of a memorandum in lieu of the contract, the court says: "After this amendment was made, the owner or the contractor could satisfy the statute by filing either the contract or such memorandum; but, if he filed the contract, he must still file the whole of it, including the drawings and specifications, if they were made a part thereof, while, if he preferred to file the memorandum, such memorandum must contain all the matters which are prescribed in the statute as the equivalent of the contract."

There was also a substantial departure from the provisions of section 1184, Code of Civil Procedure, which requires that "the contract price shall, by the terms of the contract, be made payable in installments at specified times; * * * provided that at least twenty-five per cent. of the whole contract price shall be made payable at least thirty-five days after the final completion of the contract." Here, as has been seen, under the terms of the contract, only 20 per cent. of the original contract price was to be so retained. It has always been recognized by this court, in line with the express declaration of the section, that where there is a substantial departure in the contract from the provisions as to the times of payment and the reservation of at least 25 per cent. of the contract price for at least 35 days after the completion of the building, the property is subject to liens in favor of those doing labor or furnishing materials to the same extent that it would have been had there been no contract, and the labor and materials had been furnished at the personal instance and request of the owners. See Willamette, etc., Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 235, 29 Pac. 629; Yancy v. Martin, 94 Cal. 561, 29 Pac. 1111; San Diego L. Co. v. Wool-dredge, 90 Cal. 574, 27 Pac. 431; Brill v. De Turk, 130 Cal. 241, 62 Pac. 462. In the recent case of Merced Lumber Co. v. Bruschi, 92 Pac. 844, this matter was considered at length, and the rule of the section applied in a case where by the terms of the contract no part of the contract price was to be retained after the completion of the work.

2. It is contended that claimants Dyer & Craycroft, as copartners, were not entitled to a lien by reason of the fact that C. J. Craycroft, one of said partners, was a surety on the bond given by the contractor to the owners, as hereinbefore noted. This fact was alleged by way of defense in the answer of appellants to the complaint of Dyer & Craycroft, as copartners, with the further allegation that said Craycroft was indebted to appellants on said bond in the sum of $2,000; but there was no allegation tending to show that Craycroft, in executing said bond, acted other than in his individual capacity, or on account of said partnership, or with the knowledge or assent of his copartner, Dyer. In the absence of any evidence on the subject, other than the bond itself, which is the condition appellants claim is shown by the record, the trial court was warranted in concluding that Craycroft became a surety on said bond in his individual capacity, and not on account of said copartnership, and without any relation thereto or connection therewith. It has been held that a surety on a building contractor's bond who has guaranteed the delivery of the building free of liens cannot enforce a lien against the building (see Ganahl v. Weir, 130 Cal. 237, 62 Pac. 512; Blyth v. Robinson, 104 Cal. 239, 37 Pac. 904; Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, § 753); but we do not understand that the partnership firm of which such a surety may be a partner is necessarily barred from a lien for materials furnished by it, especially where the surety does not assume to act in his capacity as a member of the firm. "If a partner does an act for a purpose which is apparently not connected with the firm's ordinary course of business, he is not acting in pursuance of any apparent authority, and the firm will not be bound unless such partner in fact had authority, or unless his unauthorized act, so performed is subsequently ratified. * * * The burden of proving such authority is on the creditor." 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 114. See, also, 1 Bates on Law of Partnership, §§ 452 to 454 and 349 and 350; Parsons on Partnership, §§ 83 and 144. We are of the opinion that the record discloses no reason why the firm is barred from its right of lien by reason of Craycroft's presence on the bond as a surety. The remedy of appellants against Craycroft for any breach of the bond is to be found elsewhere.

3. It is contended by appellants that the liens of claimants J. A. Dyer and Dyer & Craycroft should not have been held to be paramount to the mortgage of the bank. Assuming that appellants have some interest in this matter, it is clear on the record that the contention is not well founded. The findings showing that the materials furnished by these claimants under contract with the contractor were commenced to be furnished several days prior to the giving of the mortgage are not attacked. Under section 1186 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in cases where there is no valid contract between the owner and the contractor, the priority of the liens is to be determined "by the time the work was done, or the materials commenced to be furnished." McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 144, 61 Pac. 273, 63 Pac. 182, 622.

4. A question, new in this state, is presented by the fact that the decree requires the payment from the proceeds of the sale of a debt of appellants secured by mortgage on the premises, although the note evidencing such indebtedness is not yet due and payable. As already noted, the mortgagee has not appealed, and we are therefore not concerned with any question as to a violation of its right under the note and mortgage. The appellants claim their rights are violated by such a course. It is apparent that, under the circumstances of this case, it was essential to the protection of the respective rights of the various lienors, including the mortgagee, that the property should be sold for the purpose of paying all liens existing thereon. If all the mechanics' liens had been paramount to the mortgage, or if all had been subject thereto, the case would have been very different, and appellants might well have insisted that no provision be made in the decree for the payment of the mortgage. In the first case, the mortgagee would have to redeem from the lien sale to preserve its claim, and in the second case the property would be sold subject to the mortgage. But here we have certain liens which have priority over the mortgage, and certain others which are subject thereto, and all the claimants are entitled under the statute to a judgment for the sale of the entire building with so much land as is necessary for its convenient use, that the proceeds may be applied so far as applicable to the payment of their respective liens. Learned counsel for appellants has not pointed out any practicable way, other than that adopted by the trial court, by which this could be accomplished. There must be a sale under such terms as to preserve the relative rights of all the parties to the action having liens on the property. This, we think, our statute clearly contemplates; and if, in order to accomplish this, it is absolutely necessary to pay certain debts not yet due which constitute liens on the property, we entertain no doubt as to the power of the court to make such provision in such a manner as may be equitable. In such a case the debtor and mortgage creditor must be deemed to have acted subject to the contingency that such a disposition may be necessary, and the debt, therefore, required to be paid from the proceeds of the sale of the property before it becomes due; their being a rebate of interest allowed, whenever such a rebate is proper. The case is somewhat similar to that of the foreclosure of a mortgage payable in installments which are not all due, and the court is authorized, where the property cannot be sold in portions without injury to the parties, to order the whole of it sold in the first instance, and the entire debt and costs paid, with rebate of interest where proper. Code Civ. Proc. § 728. In Boisot on Mechanics' Liens, § 663, it is declared that where some liens are superior to a mortgage, and also to other liens, and the rest are inferior to the mortgage, the decree should provide that prior claimants should be paid as if there were no mortgage, and the residue applied, first to the mortgage, and then to the inferior liens, citing Choteau v. Thompson, 2 Ohio St. 114. That was exactly the procedure here. In Croskey v. N. W. Mfg. Co., 48 Ill. 481, it was held that in a suit to enforce mechanics' liens the decree might direct a sale of the premises in fee, though a mortgage thereon is not then due, and the application of the proceeds to the liens and mortgage according to their respective rights of priority. See, also, North Pres. Church v. Jevne, 32 Ill. 214, 83 Am. Dec. 261; Grundeis v. Hartwell, 90 Ill. 324; Craig v. Herzman, 9 N. D. 140, 81 N. W. 288; Kohler v. Carruthers, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 216, 223.

5. There was nothing prejudicial to appellants in the dismissal of the claim of Watkins & Thurman as to the amount due on account of the party wall, without prejudice to their rights to maintain proper proceedings against the parties personally liable therefor.

6. In both their opening and closing briefs appellants concede the rights of all the lien claimants, except J. A. Dyer and Watkins & Thurman, to the interest allowed by the trial court, if their liens should be sustained. This concession was warranted by the authorities; it being settled that, where the amount is so fixed by agreement that it may be made certain by calculation, interest may be allowed prior to judgment. Hines v. Miller, 126 Cal. 683, 59 Pac. 142; Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 9, 58 Pac. 312, and cases there cited. The claims of all except J. A. Dyer and Watkins & Thurman were of this character. In Pacific Mutual, etc., Co. v. Fisher, 106 Cal. 233, 39 Pac. 758, it was said, in holding the claimants entitled to interest under such circumstances, that the lien which the statute gives is as extensive as the claim which it is intended to protect. This construction of our statute does not render it unconstitutional, as is suggested for the first time in the petition filed herein for a rehearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal.

7. We are of the opinion that the claim of appellants that claimants Dyer and Watkins & Thurman were not entitled to interest prior to judgment is well founded. As to each of these claims, the amount due was unliquidated and not capable of being made certain by calculation until fixed by the judgment. The rule applied to such claims in Macomber v. Bigelow, 126 Cal. 9, 58 Pac. 312, namely, that interest prior to judgment cannot be allowed, was applicable. See, also, Stimson v. Dunham, etc., 146 Cal. 285, 79 Pac. 968. The judgment must be modified in this respect.

8. The learned judge of the trial court, acting in accord with what was the universal practice up to the time he gave judgment herein, allowed each of the claimants an attorney fee. Since the judgment this court has held section 1195, Code of Civ. Proc. which purports to authorize such allowance, to be unconstitutional. Builders' Supply Co. v. O'Connor, 150 Cal. 265, 88 Pac. 982, 119 Am. St. Rep. 193. The judgment must also be modified in this respect.

We have now considered all the points made by appellants which require consideration. Some findings that are immaterial are attacked; but, so far as the findings are material under our view of the case, they are either not attacked at all, or are fully sustained by the admissions of the pleadings or by the evidence.

It is ordered that the judgment be modified, by deducting and striking therefrom the allowance in favor of J. A. Dyer of $61.47 interest, and the allowance in favor of Watkins & Thurman of $29.04 interest, and also by deducting and striking therefrom each and all of the allowances made for attorney fees to the various claimants, and that, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed. Appellants shall not recover any costs of appeal as against respondents Dyer & Craycroft, as copartners, Barrett-Hicks Company, or J. H. Burnett.

GARVEY WATER CO. v. HUNTINGTON LAND & IMPROVEMENT CO.

(L. A. 2,049.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 31, 1908.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES—WATER CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION—"DEVELOPMENT WORK."

Defendant granted to plaintiff the full, uninterrupted, and perpetual flow of 30 inches of water from the former's ranch, but did not warrant a flow of that quantity; but the contract provided that the defendants would not by any act diminish the flow, but stated that they intended to continue developing the flow, and reserved the privilege of doing so by boring, driving tunnels, and such other means as were necessary, and that if the water thereafter decreased because of any unforeseen agency, so as to be insufficient to supply the 30 inches, defendant would do any further work towards restoring the flow which any competent engineer selected by plaintiff should direct, the expense of such work by developing to be advanced by plaintiff. The flow of water subsequently decreased below 30 inches, but there was more than sufficient water under the surface to supply that quantity, and plaintiff selected an engineer, who reported that it was necessary to install a pumping plant in one of the wells to restore the flow. Held that, even if the means of restoring the water must be of the same general character as "boring wells or driving tunnels," which defendant reserved the privilege to do, the use of pumps as recommended by the engineer was "development work" within the contract and a proper means of restoring the flow, and the fact that pumps had never been used on the ranch or in the county for that purpose was immaterial.

2. WORDS AND PHRASES—"TUNNELS"—"WELLS."

"Tunnels" are practically horizontal wells, differing from ordinary "wells" only in that the waters from the former find their way to the surface by gravity, while in the latter pumping must be resorted to to bring the water to the surface; both disturbing the natural flow of the subterranean waters, and both being artificial means of reaching and controlling the natural subterranean flow to develop water power.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the Garvey Water Company against the Huntington Land & Improvement Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bicknell, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher and Edward E. Bacon, for appellant. Hut-ton & Williams, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff to enforce a right to 30 inches of water under a contract made with the predecessors of defendant. Judgment went for plaintiff, and this appeal is taken by defendant from the judgment on the judgment roll.

The facts found were that on February 29, 1892, J. De Barth Shorb and his wife, owners of the Shorb ranch, in Los Angeles county, and predecessors in interest of the defendant, entered into a contract with one Richard Garvey, to whose interest plaintiff succeeded, relative to certain waters on the ranch. The contract, which applies to the heirs and assigns of both parties, is quite lengthy, and its provisions, as far as they relate to the present proceedings, were that in consideration of $25,000 the Shorbs granted to Garvey the right to the full, uninterrupted, and perpetual flow of 30 inches of water, miner's measurement, under a 4-inch pressure (each inch of water to be a flow of one-fiftieth of a cubic foot of water per second), said water to be taken entirely from the Shorb ranch, and the right thereto to be the first or prior right to any waters now or hereafter to be developed or flowing upon or from the said lands, subject only to the right to 1 inch of water theretofore granted for the cemetery at San Gabriel. It was mutually covenanted and agreed that the Shorbs did not warrant the continued flow of said 30 inches of water from said lands, although they did covenant and agree that water was then there, and that they would do no act or deed which would diminish its flow, but, on the other hand, declared that it was their intention to continue developing the flow of water therefrom (and they reserved the privilege of so doing by boring wells, driving tunnels, and such other means as engineering skill shall suggest); it being understood that the right of the party of the second part to have and take the 30 inches of water hereinbefore sold to him is (subject to the flow of 1 inch sold to the cemetery) the first or prior right to any waters now or hereafter developed on, flowing upon, or from the said lands. It was further covenanted and agreed by the Shorbs that in case the flow of water then or thereafter developed by them upon the lands described should be decreased by any act of Providence, or from any unforeseen or uncontrollable causes or agencies, to such an extent that Garvey would not or should not receive the quantity of water to which he might at that time be entitled, then the Shorbs would, at the expense of Garvey, do and perform such further work towards restoring the flow of water from said land as any competent engineer that Garvey might select should direct to be done, the money necessary to carry on such work of development to be advanced by Garvey from time to time as such work progressed; it being always understood that the Shorbs were to do all such work of further development, and the party of the second part was to pay therefor in the manner before indicated in the contract. It was further covenanted and agreed that all of the waters in said instrument alluded to were waters either then arising upon, or already developed or to be hereafter developed upon, said tract of land, and that nothing therein contained should be construed to be a limitation upon the rights of the Shorbs to carry water from any other lands they might own to a reservoir situated on the said Shorb ranch and store waters therein, and that all waters so carried from those lands should not be deemed a portion of the waters granted to Garvey.

When this contract was entered into the Shorb ranch consisted of about 500 acres, and at that time there was some 80 inches of water, miner's measure, flowing from natural springs and cienegas, and from artesian wells, on the portion thereof (about one-third of the whole) which the contract described, and from which land the 30 inches of water were to be taken. For about eight years after the making of this contract there were on the Shorb ranch five wells, located on a slope above the measuring box of plaintiff, from which, at different periods during that time, the 30 inches of water called for were supplied. Originally the supply was furnished from two wells, but at the expiration of about a year, these failing to furnish the requisite amount, connections were successively made with the other wells in order to secure it. This water was supplied to the measuring box of plaintiff by gravity flow through tunnels and pipes from 8 to 21 feet below the surface of the ground connecting with the wells. No pumping was used on the ranch for supplying water at the time said contract was made, nor till some years thereafter was water raised by pumps or pumping for irrigation in said county. A drouth had prevailed in Southern California from 1895-96 to 1899-1900, which caused the flow from springs, cienegas, and artesian wells on the Shorb ranch, and elsewhere in Los Angeles county, to materially decrease, and in some instances to cease to flow. During January, 1900, the plaintiff, who had succeeded to the interest of Garvey under the contract, could obtain its supply of water from but three of the wells referred to. At that date the supply of water from all sources on the whole of the Shorb ranch had so far diminished that there was no water flowing for use on the ranch, after deducting the 30 inches of water supplied under the Garvey contract, and, in order to obtain water for irrigating the Shorb ranch itself, George S. Patten, the receiver of the Shorb ranch, pending foreclosure proceedings, temporarily installed and connected with the three wells from which water was being obtained by plaintiff an air compressor plant, which continued to supply the amount required by plaintiff, and the surplus obtained thereby was used on the Shorb ranch. This compressor was used for about two years and abandoned, whereupon it was discovered that the flow of water in said wells had so decreased that the plaintiff did not receive any more water than one-half the amount to which it was entitled. At the time the compressor was abandoned the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Los Angeles had become the purchaser of the Shorb ranch under foreclosure proceedings, and on September 15, 1902, the plaintiff complained to said bank that it was not receiving its 30 inches of water, and contended that it had a right to place a pump in one or more of the wells upon the ranch under the terms of its contract, and by means of said pump to develop and take 30 inches of water. The bank denied the right of plaintiff to develop or take any water from said wells, except by the natural flow from said wells passing through tunnels which had theretofore been driven. However, the plaintiff and said bank entered into an agreement by which the plaintiff was allowed at its own expense to install a pumping plant temporarily in any or all of the wells on said lands. This agreement by its terms was terminable by either party on notice after one year from its date, and it was expressly stipulated that it should not affect the question between the parties as to their respective rights under the original contract between the Shorbs and Garvey. Under this agreement a pump was inserted in one of the wells on the Shorb ranch, and by means thereof plaintiff received, and continued to receive, its full 30 inches of water.

Thereafter defendant became the owner of said Shorb ranch by purchase from said bank, and a similar contract was entered into between it and the plaintiff relative to the use of said pump; but about the 21st of April, 1905, defendant notified plaintiff (as the agreement between them provided might be done) that it would no longer permit said pump to remain in said well, and demanded that it be taken out. Upon receipt of this notice and demand the plaintiff, by an order of its board of directors, and claiming the right to do so under a provision of the contract between the Shorbs and Garvey, selected Gervaise Purcell, an engineer, and directed him as such engineer to ascertain and report what further work upon the Shorb ranch was necessary in order to restore the flow of water to which plaintiff was entitled, and the amount of money necessary to carry on any work of development to attain that end. Purcell made an examination for the purpose desired, and reported that it was necessary to install a pumping plant of sufficient power and capacity to raise from one of said wells the amount called for in the contract. The report specified the character of engine and pump and the depth to which it should be submerged in the well in order to insure the delivery of said 30 inches of water. Upon receiving the said report, the plaintiff notified defendant of its selection of said Purcell as its engineer, accompanying the notice with a copy of the report of Purcell and a demand on defendant that it should do the work towards restoring said flow of water as was directed in the report of said engineer, with an offer on the part of plaintiff to advance the money necessary to carry on such work of development from time to time as the work progressed. Defendant refused to comply with this demand, and denied the right of plaintiff to develop or restore by means of any pump any portion of said 30 inches of water. There is flowing under the surface of the land on the Shorb ranch much more water than is sufficient to supply plaintiff with its 30 inches of water; and the only method or way by which water can be developed from said Shorb ranch, so that plaintiff can receive its said water, was by means of a pump placed in a well, or wells, in the manner stated in the report of said Engineer Purcell. Upon the said refusal of defendant to comply with its demand, plaintiff immediately commenced this action to have it decreed that under the terms of the contract it was entitled to have the flow of 30 inches of water restored to it in the manner indicated in the report of said Purcell by means of a pump placed in one or more of the wells on said Shorb ranch.

The court found the above facts and entered its decree in harmony with the relief asked by plaintiff. It decreed that the plaintiff was entitled to have said flow of water restored to it from the said Shorb ranch by means of a pump placed in one or more of said wells thereon, in the manner indicated in the report of Gervaise Purcell, and directed that, upon the furnishing and supplying of the money required to carry on the work necessary to develop and restore said flow of water from the Shorb ranch as the work progressed, the defendant do and perform such work necessary for such purpose as directed in the report of said Purcell. It was further decreed that at the present time and under present conditions, and until it should become necessary for the plaintiff under the terms of its contract to change the location of the pumping plant, the plaintiff was entitled to use for its pumping plant to obtain its 30 inches of water that certain described portion of the Shorb ranch, upon which at the commencement of the action, and at the time of the decree, there was a house in which was installed the pump and other necessary machinery constituting the pumping plant, at and surrounding a well mentioned in the report of said Gervaise Purcell heretofore referred to. The only question on this appeal is relative to the proper construction to be placed on the contract between the Shorbs and Garvey of February 29, 1902. Does that contract give to plaintiff, as successor in interest of Garvey, the right to obtain the 30 inches of water called for therein, by means of pumping, or is it entitled to take only such waters as naturally flow from the land, or may be caused to do so by means of the boring of wells or driving of tunnels?

It is insisted by the appellant that this latter is the construction which should have been given to the contract, and that the trial court erred in construing it as conferring a right to obtain such water by means of pumping. It is unnecessary to discuss to any extent the various provisions of the contract which we have referred to. It is true, as contended by appellant, that the contract does not expressly provide that the Shorbs will supply to Garvey and his assignees 30 inches of water; nor do they warrant a continued flow from the Shorb ranch of water in that amount. They do, however, grant a full, uninterrupted, and perpetual flow of water, which they covenanted was, at the time of the making of the contract, in and under the ranch; that they would not do anything to divert the flow, but declared an intention to provide for further development, reserving a right to do so, by "boring of wells, driving of tunnels, and such other means as engineering skill may suggest." They also contract that, should the flow of water then or thereafter to be developed upon the land, and from which Garvey was to be supplied his 30 inches, decrease on account of any unforeseen or uncontrollable cause or agency, they would "do and perform such other work towards restoring the flow of water from such land as any competent engineer that the party of the second part (Garvey or his assigns) may select shall direct to be done, the necessary money to carry on such work of development to be advanced by the party of the second part." Under these provisions of the contract it was, undoubtedly, contemplated by the parties that there might be a decrease in, or even an entire cessation of, the flow of water from which Garvey was at any time receiving his 30 inches; that the sinking of wells or driving of tunnels would be inadequate to supply the quantity to which he was entitled; that neither the laws of gravity nor of nature could be relied upon to do so; and that to meet such a contingency resort would have to be had to a competent engineer, who would possibly be able to suggest some other means or method by which the flow might be restored, and which would have to be adopted for that purpose.

It is insisted by appellant that, while this may all be true, still that the means which might be resorted to under the familiar rule of ejusdem generis must be of the same character as those referred to specifically in the provisions of the agreement in which the Shorbs reserved to themselves the privilege of developing water on the land "by the boring of wells, driving of tunnels, and such other means as engineering skill may suggest," and that pumping as a means of developing water is not of the same character as the means specifically referred to; that is, by boring wells or driving tunnels. But we do not think this provision is of special or any significance in determining the right of the plaintiff under the contract. That particular provision had reference to the means which the Shorbs reserved to themselves for the future development of water, which they declared they intended to make. In our judgment the rights of plaintiff are to be measured by the last clause in the agreement, which we have heretofore quoted, and which confers on Garvey or his assigns the right to have an engineer of their selection determine what work was necessary to restore the supply of water which the Shorbs were to have done at the former's expense. This latter clause is quite different from the clause relied on by appellant, is broader in its terms, and expressly gives a right to plaintiff which the other clause does not pretend to confer. Assuming, however, that this provision relied on by counsel for appellant is applicable, and is to be taken into consideration with the other general provisions, in determining the means which are to be employed in developing or restoring the flow of water in favor of plaintiff, we are satisfied that pumping is of the same general character to accomplish that purpose as "boring wells or driving tunnels." It will be observed that in the general clause the Shorbs covenant to perform such work towards restoring the water as a competent engineer may direct, and, while this work is referred to as development work, there is undoubtedly meant by the use of that term the performance of such work as would in the judgment of an engineer accomplish the restoration.

It is impossible, as suggested, that neither of the parties had in mind when the contract was made the use of a pumping plant as a means of restoring the water. They probably assumed at that time that a sufficient supply would be obtained by artesian flow or by tunneling. It is true, also, that no pumping was being done on the ranch at that time, or, for that matter, in the county of Los Angeles, as a means for obtaining large quantities of water for irrigation or purposes of general utility. But pumping as a means of lifting water from wells or natural streams flowing from a lower level than the land to be irrigated has existed from remote times. For ages it has been recognized in the older countries—in Europe, India, China, and Egypt—and applied for obtaining water for that purpose. While the earlier devices were primitive in their character, in the progress of the ages such improvements have been made in machinery and in mechanical devices that pumps perfect in construction and adaptability are now and for years have been used as the most effective means for lifting large volumes of water from low levels for irrigation purposes.

It is not claimed that pumping for irrigation was not known at the time of the making of the contract, but only that the parties could not have had it in contemplation, because it was not used on the ranch nor in the vicinity; the lower court finding that the high price of fuel for motive power for that purpose made it prohibitory and the use of electricity for such motive power was then unknown. But we do not think that the fact that pumps were not actually used on the ranch, or in the county, is of any moment as far as the proper construction to be placed on the agreement is concerned. The grant to Garvey of these waters was a perpetual one, to endure for all time, and he paid a large sum of money as a consideration for it. It was in contemplation of the parties that possibly in the course of years this water supply would so decrease that Garvey could not obtain the amount he purchased by the means which were then being adopted to supply it. In anticipation of being confronted with that situation, they proceeded to provide how it should be met. They assumed it would be a situation which the parties themselves would not be able to cope with, and so provided that some competent engineer should be selected to whom it would be left to determine what means should be adopted to restore the flow of water which has been purchased. When the means actually being used to produce the supply failed, it was provided that a competent engineer, a person who would have knowledge, at the time the difficulty arose in obtaining the supply of water, of the most approved and adaptable methods and appliances to increase its flow, should be consulted, and his advice followed. There is certainly no reason why the parties could not have so provided. It was a wise provision to insert to secure to Garvey the permanent flow of water which he had purchased as long as any practicable means which a competent engineer might suggest could secure it to him. Whatever the means may have been which the Shorbs reserved to themselves and declared their intention to develop the waters on the tract by, it is evident that, under the provision of the contract we have been addressing ourselves to, the means which Garvey and his assigns were given the right to restore the water by were any means which a competent engineer should advise. The general language of the provision is capable of this construction, and there is no reason why a narrower construction should be given to it to defeat the right of plaintiff to a restoration of waters which the contract provided he should have restored by such means as an engineer should direct, and which the trial court finds cannot be restored, except by the installation of a pumping plant.

It is claimed, however, that pumping is not the development of water, either in its primary sense or in the sense that the term was used in the contract. Appellant contends that true development work is merely the opening of new channels for the outflow of underground stores of water by the propulsion of the forces of nature, while pumping, on the other hand, is the forcible abstraction of these natural stores by foreign and artificial work, and that the term "development," as applied to obtaining a water supply, has a well-recognized meaning under the decisions of this court. But if the driving of tunnels or making of cuts is the development of water, as it must be conceded it is, we perceive no good reason why the installation of a pump or pumping plant is not equally such development. As said in Charnock v. Higuerra, 111 Cal. 473, 481, 44 Pac. 171, 173, 32 L. R. A. 190, 52 Am. St. Rep. 195, every diversion "of water from a stream is a disturbance of the natural order of things. A dam or a ditch is as much an artificial mechanism as a pump. Indeed, it may be much more so; and the one alters the natural condition in the same sense that the other does." Whether subterranean waters are procured by means of driving tunnels or the operation of pumps, they are obtained in either instance by artificial, and not by natural, means. Tunnels are practically horizontal wells, differing from ordinary wells only in this: that the waters from the former find their way by gravity flow, while in the latter pumping must be resorted to to bring the water to the surface. They both disturb the natural conditions of the flow of the subterranean waters, and differ only as to the method of that disturbance. The result, however, is the same. They are both artificial means of reaching and controlling the natural subterranean flow, and are equally a means of developing water.

Nor do we understand that the decisions referred to by counsel contain any definition of the term "development" as applied to subterranean waters. The cases referred to—for example, Roberts v. Krafts, 141 Cal. 20, 74 Pac. 281; Vineland Irr. Dist. v. Azusa Irr. Co., 126 Cal. 486, 58 Pac. 1057, 46 L. R. A. 820—do not attempt to give any definition of the term. They simply hold that the things which were done in an effort to procure and control the subterranean waters were acts which constituted development. The development effected in those cases was by means of cuts and tunnels, and the court held that these constituted a development of water. The court did not hold that development could only be accomplished by such means, but simply that within the definition of development these means constituted it.

In the case at bar the wells from which plaintiff had been securing its 30 inches of water had so decreased in their flow that water could not be obtained from them by the tunnels which had been driven. As the only method whereby the flow of water could be restored was through the installation of a pumping plant of the character decided on by the engineer, Gervaise Purcell, we are satisfied that whether the contract is to be construed as providing that a competent engineer shall suggest "development work" alone to be done to restore it, or that he could suggest any effective means to do so, even though it might not come within the definition of development work, still the installation of a pumping plant at the well as devised by him was "development work," and the development of waters for the purpose of restoring the amount to which plaintiff was entitled, and that this construction placed on the contract by the trial court was correct.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

154 Cal. 277

BUSH v. HEAD. (Sac. 1,625.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 11, 1908.)

1. ELECTIONS—CONTEST—JURISDICTION.

The office of judge of the superior court, the judge ordinarily acting only in the county in which he is elected, is within Code Civ. Proc. § 1111, providing for contest of the right of a person declared elected to an office "to be exercised" in "a county, city and county, city or * * * any political subdivision of either.

2. SAME—GROUNDS—ELIGIBILITY.

Even if a promise made by a candidate to induce persons to vote for him constitute the giving or offering of a bribe, this alone would not bring the case within Code Civ. Proc. § 1111, subd. 2, authorizing an election contest, when the person whose right to office is contested was not, at the time of the election, eligible to such office; Pol. Code, § 58, declaring every elector eligible to an office for which he is an elector, except where otherwise specially provided, and Const. art. 20, § 11, merely providing that laws shall be passed to exclude from office persons "convicted" of bribery.

3. SAME—ILLEGAL VOTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1111, subd. 4, authorizing a contest of an election "on account of illegal votes," applies only where votes are cast by persons not privileged to vote, or in a manner otherwise than provided by law, and not where an impropriety or offense is committed by the candidate or election officers, without the participation of the voter, notwithstanding any unworthy motive on his part.

4. SAME—"PROMISE OF VALUABLE CONSIDERATION."

There is a "promise of valuable consideration" within Purity of Election Law (St. 1893, p. 22, c. 16) § 19, subd. 1, making it an offense, for which the right of a person declared elected to an office may be contested, to promise a valuable consideration to a voter to induce him to vote for any particular person, where the successful candidate promised, in effect, that the duties of the office should not be performed, and there would be no expense in connection with it, and this, though his failure to qualify, which he promised, would not result in the office being left without an incumbent, thus making a saving to taxpayers, but would create a vacancy which could and would be filled by appointment.

5. SAME — PLEADING — PRESUMPTION ON DEMURRER.

In the face of the averment of the petition, in an election contest, that a representation by the successful candidate was made to induce electors to vote for him, and that it had that result, it cannot, on demurrer to the petition, be presumed that the electors were not influenced by the promise, because under the law it was not possible of fulfillment.

6. SAME—JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1123, authorizing the court, in an election contest, to enter judgment declaring the election of another than the one returned, only where it appears that such other person "has the highest number of legal votes," there can be only a judgment annulling the election, because of the successful candidate's inducement to voters that he would fail to qualify, and thus save the expense of the office; this not making illegal any votes cast for him on account thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Elections, § 315.]

7. SAME—RIGHT TO CONTEST.

The right of an elector to contest an election is not affected by the fact that the only judgment which, under the circumstances, can be rendered—one annulling the election—will bring about the same result as the illegal promise of the successful candidate not to qualify, on which the contest is based.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Election contest by George W. Bush against Charles M. Head. There was a judgment of dismissal, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Morrison, Cope & Brobeck and George O. Perry, for appellant. James E. Isaacs and W. H. Carlin, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. In this case, an election contest, a demurrer to the petition or "statement" was sustained. Judgment of dismissal followed, and the plaintiff appeals.

The grounds of demurrer relied on are the court's lack of jurisdiction of the subject-matter and want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The petition is in two counts, but the legal questions arising on this appeal will sufficiently appear from a single narration of the facts alleged by the plaintiff. After showing the plaintiff's right to bring the proceeding, the statement alleges that at the general election of November, 1903, the defendant, Charles M. Head, was elected a judge of the superior court of the county of Shasta, for a term of six years, to begin in January, 1903. He duly qualified and entered upon the performance of the duties of the office, which he has ever since held. In March, 1905, the Legislature passed, and the Governor approved, an act increasing the number of judges of the superior court in the county of Shasta from one to two, and providing that the Governor should appoint an additional judge in said county, who should hold office until January, 1907, his successor to be elected at the general election of November, 1906. The plaintiff, Bush, was appointed, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of judge. Prior to the election of November, 1906, a convention of the Republican party regularly nominated him as a candidate for this office, to succeed himself. The Democratic party also held a convention, and the respondent, Head, already an incumbent of the office of judge for the term to end in January, 1909, presented himself as a candidate, and obtained the nomination by means of promises, made to delegates and the convention, that he would, if elected, fail, neglect, and refuse to qualify, or to enter upon the discharge of the duties of said office, and that thereby said office would be left without an incumbent, to the end and for the purpose of defeating and preventing the operation of the act of the Legislature increasing the number of judges in said county and that there would be saved to the delegates to said convention, and to the taxpayers of the county, the expense of paying the salary of said judgeship and of the support of said court. By reason of these illegal inducements said convention nominated Head as the candidate of the Democratic party for the office of judge, so created by the act of the Legislature. The promise or agreement of Head not to accept the office if elected thereto, and not to qualify or enter upon the discharge of the duties of said office for the purpose and object of creating a vacancy therein and defeating the operation of the act increasing the number of judges of said superior court, was made orally and in writing by said Head to the convention, and to the citizens and electors of Shasta county. The pledge or promise of Head that he would not, if elected, qualify or occupy the office was a matter of general knowledge among the citizens of the county, and was known to the electors thereof. At the election held on the 6th day of November, 1906, Bush, the contestant, received 1,210 and Head 1,561 votes. The result of the election was so found by the canvassing board, which declared Head elected. All of the electors who voted for Head did so with knowledge that he was not a candidate to fill said office, and that he would not qualify or accept said office if elected thereto. The contestant alleges, on information and belief, that more than 400 of the electors cast their votes for Head, with actual knowledge of his agreement not to qualify for or enter upon the discharge of the duties of said office, and for the purpose of aiding and abetting him in his unlawful purpose, and of preventing and defeating the operation and effect of said act of the Legislature, and of preventing the election of a judge of the superior court thereunder.

1. Section 1111, Code Civ. Proc., provides for a contest of the right of any person declared elected to an office "to be exercised" in "a county, city and county, city, or * * * any political subdivision of either." It is sought to support the demurrer, in so far as it is based on the ground of want of jurisdiction of subject-matter, by the claim that the office of judge of the superior court is not included within this classification of offices, election to which may be the subject of contest. The contention is answered by a reference to Saunders v. Haynes, 13 Cal. 145, where a statute similar in its terms to the one under discussion was held to authorize a contest of an election to the office of district judge. If the district judge, who, under the judicial system then existing, performed judicial functions in a district comprising several counties, filled an office "to be exercised within a county," there is much stronger reason for holding that the same is true in the case of a judge of the superior court, who ordinarily acts only in the county in which he is elected.

2. Section 1111 of Code Civ. Proc. above referred to, permits a contest for any of the following causes: "(1) For malconduct on the part of the board of judges, or any member thereof. (2) When the person whose right to the office is contested was not, at the time of the election, eligible to such office. (3) When the person whose right is contested has given to any elector or inspector, judge or clerk of the election, any bribe or reward, or has offered any such bribe or reward for the purpose of procuring his election, or has committed any other offense against the elective franchise, defined in title four, part one, of the Penal Code. (4) On account of illegal votes." Further provision for contesting elections is made by an "Act to promote the purity of elections, * * * etc.," approved February 23, 1893. St. 1893, p. 12, c. 16. Section 12 of the act provides that "any elector of the state, or of any county, city and county, city, or of any political subdivision of either, may contest the right of any person declared elected to an office to be exercised therein for any of the causes or offenses named in this act. * * *" The only causes or offenses named in the act which can be said to have any application to the facts of this case are those specified in section 19, subdivisions 1 and 8, reading as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, by himself or through any other person—

"(1) To pay, lend or contribute, or offer or promise to pay, lend or contribute, any money or other valuable consideration to or for any voter, or to or for any other person, to induce such voter to vote or refrain from voting at any election, or to induce any voter to vote or refrain from voting at such election for any particular person or persons. * * *

"(8) To advance or pay, or cause to be paid, any money or other valuable thing to or for the use of any other person, in consideration of being selected or indorsed as the candidate of any convention, * * * for a public office. * * *

It seems clear that, if there were no statutory provision on the subject other than that contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, the statement would fall short of making out a ground of contest, unless the facts alleged bring the case within the terms of subdivision 3, § 1111, Code Civ. Proc. That subdivision 1 has no application is obvious. Nor can it be said that the promises alleged to have been made by the candidate give ground of contest for ineligibility, within the purview of subdivision 2. The Constitution, the Political Code, and the Code of Civil Procedure contain various provisions defining the elements of eligibility to judicial and other office (Const., art. 4, §§ 18, 20, 21, 35; article 6, § 18; article 20, §§ 10, 11; Pol. Code, §§ 58, 841; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 156, 157, 159), but in none of these do we find any declaration that the commission of the acts here set forth shall make the party committing them ineligible. Even if the making of the promises as alleged could be held to constitute giving or offering a bribe, the Constitution (article 20, § 11) provides merely that laws shall be passed to exclude from office persons convicted of bribery. In the absence of some special provision, constitutional or statutory, to the contrary, "every elector is eligible to the office for which he is an elector." Pol. Code, § 58.

Subdivision 4, authorizing a contest "on account of illegal votes," does not cover the case here presented. The term "illegal votes," as used in this section, clearly includes votes cast by persons not privileged to vote and votes not entitled to be counted because not cast in the manner provided by law. It is equally clear that a vote is not illegal because of the commission by the candidate or the election officers of any impropriety or offense, without the participation of the voter. These are, by subdivisions 1 and 3, made separate and distinct grounds of contest. Whether a vote, given in consequence of an agreement by an elector to exercise his franchise in a particular way, is "illegal" is a question which may be debatable. It is, however, not involved here. It is not alleged that any voter entered into an agreement with Head, or otherwise consented to be bribed. It is charged, merely, that certain electors cast their votes for Head, with knowledge of his promise, and for the purpose of preventing the execution of the legislative act and of relieving themselves of the expense of maintaining the court. Our attention is not called to any statutory provision, and we believe there is none, which makes the legality or illegality of a vote, cast by a qualified elector in the form prescribed by law, depend upon the motive or purpose which may have actuated him. So long as he had not committed any of the offenses denounced by the Penal Code or the Purity of Election Law, any elector, as such, had an absolute right to vote for or against any candidate. An unworthy motive could not convert the exercise of this right into an illegal vote, within the meaning of the Code provision under discussion. Apart from other considerations, it must be obvious that public policy, demanding, inter alia, the preservation of "secrecy in voting" (Const. art. 2, § 5) would not be subserved by permitting the vote of a lawful elector, who had cast his ballot in regular manner and form, to be impeached by a judicial inquiry into the reasons which led him to cast that ballot in favor of one candidate rather than another.

The ground of contest, then, if there be any, must rest either on subdivision 3 of section 1111, or on the above quoted provisions of the Purity of Election Law. We need not inquire whether it falls within said subdivision 3, since we are satisfied that the act of 1893 authorizes a contest on the facts here set forth. Section 19 makes it unlawful for any person to offer or promise to pay "any money or other valuable consideration" to induce any voter to vote in a particular way. Here the defendant made a promise in order to induce the voters to cast their ballots for him. The promise was that he would act in a way that would result in a saving of expense to the taxpayers and electors. This was a promise of a "valuable consideration." It is, of course, not every promise of pecuniary benefit to the voter that is in violation of statute. A promise by a candidate to limit the cost of maintaining an office by administering it economically is no more than an undertaking to perform his duty, and is clearly not in conflict with the statute. But the promise here made went further than this. By it the candidate held out to the voters as an inducement, not the proper and efficient administration of the office, but the destruction, at least for a time, of an office created by law. It has been held, in several well-considered cases, that a promise by a candidate to discharge the duties of the office for less than the lawful salary or compensation is contrary to public policy, as in the nature of a bribe. McCrary on Elections, § 333; Carrothers v. Russell, 53 Iowa, 346, 5 N. W. 499, 36 Am. Rep. 222; State v. Purdy, 36 Wis. 213, 17 Am. Rep. 485; State v. Collier, 72 Mo. 13, 37 Am. Rep. 417; State v. Dustin, 5 Or. 375, 20 Am. Rep. 746. See, also, Tucker v. Aiken, 7 N. H. 113. As is said in Tucker v. Aiken, supra, "the direct tendency of such practice is to introduce unsuitable persons into public employment—to induce the electors to give their suffrages to him who will work cheapest, instead of him who is best qualified." The principle applies fully to the case at bar, where the promise was, in effect, that the duties of the office should not be performed at all, and that there would be no expense in connection with it. It is undoubtedly true, as is pointed out by the respondent, that the electors entertained a vain and futile hope if they believed that the office could be destroyed and left without an incumbent by means of the device sought to be employed. The failure on the part of the person elected to qualify would result in a vacancy, which could and should be filled by the Governor's appointment. But this consideration does not affect the illegality of the promise made, nor its sufficiency as a basis for contesting the election. The defendant made an offer to confer a pecuniary advantage upon the voters, and they, as is alleged, believing that the advantage would be conferred, acted upon the offer. The suggestion that the voters must be presumed to know the law, and that, so knowing, they could not be influenced by a promise which was not possible of fulfillment, is entitled to no weight. In the face of the averment that the representation was made to induce the electors to vote for the respondent, and that it did induce them to so vote, it cannot, on demurrer, be presumed that the contrary is the fact. The contest proceeds upon the theory that the contestant is entitled, first, to have the respondent's election annulled, and, second, to have the court declare the appellant elected. For the reasons above stated we think the first branch of this contention well founded. But we cannot agree with the second. Under the Code sections regulating election contests the court is authorized to enter a judgment declaring the election of another person than the one returned only where it appears that such other person "has the highest number of legal votes." Code Civ. Proc. § 1123. We have already stated that, in our opinion, the votes cast for Head, even if so cast in consequence of unlawful inducements held out to the voters, were not illegal votes. They cannot therefore be disregarded so as to make Bush the recipient of the highest number of votes. The utmost relief that could be obtained in this proceeding would be a judgment that Head's election be annulled. It is suggested that such judgment would bring about precisely the result that follows from compliance by the respondent with his promise not to qualify—namely, that there would be a vacancy, to be filled by appointment. This, however, is no reason for sustaining the demurrer. In the first place it is not alleged, and we cannot judicially know, that Head has not qualified, and that he is not, in defiance of his promise, occupying the office. But, even if we assume (as is, no doubt, the fact) that Head has, by failing to qualify, left a vacancy which has been filled by the Governor, his failure to qualify does not affect the right of an elector to maintain a contest. Sweeny v. Adams, 141 Cal. 558, 75 Pac. 182.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer.

HOLT MFG. CO. v. COLLINS (EDWARDS et al., Interveners). (Sac. 1,595.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 8, 1908.)

1. AGRICULTURE—LIENS—LABORERS' LIENS—THRESHING MACHINERY—OWNERSHIP.

Civ. Code, § 3061, provides that every person performing work or labor about or upon any threshing machine or other appliance thereof while engaged in threshing has a lien thereon to the extent of the value of his services. Held, that one performing labor in and about a threshing outfit at the employment of one not the actual owner, but lawfully in possession and operation thereof, under a contract with the owner, is entitled to a lien thereon for his services, regardless of the question of ownership.

2. SAME—PARTIES.

Where the buyers of a threshing outfit were in possession under a conditional sale, reserving title in the seller until paid for, and were in default at the time proceedings were instituted by the buyer's employés to impose a lien thereon for work and labor connected therewith, given by Civ. Code, § 3061, the seller was a necessary party to such proceedings, in order to subject its interest in the property to such lien.

3. SAME—FORECLOSURE OF LIEN—NATURE OF PROCEEDING—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT.

An action to foreclose a thresher's lien given by Civ. Code, § 3061, is not a proceeding in rem, except in the sense that the amount thereof can be collected only out of the property involved in the action, and is not a proceeding wherein a judgment for the sale of the property will bind the whole world or affect the interest of any person not a party to the suit.

4. JUDGMENT—PERSONS CONCLUDED—"PRIVIES."

Where sellers of a threshing outfit delivered the same to the buyer under a conditional sale, reserving title in the sellers until paid for, the sellers, by delivering possession to the buyers, did not become their privies, so that a judgment against the buyers in a suit by their employés to enforce a thresher's lien for services, given by Civ. Code, § 3061, would not bind the sellers, who were not made parties to the proceedings; a "privity" being defined as one whose succession to the rights of property affected occurred after the institution of the particular suit and from a party thereto or who claims under or in right of parties, as an executor or administrator.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1204.]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 6, pp. 5606-5611; vol. 8, p. 7764.]

5. SAME—PARTIES—DISMISSAL.

Where defendant was dismissed from an action before judgment, the effect was the same as if he had never been made a party to the suit, nor was it required, by reason of having actual notice thereof, to intervene and assert its rights or be bound by the judgment rendered therein.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1187.]

6. AGRICULTURE—LIENS—THRESHER'S LIENS—FORECLOSURE—FINDINGS.

Under Civ. Code, § 3061, giving a thresher's lien for work performed by laborers in and about a threshing machine while engaged in crushing or threshing, a finding that interveners rendered services in the operation of the thresher was unavailable to sustain a judgment enforcing their lien, where there was no further finding that the services were rendered on the property while it was "engaged in crushing or threshing."

7. SAME.

Under Civ. Code, § 3061, conferring a laborer's lien on a threshing outfit for services rendered while engaged in crushing or threshing, an employer could obtain no lien for services rendered about the engine of a threshing outfit while it was being used for other purposes than as a part of the threshing outfit.

8. SALES—CONDITIONAL SALES—POSSESSION.

Where the buyers of a threshing outfit, under a conditional contract of sale reserving title in the sellers until paid for, were heavily in default in their payments at the time the outfit was seized by the sheriff while in the hands of the buyers, in execution of an order of sale against the buyers only in proceedings to enforce threshers' liens, the seller was entitled to terminate the contract of sale, and recover possession of the property from the sheriff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 1440.]

9. TRIAL—FINDINGS.

A general finding that all the material denials and averments of the answer to the complaint are true, and that all material averments of the amended complaint in intervention are true, was insufficient for any purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 929.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by the Holt Manufacturing Company against W. W. Collins and C. J. Edwards and others, interveners. From a judgment for interveners, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Chas. G. Lamberson and Frank Lamberson, for appellant. J. A. Allen and T. E. Clark, for respondent Collins. T. E. Clark, for respondent interveners.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial, in an action brought by it against defendant Collins, sheriff of Tulare county, to recover possession of certain threshing machinery, consisting of a steam engine, etc., or its value. The complaint was in the form generally used in actions of claim and delivery, alleging ownership and right of possession in the plaintiff, value, possession by said defendant, demand for delivery, and refusal to comply therewith. The defendant sheriff by his answer denied the alleged ownership and right of possession of plaintiff, and set up, in justification of his claim to the possession, a certain judgment in the superior court of Tulare county in an action brought by C. J. Edwards and four others against J. E. Hubbard, Chauncy Hubbard, Owen Hubbard, Archy Hubbard, and this plaintiff, to enforce against said threshing machinery alleged liens for work and labor in and about the same, under section 3061 of the Civil Code, and an order of sale in satisfaction of said judgment issued thereon and placed in his hands for execution. The judgment so set up was against the Hubbards only, and showed upon its face that the action was dismissed as to the Holt Manufacturing Company prior to judgment, on motion of the attorney for the plaintiffs therein, and that judgment was given against the Hubbards upon their default, they having failed to appear in the action.

Plaintiff, it appears, consented to such dismissal. The judgment contained recitals showing substantially that it was made to appear to the court that the Hubbards were the owners and in possession of, managing, and operating the machinery as farmers, harvesters, and threshers, and that the plaintiffs had each worked and performed labor thereon in operating the same, at the request of the Hubbards, for which there was due them at the date of the judgment sums aggregating $1,317, for which, with interest and attorney fees, they were entitled to judgment against the Hubbards, and to a lien on said property, and the sale of the whole property, including the interest of all the parties claiming ownership therein in satisfaction of the lien. The plaintiffs in said action, C. J. Edwards et al., filed in this action their complaint in intervention, setting up therein their claims to a lien on said property solely by reason of said judgment, there being no allegations therein tending to support any claim except as it was established by said judgment. They further alleged that plaintiff herein delivered the property to the Hubbards, knowing the purposes for which it was to be operated, and knew that it was so being operated. They joined with defendant sheriff in asking that the property be delivered to the sheriff to be sold to satisfy the judgment. Plaintiff's demurrer to this complaint in intervention for want of facts was overruled. Plaintiff then filed an answer to such complaint, and among other things denied the alleged effect of the judgment as against it, alleged that the judgment as to one of said creditors, Martha M. Pauley, had been fully paid and satisfied, and denied that the lien of the interveners amounted to $1,500 or any sum whatever. In this answer it was also made to appear that although plaintiff was originally made a party defendant in the foreclosure case, and filed an answer denying all the material allegations of the complaint, it was not a party to the judgment, plaintiff having dismissed the action as to it. The interveners demurred to this answer for want of facts, and the demurrer was sustained.

A trial having been had, the court made its findings. From these it appears that the property was delivered by plaintiff to J. E. Hubbard on or about June 7, 1905, under a contract of conditional sale for $8,500 payable in installments. It was agreed therein that plaintiff does not part with the title until all deferred payments are fully made, and that, in the event of default in payment, the plaintiff might, at its option, and without notice, terminate the agreement and retake the property. Under this agreement the Hubbards retained possession of the property, operating it, until it was taken from them by the sheriff under the order of sale in February, 1907. It was expressly found that the title to the property was at all times in the plaintiff, but that plaintiff's ownership thereof, and all interest it had therein, was subject to said contract, as to which the evidence shows without conflict that the Hubbards were in default for over $3,000 at the time of the demand for possession by plaintiff on the sheriff, and also to the foreclosure judgment in favor of the interveners and the right of defendant sheriff to subject the same thereto. The findings are full and explicit as to the proceedings in said foreclosure suit, resulting in said judgment and order of sale. It was further found that this judgment was a valid and subsisting judgment, establishing the lien of the interveners for labor performed by them as therein shown on and about the property. There are some other findings outside of any issue made by the pleadings, such as the finding that the interveners did in fact render services in and about said property in the operation thereof, which cannot be considered. Upon these findings judgment was given that defendant sheriff recover the property from plaintiff, by whom it had been taken at the commencement of this action, or its value, found to be $3,500.

It is manifest from the record that the proceedings in the trial court were had and disposed of on the theory, apparently entertained both by counsel for respondent and the learned judge of that court, that the rights of the plaintiff in this property were foreclosed, so far as the claims of the interveners and the sheriff holding the property for the enforcement of those claims were concerned, by the judgment in the foreclosure proceeding. This undoubtedly would have been the situation in view of our decisions as to the effect of our statute relating to liens of laborers on threshing machines (now Civ. Code, § 3061), had plaintiff been a party to that judgment. It is there provided that "every person performing work or labor in, with, about or upon any barley crusher, threshing machine or engine, horsepower, wagon, or other appliance thereof, while engaged in crushing or threshing, has a lien thereon to the extent of the value of his services," which lien, it is provided, is to be enforced by an action brought for that purpose, resulting in the sale of the property. There is no provision as to who shall be parties in such action, and nothing to indicate that it was the intention that the judgment should bind the interest in the property of any person not a party to the action. It is settled by the decisions in this state that under this statute one performing labor in and about the operation of a threshing machine and outfit, at the employment of one not the actual owner, but lawfully in the possession and operation of the machine, under contract with the owner, can have and maintain against the property a lien for his services, and that to this extent the actual ownership of the property by a person other than such employer is an immaterial circumstance. Chuch v. Garrison, 75 Cal. 199, 16 Pac. 885; Lambert v. Davis, 116

Cal. 292, 48 Pac. 123. See, also, Clark v. Brown, 141 Cal. 93, 74 Pac. 548. This is not disputed by plaintiff, and there is no claim by it that the statute when so construed is open to any objection on the ground of violation of any constitutional right of the owner of the property. In such cases the owner places his property in the possession of another, knowing the purpose for which it is to be used by him, and knowing that the statute gives a lien for their services to those who may be employed in such use, and he voluntarily subjects it to such liens as are given by the statute. But he thus subjects it only to such claims as constitute liens under the terms of the statute, and, under elementary principles, is entitled to his day in court to contest the validity of any asserted claim. His interest in the property cannot be affected by a proceeding for such enforcement to which he is not a party.

Passing the possible constitutional objection that might be made to a statute that purported to authorize the taking of the property of a person for the debt of another, alleged to constitute a lien on such property without an opportunity to the owner to contest the validity of the claim and lien, it is clear that nothing of this kind was ever contemplated by the statute before us. What it did contemplate was simply, as has already been held, that the laborer should have his lien on the property, as against the owner, for services rendered under employment by another lawfully in possession thereof, and that he might enforce this lien against the owner. When so proceeded against by the lien claimant, the fact that one is the owner of the property does not enable him to exempt his property from the lien given by the statute. It is in this sense, and this sense only, that this court has said that in such a case the actual ownership, is an immaterial circumstance. In all the cases hereinbefore cited the owner was a party to the action and to the judgment therein rendered, and in Clark v. Brown, supra, in discussing a question of costs, it was said that he was a necessary party; that he is a necessary party in the sense that his interest in the property cannot be affected by a judgment unless he be a party is clear. As was said in Tay v. Hawley, 39 Cal. 96: "It is a cardinal principle of jurisprudence that a judgment shall not bind or conclude a man, either in respect to his person or property, unless he has had his day in court. No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, says the Constitution; but this principle is older than written Constitutions, and, without invoking the constitutional declaration, every person may, as a matter of common right, insist that he be heard in his own defense before judgment passes, which binds, charges or injuriously affects his person or his estate." Under our statute a judgment foreclosing a lien can be conclusive only "between the parties and their successors in interest by title subsequent to the commencement of the action." Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, subd. 2.

The owner of the property in a case of this character occupies a position analogous to that of a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer who takes prior to the commencement of an action to foreclose a prior lien. His interest is subject to the prior claim, but can only be affected by a judgment thereon to which he is made a party. In Whitney v. Higgins, 10 Cal. 551, 70 Am. Dec. 748, this court said: "The plaintiff's claim to the relief he seeks rests upon the general principle that the rights of a person cannot be affected by a suit to which he is a stranger. By the judgment in a suit parties and privies are alone bound. * * * Though the lien of mechanics is purely the creature of the statute, a decree for the sale of the premises in its enforcement has the same and no greater effect upon the rights of purchasers and incumbrancers prior to the commencement of suit than a similar decree would have upon the foreclosure of a mortgage. If such purchasers or incumbrancers are not made parties they are in no respect bound by the decree or proceedings thereunder." In Goodenow v. Ewer, 16 Cal. 468, 76 Am. Dec. 540, it was said: "But the owner of the mortgaged premises, where no power of sale is embraced in the mortgage, cannot, under any circumstances, be cut off from his estate, except by sale in pursuance of the decree of the court. To give validity to such decree the owner must be before the court when it is rendered. No rights which he possesses can otherwise be affected, and any direction for their sale would be unavailing for any purpose. * * * If he has parted with the estate, his grantee stands in his shoes, and possesses the same right to contest the lien and to object to the sale. The object of the sale is to subject such estate as the mortgagor held at the time to the satisfaction of the lien which he created, and if that estate has been disposed of, a decree directing its sale without the presence of its owner would be a mere arbitrary act, condemning without hearing, one man's property to pay another man's debt. It is only when the owner of the estate has had his day in court that a valid decree can pass for its sale. It is only under a decree of this nature that a purchaser can acquire any title." March v. McKoy, 56 Cal. 85, was an action in replevin. The plaintiff had executed to one Woods what was called a lease of the property for six months for a rental of $100 per month, a bill of sale to be given at the end of six months if all the rent had been paid. While the property was so in the possession of Woods, repairs were made thereon by mechanics, who claimed a lien for their services, and in an action brought for that purpose, they obtained a judgment foreclosing the lien, under which the property was sold by the sheriff. March was not a party to this action. The defendants claimed under this sale. The court said: "Woods was not the owner of the property in controversy when the repairs upon it were made. Assuming that the provisions of the Code which treat of the liens of mechanics give a lien upon personal property for repairs by mechanics who do not take possession of such property—a point which we do not decide—it would seem very clear that such liens cannot be enforced so as to deprive of his right the person having the general property in the chattels, without making him a party to the foreclosure suit." Mr. Freeman in his work on Judgments says: "The foreclosure of a mortgage or of any other lien is wholly inoperative upon the rights of any person not a party to the suit." See, also, Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 456. In Page v. W. W. Chase Co., 145 Cal. 582, 79 Pac. 278, it was held that an action for the foreclosure of a lien of a street assessment is not a proceeding in rem, except in the sense that the amount thereof can be collected only out of the property involved in the action, and is not a proceeding wherein a judgment for the sale of the property will bind the entire world, or affect the interest therein of any owner except those who are made parties defendant in the action. This is equally applicable under our statute relative to liens on threshing machines. See, also, Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 395.

Various reasons are suggested by counsel for respondents why the well-settled rule above stated has no application in this case, but we see no force in any of them. It is urged that the statute contemplates that a judgment against the employer having possession of the property shall bind the owner. We have already considered this point. It is further urged that plaintiff, by reason of its contract with the Hubbards, under which it delivered possession to the Hubbards, was privy to the Hubbards, and therefore within the rule that the parties to the action and their privies are bound by the judgment. Of course, there is nothing in this. As defined by the authorities, a privy, within the general rule, is one whose succession to the rights of property affected occurred after the institution of the particular suit, and from a party thereto (see Orthwein v. Thomas, 127 Ill. 554, 21 N. E. 430, 4 L. R. A. 434, 11 Am. St. Rep. 159), or who claims under or in right of parties, as an administrator or executor. See Lipscomb v. Postell, 38 Miss. 476, 77 Am. Dec. 651. As said by Mr. Freeman, they are bound because they have succeeded to some estate or interest which was bound in the hands of its former owner. The rule applicable in this state in this class of cases is shown by subdivision 2 of section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is urged that, inasmuch as plaintiff was originally brought in as a party defendant in the foreclosure suit, and had actual notice of the pendency of the proceeding, it could, although dismissed from the action by the plaintiffs, have intervened, and thus presented any defense it had, and was bound to do so. The authorities cited by respondent on this point have no application whatever. Plaintiff had not asked for affirmative relief in its answer, and the plaintiffs had the absolute right to dismiss the action as to it, whether it consented or not. The fact that plaintiff did not object to the granting of the application to dismiss, and when asked indicated its consent thereto, is immaterial. The dismissal was, in effect, an absolute withdrawal of any claim by the foreclosure plaintiffs against its interest in the property, and plaintiff had the right to consider it as such. Where a defendant is dismissed from an action before judgment, the effect of the dismissal is the same as if he had never been made a party. Page v. W. W. Chase Co., 145 Cal. 584, 79 Pac. 278. We can conceive of no reason why the fact that plaintiff had actual notice of the proceeding against the Hubbards required it to intervene or be bound by any judgment against the Hubbards. Such is not the law. Page v. W. W. Chase Co., supra. See Wakefield v. Van Dorn, 53 Neb. 25, 73 N. W. 226. We fail to perceive the applicability of section 10 of article 12 of the Constitution prohibiting the passage by the Legislature of laws permitting the leasing or alienation of any franchise in such a manner as to accomplish certain results.

From what has been said it is clear that the answer of the sheriff, in so far as it rested on the judgment in the foreclosure proceedings, did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to plaintiff's action. The answer was effectual as a defense only in so far as it denied the allegations of plaintiff's complaint. Likewise, the complaint in intervention, based entirely on said foreclosure judgment, which upon its face showed that the action had been dismissed by the plaintiffs therein as to this plaintiff, utterly failed to state facts showing the interveners to be entitled to relief as against plaintiff, and plaintiff's demurrer thereto should have been sustained. Such judgment could not avail against plaintiff, at least unless it was accompanied by other allegations of fact showing that the interveners had in fact, independent of said judgment, a lien on plaintiff's property for their services. If it had contained such allegations, and plaintiff had thus been given an opportunity to contest interveners' claim, it is possible that its property might have been properly held subject to the judgment, so far as such judgment was warranted by the evidence given on the trial in support of such allegations. See Redington v. Frye, 43 Me. 578. Likewise the demurrer of interveners to plain-tiff's answer to their complaint should not have been sustained. It in terms denied that interveners had a lien on plaintiff's property amounting to the sum of $1,500 or any other sum. It further alleged payment and satisfaction by the Hubbards of a portion of the judgment against them. Likewise the finding that plaintiff's interest in the property was subject to and subordinate to the foreclosure judgment, and to the right of defendant sheriff to subject the same thereto, had no support in the evidence. In this connection it is clear that the finding that the Hubbards employed the interveners to labor on and about such machinery, and that the interveners rendered services in the operation of the same, is entirely without the issues made by the pleadings, and cannot be considered in support of the judgment. Even if it could be so considered, it would be unavailing, for it does not show that any of such services were rendered on the property while such property was "engaged in crushing or threshing" to which section 3061 confines the lien, nor does it show the amount or value of services rendered, the theory all the time plainly being that these matters were all conclusively settled by the foreclosure judgment. The evidence of intervenor Squires (who was given a lien for $375), upon which alone this finding was based, was open to the objection made by plaintiff that it was not within the issues made by the pleadings, and should not have been admitted. It is worthy of note, as indicating a reason for the dismissal by the foreclosure plaintiffs of the original action against plaintiff, and the importance to respondents of having the judgment therein held conclusive against plaintiff without an opportunity to defend against the asserted lien claims, that on the cross-examination of Squires it was admitted by him that his claim was, in large part, for services rendered in and about the engine while it was being used for other purposes than as a part of the threshing outfit, as, for instance, hauling water for the engine during the plowing season, and repairing the engine between the end of the plowing season and the commencement of the harvesting season. Of course section 3061 of the Civil Code gives no lien for any such services.

As has been stated, the trial court also found that plaintiff's ownership was subject and subordinate to the contract of sale. It did not definitely find whether or not such contract had been terminated, and the right of possession of the Hubbards and their successors thereunder extinguished. If such right of possession on their part had been extinguished, there was, of course, no possible right of possession in the sheriff as against plaintiff, under a judgment and order of sale running against the Hubbards only. The uncontradicted evidence showed that the Hubbards were heavily in default on their payments, between $3,000 and $5,000, and, according to the agreement, as found by the court, plaintiff had the right in the event of default in payment, with or without notice, to terminate the agreement and retake the property. It is admitted by the pleadings that prior to the commencement of this action plaintiff demanded of the sheriff the possession of the property, serving on him a written claim duly verified, setting out its ownership and right of possession. We know of no reason why plaintiff could not terminate the agreement as well after defendant sheriff had taken possession under the order of sale as before such taking. This finding of subordination of plaintiff's ownership to the contract of sale, even if it be conceded that the continuance in force of such contract would authorize the possession of the property by the sheriff for the purpose of selling the Hubbards' interest therein, which we do not decide, is without force, because it cannot be ascertained from the findings that the agreement is not terminated and all interest of the Hubbards thereunder extinguished. The general omnibus finding "that all the material denials and averments of the answer to the complaint herein are true, and all the material averments of the amended complaint in intervention are true," is insufficient for any purpose. Ladd v. Tully, 51 Cal. 277; Harlan v. Ely, 55 Cal. 344. See also, Perkins v. West Coast Lumber Co., 120 Cal. 28, 52 Pac. 118.

In view of what we have said it is unnecessary to discuss other points.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed, and the cause remanded for proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein discussed.

JOHNSON et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.
(L. A. 2,004.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 11, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 9, 1908.)

1. RAILROADS—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—COMPANY LIABLE—PRESUMPTION.

Where it is shown or admitted in the pleadings that a corporation defendant was the owner of a railroad, in the operation of which a wrong was committed, the presumption is that the road was in its possession and being operated by it at that time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 863.]

2. SAME—LEASE OF ROAD—CONSTRUCTION.

The lease, made in 1835 by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to the Southern Pacific Company for 99 years, of "all of its railroad situated in the state of California, known and designated as the 'Southern Pacific Railroad of California' with all its branches and all railroads now leased under it * * *" is unambiguous in its designation of the property leased, and cannot be construed to include lines of road subsequently built or acquired by the lessor, nor can its terms be extended by parol evidence to embrace such lines, in an action to recover for their negligent operation.

3. SAME—LIABILITY OF OWNER FOR NEGLIGENCE OPERATION.

A railroad company owning a line of road cannot escape responsibility, or avoid the discharge of the duties and obligations imposed by its franchise, by voluntarily leasing its road to be operated by another company, and can only relieve itself from liability for injuries resulting from such operation by showing a lease made to the operating company under statutory authority, and conforming to the requirements of the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 802, 803.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for an injury alleged to have been caused by the negligent operation of a train by defendant on its railroad, an instruction stating, in effect, that defendant admitted in its answer that it was operating such train was without prejudice to defendant, even if it did not make such admission, where it admitted its ownership of the road, and under the evidence was responsible in law for the operation of the train by itself or any other company.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4219-4228.]

5. NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—WHEN QUESTION FOR JURY.

It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say, as matter of law, that contributory negligence is established; and, even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question, it is one for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 279-306.]

6. RAILROADS—CROSSING ACCIDENT—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—EVIDENCE CONSIDERED.

A woman was driving along a highway with her 13 year old son, and when she had reached a point under an overhead crossing of defendant's railroad, the horse became frightened by a train crossing the bridge, and ran away causing her death. The son testified that they approached cautiously, stopping once, and at all times looked and listened for an approaching train, but neither saw nor heard the train until they were under the bridge. Both he and others on the highway testified that, owing to obstructions, the train could not be seen from near the bridge until it was within 300 feet. The train was running downgrade without steam, and did not give the signal of its approach required by statute. The only evidence as to its speed was the estimate of the fireman, who testified several years afterward. Held, that on such evidence the court properly submitted the question of contributory negligence to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1166-1189.]

7. DEATH—ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DEATH—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action under the statute by a husband and infant children to recover for the wrongful death of the wife and mother, the children are entitled to recover for loss of the services of the deceased, which are distinct from those for which the husband may recover, and an instruction in such a case that the children were entitled to recover the value of the mother's "nurture and instruction, moral and physical, and intellectual training" was not erroneous.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; James W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by Frank W. Johnson and others against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Canfield & Starbuck, for appellant. Richards & Carrier, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover damages from the defendant for the death of the wife of the plaintiff, Frank W. Johnson, and mother of the other plaintiffs, alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendant in causing one of its trains to approach an overhead crossing without signaling, by reason whereof a horse that the plaintiff Olin W. Johnson was driving in a buggy with the deceased was frightened, ran away, and overturned the buggy. The defense interposed was a general denial and contributory negligence. The action was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict for $8,000, and from the judgment entered thereon, and from an order denying the motion of defendant for a new trial, it appeals.

This case was here before on an appeal from a judgment entered after demurrer to the complaint was sustained. The only point there involved was whether it was necessary under the law to signal the approach of a train at an overhead crossing. We held that the law requiring signals applied to all crossings—at grade or over or under grade (Johnson v. S. P. R. Co., 147 Cal. 624, 82 Pac. 306, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 307)—and reversed the judgment. On the present appeal the facts, stated generally, are as follows: Some years prior to the accident the railroad had constructed over Hollister avenue, in Santa Barbara county, an overhead steel bridge. The avenue runs westerly from the city of Santa Barbara to the village of Golita, and the railroad in crossing it runs north-easterly. At a point on the avenue and east of the crossing the natural surface of the grade, and consequently Hollister avenue itself, originally sloped to the west for about 1,000 feet to a creek. On the face of this slope the railroad was laid upon an embankment some 11 or 12 feet above the natural surface of the ground. In order to give headway for teams to pass under the railroad, and thus to make the railroad crossing an overhead, instead of a grade, crossing, Hollister avenue had been excavated easterly from a point about 400 feet east of the creek so as to make a roadbed nearly level to a point about 75 feet east of the crossing. This excavation of the avenue made a cut, of which the sides, commencing from the point of excavation on the west, arose gradually as they approached the crossing, where they were about 9 feet high, making the railroad at that point about 20 feet above the excavated surface of the avenue. A four board fence skirted Hollister avenue on the south. There were other physical conditions along and in the vicinity of Hollister avenue and the crossing which will be noted later. On the 25th of July, 1901, the plaintiff Olin W. Johnson, then a boy about 13 years of age, started with his mother to drive eastward in a buggy from their home in Golita to the city of Santa Barbara, about 7 miles distant. The buggy was an ordinary side-barred buggy with the top down. The boy was of a cautious and careful disposition, and he and his mother were familiar with the road and the bridge, and had often driven along the road. When they reached a point about 450 feet west of the railroad bridge they stopped and listened, looking in both directions for a train. Hearing and seeing none, they proceeded at a slow jog trot towards the crossing. As Mrs. Johnson and her son were approaching the crossing, they were constantly looking to see if any train was approaching, and, seeing or hearing none, started to drive under the bridge, when for the first time they heard the rattle of an approaching train on the track above. This train consisted of a large number of ballast cars, and was engaged in getting ballast for a newly constructed line changes in the railroad between Santa Barbara and Ventura. It was proceeding from Irma, a station about three-quarters of a mile east from the crossing, and was rolling or drifting without steam downgrade towards the crossing. No signal or warning of any character was being given of its approach. At the noise of the train the horse immediately took fright, became unmanageable, galloped from under the bridge, struck the buggy upon the side of the cut, tipping it over, throwing out both Mrs. Johnson and her son. The latter was slightly injured, the former was killed.

At the close of the evidence for plaintiffs, the defendant moved for a nonsuit, on the ground that there was no evidence in the case connecting defendant with the accident. This was based upon the theory that it was made an issue under the pleadings whether the train which occasioned the accident was at the time thereof being operated by the defendant, and that plaintiff had failed to prove that it was. Respondents claim that, considering the entire answer of defendant, no such issue was raised, or if it was, that it was an immaterial one. There is no necessity for discussing this question. The complaint in one of its paragraphs specifically averred that upon the line of railroad where the accident happened the defendant was maintaining and operating a steam railroad, and was owner of the track and rolling stock and other appurtenances belonging to it. As to this allegation, the answer simply denied that at any time, or at all, said defendant was maintaining or operating any steam railroad. There was no denial of the ownership of the track and rolling stock of said railroad as alleged; and, while it is true there was no direct evidence that the defendant was operating the particular train occasioning the accident, still the admitted fact that it owned the track and rolling stock appurtenant to it was sufficient evidence, in the absence of anything to the contrary, from which a proper and reasonable inference might be drawn by the jury that such train was at the time being operated by defendant. The rule is that, where it is shown, or is admitted, as it was by the pleadings, that a corporation was the owner of a railroad, in the operation of which a wrong was committed, the presumption is that the road was in its possession and being operated by it at that time. Ferguson v. Wisconsin Central Ry. Co., 63 Wis. 145, 23 N. W. 123; Walsh v. Missouri P. Ry. Co., 102 Mo. 582, 14 S. W. 873, 15 S. W. 757; Peabody v. Oregon, etc., Ry. Co., 21 Or. 121, 26 Pac. 1053, 12 L. R. A. 823. At the close of the evidence, counsel for appellant moved the court, for the same reason as just considered, to instruct the jury to return a verdict for defendant, which was denied. This motion was based upon certain evidence submitted by the defendant in making out its defense, under which it was claimed that another corporation, known as the "Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky," and not the defendant, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, was liable to plaintiffs for any injury which they may have sustained.

A lease was introduced in evidence, dated February 10, 1885, made by the defendant, a California corporation, to the Southern Pacific Company of Kentucky, as authorized under an act of the Legislature. St. 1880, p. 21, c. 28. In this instrument the defendant leased to the Southern Pacific Company for 99 years "all of its railroad, situated in the state of California, known and designated as the 'Southern Pacific Railroad of California,' with all its branches and all railroads now leased under it, together with the rolling stock, telegraph poles, tools and property of every kind and nature whatsoever, now in use upon or in connection with said railroad, together with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging, with the right to possess, maintain, use and operate the said property, and to receive the rents, issues and profits thereof." In the lease the Southern Pacific Company agreed that it would "keep the said leased property in good order and condition and repair, operate, maintain, add to and better the same at its own expense," and at the termination of the lease, to return it, with the additions and betterments, in as good condition and repair as at the date of the lease. These constituted the terms of the lease, but it is apparent from them, taken in connection with other evidence relative to that part of the railroad upon which the accident took place, that as to it, this lease could avail the defendant nothing. In 1886, a year subsequent to the making of the lease, a corporation was organized, known as the "Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company," for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Saugus, in Los Angeles county, to Ellwood, in Santa Barbara county, and which it completed in 1886-87. In 1888 the said Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company was, with divers other railroad corporations, consolidated into the Southern Pacific Railroad Company under the latter name. That part of the road on which the accident occurred was a change in, or addition to, the road constructed by the Southern Pacific Branch Railway Company, and not to any road owned or leased or in existence when the lease to the Southern Pacific Company was made by this defendant. The contention of appellant is that the lease included the railroad where the accident occurred, as well as the Southern Pacific Branch Railway, the road of which it was a part. But the lease is not capable of that construction. It makes no reference to future acquired railroads. There is no doubt or ambiguity in the language used in it, nothing equivocal in its terms. It clearly and plainly speaks of the property leased under it as railroad property of the date of the lease, known as the "Southern Pacific Railroad of California," with all its branches and all railroads now leased by it, together with its personal property now in use in connection with said railroads. It clearly speaks in the present tense, and as of the date of the lease. This language is clear and explicit and in no respect equivocal, and must govern the interpretation of the lease. Civ. Code, § 1638. It limited the property leased to that owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at its date, and there is no warrant for extending its terms by construction so as to include subsequently acquired railroad property. And that only the roads and their equipment owned when the lease was made were intended to be leased is apparent not only from its terms, but from the conduct of the parties under it. It is provided in the lease that the Southern Pacific Company, the lessee "shall add to and better the same (the leased property) at its own expense." It is shown in the evidence that after the lease was made, the Southern Pacific Company made changes in the new lines constructed through Santa Barbara county, of which the portion of the road where the accident occurred is a part, and charged the cost of such construction to the lessor, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. If the parties were acting under the lease of 1885, this cost, under its provisions, would have been borne by the Southern Pacific Company as lessee, and not by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, as lessor. While the lease of 1885 speaks of betterments which may be made by the Southern Pacific Company as lessee, the change which was being made in the road upon which the accident occurred was not in the nature of a betterment under the lease. The change was an improvement, not being made on any road which was embraced in the lease, but upon one which was not included in it. See Betterments, vol. 4, Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 7; vol. 5 Cyc., p. 684.

It is insisted, however, that if the lease of 1885 did not embrace this subsequently constructed road, there was sufficient evidence to sustain an implied lease of it from the defendant to the Southern Pacific Company, as also sufficient evidence to establish a parol lease. The only testimony for which support in either of these positions can be claimed is that of C. P. Lincoln, assistant secretary of the defendant, who testified that the Southern Pacific Company was operating the roads all down in the locality where the accident happened. He identified the lease of 1885, and testified on direct examination that the line changes as made were turned into the operating company—the Southern Pacific Company—under that lease, and that this latter company was operating those lines and accounting for the profits under that lease. On cross-examination he stated he reached his conclusion in relation to that matter from the lease itself and by seeing the distribution of profits from year to year, and making entries thereof in the books of the company, that he inferred from his knowledge of the lease of 1885 and these entries that the Southern Pacific Company was operating all of the line under that lease, and that this was the entire source of his information. He testified, also, as additional information on the subject, that the annual report of the Southern Pacific Company showed the lines leased by the Southern Pacific Company, and in that showing appeared the Southern Pacific Railroad as one of its leased lines—that is, an addition—that from that report and the entries in his books and inspection of the lease he drew the conclusion that all these new roads were new additions to the main road and were operated under the lease. It is apparent that the testimony of this witness was directed to the lease of 1885, and amounted simply to a conclusion on his part that the lease embraced all roads, including the premises in question, acquired by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company subsequent to the making of the lease, as well as those owned by that company at the date of the lease. This testimony had no tendency to prove an implied contract of lease, but amounted only to an inference on the part of the witness, from the data which he had in the office of the company, that these subsequently built or acquired roads were embraced in the lease of 1885. This testimony, however, was incompetent and ineffectual for that purpose. The lease was clear and plain to the point that only railroads owned by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company at its date were embraced in it; and, this being true, it was not permissible, and the evidence was incompetent to extend the terms of the lease by parol evidence so as to embrace the subsequently acquired roads in it. Phil. Elec. R. R. Co. v. Trimble, 10 Wall. 367, 19 L. Ed. 948; Morris v. Kettle, 57 N. J. Law, 218, 30 Atl. 879; Ralya v. Atkins, 157 Ind. 331, 61 N. E. 726; Holston v. Campbell, 89 Va. 396, 16 S. E. 274; Devlin on Deeds, § 840. Neither did this evidence prove an oral lease.

There was nothing to show that any negotiations were entered into relative to such a lease. No action of the officers of either corporation to that end is shown, nor the terms of any such lease. Aside from the lease of 1885, which we have seen did not embrace the road in question, there is only the evidence of the witness Lincoln upon which any claim of a parol lease can be based. But all this witness testified to was that the Southern Pacific Company operated the roads and accounted for the profits. This, however, did not establish a parol lease, because such operation would be consistent with other conventional relations aside from leasing; it would be equally consistent with the relation of principal and agent or employer and employé, or with the existence of a trackage contract or a mere license.

In this country it is the accepted doctrine and general rule that, as a railroad company receives a public franchise involving the discharge of great public duties and entailing responsibilities to the public, among other things, in the operation of its road, it cannot escape responsibility, or avoid the discharge of the duties and obligations imposed under its franchise, by voluntarily leasing its road to be operated by another company. It can only relieve itself from responsibility for injuries resulting from such operation by showing a lease made to the operating company under statutory authority. 1 Elliott on Railroads (2d Ed.) § 427 et seq.; Gulf, C. & S. R. Co. v. Miller, 98 Tex. 270, 83 S. W. 182; Singleton v. Southwestern R. R. Co., 70 Ga. 464, 48 Am. Rep. 574; Abbott v. Johnstown, etc., R. R. Co., 80 N. Y. 27, 36 Am. Rep. 572; R. R. Co. v. Brown, 84 U. S. 445, 21 L. Ed. 675; Thomas v. R. R. Co., 101 U. S. 71, 25 L. Ed. 950. Legislative authority exists in this state, under the act of 1880 referred to, whereby a corporation may lease its railroad property to another company, and will be relieved from personal liability for an injury resulting merely from the negligent operation and handling of trains by the lessee. Lee v. S. P. R. R. Co., 116 Cal. 97, 47 Pac. 932. Relief from such liability, however, only exists where there is proof of a lease made as provided in the act, and it was the duty of the defendant to bring itself within the terms of the exemption under the act by showing such a lease. This it did not do. As we have heretofore said, a corporation shown to be the owner of a railroad is presumed to be in actual possession and operation of it, and this presumption is not repelled by proof merely that some other company at the time of an accident resulting from its operation was operating cars over it. Under the presumption the burden is upon the owner to show, when the question of liability for injury by moving cars arises, that the cars which inflicted the injury were under the control and operation of some other company by virtue of the lease of the road. The portion of the road here in question was not embraced in the lease of 1885. There was no proof of an implied lease, or an oral lease, and, the presumption from the ownership of the road by it being that the operation of the cars of any other company over it was permitted under some contractual arrangement or relation other than a lease, which, under the statute, could alone relieve it from liability for the injury complained of, the motion of defendant to have the court instruct the jury to return a verdict in defendant's favor, on the ground that, if any responsibility existed, it was that of the Southern Pacific Company, was properly denied.

The court in one of its instructions stated to the jury that the defendant by its answer admitted that its train approached and passed over the bridge, but denied that it was negligent in its management. Appellant claims that this was error, because it insists that the answer raised an issue as to whether appellant caused this, or any train, to approach the crossing. It is very doubtful whether any such issue was raised by the pleadings; but, assuming that it was, we do not think the verdict should be disturbed because of the instruction. We cannot see how appellant could be injuriously affected under the evidence by giving it. As the defendant was the admitted owner of the road and the rolling stock being operated on it, it was responsible in law for any accident occasioned by such operation by any other company, unless it could establish that such other company was operating the road under a lease, as provided in the act of 1880. It did not establish it; and, in the absence of proof of a lease, the defendant was in law responsible for the operation of any train over its track. For all purposes of responsibility any train operated over the road was its train, even though operated by another company. Singleton v. Southwestern R. R. Co., supra; Abbott v. Johnstown, etc., R. R. Co., supra. Under these circumstances, it would not have been error on the part of the court to have stated to the jury directly that the defendant was in law liable for any injury occasioned by the operation of the train, provided they found that it was being operated carelessly and negligently in approaching the crossing, as alleged in the complaint, and it was not shown that the deceased had been guilty of contributory negligence. In this view, even conceding that it was not proper, according to appellant's theory of the pleadings, for the court to instruct the jury that the defendant admitted that its train approached the crossing, still, as in the absence of proof of a lease of its road to any other company, which was operating its cars over the road, defendant was as fully liable for any injury occasioned by such operation as if it were itself actually running the cars, the error was of no consequence.

It is claimed that the court should have instructed the jury on the motion of defendant to return a verdict in its favor upon the ground that the evidence showed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence. The right of a defendant to have a jury so instructed can only obtain where the evidence conclusively establishes such negligence. It is only where no fact is left in doubt, and no deduction or inference other than negligence can be drawn by the jury from the evidence, that the court can say, as a matter of law, that contributory negligence is established. Even where the facts are undisputed, if reasonable minds might draw different conclusions upon the question of negligence, the question is one of fact for the jury. Seller v. Market St. Ry. Co. 139 Cal. 268, 72 Pac. 1006.

Referring somewhat to the evidence in the case at bar. The theory of the appellant is that, by reason of certain measurements made by their witnesses, and from observations made by them as to the points along Hollister avenue traveled by Olin Johnson and his mother, from which a train approaching the crossing was visible, and taking into consideration respectively the gait at which the horse was going and the rate of speed at which the railroad train was approaching the crossing, it conclusively appeared that neither the deceased nor her son looked for the train. It is reasoned therefrom that, if they had looked, they could have seen the train approaching, and as they did not see it, they must therefore not have looked. But the facts upon which this theory is based are not so definitely and exactly fixed as to warrant the deduction as a matter of law. The observations of the witnesses of defendant were made some four and a half years after the accident, and the physical condition of things along the plane of observation from Hollister avenue to the railroad track was different from what it was at the time of the accident. Aside from the fact that at several points along Hollister avenue it was obstructed by trees, the evidence shows that at a point on the avenue 150 feet west of the crossing the view of the railroad track was obstructed by a large growth of tall mustard on a knoll, so that approaching trains could not be seen further than a distance of 300 feet at that point on the avenue. As to the gait of the horse and the rate of speed of the train, these are indefinite—the horse was jogging along probably five miles an hour, the train running about 15 miles an hour. The evidence of the plaintiff Olin Johnson is that both he and his mother were familiar with the crossing, and the latter nervous about approaching it; that they stopped, looked, and listened for the train at a point on Hollister avenue, heretofore referred to, and saw or heard none; that his mother cautioned him to drive slowly; that he did so, both of them repeatedly looking and listening for the train, but saw or heard nothing of it, until as he drove under the crossing, the noise of its approach frightened the horse and resulted in the death of his mother. The testimony of the fireman of the train (the engineer had died before the trial) was that he saw the horse running from under the bridge as the train passed over it. The testimony of several witnesses driving easterly and westerly under the crossing at the time the accident happened, and who were as favorably situated as the Johnsons for seeing the train, and looked to see if it was approaching, was that at that time there was no train in sight. The fireman testified that the train was moving downgrade at about 15 miles an hour. This was but an estimate on his part, given years after the accident. It is a rule of physics that the momentum of bodies increases as they proceed down an inclined plane, and the jury might have well taken this rule into consideration in connection with the testimony of plaintiffs and their witnesses in determining whether, in approaching the crossing on a downgrade, the speed of the train was not greater than 15 miles an hour. If the speed was greater, the observations of the witnesses for defendant that the train could be seen at points along the track from stations on Hollister avenue, being based on a speed of 15 miles an hour, would become unimportant, as at the greater speed the train would not be in sight, when at the lesser speed, and from their points of observation, it might be visible. It is to be noted, too, that the observations made by the witnesses for defendant did not take into calculation the large growth of mustard—upwards of 5 feet in height—upon the knoll as it existed when the accident occurred. It was not there when they made their observations. The evidence shows that this growth obstructed a view beyond 300 feet down the track at a point 150 feet on Hollister avenue from the crossing. The jury had before them the testimony of plaintiff Olin Johnson, and the other witnesses in behalf of plaintiff, that they looked as they approached the crossing, and saw no train in sight; the testimony of the fireman that as the train crossed the horse galloped from under the bridge; the obstruction of the mustard growth to observation by the Johnsons, and the indefinite evidence as to the speed of the train and the downgrade. The jury had the right to accept the testimony of the witnesses for the plaintiff, and the other circumstances referred to, and to draw such inferences therefrom as they reasonably warranted. It cannot be said it was an unreasonable inference for them to draw that the train approached the crossing at a greater rate of speed than 15 miles an hour, and that this fact, with the growth of mustard obstructing their view of the track as they reached the crossing, prevented the Johnsons from seeing the train at any point when it would be in sight, according to the observation of the witnesses of defendant based on a speed of 15 miles an hour, and when they could have checked their further approach to the crossing or turned back to avoid danger. The condition of the evidence was such that the jury had a right to draw this inference, and hence, it was proper for the court to refuse to take the case from them.

Appellant complains of an instruction to the jury as to the elements of damage recoverable by the plaintiffs. The court instructed the jury that the husband was entitled to recover the value of the present and future services of the "wife and companion," and the children the value of the mother's "nurture and instruction, moral and physical, and intellectual training"; that they "must award such a lump sum for damages as will fully compensate the plaintiffs, both the husband and children, for the pecuniary value to them of the life of the wife and mother." Appellant's criticism of this instruction is that under it the jury were to take into consideration losses in common to all the plaintiffs, that the services, for the loss of which the children were entitled to recover, were obviously different from those for which the husband might recover, and that the damages intended by the statute to be recoverable are damages common to all the plaintiffs, and do not include parental care, and it was error for the court to instruct the jury that they might include in their verdict the value to the children of their mother's "nurture and instruction, moral and physical, and intellectual training." We state the position of appellant to say that the settled law of the state is against it. Just such an instruction as is here criticised was before the court in Redfield v. Oakland C. S. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 285, 42 Pac. 822, 1063. It was there held that, in the statutory action of this character, the children had a right to recover for the loss of such services as the trial court in this case specifically indicated they might, and as services distinct from those for the loss of which the husband might recover. This makes further discussion of appellant's point on the instruction unnecessary.

Several other grounds are advanced for a reversal, which, however, we deem untenable.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CITY OF SAN BUENAVENTURA et al. v. MCGUIRE. (Civ. 530.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. July 8, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Sept. 3, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ORDINANCES—REPEALING POWER—STATUTES—"MAYOR."

The general municipal act of March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), divides cities into six classes, provides for a mayor in the first four, makes him in the fourth class a member of the council, with the right to vote only in case of a tie, and in the last two classes requires the council to elect one of its members president, imposing on him the duty of signing all ordinances preliminary to publication, but giving him no veto power, and not requiring him to perform the duties of a mayor. Act March 27, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 190, c. 129), entitled, "An act to require ordinance and resolution passed by the city council or other legislative body of any municipality to be presented to the mayor, or other chief executive officer of such municipality, for his approval," provides (section 1) that every ordinance imposing a penalty passed by the council shall before it takes effect be presented to the mayor for his approval, and that, if it fails to receive his approval, it shall be lost, unless on its return it receives the votes of three-fourths of all the members, "provided that * * * this section shall not apply to cities in which the mayor is a member of the city council, or other governing body," and provides (section 4, p. 191) that in municipalities in which there is no mayor the duties imposed on said officer by the provisions of the act shall be performed by the president of the board of trustees, or other chief executive officer of the municipality. Held, that to prevent injustice and absurdity, the proviso in section 1 should be made to read "mayor or other chief executive," or the word "mayor" should be held to include all executive officers similarly situated, and thus prevent a construction giving the veto power to the president of the board of trustees of cities of the fifth and sixth classes, when it is denied to the mayor of cities of the fourth class.

2. MANDAMUS—COMPELLING PERFORMANCE OF MINISTERIAL ACT.

The act of the president of the board of trustees of a city of the first class in signing an ordinance, under Act March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49) providing that he shall sign all ordinances preliminary to their publication, being ministerial, may be enforced by writ of mandate.

3. SAME—PROPER PARTIES PLAINTIFF.

Conceding that a city and the members of its board of trustees are not all necessary parties to a petition to compel the signing of an ordinance by the president of the board, they are proper parties.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CONSIDERATION OF QUESTION OF CONSTITUTIONALITY—PARTIES AFFECTED.

The constitutionality of St. 1897, p. 190, c. 129, relative to presentation of ordinances to the chief executive of a city for his approval, will not be considered; no one affected by the act being before the court complaining, as, in fact, under its proper interpretation, it has no application to any city now organized.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, §§ 39, 43.]

Petition by the city of San Buenaventura and others, constituting a majority of the members of its board of trustees, for writ of mandate to William McGuire, as president of said board of trustees. Peremptory writ ordered.

Merle J. Rogers, for petitioners. Shepherd & Poplin, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Petition for writ of mandate. San Buenaventura is a city of the fifth class, the government of which, by the general municipal incorporation act of 1883, is vested in a board of five trustees. By a vote of three of the trustees, being the petitioners herein, an ordinance, in the exercise of the police power, was passed imposing a penalty. The president of the board and one other member thereof voted against such ordinance, and the president, respondent herein, refuses to sign the ordinance, and this proceeding is instituted to compel such action on the part of the president. A demurrer is interposed to the petition, general, as well as upon the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff. At the same time an answer was filed, to which a general demurrer is interposed.

The general act providing for the organization, incorporation, and government of municipal corporations, enacted March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), divides the cities of the state into six classes, in four of which a mayor is provided. And in the fourth class he is made a member of the council, with the right to vote only in case of a tie. In the fifth and sixth classes the city council is required to elect one of its members president. Among the duties imposed upon such president of the city council is the signing, in conjunction with the clerk, of all ordinances preliminary to their publication. No veto power is given to the president of the board of trustees in either class, nor is there anything in the act requiring the president of the board of trustees to perform the duties of the mayor. Afterwards, on March 27, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 190, c. 129), the Legislature passed an act entitled:

"An act to require ordinance and resolution passed by the city council or other legislative body of any municipality to be presented to the mayor, or other chief executive officer of such municipality, for his approval.

"Section 1. Every ordinance * * * imposing a penalty, which shall have passed the city council, shall, before it takes effect, be presented to the mayor for his approval. The mayor shall return such ordinance or resolution to the city council within ten days after receiving it. If he approve it, he shall sign it, and it shall then take effect. If he disapprove it, he shall specify his objections thereto in writing. If he do not return it with such disapproval within the time above specified, it shall take effect as if he had approved it. * * * If the ordinance or resolution shall fail to receive, upon the first vote thereon after its return with the mayor's disapproval, the affirmative votes of three-fourths of all the members, it shall be deemed finally lost, * * * provided, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to cities in which the mayor is a member of the city council, or other governing body.

"Sec. 2. The word 'municipality,' and the word 'city' as used in this act, shall be understood and so construed as to include, and is hereby declared to include, all corporations heretofore organized and now existing, and those hereafter organized, for municipal purposes."

"Sec. 4. In municipalities in which there is no mayor, then the duties imposed upon said officer by the provisions of this act shall be performed by the president of the board of trustees, or other chief executive officer of the municipality."

The duties devolving upon the president of the board of trustees, in relation to the signing of an ordinance of such a character as the one under consideration, must be determined by a proper construction of the acts above cited. An examination of the act of 1897, especially when we consider the language of section 2, impresses one with the conviction that the Legislature, under a mistaken idea that it could by general laws control all municipalities, even in their municipal affairs, undertook to define the manner in which all of such municipalities should enact their ordinances, and that it was the legislative intent that every municipality whose chief executive officer was not a member of the legislative body, and therefore not familiar with proposed legislation, should be provided with a copy of all ordinances passed for examination, that he might approve or disapprove the same. It is further manifest from the proviso that it was the legislative intent that such presentation of the copy of the ordinances, and subsequent acts of the chief executive in relation thereto, was neither necessary nor proper, where the chief executive was a member of the legislative body. It must be conceded that the Legislature was not happy in the manner in which it expressed this intent; for the act provides that the chief executive officer of municipalities having no mayor shall perform all of the duties imposed upon a mayor by section 1 of the act, which are the examination after presentation, and approval or disapproval, and in the proviso is mentioned only the "mayor," as distinguished from the other chief executive, and the whole of the act is open to the criticism of imposing, by section 4, certain duties upon the president of the board, from the performance of which, by the proviso, he is exempted. "The rule is well settled in this state, and most probably in all other states, that if a statute is ambiguous or doubtful, or susceptible of different constructions or interpretations, then such liberality of construction is justified as within a fair interpretation of its language will effect its apparent object and promote justice." Felton v. West, 102 Cal 269, 36 Pac. 676. To construe the act of 1897 as respondent contends, to the effect that the president of the board of trustees of a city of the fifth class is given veto power, is to say that the Legislature undertook to confer upon one member of the board of trustees, who should be selected to preside, power and authority to prevent the passage of any ordinance, except by the approval of every other member of the council except himself; and that as to cities of the fourth class the mayor, an independent officer, but who by the statute of 1883 is made a member of the city council, should for that reason, be shorn of such power and required to sign ordinances, whether approved or disapproved by him, if a majority of the council should pass them. Mr. Justice McFarland, in Re Mitchell, 120 Cal. 386, 52 Pac. 799, speaking for the court, says: "Where it [a statute] is fairly susceptible of two constructions, one leading inevitably to mischief or absurdity, and the other consistent with justice, sound sense, and wise policy, the former should be rejected and the latter adopted." Applying this rule, we are led to the conclusion that however ambiguous and uncertain the language of the section may be, and however difficult it may be to reconcile the two sections, nevertheless the general intent of the Legislature is so apparent that the proviso found in section 1 should be made to read "mayor or other chief executive," or that the word "mayor" should be held to include all executive officers similarly situated. Otherwise, injustice and an absurdity would result. The act of 1897, then, having no application to cities or towns in which the mayor or other chief executive is a member of the governing body, the acts of respondent here in question must be considered with reference to the provisions of the municipal corporation act relating to municipalities of the fifth class. It appears to be conceded that, so considered, the duty of the president of the board of trustees in signing and authenticating the ordinances of the town of San Buenaventura is a ministerial act, and one subject to enforcement by writ of mandate.

Counsel for respondent further contend that, assuming the ministerial character of the act, nevertheless the petition is defective, in that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff. It may be conceded that the city of San Buenaventura and the individuals composing the board were not all necessary parties, but it does not follow that they are improper parties. Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 358, 49 Pac. 206. The city as a legal entity affected by the ordinance is beneficially interested in all governmental questions within its jurisdiction, and may sue and be sued in all matters affecting the municipality. It certainly is interested in an ordinance, legally passed, the effectiveness of which is prevented by the failure of one of its officials to perform a ministerial act. On the other hand, the three members of the board of trustees, as trustees, upon whom the law has enjoined the duty of enacting legislation necessary for the protection of the citizens and in the interest of the public welfare, are interested in a manner different from the great mass of the public in seeing to the complete execution of their trust and the performance by others of ministerial acts necessary to the full protection of public rights. Commissioners v. Trustees, 71 Cal. 312, 12 Pac. 224.

It is further insisted that the act of 1897 is unconstitutional for various reasons assigned. We think it sufficient to say that this act under the constitutional amendment only applies "to cities and to their charters which have organized under the general scheme embraced in the municipal corporation act." Morton v. Broderick, 118 Cal. 487, 50 Pac. 644. It may be stated, further, that only cities of the fourth, fifth, and sixth classes, under any reading of the act, are affected, as all other classes mentioned in the municipal incorporation act are in fact governed by freeholders' charters. Under the interpretation above given to the act and its proviso, the same has no present application to any city of any class now organized, and no one affected by the act is before the court complaining.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the petition is sufficient to entitle the petitioners to the relief sought, and the demurrer thereto is overruled; further, that the answer, which, in effect, raises only the legal questions involved in the demurrer to the petition, constitutes no defense, and the demurrer to such answer should be sustained.

For the foregoing reasons, a peremptory writ of mandate should issue as prayed for, and it is ordered accordingly.

CITY OF SAN BUENAVENTURA et al. v. McGUIRE. (S. F. 5,053.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 3, 1908.)

In Bank. Petition for rehearing. Denied.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 97 Pac. 526.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a transfer of this cause, because it seems perfectly clear to me that the decision of the District Court of Appeal violates a canon of statutory construction universally accepted by common-law courts, and which in this state has been made a part of our Code law. "In the construction of a statute or instrument the office of the judge is simply to ascertain and declare what is in terms or in substance contained therein, not to insert what has been omitted, or to omit what has been inserted, and where there are several provisions or particulars, such a construction, is if possible, to be adopted as will give effect to all." Code Civ. Proc. § 1858. This rule requires that meaning and effect should be given to section 4 of the act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 191, c. 129), if possible. The construction adopted by the court deprives that section of all meaning, and of any possible effect, completely obliterates it from the statute, and this partly upon the ground of the supposed absurdity which would result from giving it effect, and partly upon the ground that, if the proviso at the end of section one is given any effect, there is a conflict between it and section 4, and that the proviso, being more reasonable, and more in accordance with the supposed general intent of the law, must prevail. In my opinion neither of these reasons holds good. The supposed absurd result of giving effect to section 4 is that it would be impossible to pass an ordinance imposing a penalty, or an ordinance of any other of the classes enumerated in section 1 of the act, without the vote of every other member of the board if the president happened to be opposed to its adoption. This must be conceded, but, if the Legislature had passed an act plainly requiring a unanimous vote of the board to give validity to an ordinance of any of the enumerated classes, I know of no ground upon which a court could take upon itself to enforce an ordinance which had received only four out of five votes in the council. And if, giving effect to all the provisions of the act of 1897, it must be conceded that four out of five votes are required to pass such an ordinance against the opposition of the president, there appears to be even less justification for the judicial enforcement of such an ordinance when it has been passed by the vote of a bare majority of the board and against the opposing vote of the president.

As to the supposed conflict between the proviso, if given any effect, and section 4, it proves to be an unfounded supposition when it is shown that the purpose of the proviso is fulfilled in applying it to municipal corporations of the fourth class, in which class, and in which class alone, the mayor—an officer elected by the people—is made a member, eo nomine, of the council, the legislative body, and given a casting vote in the passage of ordinances. St. 1883, p. 226, c. 49. The proviso, I say, has its full effect in its application to corporations of the fourth class, and there was a valid and perfectly apparent reason why the mayor in that class of corporations should be specially excepted from the requirements of the act of 1897; for by section 670 of the municipal corporations act his veto power and the mode of its exercise was already clearly and exactly defined. If his power was not to be enlarged, the proviso was necessary, and, as its only effect was to leave the mayors of that class of corporations with the same veto power they had been accustomed to exercise, we are bound to suppose that was what the Legislature meant. In this view there is no conflict between the proviso and section 4. The first applies to cities where the mayors elected by popular vote are members of the city council—cities of the fourth class. The second applies to cities in which there are no mayors, eo nomine, independent officers elected by popular vote, but only a president of the board of trustees, viz. (cities of the fifth and sixth class), upon whom the duties prescribed by the act are devolved. There is, in my opinion, no conflict in the different provisions of the act, no ambiguity or uncertainty, and nothing in the result of its enforcement according to its terms which a court is entitled to pronounce an absurdity which the Legislature cannot be supposed to have contemplated.

I think the writ of mandate should have been denied.

TOOMEY et al. v. KNOBLOCH et al.
(Giv. 503.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
July 24, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ASSESSMENTS FOR STREET IMPROVEMENTS—VALIDITY—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 378, providing that all persons having an interest in the "subject of the action," may be joined as plaintiffs, owners in severalty of different lots may join as plaintiffs in a suit for the cancellation of the warrant of assessment for street work, though the lien on each lot is separate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1203.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—MISJOINDER OF PARTIES—RULINGS ON DEMURRER.

Any misjoinder of parties plaintiff in an action by owners in severalty of different lots for the cancellation of the warrant of assessment for street work is without prejudice to defendant; and the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint on that ground does not warrant the reversal of a judgment against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4070.]

3. PLEADING—DENIAL—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action by owners in severalty of different lots for the cancellation of the warrant of assessment for street work, an answer which denies that a plaintiff claiming to own two lots now is or ever has been the owner of two lots does not deny the ownership, for a denial in the conjunctive raises no issue as to the ownership of either of the lots, and relieves plaintiff of the duty of proving ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 263.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by W. F. Toomey and others against F. Knobloch and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. P. Bernhard, for appellants. Southland & Barbour, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. By the judgment it was determined that certain assessments for street work are void, and the cancellation of the entire record of the warrant, assessment, and diagram in the office of the superintendent of streets was adjudged because unauthorized by law.

There are only two reasons urged by appellants for a reversal of the judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial, neither of which possesses any substantial merit. The plaintiffs are the owners in severalty of different lots, and the contention is made that they are improperly joined as plaintiffs, and that, therefore, the demurrer to that effect should have been sustained. But the trial court was right in its ruling because the statute expressly authorizes the joinder of plaintiffs in one action to accomplish a common purpose. Section 378 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "all persons having an interest in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs." It is true that it is not always easy to determine "the subject of the action." Mr. Pomeroy says: "The term does not seem capable of any clear and complete analysis, and the result is that it may denote the thing if any—land, chattel, person, fund, estate, and the like—in respect of which rights are sought to be maintained and duties enforced, or it may denote the sum of the questions between the parties to be determined by the judgment of the court." Pomeroy's Remedies (4th Ed.) § 384.

In the case at bar, though, the only thing in controversy affecting the rights of the parties is the validity of the assessment, and there is no good reason why that should not be considered the subject of the action. It is true that the lien as to each lot is separate and distinct, and the relief sought is the cancellation of as many distinct liens as there are lots affected by the alleged invalid assessment, but the common ground of complaint in which all the plaintiffs are interested is that the warrant of assessment, the source and basis of all the alleged liens, is invalid, and hence there is no support for the claim against any of the property, and the relief demanded which affects all who are joined in the action is the cancellation of said warrant. The adjudication of this common interest and the determination and application of this common relief in favor of plaintiffs necessarily lead to the removal of the cloud upon the title to all the property. It must be clear, therefore, that all the plaintiffs are interested in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded, and, even if not all necessary, they were at least proper parties to the proceeding. Owen v. Frink, 24 Cal. 177; People v. Morrell, 26 Cal. 361; Churchill v. Lauer, 84 Cal. 236, 24 Pac. 107; Pomeroy's Remedies (3d Ed.) § 183; 21 Ency. Plead. & Prac. pp. 463-466. But again, if the ruling of the court was technically erroneous, it is perfectly clear that defendants were not prejudiced thereby. Daly v. Ruddell, 137 Cal. 674, 70 Pac. 784; Woollacott et al. v. Meekin, 151 Cal. 701, 91 Pac. 612. In the latter case it is said: "Assuming that there was a misjoinder of parties plaintiff in an action by 12 persons owning separate lots of land to obtain a decree declaring void such assessment and the bonds issued thereon constituting a lien on their land, still such misjoinder was without prejudice to the defendant, and the overruling of a demurrer to the complaint on that ground will not warrant the reversal of a judgment against the defendant."

The other point urged by appellants is as easily disposed of. It was not necessary for plaintiffs to prove the title, for the reason, as pointed out by respondents, that it was not denied by defendants. The attempted denial is in this form: "This defendant has no information or belief with reference to the allegations contained in paragraph 1 of said complaint sufficient to answer the same, and basing his denial upon that ground, denies that the plaintiff, W. F. Toomey, now is or ever has been the owner of lot 7 and the north half of lot 8 of Griffith's addition." The denials are similar as to the other plaintiffs, each of whom claims to own more than one lot. It is too well settled for further controversy that such a denial in the conjunctive raises no issue as to the ownership of either of the lots, and hence relieves the plaintiff from any legal duty to prove the allegation. Leroux v. Murdock, 51 Cal. 541; Young v. Miller, 63 Cal. 302; Wise v. Rose, 110 Cal. 163, 42 Pac. 569; Nolan v. Hentig, 138 Cal. 283, 71 Pac. 440.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 588
BOURI v. SPRING VALLEY WATER CO.
(Civ. 487.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Aug. 1, 1908.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES.—WATER COMPANIES—SUPPLYING WATER FOR DOMESTIC PURPOSES—OBLIGATIONS.

A company supplying water for domestic purposes must, on furnishing water for a boiler used in operating a laundry, use such appliances in connection with its pipe system as will effectually keep water supplied by it and once used from returning through the feed pipes to the mains, thereby preventing the pollution of the water in the mains.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 270.]

2. SAME.

One receiving from a company which also supplies water for domestic purposes water for his boiler used in a laundry has no right to use the feed pipes for the purpose of relieving the boiler of excessive pressure, but he must provide in connection with the boiler safety appliances for the escape of steam, thus relieving the boiler of excessive pressure.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 270.]

3. SAME.

A company supplying water for domestic purposes also supplied water for a boiler used in a laundry. It knew that the owner of the boiler was in the habit of wrongfully using its pipes to relieve the boiler of excessive pressure, and that he had provided no other means of disposing of the surplus steam. It installed a check valve in the feed pipes through which it conveyed water to the boiler with knowledge that the effect of the installation would be to cause the boiler to explode because of excessive steam pressure, and it failed to give any notice to the owner. Held, that it was liable for the explosion of the boiler caused by excessive pressure.

4. SAME—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint in an action against a water company for the explosion of a boiler, resulting from the installation of a check valve in the pipe, which supplied water to the boiler, which alleges that, when the check valve was attached, the company knew that it would confine the hot water and steam in the boiler, and prevent the same from passing through the feed pipe so as to relieve the boiler from excessive pressure, etc., is bad on demurrer for failing to clearly allege that the company knew that plaintiff was, at the time of the installation of the check valve, using the feed pipe as a vent, and had no other means of relieving the pressure in the boiler.

5. SAME.

Where plaintiff suing for the explosion of a boiler was primarily at fault for failing to provide the boiler with safety appliances for the escape of steam, and he wrongfully used defendant's feed pipe through which water for the boiler was supplied by defendant, he must, to state a cause of action against defendant, clearly show that the act of defendant in installing the check valve in the feed pipe, and thereby preventing the escape of steam from the boiler causing it to explode, was negligence so flagrant as to overcome the wrongful act of plaintiff himself.

6. PLEADING — DEMURRER — SUSTAINING DEMURRER WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND.

Where plaintiff was afforded two opportunities to amend his complaint, so as to overcome objections raised by general demurrer, and he was familiar with the defects in the pleading, it was not error on sustaining a demurrer to the second amended complaint to sustain it without leave to amend, and render judgment for defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Henri Bouri against the Spring Valley Water Company. From a judgment for defendant, on sustaining a demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. F. Chapman, for appellant. A. E. Shaw, for respondent.

HART, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the defendant. This appeal is from said judgment.

The action was commenced for the purpose of recovering damages from the defendant for injuries sustained to certain property of plaintiff, and which are alleged to have been caused through the negligent acts of the defendant. The defendant is a corporation whose principal place of business is in the city and county of San Francisco, and is engaged in the business of supplying water to the inhabitants of said city and county for domestic purposes.

The second and third paragraphs of the complaint recite the history of the transaction out of which the controversy arises, and contain the gravamen of the complaint, and we therefore here present said paragraphs in their entirety:

"(2) That on the 12th day of July, 1905, at the time of the explosion hereinafter mentioned, and for a long time prior thereto, and including the month of June 1905, said plaintiff was maintaining and operating a laundry at number 514 Central avenue, in said city and county of San Francisco; that during all of said times said plaintiff used in said laundry a galvanized iron boiler of large capacity, to wit, of 100 gallons of water, for the purpose of heating water in said boiler, to be used in the operation of said laundry, all of which was well known to said defendant, its servants, and employes during all of said time, and at the time the check valve was attached to the pipe as hereinafter mentioned; that during all of said time said defendant, through a pipe attached to said boiler, supplied water to said boiler, from a main of said defendant in the adjoining street, for the purpose of being used in said laundry; that said plaintiff paid said defendant the charges demanded and required by said defendant for the water thus supplied.

"(3) That on or about the 20th day of June, 1905, said defendant, by its servants and employes and without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff, attached a check valve to said pipe through which said defendant supplied water to said boiler, as hereinbefore stated, to wit, in the feed pipe leading from said main to said boiler; that said check valve thus attached confined the hot water and steam in said boiler, and thus prevented the same from passing through said feed pipe so as to relieve said boiler from excessive pressure, and that, by reason of said check valve being thus attached, the pressure of the hot water and steam in said boiler was greatly increased, and, in consequence thereof, said boiler did on said 12th day of July, 1905, explode with great force and violence, and by reason thereof the said building where said laundry was maintained and operated was greatly damaged and injured; that prior to the time said check valve was thus attached to said pipe sufficient of the hot water and steam in said boiler did pass through said feed pipe so as to relieve said boiler from excessive pressure; that at the time said check valve was thus attached to said pipe the said defendant, its servants, and employes, who thus attached said check valve to said pipe, well knew that the operation of said check valve when thus attached to said pipe would be to confine the hot water and steam in said boiler, and prevent the same from passing through said feed pipe so as to relieve said boiler from excessive pressure of said hot water and steam, and said defendant, its servants, and employes should reasonably have then known that thus attaching said check valve to said pipe was liable to cause said boiler to explode; * * * said plaintiff had no knowledge or information that said check valve had been attached to said pipe until after the explosion hereinbefore mentioned occurred; that the act of attaching said check valve to said pipe as above stated was a careless and negligent act on the part of said defendant, and its said servants and employes." The demurrer is both general and special. We are of the opinion that the general demurrer was properly sustained. It is therefore unnecessary to refer to the special demurrer.

The contention of the respondent is that the allegations of the complaint disclose such contributory negligence upon the part of plaintiff in the management of the boiler, the bursting of which as alleged caused the damage complained of, as to destroy his right of recovery, inasmuch as there is nothing in said complaint showing that plaintiff had equipped said boiler with safety appliances for relieving the pressure. It must be conceded that it was and is the duty of the defendant to invoke the use of such appliances in connection with its pipe system as will effectually keep water supplied by it and once used from returning through the feed pipes to the mains, thereby preventing the pollution of the water in the mains, and thus the impairment of its potableness or use for general domestic purposes. It must further be conceded that the plaintiff had no right or authority to use the feed pipe for the purpose of relieving the boiler of excessive pressure, but that it was his duty to provide, in connection with said boiler, safety appliances or a vent for the escape or venting of the steam from said boiler and thus relieving it of inordinate pressure. It may also be stated as a well-settled rule of the law of torts that if the plaintiff had used, though wrongfully, the pipes of the defendant for the purpose of relieving the said boiler of excessive pressure, and the defendant knew that plaintiff was and had been accustomed to so using said pipes, and that the plaintiff himself had provided no other means for disposing of surplus steam and thus relieving the pressure, and the defendant installed a check valve in the feed pipe through which it conveyed water to the premises and for the use of plaintiff, knowing that plaintiff was using said pipes for that purpose, and had knowledge and knew that the effect of the installation of said check valve in said feed pipe would be to cause the boiler to explode, and the defendant under such circumstances established said check valve in said feed pipe without notifying the plaintiff of the fact, the defendant would be liable for any damage sustained by plaintiff by reason of the bursting of said boiler because of the installation of said check valve in said feed pipe. The principle thus enunciated may be found to be at the bottom of that class of cases where a person, without right or license, habitually passes over the premises of another. If the owner of such premises should dig a ditch across the pathway over which he knew the trespasser was accustomed to pass at night, without informing or notifying such trespasser of the existence of the ditch, and the latter, as was his custom, should undertake to pass over the pathway in an ordinarily careful manner and fall into such ditch and sustain injuries thereby, there could be suggested no reason in law why the tort-feasor should not be required to respond in damages for his act, amounting, as it would, under such circumstances, to criminal negligence at least. If deliberately done, with the intent that it should result in injury to the trespasser, it would manifestly amount to a positive act of criminality. The fundamental principle of this proposition is that a person suffering from the wrongful act of another must appeal to the law for his remedy. He cannot, in other words, as a rule, take the law into his own hands and furnish his own means of redress. In the case at bar, as before observed, if the plaintiff by direct and unequivocal averments had disclosed knowledge on the part of the corporation and its servants that he was using said feed pipe as his only available means of relieving the exploded boiler of undue pressure, and, without notifying plaintiff thereof, the defendant attached an appliance to said feed pipe, the necessary and inevitable effect of which was to so increase the pressure of hot water and steam in the boiler as to cause the explosion of the same, then we should say that without doubt he had stated a cause of action.

But we think the complaint is fatally defective in the respect to which we refer. The only allegation in the complaint which in anywise even approximately meets the criterion by which we believe and have declared that the sufficiency of such pleading must be tested is found in the following averment: "That at the time said check valve was thus attached to said pipe the said defendant, its servants, and employes, who thus attached said check valve to said pipe, well knew that the operation of said check valve when thus attached to said pipe would be to confine the hot water and steam in said boiler and prevent the same from passing through said feed pipe so as to relieve said boiler from excessive pressure of said hot water and steam," etc., followed by an averment that the defendant and its employes should have personally known that the effect of attaching said check valve to said pipe would be to cause the boiler to explode,

This allegation is not, in our opinion, sufficiently direct and specific to bring the matter of the conditions existing as to the operation of said boiler at the time of the installation of the check valve to the knowledge of the defendant. It may be true that a strong inference from said allegation, referring as it does to the particular check valve which caused the trouble, is that the defendant must have known that plaintiff had been and was using the feed pipe as a vent through which the boiler was relieved of excessive pressure. But we think that in a case where, as here, the plaintiff was primarily at fault, or engaged in doing a wrong as against the defendant, and had failed to provide the boiler itself, as it was his duty to do, with safety appliances, to perform functions which he wrongfully forced upon the feed pipe, not intended to be so used, he should be required to make it appear absolutely clear and unquestionable that the act of the defendant constituted the grossest kind of negligence—negligence so flagrant as to fully overcome or eliminate as a factor in the case the wrongful act of the plaintiff himself. In other words, the complaint should not only show, as it does clearly enough, that the defendant and its employés failed to give the plaintiff notice of the installation of the check valve at the very time it was adjusted to the pipe, or notice of their intention to connect the same with said pipe previously to its installation, but it should be made to clearly appear that the defendant knew that plaintiff was at the very time of the installation of said check valve using said feed pipe as a vent and had no other means of relieving the boiler of excessive pressure. The latter fact does not clearly and distinctly appear in the complaint, and failure to so state it leaves the plaintiff in the position of asking for a judgment for damages to his property to the infliction of which he contributed by his own negligence, or which would not have occurred but for his own inexcusable remissness. As stated, it was defendant's duty to connect a check valve to the feed pipe if, in its judgment, it was necessary to do so to preserve the purity and potableness of the water it was supplying for domestic purposes. There was no duty cast upon it to assume that the plaintiff had not provided appropriate means for the protection and preservation of his own property. To the contrary, the defendant had the right to assume, if indeed the matter ever at all occurred to "its mind," that the plaintiff had done his duty by equipping his boiler with all the necessary appliances for the safe and proper operation thereof.

The plaintiff was afforded two opportunities to amend his complaint so that it would state facts sufficient to overcome the objections raised to it by the general demurrer. We must assume that the questions presented were fully discussed and argued before the court below, and the plaintiff thus made thoroughly familiar with the particular respect wherein his pleading was deficient. It is therefore probable that the plaintiff is without the facts necessary to bring himself within the views herein expressed on the allegations requisite to state a cause of action against the defendant. As the Supreme Court says in Dukes v. Kellogg, 127 Cal. 563, 60 Pac. 44, "the failure to make a good pleading probably arises in a lack of facts rather than in the fault of the pleader."

For the reasons set forth herein, the judgment is affirmed.

BANK OF MENDOCINO v. BROWN.
(Civ. 493.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
July 24, 1908.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING — LIQUIDATION — POWERS OF BANK COMMISSIONERS.

Under the law creating the bank commissioners and defining their powers, requiring the commissioners to examine the condition of every banking corporation in liquidation in the same manner as in case of solvent banks, and providing that subject to the right of removal and appointment the directors of banking corporations in liquidation shall manage the affairs thereof under the direction of the bank commissioners, etc., the business of closing up the affairs of a banking corporation in liquidation is vested in the directors of the corporation, and the bank commissioners have authority over the directors and the affairs of the corporation only for the purpose of safeguarding the depositors and stockholders against an extravagant or fraudulent administration.

2. SAME — OFFICERS — SALARIES — POWER TO FIX.

St. 1895, p. 177, c. 167, § 12, giving the bank commissioners power to limit the number and salaries of employés of banking corporations in liquidation, amends St. 1887, p. 92, c. 80, giving the commissioners power "to designate the number of officers and employés necessary to close up the business * * * and to fix the salaries of the same"; and under it the commissioners are empowered to fix the maximum number of employés of banking corporations in liquidation, and to fix their maximum salaries, and, where the commissioners have fixed such limitation, the directors of the corporation must fix the number of employés and their salaries within such limit.

3. SAME.

In an action by a banking corporation for money collected and retained by an officer, the answer admitted receiving the money in the capacity as officer, and alleged that the officer retained the same in part payment of his compensation for services as secretary and manager during the liquidation of the corporation, and set forth an express agreement to pay him a specified sum per month as his salary without alleging between whom the agreement was made. Held, that the allegation of an agreement to pay him a salary referred to the action of the bank commissioners fixing the limit of the salary and the answer failed to show a valid agreement fixing his salary.

4. SAME.

Where the directors of a banking corporation in liquidation failed purposely or negligently to fix the salary of its secretary and manager, though the bank commissioners fixed the maximum salary to be paid him, he could only recover on a quantum meruit.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Where, on a quantum meruit for services, witnesses variously fixed the value of the services, a finding of the court on the question of value is conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by the Bank of Mendocino against Albert Brown. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and, from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas, for appellant. T. L. Carothers and Mannon & Mannon, for respondent.

HART, J. This action was brought to recover from the defendant the sum of $11,400, alleged to have been collected and received by him for and on account of the plaintiff while he was acting in the capacity of secretary and manager of the latter, and which said sum, it is averred, defendant still retains and refuses to turn over to said plaintiff.

The facts disclosed by the pleadings and the evidence are briefly these: On the 10th day of February, 1896, an action was instituted in the name of the people by the Attorney General of the state, at the instance of the state bank commissioners, for the purpose of having the plaintiff adjudged insolvent, and that it was unsafe for said plaintiff to do business, and to have it enjoined from further carrying on business, except for the purposes of liquidation; that on the 10th day of March, 1896, a judgment was duly rendered and entered by the superior court of Mendocino county adjudging plaintiff insolvent and restraining it from further transacting business. Defendant was employed as secretary and manager of plaintiff to close up its affairs, and performed that service, the same covering a period of five years. The complaint alleges that plaintiff and its officers knew nothing of the money so collected and received for it by the defendant until June 26, 1905, when they were informed of the fact by one F. W. Stickney, who had theretofore been employed by the board of directors of the corporation to examine the books of account kept by defendant, showing his transactions for and on account of plaintiff, and by which examination the discovery of defendant's failure to account to plaintiff for all the moneys received for it by him was made. The defendant does not deny having received the money referred to in the complaint, but alleges that he retained the same in part payment of his compensation for his services as secretary and manager of plaintiff. He claims that his services were reasonably worth the sum of $200 per month, and that there is still due him, in addition to the amount sued for by plaintiff, the sum of $800, for which he asks judgment. Defendant further alleges that this action is barred by certain provisions of the statute or limitations. After hearing the evidence, the court found that the sum of $11,400, as alleged in the complaint, had been collected and received by defendant for plaintiff; that the defendant retained the same; that the plaintiff or its officers had no knowledge of the collection of said sum by defendant prior to June 26, 1905, on which date they were informed of said transactions of defendant by said Stickney; that no fixed compensation for defendant's services was agreed upon, and that the same was reasonably worth the sum of $160 per month, and no more; that the action is not barred by the statute of limitations; that the defendant performed services for the corporation between the 1st day of September, 1900, and the 1st day of June, 1905, for which he was entitled, in the aggregate, to the sum of $9,120; and that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment against defendant for the sum of $2,880. This appeal is from the order denying the defendant a new trial.

No question is raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the court's findings, the only point presented involving the rulings of the court rejecting evidence offered by the defendant in support of the claim that the state bank commissioners, after the plaintiff corporation had been adjudged insolvent and ordered into liquidation, fixed the salary of the defendant, as secretary and manager of said corporation, at the sum of $200 per month, and that he was therefore entitled to such salary. Upon the controverted point it is the position of the appellant that, by the provisions of the law defining the powers of the bank commissioners, said officials are not only vested with the exclusive power of designating the number of persons to be employed in closing up the business of a banking institution in liquidation, but also of fixing the salaries of such employes. The contention of the respondent is, and such was the view taken by the court below, that the law does not contemplate that the bank commissioners shall either employ or fix the salaries of the employes, but are only empowered, in order to cause an expeditious and economical termination of the affairs of a banking institution adjudged insolvent, to control the matter of the maximum number of employes to be employed to perform the work and to limit their salaries. It is argued that, when the bank commissioners have fixed a limit within which such salaries shall be kept, the officers of the bank may then fix such salaries either up to or below the limit so fixed.

The law creating the bank commissioners and defining the powers of its members does not contemplate, in our opinion, that the business of winding up the affairs of an insolvent bank in liquidation shall be conducted in person by the bank commissioners themselves. To the contrary, it appears to be the purpose of the act to place the responsibility of closing up the affairs of such corporation upon its officers, who must carry on the work under the general supervision of the commissioners. This power of general supervision is expressly given, yet we doubt not that the very same power and the same authority could be exercised by said commissioners under the provision requiring them to examine the "condition of every such corporation, in liquidation, in the same manner as in the case of solvent banks." After providing that, in case of vacancies occurring in the membership of the board of directors or trustees, the court in which the corporation has been adjudged insolvent and ordered into liquidation may, by appointment, fill the same, or may, for sufficient cause, remove any director or trustee, the act further provides: "Subject to this right of removal and appointment, the Directors or Trustees of all banking corporations in liquidation shall be permitted to conduct the management of the affairs of such corporations during the process of liquidation, under the direction of the Bank Commissioners," etc. From this, as well as from what appears to be the general scheme of the act, it was manifestly intended by the Legislature that the business of closing up the affairs of a banking corporation in process of liquidation should be managed by the directors or trustees of such corporation, and that the bank commissioners are vested with authority over the directors and the affairs of the corporation for the purpose only of safeguarding the depositors and stockholders against an extravagant or fraudulent administration of the business. The act, as observed, provides that the bank commissioners shall limit the number of employes to be employed in closing up the affairs of an insolvent banking corporation. This power cannot, of course, be exercised by the directors or trustees; but it will not be doubted that, after the number has been fixed by the commissioners, the directors, if they determine that the full limit will be unnecessary to conduct the business, may employ any less number. When the commissioners have fixed the limit beyond which the directors are not authorized to extend the number of employes, they have exercised all the power in that respect conferred upon them by the act. So, in the case of the salaries of the employes, when the commissioners have fixed the maximum limit of their salaries, the duty of those officers in that regard has terminated, and the directors may fix such salaries at less than the amounts so limited. In other words, as we construe the provisions of the act as to the salaries of the employes, the commissioners may by resolution or otherwise declare the maximum amount which the directors may agree to pay to each employe as a salary, while the directors have the right to fix such compensation at any figure within such limit. This view is strengthened by a consideration of the amendment of the original provision with reference to the number of employes and their salaries by the Legislature of 1895, and by a comparison of the language of said amendment with that of the law as it read prior to the change referred to. As the act read before said amendment, the bank commissioners had "the power to designate the number of officers and employes necessary to close up the business of any such corporation, and to fix the salaries of the same." See St. 1887, p. 92, c. 80. Under the amendment the board is given the power only of limiting the number of employes and also limiting the salaries of the same. See St. 1895, p. 177, c. 167, § 12. There is obviously a wide distinction between the language of the provision as originally enacted, and the language of the provision as amended. It is evident that, if the Legislature intended originally to vest full and exclusive power in the commissioners to absolutely control the number of employes and the matter of fixing their salaries, it has by the subsequent legislation on the subject withdrawn such power by leaving it with the directors of the corporation to fix both the number of employes and the amount of compensation to be paid to them for their services, after the commissioners have established the limit beyond which they are not permitted to go in either case. If, as we have suggested, the word "limit" as used in the statute with reference to the salaries of the employes is amenable to the interpretation contended for by the appellant, the same meaning must be attributable to the same word when used in connection with the number of employes to be employed in the work of closing up the affairs of an insolvent banking corporation. The result of such interpretation would be that, although the officers of such corporation are in a much better position than the bank commissioners to know and determine the number of employes actually necessary to do the work "expeditiously and economically," the former would have no discretion in the matter of the number of persons to be employed, but would be compelled to accept the full number limited by the commissioners. This would be perfectly absurd; yet it is plain that, if the proposition contended for by appellant is maintainable, the other rests upon equally as strong reason and consequently equally as supportable.

The defendant pleads in one part of his answer an express agreement to pay him the sum of $200 per month as his salary, but does not allege between whom and himself such agreement was made. Doubtless, however, this allegation refers to the action of the bank commissioners fixing the limit of the salary to be paid him. There is no pretense that there was any express agreement, to which the directors were parties, to pay the defendant the sum of $200 per month for his services, or any other specified amount. Having failed, whether from neglect or purposely is unimportant, to make an express agreement with the directors definitely fixing the compensation for his services, the defendant was required to rely upon a quantum meruit, and this he pleaded, and at the trial undertook to show that the reasonable value of the labor performed was $200 per month. The plaintiff's witnesses upon this point, however, variously fixed the value of his services at from $75 to $150 per month, and, as is conceded, the court's finding upon the question of the value of such services is conclusive here.

The excluded evidence, under the theory upon which it was offered, was immaterial, for the action of the commissioners fixing the limit of the salaries of the employes of an insolvent banking corporation in process of liquidation could be important only in a case where it was claimed that the salaries allowed or paid by the directors of such corporation were in excess of the limit fixed by the commissioners.

For the reasons herein given, the order is affirmed.

LINCOLN NORTHERN RY. CO. v. WISWELL. (Civ. 465.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
July 28, 1908.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN — COMPENSATION — PAYMENT—EXECUTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1252, providing that, where the sum assessed in eminent domain proceedings is not paid or deposited, defendant may have execution as in civil cases, does not authorize execution until after the expiration of the time fixed for making payment or deposit.

2. SAME—NATURE OF PROCEEDING.

In a proceeding under the statute to condemn, there is no element of contract.

3. SAME — JUDGMENT—"FINAL JUDGMENT"—"FINAL ORDER OF CONDEMNATION."

The "final judgment" in Code Civ. Proc. § 1251, providing that plaintiff in condemnation proceedings must, within 30 days after final judgment, pay the sum assessed, etc., is the judgment fixing the amount of damages, and is not the final order of condemnation authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1253, providing that, where the sum assessed in a condemnation proceeding has been paid, the court may make a final order of condemnation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2774-2798, 2802; vol. 8, p. 7663.]

4. SAME—DISMISSAL OF PROCEEDINGS—RIGHT OF PLAINTIFF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1251-1253, requiring plaintiff in condemnation proceedings to pay within 30 days after final judgment the sum assessed, authorizing execution as in civil cases on the same not being paid, etc., a plaintiff in condemnation proceedings may abandon the enterprise, and dismiss the action within the 30 days in which to make payment or deposit of the award and before payment or deposit on payment of defendant's costs.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, §§ 649, 650.]

5. SAME — COSTS ON DISMISSAL — ATTORNEY'S FEES.

Since under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255, providing that costs in condemnation proceedings may be allowed or not, the costs are such as ordinarily attend the trial of causes, and since the only provision for allowing attorney's fees is in section 1251, where the action is on the bond therein mentioned, there is no provision for payment to defendant of attorney's fees on dismissal by plaintiff of the proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by the Lincoln Northern Railway Company against Mattie M. Wiswell to condemn a right of way. From a judgment dismissing the action on motion of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Carlin and L. L. Chamberlain, for appellant. F. P. Tuttle, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action was to condemn a right of way over the land of defendant. Upon the verdict of the jury fixing the amount of the damages to defendant's property, the court on October 9, 1907, adjudged that plaintiff pay defendant, within 30 days from the date of the judgment, the sum fixed by the jury, to wit, $4,030.50, or deposit the same in court for the use of defendant, "and, upon said payment or deposit of said money as aforesaid within said time, a final order or decree of condemnation * * * shall be entered in this proceeding." On November 7, 1907, plaintiff gave notice that it would move the court to dismiss the action, upon the ground that plaintiff had never taken possession of the land sought to be condemned, and "will never enter upon said land and has abandoned the location of the route set forth in said complaint, and the right to condemn the same." In an affidavit heard with the motion plaintiff by its attorney set forth facts in support of the motion, stating, in addition to the grounds above set forth, that the sum awarded was excessive, that no payment or deposit had been made, and that plaintiff does not intend to do so within 30 days from the date of the judgment or at all, and that plaintiff intends to select a new location for the line of its railroad, and that the same will not pass over the lands of defendant. In an affidavit by counsel for defendant it is set forth that defendant was and is satisfied with the award of damages, and is ready to accept the same and permit plaintiff to take possession of the land, and that "defendant has nor does she intend to move for a new trial or take an appeal from the judgment or decree heretofore made by said court in said action." It is further stated that defendant incurred certain expenses in the action among which was an attorney's fee of at least $500. It appeared that, at the time of hearing said motion to dismiss, plaintiff paid to defendant her costs taxed in the action, which did not include any attorney's fee. Upon the hearing of the motion the court made and caused to be entered its order dismissing the action, from which defendant appeals.

We feel relieved from entering upon an examination of the cases as to the question when, or within what time, the plaintiff in condemnation proceedings may abandon the enterprise, decline to take the property, and dismiss the action. The case of Pool v. Butler, 141 Cal. 46, 74 Pac. 444, we regard as decisive of the question here. The facts in the two cases were not the same, but the discussion of the question in that case shows very clearly that in a case, as here, where the motion to dismiss on the ground that plaintiff had abandoned the enterprise and no longer desired the land is made before plaintiff is in default in paying or depositing the money awarded by the jury, defendant has no cause for complaint. Appellant urges that in Pool v. Butler no mention was made of section 1252 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the meaning of that section is still undetermined. It reads as follows: "Payment may be made to the defendants entitled thereto, or the money may be deposited in court for the defendants, and be distributed to those entitled thereto. If the money be not so paid or deposited, the defendants may have execution as in civil cases; and if the money cannot be made on execution, the court, upon a showing to that effect, must set aside and annul the entire proceedings, and restore possession of the property to the defendant, if possession has been taken by the plaintiff."

It is claimed that the judgment fixing the amount of damages is a final judgment, and gives to the defendant a vested right to the money; and this is argued from the fact that the statute gives the defendant an execution as in civil cases. It will be observed that the statute does not authorize execution to issue until after the 30 days have expired. We are not called upon to decide the rights of a defendant where the money awarded has been deposited within the 30 days required by section 1251 of the same Code, although Pool v. Butler, we think, does in fact decide that question also. We are to decide only whether the plaintiff may abandon the enterprise, and dismiss action upon payment of defendant's costs, within the 30 days given in which to make payment or deposit the money, when, in fact, no payment or deposit has been made. Upon this point we have no doubt of plaintiff's right to do so. In the proceeding under the statute to condemn there is no element of contract. Pool v. Butler. The final judgment mentioned in section 1251, as to payment of which reference is made in section 1252, is the judgment fixing the amount of damages, and is a final judgment in the proceeding, and is an appealable judgment (Cal. S. R. Co. v. S. P. R. R. Co., 67 Cal. 59, 7 Pac. 123); the subsequent final order of condemnation (section 1253) being an order after final judgment (Id.). Mr. Lewis says: "The weight of authority is that, in the absence of statutory provision upon the question, the effect of proceedings for condemnation is simply to fix the price at which the party condemning can take the property sought, and that even after confirmation or judgment the purpose of taking the property may be abandoned without incurring any liability to pay the awarded judgment." Lewis, Em. Dom. § 656. Whether or not this view correctly expresses the limit of the right to abandon, we have no hesitancy in holding that it is not reached where the plaintiff makes his election to abandon before he is called upon to pay the amount of the award; and we find nothing in section 1252 leading to any other conclusion. Section 1253 provides that when payments have been made and the bond given, if plaintiff elects to give one, as required by sections 1251 and 1252, "the court must make a final order of condemnation. * * * And a copy of the order must be filed in the office of the recorder of the county, and thereupon the property described therein shall vest in the plaintiff for the purposes therein specified." It was said in Pool v. Butler: "The vesting of the title to the deposit in the defendants is coincident with the vesting of the right to the land for the purposes for which it is sought." Here, however, the payment had not been made, and plaintiff gave notice of abandonment and moved to dismiss the action within the thirty days given in which to make payment, which presents a much stronger case for the exercise of the right to abandon than was that of Pool v. Butler.

Appellant makes the point that the court should have required payment of attorney's fees as part of the costs. Section 1255 provides that "costs may be allowed or not, and if allowed, may be apportioned between the parties on the same or adverse sides, in the discretion of the court." These costs are such as ordinarily attend the trial of causes. The only provision for allowing attorney's fees is found in section 1251, where the action is on the bond therein mentioned.

The judgment dismissing the action is affirmed.

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREET IMPROVEMENTS—ASSESSMENT OF COST—STATUTES—REPEAL.

The municipal incorporation act (St. 1883, p. 256, c. 49, § 771), providing a method of assessing on adjoining property the cost of street improvements in cities of the fifth class, is repealed by St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153, in so far as it is inconsistent therewith.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ASSESSMENTS FOR STREET WORK—ACTIONS TO ENFORCE—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A claim that the payment of fees of attorneys for plaintiff, suing to foreclose an assessment lien for street work, cannot constitutionally be imposed against defendant, goes merely to the extent of the relief to which plaintiff may be entitled, and cannot be determined on a demurrer to a complaint alleging facts from which a right to some relief arises.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; E. E. Gaddis, Judge.

Action by Wirt Millsap against Douglas Balfour. From a judgment for defendant on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, with directions.

E. B. Mering, for appellant. Hudson Grant, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to foreclose assessment lien for street work. Defendant had judgment upon the sustaining of his demurrer to the complaint. Plaintiff appeals.

The board of trustees of the city of Woodland authorized the construction of a concrete cement sidewalk along the south side of Clover street in said city, "excepting such portions thereof where concrete cement sidewalks have already been constructed and accepted." A contract was duly let, and the work done. The assessment on which this action is based assessed the cost of the work upon the lots fronting on both sides of Clover street. The defendant is the owner of a lot fronting on the north side of the street, and the sole question presented is whether a lot situated on one side of the street may be assessed for the cost of constructing sidewalks along the opposite side.

The question must be decided upon a consideration of the terms of the act of March 18, 1885, commonly known as the "Vrooman Act" (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153). Section 771 of the municipal incorporation act (St. 1883, p. 256, c. 49) provides a method of assessing upon adjoining property the cost of street improvements in cities of the fifth class (which includes Woodland), but this section must be regarded as repealed in so far as it is inconsistent with the later provisions of the Vrooman act. Thomason v. Ashworth, 73 Cal. 73, 14 Pac. 615; City Imp. Co. v. Broderick, 125 Cal. 139, 57 Pac. 776. By section 2 of the act of March 18, 1885, the city council is authorized to order certain street work to be done. The construction of sidewalks is included in the classes of work enumerated. Section 7, subd. 1, provides that "the expenses incurred for any work authorized by this act * * * shall be assessed upon the lots and lands fronting thereon, except as hereinafter specifically provided. * * *" Then follow several subdivisions providing other methods of assessment for various cases, none of which covers the present situation. What, in the case of work done on one side of a public street, is meant by the phrase "shall be assessed upon the lands fronting thereon"? Is the cost to be assessed upon the lands fronting on both sides of the portion of the street improved, or on the lands fronting on the side of the street adjoining the improvement? The proper interpretation of this provision has been declared by this court in San Diego Investment Co. v. Shaw, 129 Cal. 273, 61 Pac. 1082. There the work done was the grading of so much of a street as lay on the east side of its center line. It was held that the cost of the work was to be assessed against lots on both sides of the improved portion of the street. "It is claimed," say the court, "that the words 'fronting thereon' refer to the work done, and not to the street on which all the lots on both sides front. The position is untenable." The case at bar cannot be distinguished from the one cited. The construction of sidewalks is authorized by section 2 of the act, the same section that empowers the council to order the grading of streets. The method of assessment provided by the act is the same for each case, viz., the expense of the work is to be "assessed upon the lots fronting thereon." There is no reason for saying that the words "fronting thereon" mean one thing as applied to the grading of a street and another thing as applied to the laying of a sidewalk; the work in each case being done on only one side of the street. That both sides are to be assessed is the necessary conclusion from a reading of section 7 as a whole. Provision is made for exceptional cases in which the assessment is to be made upon lots on one side only. Subdivision 8 of section 7 declares that, "when sewerage or re sewerage is ordered to be done under the sidewalk on only one side of a street for any length thereof, the assessment for its expenses shall be made only upon the lots and lands fronting nearest upon that side. * * *" This language indicates clearly the intent, in the particular case covered by subdivision eleven, to assess upon the one side only. But subdivision 8 is the statement of an exception to the general rule of subdivision 1 that the cost is to be assessed upon the lots and land "fronting thereon." The exception would be unnecessary, indeed meaningless, if under the general rule work done on one side of the street were to be assessed only against lots fronting on that side.

It is said in San Diego Inv. Co. v. Shaw, supra, that there is no injustice in the rule of the statute as we have construed it. The improvement of any portion of a street is presumed to work a benefit to the neighboring property. It is this assumed benefit which affords the justification for all assessments. No inequality results from the method of assessing both sides. If the owner of property on the side not improved is compelled to share the burden of furnishing a sidewalk on the further side of the street, he obtains a corresponding advantage when a sidewalk shall be constructed along his property. In this connection, it is argued that the respondent has already, at his own cost, laid a sidewalk along his property line, and that, therefore, if a sidewalk shall hereafter be ordered on that side of the street, the portion already done must be excepted from any assessment made. Subdivision 11, § 7. He will thus have paid the entire cost of the sidewalk on his side, and be compelled to pay one-half of the cost of the walk on the opposite side. But the complaint does not show that any such work has been done, and the statement in the brief, unsupported by anything in the record, is entitled to no consideration. Furthermore, even if the fact were as suggested, it would have no importance in this discussion. Under the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 7, the respondent was entitled, whenever a sidewalk was ordered on his side of the street, to have one-half of the cost assessed to the property on the opposite side. He was under no obligation to lay the walk in advance of any proceedings by the council. If he chose, for his own convenience and benefit, to so lay it without obtaining an agreement by the opposite owner to pay one-half of the cost, the resulting expense was one which he voluntarily assumed. We are cited to several cases in other jurisdictions declaring that a sidewalk is to be regarded as an appendage to the premises to which it is attached, and that its cost may be assessed to those premises alone. Wakefield Sanitary Authority v. Mander, L. R., 5 C. P. Div. 248; State v. Mayor, 37 N. J. Law, 415, 18 Am. Rep. 729; Borough of Greensburg v. Young, 53 Pa. 280. These decisions are based on statutes differing from our own. We do not doubt that the Legislature would be justified in prescribing one rule for assessment in the case of sidewalks and another where work is done on the roadway. Our Legislature, however, has not done so, and, as the entire matter is one for statutory regulation (subject, of course, to constitutional restrictions), the courts have only to apply the law as it is written.

The point that the payment of plaintiff's attorneys' fees cannot constitutionally be imposed upon the defendant goes merely to the extent of the relief to which the plaintiff may be entitled and cannot be determined on a demurrer to a complaint which alleges facts from which a right to some relief arises.

The judgment is reversed, with direction to the court below to overrule the demurrer.

RANDALL v. FREED. (Sac. 1,645.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 12, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—RULINGS—EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 646, providing that an exception must be taken at the time the decision is made, except as provided in section 647, declaring what decisions shall be deemed excepted to, an objection to a ruling not excepted to, and not within section 647, cannot be urged on appeal, though the trial was conducted by the party complaining, who was not versed in the law.

2. SAME.

Rulings of the court in calling a jury and in permitting a party to give testimony are not within Code Civ. Proc. § 647, defining what decisions shall be deemed excepted to, and are not reviewable, unless excepted to.

3. SAME.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 647, as it existed prior to the amendment by St. 1907, p. 715, c. 379, defining what decisions shall be deemed excepted to, instructions given must be excepted to to enable appellant to take advantage of errors therein.

4. SAME.

Errors appearing on the face of the judgment roll may be raised on the appeal from the judgment, though no exceptions were taken.

5. INJUNCTION—RESTRAINING TRESPASS—IRREPARABLE INJURY.

Equity will not restrain a trespass unless it appears that the injury resulting from the trespass will be irreparable, and it is not sufficient simply to allege that fact, but it must be shown how and why it will be so.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, § 98.]

6. NUISANCE—PRIVATE NUISANCE—INJUNCTION—ADEQUACY OF LEGAL REMEDY.

Equity will not issue an injunction in cases of nuisances, in the absence of a showing that there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Nuisance, § 56.]

7. SAME.

Threatened acts consisting merely of repeated trespasses and the use of offensive language addressed to another do not, in the absence of a showing that irreparable injury will result therefrom, authorize the granting of injunctive relief, though a nuisance will be created by such acts.

8. SAME—"PUBLIC NUISANCES"—STATUTES.

One threatening to commit repeated trespasses and to use offensive language addressed to another does not threaten to create a nuisance within Civ. Code, § 3480, defining a public nuisance as one affecting at the same time an entire community or a neighborhood or any considerable number of persons, etc.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by Anna Randall against Clark V. Freed. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Transferred from Court of Appeal (94 Pac. 1056). Judgment modified and affirmed, and order denying a new trial affirmed.

SLOSS, J. This is an action to recover damages for a battery alleged to have been committed by defendant upon the person of plaintiff. The defendant answered, denying the material allegations of the complaint. The answer included a counterclaim, in which the defendant alleged that he was the owner of a dwelling house, which he occupied with his family; that the plaintiff wrongfully and maliciously entered said premises, and did, "by malicious, wrongful, and unlawful acts and words disturb the peace and quiet of defendant and his family, and did then and there willfully and unlawfully trespass upon the grounds, property of the defendant, and make herself a nuisance to defendant and his family." The specific acts complained of are the use by plaintiff of "opprobrious epithets" addressed to defendant and his wife. It is further alleged that, on the occasion mentioned in the complaint, plaintiff attacked defendant "with her hands and fists," and that he merely defended himself. The "counterclaim" charges that plaintiff informed defendant that she would come upon his premises whenever she chose, and say to him and his family whatever she pleased to say, avers that he has suffered damage in the sum of $500, and asks judgment for such sum, together with a decree restraining plaintiff "from continuing to create a nuisance in and about the said premises of the defendant." The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of the defendant without damages. The court adopted the verdict, and made findings, by which it declared that all of the allegations of the complaint were untrue, and that all the allegations of the counterclaim, except the allegation as to damage, were true. Judgment was entered that plaintiff take nothing, that defendant recover his costs, and that plaintiff be enjoined from "entering the lands and premises of said defendant, or any part thereof, and committing a nuisance or disturbing the peace of said defendant and his family, in or upon the road or roads immediately adjacent to said premises."

Plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial. From the statement on motion for new trial it appears that the plaintiff was not represented by counsel, but conducted the trial in her own behalf. The record shows no exception to any of the rulings of the court now assigned as error. The fact that the trial was conducted by a person not versed in the law may serve to account for the failure to take exceptions to adverse rulings, but can, of course, afford to this court no ground for disregarding the want of such exceptions where they are necessary. Except in certain cases specified by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 647), an exception "must be taken at the time the decision is made" (Code Civ. Proc. § 646), and, if it is not so taken, the objection to the ruling cannot be urged on appeal (McCartney v. Fitz Henry, 16 Cal. 184; Keeran v. Griffith, 34 Cal. 580; Thiele v. Koster, 63 Cal. 241; Austin v. Andrews, 71 Cal. 98, 16 Pac. 546; Lee v. Murphy, 119 Cal. 364, 51 Pac. 549, 955). Among the points here made are that the court erred in calling a jury and in permitting the defendant to give certain testimony. These rulings are not within any of the classes of judicial acts "deemed to have been excepted to" under Code Civ. Proc. § 647. For the same reason, we cannot consider the criticisms directed against the court's instructions to the jury. While the law has now been amended so as to relieve parties from the necessity of taking an exception to an order "modifying, giving, or refusing to give, in whole or in part, an instruction to the jury" (Code Civ. Proc. § 647, as amended in 1907; St. 1907, p. 715, c. 379), the amendment was not in force at the time this case was tried. Before the amendment, it was thoroughly settled that instructions given to the jury must be excepted to, in order to enable the appellant to take advantage of errors in them, if there be such errors. Wilkinson v. Parrott, 32 Cal. 102; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 110 Cal. 457, 42 Pac. 974.

The point that the findings are not supported by the evidence cannot be maintained. On every material issue there was a substantial conflict of testimony.

We think, however, that the court erred in granting the defendant relief by way of injunction. The error appears on the face of the judgment roll, and the point may be raised on the appeal from the judgment. No exception is necessary. Waiving the question whether the matters alleged by defendant in this connection form a proper subject for counterclaim, the facts set up and found afford no basis for an injunction. The acts which plaintiff is alleged to have threatened consist merely of repeated trespasses, and the use of offensive and insulting language addressed to defendant and his wife. It does not appear that any irreparable injury would result from the commission of the threatened acts, nor that, if they were committed, the defendant would not have a complete and adequate remedy at law. "Before a court of equity will interfere to restrain a trespass, it must appear that the injury to result from the trespass will be irreparable. And it is not sufficient simply to allege that fact, but it must be shown to the court how and why it will be so." Mech. Foundry v. Ryall, 75 Cal. 601, 17 Pac. 703; Cal., etc., Co. v. Union, etc., Co., 122 Cal. 641, 55 Pac. 591. It is of no consequence that the counterclaim alleges that plaintiff "makes of herself a nuisance to defendant." The defendant's conclusion that a nuisance was created is not sustained by the specific facts alleged (Civ. Code, § 3480), but, even if we were to accept his conclusion, he is not helped. A court of equity will not issue an injunction in cases of nuisance any more than in other cases in the absence of a showing that there is no plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law. Wood on Nuis. (3d Ed.) 1150; 14 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 1123. We are unable to perceive that, in the event of a recurrence of the acts complained of, the defendant cannot secure prompt and adequate relief through the ordinary processes of law.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the provisions restraining and enjoining the plaintiff from performing the acts above referred to, and, as so modified, the judgment will stand affirmed.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

ROBERTS v. JACOB et al. (L. A. 1,809.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 19, 1908.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—SUBSTITUTED SERVICE OF PROCESS—SUFFICIENCY.

The question of the sufficiency of substituted service of process embraces a proposition as to whether or not there has been due process of law within the state and federal Constitutions.

2. SAME—PROCESS—SUBSTITUTED SERVICE.

An affidavit for publication of summons which shows that plaintiff made inquiry, without avail, of 12 county officers of the county as to the whereabouts of defendants or either of them, and which avers that plaintiff made diligent inquiry of the former neighbors of defendants, giving their names, together with their statements of their inability to furnish any information, shows due diligence required by Code Civ. Proc. § 412, authorizing service by publication on defendant absent from the state, etc., and service of summons by publication is sufficient within the Constitution, guaranteeing due process of law.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by S. L. Roberts against Thomas E. Jacob and another. From an order setting aside a judgment in favor of plaintiff, he appeals. Reversed.

W. J. Mossholder, W. Parrish, and Parrish & Mossholder, for appellant. Collier, Smith & Holcomb, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and against the defendants in 1897. Jurisdiction of the defendants was obtained by the substituted process of publication of summons. Eight years after the entry of the judgment the trial court set it aside upon the ground that the facts set out in the affidavit for the order of publication did not show the due diligence required by section 412, Code Civ. Proc. Plaintiff appeals.

The affidavit for publication of summons in this case contained all that was embraced in the affidavit considered by this court in Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 Pac. 210, 70 Pac. 732. Moreover, it contained additional facts not averred in the affidavit considered in that case. In Rue v. Quinn the affiant declared that he had made inquiry "of several prominent county officers" (giving the names of such officers), and further stated: "I have also made inquiry of all other persons from whom I could expect to obtain information as to the residence or whereabouts of each of the said defendants, and, after such search and inquiry and due diligence, the said defendants cannot be found within the state of California." In the affidavit in the case at bar the plaintiff names 12 county officers of the county of whom he made inquiry, without avail, as to the whereabouts and post-office address or residence of the defendants, or either of them. And, in addition, he avers that he has made due and diligent inquiry of the old residents of the city of San Diego, the former neighbors of said defendants, and then proceeds to give their names, together with their statements of their inability to furnish any information. The affidavit here presented is thus more complete and persuasive in its statement of facts touching diligence than that reviewed by this court in Rue v. Quinn. It is substantially conceded by respondent that, to uphold the judgment of the trial court, we must reverse the decision of Rue v. Quinn, which has since been approved in Weis v. Cain, 140 Cal. xvii, 73 Pac. 980; People v. Wrin, 143 Cal. 11, 76 Pac. 646; People v. Norris, 144 Cal. 422, 77 Pac. 998; People v. Mason, 144 Cal. 770, 78 Pac. 1113; Sharp v. Salisbury, 144 Cal. 721, 78 Pac. 282; Shepard v. Mace, 148 Cal. 272, 82 Pac. 1046; Cargile v. Silsbee, 148 Cal. 260, 82 Pac. 1044; Emery v. Kipp (Cal.) 97 Pac. 17. Respondent urges that we should do this upon the ground that the decision violates the familiar section 1, art. 14, Const. U. S., and that this federal question was not considered by the court in rendering its decision. Herein respondent is in error. Every case where the question arises of the sufficiency of substituted process necessarily embraces the proposition as to whether or not there has been due process of law. The provision of the Constitution of the United States does not differ in this respect from that found in article 1, § 13 of our own Constitution. Since the case of Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565, every case upon this subject-matter has been decided with direct reference, either express or necessarily implied, to these constitutional provisions. Respondent urges, however, that the decision of this court in Rue v. Quinn does violence to the decisions of the Supreme Court in Roller v. Holly, 176 U. S. 402, 20 Sup. Ct. 410, 44 L. Ed. 520, and Marx v. Ebner, 180 U. S. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. 376, 45 L. Ed. 547. In Roller v. Holly the notice served upon the plaintiff in Rockingham county, Va., December 30, 1890, required him to appear in Limestone county, Tex., on January 5, 1891, five days thereafter, to answer in a foreclosure suit. The Supreme Court laid down the indisputable proposition that a notice would be of no value unless the time limited by it were reasonable and adequate for the purpose, and held that the time limited by this notice under these circumstances was unreasonable, and that, therefore, there was not due process of law. There is certainly nothing in this case touching upon the questions decided in Rue v. Quinn.

In Marx v. Ebner the affidavit for publication of summons showed that summons had been issued and returned by the marshal with the statement "that after due and diligent search neither of the within named defendants, nor their agents, could be found within this district." The same return to the summons is made by the sheriff in the case at bar. The affidavit for publication of summons, in addition to the return of the marshal, showed that one of the defendants was a foreign corporation, existing under the laws of the state of Oregon; that another defendant, Farrell, was not a resident of the district of Alaska, but resided in the city of Portland. It further appeared that no officer of the defendant corporation resided within the district of Alaska, and that the corporation had no managing agent or representative within the district; that the post-office address was No. 246 Washington Street, Portland, Or.; and that Portland, Or., was also the post-office address of the defendant Farrell. Objection to the sufficiency of this affidavit was made upon the ground that it did not disclose any diligence, nor that after due diligence the defendants, or either of them, could not be found in the territory. The Supreme Court said: "The objection is made by the appellant that there was no sufficient proof that the defendants after due diligence could not be found; and, therefore, the court ordering the publication had no jurisdiction to make the order; that the simple statement of the marshal that defendants could not be found after due and diligent search was no proof that any such search had been made; and that it was necessary to show what had been done in the way of searching for defendants, so that the court could itself judge whether due diligence had been exercised. Taking the return of the officers with the other facts proved, we think this contention is not well founded." The affidavit in the case at bar, as well as the affidavit in Rue v. Quinn, were much fuller and more complete in their statement of facts showing diligence than was the affidavit held sufficient by the Supreme Court in the case under consideration. Therefore, neither upon the merits of respondents' contention nor upon the authorities which are cited is any reason shown for a departure from the decision of this court in Rue v. Quinn, nor for an affirmance of the order of the trial court in setting aside the judgment in this case.

For which reasons the order appealed from is reversed.

MURPHY v. STELLING et al. (Civ. 399.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Aug. 18, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 15, 1908.)

1. SALES—ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff applied to defendants to purchase apricot trees, and that defendants sold and delivered to plaintiff the trees, warranting them to be of a certain variety, clearly stated that both defendants sold the trees and gave the warranty, and was not ambiguous on the ground that it could not be ascertained therefrom whether plaintiff purchased from the defendant demurring or his codefendant, or whether such defendant or his codefendant gave the warranty.

2. TRIAL—TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS—CONSTRUCTION.

Findings must be construed so as to uphold a judgment rather than to defeat it.

3. SAME.

In an action for breach of warranty, plaintiff separately alleged several items of damage in different amounts, following which was the general allegation that plaintiff, by reason of the premises, had sustained great damage in the several amounts stated, namely $1,533.35. Defendant denied each of these allegations. The court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, save those as to damages, and as to those allegations found "that plaintiff has sustained damages, by reason of the premises, in the sum of $450." Held that, though the finding was uncertain in not indicating what elements were considered in ascertaining the amount of damages, it was sufficient, in the absence of any request for a more specific finding.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 916.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—BRIEFS—REPLY BRIEFS—SCOPE.

Points, made for the first time in a reply brief, are out of the orderly presentation of questions to be passed on by an appellate court and should be made in the opening brief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3097.]

5. SAME—RECORD—QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Findings of fact cannot be attacked on appeal, where the evidence is not before the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2911.]

6. SALES—ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF WARRANTY—TIME TO SUE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4, requiring an action for relief because of fraud to be brought within three years from the accrual thereof, has no application to an action for mere breach of warranty.

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—DEMURRER RAISING DEFENSE.

A general demurrer does not present the question of the bar of the statute of limitations.

8. PLEADING—DEFECTS AND OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

Where defendant by the filing of a stipulation that the complaint should be amended by the addition of the prayer in the stipulation set forth, had notice of the relief desired by plaintiff, and proceeded to trial without objecting that the prayer had not been formally added to the complaint, it is too late, after judgment, to object to such omission.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADING.

Where it is clear that defendant suffered no substantial injury because the prayer for relief was not formally added to the complaint, Code Civ. Proc. § 475, declaring that no error or defect shall be regarded unless it affects substantial rights, applies.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4075-4088.]

10. JUDGMENT—CONFORMITY TO PRAYER FOR RELIEF.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, providing that where an answer is filed, any relief may be granted consistent with the complaint and embraced within issue, jurisdiction to grant any particular relief does not depend on the prayer, but upon the issues made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by J. C. Murphy against F. E. Stelling and another. Judgment for plaintiff against F. E. Stelling alone, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John B. Kerwin, for appellant. Nicholas Bowden, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal by F. E. Stelling from a judgment rendered against him for damages, upon breach of warranty upon a sale of certain apricot trees. The action was brought against F. E. Stelling and Edward Stelling, but judgment went against F. E. Stelling only, and he alone appeals.

The appeal comes to this court upon the judgment roll alone, without any bill of exceptions, and was taken more than 60 days after the rendition and entry of judgment. In the opening brief of appellant but two points are made as grounds for a reversal of the judgment. The first is that appellant's demurrer should have been sustained. The grounds of demurrer stated are that the complainant does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that the complaint is uncertain and ambiguous, for the reason that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether the plaintiff purchased said trees from this defendant (appellant) or his codefendant Edward Stelling, and also that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether this defendant or his codefendant made the representations and warranty that the trees were of the Blenheim variety. Appellant in his brief suggests no reason why the general demurrer should have been sustained, save to say, "We believe the complaint so defective that the general demurrer should have been sustained." The allegations challenged by the special demurrer are "that on or about the 25th day of February, 1894, the plaintiff applied to the defendants to purchase apricot trees of the number and variety hereinafter mentioned, and the defendants on said day sold and delivered to the plaintiff 521 apricot trees, and then and there, at the time of said sale, represented and warranted to said plaintiff that said trees were of the Blenheim variety." This is a clear and precise statement that the defendants—that is, both defendants—sold the trees and gave the warranty to plaintiff. It is in no sense ambiguous or uncertain in the regard suggested by the demurrer. The demurrer was properly overruled.

The second point urged for a reversal is that the court failed to find upon material issues. Plaintiff in his complaint separately alleged several items of damage in different amounts, and followed these several allegations with the general allegation "that said plaintiff by reason of the premises has sustained great loss and damage in the several amounts hereinabove set forth; that is to say, in the sum of $1,533.35." Appellant denied each of these allegations. The court found all the allegations of the complaint to be true, save as to the allegations of damages, and as to those allegations found, "that plaintiff has sustained damages by reason of the premises in the sum of $450," and gave judgment accordingly. We think this finding sufficient to support the judgment, in the absence of any request for a more specific finding. Facts were alleged that, if proven, would support such finding. The finding is uncertain, in that it does not appear what elements the court considered in ascertaining the amount of damages, but findings must be construed so as to uphold a judgment rather than to defeat it (Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 77, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257), and any uncertainty in the findings is to be construed so as to support the judgment rather than to defeat it (Warren v. Hopkins, 110 Cal. 506, 42 Pac. 986; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 338, 66 Pac. 309). In Foley v. Martin, 142 Cal. 256, 71 Pac. 165, 75 Pac. 842, 100 Am. St. Rep. 123, the court found damages in a lump sum, intended to cover both actual and punitive damages. It was there said: "Neither was it necessary for the court, any more than it would have been for a jury, if the case had been tried before a jury, to segregate in its findings the amount of actual damages from the amount given as exemplary damages, unless requested so to do." Although the finding in this case is not as certain as it might be, in that it does not indicate what elements the court considered in ascertaining the damages, it substantially disposes of all the issues upon the question of damages, and is sufficient in the absence, at least, of a request for a more specific finding. This disposes of all the points made by appellant in his opening brief.

In his reply brief he for the first time makes the points that the action was barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the court had no jurisdiction to render any judgment, because the complaint contains no prayer for any judgment. Upon these points it is sufficient to say that they should have been presented in the opening brief (Phelps v. Mayers, 126 Cal. 549, 58 Pac. 1048; Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431); but, in addition to this manifest departure from the orderly presentation of questions to be passed on by an appellate court, we find no merit in either of the points. Defendant did not raise the question of the statutory bar by his demurrer, but by his answer he pleaded that the action was barred by subdivision 1 of section 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and by subdivision 4 of section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court found the facts against him upon the issues presented by these pleas. The evidence is not before us, and the findings of fact made by the court cannot upon this appeal be attacked. Section 338 of the Code of Civil Procedure has no application to the cause of action set forth; and as to section 339, the action may have been taken out of its operation by proof that the warranty sued on was in writing signed by defendant, or that defendant had been absent from the state for a sufficient length of time to prevent the bar of the statute. Upon the issue raised by defendant's plea of the bar of the statute, the court found the facts against defendant, and upon the record before us we cannot review this finding. A general demurrer does not present the question of the bar of the statute of limitations. Bliss v. Sneath, 119 Cal. 526, 51 Pac. 848.

Regarding the second point, that the court had no jurisdiction to render any judgment because the complaint contains no prayer for relief, plaintiff, upon suggestion of a diminution of the record, was allowed to file a certified copy of a stipulation filed in the trial court, which we think supplied the defect of the complaint. This stipulation is signed by the attorneys for both parties to this appeal, and is indorsed: "Stipulation adding prayer to complaint and amending same accordingly." It is in the words as follows: "It is hereby stipulated by and between the parties hereto that the complaint of plaintiff shall stand and be amended by the addition of the following prayer thereto, namely: Wherefore, plaintiff prays the judgment of said court against the said defendants for the sum of $1,533.35, together with his costs herein expended. And that the answers of said defendants shall stand and be the answers to said complaint as amended." This prayer was not in fact written into the complaint or otherwise added thereto, save by filing the stipulation above set forth; but the cause was subsequently tried without objection. Under these circumstances a reasonable construction of the stipulation is that no further addition to the prayer was necessary or contemplated. The defendant, by the filing of the stipulation, had full notice of the relief desired by plaintiff, and proceeded to trial without objecting that the prayer had not been formally added to the complaint, and it is now too late after judgment to object to such omission. It is perfectly clear that, by the irregularity now complained of, defendant suffered no substantial injury, and the case is quite within the rule laid down in section 475 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Where an answer is filed, as in this case, the court may grant plaintiff any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue, and is not limited to relief demanded in the prayer. Section 580, Code Civ. Proc. In such case the jurisdiction of the court to grant any particular relief does not depend on the prayer of the complaint, but upon the issues made by the pleadings.

The judgment is affirmed.

DENTON v. VANN et al. (Civ. 443.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Aug. 15, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 13, 1908.)

1. COUNTIES—POWER TO MAKE POLICE REGULATIONS.

The power granted counties by Const. art. 11, § 11, to make police regulations is to be exercised by the board of supervisors, and not by the people of the county directly.

2. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — ORDINANCES AGAINST LIQUOR LICENSES.

An ordinance of a county board of supervisors, prohibiting the granting of a liquor license in all precincts outside of incorporated cities, except in a precinct where at a general election a majority of the votes shall be for license, is a valid exercise of the police power, involving no delegation of legislative power.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; H. M. Albery, Judge.

Action by J. T. Denton against W. A. Vann and others, members of the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa, and said board. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. De Ligne, for appellant. Seth Millington (Dudley Kinsell and C. C. Hamilton, of counsel), for respondents.

NUTTER, J. This is an action for a writ of mandate to compel the board of supervisors of the county of Colusa to approve a bond presented by appellant to the board upon an application made by him for a license to conduct a saloon in Maxwell precinct in said county. The board declined to approve the bond, for the reason that the electors in Maxwell election precinct at the last general election voted that no saloon licenses should be issued in that precinct. Issues were properly joined, a trial had, at the conclusion of which the court made findings of fact, from which it drew its conclusions of law. Judgment thereon passed for respondent board, and this appeal was taken therefrom.

The court found that the appellant, at the beginning of the license year commencing on the 1st day of November, 1907, filed an application for a license to maintain and conduct a saloon in Maxwell election precinct for the sale of liquors, and complied with all the requirements of the ordinance known as No. 49; and that the board of supervisors rejected and denied the appellant's application and refused such license. It further found that Ordinance No. 49 was duly enacted on the 7th day of October, 1903; that said Ordinance No. 49 was amended by the enactment of Ordinance No. 56, which said amendatory ordinance went into full effect and force October 20, 1906, and ever since has been in full force, and has not been repealed, modified, altered, or amended. The portion thereof in controversy here is as follows: "Section 1. Section 8 of Ordinance No. 49 of Colusa county, California, dated October 7, 1903, as amended by Ordinance

No. 55, passed August 10, 1906, is hereby amended to read as follows: (a) No license shall be granted for the sale of spirituous, malt or fermented liquors or wines in any quantity, at any fixed place of business in any precinct, outside of a municipal corporation in said Colusa county, excepting for the license year ending November 1, 1907, to persons engaged in business on the 1st day of October, 1906, unless at the previous general election there shall have been placed upon the ballots in each of said precincts in the manner provided by section 1197 of the Political Code of the state of California, for submitting questions to the vote of the people the words: 'For granting liquor licenses. Yes. For granting liquor licenses. No.' (b) No license for the sale of spirituous, malt or fermented liquors or wines in any quantities at any fixed place of business, shall be granted in any precinct outside of a municipal corporation in said Colusa county where at the last general election the majority of votes cast upon said question as provided in subdivision (a) of section 1 of this ordinance was against the granting of liquor licenses."

The court also found: "That at the general election held in Colusa county, state of California, on November 6, 1906, for the election of state, county and township officers, there was placed upon the ballots used in said election, in each of the precincts of said Colusa county, outside of municipal corporations, in the manner provided by section 1197 of the Political Code of the state of California, for the submitting questions to the vote of the people the words: 'For granting liquor licenses. Yes. For granting liquor licenses. No.' That at the last general election held in Colusa county prior to November 4, 1907, and prior to December 2, 1907, to wit, the general election held in Colusa county, state of California, on November 6, 1906, for the election of state, county and township officers, the majority of votes cast upon said question, as provided in subdivision (a) of section 1 of said Ordinance No. 56 was against the granting of liquor license in the precinct of Maxwell in Colusa county, state of California, which said precinct of Maxwell is the precinct in which plaintiff proposes, and did propose, to engage in the business of selling liquors and wines, as set forth in his complaint and petition herein."

The court also made the following conclusions of law:

"1. That Ordinance No. 49, as amended by Ordinance No. 56, is a valid ordinance of Colusa county, and at all times since October 20, 1906, has been and now is in full force and effect.

"2. That said amendatory Ordinance No. 56 is a valid ordinance of Colusa county, and the terms and provisions are, and each of them is, within the scope of the power and authority of the board of supervisors of said county to enact; that said amendatory ordinance is, and at all times since October 20, 1906, has been, in full force and effect.

"3. That the action of the board of supervisors of Colusa county in refusing to approve the bond of plaintiff herein was not arbitrary or without cause, but was in strict compliance with and obedience to the provisions of said Ordinance No. 49, as amended by said Ordinance No. 56, and was with the right, authority, and requirement of said ordinance.

"4. That plaintiff is not entitled to a writ of mandate directing or requiring defendants herein to approve the bond of plaintiff described in his complaint and petition herein, nor to any relief in the premises."

Section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution provides: "Any county, city, town or township may make and enforce within its limits all such local police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." Section 1 of article 11 of the Constitution provides: "The several counties as they now exist are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this state." There is no controversy between appellant and respondents as to the fact that the provisions of the Constitution above quoted do directly confer on counties the power to make police regulations, and that the power is not dependent upon statutory, as distinguished from constitutional, authority; but appellant contends that the Constitution does not provide whether such power shall be exercised by the board of supervisors or by the people of the county directly. Respondents, on the other hand, contend that, not only is state legislative authority unnecessary to enable the board of supervisors to enact all requisite local laws for the regulation of the sale of liquor, but, on the contrary, any attempt on the part of the state Legislature to enact statutory restrictions upon this vested constitutional right of local legislation would be an invasion of the power of the local legislative body of the county and, to that extent, unconstitutional and void. The Constitution at the time of its adoption recognized the counties then in existence as legal subdivisions of the state duly organized, and provided that the Legislature in the creation of new counties should define their boundaries, and provide for the election of officers therein; and, when the people within the defined territory elected such officers, and they qualified, a local county government was thereby organized and established in such new county, and then there immediately vested in such county thus organized the constitutional grant of power. This direct constitutional grant of power to the counties must be construed to mean counties in their organized condition as bodies politic, and is an authorization by the Constitution to the local legislative body, as the representative of the county thus organized, to exercise the powers thereby granted in enacting local laws.

This brings us, then, to a consideration of the ordinances, and whether in their terms they are within the scope of the power and authority of said board of supervisors to enact, and whether the action of the board was arbitrary or without cause. The weight of authority is to the effect that the constitutional right of a person to engage in business does not apply to one desiring to engage in the retail liquor traffic, but before so engaging, one must apply for a permit to the sovereign power, which power has retained unto itself the right to permit or withhold the right altogether, or to grant the permit upon such conditions as it pleases, either in the mode of applying therefor, or in its exercise, if granted. It is the declared law of this state that the governing power of the county or municipality may prohibit the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors altogether, or that such county or municipality may impose such conditions upon the sale of such liquors as it pleases. It was said in Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 208, 24 Pac. 747: "But whatever force this objection might have in reference to licenses to carry on the ordinary avocations of life which are not supposed to have any injurious tendency, it has no force in the present case. It is well settled that the governing power may prohibit the manufacture and traffic in liquor altogether, provided only that it does not interfere with interstate commerce. See Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205. And if the governing power can prohibit a thing altogether, it can impose such conditions upon its existence as it pleases." This doctrine was affirmed in Davis v. Board of Supervisors of Merced County (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 170. In Re Kidd, 5 Cal. App. 159, 89 Pac. 987, the court says: "This ordinance, regularly adopted, in plain terms prohibits the sale of all intoxicating liquors in said city by any person, except that the council may issue a permit to keepers of hotels having 40 bedrooms or more to sell vinous and malt liquors, served in the dining room thereof as part of a regular meal. The ordinance is claimed to destroy petitioner's right to engage in business upon the same terms as other citizens, and that it creates a monopoly in favor of a certain class. Let the correctness of his conclusions be assumed, and we have a case where the lawmaking power is regulating a business the tendency of which is injurious to the public morals, safety, and welfare. The statistics of every state show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than any other source, * * * There is no inherent right in a citizen thus to sell intoxicating liquors. Foster v. Police Commissioners, 102 Cal. 491, 37 Pac. 763, 41 Am. St. Rep. 194. It is only a calling not in any way injurious to the community which every one has a right to pursue. In re Parrott (C. C.) 1 Fed. 481, 6 Sawy. 349. That the legislative power may prohibit a traffic by retail of intoxicating liquors is conceded. If the governing power can prohibit a thing altogether, it may impose such conditions upon its existence as it pleases, even arbitrary ones. Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 213, 24 Pac. 747."

The ordinance does not delegate any legislative power. It is not a case where the electors are called upon to determine whether a certain ordinance shall be passed by the local legislative body. The board for itself, in its legislative capacity, determined to enact the ordinance without suggestion from the electors, and did enact it as a law, in full effect, October 20, 1906, and thereby did prohibit the granting of licenses for the sale of liquors in any quantity in all the precincts of said county outside of incorporated cities, except upon certain conditions. It prescribed a condition that must exist before a license could be granted, and the electors of the several precincts were called upon to express themselves by ballot upon this condition, with which condition an applicant for the issuance to him of a liquor license must comply and present proof thereof to the board, before it, the board, had jurisdiction, acting in its ministerial or quasi judicial capacity to grant said license; but if the electors did not express themselves upon this condition, the ordinance still remained in full force and effect as a prohibitive measure. Its validity as a local law was in no wise impaired. The court, in the case of Davis v. Board of Sup'rs of Merced County, supra, in speaking to the question of the condition imposed, and in comparing the points enunciated in Re Bickerstaff, 70 Cal. 35, 11 Pac. 393, said: "We see no essential difference in the two cases. In the Bickerstaff Case the license could not be granted unless a certain certificate of citizens attested the good moral character of the applicant, while here the license is not to be granted if a certain number of electors protest against it. In both cases the ordinance prescribed the condition on which the applicant may hope for the success of his application—in the one case his application is made to depend upon his obtaining a certificate of certain persons; in the other it will be denied if certain persons object." So in the present case, to say that the board of supervisors could be legally governed as to any exercise of power in the granting or refusing of retail liquor licenses by a protest of a majority of the qualified electors of an election precinct, established by a written and signed petition, and that the same board could not be legally governed by the recorded will of the same qualified electors of the same precinct, established as the result of a general election held therein, would be to hold that there is more sanctity to be given to a mere signed petition than there is to the solemn, secret, and deliberate result secured through the safeguards of a general election.

It may be said, further, that if an ordinance permitting the protest of a majority of the electors of a precinct to govern and determine the board of supervisors of a county upon the question of refusing a license to sell intoxicating liquors by retail, is a valid exercise of authority on behalf of such board, we can see no reason why it is not within the scope or authority of such board to enact an ordinance, and be governed by its provisions, wherein the recorded will of the majority of the electors of an election precinct, as shown by the last general election, may be determinative and decisive upon the question of granting or refusing such license. In the one case a written protest, signed by a majority of the qualified electors of an election precinct, forms the basis of the denial of the license, independent of the character of the applicant, or the place where the proposed business of selling liquor is to be carried on; and, on the other hand, the applicant, as a condition precedent, must present to the board of supervisors, with his bond and application, evidence to the effect that a majority of the electors have at the last general election favored the granting of licenses in the election precinct where he proposes to establish his retail liquor business.

In principle we see no difference between the cases heretofore cited and the case at bar. The conclusions of law reached by the trial court were correct.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

In re WILKES et al. (Civ. 442.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Aug. 15, 1908.)

1. ASSIGNMENT—SALARY OF OFFICER.

The salary of an officer is not assignable before it is earned, so that, in the case of an officer who receives a salary by the month, an assignment, purporting to be of his salary for a month, during all of which he is in the service, executed and filed before the end of the month, is void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Assignments, § 23.]

2. MANDAMUS—DEFENSES.

Before mandamus to compel a city auditor, with whom the transcript of a judgment against an officer of the city has been filed, to pay the officer's salary into court, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 710, will be denied, because of the auditor having drawn his warrant for such salary, on the day the transcript was filed, in favor of one to whom the officer made an assignment of the salary, void because executed and filed before the end of the month, it must, at least, appear that the auditor acted in good faith, and that the warrant has been paid.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR—NECESSITY OF SHOWING ERROR.

Before a judgment will be reversed, error must be affirmatively shown.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3670.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Application by John Wilkes and another for mandamus against George Sievers, city auditor of the city of Stockton. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Webster & Webster, for appellant. C. W. Miller, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Mandamus. The court made the following findings of fact and conclusions of law: Plaintiffs are copartners, and defendant Sievers is city auditor of the city of Stockton, whose duty it is to draw warrants upon the city treasurer for the payment of salaries of all city officials when due and payable. One Bert Harbin was the duly elected and qualified police clerk of said city, and became indebted to plaintiffs for the common necessities of life in the sum of $126.80, for which amount plaintiffs duly recovered judgment in the justice's court on July 30, 1907, and said judgment is in effect and is final. The salary of said police clerk was the sum of $1,104 a year, payable, $92 per month, on the first day of each month for the previous month, under the charter of said city, and on August 1, 1907, there was due said Harbin, for salary as such police clerk, the sum of $92, for the month of July, which he attempted to assign to one Williamson, by the following document: "Stockton Cal., July 1907. For value received, I hereby transfer and assign my claim against the city of Stockton, California, amounting to $92, to H. E. Williamson, and hereby authorize the city treasurer to pay the same to him as assignee. B. Harbin"—and said alleged assignment was filed by said Williamson with the city auditor on or before July 30, 1907. On August 1, 1907, and while there was due and unpaid, and payable to said Harbin, his salary as aforesaid, plaintiffs filed with said auditor a transcript of said judgment, duly authenticated, with an affidavit, as provided in section 710 of the Code of Civil Procedure, claiming the right to avail themselves of the provisions of said section, whereupon it became the duty of said auditor to draw a warrant for the sum due said Harbin as aforesaid, in favor of the justice of the peace, in whose court said judgment was rendered, or to pay said sum to the said justice's court, but that said auditor failed, neglected, and refused, and still fails and refuses, so to do. It is further found that said salary "was nonassignable, and could not be assigned, and said alleged assignment is contrary to law, and was and is void as against public policy"; that said assignment was for the salary of said Harbin for the month of July, 1907, and was and is the only assignment, or attempted assignment, made by him to said Williamson; that plaintiffs are beneficially interested in the drawing of said warrant in favor of said justice court, and have no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law; and that plaintiffs are entitled to a peremptory writ of mandamus, directed to said city auditor, commanding him to draw a warrant on the city treasurer in favor of said justice court "for the sum of $90, being the amount of the salary of said Bert Harbin as police clerk of said city of Stockton for the month of July, 1907, less the sum of $2 thereof, which is due to the police pension fund of said city of Stockton out of said salary under the charter of said city, or to pay said sum of $90 into said justice court." Judgment was accordingly entered, from which and from the order denying his motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

The bill of exceptions does not purport to contain all the evidence submitted at the trial. The only testimony in the record is that of defendant Sievers, called for plaintiffs. He testified as follows: "Bert Harbin came to my office on July 31, 1907, and endeavored to draw his salary for the month of July, 1907, stating he wanted to leave town that night; but I refused to allow him to do so, but I took his affidavit, which is necessary under the city charter for a city officer to take before drawing his salary, and he left the office, and afterwards, and on the same day, he returned to my office with H. E. Williamson. The warrant was already made out to the order of H. E. Williamson, as the assignee of Bert Harbin, as a matter of clerical convenience, and because of the assignment, set forth in the petition, filed with me either on July 29, or July 30, 1907. That on August 1, 1907, I delivered to said H. E. Williamson the said warrant, as directed by Bert Harbin July 31, 1907. The assignment set forth in the petition is the only assignment made by Bert Harbin to H. E. Williamson for the salary for the month of July, 1907, and has not been changed in any way since it was filed in my office by H. E. Williamson."

Appellant makes the following points: (1) That the salary was assignable, citing sections 954, 1044, 1045, 1083, and 1084 of the Civil Code; La Rue v. Groezinger, 84 Cal. 281, 24 Pac. 42, 18 Am. St. Rep. 179, and numerous other cases relating to assignments; (2) that Harbin had earned 30 days of his salary, and the assignment carried at least that much; (3) that as Sievers had issued and delivered the warrant, he cannot obey the mandate of the writ, it being out of his power to do so. It may be conceded that the salary of an officer may be assigned after it has been earned. The question here is whether it may be assigned before it is fully earned or by piecemeal. Should the officer who receives a monthly salary resign or be dismissed from his trust during the month, it may be also conceded that his claim for compensation may be assigned after it is earned. Here, however, the officer was in service for the entire month of July, and still is, so far as it appears, and the claim which he undertook to assign was for the entire month, and it was for the entire month that a warrant was delivered to Williamson. It was decided in Bangs v. Dunn, 66 Cal. 72, 4 Pac. 963, that an unearned salary cannot be assigned; that it is against public policy. See Mechem on Public Officers, § 874. The doctrine laid down in Bangs v. Dunn is well settled, both in England and the United States. 2 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1033. The reason for the rule is thus stated: "The protection thus extended to those engaged in the performance of public duties is not based upon the ground of their private interest, but upon the necessity of securing the efficiency of the public service by insuring that the funds provided for its maintenance shall be received by those who are to perform the work, at the periods appointed for their payment. The assignment of such funds before they are due impairs the efficiency of the public service, and is void, both in law and equity, as being against public policy." Id. We do not think an officer whose salary is payable monthly can split up his earnings and assign them from day to day as earned. But, however this may be, in the case here the assignment purports to be for the month's salary of $92. It was executed and filed with the auditor before it was earned. The salary was not due and payable until August 1st, and on that day the transcript of plaintiffs' judgment was filed with the auditor. In issuing his warrant to Williamson he acted upon a void assignment, and his action thereon is void.

The remaining point is that, defendant having issued his warrant to Williamson, it is beyond his control, and mandamus will not compel him to do an impossible thing. As a general proposition, it is true that the court will not compel the performance of an act not within the power of the person to whom the writ issues. Egilbert v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 91 Pac. 748. But we do not think the defendant can shield himself under this rule, for the reason that the outstanding warrant is void. Both defendant and Williamson, the payee of the warrant, are chargeable with knowledge that the warrant was unauthorized and void. So far as appears it has not been paid, and never will be paid. Before plaintiffs should be denied the relief sought by the invocation of the rule just stated, it should at least appear that Harbin acted in good faith, and that the warrant issued by him has been paid. For aught we know its payment has been enjoined and the warrant canceled. Before the judgment will be reversed error must be made affirmatively to appear. Plaintiffs' transcript of their judgment was filed with the auditor on the same day he issued his warrant to Williamson, and it may have issued with the knowledge of the auditor and Williamson that the plaintiffs' transcript of judgment was then on file with the auditor.

From any view of the case we think the judgment and order should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

PEOPLE v. O'BRIAN. (Cr. 73.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Aug. 15, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 13, 1908.)

1. EMBEZZLEMENT — INFORMATION — FIDUCIARY CAPACITY.

Where an information for embezzlement of the proceeds of a certificate of deposit alleged, in the language of Pen. Code, § 507, prohibiting embezzlement by a bailee, that defendant received the certificate of deposit as bailee, it was not necessary to allege the nature of the bailment, nor the particulars thereof, in order to charge the fiduciary relation between prosecutor and defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Embezzlement, §§ 47-50.]

2. SAME.

Where an information alleged that the prosecutor deposited with defendant, as bailee, a certain certificate of deposit of the value of $250, etc., and that defendant cashed the certificate, and converted that sum, the fact that defendant was charged with having embezzled the money instead of the certificate was immaterial, under Pen. Code, § 507, declaring that every person who embezzles property intrusted to him, or the "proceeds thereof," is guilty of embezzlement.

3. SAME—OWNERSHIP OF MONEY.

An allegation that prosecutor was the owner of a certificate of deposit at the time he intrusted it to defendant as bailee; that defendant cashed it, and received the proceeds thereof, for and on account of prosecutor, and thereupon converted such proceeds—constituted a sufficient allegation of prosecutor's ownership of the money.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Embezzlement, §§ 44, 45.]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—VENUE.

An information, filed in Sacramento county for embezzlement, charged that defendant, "at the said county of Sacramento," in California, was intrusted by prosecutor, as bailee, with a certificate of deposit on the Silver Bow National Bank of Butte City, Montana, payable to prosecutor, and thereafter, on September 5th, "at and in the city, county, and state aforesaid," defendant cashed the certificate and converted the money. Held, that the words "Butte City" did not refer to the location of the offense, but was merely a part of the name of the bank issuing the certificate, and that as the word "county" could only refer to Sacramento, the information was not defective for failure to allege the venue of the crime with certainty.

5. EMBEZZLEMENT—CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT—ISSUANCE—CORPORATE CAPACITY OF BANK.

Where it was not charged that the bank issuing a certificate of deposit, the proceeds of which, $250, defendant was charged with embezzling, was a party to the transaction, or that it was injured or had any relation to the certificate except by way of description, the information was not defective for failure to allege the bank's corporate capacity, or whether the certificate was issued by the bank, or covered money belonging to prosecutor there on deposit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; J. W. Hughes, Judge.

Cornelius O'Brian was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. De Ligne, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

NUTTER, J. Appeal from judgment, and from orders denying the motion for a new trial, and denying the motion in arrest of judgment. The information in this case is entitled and was filed in the superior court of Sacramento county, state of California, and it charges that the defendant, on a certain day in September, 1907, "at the said county of Sacramento, in the state of California, and before the filing of this information, was then and there by one Michael Ward intrusted, as bailee, with certain personal property, to wit, a certificate of deposit for the sum of $250, lawful money of the United States, on the Silver Bow National Bank of Butte City, in the state of Montana, payable to the said Michael Ward, then and there of the value of $250, lawful money of the United States, and then and there the personal property of the said Michael Ward, and thereafter, on or about the 5th day of September, 1907, at and in the city, county, and state aforesaid, the said Cornelius O'Brian did cash said certificate of deposit, and did then and there receive and take into his (the said Cornelius O'Brian's) control and care the said sum of $250, lawful money of the United States, for and on account of the said Michael Ward, and thereafter, and on or about said last-mentioned day, and in the said city, county, and state aforesaid, did willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, and fraudulently embezzle, convert and appropriate the said $250 so secured to his (the said Cornelius O'Brian's) own use, without the consent of the said Michael Ward, contrary to the form, force, and effect of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California." Appellant demurred to the information upon the following grounds: (1) That the court had no jurisdiction of the offense charged; (2) that the information does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code; (3) that more than one offense is charged; (4) that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense. The demurrer to the information was overruled. After conviction, and before sentence was pronounced, the defendant moved in arrest of judgment upon all the grounds set forth in the demurrer, and two additional grounds, namely: (1) That the information contains matters which, if true, would constitute a legal justification or excuse of the offense, and a legal bar to the prosecution; and (2) that it does not appear from the information that the offense was committed in Sacramento county. The motion in arrest of judgment was by the court denied, and sentence pronounced, hence this appeal.

The evidence is not brought up, and the only question presented to the court for its consideration is the sufficiency of the information. Section 507 of the Penal Code, under which the foregoing information was framed, provides that "every person intrusted with any property as bailee, tenant, or lodger, or with any power of attorney for the sale or transfer thereof, who fraudulently converts the same, or the proceeds thereof to his own use, or secretes it, or them, with a fraudulent intent to convert to his own use, is guilty of embezzlement." It is contended that the information is insufficient, in that it fails to allege that the defendant was acting as agent, or in any other confidential capacity, toward Ward when he received the money which he is charged with having embezzled, or that the money was the property of Ward, and that he is not charged with having embezzled the certificate of deposit. It is alleged that Ward was the owner of the certificate of deposit payable to himself; that he intrusted the same to the defendant as bailee; that it was of the value of $250 lawful money of the United States; that he had cashed it, received and took into his care and control, as the proceeds thereof, the said sum of $250 in lawful money of the United States, for and on account of said Ward; and that he fraudulently converted the said sum of $250 so received by him to his own use without the consent of said Ward. It having been alleged in the language of the statute that the defendant received the certificate of deposit as bailee, it was not necessary for the pleader to allege the nature of the bailment, nor the particulars or circumstances thereof. As was said in People v. Gordon, 133 Cal. 328, 65 Pac. 746, 85 Am. St. Rep. 174, and affirmed in People v. Goodrich, 142 Cal. 216, 75 Pac. 796: "The essential elements of embezzlement are the fiduciary relations arising where one intrusts property to another, and the fraudulent appropriation of the property by the latter. The origin or particulars of the relation need not be stated." Stating that the property was intrusted to defendant as bailee sufficiently showed the creation of a fiduciary relation, and it was not necessary to allege the circumstances of the felonious conversion. The fact that the defendant is charged with having embezzled the money instead of the certificate will not, in our opinion, avail him. The money was the proceeds of the certificate, and came into his care by reason of his cashing it; and, since it is provided by said section 507 of the Penal Code that "every person who embezzles property intrusted to him or the proceeds thereof, is guilty of embezzlement," he is, in either event, liable. The statement that Ward was the owner of the certificate at the time he intrusted it to the defendant; that defendant cashed it and received the proceeds thereof, coupled with the allegation that he did so for and on account of Ward—is a sufficient allegation of Ward's ownership of the money.

It is further contended that the place of the embezzlement is not alleged with sufficient certainty, because the county of Sacramento, in the state of California, and Butte City, in the state of Montana, are both mentioned in the information, previous to the words "then and there" and "aforesaid"; that the reference through the word "said" and "aforesaid" does not identify, with any more certainty, the county of Sacramento, state of California, than it does Butte City, in the state of Montana. While the information is not as explicit in this regard as it should be, nevertheless we think it sufficient to support the judgment of conviction. The words "Butte City" as used in the information do not refer to that city as a locality or place where any transaction with the defendant occurred, but constitute a portion of the name of the bank issuing the certificate, and "the state of Montana," following the name of the bank, is descriptive only of the bank's location, and, in our opinion, has no reference to the venue necessary to be charged in the information. The word "county" is not mentioned in connection therewith, and is found only referring to Sacramento, wherein it is positively alleged defendant was intrusted with the certificate, the proceeds of which he embezzled. The information was dealing with the alleged act of the defendant; and, inasmuch as no more than one time or place had been mentioned in the information previous to the use of these words which related to the act of the defendant, the information is not open to the objection which might prevail if more than one time or place was mentioned prior to the use of said words when so referring to his acts. The subsequent use of the word "city" cannot be held to refer to Butte City as a place descriptive of the venue of the alleged crime, and can be totally disregarded, since, as above stated, Butte City was used only as a part of the name of the bank therein mentioned, and not as a place at which occurred any act charged against the defendant. Therefore, the words "then and there" and "in the city, county, and state aforesaid" must be construed as having reference only to Sacramento county, Cal. And the use of the word "city" as mentioned in said latter phrase must be treated as surplusage which can in no way vitiate the said information.

It is also urged that the information fails to state that the Silver Bow National Bank of Butte City is a corporation, or whether the certificate was issued by the bank, or whether it covered money which said Ward had on deposit in said bank. We think these objections are equally untenable. It is not charged that the bank was a party to the transaction with this defendant, or that it was in any wise an injured party, or had any relation to the certificate except by way of description thereof. It would be true that, if it were charged that the bank was the party defrauded, it would be necessary to allege its corporate capacity, and prove the same at the trial. And it was equally unnecessary to allege whether the certificate was issued by the bank, or covered money belonging to said Ward there on deposit. These allegations would be directed to the question of value; and, inasmuch as the certificate is alleged to be of the value of $250, so likewise the money embezzled, the information is therefore sufficient in that regard, and whether the certificate was of the alleged value was a matter of proof at the trial.

No other points are urged in behalf of appellant, except that it is stated generally in the brief on file that he relies upon all other errors appearing in the record. No other claimed errors have been pointed out. We have examined the record, and find the instructions full and fair. The information conforms to the requirements of section 950 of the Penal Code, and contains a statement of the acts constituting the offense in such a manner as to enable a person of common understanding to know what was intended, and is therefore sufficient.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAHLGREN v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SANTA CRUZ COUNTY. (Civ. 508.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Aug. 13, 1908.)

1. CERTIORARI—GROUNDS—EXISTENCE OF REMEDY BY WRIT OF ERROR.

Certiorari cannot be used as a writ of error to correct errors of the trial court within its jurisdiction.

2. COURTS—"JURISDICTION."

Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine a cause, and carries with it the power to decide a cause within the jurisdiction of the court incorrectly as well as correctly, and it does not relate to the rights of the parties, but to the power of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Courts, § 1.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3876-3885; vol. 8, pp. 7697-7698.]

3. CERTIORARI—GROUNDS—EXCESS OF JURISDICTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1365, 1368, 1369, 1411-1413, 1427, fixing the order in which persons are entitled to letters of administration, and authorizing the appointment of a special administrator, the court, having power to appoint a special administrator, does not exceed its jurisdiction in appointing a stranger a special administrator on his petition therefor, notwithstanding the petition of a daughter and heir at law and devisee and legatee of decedent for her appointment, and certiorari does not lie to review the order.

Certiorari by Caroline Colton Dahlgren to the superior court of the county of Santa Cruz to annul an order appointing a special administrator of Ellen M. Colton, deceased. Application denied, and writ discharged.

Chas. M. Cassin, Bart Burke, and Marcel E. Cerf, for petitioner. J. F. Riley, Barclay Henley, and Crittenden Thornton, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an original proceeding upon certiorari, having for its purpose to obtain the judgment of this court, annulling an order made by the superior court of Santa Cruz county, appointing the First Federal Trust Company, a corporation, special administrator of the estate of Ellen M. Colton, deceased. Upon the filing of the petition by Caroline Colton Dahlgren, praying for the writ, the same was issued out of this court, and a return thereto was in due time made.

The facts of the case are briefly these: A petition for the probate of the will of Ellen M. Colton having been filed in the superior court of Santa Cruz county, a contest thereof was filed by Helen Sacher, a great granddaughter and heir at law of decedent, through her guardian. Thereupon an order was duly made appointing Walter J. Bartnett special administrator of said estate. Subsequently a petition was filed by the said granddaughter, acting through her guardian, praying for the removal of said Bartnett as such special administrator. Said Bartnett thereupon presented to the court his resignation as such special administrator, and the court made and entered an order revoking his letters and removing him as special administrator of said estate. No question is raised as to the regularity of any of the proceedings of the court up to this point. Immediately upon the removal of Bartnett as such special administrator, Caroline Colton Dahlgren, the only surviving child of deceased, filed her petition with the court in proper form, praying to be appointed special administratrix of said estate, and S. C. Rogers, as public administrator of Santa Cruz county, filed a similar petition for his own appointment. Both petitioners were represented by attorneys. The attorney for Helen Sacher objected to the appointment of either of said petitioners, and the court refused to hear evidence on behalf of such petitions, but made an order appointing the First Federal Trust Company such special administrator. This action took place on the 23d day of December, 1907. On December 30, 1907, the court made and entered an order revoking and setting aside the said order of December 23d, and on the next day, December 31st, the First Federal Trust Company presented and filed with the court its petition, praying to be appointed special administrator of said estate, and the court thereupon on said day and without notice granted such petition, and made and caused to be entered on the minutes of the court an order appointing said First Federal Trust Company special administrator of said estate, under which order it has qualified, and letters of special administration have been issued to it.

The question is thus broadly presented: Has the court jurisdiction to appoint as special administrator of an estate a stranger to the estate in the face of the petition of a daughter and heir at law and devisee and legatee of decedent for her appointment as such special administratrix? We say, in the face of a petition by a daughter, for the court, upon making the first order appointing the First Federal Trust Company on December 23d, did not in terms deny the petition of Mrs. Dahlgren, so that, when the court vacated and set aside such order, there was left pending before the court the petition of Mrs. Dahlgren and the petition of Rogers, as public administrator. This was the condition when, on the 31st day of December, the First Federal Trust Company presented its petition, and the court granted the same.

It is earnestly urged by petitioner in this proceeding that the court in making its order acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction. Unless this contention can be sustained, petitioner's application must be denied, for it is well settled in this state that the writ of certiorari cannot be issued to correct errors, either of fact or of law, committed by the lower court within the limits of its jurisdiction. Sherer v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 653, 31 Pac. 565; Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8; Central Pacific R. R. Co. v. Placer Co., 46 Cal. 670. It is not contended that under the circumstances existing on the 31st day of December, 1907, when the court made its order appointing the trust company special administrator, it did not have power to appoint a special administrator of the estate of Ellen M. Colton, but only that it had no jurisdiction to appoint a stranger to the estate in the face of a petition by a daughter, who was not incompetent or otherwise disqualified. The authority to appoint a special administrator is given by section 1411 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also, upon the resignation or removal of an administrator or executor, by section 1427 of the same Code. Section 1412 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the appointment may be made at any time, and without notice, and must be made by entry upon the minutes of the court, specifying the powers to be exercised by the administrator." The following section (1413) provides that, "in making the appointment of a special administrator, the court or judge must give preference to the person entitled to letters testamentary or of administration, but no appeal must be allowed from the appointment." In the case before us the only person who could claim to be entitled to letters testamentary is Bartnett, who had resigned and been removed as special administrator. The order in which persons are entitled to letters of administration is fixed by section 1365. Under this section, a surviving husband or wife, or his or her nominee, is first entitled, and children are second, and an entire stranger to the estate is tenth in right, but any one of these may be rejected if incompetent. Sections

1368, 1369. It is for ignoring the order of preference fixed by section 1365 of the Code of Civil Procedure, without a showing of incompetency on the part of the petitioner, that it is now claimed that the order made by the court is without or in excess of its jurisdiction. For the purposes of this decision, it may be conceded that the court committed gross error in so doing; but from this it does not necessarily follow that the court acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction. Jurisdiction is generally defined as the power to hear and determine a cause. This is the definition given by the standard law dictionaries (Bouvier and Anderson). It necessarily carries with it the power to decide a given cause or controversy within the jurisdiction of the court incorrectly as well as correctly. In State of Rhode Island v. State of Massachusetts, 12 Pet. 718, 9 L. Ed. 1233, it is said: "Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine the subject-matter in controversy between the parties to the suit; to adjudicate or exercise any judicial power over them; the question is whether, in the case before a court, their action is judicial or extra-judicial; with or without authority of law to render a judgment or decree upon the rights of the litigant parties. If the law confers the power to render a judgment or decree, then the court has jurisdiction."

It was said in People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263, 59 Am. Dec. 536: "Jurisdiction does not relate to the rights of the parties as between each other, but to the power of the court." This language was quoted with approval in Fisher v. Hepburn, 48 N. Y. 41, and is particularly appropriate to the case at bar, where it must be conceded that the court had power to appoint a special administrator, and under certain conditions might rightfully and without error appoint either one of the applicants then before it. In Ex parte Watkins, 32 U. S. 568, 8 L. Ed. 786, the rule is laid down that "the jurisdiction of the court can never depend upon its decision upon the merits of the case brought before it, but upon its right to hear and decide it at all." This language was quoted with approval in United States v. Maney (C. C.) 61 Fed. 140.

Coming now to decisions in our own state, we find the same or similar views repeatedly expressed. In Ex parte Bennett, 44 Cal. 84, it is said: "Jurisdiction has often been said to be the power to hear and determine. It is in truth a power to do both, or either, to hear without determining, or to determine without hearing." "It is not the particular decision given which makes up jurisdiction, but it is the authority to decide the question at all. Otherwise the distinction between erroneous exercise of jurisdiction, on the one hand, and the total want of it, on the other, must be obliterated." Chase v. Christianson, 41 Cal. 253. In Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 31 Pac. 8, the lower court had granted a motion to dismiss an appeal taken to it from the judgment of a justice's court. The appeal was in all respects regularly taken, and the superior court under the law should not have dismissed the appeal. Speaking of the action of the court in dismissing the appeal, it was said: "If it had jurisdiction to hear the motion, and as to that matter there can be no question, then its ruling upon the motion was simply an exercise of that jurisdiction; and, however erroneous such ruling might be, it would be only an error of law, in no manner subject to review by an original proceeding in this court. In this case the court had jurisdiction to hear the motion, and it would be an absurdity to say that upon the submission of the matter the court had jurisdiction to deny the motion to dismiss the appeal, but no jurisdiction to grant it."

* * * It may be conceded that the action of the court in dismissing the appeal was entirely without support in law, and furnished ample material to justify a reversal of the order if a proper matter for review under the statute; but such may be the fact, and yet no question of excess of jurisdiction be involved." In Sherer v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 653, 31 Pac. 565, the superior court had erroneously stricken out an answer filed by a defendant, and entered judgment against him without any further trial, in a case appealed from a justice's court. The court, upon the application for a writ of certiorari, said: "Jurisdiction is the power to hear and determine, and does not depend upon the rightfulness of the decision made. The court in this case had the power, and in the regular course of proceeding in the disposition of the case before it was actually called upon to determine, as a matter of law, whether or not the answer of petitioner was properly filed, and whether he was legally in default in the action; and the fact that the court erred in such decision does not render its judgment void." Each of the two last cited cases was a case where no right of appeal existed, and the petitioner was without redress as to the action of the lower court founded upon a pure error of law. In White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 60, 42 Pac. 480, the court quoted with approval from Von Roun v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 358, this language: "If the order is one which the court had power to make, it is not for us to inquire whether this power was properly exercised or not. The writ of review is not a writ of error." To the same effect is History Company v. Light, 97 Cal. 56, 31 Pac. 627. In Woodward v. Superior Court, 95 Cal. 272, 30 Pac. 535, upon an application for a writ of prohibition, it was said: "The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties. It had the power therefore to hear and determine a motion for the appointment of a receiver, and its action thereon cannot be regarded as in excess of its jurisdiction." See, also, Raine v. Lawlor, 1 Cal. App. 483, 82 Pac. 688, where the above language is quoted with approval. So in the case at bar the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. It is not contended that it was without power to appoint a special administrator of the estate of Ellen M. Colton, deceased, under the conditions existing. It also had jurisdiction of the parties. The statute authorizes the appointment to be made at any time and without notice. When the court made the appointment, there was pending before it three petitions upon behalf of three different applicants, either one of whom the court under certain conditions might rightfully appoint or refuse to appoint. Each petitioner was an actor asserting a claim adverse to each of the other petitioners. The court decided the controversy in favor of the trust company and against the claim of petitioner, Mrs. Dahlgren. It may be said that the court committed a gross error of law in so doing; but the writ of certiorari cannot be used in this state as a writ of error. The court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and of the parties, and the order was one that it had power to make. It therefore did not exceed its jurisdiction in making the order complained of.

We have reviewed the authorities and gone to considerable length into the question of what constitutes jurisdiction because of the case of In re Ming, 15 Mont. 79, 38 Pac. 228, relied on by petitioner. The decision in this case, by two of the three justices constituting the court, does support the contention of petitioner, and was based upon statutes, so far as they relate to the appointment of special administrators, in substance the same as ours. The majority of the court held that the probate judge in appointing the public administrator in preference to the children of the decedent acted in excess of jurisdiction, although no application had been made by the children when the petition of the public administrator was filed and his appointment made. After the appointment had been made, the children petitioned to have the same vacated, and one of their number appointed. The entire argument of the court is devoted to showing that under the laws of Montana the children were entitled to preference, and the court in its opinion nowhere discusses what constitutes jurisdiction, or attempts to draw any distinction between error of law merely and want of jurisdiction. The third member of the court in a dissenting opinion holds that the order was not in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. The conclusion reached in the prevailing opinion in the Ming Case does not commend itself to our judgment.

The application of petitioner must be denied, and the writ discharged; and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS. (Cr. 88.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Aug. 6, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—APPEALABLE ORDERS.

Under Pen. Code, § 1259, providing that upon an appeal by defendant from a judgment the court may review any intermediate order, which may have affected the judgment, an order overruling a motion to set aside an information is not appealable, but is reviewable on appeal from the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2591.]

2. SAME—NECESSITY OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW OF RULING ON INFORMATION.

By the direct provisions of Pen. Code, § 1172, exception may be taken to a decision denying a motion to set aside an information, and section 1174 provides a mode for the authentication and settling of such exceptions in a bill of exceptions. Held, that an order overruling a motion to set aside an information would not be reviewed upon evidence taken at the preliminary examination set out in the minutes of the trial, but not incorporated in a bill of exceptions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2924.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

John Williams was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Matthew S. Platz, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal on the part of the defendant from a judgment of conviction of the crime of burglary.

The only assignment of error upon which it is urged the judgment should be reversed is the denial of the defendant's motion to set aside the information filed against him upon the ground that he had not been legally committed by a magistrate before the filing of the information. It appears from the minutes of the trial that, in support of the motion, defendant introduced in evidence the transcript of the proceedings of defendant's preliminary examination had before the justice of the peace as transcribed by the shorthand reporter who acted in such capacity at said preliminary hearing. This evidence is not incorporated in a bill of exceptions, but is set forth in the minutes of the trial. The appeal is upon the judgment roll.

An order denying a motion to set aside an information is not an appealable order, but reviewable on appeal from the judgment under the provisions of section 1259 of the Penal Code, which is as follows: "Upon an appeal taken by the defendant from a judgment, the court may review any intermediate order or ruling involving the merits, or which may have affected the judgment." In discussing a like order, the Supreme Court in People v. Simmons, 119 Cal. 1, 50 Pac. 844, says: "As the motion, if granted, would have affected the judgment, the order may be reviewed on this appeal from the judgment, the proceedings having been brought up by bill of exceptions." The proceedings here, however, have not been brought up by bill of exceptions, nor in any other mode of authentication provided by law. By express provision of section 1172 of the Penal Code exception may be taken by either party to the decision of the court in granting or denying a motion to set aside an information. And section 1174 of the Penal Code provides a mode for the authentication and settling of such exceptions in a bill of exceptions. These sections provide the only mode for obtaining a review of the order which appellant claims to have been erroneously made. Evidence embodied in the minutes and exceptions noted in the minutes as here presented furnish no authenticated or legal record from which we can determine whether the court erred in making the order. People v. Terrill, 131 Cal. 112, 63 Pac. 141; People v. Long, 121 Cal. 494, 53 Pac. 1097; People v. Emmons (Cal. App.) 95 Pac. 1032.

The judgment is affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 600

PEOPLE v. IZLAR. (Cr. 94.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Aug. 8, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEALABLE ORDERS.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 1237, 1238, declaring the cases in which appeal may be taken, an order denying a motion to set aside an information is not appealable; but objection to it may be considered on appeal from the judgment.

2. SAME—APPEAL—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

The remedy provided by Pen. Code, § 1174, for a party claiming that the trial judge has refused to settle the bill of exceptions according to the facts, application to the Supreme Court to prove the same, not having been availed of, the statements in the bill of exceptions must on appeal be taken as true.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2894-2896.]

3. SAME—AMENDING BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

That an amendment, consisting of a copy of the docket of the committing magistrate, was present, and was made a part of the bill of exceptions, at the hearing of defendant's motion to settle the bill, is enough; no preparation and service of amendments by a district attorney being required by Pen. Code, § 1174.

4. SAME—APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY OF RECORD TO SHOW ERROR.

The record on the motion to set aside the information, on the ground that defendant was not informed of his rights to counsel on the preliminary examination, being merely an uncertified excerpt from the transcript of testimony taken by the reporter, containing a recital that defendant appeared in court, unaccompanied by counsel, and containing no statement that defendant was advised of his right to counsel, followed by a stipulation that the transcript of the proceedings before the magistrate "shows nothing aside from the above, except the taking of the testimony and the holding of defendant to answer," does not negative the fact that the magistrate fully informed defendant as to his right to counsel.

5. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—DESIGNATING OFFENSE BY NAME.

The facts charging the offense of assault with a deadly weapon being clearly stated in the information, it is immaterial that it designates it as an "assault with a deadly weapon with the intent to commit murder."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 180.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Refusal to instruct as to assault with intent to commit murder, and to define murder and manslaughter, is harmless; the conviction being only of assault with a deadly weapon.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3154-3169.]

7. HOMICIDE—SELF-DEFENSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

A requested instruction that defendant was justified in killing C., if he believed himself in danger of suffering bodily harm and injury from C., was bad, as omitting the elements of the character of the threatened injury.

8. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE.

Exclusion of testimony is harmless, the fact sought to be shown appearing by other evidence, and not being controverted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Appeal and Error, §§ 3145-3153.]

9. WITNESSES—EXAMINATION—REFRESHING MEMORY.

While the district attorney may not, except under certain exceptional circumstances, impeach his witness, he may refresh his memory by reading from the transcript of his testimony at the preliminary examination; but he may not use this as a subterfuge to get before the jury incompetent evidence tending to make a case for the prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 897-898.]

10. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—NECESSITY OF OBJECTIONS BELOW.

In the absence of objection raising the point, it cannot be held that the court erred in allowing the district attorney to refresh the memory of his witness by reading from the transcript of his testimony at the preliminary examination, on the ground that it was a mere subterfuge to get before the jury incompetent evidence.

11. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT.

The district attorney does not impeach his witness by reading from the transcript of his testimony at the preliminary examination to refresh his memory; the statements of the witness at the trial and at the preliminary examination being easily reconcilable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County;
Paul W. Bennett, Judge.

William R. Izlar was convicted of crime, and appeals from the judgment of conviction and certain orders. Affirmed.

Matthew S. Platz, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

TAGGART, J. Appeals from an order denying a motion to set aside an information, a judgment of conviction of the crime of assault with a deadly weapon, and an order denying a motion for a new trial. The first order is not appealable (Pen. Code, §§ 1237, 1238), but the objection to it may be considered under the appeal from the judgment. Defendant was informed against for the crime of "assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder." Upon arraignment he moved to set aside the information upon the ground that he had not been legally committed by a magistrate. Section 995. In support of this motion, he contends that he was not informed of his right to counsel upon the preliminary examination. As disclosed by the bill of exceptions, the motion was made on "all the papers on file in the case and specifically the transcript of the proceedings taken at the preliminary examination." The record on the motion consists of an excerpt from the transcript of testimony taken by the shorthand reporter at the preliminary examination and a certified copy of the docket of the justice before whom the examination took place.

There is a recital in the portion of the transcript read that "the defendant appeared in court, unaccompanied by counsel." It contains no statement that defendant was advised of his right to counsel, and is followed in the record by stipulation that the transcript of the proceedings before the magistrate "shows nothing aside from the above except the taking of the testimony and the holding of the defendant to answer to the superior court." The justice docket contains the entry: "Sept. 30, 1907, defendant arraigned on said charge and by the court duly informed of all his rights." The copy of the justice docket was inserted in the bill of exceptions by way of amendment at the time of the hearing of defendant's motion to settle the bill, and defendant objected to its being included in the bill on the grounds that "the district attorney had failed to prepare and present the proposed amendment," and, also, "on the further ground that defendant's proposed bill of exceptions contained a correct copy of all the proceedings had before the committing magistrate as taken down by the shorthand reporter," etc. Appellant contends that we should rule upon his exceptions to the settlement of the bill of exceptions by the trial judge and exclude the justice's docket from consideration in passing upon the trial court's action in denying defendant's motion to set aside the information. This we cannot do. The statute (Pen. Code, § 1174) provides relief for a party who claims that the trial judge has refused to settle the bill of exceptions in accordance with the facts. Defendant did not avail himself of the remedy thus provided, and we must take the bill as we find it and the statements in it as being absolute verity. People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 351, 19 Pac. 161. If the matter were one which we could consider at this time and in this way, we should still be compelled to hold that against the objections made by defendant the trial court was still justified in its ruling on the motion. The first objection is met by the physical fact that the amendment was present and made a part of the bill. There is no preparation and service of amendments by a district attorney required by section 1174. The excerpt presented as all the proceedings at the preliminary examination shows on its face that it is not all of the proceedings before the magistrate. It contains no certificate of the reporter, and, even if it did, this would make it but prima facie evidence of the matters which it contained. People v. Cox, 76 Cal. 281, 18 Pac. 332. If the stipulation be considered as supplying the omission, it does not negative the fact that the court fully informed the defendant as to his right to counsel and all other rights. We are not dependent upon the justice's docket in order to sustain the ruling of the trial court on the motion to dismiss the information.

In support of the demurrer to the information, it is contended that the information is defective because it designates the crime committed as an "assault with a deadly weapon with the intent to commit murder." The name given the offense is not material if the facts charging an offense be clearly stated. People v. Morley (Cal. App.) 97 Pac. 84; People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 38, 38 Pac. 538. The designation of the crime here used has been expressly held not to constitute a charging of more than one offense (People v. Beam, 66 Cal. 394, 5 Pac. 677), and the demurrer was properly overruled. The instructions requested by the defendant relating to the intent necessary in establishing the crime of assault with intent to commit murder became immaterial and their refusal harmless and nonprejudicial, since the verdict of the jury was for the minor offense of assault with a deadly weapon. People v. Green, 1 Cal. App. 432, 82 Pac. 544. The refusal to give the definitions of murder and manslaughter was not prejudicial for the same reason.

The instruction predicated upon self-defense was also properly refused. If given, it would have instructed the jury that the defendant was justified in killing Chappell if "he believed himself in danger of suffering bodily harm and injury from Chappell." This would have eliminated all element of the character of the injury threatened and the reasonableness of the belief upon defendant's part. Pen. Code, §§ 197, 198. The question asked of the witness Ashton by defendant on cross-examination was not directly in line with the apparent purpose of his direct examination, but was well within the scope of proper cross-examination and the objection of the district attorney should have been overruled, but it is clear that the ruling of the court in sustaining the objection did not prejudice the defendant in any way. The question sought to elicit evidence that defendant was intoxicated at the time of the shooting. This appears by the testimony of other witnesses, and was not controverted. On redirect examination of one of the witnesses for the people the district attorney asked the question: "Did you see Chappell [the complaining witness] and the defendant shake hands and make up before the shooting occurred?" To this the witness replied: "No, sir; I did not." Also, the question: "Do you remember anything being said about making up?" To this the witness replied: "Only when the defendant asked the first time to shake hands." Thereupon the district attorney stated that he would refresh the witness' memory from notes taken at the preliminary examination. To this the defendant objected on the ground that it was a cross-examination by the prosecution of its own witness. The objection was overruled, and the district attorney proceeded to read as follows (giving the page of the transcript): "And Chappell would not have anything to do with him, so he went over there and sat down and the surveyors got around him and got to talking to him, and they made it up to have a drink and to make friends, I think. I never paid much attention to that part of the fracas." The witness thereupon said: "I do not remember making any such statement as that. I know there was words spoken about all have a drink. The gang walked up to have a drink while the defendant walked in the back room to get his coat. I never saw no hand shaking or anything of that kind." As said in the Durrant Case, 116 Cal. 213, 48 Pac. 84: "The witness would have had the undoubted right to read his testimony given upon the examination for the purpose of refreshing his memory. Code Civ. Proc. § 2047. Such a transcript may at least be regarded as a private memorandum. Reid v. Reid, 73 Cal. 206, 14 Pac. 781. When a witness called by a party fails to testify to matters previously within his recollection, or gives evidence in apparent variance with that formerly given, it is not incumbent upon the party producing the witness to wait for the assaults of the cross-examination to expose seeming inconsistencies and discrepancies. While he may not impeach his witness (saving under certain exceptional circumstances), he may with propriety refresh his recollection, to the end that the witness and his present evidence may both be put fairly and in their proper light before the jury." On the other hand, a pretense of refreshing the memory from such a transcript cannot be made a subterfuge to get before the jury incompetent evidence and statements which tend to make a case for the people. People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 532, 75 Pac. 101. If the circumstances of the case at bar bring it within the rule of the case last cited, there is no objection here upon which we can say the ruling of the trial court was erroneous. If it is meant by the objection that the district attorney was "cross-examining his own witness" that he was endeavoring to impeach him, this was not done. The statements of the witness in the two records are easily reconcilable, and it cannot be said that, as explained by the witness, the evidence read from the transcript of the testimony taken at the preliminary examination in any manner prejudiced the case of the defendant. People v. Majoine, 144 Cal. 303, 77 Pac. 952. We do not, however, think the facts of this case bring it within the rule declared in People v. Creeks, and see no good reason for impugning the motives and good faith of the district attorney, as the record discloses nothing from which the inference can be drawn that he intended to do more than call the attention of the witness to what appeared to him to be an apparent discrepancy between the testimony of the witness on the trial and that at the preliminary examination with the view to reconciling them and ascertaining the real facts. The case for the prosecution was not strengthened by the matter read from the transcript.

No prejudicial error appearing in the record, the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. CLAUDIUS. (Cr. 90.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Aug. 7, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—TIME FOR TRIAL—CONSENT TO DELAY.

Though defendant was not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, yet his consent, within such time, that the trial should be set for the date fixed, relieved the prosecution, on the motion to dismiss, of the necessity of showing other good reason why the motion should be denied.

2. ABDUCTION — FOR PROSTITUTION — EVIDENCE.

Evidence on a prosecution for taking away from the custody of the mother, and without her consent, an unmarried female under the age of 18 years for the purpose of prostitution, held sufficient to warrant a conviction, on the principle that one is presumed to contemplate the probable consequences of his acts, though defendant and the girl testified that it was understood between them that she should not engage in prostitution, and there was no direct evidence that she did practice public prostitution.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Abduction, § 22.]

3. SAME.

On a prosecution for taking away a girl for the purpose of prostitution, evidence that, before defendant's acquaintance with the girl, he had been married to and had lived with a prostitute, is competent on the question of the intent reasonably to be inferred from his relation with the girl, and his object in placing her under the surroundings shown.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Abduction, § 19.]

4. SAME.

On a prosecution for taking away a girl for the purpose of prostitution, the costume provided her by the keeper of the resort in which defendant placed her, ostensibly as a dancing girl, is admissible as bearing on the intent and object in recruiting for the place.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

James Budd Claudius appeals from a conviction, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

R. W. Richardson and Richardson & Martin, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal by defendant from a judgment of conviction, and from an order denying a new trial.

The information, filed October 9, 1907, charged the defendant with unlawfully taking away from the custody of the mother, and without her consent, an unmarried female under the age of 18 years for the purpose of prostitution. Within the 60 days next ensuing after the date of filing the information the cause, by consent, was set for trial December 9th, at which date it was commenced and thereafter concluded on December 12, 1907. While it is true that the defendant was not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, yet his consent that the trial should be set for the date fixed obviated the necessity upon the part of the people of showing upon the motion to dismiss other good cause why the motion should be denied.

It is claimed upon this appeal that the evidence contained in the record is insufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty as charged. It is disclosed by the evidence that this young girl, claimed to have been abducted, was of that class who frequent the public dance halls of Los Angeles, where she met the defendant, a young man who, while but 24 years of age, had been once married to and lived with a woman whom he conceded was a prostitute, but who had procured an annulment of the marriage before defendant's relations with the girl began. The usual results which are to be expected from a dance hall acquaintance followed. Shortly after they had commenced their illicit relations, the defendant accepted employment as floor manager from one Moore, the keeper of a disreputable resort at Bakersfield. He and the girl accompanied Moore to Bakersfield, where she entered the house as one of the dancing girls kept for the entertainment of customers and after the dance to sell drinks. Above this dance hall rooms were provided where the girls, engaged in dancing and selling drinks during the early part of the evening, were permitted to entertain their admirers after the bar closed, and to retain money earned by them in such rooms. Defendant and this young girl occupied one of these rooms during their stay in Bakersfield. It is not shown by direct evidence that she actually practiced public prostitution, and both defendant and the girl testify that it was understood between them that she should not engage in prostitution, although it is shown that the other girls similarly situated did, and the rooms were maintained for that purpose. The girl gave all the money she earned to defendant, and Moore provided her with a striking costume in which she appeared at the dances. This costume was in evidence and exhibited to the jury. We make this rather extended statement of facts to illustrate the conditions surrounding this girl, for which defendant was responsible, and which he knew existed before he took her there, and to demonstrate that the jury were warranted, even in the absence of direct evidence, in finding that the girl was taken away for the purpose of prostitution. Men of average intelligence could not have found otherwise. To say that the conduct of the defendant in relation to this girl was not satisfactory evidence of the intent charged, notwithstanding their joint protest, would be to destroy the force of the established principle that one is conclusively presumed to contemplate the probable consequences of his own acts. The intent charged was a matter of fact which was for the jury to determine, and with their determination we are perfectly satisfied.

The court did not err in permitting evidence of defendant's statements to the effect that, before his acquaintance with the girl, he had been married to and had been living with a prostitute. It was competent as tending to show to the jury the intent reasonably to be inferred from defendant's relation with this young girl and the object sought to be attained by him in placing her under the surroundings shown. Humiliating as it may be, courts and juries cannot close their eyes to the fact that among the degenerates in all cities has grown up a class who live upon the shame of women, and while it cannot be classed as a business, yet it has become so widespread that in a case like this, where there is involved the intent with which the defendant acted, it was proper to show that from his previous conduct and life he was of that class, and that in the prosecution of that nefarious calling he induced this girl to enter a life from which but one result could be anticipated.

The record discloses no impropriety in any statement made by the court during the progress of the trial, nor any language by the district attorney not warranted from the facts in evidence.

The admission in evidence of the costume provided by Moore for these women in his employ was proper, that the jury might have before them the whole of the surroundings into which this girl was placed, and that it might more intelligently determine the intent and object of those charged with recruiting victims for this den of vice.

The instructions given by the court embodied the law upon the particular subjects, and none so given is open to criticism.

We perceive no prejudicial error in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. QUIJADA. (Cr. 1,449.)

(Supreme Court of California. Aug. 31, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—FILING INFORMATION—TIME OF FILING.

Under Pen. Code, § 1382, requiring a dismissal when a person, held to answer, has not been informed against or indicted within 30 days, unless good cause be shown, the fact that an important witness was unable to attend the grand jury session and give evidence within that time was good cause for not dismissing the prosecution.

2. SAME.

Where a demurrer is sustained to an indictment, and accused is remanded to await the action of a subsequent grand jury. Pen. Code, § 1382, providing that when a person is held to answer for a public offense, if an indictment or information be not found or filed within 30 days thereafter, the court must order the prosecution dismissed, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, has no application.

3. SAME—DISMISSAL—EFFECT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1387, making an order for the dismissal of an action a bar to another prosecution, if it is a misdemeanor, unless such order is explicitly made for the purpose of amending the complaint, but providing that such a dismissal shall not be a bar if the offense is a felony, in a prosecution for assault with a deadly weapon while confined in the penitentiary, an order of the court, after sustaining a demurrer to the first indictment, discharging defendant from the custody of the sheriff and remanding him to the custody of the warden until a second indictment was returned, did not amount to a formal dismissal, and was not a bar to a second indictment.

4. SAME.

Under the direct provisions of Pen. Code, § 1008, a direction of the court that the case be submitted to another grand jury prevents an order or dismissal from operating as a final judgment and bar to a subsequent prosecution.

5. SAME—APPEAL—GROUNDS OF MOTION TO DISMISS.

In a criminal prosecution, an objection that a grand juror was not qualified to act because he had been discharged as a trial juror within the year, which was not one of the grounds of defendant's motion to set aside the indictment or to dismiss, is not in strictness entitled to consideration upon appeal.

6. GRAND JURY—VALIDITY—QUALIFICATIONS OF GRAND JUROR—EFFECT.

Even if Code Civ. Proc. § 199, subd. 3, providing that a person is not competent to act as a juror who has been discharged as a juror, by any court of record, within a year, or who has been drawn as a grand juror in such court within a year, renders a trial juror who has been discharged within a year incompetent to sit upon a grand jury, this fact does not affect the validity of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent Dig. vol. 24, Grand Jury, § 15.]

7. CITIZENS—CITIZENSHIP—EVIDENCE.

The prior naturalization and citizenship of grand jurors was established by the admission in evidence of the judgments of naturalization, and by a showing of their exercise of the rights and duties of citizenship.

8. ASSAULT AND BATTERY—ASSAULT WITH INTENT TO KILL—STATUTE—CONSTITUTIONALITY.

Pen. Code, § 246, imposing the death penalty upon a person undergoing a life sentence in the state prison, who, with malice aforethought, assaults another with a deadly weapon, is constitutional.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; E. C. Hart, Judge.

Francisco Quijada was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon while confined in the State Penitentiary, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Renfro, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, for the People.

HENSHAW, J. Defendant was indicted by the grand jury of the county of Sacramento for an assault with a deadly weapon, with malice aforethought, while undergoing a life sentence in the State Prison at Folsom—an offense defined by section 246 of the Penal Code. He was tried and found guilty, and the death penalty was imposed. He has appealed from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The defendant was tried under an indictment found and returned on the 10th day of August, 1905. He had been indicted by a previous grand jury on the 11th day of April, 1905. His demurrer to this earlier indictment was sustained, and the court, being of the opinion that the objection upon which the demurrer was founded could be obviated, directed the submission of the matter to another grand jury. This latter order was made upon the 26th day of June, 1905, so that more than 30 days elapsed between that date and the day upon which the second indictment was returned. Prior to the finding of the last indictment the defendant moved the court for an order discharging him from the custody of the sheriff of Sacramento county, and directing that he be returned to the custody of the warden of the State Prison at Folsom, upon the ground that no indictment had been returned against him within 30 days. He renewed this same application in different form upon the trial, basing it upon section 1382 of the Penal Code, to the effect that the court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed, when a person has been held to answer for a public offense, if an indictment is not found or information filed against him within 30 days thereafter. The court denied the motion, and properly. In the first place, good cause was shown, it being established that an important witness, Jolly, was unable to attend the session of the grand jury and give his evidence earlier than he did. But the section itself has no application to a case such as this, where a demurrer to an indictment has been sustained, and the prisoner remanded to custody to await the action of a subsequent grand jury. It was decided, as to a second information, in People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 221, 76 Pac. 1028, that the 30-day provision had no application, and the same rule pertains to a second indictment. See, also, People v. Lundin, 120 Cal. 311, 52 Pac. 807. It appears that the court, upon a writ of habeas corpus, discharged the defendant from the custody of the sheriff of Sacramento county, and remanded him to the custody of the warden at Folsom, before the second indictment had been returned. It is contended that this order amounts to a formal dismissal of the charge, and is a bar to the second indictment. But this is in direct conflict with the provision of section 1387 of the Penal Code, and, moreover, a direction of the court that the case be submitted to another grand jury prevents an order of dismissal from operating as a final judgment and bar to further prosecution. Pen. Code, § 1008; People v. Clarke, 42 Cal. 623; People v. Breen, 130 Cal. 75, 62 Pac. 408; People v. Kerrick, 144 Cal. 46, 77 Pac. 711; People v. Smith, 143 Cal. 597, 77 Pac. 449. The motion to dismiss was, therefore, properly denied. Appellant contends that a grand juror, Thomas Waite, was incompetent to act as a grand juror, for the reason that he failed to possess the qualifications prescribed by section 199, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc., in that he had been discharged as a trial juror within the year. This was not one of the grounds of his motion to set aside the indictment or to dismiss, and, in strictness, is not entitled to consideration upon this appeal (People v. Renfrow, 41 Cal. 39; Shields v. State, 149 Ind. 400, 49 N. E. 351; Southern Pacific Co. v. Rauh, 49 Fed. 701, 1 C. C. A. 416), but owing to the extreme gravity of the case, appellant's proposition may be considered upon its merits. Section 199, subd. 3, Code Civ. Proc., touching the incompetency of jurors, declares that, "A person is not competent to act as a juror: * * * (3) Who has been discharged as a juror by any court of record in this state within a year, as provided in section 203 of this Code, or who has been drawn as a grand juror in any such court as such within a year and been discharged." This provision seems to have reference to the incompetency of one to act as a trial juror, and renders incompetent to serve on a trial jury, either a trial juror who has served and been discharged within a year, or one who has served as a grand juror; but, if it does render incompetent to sit upon a grand jury a trial juror who has been discharged within the year, this fact does not affect the validity of the indictment. Ex parte Ruef, 150 Cal. 665, 89 Pac. 605. Appellant's further objection to certain of the grand jurors that they were aliens was overcome in each instance by evidence of their naturalization and citizenship. This proof was established by the admission in evidence of the judgments of naturalization, and by a showing of their exercise of the rights and duties of citizenship. People v. Freeland, 6 Cal. 98; People v. Roberts, 6 Cal. 215; Boyd v. State of Nebraska, 143 U. S. 178, 12 Sup. Ct. 375, 36 L. Ed. 103; Nalle v. Fenwick, 4 Rand. (Va.) 585; Providence Gold Mining Co. v. Burke, 6 Ariz. 323, 57 Pac. 641.

The last point urged by appellant is that section 246 of the Penal Code is unconstitutional. The arguments advanced in support of this proposition received due consideration by this court in People v. Finley (Cal.) 94 Pac. 248, and it was there decided that the law was constitutional. We perceive no reason to change our views upon this question.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

ELLSWORTH v. KNOWLES et al.
(Civ. 513.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Aug. 13, 1908.)

1. CUSTOMS AND USAGES—EXPLANATION OF CONTRACT—TERMS OF PAYMENT—ADMISSIBILITY—"SIGHT DRAFT AGAINST PAPERS."

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12, providing that usage is admissible only where necessary to explain the character of a contract and for that purpose, the usage of the trade was admissible to show that a sale of apricots "sight draft against papers" meant that the seller should ship the goods and receive payment only on presentation of shipping receipt or bill of lading showing shipment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Customs and Usages, §§ 30-33.]

2. SALES—PERFORMANCE—WAIVER—PROVISION FOR PARTIES' BENEFIT.

A provision in a contract for purchase of apricots requiring the "buyer to furnish lace paper with usual allowance for same," being, under the testimony, for the buyer's benefit, could be waived by permitting the seller to use his own lace paper.

3. CONTRACTS—PERFORMANCE—WAIVER—PROVISION FOR OWN BENEFIT.

One may waive a contract provision made for his own benefit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 1480-1492.]

4. SALES—PERFORMANCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Where apricots were sold for August shipment, the buyer to furnish the labels free, if they were supplied before needed and before the seller was ready to fill the order, and were received and used by him, he cannot complain that the buyer did not furnish them during August.

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"POUND"—"KILO."

The words "pound" and "kilo" designate units of weight of different systems; a pound being the unit of weight in the system in most common use in this country, while the word "kilo" is an abbreviation of the word "kilogram," which is the unit of weight of a system not in such common use in this country, but well known and understood.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 5, p. 3931.]

6. SALES—PLEADING—VARIANCE BETWEEN ALLEGATIONS AND PROOF—PLEADING CONTRACT.

The complaint in an action for breach of contract alleged that defendant agreed to sell plaintiff a certain number of 12½ "pound kilo" boxes of apricots, but the written contract called for a certain number of 12½ "kilo" boxes of apricots, and the trial court based its findings on the capacity of the boxes as shown by the contract. The uncertainty of the complaint was not attacked either by demurrer or objection to evidence. Held that, while the allegation as to capacity was uncertain and contradictory, under the circumstances, the finding of the trial court that the capacity was in accordance with the contract by rejecting the word "pound" was proper; the variance not being fatal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 1166-1169.]

7. WORDS AND PHRASES—"KILO."

A kilo is the equivalent of 2.20462125 pounds, or practically 2½ pounds.

8. SALES—DAMAGES—MEASURE—BREACH OF CONTRACT—INTEREST—SALE OF GOODS.

By Civ. Code, § 3308, the measure of damages for breach of a seller's agreement is the excess of the value of the property to the buyer over the amount he agreed to pay for it, and section 3311 provides the measure of damages for breach of a buyer's agreement to accept, but neither section in terms allows interest. Section 3357, of the same chapter, provides that the damages provided in this chapter are exclusive of interest, except where otherwise expressly provided. Held, that interest should not have been allowed on damages for a seller's breach of contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; John E. Richards, Judge.

Action by E. A. Ellsworth against W. G. Knowles and another, copartners under the name of Knowles Bros. From a judgment for plaintiff and the refusal of a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed as modified.

William B. Hardy, for appellants. Leo B. Archer and Wm. P. Veuve, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeal from judgment and order denying defendants' motion for new trial.

Plaintiff recovered judgment for the sum of $912.50 as damages for failure of defendants to deliver certain apricots bought by plaintiff from defendants in 1905, and which they never delivered. Plaintiff was engaged in the business of drying, packing, and dealing in fruits at Niles, in Alameda county, while defendants were engaged in a similar business at San Jose, in Santa Clara county. The contract, the breach of which gave rise to this action, is contained in two letters, one sent by plaintiff to defendants, and one in reply sent by defendants to plaintiff. They are as follows: "Niles, Cal., July 6th, 1905. Knowles Bros., San Jose, Cal. Dear Sirs: We herewith confirm purchase from you of one car 1850-12½ kilo boxes of choice apricots at 5½, boxed, less 5%. Buyer to furnish lace paper with usual allowance for same; buyer also to furnish labels free. August shipment. Payment sight draft against papers. Respectfully yours, Edw. A. Ellsworth." And: "San Jose, Cal., July 8th, 1905. Mr. E. A. Ellsworth, Niles, Cal. Gentlemen: Your favor of the 6th inst. to hand, confirming purchase of 1850 12½ kilo boxes choice apricots at 5½ cts. boxed less 5%. Buyer to furnish lace papers with usual allowance, labels to be furnished by buyer free, August shipment, sight draft against documents. This is in order, and will receive our best attention. Yours very truly, Knowles Bros." The apricots were to be dried, and the price was 5½ cents per pound. About this there is no dispute. Defendants never delivered the apricots; and though plaintiff sought to obtain a delivery of the apricots, and both wrote to and called on defendants, urging delivery, he never made any tender of payment therefor.

The principal point of controversy between the parties relates to the proper interpretation of the contract. Defendants contend that delivery and payment were to be concurrent acts, and that they could not be put in default without a demand for delivery, accompanied by tender of payment. Plaintiff, on the other hand, contends that the contract required the seller to deliver the apricots at his nearest shipping station (San Jose) f.o.b., procure a bill of lading, and that payment should be made on presentation of sight draft and bill of lading showing shipment of fruit. The complaint was framed upon this latter theory of the contract, which was adopted by the trial court, and findings and judgment followed in accordance therewith. In this we think the trial court was correct. The words "August shipment, payment sight draft against papers," strongly suggest that the seller was to ship the fruit, and should be entitled to payment only on presentation of papers showing such shipment: in other words, upon presentation of shipping receipt or bill of lading. But if there be any uncertainty in this regard, on the face of the contract, it was made clear by parol testimony that this was the meaning of such words according to the usage of the trade or business in which both parties were engaged. Evidence may be given of usage to explain the true character of a contract or instrument, where such true character is not otherwise plain. In such case usage is an instrument of interpretation. Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12.

Appellants also urge that plaintiff never supplied the lace paper, and that this was an act that he was required to do before defendants could pack or deliver the apricots. But it was clearly shown that the provision, "buyer to furnish lace paper with usual allowance for same," was a provision for his benefit. One of the defendants so testified. While defendants were still trying to obtain the apricots to fill the contract, and before they finally abandoned their efforts to carry out the contract, plaintiff notified them that they could use their own lace paper. He thus waived a provision of the contract intended for his benefit. A party to a contract may waive a provision intended for his benefit. Knarston v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 140 Cal. 57, 73 Pac. 740. While there is some doubt from the evidence as to whether or not plaintiff supplied the labels before the end of August, it is certain that he supplied them before they were needed, and before defendants had procured any apricots to fill the order. The labels were sent to defendants, and received and retained by them to be used in marking the boxes of apricots. This was while they were representing that they would fill the order, and were trying to buy apricots for this purpose from the growers. Under these circumstances they cannot now be heard to say that plaintiff did not comply with the contract requiring him to furnish the labels free.

The court found the market price of the fruit agreed to be delivered to have been $912.58 more than the contract price. This finding is attacked as not supported by the evidence. The contention of appellant in this regard is predicated primarily on the claim that the complaint alleges a contract to deliver 1,850 12½ pound boxes of apricots, which we know, as a matter of arithmetic, would amount to 23,125 pounds. If that be the amount of apricots called for by the contract pleaded, it is certain that the evidence in the record does not sustain the finding. But we think counsel is in error in his construction of the allegation of the complaint. The allegation of the complaint (and which is admitted by the answer) is that defendants agreed to sell and deliver to plaintiff "1,850 twelve and one-half pound kilo boxes choice apricots at," etc. This allegation is certainly ambiguous and uncertain in its meaning; for the words "pound" and "kilo" designate units of weight and belong to different systems. The word "pound" is the designation of a unit of weight in the system in most common use in this country, while the word "kilo" is an abbreviation, sanctioned by common use, of the word "kilogram," which is the designation of a unit of weight in a system not of such common use in this country, but still a system well known and understood. The words "pound," "kilogram," and its abbreviation "kilo" are defined in the Standard Dictionary of the English language. With this understanding of the signification of the words "pound" and "kilo," it is apparent that the quantity designated by "1,850 twelve and one-half pound kilo boxes choice apricots" is uncertain. Either the word "pound" or the word "kilo" should be dropped from the expression.

The contract introduced in evidence without objection was perfectly definite and certain. It is contained in the letter of plaintiff to defendants and defendants' answer thereto, and calls for "1,850 12½ kilo boxes of choice apricots at," etc. Each letter specifies "1,850 12½ kilo boxes choice apricots," and the word "pound" is nowhere used in the letters making the contract. The court in its findings followed the language of the contract, and found that the defendants agreed to sell to plaintiff and to deliver to him "1,850 12½ kilo boxes choice apricots at," etc. No point was made upon the uncertainty appearing upon the face of the complaint, either by demurrer or objection to evidence. If the attention of counsel or the court had thus been called to the matter, doubtless the complaint would have been amended so as to conform without ambiguity or uncertainty to the facts as they existed in the contract. Doubtless the venerable and scholarly judge who tried this cause resolved the uncertainty in the complaint in the light of the definite and certain terms of the contract, and so construed the complaint as alleging a sale of 1,850 12½ kilo boxes choice apricots. Under the circumstances disclosed by the record, we think he was correct in so doing. A kilo is the equivalent of 2.20462125 pounds, or practically 2½ pounds. A 12½ kilo box would thus contain 27½ pounds, and 1,850 of such boxes would contain 50,875 pounds. Under this view of the quantity of apricots agreed to be delivered there can be no doubt that the evidence in the record amply sustains the finding attacked.

The court in its conclusions of law decided that plaintiff was entitled to interest on the amount found as damages from the 1st day of September, 1905, to the entry of judgment, and judgment was entered accordingly for such interest. This is contrary to the rule laid down in Hewes v. Germain Fruit Co., 106 Cal. 442, 39 Pac. 853, in an action for damages for breach of contract to purchase raisins, where the judgment for damages, with interest thereon to the entry of the judgment, was modified by eliminating therefrom the amount allowed as interest. The measure of damages for breach of contract to purchase property is laid down in section 3311 of the Civil Code, and for breach of contract to sell such property in section 3308 thereof. Neither section in terms provides for any interest, and both are subject to section 3357, Civ. Code, which provides that "the damages prescribed in this chapter are exclusive of exemplary damages and interest, except where those are expressly mentioned." "This chapter" referred to in the foregoing section begins with section 3300, and ends with section 3360, and thus includes section 3308.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom the words "together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the first day of September, 1905, until the entry of judgment, amounting to the sum of $1,024.90," and, as so modified, the judgment and order are affirmed.

STONER et al. v. CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 534.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 11, 1908.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—OPENING STREETS—OBJECTIONS TO ASSESSMENTS—NOTICE OF HEARING.

Under Street Opening Act 1903 (St. 1903, p. 381, c. 268) § 19, providing that the city clerk shall, at the next regular meeting of the city council after expiration of the time for filing objection to the assessment for opening a street, lay said assessment, with all objections thereto filed with him, before the council, and the council shall hear the objections at such meeting, or at such other time to which the hearing may be adjourned, objectors have to take notice that the objections will be heard at such next regular meeting, after expiration of the 30 days for filing objections, or at the time to which such hearing is at such meeting adjourned.

2. EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE—CITY CHARTER.

The court will take judicial notice of the provision of the charter of a city that its council shall meet at least once a week.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 40.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—OPENING STREETS—OBJECTIONS TO ASSESSMENT—LOSING JURISDICTION.

A city council having failed to take action at the next regular meeting after expiration of time for filing objections to an assessment for opening a street, either by hearing the objections or adjourning the hearing, as required by Street Opening Act 1903 (St. 1903, p. 381, c. 268), § 19, it lost jurisdiction to act in the matter, except on republication, as in the first instance, of the notice, under section 18 (page 380), of the filing of the assessment.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR—APPEAL FROM DECISION—RECORD—"JUDGMENT ROLL."

Though, where there is a return to a writ of review, the petition for the writ can serve no purpose on appeal, unless embodied in a bill of exceptions, the appeal being on the judgment roll, which, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1077, consists of the judgment, writ, and return thereto, yet a demurrer to the petition being in effect to adopt the facts in the petition as the return, the petition, on appeal from the judgment sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the writ, may be brought up and considered as the return, and therefore as part of the judgment roll.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Hutton, Judge.

Petition by C. E. Stoner and others for writ of review directed to the city council of the city of Los Angeles and others. Demurrer to the petition was sustained, and the writ dismissed, and petitioners appeal. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Chas. S. Burnell and Haas, Garrett & Dunigan, for appellants. Leslie R. Hewitt, City Atty., E. R. Young, Deputy, and Howard Robertson, Deputy, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This proceeding was instituted in the superior court of Los Angeles county to obtain a writ of review directed to the city council of the city of Los Angeles. The controversy grows out of the opening of Grand avenue, from Temple street to California street, the proceedings for the opening of which were had and taken under the street opening act of 1903 (St. 1903, p. 376, c. 268). It appears from the verified petition that appellants are the owners of lots and lands located within the district established by said council as being benefited by the opening of said street, and upon which the cost of such opening was apportioned by an assessment duly made upon the parcels of land located within the boundaries thereof. The assessment and diagram were filed with the city clerk, who thereupon gave notice of such filing by publication for a period of 10 days; the first publication of said notice being made on the 18th day of October, 1907. On November 15, 1907, and within 30 days after the first publication of said notice, appellants filed objections to said assessment. It appears from said petition that no action was taken by said council upon these objections until Monday, December 23, 1907, at which time, as shown by the minutes of the proceedings of the city council as set forth in the petition, the "petitions, protests and communications were received and referred to their appropriate committees, to wit:

* * * No. 1,224 from the estate of T. D. Garvin, et al., protest against the assessment for the opening of Grand avenue between Temple street and California street. Set for hearing January 6th, 1908, at 11 a. m., and in the meantime referred to the city engineer for report as to frontage, and the clerk instructed to give notice in the manner required by law." On January 6, 1908, as shown by the minutes of the proceedings set forth in the petition, the engineer made his report to the effect that the protestants did not represent a majority of the frontage in said district, and, according to the minute entry of said proceedings, "the matter of the hearing of protests Nos. 1224 and 1229, Estate of T. D. Garvin and S. A. Waldron, et al., protesting against the opening of Grand avenue from Temple street to California street, coming on regularly at this time as a special hearing, the same was taken up, and Mr. Healey moved, seconded by Mr. Clappitt, that the report of the city engineer be adopted, and that the protests be denied and the assessment and diagram presented by the Board of Public Works be confirmed and adopted," which motion was adopted by a full vote. No notice of the time when said objections would be heard was served on the objectors. Upon the filing of this petition, the writ was issued as prayed for. Thereafter, instead of making a return of its proceedings as required by said writ, said respondents filed a demurrer, alleging that the petition did not state facts showing that petitioners were entitled to the writ. This demurrer was sustained, and a motion made at the time by respondents to have the writ theretofore issued dismissed was granted; whereupon a judgment of dismissal was entered in accordance therewith, from which petitioners prosecute this appeal.

The question presented by the record is the sufficiency of the verified petition to warrant the issuance of the writ. The effect of the demurrer on the part of respondents was, for the purpose of disposing of the question raised thereby, to adopt as their return the facts alleged in the petition. The question, therefore, is whether these facts entitled petitioners to the writ. By the provisions of section 18 of the street opening act of 1903

(St. 1903, p. 380, c. 268), the superintendent of streets, upon the completion of the assessment, is required to file the same with the city clerk, who shall give notice of such filing by publication for at least 10 days in a daily newspaper published and circulated in the city. Said notice shall require all persons interested, within 30 days after the date of the first publication of such notice, to file with the said clerk their objections, if any they have, to the confirmation of said assessment. Pursuant to said notice so given by publication, appellants did within the 30 days provided therefor file with the city clerk objections to the confirmation of said assessment. No other notice of the filing of said assessment, or the hearing of objections thereto, other than this publication, is required. Hence parties filing objections are not entitled to personal notice of the time and place when a hearing will be accorded upon their objections. The law fixes the time when the objections shall be heard. Section 19 of the act provides: "The clerk shall, at the next regular meeting of the city council after the expiration of the time for filing objections lay said assessment and all objections so filed with him, before the council; and said council shall hear all such objections at said meeting, or at any other time to which the hearing thereof may be adjourned." The objectors, therefore, were chargeable with notice that their objections would be heard at the next regular meeting of the city council after the expiration of the 30 days within which to file objections, or at such other time to which such hearing might at such meeting be adjourned. It was their duty to be present at such meeting, if a hearing was then had, or, if not had, to ascertain from the action then taken the time to which such hearing was adjourned.

By reference to section 13 of article 3 of the charter of the city of Los Angeles, of which this court will take judicial notice (Dillon's Municipal Corporations, § 83; 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 936; Bituminous, etc., Paving Co. v. Fulton [Cal.] 33 Pac. 1117; People v. Potter, 35 Cal. 110; Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604), it will be seen that the city council of said city of Los Angeles shall meet at least once a week. The first publication of the notice was made on October 18, 1907, and the 30 days accorded for filing objections expired November 17, 1907, but, as shown by the record set out in the petition, the city clerk did not "lay said assessment and all objections so filed with him, before the council" until December 23, 1907—36 days after the filing thereof. It thus appears that after the objections were filed, and after the expiration of 30 days within which to file the same, they were not laid before the city council, and no action was had thereon until the expiration of a period during which, under the provisions of the charter, there were held some four or five regular meetings of said city council, and that on December 23, 1907, without notice to the objectors, their objections were taken up and referred to the city engineer to report upon the number of feet frontage in the district represented by the objectors. It is apparent that the council was proceeding upon the erroneous theory that the objections purported to be protests of the holders of a majority of the frontage against the improvement, filed under the provisions of section 4 of the act, and not objections to the confirmation of the assessment as being inequitable. It is true by the minutes of the proceedings it appears that they adopted and confirmed the assessment, but in face of the fact that a hearing was not had at the time required by law under the publication of notice made, nor any action taken thereon at such time, we cannot indulge in the presumption that the objections were in any way considered other than as protests against the improvement, rather than objections to the assessment itself. The council, having failed to take any action at the next regular meeting after the expiration of the time for filing objections, either in the way of according a hearing or adjourning the hearing to some subsequent day, lost jurisdiction to act in the matter, except upon a republication of the notice in accordance with the provisions of section 18 of the act. The record of the proceedings may show an entirely different state of facts from that set forth in the verified petition, but the question under consideration here is the sufficiency of the petition as an affidavit to justify the issuance of the writ.

The appeal is on the judgment roll, which consists of the judgment, writ, and return thereto (section 1077, Code Civ. Proc.), and respondents contend that the petition cannot be considered on appeal for the reason that it is not incorporated in a bill of exceptions. It is true that, where a return is made, the petition or affidavit for the writ can serve no purpose on appeal, unless it is embodied in a bill of exceptions (Reynolds v. County Court, 47 Cal. 604; Rauer v. Justice Court, 115 Cal. 84, 46 Pac. 870); but, where there is interposed a demurrer (the filing of which is permissible in such cases under section 1109, Code Civ. Proc.), the effect of which for the time is to adopt the allegations of the petition as the return, the petition, upon the sustaining of the demurrer and rendition of judgment of dismissal, is substituted as and for the record in lieu of which it is accepted, and may be brought up and considered, not as the petition, but as the return, and therefore a part of the judgment roll (Stewart v. Superior Court, 101 Cal. 594, 36 Pac. 100).

The views herein expressed render it unnecessary to consider other points urged by counsel.

The judgment is reversed and the proceeding remanded, with instruction to the trial court to overrule respondents' demurrer.

1. ANIMALS—PERSONAL INJURIES—KNOWLEDGE OF VICIOUS PROPENSITIES.

The gist of an action for injuries from being kicked by a horse is the keeping of the horse with the knowledge of its vicious propensity.

4. ANIMALS—PERSONAL INJURIES—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—KNOWLEDGE OF VICIOUS PROPENSITY.

In an action for injuries received from being kicked by a horse, evidence held not to show knowledge by the owner of the vicious character of the horse.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by Mark T. Haneman against the Western Meat Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jesse W. Lillenthal and Jackson Hatch, for appellant. B. A. Herrington, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover damages for injuries received by plaintiff from being kicked by a horse owned by defendant, while plaintiff was in its employ and driving the horse in connection with such employment. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff, on which judgment was entered. This appeal is from the judgment and the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

It is alleged that at the time of the injury plaintiff was employed, and for several months prior thereto had been employed, by the defendant to work in and about its meat market in the city of San Jose and vicinity, and to take and deliver meat to defendant's customers; that for such purpose defendant supplied plaintiff with a horse, attached by means of a harness to a meat delivery wagon; that the horse was owned by defendant, and kept for the purpose of drawing the delivery wagon, but that at all times said horse "was vicious of temper, was of a ferocious and vicious disposition, and was of a kicking nature, possessed a habit of kicking and striking at whomsoever approached him or was within reaching distance of him"; that the vicious nature of the horse was well known to defendant, and was not known to plaintiff. If it be conceded that the horse was vicious, yet the gist of the action against defendant was keeping the horse with knowledge by the defendant of his vicious propensity. It is necessary that the evidence be sufficient to sustain the allegations of the complaint as to the vicious character of the horse, the defendant's knowledge thereof, and the plaintiff's ignorance thereof; otherwise the judgment cannot stand. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove these matters, as they are of the essence of his case. The common law makes the owner of vicious domestic animals, with notice of their vicious propensities, responsible, for the reason that under such circumstances it is the duty of the owner to anticipate that such animals will commit such vicious acts as opportunity offers, and it is the duty of the owner to guard against such acts. It is not claimed that the horse was vicious at the time defendant purchased it, or that the proof shows that its general character was that of being vicious and ferocious. Certain specific acts are relied upon to show that the animal was vicious, which we will notice in detail. The horse was old. He was purchased by defendant a few months before the injury to plaintiff. At the time of the injury plaintiff had been working for defendant about eight or nine months, in different capacities in and about defendant's meat business, and had been driving the horse and delivering meat to defendant's customers for about six weeks. When injured he was driving the horse in his regular employment. He was 21 years of age. One Eddington, a witness called by plaintiff, who had been in the employ of the defendant, testified that some time prior to the time of the accident he had driven the horse, off and on, for two or three months; that on one occasion the horse kicked at him; that the horse turned toward him, and "I pulled his head the other way, and he made a bolt to start the other way. Then I pulled his head still the other way, and hit him with the whip, and it was at that time he kicked up." One Spottswood, a witness for plaintiff, testified that the horse kicked once while he was scraping the manure out of the stall from under the horse's feet, but that he might have touched the horse with his pitchfork; that the horse did not kick directly at witness, but straight out. Another witness for plaintiff, Shannon, testified that he worked for defendant five or six months, and drove the horse; that the horse could not be depended on, and that, "if you were not looking, and he got a shot at you, he would kick the top of your head off." This witness, however, did not tell of any instance of the horse kicking or attempting to injure any one during the entire time he had been driving him. Plaintiff himself testified that the horse was large and slow, and could not be hurried; that he never had to fasten him when leaving the wagon because the horse would stand. Although defendant had been driving the horse six weeks before he was injured, he never knew of his kicking before; that he never heard of the horse being a kicker until he was kicked by him; that he was working for the defendant, with the other employes, for six or seven months, and never heard of the horse kicking at any one or of his being a kicker. During all this time one Dowdell was the manager of the defendant's business in San Jose, and had charge and supervision thereof. It does not appear that defendant or his manager had any knowledge that the horse had ever kicked at any one. Eddington testified that, after the occasion on which he states that the horse kicked at him, upon his return to the house he told about the horse having kicked at him, and that he "thinks" that Ziegenfuse and Dowdell were there at the time. Dowdell testified positively that he was not present on such occasion, never heard such statement, and that prior to plaintiff's injury he never heard of the horse kicking any one. One Ziegenfuse, a witness for plaintiff, testified that he heard Eddington make a remark one morning that the horse had kicked at him (Eddington), and that plaintiff was present sacking beef, not more than three or four feet away, when the remark was made, and that plaintiff said to witness, "What do you think of the old horse kicking Billy? (meaning Eddington)." This statement as to what plaintiff said to Ziegenfuse was not denied or in any way contradicted by plaintiff, and Ziegenfuse was plaintiff's own witness.

The above evidence does not show that the horse was vicious or that defendant had any knowledge of any act of viciousness on the part of the horse. The fact that the horse had upon one occasion kicked up when Eddington struck him with the whip, and upon another occasion, when his foot or leg was probably struck with Spottswood's fork while cleaning the stall, is not sufficient to show that he was vicious, or had a "habit of kicking at whomsoever approached him," as alleged in the complaint. We apprehend that such circumstances might be detailed in the history of the most gentle horse. If the horse was of a vicious nature, and had been in the habit of kicking, it is strange that plaintiff never heard any such thing from his fellow employes during the several months that he was employed with them in and about the meat market and in connection with the delivery of meats. It is also strange that, if such was the natural disposition and character of the horse, plaintiff continuously drove him for six weeks, and never upon any occasion knew of his kicking until the injury occurred. If the horse was a dangerous horse, it seems reasonable that some one would have informed Dowdell of the fact. If he had a vicious character when defendant purchased him, it seems the fact could have been proven. He was then an old horse, and it does not appear that any person was ever before kicked by him. It has been said, in actions for injuries caused by being bitten by a dog, that every dog is entitled to his first bite before he becomes a biting dog. While it is true that the owner of a vicious animal, who knows that such animal is vicious, should be held liable to all persons for damages caused by the vicious acts of such animal if the owner allows such persons to be subjected to danger without warning, yet it is not the policy of the law to make the master an insurer against accidents that may happen to an employe in the ordinary course of his employment. The employe assumes the risks that are ordinarily incident to the business in which he is employed. The best trained horse may for the first time kick or run away. To hold the owner of such animal liable it must be shown that such owner failed in some duty to the party injured. In this case it is not shown that the horse was possessed of any characteristic vice, or that the defendant knew of any such vice.

The judgment and order are reversed.

HALL and KERRIGAN, JJ. We concur, upon the ground that the evidence does not show knowledge on the part of the defendant of the vicious character of the horse. We are not prepared to say that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a finding that the horse was, in fact, vicious.

MELVIN v. MELVIN. (Civ. 477.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Aug. 15, 1908.)

1. DEEDS—"DELIVERY"—SUFFICIENCY.

To constitute delivery of a deed, it is not sufficient that there be a mere delivery of its possession, but the act must be accompanied with the intent that the deed shall become operative as such.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 118.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1958-1970; vol. 8, p. 7632.]

2. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—STATEMENT OF FACTS—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint must state facts sufficient to constitute a present cause of action, and show that plaintiff is entitled to relief as of the time the complaint is filed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 106.]

3. TRUSTS—EXPRESS TRUSTS—ENFORCEMENT.

A complaint, in an action to establish a trust in real property, which alleges that plaintiff executed a deed conveying to defendant the premises, without any consideration except the friendship for defendant, and her belief that he would treat her fairly, that the deed was delivered to defendant in trust to hold the deed as plaintiff's property, and, when called for, to deliver the same to plaintiff, and that if it was not withdrawn and plaintiff died, the deed should be recorded, and the property should then vest in defendant, that defendant recorded the deed and repudiated the trust, states no cause of action, as it fails to show that plaintiff had any title to the land after the date of the deed; and the court may infer that subsequent thereto plaintiff parted with all her title.

4. JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS — DISMISSAL ON DEMURRER.

A judgment of dismissal of an action to establish a trust in land, rendered on a demurrer to a complaint failing to show that plaintiff had any interest in the property at the time of the bringing of the action, is not conclusive on plaintiff's right to allege, in an appropriate action, the fact that she is still the owner of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 1039, 1048.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; P. J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Matilda Melvin against Herbert G. Melvin. From a judgment of dismissal, after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

S. Solon Hall, for appellant. White, Miller & McLaughlin, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was brought to have it decreed that certain real property is held by defendant in trust for plaintiff, and to compel the execution of a deed of conveyance of the same by the former to the latter. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and, plaintiff declining to amend, a judgment of dismissal was entered, from which the appeal is taken.

It appears from the complaint that defendant is a stepson of plaintiff, and for a long time has resided with her. The relations between them were friendly and confidential. The plaintiff has had little experience in business matters, and she confided implicitly in defendant, and believed that in everything pertaining to her interest he would act in the utmost good faith towards her. The complaint alleges furthermore "that on the 29th day of May, 1899, the plaintiff was the owner of all that real estate [describing it].

* * * That on the day last aforesaid, and long prior thereto and for a long time thereafter, she was advised and believed that a person could make and execute a deed of conveyance, conveying real estate, and that the conveyance could be retained in the possession or under the control of the grantor until his death, and if then put on record a good title to the property described therein would vest in the grantee. That being moved thereto by the friendship she cherished for the defendant, and relying upon the confidence she had in him, and believing that he would treat her fairly, and intending ultimately to vest the title to said real estate in the defendant, should he survive her, and believing that she could thereby save the expense of proceedings in probate in the event of her death, she did, on the day last aforesaid, make and acknowledge a deed of conveyance which in form conveyed to the defendant the real estate hereinbefore described. That said deed of conveyance was made without any consideration whatever, except the friendship and good will she had for the defendant, and her faith in his integrity, and her belief that he would treat her fairly in all her dealings with him. That upon its being acknowledged by the plaintiff, said deed of conveyance was given to and accepted by the defendant in trust and as a trustee for the plaintiff, and it was agreed and understood by said defendant that he should hold said deed of conveyance for said plaintiff as her trustee and as her property, and that said trustee should keep said deed in some safe and secure place, and when called for by the said Matilda Melvin or by her order, said trustee should deliver the same to her. That if it was not withdrawn or its custody changed, and said Matilda Melvin died before the said defendant, said deed of conveyance should be recorded, and on that date the title to said property should vest in the said Herbert G. Melvin. But until her death said deed of conveyance was to remain with said Herbert G. Melvin, as her trustee, for safe-keeping, and for no other purpose." Then follow the allegations that on the 14th day of September, 1901, the deed was recorded, without the request or consent of plaintiff. That in July, 1906, the defendant repudiated the trust, and claimed to be the owner of the property, and that prior to July, 1906, plaintiff had no knowledge nor information that the defendant had repudiated or intended to repudiate the trust, or that he claimed to own the property free from any limitation. The foregoing statement covers substantially all the averments of the complaint, and makes it clear that the property is not charged with any trust, nor is the defendant a trustee in relation to the same. This is true because there was no conveyance of the property to defendant. It cannot be said that defendant holds the property in trust, when the allegations of the complaint show, beyond peradventure, that he does not hold it at all. It is expressly alleged that the deed was delivered to defendant, as her trustee, for safe-keeping, and for no other purpose. It appears also from other allegations that it was understood that no title vested in defendant, and that plaintiff should retain complete control and dominion over the deed. This is manifestly inconsistent with the contention of a transfer of the title from plaintiff to defendant. Certain phrases, indeed, are used, indicating the purpose of the pleader to declare an express trust in real property, but such a trust vests the whole estate in the trustee, subject only to the execution of the trust. Civ. Code, § 863. But here, as we have seen, no estate was vested in the so-called trustee. If any trust was created, it has relation simply to the deed of which the defendant was made the custodian or bailee, and the action is really to remove a cloud upon plaintiff's title, created by defendant's conduct in recording the deed in violation of his agreement, or it may be considered as a suit to quiet title against the adverse claim of defendant.

That the complaint shows that no title was transferred, as there was no delivery of the deed to defendant in contemplation of law, is set at rest by many authorities, among which we cite Kenney v. Parks, 125 Cal. 146, 57 Pac. 772, and the same case, reported again in 137 Cal. 527, 70 Pac. 556. In the former it is said: "Here the grantor reserved the right to recall his deed upon the happening of a certain event. When that event happened he had the right to reach out and take back the deed, and such reservation is fatal to a valid delivery. The all-controlling fact in this case, which defeats plaintiff's claim, is that when the deeds were made and delivered to the cashier of the bank, the respective grantors did not absolutely part with all future dominion and control over them, but, upon the contrary, the actual intention and understanding of each grantor was that upon the death of the other the survivor should take back his own deed, and that no title should vest under it." In the latter opinion the well-established doctrine is announced that "to constitute delivery of a deed, it is not sufficient that there be a mere delivery of its possession, but this act must be accompanied with the intent that the deed shall become operative as such." The foregoing discussion is probably unnecessary to a decision of the question before us, but we have made the suggestions in contemplation of possible litigation growing out of the transaction that may be instituted hereafter by plaintiff.

We deem it necessary to notice only one point raised by the demurrer, as that point seems fatal to the complaint and a justification of the ruling of the trial court. It is, of course, elementary and fundamental that the complaint must state facts sufficient to constitute a present cause of action, and to show that the plaintiff is entitled to relief as of the time the complaint is filed. In other words, allegations showing only that the cause of action existed some time in the past would be insufficient. The rule, according to all the authorities, is as stated in 16 Cyc. 233: "The bill must show plaintiff's right or title in or to the subject-matter of the suit upon which he bases his claim for relief. The averment must be express and not left to inference from an exhibit and must also show an interest existing at the time the suit is brought. Such title must be stated with sufficient certainty to enable the court to see that plaintiff has such a right as warrants its interference." We look in vain for any averment in the complaint before us of a present interest in the property in controversy. There is nothing to show that plaintiff has had any title to the land since May 29, 1899. Indeed, it has been held often that the presumption is that the pleader has stated his case as strongly as he can. Silver Creek v. Hayes, 113 Cal.

145, 45 Pac. 191; Fox v. Mackay, 125 Cal. 54, 57 Pac. 672; Hildreth v. Montecito Creek W. Co., 139 Cal. 22, 72 Pac. 395. We have a right to infer, therefore, that subsequent to said date plaintiff parted with all of her title to said property, and at the time she brought the action she had no further interest in the same. She thus failed to state a cause of action, and the demurrer was properly sustained on that ground. For further illustration of the principle involved, we cite the following California decisions: Hentsch v. Porter, 10 Cal. 555; Affierbach v. McGovern, 79 Cal. 268, 21 Pac. 837; Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750; Holly v. Heiskell, 112 Cal. 174, 44 Pac. 466. It is hardly necessary to add that this rule of pleading is not conclusive of plaintiff's right to allege in another appropriate action the fact, if it be such, that she is still the owner of the property, nor, as at present advised, if she had not parted with her interest, do we see any reason why she may not, under proper averments, maintain another action.

But the judgment upon the pleadings as presented was clearly right, and it is therefore affirmed.

AYDELOTTE v. BILLING. (Civ. 490.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 15, 1908. On Rehearing, Sept. 14, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 13, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where there is some evidence to support a finding of the trial court, it will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3928-3934.]

2. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—FAILURE TO FIND ON ALL ISSUES.

A judgment, based upon findings which do not determine all the material issues of fact, is a decision "against law," and can be successfully assailed on a motion for new trial.

3. TRIAL—FINDINGS—SUFFICIENCY—ISSUES.

Findings need not be in the identical language of the pleadings, but are sufficient if all the material issues are substantially covered.

4. SAME—NECESSITY—FACTS IMPLIED BY LAW.

No finding is required as to a fact implied by law; and hence, in an action for legal services, as the law, from the rendition of services, implies the request for them, or an agreement to pay the reasonable value thereof, an agreement to pay need not be alleged, and no finding thereon is required.

5. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF FINDING.

In an action for legal services by a member of a firm, an issue as to the misjoinder of parties plaintiff is sufficiently determined by a finding that the services were rendered by plaintiff.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—FAILURE TO MAKE FINDINGS.

In an action by a member of a firm for legal services, where the evidence showed that no services were performed by the firm, a failure to make a sufficient finding upon the issue, raised by defendant, that the services were rendered by the firm was no ground for reversal.

of a judgment for plaintiff, since it would necessarily have been adverse to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by William M. Aydelotte against Frederick W. Billing. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carl E. Lindsay and H. C. Wyckoff, for appellant. Wm. M. Aydelotte, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action is for the recovery of the value of legal services. The plaintiff had judgment for $955.95, from which, and the order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant has appealed.

Appellant states in his brief that "there are two principal points made on the appeal: First, that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $500 on one item (statement No. 11), contained in the bill of particulars; and, second, that the decision is against law, in that the findings do not determine all the material issues of fact." As to the first point, we deem it unnecessary to set out the evidence, but consider it sufficient to say that it does not present a question of law, as there is at least some support for the finding of the trial court. It is claimed, too, that the court below erred in failing to find, upon the allegation of the complaint, that the services were performed at the instance and request of defendant, and also upon the averment of the answer as to a defect of parties plaintiff, the contention being that the services, if any, were performed by the copartnership of Scrivner & Aydelotte. The general rule is that a judgment based upon findings which do not determine all the material issues of fact, is a decision "against law," and it can be successfully assailed on a motion for a new trial. Knight v. Roche, 56 Cal. 15; Nuttall v. Lovejoy, 90 Cal. 163, 27 Pac. 69; Kaiser v. Dalto, 140 Cal. 167, 73 Pac. 828; Kusel v. Kusel, 147 Cal. 52, 81 Pac. 297. But it is sufficient if all the material issues are substantially covered by the findings. They are not required to be in identically the same language as the pleadings. And it is also true that, if the pretermitted finding must necessarily have been adverse to appellant, he is not "aggrieved." In re Connors, 110 Cal. 413, 42 Pac. 906. And no finding is required as to a fact which is implied by law. McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 84, 55 Pac. 761. In the latter case it is said: "Under the system of pleading at the common law it was requisite that the declaration, in an action of assumpsit upon an executed consideration, should show that the consideration for the promise by the defendant was sufficient to support his promise, and it was sufficient to aver that the consideration was executed at his request; but this averment was unnecessary when the consideration, as well as the promise, were implied from the nature of the transaction set forth in the declaration—as in an action for goods sold and delivered to the defendant, or for money loaned to him by the plaintiff. Under our system of pleading, where only the facts which constitute the cause of action are to be alleged, it is not requisite to aver either the consideration or the promise, when they are implied as a legal conclusion from the facts which are alleged. While counsel and advice are frequently given without any request, and may be of no benefit to the party to whom they are given, yet a complaint which shows that the plaintiff rendered services to the defendant, which were received by him in person, and were presumptively at his request, and of which he has enjoyed the benefit, states facts from which the liability of the defendant therefor is presumed, and is good as against a general demurrer." If that decision states the rule correctly, it must be held that it was not necessary for plaintiff to allege that the services were performed at the instance and request of defendant, and hence that no finding thereon is required, as it is presumed, from the allegation and corresponding finding, that "plaintiff performed work, labor, and services as attorney and counsel at law for said defendant, and that the sum of $500 is due and owing from defendant to plaintiff." In other words, from the fact of service performed the law implies the request for the service, or an agreement to pay the reasonable value of said services and renders unnecessary the allegation of said agreement. Some of the authorities hold differently, but the McFarland Case, supra, seems controlling here. Assuming that the issue is properly presented as to the misjoinder of parties plaintiff, it is sufficiently determined by the finding that the services were rendered by plaintiff. This necessarily excludes any other person. Again, the evidence shows that no services were performed by the partnership. Hence, if a more complete finding upon the issue had been made, it must necessarily have been adverse to the defendant, and in such case the failure to find is not ground for the reversal of the judgment. Gillespie v. Lake, 85 Cal. 407, 24 Pac. 891.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Rehearing.

BURNETT, J. In response to appellant's earnest petition for a rehearing, we deem it sufficient to call attention to the following quotation from the case of McFarland v. Holcomb, 123 Cal. 85, 55 Pac. 761: "In her complaint she alleges, as the basis of her claim, 'that William A. Holcomb was at the time of his death indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $7,500 as a balance due plaintiff for nursing, boarding, counseling, advising, and taking care of said William M. Holcomb almost continuously from the 29th day of November, 1870, down to the 4th day of November, 1895, in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California." It will thus be seen that the action was for services performed, that there was no allegation that they were performed at the instance or request of Holcomb, or that there was any promise to pay. The Supreme Court, however, held that the complaint stated a cause of action. If that case is not directly in point here, or if it is to be overruled, the decision to that effect must come from the Supreme Court.

The rehearing is denied.

Aug. 15, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—JUDGMENT ROLL—IMPROPER CONTENTS—MOTIONS.

A motion for a new trial, or to dismiss the information and proceedings thereon, cannot be made part of the judgment roll, and can only appear on appeal through bill of exceptions; the papers constituting the judgment roll being restricted by Pen. Code, § 1207, to the indictment or information and a copy of the minutes of the pleas or demurrer, a copy of the minutes of the trial, the instructions given, modified or refused, and a copy of the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2790.]

2. FISH—UNLAWFUL NET FISHING—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to sustain a conviction of fishing with unlawful nets, in violation of Pen. Code, § 634.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Fish, § 29.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—REVIEW—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

It being for the jury to settle conflicts in testimony, an appellate court will only disturb a verdict where there is an entire lack of evidence to sustain it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3074-3083.]

4. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS—PRESUMPTION.

It appearing that the trial court instructed on circumstantial evidence, but, the instruction not being in the record, the district court of appeal will presume that it was complete, thus showing no reversible error in an additional instruction given at the jury's request as against an objection that such additional instruction was not sufficiently explicit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3032.]

5. FISH—UNLAWFUL NET FISHING—CAPACITY OF OFFENDERS—MATERIALITY.

Under Pen. Code, § 634, prohibiting fishing with certain nets, it is immaterial to accused's guilt whether they acted as fishermen, merchants, or merchants' employes; the sole question being whether they took part in illegal fishing.

6. SAME—EVIDENCE.

In a trial for fishing with unlawful nets, the finding of fish on accused's launch, while not of itself sufficient to convict, was a circumstance which the jury could consider in determining guilt.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; L. G. Harrier, Judge.

Nemo Russo and others were convicted of fishing with unlawful nets, in violation of Pen. Code, § 634, and they appeal. Affirmed.

G. A. Lamont and R. H. Lattimer, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Asst. Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Defendants were convicted of the crime of fishing for striped bass with unlawful nets. A demurrer to the information was interposed, and, we think, rightly overruled. Defendants appeal from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying their motion for a new trial. A motion to set aside the information with an affidavit explanatory of the proceedings had on said motion, the rulings of the court thereon, and exceptions thereto and the minutes of the trial in the magistrate's court are printed in the transcript, but they are not authenticated in the bill of exceptions.

Appellants claim that the motion to dismiss the information is part of the judgment roll made up by the clerk under section 1207, Pen. Code. The papers which, under that section, constitute the record, or judgment roll, are: "(1) The indictment or information and a copy of the minutes of the pleas or demurrer; (2) a copy of the minutes of the trial; (3) the written instructions given, modified or refused * * * and the certified transcript of the charge of the court; and (4) a copy of the judgment." The motion for a new trial and the minutes of the proceedings had on such a motion constitute no part of the judgment roll. People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 1, 78 Pac. 235, where it was also held that "the clerk cannot make them a part thereof, and they should appear only in the bill of exceptions." See, also, People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 251, 77 Pac. 907; People v. Frank, 2 Cal. App. 283, 83 Pac. 578. The same is true of the motion to dismiss the information and the minutes relating thereto. They should have appeared in the bill of exceptions, the only means by which they could have been properly authenticated.

It is claimed by defendants that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. Section 634 of the Penal Code is the statute defining the offense charged. It provides that "every person who, for the purpose of catching * * * striped bass * * * in any waters of the state, fish with or use any seine or net, * * * the meshes of which are, when drawn closely together and measured inside the knot, less than seven and one-half inches in length, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and is punishable," and so forth. Witness Lamontague, a hunter and fisherman, residing in the vicinity of the waters where the alleged illegal fishing occurred, and for many years familiar with the Sacramento river and the numerous connecting sloughs forming the network of islands in that region, testified that he was fishing on June 27, 1905, in Duck slough and saw the defendants in the morning of that day. Witness came down Duck slough trolling for striped bass, and noticed three fishing boats and a gasoline launch and seven or eight men engaged in throwing out a net. He observed the net, and saw that the meshes were of a size less than allowed by law. He turned around to return to his home for the purpose of reporting the matter to the game and fish warden. The gasoline launch, he testified, "undertook to run over him." He went to Courtland, and telephoned Game Warden George Neale at Sacramento, who came to Courtland that evening at 5 o'clock. There is evidence that Neale, Lamontague, and three other men left Courtland that evening in a gasoline launch for the scene of the alleged unlawful fishing, night overtook them at a point below, and the next morning "before daylight" they started up Prospect slough with a gasoline launch procured from the Ryder Island dredger, and about daylight came upon defendants in a body of water called "Hackett Cut" or "Hackett slough." Neale found that he could not get to them with his launch because of the nets in the slough, and so took a rowboat with his party, which could pass over the nets, and some distance above his launch he found defendants with a gasoline launch and three fishing boats. The nets extended for over half a mile zig-zagging across the cut from shore to shore and anchored at points with railroad iron and rock to hold the nets in place, the latter so situated that there was no passageway for a launch up or down the cut. Neale testified: "I went up to the gasoline boat and these eight defendants were standing on the deck. I asked if any one of them could talk English. The younger man of the lot answered that he could. * * * I then asked him who owned those nets, and he said that he wasn't keeping cases on those nets. * * * I jumped aboard, and placed the defendants under arrest. We tried to get the launch through and the three boats over the net, but there was such a quantity of them we couldn't do it. We succeeded in dragging the nets to one side enough to get the launch and fish boats out, after being tangled up several times with the screw, and brought them to Rio Vista." Neale examined the meshes, and found them all much smaller than allowed by law. Except salmon, he noticed all kinds of fish in the nets, and striped bass among them. He found in the defendants' launch three boxes of mixed fish, striped bass included, which bore evidence of having been caught in gill nets such as these, although he could not say they were caught in these particular nets. There were other circumstances testified to tending to connect defendants with placing the nets where they were found and tending to show, in connection with the evidence already stated, that the defendants were engaged in fishing with nets of meshes smaller than allowed by law. All the defendants testified in their own behalf.

Three of them testified that they went from Rio Vista up the river with the launch to buy fish; that they did not own the nets, nor did they have anything to do with setting them. The other defendants testified that they went up to these sloughs from Rio Vista with three fish boats to get wood, and that they had nothing to do with placing the nets in the slough. There was evidence that there was no wood in that part of the country. No witness saw defendants setting the nets or taking fish from them, but the circumstances proven were such as to warrant the jury in drawing the inference that defendants had in fact committed acts forbidden by the statute and were guilty as charged. The testimony of defendants created a conflict; but it was for the jury, as the sole judges of the evidence, to reconcile any apparent conflict in the statements of witnesses. It is only in a case where there is an entire lack of evidence that the appellate court will disturb the verdict. People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 39, 70 Pac. 1014, and numerous other cases.

The remaining points made by appellants relate to the special instructions given by the court, at the request of the jury, after they had retired to the jury room for deliberation. The jury requested an instruction as to "whether the defendants have to be positively identified for the offense of setting out those illegal nets." "A juror: That is, if it must be proved by direct or circumstantial evidence. The Court: It must be proved either by direct or circumstantial evidence. I read to you the difference between direct and circumstantial evidence. Do you all understand the difference between direct and circumstantial evidence? Direct evidence would be the testimony of the witnesses who saw the net set. Circumstantial evidence would be the evidence of surrounding circumstances, which would lead you, in reason and beyond a reasonable doubt, to believe that they did set the nets. That is the difference." The criticism of appellants is that this instruction was not sufficiently full and explicit as to when the jury is warranted in convicting upon circumstantial evidence—citing People v. Dole, 122 Cal. 495, 55 Pac. 581, 68 Am. St. Rep. 50. None of the instructions given by the court are in the record except the special instructions above referred to. The court had given an instruction upon the point as clearly appears, and, in its absence, it must be presumed that it was correct and fully met the case made by the evidence. Without this instruction before us we cannot say that the court erred in not more fully explaining the nature of circumstantial evidence. We must presume that, when read together with others, the instructions on the subject thereof were correct. "Juror: Another question is, in regard to the engineer and the parties who had the launch, whether they went as fishermen or merchants, buying, or in the employ of a merchant buying; were they classed as fishermen, or as merchants, buying with those who went with the launch? The Court: That question could hardly enter within the range of the jury. What you are to determine is whether these people, no matter in what capacity they were acting, performed the illegal act. Whether they did it." We discover nothing misleading here. It was immaterial in what capacity these men in the launch went out. The sole question was: Did they take part in illegal fishing? The colloquy between the members of the jury and the court was continued by several other questions of the jury and answered by the court. The absence of the instructions given previously by the court upon the points involved makes it impossible to say that any error was committed by the court. So far as we can judge, there was none. After some statements by counsel upon both sides as to the fish found on defendants' launch, the court said: "I will give the instruction this way: That these defendants are accused of setting nets for the purpose of catching striped bass. Now, if striped bass are found upon the launch, it is not of itself sufficient to prove the guilt of the defendants, but it is a circumstance which may be taken into consideration by you in determining guilt or innocence." We see no error here.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

VANCE REDWOOD LUMBER CO. et al. v. DURPHY et al. (Civ. 486.)

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONTRACT TO CONVEY—PAYMENT OF TAXES—VALIDITY OF PROVISION.

Const. art. 13, § 5, making void a contract of a debtor to pay any tax on any mortgage or other lien as to interest and such tax, does not invalidate a contract to convey land as to stipulated interest on the price, because it requires the purchaser to pay taxes on the land; the provision for interest and taxes in a contract being part of the consideration for the conveyance.

3. LIENS—EQUITABLE LIENS—TAXATION—CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Const. art. 13, § 5, making void a contract by which a debtor is bound to pay any tax on any mortgage or other lien as to such taxes and any interest specified therein, does not apply to equitable liens.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—EQUITABLE LIENS—TIME OF ACCRUAL.

A vendor's equitable lien to secure the price does not arise until the purchaser defaults.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 641-651.]

5. PLEADING—ADMISSIONS.

Where, in a suit to foreclose a contract to convey on the purchaser's default, the purchaser and his assignee did not deny in their answer the vendors' allegation that the purchaser agreed to pay specified interest upon deferred payments, interest was properly awarded as claimed.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal from a judgment awarding interest on a contract, uncertain in its terms respecting interest, the court will presume that the uncertainty was removed by evidence.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—INTEREST—CONTRACT CONSTRUED.

Under a contract to convey land at a specified price, requiring the purchaser to pay $600, June 1, 1902, $600, January 2, 1903, with specified interest upon deferred payments from January 1, 1902, and $1,200 on January 2 of each succeeding year, with interest from January 1, 1902, until payment of the full price, it was proper, in a suit by the vendors to foreclose the contract on the purchaser's default, to award interest on the balance due from January 2, 1902.

Action by the Vance Redwood Lumber Company and another against B. F. Durphy and the Fieldbrook Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant company appeals. Affirmed.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to foreclose a contract for the sale and purchase of land. Plaintiffs had judgment, from which defendant Fieldbrook Company appeals on the judgment roll.

The points to be decided will be fully understood from a consideration of the contract involved and the findings and decree of the court. The essential points of the contract are as follows:

"This agreement, entered into this 19th day of October, 1901, between the Vance Redwood Lumber Company, and the Eureka and Klamath River Railroad Company, corporations, the party of the first part, and B. F. Durphy, of Eureka, Humboldt county, California, the party of the second part: witnesseth: * * *

"First: Said parties do hereby agree to sell unto said second party, his heirs and assigns, and said second party hereby agrees to buy from said first parties at the rate of thirty dollars ($30.00) per acre payable as hereinafter set forth, the following described tracts of land, in Humboldt county, California, to wit. [Land described. The grantors make certain reservations not material to the issues.] * * *

"Second. Said second party, his heirs or assigns, shall be and is hereby permitted to lay out and plat, at his own cost and expense, into lots fifty (50) by one hundred (100) feet, and thirty-three and one-third by one hundred feet, blocks two hundred (200) feet square, streets fifty (50) feet wide, portions of the aforesaid described premises and record such portion to the extent of forty (40) acres; and the manager of said first party, the Vance

Redwood Lumber Company, hereby agrees to record said plat of forty (40) acres and to convey same to said second party, his heirs or assigns, upon payment to said first party of the sum of thirty dollars ($30.00) per acre for each parcel so conveyed, each parcel to be not less than five (5) acres at any one time or in any one conveyance until the full forty (40) acres have been paid for, at which time deed will be made to said second party, his heirs or assigns, for the balance of said forty acres.

"Third. Said second party, his heirs or assigns, may sell the whole or any portion of the aforesaid recorded tract of forty (40) acres to any person or persons, but the said second party shall pay said first parties, their successors or assigns, for the tract so sold a sum of money to be computed at the rate of thirty dollars ($30.00) per acre, before said first parties shall be required to make deed, it is understood that said first parties shall not be required to make conveyance for less than five (5) acres at a time. In computing the acreage of the platted land so to be conveyed by said first party to said second party, due consideration shall be given to the acreage occupied by streets and alleys, and for this acreage occupied by streets and alleys said second party shall pay said first parties at the rate of thirty dollars ($30.00) per acre.

"Fourth. Should said second party desire to record any part of said tract of land in excess of forty acres so platted, said second party, his heirs or assigns, may do so, but before so doing, said second party, his heirs or assigns, shall pay to the said first parties, their successors and assigns, a sum of money to be computed at the sum of thirty dollars ($30.00) per acre for each additional acre in excess of said eighty acres so desired to be recorded.

"Fifth. Said second party, his heirs or assigns, shall pay said first parties on or before June 1, 1902, the sum of six hundred dollars ($600.00) and on or before the 2d day of January, 1903, a like sum of six hundred dollars ($600.00) with interest upon deferred payments thereupon at the rate of six per cent. (6%) per annum from January 1, 1902, and on or before the second day of January, of each succeeding year, the sum of $1,200.00 with interest thereupon at the rate of six per cent. (6%) per annum from January 1, 1902, until the full amount constituting the selling price of said tract of land hereinabove described shall have been paid to said parties of the first part; said second party shall also pay taxes."

The following is written on the margin of the contract at this point: "It is understood that the money paid for platted lands shall not apply on the annual payments. The sums of $1,200 per annum is to be paid over & above amt's. paid for platted lands. (Signed) A. B. Hammond. * * *

"This agreement shall be binding upon the successors and assigns and upon the heirs and assigns of the parties hereto for a period of four years from and after the date hereof, unless earlier terminated for failure as particularly set forth herein.

"In witness whereof, the said parties hereto have hereunto set their names and seals, the day and year hereinabove set forth.

"Vance Redwood Lumber Company, per A. B. Hammond, President. Attest: Wm. G. Gosslin, Secretary of Vance Redwood Lumber Company. Eureka & Klamath River Railroad Company, A. B. Hammond, President, Parties of the First Part.

"B. F. Durphy, Party of the Second Part."

In January, 1902, certain four tracts of five acres each were sold to one Belcher, and in May, 1902, Durphy assigned these Belcher contracts to defendant Fieldbrook Company and also the Durphy contract with plaintiffs of October 19, 1901. Subsequently defendant Fieldbrook Company contracted to sell to one Boulster a seven-acre tract for the sum of $275; also lots 7 and 8, block 35, to one Voght for the sum of $565, which was later, by agreement, reduced to $250.

Among other things, defendants set up in their answer that the marginal clause of the contract signed by A. B. Hammond (inserted at the end of paragraph 5) was not intended to become a part of the contract, and that Durphy never assented to it, but expressly repudiated it; also that the concluding paragraph of said contract was incorporated in the agreement by mutual mistake, and "was not intended to change the length of time that said Durphy and assigns were to have in which to pay for said land," but that it was the intention to still give said B. F. Durphy and assigns 10 years within which to pay for said land. These were the important contentions of defendants, but the court and the jury, called to determine the facts as to them, found against defendants on both issues, and the findings are conclusive, as the evidence is not brought up. Among other issues found by the jury and adopted by the court were the following: That defendants did not pay to plaintiffs the sum of $600 falling due under the terms of the contract June 1, 1902, nor the sum of $600 and interest falling due January 2, 1903; nor did defendants pay to plaintiffs the sum of $1,200, and interest, falling due January 2, 1904. It was also found by the jury and the court that plaintiffs had fully performed all the acts and things by them agreed to be performed. The court further found: That of the lands agreed in said contract of October 19, 1901, to be sold by plaintiffs to defendant Durphy, said defendant has paid to plaintiffs the sum of $600 for 20 acres of said land sold to said Belcher and by reason thereof plaintiff Vance Redwood Lumber Company has made to said Belcher deeds therefor; that defendants have not performed any of the terms of said contract of October 19, 1901, nor have they paid to plaintiffs any money on account of said contract, except said sum of $600 for the 20 acres of land sold to said Belcher; that defendants have made contracts with numerous persons, agreeing to sell to such persons certain portions of said land, other than said 20 acres sold to said Belcher, and have received large sums of money upon said contracts, without procuring to be vested in said persons the legal title to said portions of said lands so contracted to be sold. The findings then set forth the contracts with Boulster and Voght heretofore referred to. It is further found that plaintiffs, at the instance of defendant Durphy and under his direction, platted a forty-acre tract of said land, known as survey 83, dividing it into lots and blocks and streets, which became a part of the town known as Fieldbrook, and also likewise platted another tract of said land known as survey 84, which also became a part of said town, both of which surveys were duly recorded. It is also found, further, that by their "acts and conduct defendants misled and deceived plaintiffs in relation to carrying out said contract, and induced them to act to their prejudice in a manner other than, and different from, the manner in which they would have acted had they not been so misled and deceived." It is also found that on April 15, 1905, the said Voght made demand upon plaintiff Vance Lumber Company that it execute to him a conveyance of said lands described in his said contract; that thereafter on said day said plaintiff delivered to him a quitclaim deed for the land in his said contract described, receiving, as consideration therefor, the sum of $100, and that said conveyance was made with defendants' consent; that in the event that defendants carry out the terms of their said contract of October 19, 1901, and make the payments therein called for on their part, within 90 days from the date hereof, the said $100 "will constitute a credit to be allowed defendants upon the amount now remaining unpaid by defendants, in the carrying out and complying with the payments called for upon their part to be made, under said contract of October 19, 1901, the amount of said payments being hereafter more particularly set forth." As conclusion of law, the court found that the contract of October 19, 1901, as set out in plaintiffs' second amended complaint, was duly made and executed between plaintiffs and said defendant Durphy at the time and in the manner alleged in said complaint, and that the same was assigned by defendant Durphy May 7, 1902, to defendant Fieldbrook Company, and said company is now the owner thereof.

The court adjudged by its decree as follows: That "defendant Fieldbrook Company may have 90 days from the date hereof (July 14, 1906), within which time to make to plaintiffs the payments called for by said contract of October 19, 1901, as modified by the allowance of the said credits hereinbefore allowed by reason of the amounts received by plaintiffs from the sale of the said parcels of land to the said J. A. Boulster and John Voght," particularly specified as follows: "Said defendant Fieldbrook Company shall pay to plaintiffs within 90 days from date hereof $10,200, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from January 2, 1902, deducting therefrom the sum of $275, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from August 25, 1904, and deducting also the sum of $100, with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from the 15th day of April, 1905; said amounts of $275 and $100, so to be deducted with interest, being the amounts heretofore received by plaintiffs from the said Boulster and the said Voght. All of said amounts of interest to be computed up to the day upon which payment is made." Upon payment as above being made, it is decreed that plaintiffs convey to defendant Fieldbrook Company all of said land, except that described in the contracts of Belcher, Boulster, and Voght. It is further decreed that, should defendant Fieldbrook Company fail to make said payments as directed by the decree, the defendants, and each of them, "be barred and forever foreclosed of all claims, rights, demands, and equities of, in, and to said contract of October 19, 1901, and of, in, and to the lands therein specified and set forth, other than the said lands so sold to" said Belcher, Boulster, and Voght, and upon such failure of defendant Fieldbrook Company said contract of October 19, 1901, is declared annulled and of no effect.

Appellants contend that the judgment is not supported by the findings in the following two particulars: (1) That the contract in question constituted a lien by which plaintiffs obligated defendants to pay the taxes, and hence plaintiffs, under section 5, art. 13, of the Constitution, were not entitled to any interest; (2) but if entitled to interest, they were not entitled to interest, as found, on $10,200. Appellants discuss the first point at considerable length, but in our view it is without merit. This provision of the Constitution is as follows: "Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void." We do not think this provision applies to the contract here, for it does not attempt to require the second party to pay taxes "on money, or any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien." If the clause of the contract reading "said second party shall also pay taxes" means anything, it is that second party shall pay taxes on the land contracted to be sold. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Brander, 124 Cal. 255, 56 Pac. 1109, was just such a case as this, where the remedy here sought was enforced. The contract there provided that the vendee should pay the taxes. The precise question now raised was not decided, but it is not likely that it would have been overlooked had it been thought to possess merit. Mr. Jones says: "Lien by contract exists only when it is expressly agreed that a party may retain the property as security for work done or expense incurred in support of it. There must be something more than a contract for the payment of the purchase price. The law implies no lien from such a contract." 1 Jones on Liens, p. 4. Again: "In the one case (where title passes) the vendor has a lien without any title, and in the other (where title does not pass) he has the title without any occasion for a lien." 2 Jones on Liens, p. 57. In the present case it seems to us that the provisions for payment of interest and taxes, like the payments of the principal, constitute part of the consideration for the purchase. And it is not reasonable to suppose that the parties to the contract had in mind that an attempt would be made to levy a tax upon the purchase price of the land, for to tax both land and contract would be double taxation. It is not necessary to consider the vendor's equitable lien to secure the purchase price paid, if he had any, for, first, the Constitution does not refer to such a lien; and second, the vendee was not in default, in which case alone the vendor's lien arises. 3 Pomeroy's Eq. Juris. § 1263. Appellant cites: Avery v. Clark, 87 Cal. 619, 25 Pac. 919, 22 Am. St. Rep. 272, Gessner v. Palmateer, 89 Cal. 89, 24 Pac. 608, 26 Pac. 789, 13 L. R. A. 187, and Kent v. Williams, 114 Cal. 537, 46 Pac. 462, as supporting their view. We do not so regard them.

The findings that plaintiffs are entitled to interest under the contract are clearly justified, and the only remaining question is, did the court correctly impose it? Appellant's contention is that the contract did not authorize interest on $10,200 from January 2, 1902. The entire purchase price for the 360 acres was $10,800, being $30 per acre. The court found that defendants had paid $600, and no more, which left $10,200 still due. Provision is made for allowing appellant principal and interest of the contracts of sale to Belcher, Boulster, and Voght, so that these items may be laid out of consideration. The terms of the contract in regard to interest are not free from doubt and uncertainty.

Plaintiffs alleged in their complaint that under the contract defendant Durphy agreed to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. upon deferred payments "until the full amount constituting the selling price of said tract of three hundred and sixty acres of land hereinabove described, shall have been paid to said parties of the first part." There is no denial of this construction put upon the contract by plaintiffs. In their answer the principal issues raised upon the meaning of the contract related to the so-called marginal note, above pointed out, and to the clause limiting the time of final payments to four years, defendants claiming that they were to have 10 years in which to pay for the land. In their answer defendants distinctly state that the original understanding, as well as the understanding found in the contract, was, that the annual payment of $1,200 was to be made "with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum on deferred payments until the full amount constituting the selling price of said land should have been paid to plaintiffs herein." It seems to us that the court would have been justified upon the pleadings to award interest as the findings state it. Besides, if at the trial the question was presented in view of the uncertainty arising out of the language used in the contract, we must presume that it was removed by the evidence. Furthermore, we think, when examined in its entirety, the contract is susceptible of the construction placed upon it by the court in the matter of interest.

The judgment is affirmed.

8 Cal. App. 689

HUFF (BRIGGS, Intervener) v. SWEETSER et al. (Civ. 484.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Aug. 15, 1908.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—CONVEYANCE—EFFECT.

E., having contracted to sell the premises in controversy to intervener in 1898, conveyed the property in 1901 to O., who in 1905 conveyed to plaintiff, intervener receiving a new contract from him for a conveyance of the premises. Held that both the legal and equitable title thereby passed to plaintiff and intervener.

2. JUDGMENT—LIEN—DOCKET.

A subsequent innocent purchaser from a judgment debtor, conveying by her married name property acquired under such married name, takes title freed from the lien of a judgment docketed against the debtor by her maiden name.

3. SAME—MARRIED WOMEN—NOTICE.

A married woman being authorized by Civ. Code, § 1187, to acquire property and convey it in her name, a person dealing with her, with respect to property so acquired, is not put on inquiry as to her business transactions while unmarried because of the fact that he knew her as a single woman.

4. SAME—LIEN—DOCKET.

The formalities of the statute regulating the docketing of judgments must be substantially complied with, in order that the judgment shall be a lien on the judgment debtor's real estate.

5. SAME—NAME.

A judgment must be docketed against the judgment debtor in his correct name.

6. SAME—SCOPE OF LIEN.

Under the rule that a judgment creditor acquires only such rights as the judgment debtor had, a judgment did not become a lien on land, acquired by the judgment debtor subject to a pre-existing contract to convey the same to intervener, by the fact that intervener's contract was not recorded until after the judgment was docketed.

7. SAME.

Where land was conveyed to a judgment debtor subject to a contract by the grantor to convey the same to intervener, and the land was thereafter conveyed by the debtor to plaintiff, intervener's equities, entitling him to the land freed from the lien of the judgment, were not destroyed by a new contract of sale between plaintiff and intervener, which was merely a novation of the original contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by James Huff against Mrs. M. J. Sweetser and another, in which Joe Briggs intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and intervener and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Will. M. Beggs and W. C. Kennedy, for appellants. Rogers, Bloomingdale & Free, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action was to have it adjudged that a deficiency judgment, docketed against the land claimed by plaintiff, is not a lien thereon, and for an injunction restraining defendants from selling said land upon an execution. Plaintiff had judgment as prayed for. Defendants moved the court, under sections 663 and 663½ of the Code of Civil Procedure, to set aside and vacate the conclusions of law and amend the same, and to amend the judgment in accordance with the amended conclusions of law. The motions were denied, and defendants appeal from the judgment and the orders.

About all of the facts essential to a comprehension of the issues appear in the findings of the court, which latter are supported by the evidence. It appears therefrom that on October 1, 1898, one E. L. Emerson was the owner of the premises in question, and upon that day executed a contract for the sale thereof to intervener Briggs for the consideration of $1,600, payable in installments as follows: Eight hundred dollars within three years and $800 in five years from said date, with 8 per cent. annual interest, which said contract was recorded June 12, 1905. On November 27, 1901, said E. L. Emerson conveyed said premises to Grace B. M. Odell, and this deed was duly recorded December 4, 1901. Prior to February 15, 1905, on which date Grace B. M. Odell and her husband, Frank Odell, conveyed said premises to plaintiff, intervener Briggs paid various sums on account of said contract of purchase, amounting in the aggregate to $1,269.73, and at the time plaintiff received said deed from said Grace B. M. Odell, as aforesaid, he executed and delivered to said intervener Briggs a contract for the conveyance of said premises for the sum of $1,000, which contract was duly recorded March 25, 1905, and at all times since the execution of said contract by said Emerson to said Briggs the latter was, and now is, in possession of said premises. The name of plaintiff's said grantor, Grace B. M. Odell, was formerly Grace B. M. Emerson, and she was married to her said husband, Frank Odell, October 28, 1899. Prior to her said marriage, to wit, on May 1, 1897, she had joined with others in the execution of a certain promissory note, secured by mortgage, to defendant Mrs. J. M. Sweetser, presumably upon land other than that in question, executing the same in her name, at that time, of Grace B. M. Emerson; that subsequent to her said marriage, to wit, on July 25, 1901, an action was commenced, wherein the said Grace was one of the defendants, for the foreclosure of a prior mortgage upon the premises covered by the mortgage of the said Sweetser, in which the latter was made defendant as a subsequent mortgagee. Mrs. Sweetser appeared in said action, and filed a cross-complaint, for the foreclosure of her said mortgage, and on May 17, 1902, a decree was duly rendered in said cause, wherein, among other things, it was adjudged that there was due and owing to Mrs. Sweetser, upon her said mortgage at the date of the decree, the sum of $6,175. After said sale, and after applying the proceeds thereof, there remained a deficiency due said Sweetser amounting to $6,236.44, for which amount a deficiency judgment was docketed in her favor, on June 28, 1902, "against said Grace B. M. Emerson, and in the name of Grace B. M. Emerson" (and others), upon which said judgment there remains due the sum of $3,814.75, with interest. At the commencement of this action, and at the time of the entry and docketing of said judgment, the true and correct name of said judgment debtor was Grace B. M. Odell, and not Grace B. M. Emerson. It is further found that at the time plaintiff Huff purchased said premises from said Grace B. M. Odell, and executed the contract of sale thereof to intervener Briggs, "neither plaintiff nor Briggs had any notice or knowledge of the aforesaid judgment of said Sweetser against said Grace B. M. Emerson, nor that she claimed any lien by virtue thereof, upon said premises; but they did know Grace B. M. Emerson, both before and after her said marriage." On April 1, 1905, defendant Sweetser, claiming said judgment to be a lien upon the premises in question, caused execution to be issued upon her said deficiency judgment, and caused the same to be levied thereon by defendant Ross, sheriff of Santa Clara county, and under and by virtue of the said execution the said sheriff proceeded to advertise said premises for sale, and said defendants intend to and will sell said premises for the satisfaction of said judgment, unless restrained by judgment and order of the court. As conclusions of law the court found (1) that said judgment is not, nor was, a lien upon said premises; (2) that plaintiff Huff and intervener Briggs are entitled to a judgment perpetually enjoining defendants from selling said premises under said judgment, together with costs of suit.

The contention of appellants is (1) that the judgment docketed June 28, 1902, constituted a lien on the premises; (2) that plaintiff and intervener had actual and constructive notice of said judgment lien; (3) that the findings and conclusions of law are not justified by the evidence. As to the evidence, it is principally documentary and undisputed. Plaintiff testified that, when he took the deed to the property, he had no knowledge of the judgment of Mrs. Sweetser against Grace B. M. Emerson; that he knew her when unmarried, and knew of her marriage to Odell. Intervener Briggs testified to his purchase under the contract with E. L. Emerson in 1898; that he knew Grace B. M. Emerson, both before and after her marriage; that up to February, 1905, he had paid all that was due on his contract, except $1,000, and that he now pays his interest and other payments to plaintiff Huff, and not to Emerson; that plaintiff Huff advanced the money to pay off a mortgage upon the land. Frank Huff, son of plaintiff, testified that he attended to the business for his father, paid off the old mortgage on the land, "and had Mrs. Odell give my father a deed to secure him for the $1,000 which he advanced. The land is worth about $2,000." He further testified that he had known Mrs. Odell both before and after her marriage. He testified: "I did not have the records searched to see whether there was any judgment against Mrs. Odell or Mrs. Emerson. I took their word that it was all right. Both Emerson and Mrs. Odell said it was all right; that there was nothing against the land, except this mortgage which we paid off." Mrs. Sweetser testified that she never knew or heard of intervener Briggs or his contract with Emerson, or plaintiff Huff, until this suit was commenced. The above is the entire testimony.

There is no evidence to support appellants' contention that plaintiff and intervener had actual notice of the judgment. There is no evidence that after her marriage the judgment debtor "was commonly known by the name of Grace B. M. Emerson," as claimed by appellants. That respondents had personal acquaintance, during all the mentioned times, with Grace Emerson, is not evidence of knowledge of or notice to respondents that there was a judgment against her. In point of fact plaintiff was assured by both E. L. Emerson and Grace Odell that there were no liens, except the mortgage lien which plaintiff discharged. When Emerson conveyed to Mrs. Odell in 1901, the deed was made expressly subject to Briggs' contract, and also subject to the mortgage which plaintiff paid off. Briggs having paid up his contract except $1,000, Mrs. Odell conveyed her interest to plaintiff, in consideration of his paying this amount by paying off the mortgage, and plaintiff then gave the new contract to intervener Briggs. The legal and equitable title thus passed to plaintiff and intervener, and as to their relation to each other in respect of the title defendants are not concerned. The pivotal question in the case is this: Was plaintiff charged with constructive notice of Mrs. Sweetser's deficiency judgment lien at the time Mrs. Odell conveyed to him? It is doubtless true that by her marriage Grace Emerson could not avoid the effect of the lien so far as she was concerned. Appellants cite the case of Bogart v. Woodruff, 96 Cal. 609, 31 Pac. 618, as "on all fours with the case at bar," and so it would be if the question were between the judgment creditor and the judgment debtor. So, also, would be in point the numerous other cases cited, as between these two persons. But there remains still the other question whether a subsequent innocent purchaser from the judgment debtor, conveying by a different name property acquired under this different name, takes title subject to the lien of a judgment docketed against this judgment debtor by another name? It must be remembered that Grace B. M. Emerson married Odell in October, 1889, and took title to the land in November, 1901, as Grace B. M. Odell, and that the judgment was not docketed against her, in the name of Emerson, until June, 1902.

Grants are to be recorded in one set of books and mortgages in another. Civ. Code, § 1171; Pol. Code, § 4235. Indexes are to be kept by the recorder showing the names of grantors and grantees, mortgagors and mortgagees. Pol. Code, § 4236. The judgment docket is to be kept as directed in section 672, Code Civ. Proc., showing, among other things, the judgment debtors and judgment creditors. "The names of the defendants must be entered in alphabetical order." Section 4204, Pol. Code, requires the county clerk to keep a general index, divided in columns, showing, among other things, the plaintiffs and defendants in all suits. It was admitted that a judgment was docketed in favor of Mrs. M. J. Sweetser against Grace B. M. Emerson. No other docket entry is shown. Conceding that it was plaintiff's duty to search the record, what would he have found had he done so? He would have found, under the letter E in indexes of deeds, the conveyance of E. L. Emerson to Grace M. Odell, in November, 1901. Looking under letter E for any judgment against Emerson prior to the date of this conveyance, he would have found none, for no judgment was docketed until June, 1902. Searching further under letter O for judgments against Odell subsequent to Emerson's deed, he would have found none. Here his duty would ordinarily have ended in protecting himself against constructive notice of liens affecting the property. But it is urged that because he knew that Grace B. M. Odell was the same person previously known by him as Grace B. M. Emerson, he was thus put upon inquiry, which, if pursued, would have led to the knowledge of the Emerson judgment lien. It will doubtless be presumed that Mrs. Odell was previously a single woman, and was known by her maiden name. But as a married woman may acquire property and may convey it in her name when married (Civ. Code, § 1187), we do not think that a person dealing with her, with respect to property thus acquired, is put upon inquiry as to her business transactions while unmarried, because of the single fact that he knew her as a single woman. Fallon v. Kehoe, 38 Cal. 44, 99 Am. Dec. 347, is cited by appellants. As we understand that case, it decides that if the true owner conveys property by his true name, though it be different from the name by which he acquired it, the conveyance, when recorded, will operate as constructive notice of the transfer of the title, and will take precedence of a subsequently recorded deed to the same land, executed in the name by which it was acquired, although the subsequent grantee was an innocent purchaser for value. By way of illustration, the court said: "If land be conveyed to an unmarried woman, who afterwards marries and becomes a widow, and then conveys the land by her last name, there can be no doubt that the record of the deed would impart notice to a subsequent purchaser."

* * * In such cases the subsequent purchaser buys at his peril." But the lien created by a judgment is not a transfer or conveyance of the property. Wilcoxson v. Miller, 49 Cal. 193. It is not a specific lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor, but is merely a general lien, and is subject to all prior liens, either legal or equitable. The lien is not an interest in the real estate of the judgment creditor, he having neither a jus in re nor a jus in rem, as regards the debtor's property; the lien merely confers the right to levy thereon to the exclusion of other adverse interests subsequent to the judgment. These principles are laid down and fully supported by cited authorities in Metz v. State Bank of Brownville, 7 Neb. 165. The statute in Nebraska relating to the docketing of judgments and keeping indexes is somewhat similar to ours; and it was held, in the case just cited, that judgments do not become liens upon real estate until properly indexed, and that purchasers are not required to search for judgment liens further than to examine the proper index. The judgment in that case was against William Hall, no judgment having been entered against the other defendants. But the index showed the defendants to be "Hill, Theodore & Co.," the other defendants. Hall subsequently conveyed the property involved, and it was held that the index imparted no notice, and that the purchaser was not called upon to search beyond the index. It was said: "A subsequent purchaser, however, is affected with such notice as the index entries afford; and, if they are of such a character as would induce a cautious and prudent man to make an examination, he must make such investigation, or the failure to do so will be at his peril. But the index in this case imparted no notice to the plaintiff, it being—'Defendants'—'Hill, Theodore & Co.' " We need not hold that under our statute an examination of the index to the judgment docket would be sufficient, or that it would be necessary for the purchaser to examine the judgment docket as well as the index. Had he done so in the present case, we do not think he would have found anything to put him upon inquiry as to possible judgments against Mrs. Odell under the name of Emerson. Indeed, it is doubtful whether such a judgment would have imparted constructive notice, or would be treated as a lien affecting the rights of a purchaser from the judgment debtor in some other name. It was held in Davis v. Steeps et al., 87 Wis. 472, 58 N. W. 769, 23 L. R. A. 818, 41 Am. St. Rep. 51, that a docket of a judgment against Edward Davis is not, under a statute requiring the entry to set out "the name at length of each judgment debtor," constructive notice to a bona fide purchaser of a judgment against E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis. The court said: "It is only through the medium of a sufficient and legal docketing of the judgment that it can become a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor; and it is the duty of the judgment creditor to see to it, if he would secure such lien, that his judgment is properly docketed, for, as against a bona fide purchaser for value, any material defect or omission in that respect is the fault of the judgment creditor, and the loss, if any, occasioned thereby will be regarded as his own"—citing cases. In order to create a lien the judgment alone is insufficient. It must be properly docketed, and the formalities of docketing, as required by the statute, must be substantially complied with. 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 775, 776, and notes; Eby v. Foster, 61 Cal. 282. Among other essential requisites to a proper docketing of the judgment is that it be docketed against the judgment debtor in his correct name.

Briggs' contract with Emerson was not recorded until after the Sweetser judgment was rendered and docketed. His rights, however, were not affected by this fact. The judgment creditor is regarded as requiring such rights only as a debtor had. 24 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 123, 124, and notes, and there is nothing in our registration act to change this rule. See Wilcoxson v. Miller, supra, in which the opinion was written by the distinguished jurist who tried this case. Nor were Briggs' equities destroyed by the new contract made with plaintiff Huff. It was but a novation of the Emerson contract, and substitution of the then owner of the property in Emerson's stead. The equitable principles involved in the transaction will be found considered in Darrrough v. Kraft Company Bank, 125 Cal. 272, 57 Pac. 983, and cases there cited. Huff paid off a mortgage existing prior to the Sweetser judgment, and equity would treat him as assignee of that mortgage, if necessary to protect his interests.

We think the case was rightfully decided, and the judgment and orders are therefore affirmed.

BUSH v. WOOD et al. (Civ. 428.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Aug. 15, 1908.)

1. TRIAL—NONSUIT—NATURE AND GROUNDS.

A motion for nonsuit presents a question of law for the court, and amounts to a demurrer to the evidence, or an objection that, admitting all the proved material facts, they do not in law entitle plaintiff to the relief asked.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 372.]

2. SAME.

While the court may in its discretion grant a motion for a nonsuit, made at the close of the evidence for both parties, where upon all the evidence it is clear that it would be the court's duty to set aside any verdict rendered against defendant, yet, when the motion is made at the close of plaintiff's case, the evidence, whether erroneously admitted or not, if relevant to the issues, must be given full effect, and any conflict between the witnesses cannot be considered.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

While the master is bound to use all reasonable precautions for the safety of the servant, and to provide him with suitable machinery kept in a safe condition, and the use of defective and unsafe machinery with his knowledge will render him liable for an injury therefrom to a servant, who is ignorant of its condition and in the exercise of ordinary care, where a servant works with or near a piece of machinery insufficient for the purposes for which it was employed, or for any reason unsafe, with knowledge or means of knowledge of its condition, he assumes the risk, and cannot recover for injuries sustained thereby.

While a master is liable to his servant, who, knowing the defects in machinery, is injured thereby, where the master has been notified of the defects, and has not repaired them within a reasonable time, except where the danger from the defects was such that none but a reckless man would incur it, yet the rule does not apply to an experienced sawmill foreman, thoroughly familiar, presumably, with the mechanical operations of a mill, and who realized the added danger of unloading large saw logs down an incline by a pinch bar, which method he had adopted, because a bull-wheel by which the logs were usually unloaded was out of order.

Personal injury action by George H. Bush against E. K. Wood and others. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. J. Butts and W. F. Cowan, for appellant. James W. Oates, for respondents.

HART, J. The plaintiff, having sustained personal injuries through the alleged negligence of the defendants, brought this action to recover a judgment for damages therefor in the sum of $25,000. The cause was tried by the court, a jury having been waived by all the parties, and upon the close of plain-tiff's case, and upon motion of the respondents, the court granted a judgment of nonsuit, from which, supported by a bill of exceptions, this appeal is taken.

The complaint alleges that on the 28th day of June, 1906, while exercising and performing his duties as "mill" foreman of the Markham Lumber Company, a corporation, which was and had been for a long time engaged in the manufacture of lumber, and of which corporation the defendants Stevens and Wood are alleged to be the owners, the plaintiff sustained serious injuries through the operation of defective machinery used in connection with the business of defendants. It appears from the complaint, as well as from the evidence, that "saw logs" which were prepared for manufacture into lumber at the sawmill were carried from the woods by means of cars run upon tracks; that the "cars carrying such logs were run upon such tracks to a point opposite to said sawmill, where said logs were then unloaded and lowered from said car down a steep incline 28 feet to a landing 13 feet wide, from which landing said logs were rolled by means of a steel wire cable onto a carriage, and thereby thence conveyed to the saws in said mill by which the same were sawed into lumber." It is further alleged that prior to the time plaintiff was injured the manner of unloading the logs from said cars was by means of a steel wire cable operating on a bull-wheel and shafts; that over a month prior to the day on which plaintiff sustained the injuries complained of the shafting on which said cable and bull-wheel were operated "became dangerous and unsafe for use, and the same could not be used with safety in the customary or any manner, and plaintiff notified defendants that the same was unsafe, but defendants neglected and refused to restore the same, so as it could be used with safety; but, on the contrary, said W. S. Stevens, as superintendent" of said corporation, "directed one B. Caligari, who was then and there in the employ of said defendants, and wholly under the control and direction of said Stevens as such superintendent, to unload a car load of logs then standing opposite said mill by rolling said logs from said car down said incline by means of a pinch bar and jack-screw, and said B. Caligari in pursuance of said directions and instructions, and without the knowledge of plaintiff, proceeded to carry out said instructions and commenced to unload said logs from said car by means of a jack screw and pinch bar and roll the same down said incline onto said landing." At the time of the accident, and just before Caligari commenced to unload the logs from the car, plaintiff was engaged in fastening the cable around a saw log, then resting on the landing, "for the purpose of rolling said log onto the carriage for conveyance to the saws," and while plaintiff was thus engaged, said Caligari, so the complaint avers, "without notice or warning to plaintiff, unloosened and allowed several of said logs to roll from said car down said incline with great force, and one of said logs, about 22 feet in length and 30 inches in diameter, and weighing about 1,500 pounds, rolled down said incline with great force and struck plaintiff with great violence," fracturing the bones of his left leg in four different places, one of said fractures being above and three below the knee, and also dislocating the kneecap. It is further alleged that the effect of the injuries thus received was to render plaintiff for many months thereafter incapable of performing his ordinary duties as a sawmill foreman, in which capacity in various sawmills he had been employed for many years, etc., and that he will permanently suffer from said injuries.

After the plaintiff had put in all his evidence, the court, upon motion of the defendants, granted a nonsuit, and the only question presented upon this appeal is therefore whether the court was, under the evidence adduced by plaintiff, justified in allowing the motion therefor. The defendants specified a number of apparently different grounds upon which they asked that plaintiff be nonsuited, but they all in effect amount to the contention that plaintiff, by his own testimony, discloses that his injuries were received through his own negligence, and not through that of the defendants. A motion for nonsuit presents a question of law for determination by the court. The motion is tantamount to a demurrer to the evidence, or an objection that, admitting all the proved material facts to be true, said facts do not in legal effect operate in favor of the plaintiff, or, in other words, do not entitle him to the relief asked for by him. Goldstone v. Ice Co., 123 Cal. 625, 56 Pac. 776; Wasserman v. Sloss, 117 Cal. 425, 49 Pac. 566, 38 L. R. A. 176, 59 Am. St. Rep. 209; Nonrefillable Bottle Company v. Robertson (Cal. App.) 96 Pac. 324, and cases therein cited. It is also one of the settled rules governing a motion for a nonsuit upon the close of plaintiff's case that the evidence, whether erroneously admitted or not, if relevant to the issues joined, must be given by the court the benefit of its full probative strength, and that any question arising from the fact of variation between the evidence of the witnesses cannot be raised or considered. Wasserman v. Sloss, supra; Archibald Est. v. Matteson, 5 Cal. App. 441, 90 Pac. 723, and cases therein cited. It is also true that, on motion for a nonsuit, the evidence must be taken most strongly against the defendant (Goldstone v. Ice Co., supra), and, if the plaintiff has introduced proof sufficient to make out a prima facie case under the allegations of his complaint, the motion, if made on the close of his case, should be denied (Janin v. London, etc., Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 Pac. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 92 Am. St. Rep. 82; Nonrefillable Bottle Co. v. Robertson, supra; Archibald Est. v. Matteson, supra). From the foregoing, it is clear that it makes no difference, where the motion for a nonsuit is made on the close of plaintiff's case, whether the court itself believes the testimony presented or not, for, as is obvious, the material facts which the evidence tends to prove must be assumed to be true for the purposes of the motion, just the same as the material facts alleged in a pleading must be so treated in the consideration of a demurrer to such pleading. It is scarcely necessary to suggest that the situation as to the last-mentioned proposition is somewhat different where a motion for a nonsuit is made after all the testimony for both sides has been put in; that is to say, it is a well-established rule that the trial court may, in the exercise of its discretion, grant a motion for a nonsuit, made at the close of the evidence for both plaintiff and defendant, "where, upon all the evidence, it is clear that if a jury should bring in a verdict against the defendant it would be the duty of the court to set it aside and order a new trial." Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 507, 82 Pac. 57, and cases therein cited.

Having thus stated some of the rules by which the courts must be guided in the determination of the disposition which should be made of a motion for a nonsuit, we will now, by the light of those rules, proceed to examine the evidence produced by the plaintiff to ascertain whether in our opinion the court below erred in its ruling on the motion in the case at bar. It may be premised that, if the evidence presented by plaintiff discloses that he was himself guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to the accident in which he sustained the injury of which he complains, then, of course, the ruling of the court on the motion was proper and should be upheld. The testimony of the plaintiff, who was the only witness who testified concerning the circumstances immediately attending the accident causing his injury, shows these facts: That plaintiff up to the time of the accident had had about five years' experience as a foreman of lumber mills, having worked at other mills prior to his employment by the defendants; that he had, when the accident occurred, worked in that capacity for defendants for about a year; that the defendant Stevens, who was general superintendent of the corporation defendant, employed him; that his duties were, to use his own language, "to keep the mill going"; that when the mill became "short a man"—that is, when one of the employes became incapacitated temporarily or left the service of the corporation permanently—it was the duty of plaintiff to take the place of such man until the latter was restored to capacity or another man procured to discharge the particular duties of the position; that one Caligari was on the day of the accident operating the tramway or railroad used for the purpose of conveying large saw logs from the "lumber camp" to a point 40 feet from the mill; that at this point Caligari would unload the logs so that they would descend a 26-foot incline to the "landing," from where they were conveyed to the sawmill; that prior to the 10th or 11th day of May, 1906, the logs were unloaded from the logging car by a bull-wheel and cable operated by means of levers, and that, when the logs were thus unloaded, the man on the car put the cable over the log while yet on the car, and then signaled the man who worked on the landing and who started the bull-wheel by the manipulation of the levers; that there was comparatively little danger incident to the unloading of the logs in the manner thus briefly described; that on or about the 11th or 12th day of May, 1906, the bull-wheel and shaft used for the purpose of unloading the logs got out of order so that they could not be used; that thereafter, and until including the 28th day of June, 1906, on which day the plaintiff was injured, the work of unloading the logs from the car was conducted by means of a pinch bar and a jackscrew—that is, the man on the car would, when necessary, raise the logs above the level of the car with the jackscrew, and then throw them off by means of the pinch bar, so that they would slide down the incline to the landing, a distance of 26 feet—that this method of unloading the logs, was more dangerous than unloading them by means of the bull-wheel and cable, and that plaintiff knew that there was increased danger and risk in thus unloading them; that on the day of the accident the man who had been accustomed to attending to the duty of receiving the logs at the landing and thence conveying them to the mill had given up his position, and the plaintiff, in pursuance of his duties as foreman, was at the landing in his place for the purpose of performing said duty. Plaintiff testified that on several different occasions he spoke to Stevens, the superintendent, about the condition of the bull-wheel, and requested him to have it repaired; that he told Stevens several times that it was "unsafe to operate that bull-wheel with the machinery that he had there; asked him to shut the mill down, and he says: 'Oh, no, we can't do that; we will have to keep going.'"

The plaintiff then described the manner in which he was injured as follows: "There was just one log on the landing, everything cut up and just one—just one log—on the landing, and I had a piece of old wire cable there. We couldn't get nothing, and I was putting that piece of old wire cable, I should judge about 20 feet long, around a log to connect it with the bull-wheel to take it to the carriage to saw it up in boards, and, while I was passing this wire cable around there, these logs were turned loose upon the car with the pinch bar and jackscrews without me having any warning whatever, and my leg was broken in four places and a dislocation of the kneecap. Q. Was there anybody there whose duty it was to fasten this cable around the logs and put them on the carriage so they could go into the saw? A. No; there was nobody there. I had to do it. Q. If you hadn't done it, it would not have been done? A. No, sir; it would not have been done. Q. And that was the only log there was on the landing? A. Just the one. I simply put in the wire cable around so they could connect it and take it to the carriage. Q. Did you have any warning when these logs came down? A. No, sir; none whatever. Q. Do you know how many came down? A. I think two and possibly three, because a man using a pinch bar on a lot of logs you can't really tell sometimes where they are going or how many comes down, but there was two came down anyhow on me; for after I fell to the ground I recognized there was two logs there." On cross-examination the plaintiff repeated that he knew it was much more dangerous to unload the car with a pinch bar than by means of the bull-wheel and cable, for by the former method the logs were liable to go in any direction—that is, they would not likely remain while descending the incline in the track over which it was intended they should roll down to the landing, as they would by the bull-wheel and cable, and, therefore, one would have to be on his guard more—that the man at the car, when unloading the logs by means of the bull-wheel, could and would give a signal warning to the man at the landing, and thus give him an opportunity to avoid collision with the logs. The witness Howard, who was a section hand on the railroad, testified that there was more danger of accident by unloading the logs with the jackscrew and pinch bar than with the bull-wheel and cable. Caligari also so testified. This witness said that from the car from which he unloaded the logs he could plainly see the man at the landing, and that he knew of no reason why the man at the landing could not see him. He further testified that he requested Stevens several times to have the bull-wheel repaired so that it could be used.

The foregoing represents a fair epitome of all the testimony given on behalf of plaintiff and upon which the court below granted the nonsuit. We think the nonsuit was properly ordered, for we are of the opinion that plaintiff shows by his own testimony that but for his own negligence the injuries he sustained would not have been received. He was a man of experience as a foreman of lumber mills, and certainly, if he were not possessed of more than ordinary ability and intelligence in the line of the duties of the position he occupied, he would not have been invested with the responsible authority and duties of so important a position. Men who are selected to immediately oversee and direct the operations of a business of the importance and magnitude of a sawmill in which large quantities of lumber are manufactured are ordinarily so selected because of their peculiar experience and ability in that line of activity. Where a man may not be so employed upon the considerations suggested, the exception and not the rule is encountered. The plaintiff in the case here claims to be, and no doubt is, a capable person in the position of foreman, and director of such a business. His own testimony shows that he was aware of the defective condition of the machinery with which the logs were conveyed from the car to the "landing" for over a month prior to the day on which he was injured, and it also shows that he knew that the unloading of the logs by means of the jackscrew and crowbar involved increased risk and danger of accidents. Notwithstanding this knowledge, he undertook the work of receiving the logs at the "landing," and in so doing assumed, we think, whatever additional risk might be involved in the discharge of that duty under those circumstances. The rule is well stated in McGlynn v. Brodie, 31 Cal. 380, as follows: "Where a party works with, or in the vicinity of, a piece of machinery insufficient for the purposes for which it was employed, or for any reason unsafe, with a knowledge or means of knowledge of its condition, he takes the risk incident to the employment in which he is thus engaged, and cannot maintain an action for injuries sustained arising out of accidents resulting from such defective condition of the machinery." Of course, it is the duty of the employer to use all reasonable precautions for the safety of those in his service. "He should provide them with suitable machinery, and see that it is kept in a condition which shall not endanger the safety of the employed. If the employer knowingly make use of defective and unsafe machinery, when an injury is done to a servant ignorant of its condition and in the exercise of ordinary care, he should compensate the person thus injured through his neglect." Buzzell v. Laconia Man. Co., 48 Me. 113, 77 Am. Dec. 212, and cases therein cited. See, also, footnotes in last citation.

We have not, in the consideration of the question here, measured by the circumstances under which plaintiff's injuries were received, overlooked the long line of cases holding that a master will be responsible to his servant who, having full knowledge of the defectiveness of the machinery, and while exercising due care, sustains injuries through the operation of such defective machinery, where the master has previously been made cognizant of such defectiveness and has omitted to repair such machinery within a reasonable time after such notice. Patterson v. Pittsburg & Connellsville R. Co., 76 Pa. 389, 18 Am. Rep. 412; Hough v. Railway Co., 100 U. S. 213, 25 L. Ed. 612; Parody v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. (C. C.) 15 Fed. 205; Buzzell v. Laconia Man. Co., supra. The principle, however, upon which it is held that the master is liable under the circumstances mentioned proceeds upon the theory that the servant, although fully aware of the increased danger of his employment growing out of the defectiveness of the machinery, "rests upon the judgment of his superiors, who requested him to continue its use, hoping that by extra care and skill he might avert accidents" until the machinery is properly repaired. Patterson v. Pittsburg & Connellsville R. Co., supra. Or, as it has been expressed in another jurisdiction, "it is in most cases impossible that a workman can judge of the condition of a complex and dangerous machine, wielding irresistible mechanical power, and, if he could, he is quite incapable of estimating the degree of risk involved in different conditions of the machine; but the master may be able, and generally is able, to estimate both. * * *" Clarke v. Holmes, 7 Hurlst. & H. 937. But, as we have seen, we have here a man who, in one sense of the term, was himself a master; a man who was an experienced mill foreman, thoroughly familiar, presumably, with all the mechanical contrivances and operations of the mill, and who, according to his own testimony, keenly appreciated and realized the added risk and danger incident to the unloading of large saw logs and their precipitation down an incline by means of a pinch bar. The fact, of which he undertakes to make much to his own advantage and in support of the claims of his complaint, that under the regular or proper method of unloading the logs there was a way, habitually practiced, in which a signal warning was given him by the man at the car when the logs were started down the incline, and that no such signal could be given where the logs were sent down from the car with a pinch bar, is itself a strong circumstance disclosing the absolute necessity for the exercise of extraordinary care on the part of the man at the landing in the discharge of his duties there under the pinch bar method of unloading the car. While the testimony shows that Stevens was the general superintendent of the plant and the business and employed plaintiff, it also shows that plaintiff had immediate management and control of the operation of the mill, and possessed knowledge of the effect of unloading the logs with a pinch bar equal if not superior to that of Stevens. There is therefore no reason or room for the application of the principle we have been discussing to the facts of this case. If plaintiff were an ordinary workman, without special experience as a lumber mill man, occupying only an ordinary position at the mill, itself not carrying or involving duties requiring special or more than ordinary skill, there might then be reason for holding the master liable after he had been apprised of the defect in the machinery, rendering it unusually dangerous; it appearing that plaintiff had exercised, in the performance of the duties of his employment when the accident occurred, the care demanded by the new circumstances created by the defectiveness of the machinery. But the rule of which we are speaking has this qualification:

"If the defect was so great that obviously, with the use of the utmost skill and care, the danger was imminent, so much so, that none but a reckless man would incur it, the employer would not be liable." Patterson v. Pittsburg & Connellsville Railroad Co., supra. The plaintiff declared as a witness that where the logs were thrown down the incline without the use of the cable, there being then no means by which they could be controlled after they left the car, they were likely to go down the incline in a haphazard manner, or not remain within the track over which they would otherwise pass. Therefore an experienced person at the landing, having full knowledge of the increased hazard to which he was subjecting himself, would be charged with the exercise of unusual caution and alertness in the performance of the service he was thus engaged in. It was the duty of plaintiff, under the circumstances, to have been constantly on his guard so as to prevent damage which he might reasonably have anticipated would otherwise occur. Failing to do so, the injuries he sustained were consequently due wholly to his own fault, and he cannot therefore fasten liability therefor upon the defendants. In other words, viewing the testimony in the strongest and most favorable light to plaintiff's contention, as it is our duty to do, we think, as it has been our purpose to make clear, that it shows that the accident and consequent damage would not have occurred but for his own culpable negligence.

There is no evidence in the record, disclosing negligence upon the part of Caligari who was a fellow servant, and hence the discussion in the briefs relative to the alleged liability of the defendants for the negligence of a co-employé of plaintiff need not be noticed.

The judgment, for the reasons herein given, is affirmed.

LAURENCE v. KILGORE et al. (Sac. 1,615.)
(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 24, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—FINDINGS ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Findings of fact on conflicting evidence cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3983-3989.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—ACTIONS—RECOVERY BY PRINCIPAL—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

The suit not being for rescission of contract, but by a principal to recover what he had given his agent in excess of the amount the agent had paid for property in buying it for him, the agent having falsely represented that he had paid more, plaintiff is not required to return the property, or do else towards placing defendant in statu quo, as a condition of maintaining the action.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; F. H. Smith, Judge.

Action by E. R. Laurence against J. N. Kilgore and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Nicol & Orr and W. Goodwin Williams (N. J. Manson, of counsel), for appellants. Plummer & Dunlap, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The only appeal remaining in this cause is that of defendant Massie from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

Kilgore, acting as agent for Laurence, who was absent from the state, bought for Laurence a farm of Claiborne at the price of $8,750, taking the deed in his own name. He represented to Laurence that the price was $20,330, and that he had taken title in his own name for convenience in making the purchase, and upon this representation obtained from Laurence $10,166.50 of the supposed purchase price, in cash, and a note to himself and Massie for the unpaid portion of the price, whereupon he conveyed to Laurence. Massie received the note without consideration. On discovering the truth, Laurence brought this suit against the defendants to recover of Kilgore the sum of $1,416.50, being the excess of the money paid by him to Kilgore, over the price paid by Kilgore to Claiborne, and to cancel the note to Kilgore and Massie. Judgment was given against Kilgore for the sum claimed and against all the defendants for the cancellation of the note.

The main point argued is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding of the court that Kilgore was the agent of Laurence to buy for him the land of Claiborne. The most that can be said in favor of the appellants is that the evidence is in substantial conflict on the subject. Under the rule of law governing the power of this court on appeal, we cannot consider the weight of the evidence in such cases, and must take the fact as found by the trial court.

The suit is not for the rescission of the contract, and hence the plaintiff was not required to return the land, or place the defendant in statu quo, as a condition of maintaining the action.

No other points are presented.

The order is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HUNTINGTON. (Cr. 138.)

Supreme Court Oct. 13, 1908.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—FORMER JEOPARDY—CONVICTION AS ACQUITTAL OF HIGHER GRADE OF OFFENSE.

A conviction of manslaughter, while the information charges murder, is an acquittal of first and second degree murder, and on a retrial, after reversal, accused can only be tried for manslaughter.

2. HOMICIDE—REVIEW—PROCEEDINGS IN LOWER COURT.

On the second trial of accused, charged with murder by performing a criminal operation on decedent, had after the reversal of a conviction of manslaughter, evidence that death was caused in an attempt to perform a criminal operation on decedent was admissible to prove accused guilty of manslaughter, though it proved murder, for which he could not be tried.

3. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—"MURDER"—"MANSLAUGHTER"—ATTEMPT TO PROCURE ABORTION—CONVICTION UNDER CHARGE OF MURDER.

Under Pen. Code, §§ 187, 189, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and defining murder in the first and second degrees, and section 192, defining manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and dividing manslaughter into voluntary and involuntary manslaughter, and section 274, making it a felony to perform a criminal abortion, an unlawful killing with malice aforethought is "murder," and is also "manslaughter," because it is the unlawful killing of a human being, though it cannot be logically classed as voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, and under a charge of murder by attempting a criminal abortion, a verdict of manslaughter may be returned.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 593.]

5. HOMICIDE—REVIEW—PROCEEDINGS IN LOWER COURT.

Where, after reversal of a conviction of manslaughter under an indictment for murder, the people have the right, at the second trial, to put accused on trial for manslaughter, evidence as to the death, the time and place thereof, and the circumstances, and accused's acts in connection therewith is admissible.

6. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

The law will not permit one who intended to perform a criminal act to make declarations, a day or two before the act, as to the lawful purpose in mind, and then introduce such declarations to justify himself.

Where accused claimed that an operation was not criminal, but was a lawful operation, the exclusion of evidence, that accused had borrowed from a physician instruments to perform a lawful operation, on the ground that there had been no proof as to the use of such instruments, was not erroneous, where leave was given to renew the offer, which was not done.

8. SAME—APPEAL—REVIEW.

It is the province of the court on appeal to pass on questions of law, where there is sufficient evidence to justify the verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; William P. Lawlor, Judge.

Ralph A. Huntington was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Peter F. Dunne and Robert Ferral, for appellant. Attorney General Webb, for the People.

COOPER, P. J. The information charges the defendant with the crime of murder by the unlawful and felonious killing, with malice aforethought, of Jennie McKown on the 27th day of October, 1900, in the city and county of San Francisco. The case has formerly been before the Supreme Court. On the first trial the defendant was convicted of manslaughter, and on appeal the judgment was reversed, upon the ground that the court erred in giving an instruction upon the subject of manslaughter, where the whole theory of the prosecution during the trial was that defendant was guilty of murder in causing the death of deceased by an attempt at criminal abortion; no claim being made that death resulted from a lawful act in performing a surgical operation upon deceased without due caution and circumspection. People v. Huntington, 138 Cal. 261, 70 Pac. 284. The court there remanded the cause for a new trial. It is settled by a long line of decisions in this state that the verdict of manslaughter in the first trial and the judgment entered thereon operate, as matter of law, to acquit the defendant of all higher offenses, to wit, murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376, 60 Am. Dec. 620; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 275; People v. Apgar, 35 Cal. 391; People v. Smith, 134 Cal. 453, 66 Pac. 669; Huntington v. Superior Court, 5 Cal. App. 288, 90 Pac. 141. The cause, after a long delay, came up for a second trial in the superior court in June, 1907, and the jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, upon which judgment was entered, sentencing the defendant to a term of four years in the state prison at San Quentin. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and hence this appeal from the judgment and order.

The main contention of defendant is that the court received evidence which showed, or tended to show, that the death was caused in an attempt to perform a criminal abortion upon deceased, and hence the crime proved was murder, and not manslaughter, and that defendant could not be convicted of manslaughter where the evidence shows that the crime was murder in killing deceased by attempting to produce an abortion. It was clearly the theory of the district attorney and of the trial judge that all the facts might be proven, and that upon such facts the jury might return a verdict of manslaughter, even though the crime was in fact murder. It is not disputed that such verdict might have been returned if the case had not been tried before, and the defendant, by reason of the law, acquitted of murder. The district attorney, in the course of his opening statement, said: "From these and a variety of other circumstances we expect to show that this girl was pregnant, that the defendant knew of her pregnancy, and that he undertook to relieve her of that condition, and that, in his attempt to perform the operation, he caused her death." And the judge in instructing the jury said: "If you find from the evidence in this case to your satisfaction to a moral certainty, and beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant Ralph A. Huntington did, on or about the 27th day of October, 1900, at the city and county of San Francisco, knowingly and intentionally perform, or attempt to perform, the operation of curettement on Jennie McKown while she was pregnant, for the purpose of causing her a miscarriage, when the same was not necessary to save her life, and that, by reason of such performance or attempt to perform such operation said Jennie McKown lost her life, it will be your duty, in view of the former verdict in this case, to find the said defendant guilty of manslaughter." In our opinion the evidence was admissible if it tended to prove the defendant guilty of manslaughter, although it proved more, to wit, the crime of murder. Murder is defined as "the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." Pen. Code, § 187. It is divided into degrees as follows: "All murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or any other kind of willful, deliberate, premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary or mayhem, is murder of the first degree; all other kinds of murder are of the second degree." Section 189. Manslaughter is "the unlawful killing of a human being without malice." Section 192. If the defendant caused the death of deceased by the use of an instrument or means with intent to procure a miscarriage, the killing was unlawful, because such act is expressly made a felony by statute. Pen. Code, § 274. There is ample evidence in the record to sustain the implied finding of the jury to the effect that the death was caused by defendant in an attempt to produce a miscarriage of deceased, who was pregnant. It is not necessary to give such evidence in full, or to discuss the evidence as to the defendant's acquaintance with the unfortunate girl, who met her death while in the full bloom of youth and vigor. In fact counsel for the defendant do not claim that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict of murder; but they insist that the evidence shows the crime to have been murder, and that the defendant has been already acquitted thereof. This argument is based upon the Code, which divides manslaughter into two classes: "(1) Voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; (2) involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection." It is not claimed by the people that the killing was done in the performance of a lawful act in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection; nor is it claimed that it was done in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, for the very reason that, if the defendant was attempting to procure a miscarriage of deceased, who was pregnant, he was doing an unlawful act which was a felony. The result of the argument of appellant's counsel, if carried to the extent claimed, would be to hold that if the act which defendant performed was unlawful, but not a felony, he is guilty of manslaughter; while if the act was a felony, he is not guilty of manslaughter, but of murder. We do not think it incumbent on the court to give such narrow, technical interpretation as to the true meaning of the statute. If the killing was unlawful, with malice aforethought, it was murder, and it was also manslaughter, because, by the very definition of the statute, it was the unlawful killing of a human being. It is none the less manslaughter because we cannot logically place it under one of the headings of section 192 as being voluntary or involuntary. If the killing was manslaughter, it is not important that it be classified. The statute does not distinguish the kinds of manslaughter in prescribing the punishment, but, on the contrary, makes the punishment not exceeding 10 years' imprisonment for manslaughter; and the question as to whether any case falls under the one head or the other does not appear to be material. It is not necessary for us to pause in this case and reverse the judgment of conviction because we might not be able to classify the manslaughter as being voluntary or involuntary. The main question is whether or not the evidence shows the defendant to be guilty of manslaughter. The evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict that the deceased came to her death by the unlawful act of the defendant. The law only requires that the acts claimed to constitute the crime should come within the prohibition of the statute when interpreted by the plain rules of common sense. We have been cited to no case which is in conflict with what we have said. It is said in McClain on Criminal Law, § 335, after speaking of the classification of manslaughter into voluntary and involuntary: "All these classes are characterized, on the one hand, by the presence of some wrong, and on the other by the absence of malice aforethought, so that a short definition of manslaughter would be, criminal homicide without malice aforethought. This distinction is sometimes embodied in statutes, in which case it is necessary to refer to the common law to determine what killings are, and what are not, within the statute. Manslaughter is not a degree of murder, but a distinct crime, included, however, in the crime of murder." The same author says further (section 347): "The cases of manslaughter already discussed are those where the killing is intentional, but under such provocation as to indicate the absence of malice, and reduce the offense to manslaughter. But there are also cases of unintentional homicide amounting to manslaughter, just as there are cases of unintentional homicide amounting to murder, the difference being as to the magnitude of the wrong which was intended and from which death has resulted. Thus if a wrongful blow is given resulting in death, the act will not be less than manslaughter, even though the blow was one in its nature not likely to cause death, or otherwise shown to have been inflicted with intent to cause death. Death resulting from an act wrongful per se, such as attempting to procure an abortion when not necessary to save the life of the woman, will be manslaughter at least."

In speaking of the various definitions of manslaughter, and the various criticisms thereof, it is said by Bishop in his New Criminal Law (volume 2, § 737): "Though the subject does not admit of a defining so exact and short as to satisfy equally the demands of the law and of literary taste, the following is proposed: Manslaughter is any such dangerous act or omission, feloniously done or suffered contrary to one's legal duty, as results in the death of a human being within a year and a day. Now this definition includes murder, and properly, because an indictment for manslaughter may be sustained while the proof is of murder." It is said in Wharton on Homicide (3d Ed.) § 92: "So it is open to the jury to ignore the doctrine of implied malice in such case, and a verdict of manslaughter may be properly rendered in a prosecution for a killing done in the perpetration, or attempted perpetration, of a felony." And again (section 376): "At common law if life was destroyed in the commission of or attempt to commit an abortion, whether the woman was quick with child or not, it was murder, or at least manslaughter." And section 378: "By statute in Illinois, and perhaps in some of the other states, it is expressly provided that if any person shall, in the attempt to procure the miscarriage of a pregnant woman, thereby cause her death, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of murder, and shall be punished as the law requires for such offense. Such a statute brings the crime under the general rule which governs and controls murder committed by other means; and in such case a verdict of manslaughter may be found by the jury as well as in a case of prosecution for murder of any other kind." In Peoples v. Commonwealth, 87 Ky. 487, 9 S. W. 512, one of the leading cases, the defendant was convicted of manslaughter, where death resulted in the use of means to procure an abortion, and the verdict was upheld. The court said: "All the authorities agree that if, from the means used, the death of the woman results, it is either murder or manslaughter." In State v. Alcorn, 7 Idaho, 599, 64 Pac. 1014, 97 Am. St. Rep. 252, the defendant was tried upon an indictment charging murder and found guilty of manslaughter, and the judgment was affirmed, the court holding that the contention of defendant that because the indictment charged murder the verdict of manslaughter could not be upheld was without merit. In Earl v. People, 73 Ill. 320, the defendant was prosecuted on an indictment for murder, under a statute which provided that any person who causes the death of a pregnant woman, in an attempt to produce an abortion, shall be deemed guilty of murder.

A verdict of manslaughter was returned, and the court upheld it, and also held that the trial in such case should be conducted as an ordinary trial for murder. The remarks of the court are applicable to this case, and are as follows: "By the express provision of the statute the crime for which the plaintiff in error was indicted is declared to be murder. Unless there is some provision in the law which would take the crime of murder caused by an abortion out of the application of the general rule which governs and controls the same crime produced in another manner, then the rules of law which apply to and govern ordinary cases of murder must be held to control the case at bar. The act declares the attempt to produce the miscarriage of a pregnant woman, which causes the death of such woman, shall be murder, and the penalty for the crime is the same as if murder had been committed in a different manner. An indictment is required as in other cases. The trial is conducted in all respects as is required where a criminal is on trial for murder caused by killing in some other manner; and, in the absence of a law prohibiting a verdict of manslaughter we are aware of no reason why a verdict of that character may not be found by a jury as well in a case of this character as under any other indictment for murder." This case was upheld and followed in the later case of Howard v. People, 185 Ill. 552, 57 N. E. 441, and the court held that "the lesser crime, manslaughter, is included in the greater, murder." The subject is very fully discussed and the cases cited in a note to State v. Power (Wash.) 63 L. R. A. 902. The author of the note concludes by stating that, while causing the death of a woman by procuring or attempting to procure her miscarriage was usually regarded as murder at common law, yet under statutes classifying homicide, "it is usually regarded as either murder or manslaughter."

It is needless to quote further from authorities. The above are directly in point to the effect that, under a charge of murder by attempting to procure an abortion, a verdict of manslaughter may be returned and will be upheld. Our own courts have in principle decided the same way, and it has always been held that, under an ordinary indictment or information for murder, the defendant could be convicted of the lesser offense manslaughter. People v. Muhlnner, 115 Cal. 303, 47 Pac. 128; People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245. In the latter case it is said: "But inasmuch as the offense of manslaughter is necessarily involved in the offense of murder, we cannot see that the defendant was prejudiced by instructions defining the latter crime, and in telling the jury that, if the evidence warranted a conviction of murder, they should find the defendant guilty of manslaughter, and could not, in view of the plea of former conviction find him guilty of murder. The facts on which the information charging murder was based did not change when, by reason of the former conviction for the lesser offense, the defendant was acquitted of the greater. At the second trial the same evidence would go to the jury whether it pointed to murder or only to manslaughter (Pen. Code, § 1180), and this same evidence would have gone to the jury had the information charged manslaughter instead of murder. In effect, the instruction was that, although the jury might regard the evidence as establishing the crime of murder as defined by the court, the jury must render a verdict of guilty of manslaughter only. Clearly if murder was made out, so necessarily also was manslaughter." While there are expressions in People v. Huntington, supra, giving countenance to defendant's contention, a careful examination of the case will show that it does not conflict with what has here been said. Not only is this so, but the case was remanded for a new trial. The court knew that the result of the verdict of manslaughter was to acquit the defendant of murder, and it could only remand the cause for a new trial for manslaughter. The new trial was for manslaughter, and the verdict was guilty of manslaughter. And so of Huntington v. Superior Court, supra. The question there was as to whether or not the defendant could again be tried for murder, and it was held that he could not. It was there said: "A man should not be tried for one crime and found guilty of another and different crime, unless the different crime is included in the charge for which he is being legally tried. Now in the charge of murder is included the lesser offense of manslaughter; and in a proper case, where the defendant is being tried for the crime of murder, a jury may find the lesser offense of manslaughter." It being conceded that the people had the right to put the defendant on trial for manslaughter, it must follow that evidence as to the death, the time and place thereof, and the circumstances, and defendant's acts in connection therewith was admissible. If this were not so, we would have the strange case of the people having the right to try the defendant for manslaughter, but being deprived of the right to prove such crime. Such is not the law.

The defendant claimed that the operation which was performed by him upon the deceased was the lawful operation of curettage, performed by instrumental treatment of the inner womb for the removal of a condition therein of endometritis; that he was not in any way attempting to produce an abortion. He called one Dr. Depuy as a witness, and proposed to prove by such witness that he borrowed a curette, dilator, and irrigator with which to perform the operation; and that he, the defendant, made the contemporaneous statement to Dr. Depuy that he wanted such instruments for the purpose of performing such operation upon deceased. After objections had been made to this line of questions as to such declarations, the record shows the following to have occurred, while the attorney for the defendant was explaining what he desired to prove: "Mr. Dunne: One day before the operation—if the operation was upon the 27th, that it was upon the 26th that Dr. Huntington obtained the instruments, made the declaration to this doctor as to his purpose in obtaining them, and inviting him to be present at the operation. The Court: Has proof been offered that the instrument was used—the curette? Mr. Dunne: If it has not been offered in the case, it will be offered. That is a mere question of the order of proof (argument). The Court: The objection will be sustained at this time without prejudice to the renewal of the offer. Mr. Dunne: We note an exception." The objection which had been interposed to this line of questions leading up to the offer was that the declarations were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and hearsay; that no proper foundation had been laid. It is evident from an examination of the record that no question was asked of the witness as to the mere fact of the defendant having borrowed the instruments from him, but the questions were each accompanied by the question as to the statement or declaration of the defendant made to Dr. Depuy at the time he desired to borrow or procure the instruments. The statements, made by defendant to Dr. Depuy the day before the attempted operation as to the purpose for which he desired them, would be clearly self-serving declarations. It was not a declaration forming part of the transaction, and made while it was in progress. The law would not permit a party who intended to perform an act that was criminal to make statements or declarations a day or two before the act as to the lawful purpose in mind, and then introduce such declarations to justify himself. Not only this, but the court placed its ruling upon the ground that there had been no proof offered as to the use of the curette, and sustained the objection, with leave to renew the offer. Defendant's counsel never renewed the offer. Defendant testified in his own behalf that he performed the operation for endometritis and used curettes; that he procured a curette from Dr. Depuy. We find no ruling prejudicial to the defendant. He appears to have had a fair trial, and the jury passed upon the question of his guilt. It is our province to pass upon questions of law where there is sufficient evidence to justify the verdict. There being no error in the record, the judgment and order are affirmed.

FOX v. MONAHAN et al. (Civ. 355.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.)

Aug. 24, 1908.)

1. MONEY RECEIVED (§ 17*)—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS.

The approved and usual form of a count for money had and received is that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum for money had and received by the defendant to and for the use of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Received, Cent. Dig. § 55; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

2. MONEY RECEIVED (§ 1*)—GROUNDS OF OBLIGATION.

The action for money had and received will lie whenever defendant has received money which in equity and good conscience he should pay to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Received, Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. MONEY RECEIVED (§ 17*)—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

Allegations that money was earned by plaintiff's assignors as their share of commissions from the sale of property, and was collected by defendants and appropriated to their own use, state a cause of action for money had and received as against a general demurrer, though it is not expressly alleged that the money was received by defendants for the use of plaintiff's assignors; it appearing that defendants had collected money which in equity and good conscience belonged to plaintiff's assignors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Received, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

4. MONEY RECEIVED (§ 17*)—PLEADING—ALLEGATIONS—SUFFICIENCY.

Allegations that defendants became indebted to plaintiff's assignors in a certain sum, money had and received by defendants from such assignors at the special instance and request of defendants, is insufficient on general demurrer as a count for money had and received; there being no allegation, either direct or inferential, that the money was received for the use of plaintiff's assignors, and its payment to defendants of itself raising no presumption that it was paid for the use of plaintiff's assignors.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Money Received, Cent. Dig. §§ 55, 56; Dec. Dig. § 17.*]

5. PLEADING (§ 8*)—CONCLUSIONS OF LAW—ALLEGATION OF INDEBTEDNESS.

The general allegation of indebtedness in an action for money had and received is a mere conclusion of law, and insufficient in the absence of averment of facts supporting it.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Pleading, Cent. Dig. § 15; Dec. Dig. § 8.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1212*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—PROCEEDINGS AFTER REMAND.

In an action on two counts for money had and received, the demurrer being overruled as to the first count and sustained as to the second, on remand the issues as to the first count need not be retried, and, after retrial of the second count, judgment may be given on the first count in accordance with the findings already made, and, on the second count, pursuant to the findings on retrial.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by J. M. Fox against John Doe Monahan and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed and remanded for further proceedings as directed.

Leon Samuels, for appellants. H. H. Davis, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal upon the judgment roll from a judgment for plaintiff and against defendants in the sum of $346.65.

The complaint is in two counts, each of which was attacked by defendants by a general demurrer, which was by the court overruled as to each count, and it is this action of the court which is now chiefly relied on for a reversal of the judgment.

The first count, if good at all, sets forth a cause of action for money had and received by defendants to and for the use of plaintiff's assignors. The point intended to be raised by the demurrer is that it is not alleged that defendant had or received or collected the money sued for for the use or benefit of plaintiff's assignors. In this respect it must be confessed that plaintiff's complaint is not a model of good pleading, and is a departure from the usual and approved form for a count for money had and received. The approved and usual form for this count is very simple, consisting simply in stating that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in a certain sum "for money had and received by the defendant to and for the use of plaintiff." 1 Chitty, Pl. (16th Am. Ed.) 362. In the first count of plaintiff's complaint, it is not expressly alleged that the money was had or received by defendants to or for the use of plaintiff's assignors; but it is alleged that the money was earned by plaintiff's assignors as their share of commissions from the sale of certain real property, and was collected by defendants and appropriated to their own use. It thus appears that defendants collected money belonging to plaintiff's assignors. Having collected money belonging to plaintiff's assignors, equity and good conscience required that they should pay it over to the parties entitled thereto. This they refused to do. The action for money had and received will lie wherever it appears that defendant has received money which in equity and good conscience he should pay to the plaintiff. The count now under discussion is not in a form that is to be commended; but we think that in the face of an attack by general demurrer only it sufficiently appeared that the money sued for had been received for the use of plaintiff's assignor.

The demurrer to the second count, however, should have been sustained. In this count the allegations attacked are "that within the two years next last past, and at the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, the said defendants became indebted to Fox-Valentine Company in the sum of $55, money had and received by said defendants from said Fox-Valentine Company, at the special instance and request of defendants." Here there is no allegation, either direct or inferential, that the money was had or received for the use or benefit of Fox-Valentine Company (plaintiff's assignors). The fact that the money was paid by Fox-Valentine Company to defendants raises no presumption or implication that it was so paid for the use of the payor. On the contrary, where money is paid by one person to another, the presumption is that it was due to the latter. Section 1963, subd. 7, Code Civ. Proc.; Williams v. Brunson, 41 Wis. 418. In Williams v. Brunson, supra, the allegations were to the effect that defendant had received from the clerk and agent of plaintiff sums of money to the amount of $1,005 of the money of plaintiff, that plaintiff demanded payment thereof of defendant, and that defendant has not paid any part thereof, but is now justly indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $1,005. It was held that this stated no cause of action, and that a general demurrer should have been sustained. In State v. Sims, 76 Ind. 328, the form of the allegation was the same as in the second count in the case at bar, and it was held that it stated no cause of action. See, also, Roldan v. Power et al., 14 Misc. Rep. 480, 35 N. Y. Supp. 697. The general allegation of indebtedness is a statement of a mere conclusion of law, and is insufficient in the absence of a statement of facts supporting such indebtedness. McConoughey v. Jackson, 101 Cal. 265, 35 Pac. 863, 40 Am. St. Rep. 53; Curtis v. Richards, 9 Cal. 33; Cal. State Tel. Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 150 (Reprint 124); Camplin v. Eads (Ky.) 24 S. W. 1068; Holgate v. Broom, 8 Minn. 243 (Gil. 209); Butts v. Phelps, 79 Mo. 302; Moore v. Hobbs, 79 N. C. 535. There being in the second count no allegation, either direct or by implication, that the money was had or received for the use of plaintiff's assignors, the count stated no cause of action, and the general demurrer thereto should have been sustained.

Defendants also ask to have the judgment reversed because the complaint was never amended by inserting the true name of the defendant sued under the fictitious name of John Doe Monahan; but as the judgment must be reversed for the reasons already stated, and the case remanded for further proceedings when the amendment may be made, it is not necessary to pass upon the merits of this contention. But see Alameda County v. Crocker, 125 Cal. 101, 57 Pac. 766. Upon the return of the case to the trial court, there will be no necessity for a retrial of the issue arising upon the first count of plaintiff's complaint; but the court may, after disposing of such issues as may arise out of the second count, proceed to give judgment in accordance with the findings already made upon the issues arising out of the first count, and such findings as shall be made on the issues arising out of the second count.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer to the second count of the complaint, with leave to plaintiff to amend his complaint as to such count if he shall so desire, and for further proceedings in accordance with the foregoing opinion.

In re CREELY. (Cr. 148.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California.
Aug. 31, 1908.)

1. CONTEMPT (§ 34*)—POWER TO PUNISH—SUPERIOR COURTS.

The right of every superior court of record to punish for contempt of its authority or process is inherent, and essential to its existence and to the due administration of justice.

2. CONTEMPT (§ 14*) — ACTS CONSTITUTING "CONTEMPT"—INTERFERENCE WITH JURY.

A jury while deliberating on their verdict is an appendage of the court, and one attempting to influence a juror at such time is guilty of "contempt," under Code Civ. Proc. § 1209, declaring that disorderly behavior toward the judge while holding court, and any other unlawful interference with the proceedings of the court, shall be contempt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Contempt, Cent. Dig. §§ 37, 38; Dec. Dig. § 14.*]

3. CONTEMPT (§ 54*)—PROCEEDINGS TO PUNISH—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

An affidavit by a juror that accused said, in the hearing of all the jurors on their way from a hotel to the jury room to deliberate on the trial of R., "Don't convict my friend R.," sufficiently charges a contempt of court, without averring that the language was used with an unlawful intent to influence the jury.

Application of Dr. Edward J. Creely for a writ of habeas corpus for his discharge, after his conviction for contempt of court. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Alfred H. Cohen and Jas. H. Creely, for petitioner. W. H. Langdon, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. The verified petition for writ of habeas corpus in this case states that the petitioner is unlawfully restrained of his liberty by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, by reason of a judgment and order made by Hon. M. T. Dooling, acting judge of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt of court; said contempt being constructive, and not occurring in the presence or hearing of the court. The petition states that the affidavit on which the citation was issued did not give the court jurisdiction, and "did not show on its face, or at all, a case of contempt, and that the said affidavit utterly fails to state any facts which, in point of law, do or might constitute a contempt on the part of this petitioner." Upon this petition the court, under the duty imposed upon it by law, made an order granting the writ, making it returnable before the court on June 11, 1908, and expressly directed that "a copy of the petition and order be served upon the district attorney" at least 10 days before the hearing. At the time so set for hearing the petitioner appeared in person, and by his attorneys, but no one appeared from the district attorney's office. The return then made by the sheriff was not sufficient, as it did not contain a copy of the affidavit on which the order to show cause had issued, nor did it contain a copy of the judgment. Petitioner's attorney asked that the petitioner be discharged, by reason of such defective return and failure of the district attorney to appear, but the court declined to discharge the prisoner, and made an order continuing the case, so that the return might be amended, and the district attorney given a further opportunity to appear in support of the judgment. No further return was made to the writ during the month of June or July. The month of July being the vacation month, the judges not all being present on the regular motion day, the matter was continued to the regular motion day, August 24, 1908. On the last-named day, and not before, another return was made and filed in court by the sheriff, giving the order in full, and the copy of the affidavit on which the proceeding is based. The district attorney, however, did not appear to argue the said matter, nor has he filed any brief to assist the court in the determination thereof. We have, however, without any aid from the district attorney, given the matter as full investigation as the time at our disposal would justify, for the reason that the matter is one of importance to the orderly administration of justice as well as to the liberty and constitutional rights of the petitioner. The affidavit was made by Isaac Penny, one of the jurors of the panel in the case of People v. Abraham Ruef, and is, after giving the title, as follows: "Isaac Penny, being duly sworn, deposes and says: That on the 29th day of April, 1908, the impaneling of a jury was duly completed in the above-entitled court, to try the above-entitled cause of People of the State of California v. Abraham Ruef, case No. 840, and that affiant was duly sworn as a member of said jury, and that the other members thereof so duly impaneled were John Koenenman, Patrick Connolly, Robert Trost, Edwin Mohrig, William M. Leverone, John Louis Vermeil, Valentine Franz, F. J. W. Anderson, James E. Lennon, S. R. Crooks, and W. F. Swift. That on the 18th day of May, 1908, the taking of testimony in said cause was completed, and the argument of counsel commenced, and that on the 19th day of May, 1908, the argument of counsel in said cause was completed, and said jury was duly instructed by said court upon the law in said case, and, having signified its desire to retire for deliberation, four deputy sheriffs of said city and county of San Francisco were duly sworn in open court by the clerk of said court, at the direction of the judge thereof, to keep the members of said jury together in some private and convenient place, and not to permit any person to speak to or communicate with them, nor to do so themselves, nor for either of them to do so himself, unless by order of the court, or to ask them whether they had agreed upon a verdict, and to return them into court when they had so agreed, or when ordered by the court; and that said jury thereupon retired for deliberation in the custody of said four deputy sheriffs, so sworn as aforesaid, to a private and convenient place, and commenced to deliberate upon the evidence in said cause for the purpose of reaching and returning a verdict thereon in said cause; and that said jury continued to remain in the custody of said deputy sheriffs, so sworn as aforesaid for the purpose as aforesaid, to and until the 21st day of May, 1908, and that on said day, while said jury was so in the custody of said deputy sheriffs, for the purpose aforesaid, and while they were being brought by said deputy sheriffs from the St. Francis Hotel in this city and county, where they had been kept together by said deputy sheriffs during a part of the preceding night, and while they were thus being taken to the aforesaid private and convenient place for them to further deliberate, to wit, to the jury room of the above-entitled court in department No. 6 thereof, and while they were all together in the custody of said deputy sheriffs, so sworn as aforesaid for the purpose as aforesaid, one Dr. Edward J. Creely passed them in a buggy at the corner of Leavenworth street and Golden Gate avenue in this city and county, on said 21st day of May, 1908, and in passing them called out to said jury, and said in a loud and distinct tone of voice, so that this affiant and each of the other members of said jury and the deputy sheriffs, who were so in charge of said jury, could and did hear him, 'Don't convict my friend Ruef.'" An order to show cause having issued upon this affidavit, the petitioner appeared before the Honorable M. T. Dooling, and offered himself as a witness, and testified in his own behalf. He was granted a full hearing, and allowed by the court to give his version of the affair. The court found and recited in the order or judgment as follows: "That all the facts and things stated and contained in said affidavit of Isaac Penny are true, and occurred in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California. That at the time the said Creely made said remark to said jury, and the members thereof, and so conducted himself as set forth in said affidavit, said Creely was personally acquainted with one of said deputy sheriffs, in charge of said jury, and knew him to be such deputy sheriff, and was also acquainted with Edwin Mohrig, one of said jurors in said above-entitled cause, and knew that he was a juror in said cause; and that prior to said occurrence the said Creely had, in the morning of the same day, read in the morning newspapers that the said jury in the above-entitled cause was deliberating thereon in the custody of said officers, and stood seven for acquittal and five for conviction; and that at that time the said Creely further knew that the said persons to whom he addressed said statement and remark were, and constituted, the jury in the above-entitled cause, and that they had not been discharged, but were still deliberating upon their verdict, and further then and there believed that they were then on their way to court in custody of said deputy sheriffs. That the said Dr. Edward J. Creely, then and there in the said city and county of San Francisco, made said remark, and so conducted himself as above set forth, willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, and contemptuously, and the said Creely did then and there thereby willfully, knowingly, contemptuously, and unlawfully interfere with the process and proceedings of the above said entitled court."

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

There is no question but that the facts found by the court show a flagrant contempt, but the petitioner insists that the affidavit does not state facts sufficient of themselves to show that petitioner intended to commit a contempt of court. Certain acts are made contempt of court by section 1209 of the Code of Civil Procedure, among which are the following: "(1) Disorderly, contemptuous or insolent behavior toward the judge while holding the court tending to interrupt the due course of a trial or other judicial proceeding. * * * (9) Any other unlawful interference with the process or proceedings of a court." The right of every superior court of record to punish for contempt of its authority or process is inherent in the very nature of its organization, and essential to its existence and protection, and to the due and orderly administration of justice. It is said by Blackstone, in his commentaries: "Laws without competent authority to secure their administration from disobedience and contempt would be vain and nugatory. A power, therefore, in the Supreme Courts of justice to suppress such contempts by an immediate attachment of the offender, results from the first principles of judicial establishments, and must be an inseparable attendant in every superior tribunal. Accordingly we find it actually exercised as early as the annals of our law extend." The Supreme Court of the United States in Ex parte Robinson, 19 Wall. 505, 22 L. Ed. 205, said: "The power to punish for contempts is inherent in all courts. Its existence is essential to the preservation of order in judicial proceedings, and to the enforcement of the judgments, orders, and writs of the courts, and consequently to the due administration of justice. The moment the courts of the United States were called into existence and invested with jurisdiction over any subject, they became possessed of this power." It was said by Bacon, in his Essay on Judicature (No. 56): "The place of justice is a hallowed place, and therefore not only the bench, but the foot place and precincts and purprise thereof ought to be preserved against scandal and corruption." The trial jury, in charge of the officers of the law, was an appendage of the court, acting under the authority of the court, and part of the machinery by which Ruef was being tried. It was not only essential that the jury at the time it was selected should be fair and impartial and without prejudice, but the ends of justice required that it should remain so to the time when its verdict should be finally returned. It is the duty of every good citizen to uphold the laws of the land, and maintain due respect for the courts. When any one so far forgets his duties as a citizen as to unlawfully interfere with the proceedings of the courts by attempting to influence a juror who has been sworn to try the case, he should be promptly brought before the court, and such punishment meted out to him as will deter him and others from again attempting the same thing. If a court should allow its jury to be spoken to, to be solicited or advised, by strangers as to the case, or as to the course it should pursue during the progress of the trial, the trial would be a miscarriage, and the court would be held up to scorn and contempt. To the credit of the people be it said it seldom occurs that any one so far forgets himself as to attempt to address or influence a jury or a juror, either before or after the trial has commenced, but in all cases where such conduct has been brought to the attention of the court, the party found guilty has been promptly punished.

This brings us to a discussion of the claim of petitioner that the language used is not stated in the affidavit to have been used with any unlawful intent, or with any intent to influence the jury. The language is that petitioner "called out to said jury, and said in a loud and distinct tone of voice, so that this affiant and each of the other members of said jury and the deputy sheriffs who were so in charge of said jury could and did hear him, 'Don't convict my friend Ruef.'" It was not necessary for the affidavit on which the proceedings were based to state any more than the facts, and they appear to be fully stated. The fact that the petitioner called out to the jury in a distinct tone of voice "Don't convict my friend Ruef" appears to be all the fact that could be stated. No one but petitioner could look into his mind and tell the intent, object, and purpose of the remark. The remark itself from its very language tends to establish that petitioner knew Ruef was on trial, that the jury to whom the remark was made had charge of the case, and the power to either convict or acquit. Petitioner saw the jury and the deputy sheriffs in charge of them—four in number—and knew that Ruef was being tried. He must be presumed to have intended the ordinary consequences of his own deliberate act. If he in fact did not know that it was the jury in the Ruef Case, it was strange that he should have addressed them in such language. No other body of men could convict Ruef. Petitioner was given his day in court, his explanations heard, and, after such hearing, the trial court, who saw him and listened patiently to his evidence, found that he made the remark “unlawfully, knowingly, and contemptuously.” If petitioner knew he was speaking to the Ruef jury, as he must have known, and as the language addressed to them shows, and as the court finds that he did know, and if he used the words set forth in the affidavit (which he does not deny), he committed a flagrant violation of all rules of propriety, and interfered with the authority and proceedings of the court. The case of Hutton v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 156, 81 Pac. 409, is relied upon by petitioner, but it is not in conflict with what has here been decided. In that case it was claimed that the petitioner had violated an injunction prohibiting him from “intimidating or preventing any person from patronizing the restaurant business of one Jean Pon.” The court in its opinion said: “It still remains that there is not the slightest intimation contained in the affidavit, to the effect that petitioner had any knowledge that said Mary Duran was a patron of said Jean Pon, had ever been in his restaurant, or had ever been in the place known as No. 1129 Dupont street, or that he had any knowledge of facts reasonably tending to show such a situation of affairs.” In the case at bar the very words addressed to the jury, reasonably at least, tended to show that the petitioner knew that he was addressing the jury which was still deliberating on the Ruef Case.

Let the petitioner be remanded and the writ discharged.

CALIFORNIA FRUIT GROWERS' ASS'N OF LOS ANGELES et al. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. (Civ. 562.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Aug. 31, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 557*)—ACTIONS—APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVERS—GROUNDS—COMPLAINT.

A complaint, in an action by stockholders, which shows that all the stock, except plaintiffs', was fraudulently issued; that the directors had been guilty of fraudulent practices, and had abandoned the corporation, and a majority of them were in jail, and which prays for the removal of the directors and the cancellation of the fraudulent stock and for a receiver—alleges facts showing the impracticability of effecting the removal of directors by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders, under Civ. Code, § 310, and authorizes the court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction, to remove directors of the corporation and take charge of the property thereof through a receiver.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 2223; Dec. Dig. § 557.*]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 101*)—ORDERS APPEALABLE—ORDER APPOINTING RECEIVER OF CORPORATION.

An order appointing a receiver of a corporation, in a suit by stockholders praying for the removal of the directors thereof, the cancellation of stock fraudulently issued, and the appointment of a receiver to preserve the property of the corporation, is appealable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 683; Dec. Dig. § 101.*]

3. PROHIBITION (§ 3*)—ADEQUACY OF REMEDY BY APPEAL—EFFECT.

A right of appeal from an order confers an adequate remedy, and prohibition does not lie, though jurisdiction to grant the order does not exist.

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 557*)—RECEIVERS—APPOINTMENT—JURISDICTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 565, authorizing the appointment of a receiver of a corporation on the application of a stockholder, etc., the appointment of a receiver of a corporation may be made ex parte.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 80*)—APPEALABLE DECISIONS—RECEIVERS—ORDERS FOR SALE OF CORPORATE PROPERTY.

Where the object of the appointment of a receiver of a corporation was originally to preserve its property, but circumstances arose which necessitated a sale of the corporate property as a means of preserving to the corporation its interest, an order for a sale is so independent of the suit itself as to make the order therefor substantially a final decree for the purposes of an appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 494; Dec. Dig. § 80.*]

Application for writ of prohibition by the California Fruit Growers' Association of Los Angeles and another against the Superior Court of Los Angeles County and another, to restrain the court and its receiver from selling personal property belonging to the California Fruit Growers' Association of Los Angeles. Demurrer to the petition for the writ sustained, and writ dismissed.

Richardson & Martin, for petitioners John D. Works, A. A. Hancock, and T. R. Archer, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This is an application for a writ to restrain the court and its receiver from selling certain personal property belonging to said fruit growers' association. The petition for the writ sets out all of the proceedings connected with the original appointment of the receiver, from which it appears that the association is a corporation organized under law, governed by a board of five directors; that these directors had all been guilty of fraudulent practices, and the majority of the board was then confined in jail, and each and all of the directors had abandoned the corporation and its assets and interests; that all of the stock other than that owned by the plaintiffs in that proceeding was fraudulently issued, but was outstanding, and certain of the directors claimed to own and hold the same. The special and general prayer of the complaint comprehends the removal of the directors, and, if the court finds the stock fraudulently issued, to cancel the same, and for the appointment of a receiver pending the action to preserve the property of the corporation. The court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver under the allegations of the complaint. The proceeding was not directed toward closing up the affairs of the corporation, or an attempt to dissolve the same, but merely a proceeding directed against the individual directors, whom it sought to remove, and to place the assets of the corporation in safe hands. That a court of equity may remove directors of a corporation, if deemed necessary, when they have proven unfaithful is determined in Wickersham v. Crittenden, 93 Cal. 32, 28 Pac. 788. Such an order appointing a receiver is an appealable order, and which right of appeal confers an adequate remedy, and prohibition will not lie, even where jurisdiction does not exist. Jacobs v. Superior Court, 133 Cal. 364, 65 Pac. 826, 85 Am. St. Rep. 204. It must follow that, where the unfaithful trustees have all abandoned their trust, pending such proceedings for their removal the court may, through the agency of a receiver, take charge of the property of the corporation, if necessary for its preservation. The facts alleged were such as to develop the impracticability of effecting the removal of the trustees through the provisions of section 310, Civ. Code, for until the validity of the outstanding stock was determined, it would not be possible for the stockholders to correct the evils through the provisions relating to the removal and election of directors, as in that section provided. The appointment of a receiver may be made ex parte. Code Civ. Proc. § 565; Real Estate Associates v. San Francisco, 60 Cal. 227.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes 97 P.—49

While the object of the appointment of the receiver was originally to preserve the property of the corporation, still circumstances might arise which would involve the necessity for a sale of a portion thereof, as one of the means of preserving to the corporation its interests, as where charges and expenses of care would absorb the property, or where it was likely to become valueless by reason of its perishable nature, or other attendant circumstances which might require the same. An order for such sale would be so far independent of suit itself as to make the order therefor substantially a final decree for the purpose of an appeal. Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Company, 134 Cal. 123, 66 Pac. 198. An appeal lying from such an order, there can be no need of a writ of prohibition, and it will not lie. Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 326, 39 Pac. 604. The petition for this writ then shows upon its face, that the order for the appointment of a receiver was within the jurisdiction of the court, and if the order of the court authorizing the sale of part of the property pending hearing was improvidently made, an appeal therefrom could be had. The petition does not state facts entitling the petitioner to a writ of prohibition, and the demurrer of respondents is well taken. An order will be entered sustaining the demurrer of respondents to the petition for the writ, and dismissing the writ.

SAVAGE v. SMITH et al. (S. F. 5,068.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 6, 1908.)

APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 113*)—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—FORM OF ORDER—SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—"ORDER AFTER JUDGMENT"—"INTERLOCUTORY ORDER."

An order setting aside a default before entry of judgment thereon is not appealable; it not being an "order after judgment" or an "interlocutory order," within Code Civ. Proc. § 963, making appealable interlocutory orders entered in actions to redeem mortgaged property or in partition suits, etc.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by M. J. Savage against Lizzie D. Smith and others. From an order setting aside a default before entry of judgment thereon, plaintiff appealed, and the appeal was dismissed. On rehearing. Rehearing denied.

R. N. Countryman, for appellant. Andros & Hengstler, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The appeal in this case is from an order vacating and setting aside the default of defendant—an order made before the entry of any judgment in the action. It was dismissed from the bench upon the ground that such orders are not appealable.

Appellant, petitioning for a rehearing of the motion to dismiss, earnestly contends that in taking the appeal he followed a rule of practice established by the decision of this court in Gibson v. Superior Court, 83 Cal. 643, 24 Pac. 152. It is true that in that case the court, speaking of an order setting aside a defendant's default, said that it was an "appealable order." The expression was careless and inaccurate, and in the connection in which it was used meant no more than that it was an order reviewable on appeal from the judgment, and was for that reason not reviewable in certiorari; that being the point to be decided. Certainly it is not true that an order setting aside a default in an action, where no judgment has been entered upon the default, is the subject of a separate appeal. It is in no sense an order after judgment, and it is not one of the interlocutory orders enumerated in section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It may be that it would be a more convenient practice if an appeal were allowed from such orders, but the Legislature has not so provided.

Rehearing denied.

Ex parte YOUNG. (Cr. 1,452.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 6, 1908.)

1. STATUTES (§ 63*)—EFFECT OF INVALIDITY—ORDINANCES.

A county ordinance, enacted under the provisions of a void statute, is invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 63*; Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 47.]

2. COUNTIES (§ 55*).

A county ordinance, regularly passed and promulgated by the board of supervisors in conformity with the requirements of County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 452, c. 277) for ordinances of boards of supervisors, is not invalidated by its recital of its adoption under the unconstitutional section 13 of the same act (page 454), providing for the adoption of ordinances by direct vote of the people; the recital being merely surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

3. COUNTIES (§ 55*)—POWERS OF BOARD OF SUPERVISORS—POWER TO ADOPT ORDINANCES—ORDINANCES PROHIBITING LIQUOR BUSINESS.

A board of supervisors of a county has authority to prohibit the business of selling liquor, independent of County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 454, c. 277) § 13, attempting to confer on the electors power to adopt ordinances.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

4. EVIDENCE (§ 387*)—COLLATERAL ATTACK ON ORDINANCES.

The record of a public body, required by statute to be kept in writing, cannot be contradicted by oral evidence; and hence, where the record shows that an ordinance was duly adopted by a board of supervisors itself, it cannot be shown in collateral proceedings, by affidavits of members of the board, that the action of the board simply proclaimed the adoption of the ordinance by the people.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 1702; Dec. Dig. § 387.*]

5. COUNTIES (§ 55*)—ORDINANCES—POWER TO PROHIBIT LIQUOR BUSINESS.

A county ordinance prohibiting the keeping of any place where liquor is sold was not invalid, as applied to one engaged in the business of growing grapes for the manufacture and sale of wine and who had large quantities of wine on hand when it was adopted, as being in conflict with the general laws promoting the viticultural industry, and hence was authorized by Const. art. 11, § 11, authorizing counties to make such police regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Counties, Dec. Dig. § 55.*]

6. EMINENT DOMAIN (§ 63*)—COMPENSATION—PROHIBITION LAWS.

A county ordinance prohibiting the business of selling intoxicants is not invalid, as taking property without just compensation, though it prohibits the sale of liquor then owned and practically destroys its value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Eminent Domain, Dec. Dig. § 63.*]

7. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 295*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—DEPRIVATION OF PROPERTY—EXERCISE OF POLICE POWER—PROHIBITION LAWS.

A county ordinance prohibiting the business of selling intoxicants is not invalid, as depriving the owner of property without due process of law, though it prohibits the sale of liquor then owned and practically destroys its value.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Constitutional Law, Cent. Dig. § 841; Dec. Dig. § 295.*]

In Bank. Habeas corpus by Joseph Young against Theo. Lacy, sheriff of Orange county. Writ dismissed, and petitioner remanded to custody.

C. W. Pendleton, for petitioner. S. M. Davis, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. The petitioner was convicted of maintaining, in the county of Orange, a saloon where intoxicating liquors were sold, contrary to the provisions of ordinance 49 of that county entitled: "An ordinance prohibiting the business of selling * * * intoxicating liquors within the county of Orange," etc., and sues out this writ, under which he attacks the validity of said ordinance and the legality of his imprisonment upon conviction for a violation of it.

The validity of this same ordinance was heretofore presented for determination to the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District at the instance of one George Yung, convicted under it, and who likewise questioned its validity upon habeas corpus proceedings. That court held the ordinance valid, and, as far as the objections which were there urged are concerned, we think, correctly so. Application of George Yung on Habeas Corpus (Cal. App.) 94 Pac. 594. The present petitioner makes the same points here against the validity of the ordinance as were urged there, with some additional ones.

The principal claim made as to its validity is that it was passed and enacted under the provisions of section 13 of the county government act of 1897 (St. 1897, p. 454, c. 277), which in the case of Ex parte Anderson, 134 Cal. 69, 66 Pac. 194, 86 Am. St. Rep. 236, was declared to be unconstitutional by this court. If this were true, the ordinance, of course, would be invalid. But we are satisfied that upon the record before us it appears otherwise. The section of the county government act in question contemplated the framing of an ordinance by the people of the county to be submitted to the voters thereof for their adoption, and if a majority were in favor of it, and upon a canvass of the vote by the board of supervisors it so appeared, that that fact was to be proclaimed by the board, and the ordinance would then have the same force and effect as though adopted and ordained by the board of supervisors itself. This is the only action on the part of the board which the section required where the voters themselves selected and adopted the ordinance. The board was not required to pass or adopt it. It only proclaimed the fact that the electors had done so. It appears, however, from the record before us, that the board of supervisors not only proclaimed the fact of the adoption of the ordinance by the electors, but proceeded further and regularly passed and adopted the ordinance as an ordinance of the board of supervisors, and duly published it in the manner that the law required ordinances passed and adopted by the board to be published. Their action was of a dual effect. They proclaimed the ordinance as adopted by the electors, and further passed and adopted it as an ordinance of the board itself.

It is true that, following the enacting clause of the ordinance, which is in the form prescribed by section 26 of the act as the enacting clause of ordinances passed and adopted by the board itself, there is the recital "as an ordinance of the county of Orange under and in accordance with the provisions of section 13 of an act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of county and township governments,' approved April 1, 1897, it is ordained as follows," the various sections of the ordinance being set forth. It is insisted that, from the reference to the provisions of section 13 in the above recital accompanying the passage of the ordinance, the board must be deemed to have passed it solely by reason of its adoption by the electors and in conformity therewith, notwithstanding that the formalities prescribed for the adoption of ordinances by the board itself were followed. We cannot agree with this reasoning of petitioner. There can be no question but that the board of supervisors, independent of section 13, attempting to confer on the electors the power to adopt an ordinance of this character, had authority itself to pass such an ordinance, and that the ordinance in question was passed and adopted in all respects so as to fully exercise that power. Under such circumstances it is of no moment that the board, while exercising its unquestionable power and in the prescribed way, misrecited the source from which such power was derived. It was not necessary to the validity of the ordinance that the board should have at all stated therein the source from which it derived its authority to enact it. There is no provision of law in this state requiring that this be done. It is sufficient that the power to do so exists, and the validity of an ordinance is not affected by the fact that the ordinance incorrectly states a source of power, as long as the power to enact is given. All the reference to section 13 of the act is in the title to the ordinance following the enacting clause. There is no statute which requires ordinances of the board of supervisors to be entitled. Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 421, 44 Pac. 725, 32 L. R. A. 527. So that, entitling the ordinance being unnecessary, the entitling portion, with its reference to section 13 must be treated as mere surplusage. See, as discussing these propositions, with a citation of authorities in support of them, Matter of George Yung, supra.

In addition to the point made against the validity of the ordinance in the District Court of Appeal in the George Yung matter, it is claimed to be shown here, by certain affidavits accompanying the petition for the writ which were not presented on the Yung hearing, that as a fact the ordinance was not passed by the board of supervisors as a separate and independent proposition, but the action of the board was directed solely to the adoption of the ordinance as adopted by the electors under section 13 of the county government act. These are affidavits of three out of five persons who were members of the board when the record of the proceedings of that body shows that the ordinance was passed, and in which they state that the only vote of the board was as to proclaiming the fact of the adoption of the ordinance by the voters, and that no separate or independent vote of the board was taken in adopting said ordinance as an ordinance of the board itself. But the record of the proceedings of the board shows directly to the contrary—that the ordinance was passed and adopted by the affirmative vote of every member of the board. The attempt is by the affidavits to contradict that record—a record of a public body which is expressly required by the statute to be kept in writing and to show by parol evidence that its recitals are untrue. That may not, however, be done. This attack on the record, it is to be observed, is being made in a collateral proceeding, and extrinsic evidence is not admissible in such a proceeding to control or contradict the record. As said in Dillon on Municipal Corporations (4th Ed.) § 299: "Parol evidence in a collateral action cannot be received to contradict the record of a public corporation required by statute to be kept in writing, or to show a mistake in matters as therein recorded." See, also, Mayhew v. of Logansport v. Crockett, 64 Ind. 319; Weir District of Gay Head, 95 Mass. 129; City v. State, 96 Ind. 311. The wisdom of this rule is illustrated in this very proceeding, because countervailing affidavits of the two other members of the board and the then district attorney of the county were filed on behalf of the respondent. The affidavits of the members of the board state that, in addition to proclaiming the adoption of the ordinance by the electors, it was deemed best by the members of the board to pass and adopt it as an ordinance of the board, and it was accordingly unanimously done. The affidavit of the district attorney was to the effect that, being in doubt as to the validity of the ordinance as adopted by the voters, he advised the board to pass and adopt it as an ordinance of the board, and the board unanimously did so.

In his traverse to the return of respondent, petitioner set forth that he had for many years been engaged in the business of growing grapes for the manufacture of wine, and manufacturing it; that at the time the ordinance was passed he owned and possessed great quantities of wine, which he had then on hand and has now, and which under the terms of the ordinance he is prohibited from selling, and is thus deprived of his property; that the ordinance thus operated as a taking of his property for the benefit of the public without just compensation and without due process of law, and for these reasons it is violative of the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution and of sections 1, 13, and 14 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state; that the ordinance is also in restraint of trade, because it discourages the carrying on in this state of the important industry of viticulture and the manufacture of wines and brandies.

As far as the objection is concerned that this ordinance is in restraint of trade, or, in other words, in conflict with the general laws promoting and fostering the viticultural industry of this state, which is really the ground of petitioner's complaint, that point is disposed of adversely to him in Ex parte Campbell, 74 Cal. 20, 15 Pac. 318, 5 Am. St. Rep. 418, where a similar proposition was under consideration. This being true, the county of Orange could constitutionally pass "all such local, police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws." Const. art. 11, § 11.

Section 2 of the ordinance in question provides that it shall be unlawful for any person "to keep, maintain or carry on * * * within the county of Orange * * * any tippling house, dramshop, cellar, saloon, bar, barroom, sample room, or any other place, by whatever name known, where vinous, spirituous, distilled, malt, mixed, or other intoxicating liquors are either directly or indirectly sold, given away, or otherwise disposed of." It was upon a complaint drafted in the language of the section that petitioner was convicted and sentenced. This quoted provision of the ordinance is directed solely to prohibiting the selling or dispensing of intoxicating liquors in any tippling house, dramshop, saloon, barroom, or other kindred place, "and that the power to license or regulate tippling houses is a constitutional right, which may be enforced as a police regulation through proper legislation, is no longer an open question." Ex parte Campbell, supra.

Nor is legislation of this character subject to the constitutional objections that the person is thereby deprived of his property without just compensation and due process of law. As said in Black on Intoxicating Liquors, p. 115, § 83: "The most serious and weighty objections to the validity of prohibitory legislation have been such as regarded its effect upon rights and property in existence at the time of its enactment. Such a law, as a rule, saves no privileges previously acquired, makes no exception in favor of the disposition of liquor existing in the state at its passage, and although it practically destroys the value of such liquor, as also of breweries and distilleries then in operation, yet provides no compensation for their owners. Yet it is settled by the immense preponderance of authority, that if a state, by statute or constitutional provision, entirely prohibits the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors within its jurisdiction, such enactment is not constitutionally objectionable on the ground of its 'depriving' persons affected of their 'property without due process of law,' notwithstanding its effect may be to destroy a business theretofore lawful, and seriously to impair the value of property held at the time and adapted to the continuance of such business, and that without compensation. Though some slight doubt of the correctness of this view was expressed in some of its earlier decisions, the Supreme Court of the United States has now explicitly adopted it, and the question must therefore be regarded as finally put at rest."

The cases which counsel cites in support of his constitutional objections to the ordinance are the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which the author in the quotation just made refers to. The later decisions of that tribunal are against the contention of petitioner and conform to the statement contained in the quotation from Black. Some of these cases are Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 6, 32 L. Ed. 346. In the Mugler Case, first cited, in discussing this question, the court said: "It is true that, when the defendants in these cases purchased or erected their breweries, the laws of the state did not forbid the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. But the state did not thereby give any assurance, or come under any obligation, that its legislation on that subject would remain unchanged. Indeed, as was said in Stone v. Mississippi, 101 U. S. 814, 25 L. Ed. 1079, the supervision of the public health and the public morals is a governmental power, continuing in its nature, and 'to be dealt with as the special exigencies of the moment may require,' and that 'for this purpose, the largest legislative discretion is allowed, and the discretion cannot be parted with any more than the power itself.' So in Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 32, 24 L. Ed. 989: 'If the public safety or the public morals require the discontinuance of any manufacture or traffic, the hand of the Legislature cannot be stayed from providing for its discontinuance by any incidental inconvenience which individuals or corporations may suffer.'"

There are no other points in the case which require consideration.

The writ is dismissed, and the petitioner remanded to custody.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 5, 1908.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 622*)—TRANSCRIPT—TIME TO FILE—COURT RULES.

Under court rule 2 (78 Pac. vii), providing that, when a party appealing from a judgment has given notice of motion for a new trial before perfecting the appeal, the time to file the transcript in the Supreme Court does not begin to run until the motion has been disposed of, the time for the filing of a transcript on appeal in any proceeding in which a new trial is authorized does not begin to run until the motion for a new trial has been disposed of.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2732-2735; Dec. Dig. § 622.*]

2. NEW TRIAL (§ 2*)—CAUSES IN WHICH AUTHORIZED.

A motion for a new trial does not lie in proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1465, 1466, to set apart a homestead, or exempt personal property, or for family allowance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see New Trial, Cent. Dig. §§ 4, 5; Dec. Dig. § 2.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 624*)—PERFECTING APPEAL—FILING TRANSCRIPT—TIME.

Where a motion for a new trial does not lie, the pendency of proceedings preparatory to such motion does not extend the time for the filing of the transcript in the appellate court.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2737-2742; Dec. Dig. § 624.*]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 628*).

Where counsel for appellant did not claim to be ignorant of decisions of the Supreme Court that a motion for a new trial does not lie in that proceeding, nor assert that the failure to file the transcript on appeal was due to a belief that the time did not begin to run until after his proposed motion for a new trial was disposed of, the pendency of the motion did not excuse lack of diligence in filing a transcript.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 2750-2764; Dec. Dig. § 628.*]

5. EVIDENCE (§ 178*)—BEST EVIDENCE—JUDGMENT—DESTRUCTION—EFFECT.

Orders of the court, though destroyed, are effectual; for, after proof of destruction, the contents may be established by any competent secondary evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Evidence, Cent. Dig. § 583; Dec. Dig. § 178.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 543*)—PREPARATION OF RECORD—DUTY OF APPELLANT.

One appealing from orders which have been destroyed must restore the same, as authorized by St. 1906 (Ex. Sess.) p. 73, c. 55, so as to furnish the court with a copy of the orders, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 951.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. § 2411; Dec. Dig. § 543.*]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 787*)—WANT OF PROSECUTION—DISMISSAL.

Appeals from orders in the settlement of an estate were perfected in January, 1906. The records in the cause were destroyed in April following. On March 16, 1908, a petition for the restoration of the records was filed by appellant, who offered no excuse for the delay, though he could have proceeded at any time to restore such records. No transcript was on file in June following, when a motion to dismiss the appeals was heard. Held that, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 57, providing that appeals in probate cases shall have precedence, the delay required dismissal of the appeals.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Appeal and Error, Cent. Dig. §§ 3129, 3130; Dec. Dig. § 787.*]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco.

In the matter of the estate of Franklin Heywood, deceased. From orders in proceedings to set apart a homestead, exempt personal property, and for family allowance. Agnes B. Heywood appeals. On motion to dismiss appeals for want of prosecution. Appeals dismissed.

See, also, 84 Pac. 834.

J. B. Reinstein and W. P. Johnson, for appellant. Timothy J. Lyons, Powell & Dow, Mr. Sullivan, and Theo. J. Roche, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Motion to dismiss three several appeals for want of prosecution. On November 18, 1905, in the estate of Franklin Heywood, deceased, the superior court made three orders whereby it denied the respective applications of Agnes B. Heywood, widow of said deceased, to have a probate homestead set apart to her, to have the exempt personal property set off, and for a family allowance. There were three separate petitions, but all of them were tried together. From each of these orders the widow appealed to this court. The appeals were perfected on January 15, 1906. No transcript on either appeal has ever been filed in this court, nor has the clerk of the superior court been requested to certify to any such transcript. The notices of the motions to dismiss the appeals were given on March 6, 1908. Rule 2 (78 Pac. vii) of this court requires the transcript on appeal to be filed in this court within 40 days after the appeal is perfected, except in certain specified cases. Unless these appeals come within the exceptions, or unless good cause for the delay is shown, the appeals must be dismissed as provided in rule 5 (78 Pac. viii).

1. Rule 2 (78 Pac. vii) provides that, "when a party appealing from a judgment has given notice of motion for a new trial before perfecting said appeal," the 40 days does not begin to run until the motion has been disposed of. In each of these cases the appellant, before perfecting her appeals, had duly given and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial, proceedings under these notices of intention are still pending, and the motion for a new trial has neither been decided nor dismissed. If the notice of intention to move for a new trial is to be considered as the "notice of motion for new trial," mentioned in rule 2 (78 Pac. vii), and a new trial is authorized in such proceedings, it would follow that the appellant's time for the filing of transcript on appeal has not yet begun to run, and the motion to dismiss the appeal, in that event, should be denied.

But it is settled by the decisions of this court that a motion for new trial does not lie in proceedings under sections 1465 and 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure to set apart a homestead, or exempt personal property, or for family allowance. In Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614, 29 Pac. 235, the widow filed a petition in the matter of the administration of her husband's estate, asking for a family allowance. Written objections to the allowance asked for were filed. The issues were tried, findings made, and an order entered granting the allowance. It was held that the Code did not authorize a motion for a new trial in such cases. In Shipman v. Unangst, 150 Cal. 425, 88 Pac. 1090, the widow filed a petition asking that a probate homestead be set apart to her, with certain property exempt from execution, and a family allowance. The children of the deceased filed written contests to the petition, and issues thus raised were tried by the court. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made in favor of the widow, and an order was made accordingly. It was held, following Leach v. Pierce, supra, that a motion for new trial was not a proper procedure to review the order. The rule laid down in these cases determines the question in the case at bar. There being no authority for a motion for a new trial after such orders, it follows that the pendency of proceedings preparatory to such motion would not bring this case within the exception of rule 2, nor extend the time to file the transcript.

2. We do not think the appellant has shown good cause for the long delay, or reasonable diligence in the prosecution of the appeals. The case of Leach v. Pierce, supra, was decided in the year 1892, and that of Shipman v. Unangst on February 5, 1907. Appellant's counsel do not claim to have been ignorant of these decisions, nor do they say that the failure to file any transcript on the appeals was due to a belief on their part that the time therefor would not begin to run until after their proposed motion for new trial was disposed of. The pendency of the attempt to obtain a new trial, under these circumstances, does not excuse or justify the lack of diligence.

A proposed bill of exceptions, which we may presume could have been used on the appeal, was served on the respondents' counsel in March, 1906. It was not settled at the time of the great fire of April 18, 1906, in which all the official records in the cause were destroyed. The proposed bill, however, was not destroyed; but the settlement thereof was delayed until January 5, 1907. Perhaps the general disturbance following the great disaster of April, 1906, may be a sufficient excuse for this delay. In order to present the appeal to this court, it would be necessary for the appellant to furnish the court with a copy of the orders appealed from. Code Civ. Proc. § 951. To enable them to do this it was deemed necessary to have a copy of the orders restored to the record, in order that the clerk might certify thereto. The act of June 16, 1906 (St. 1906 [Ex. Sess.] p. 73, c. 55), authorizes a proceeding to that end. No such proceeding was inaugurated until March 16, 1908, almost two years after the record was destroyed. The principal reason upon which counsel found their claim of an excuse for the delay in filing the transcript is that the record had not been restored, and that the delay in restoring it was caused by the conduct of counsel for the respondents.

Upon the hearing it was argued that it was the duty of the respondents to restore the record, and that until they did so the appellants were justified in delaying the prosecution of the appeal. This contention is unfounded. The orders, although destroyed, were nevertheless valid and effectual. After proof of destruction, any competent secondary evidence would be admissible to prove their contents. Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 19; Estate of Warfield, 22 Cal. 64, 83 Am. Dec. 49. The statute of 1906 itself recognizes the admissibility of such secondary evidence, as there would be no other means of proving the record proposed to be restored. The respondents, therefore, could rely upon the orders as they stood, and were under no absolute necessity to have the record restored in order to preserve their rights. The appellant was endeavoring to overthrow those orders, and a restoration of the record thereof was by her considered necessary to enable her to do this. The duty was on her to effect a restoration of the records if she would escape the responsibility for unreasonable delay in the prosecution of her appeals. The final question, therefore, is, has she been sufficiently diligent in seeking such restoration, or, if negligent, is her neglect excusable?

It appears that the only copy of the respective petitions and objections thereto filed in court, constituting the pleadings in the matters, saved from the fire, was a copy in possession of Agnes Maud Lyons, a daughter of the deceased, and a respondent herein. On October 3, 1906, her attorney, Lyons, delivered these papers to Mr. Johnson, one of the attorneys for appellant, in order to enable him to frame copies of the findings and decrees to be used in procuring an order restoring the records, and Johnson then agreed that he would proceed immediately in the matter of such restoration. He had conducted the trial of the cases, and, being thus familiar with the facts, the drawing of new findings and decrees would not be a matter of much difficulty, and should not have required many hours of his time, with the aid of these papers. He did nothing whatever in the matter. Appellant's counsel, in their affidavits, say that on the occasion of the settlement of the bill of exceptions, in January, 1907, Mr. Dow, one of respondents' counsel, agreed that he would prepare these decrees and orders, and that from that time until December, 1907, they were depending on him to do so. Dow and Lyons each denies the making of this agreement. Their denials are corroborated by the admitted fact that the copies above mentioned were not then given to Dow, but were retained in the possession of Johnson. This is inconsistent with the existence of agreement that Dow should prepare the drafts. Dow would need the papers in Johnson's possession to enable him to redraft the findings, and yet Johnson did not then deliver them to him, but kept them until after the filing of notice of motion to dismiss the appeals on March 16, 1908. Appellant's counsel admit that in December, 1907, they ceased to rely on Dow for the preparation of these new findings and orders. No explanation or excuse whatever was offered of the fact that Johnson retained the only copy of the pleadings in existence, nor of the delay and failure from January to December, 1907, to turn them over to Dow, while at the same time relying on Dow to draw anew the findings and awaiting his action in the matter, when he must have known that Dow could not proceed without them.

Nor is any sufficient excuse offered for their delay in proceeding in the matter after December, 1907, when they ceased to rely on Dow, until March 16, 1908, when the petition for restoration of the records was at last filed by them. It thus appears that the delay from January, 1907, to March 16, 1908, was really caused by the inaction of counsel for appellant. Although they had it in their power at any time to proceed to restore the records, and although it was their duty to do so, nothing effective was done in the matter until after they were served with notice of motion to dismiss the appeals. The appeals had then been pending for more than two years, and even at the time of the hearing of these motions, on June 1, 1908, no transcript was on file, and the best showing counsel could make was that a petition to restore the record had been filed in the superior court on March 16, 1908, that the matter had been postponed by that court from time to time, and was still pending and undetermined. The statements in the affidavit of appellant's counsel indicate that during the entire two years of their delay it was their practice to give all other business coming to their office precedence over the business of preparing the papers for these appeals, and we are constrained to believe that this is the principal cause of the delay. The policy of the law favors the speedy settlement of the estates of deceased persons, so much so that the Legislature has provided that appeals to this court in probate cases shall take precedence over all other cases except those to which the people of the state are parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 57. That this is a wise policy no one will deny. The continued delay that has taken place in this case in the prosecution of appeals of this character should not be encouraged or tolerated.

It is ordered that the appeals be dismissed.

1. WITNESSES (§ 237*)—EXAMINATION—QUESTIONS ASSUMING FACTS IN ISSUE.

On trial for embezzlement, where it appeared that it was the duty of accused, as assistant cashier, to make deposits of his employer's money and to make duplicate deposit slips, one for the bank and the other for his employer's cashier, and that he made a slip for the cashier as evidence of a day's deposit, which was for a larger amount than the one he presented to the bank, which showed the sum actually deposited, and that the larger amount was entered by him in the pass book, a question asked a witness, whether, when he or his employes took the money to the bank, he or they made the entry in the book, was not improper, as assuming that the money had been delivered to accused.

The deposit slips in accused's handwriting and a leaf from the pass book with his entry thereon were admissible to show that accused actually had in his possession his employer's money to the larger amount specified for deposit, and to show the manner of perpetrating the crime.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Frank A. Carlson was convicted of embezzlement. From the judgment, and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Charles M. Ackerman, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. Defendant was accused by information of embezzling a sum of money from William Randolph Hearst. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. From the judgment pronounced thereon, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

The first point presented is that the court in propounding a question to a witness, assumed a fact in dispute, which, being an infringement of the jury's province, prejudiced defendant. Defendant effected the embezzlement while assistant cashier of a newspaper owned by Hearst, through the manipulation of certain deposit slips and pass book entries. It was a part of his duty to make deposits in bank of the moneys belonging to Hearst, and to make out in duplicate deposit slips, showing the items and amounts of the daily deposits—one of these slips for delivery to the cashier of the newspaper, and the other to present to the bank in connection with the money for deposit. Defendant accordingly made out Exhibit A, showing a deposit of $2,037.19, and the items entering therein, which he gave to his superior as evidence of that day's deposit. He, however, when making the deposit at the bank, substituted another slip, which showed only $1,537.19, and this latter amount only he deposited; but defendant, in his own handwriting, entered in the pass book an amount corresponding with the slip left with the cashier of the newspaper. The question asked by the court was in connection with previous evidence in relation to such entry in the bank book, and was: "I want to know, when you took, or your employes took, that money to the bank to deposit, any of you people made the entry in the book." There was no objection urged to the question, and we are unable to discern its objectionable character.

The question did not involve any statement or assumption that the money in question had been delivered to defendant. These deposit slips, in defendant's handwriting, and a leaf from the pass book, with the entry thereon above specified, in defendant's handwriting, were admitted in evidence, and, in our opinion, were competent, in connection with other evidence tending to show that defendant actually had in his possession, as the property of Hearst, the larger amount specified for deposit, and as tending to show the manner employed by defendant in the perpetration of the crime.

There was ample evidence, properly received, showing that a crime had been committed by some one, and therefore the admissions and confessions of defendant, made voluntarily, were properly received in evidence; and, altogether, the record discloses with unusual clearness the fact of defendant's guilt as charged.

There is nothing in the record to prejudice defendant, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Plumas County; J. D. Goodwin, Judge.

Action by Frank F. Peck against M. J. Noee and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James T. Boyd, A. N. Salisbury, and H. B. Wolfe, for appellants. L. N. Peter, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from the judgment upon the judgment roll alone. The action is by the plaintiff for himself, and as assignee of 27 other persons, against the appellants, as stockholders of the Hathaway Mill & Lumber Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Nevada and doing business in California, to enforce their alleged liability, as such stockholders, to the plaintiff as a creditor of the corporation. The only question presented for consideration on the merits of the case is whether or not the stockholders of a corporation organized in Nevada are individually liable, under the laws of California, for the debts of the corporation incurred in doing business in California.

The complaint alleges that the Hathaway Mill & Lumber Company is, and has been, ever since May 5, 1903, a corporation, created under the laws of Nevada, that during all that time it had been doing business in the counties of Plumas and Sierra in this state, and that the several debts sued on were contracted in this state during that period. These allegations, and indeed all the allegations of the complaint, were admitted. As an affirmative defense, the defendants alleged that the Constitution of the state of Nevada contained the following provision: "Dues from corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law: Provided, that corporators of corporations formed under the laws of this state shall not be individually liable for the debts or liabilities of such corporations." The finding is that this allegation is true. In addition thereto, however, the court found that said Hathaway Mill & Lumber Company was organized on May 6, 1903, "under and by virtue of that certain act of the state of Nevada, and entitled 'An act providing a general corporation law, approved March 16, 1903' (Laws 1903, p. 121, c. 88) for the purpose and with the intention of doing business in the counties of

Plumas and Sierra, state of California." Other findings were made, to the effect that the appellants Noee and Ramelli were, at the time the corporation was organized, and ever since have been, residents of Plumas county, Cal., that they were the original organizers and corporators of said corporation, and that, when the debts sued on were incurred, they were directors thereof, and, respectively, secretary and vice president. The respondent claims that these findings bring the case within the principle laid down by the United States Supreme Court in Pinney v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 145, 22 Sup. Ct. 52, 46 L. Ed. 125, and are sufficient to support the judgment. The preliminary objection of the appellants that these findings are outside of the issues and must be disregarded is untenable. The complaint stated a good cause of action to enforce a stockholder's statutory liability, if the laws of Nevada on that subject are the same as our own. Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 323. It contained no allegation as to the effect of the laws of Nevada. "The courts of a country are presumed to be acquainted only with their own laws. Those of other countries are to be averred and proved, like any other facts of which courts do not take judicial notice." Norris v. Harris, 15 Cal. 254, quoting Monroe v. Douglass, 5 N. Y. 452. "Where a party seeks to either recover or defend under a foreign law, such law must be pleaded and proved like any other fact." 9 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 542; Roots v. Merriwether, 71 Ky. 400; Kan. Pac. R. Co. v. Cutler, 16 Kan. 568; O'Sullivan v. Griffith (Cal.) 95 Pac. 875, and cases there cited. The courts of this state take notice of its own laws, and, as above stated, in the absence of plea or proof to the contrary, presume that the laws of other states are the same. A good cause of action was therefore set forth in the complaint, on its face. The defendants were required to plead and prove the laws of Nevada as an affirmative defense, if they claimed they were exempted thereby from the operation and effect of the laws of this state. This they did in their answer. There is no provision for a reply in our system of pleading, and the statement of any new matter in the answer is "deemed controverted" by the plaintiff. Code Civ. Proc. § 462. This is held to allow proof by the plaintiff, without pleading the same, of any affirmative matter in avoidance of the new matter pleaded in an answer. Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 433, 51 Pac. 630; Wixson v. Devine, 67 Cal. 345, 7 Pac. 776; Curtiss v. Sprague, 49 Cal. 301; Colton v. Raynor, 57 Cal. 588. The question whether or not facts existed which would make the affirmative defense pleaded in the answer unavailing was therefore an issue raised by the law upon the answer, and a finding of such facts was clearly within the issues of the case. We do not wish to be understood as conceding that the appellants are in a position to make this objection. It appears to be established that, where the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone, or where it appears that no objection was made to the admission of evidence of a fact, and the trial was had upon the theory that the fact was in issue, the objection that the finding of fact was outside of the issues will not be considered on appeal. McDougald v. Hulett, 132 Cal. 163, 64 Pac. 278; Krasky v. Wollpert, 134 Cal. 343, 66 Pac. 309; Beardsley v. Clem, 137 Cal. 332, 70 Pac. 175; Ill. T. & S. Bank v. Pacific Railway Co., 115 Cal. 285, 47 Pac. 60; Sukeforth v. Lord, 87 Cal. 399, 25 Pac. 497; Moore v. Campbell, 72 Cal. 251, 13 Pac. 689; Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 10 Pac. 186.

We take the finding above quoted to mean that the articles of incorporation of the Hathaway Mill & Lumber Company declared that it was the purpose of the corporation to do business in California. It is not claimed that this is not its meaning and effect. Under these circumstances the case of Pinney v. Nelson, supra, is controlling to the effect that the liability of stockholders, individually, to the creditors of the corporation, for debts incurred by the corporation in doing business in California, is governed by the laws of California on the subject. That case involved a stockholder's liability, under California law, for debts of a corporation organized in Colorado, and declaring in its articles that it was organized to do business in the state of California. The court said (page 147 of 183 U. S., page 54 of 22 Sup. Ct. [46 L. Ed. 125]): "Passing to a consideration of the stockholders' contract in the light of the other contention, it may be said that ordinarily it is controlled by the law of the state in which the incorporation is had. That is the place of contract, and, generally, the law of the place where a contract is made governs its nature, interpretation, and obligation. While this is so, it is also true that parties in making a contract may have in view some other law than that of the place, and when that is so, that other law will control. That the parties have some other law in view, and contract with reference to it, is shown by an express declaration to that effect. In the absence of such declaration it may be disclosed by the terms of the contract, and the purpose with which it is entered into." On page 151 of 183 U. S., page 55 of 22 Sup. Ct. (46 L. Ed. 125), the court states its conclusion in the matter thus: "When a corporation is formed in one state, and by the express terms of its charter it is created for doing business in another state, and business is done in that state, it must be assumed that the charter contract was made with reference to its laws; and the liabilities which those laws impose will attend the transaction of such business." These principles clearly show the liability of the defendants here and fully sustain the judgment of the court below.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 133*)—IRRIGATION—APPROPRIATORS—RIGHTS

Decedent having posted notices of appropriation of water for an irrigation project, he and his associates could proceed under such notices to perfect their rights so as to make them valid against all others, excepting those with prior and superior rights to the water.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 110*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—FACTS SHOWING RELATION.

Decedent posted notices of appropriation of water intending to acquire a partly completed irrigation canal, and use it in distributing the water appropriated. Being without sufficient means, he interested defendants; it being agreed that a corporation should be formed to carry on the enterprise. Decedent conveyed all his rights to defendants in trust, to be conveyed by them to the corporation on its formation. Afterwards one of the defendants obtained individually a lease on the canal, and posted notices of appropriation substantially covering decedent's notices. Held, that decedent and defendants were partners in the enterprise until the formation of the corporation, and that defendants were trustees of the partnership, holding, as such, the rights conveyed by decedent.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 110.*]

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 133*)—LOCATION—IDENTITY.

Notices of appropriation of water posted within 200 feet of the place where decedent posted his, both apparently being intended for an extensive irrigation project, were in substantially the same place.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 133.*]

5. TRUSTS (§ 108*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—IRRIGATION PROJECT—EVIDENCE.

Decedent posted notices of appropriation of water intending to acquire the C. canal, a partly completed irrigation canal, for use of distributing the water appropriated. Being without sufficient means, he interested defendants; it being agreed that a corporation should be formed to carry on the enterprise. Decedent conveyed all his rights to defendants in trust, to be conveyed by them to the corporation on its formation. The contemplated corporation was not organized, and defendants, to defraud decedent, organized another corporation and acquired independent rights, including a lease of the canal. One of defendants and the corporation posted notices of appropriation at substantially the same place where decedent posted his. Decedent's administrator sues to establish a trust in the property, for an accounting, etc. Held, that he could show that the corporation excavated a canal extending from where its notice was posted to the upper end of the C. canal and completed the C. canal; that the C. canal district owned a strip of land extending from the upper end of the canal to the river, and covering decedent's water location, as well as the later locations by defendants and the corporation, and that the land was included in the lease; that one of defendants, when negotiating for the lease, said that he could and would acquire decedent's right for use in connection with the canal, and that those rights were necessary to the scheme he proposed to carry out because they were superior to the right of the irrigation district, and that he intended to post new notices of appropriation to protect those rights, and the administrator could also show the extent and value of the C. canal, notice to the corporation of decedent's rights and of his interest in common with the defendants, and the time elapsed since the district had done any work under its irrigation scheme or toward the completion of the canal; that the corporation paid the rent reserved in the lease; and that the line of the proposed canal described in decedent's appropriation notices was identical with the line of the C. canal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; H. M. Albery, Judge.

Action by B. De La Beckwith, Byron D. Beckwith's administrator, against Willard M. Sheldon and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

A. L. Shinn, J. W. Dorsey, R. M. F. Soto, S. C. Denson, and Ernest M. Weyand, for appellant. Chas. L. Donohoe, Frank Freeman, F. H. Gould, and Morrison & Cope, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendants. The appeal was taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment and the evidence is presented by a bill of exceptions.

We are of the opinion that certain findings are contrary to the evidence, and that the court below erred in excluding evidence offered by the plaintiff. To get a clear understanding of the matter, it will be necessary to state as briefly as possible the facts alleged in the complaint.

Prior to November 30, 1901, the Central Irrigation District, a district organized under the act of March 31, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 254, c. 189), was the owner of a large canal some 40 miles in length, extending from a point near the northern side of Glenn county into the county of Colusa. It is not alleged, but it appears from the evidence offered and excluded, that this canal was not connected with the Sacramento river at its upper end, that it was not completed for its entire length, and that it had been constructed at an expense of several hundred thousand dollars. The canal was so situated that it could be used in distributing water from the Sacramento river to irrigate many thousand acres of land situated in Glenn and Colusa counties, west of the Sacramento river. We will hereafter refer to it as the "Central Canal." On November 30, 1901, the plaintiff's intestate, Byron D. Beckwith, posted three notices of appropriation of water, each for a flow of 150,000 inches, measured under a 4-inch pressure, of the waters of the Sacramento river, and had the same duly recorded, each stating that it was his purpose to divert the waters of said river at the point where the notice was posted, and distribute the same over a large part of the lands on the west side of the Sacramento river in the counties of Glenn, Colusa, Solano, and Yolo. It was the purpose and plan of said Beckwith to acquire the said Central canal, and the other property connected therewith, and use the same in the distribution of the water appropriated, by making a connecting canal extending from the proposed place of diversion to the upper end of the said Central canal. Within 60 days thereafter he commenced excavation on the proposed canal, and thereafter prosecuted the same with diligence. Plaintiff had not sufficient means to carry out this large enterprise, and, in order to secure assistance therein on September 20, 1902, he entered into an agreement with the defendants Willard M. Sheldon and J. D. Schuyler, whereby they were to become interested in the said property and enterprise. This agreement provided that the said parties should within 60 days form a corporation, to be known as the Sacramento Canal Company, with $1,000,000 capital stock; that Beckwith should thereupon convey to said corporation all water appropriations made or owned by him of the waters of the Sacramento river, and all rights of way and canals in which he had any interest connected with or to be used in connection therewith; that work was to be commenced at once toward obtaining rights of ways and selling water rights, and that Sheldon and Schuyler would furnish funds therefor and for all other necessary purposes in carrying on and operating the proposed corporation; that Beckwith was to receive $10,000 and one-third of the capital stock of the corporation as compensation for conveying said property to the corporation; and that each party was to be employed by the said corporation while they remained stockholders therein. At the same time Sheldon and Schuyler advanced to Beckwith $400 as a part of the money due him under the contract, and Beckwith executed to them a deed, conveying to them all of his water rights and other property referred to in the contract in trust, to be by them conveyed to the said corporation as soon as the same was formed. Thereupon Sheldon and Schuyler took charge of the Beckwith rights, and on January 12, 1903, they obtained a lease from the Central Irrigation District to Sheldon for the period of 50 years of all the said Central canal and the property connected therewith. They did not organize a corporation under the name of the Sacramento Canal Company. On February 20, 1903, Sheldon, Schuyler, and others incorporated the Central Canal & Irrigation Company for the purpose of securing in its name the water rights and properties of Beckwith, and in pursuance of said purpose Sheldon and Schuyler secured in the name of said corporation rights of way and other property for the formation of the irrigation system, including the rights of way and property of Beckwith aforesaid. On February 22, 1903, Sheldon posted two notices of appropriation of water of the Sacramento river, each for 5,000 cubic feet per second thereof, at substantially the place where Beckwith had previously posted one of his notices, and for the appropriation of substantially the same water previously appropriated by Beckwith. This was done fraudulently for the purpose of acquiring an independent claim or right to the said appropriation and water rights. Sheldon and Schuyler thereupon represented that they would not be able to carry out the original contract according to its terms, because it was necessary to interest other persons therein and to give such other persons a larger interest therein than the original contract contemplated. In consequence of these representations Beckwith and the said defendants on April 8, 1903, executed another contract. This contract provided that the prior contract of September 20th should be canceled and annulled, that Sheldon and Schuyler should proceed to organize the corporation to be named the Sacramento Canal Company, and should cause it to issue bonds not exceeding $1,000,000, bearing interest at 5 per cent.; that all the water rights, rights of way, and all other things held by either of the parties thereto, or in their interest, connected with the said canal scheme, should be by them conveyed or transferred to said corporation when organized; and that thereupon Beckwith should receive for the property which he should thereby convey to said corporation the sum of $50,000 in said bonds at par, which should be in full payment and satisfaction of all his rights and demands upon the corporation, or upon the other parties to the contract, or upon the property so to be conveyed to said corporation. It will be noted that at that time Sheldon apparently still held the lease of the Central canal and a claim to water under his notices of appropriation of February 22, 1903. This contract was executed by Sheldon and Schuyler without any intention of performing the same. They wholly and entirely refused to comply with said contract or any part thereof, and did not at any time organize any corporation as provided for therein, but they secured in their own name and in the name of the Central Canal & Irrigation Company valuable rights of way, easements, and property connected with and necessary to the said proposed enterprise, and made numerous contracts for rights of way and for the distribution of the water to be diverted from the river in the name of the Central Canal & Irrigation Company, and made conveyances or agreements for sale of the water to be diverted by them through the canals of the said Central Canal & Irrigation Company. On October 28, 1903, the Central Canal & Irrigation Company posted at about the same point as that at which the plaintiff's notices of appropriation were posted another notice of appropriation of water of the Sacramento river, to be used for the same purposes, claiming 5,000 feet thereof per second. The defendants Sheldon and Schuyler deny that plaintiff has any right or interest in any water of the Sacramento river, and they have failed and refused to deliver to Beckwith any of the bonds provided for in the contract of April 8th. All the acts which they have done, as alleged, were done with the intent to cheat, wrong, and defraud the plaintiff. The Central Canal & Irrigation Company acquired its water rights; they being substantially the same as those possessed by the plaintiff, with full knowledge of the plaintiff's rights and interests therein as proposed in the original enterprise or scheme. The prayer of the complaint is that the property so alleged to be held by the defendants be decreed to be held by them and each of them in trust for the plaintiff, for an accounting of all property and profits received by defendants, that plaintiff recover $50,000 as damages, and for general relief. There are other more specific prayers which need not be mentioned.

The court found that the notices of appropriation posted by Sheldon on February 22, 1903, were not posted at substantially the same point as the notices of location posted by Beckwith on November 30, 1901, and that Sheldon's notices were not made for the purpose of acquiring claims or rights to water independent of those of Beckwith. It also found that no confidential or fiduciary relation at any time existed between Beckwith on the one hand and Sheldon and Schuyler on the other, and that the appropriation of water attempted to be made by Beckwith in 1901 lapsed and became void within 60 days thereafter, because Beckwith failed to proceed with due or proper diligence in constructing the work for the diversion of the water claimed therein.

There was evidence tending to show that Beckwith's work in pursuance of his notices of 1901 was not of sufficient magnitude and was not prosecuted with sufficient diligence to comply with the requirements of the statute. Hence, if Sheldon and Schuyler, or the Central Canal & Irrigation Company, did not stand in confidential relations to Beckwith with respect to these appropriations, and were in a position to act entirely independent of him, it may be that they could have made other locations in substantially the same place and for the same purpose without being answerable therefor to Beckwith. But the finding that there were no confidential relations existing between Beckwith, Schuyler, and Sheldon was directly contrary to the evidence. Beckwith had posted his notices of appropriation claiming water, and was proceeding with some degree of diligence to do the work required by the statute. The evidence clearly shows that he began the work before the 60 days had elapsed. By entering into the contract with him, Schuyler and Sheldon recognized that he had some rights in the matter, and they agreed to act in concert and harmony with him, and to assist him in carrying on the large enterprise which he had conceived and brought to their attention. He had conveyed to them all rights which he possessed under his notices. It does not appear that any other person then claimed the right to divert the same water. So long as third persons did not intervene, there can be no doubt that Sheldon, Schuyler, and Beckwith could go on under the Beckwith notices, and, by proper steps, could perfect their rights so as to make them legal and valid against all third persons, except, of course, those having prior and superior rights in the waters of the river. Schuyler and Sheldon had received this conveyance, and had agreed to hold the said rights and convey the same to the contemplated corporation when it was formed. Subsequently Sheldon obtained a lease of the Central canal, a canal some 40 miles in length, and that lease must have had considerable value. He also posted notices of appropriation practically at the same point as that at which the notices of Beckwith were posted, and whatever rights he may have had under that notice were also of some value. Both of these rights he agreed by the contract of April 8th to convey to the proposed corporation, "The Sacramento Canal Company." Under these circumstances there can be no question but that the three parties were, in substance and effect, at least until conveyances were made as provided in the contract of April 8th, copartners in the enterprise of inaugurating and carrying out the proposed scheme for the diversion and distribution of the water of the Sacramento river for irrigation over the large territory available therefor, and that Sheldon and Schuyler were also trustees of Beckwith and the partnership, holding as such the water rights conveyed to them by Beckwith. Stewart v. Douglass, 148 Cal. 514, 83 Pac. 699. Confidential relations therefore did exist between them.

The finding that the location of the notices posted by Sheldon and by the Central Canal & Irrigation Company was not substantially in the same place as those posted by Beckwith is also contrary to the stipulation which should have been admitted. It showed that one at least of the Beckwith notices was posted within less than 200 feet of the place where one of the notices of Sheldon and the notice of the company were posted, both being posted in the same place. Plaintiff also offered to prove that the company excavated a large canal beginning at the point where its notice was posted and extending to the upper end of the Central canal, and also completed the latter canal by connecting the disconnected parts thereof, and began the distribution of water upon a large scale, and this evidence should have been admitted. The purpose of Beckwith in posting his notices was to obtain water of the Sacramento river, and to divert it at a point where it would be practicable to carry it from the river into the said canal of the Central Irrigation District, and to use the said canal as a part of the proposed irrigation system to carry water to the lands proposed to be irrigated. The exact point at which the diversion was to be made was not important. The main object of the scheme was to obtain a large quantity of water of the river, carry the same into the said Central canal, which was only a few miles away, and distribute the same to a certain territory. It is perfectly clear from the evidence that the appropriation intended to be made by the defendants was for precisely the same purpose, and was made at a point fully as convenient, but no more so, for conducting the water into the former canal as that of Beckwith. It is also plain that the water which they intended to appropriate was the same water as that which Beckwith intended to appropriate, and that their appropriations were made upon the supposition that his rights had lapsed, and that they were at liberty to entirely disregard his rights and obtain the same water indirectly by means of another appropriation. Under these circumstances, in view of the relations between the parties, the slight difference between the proposed places of diversion is not important or material, and it would not be true that the diversion was not made at substantially the same place as that intended by Beckwith.

Evidence was offered by the plaintiff to the effect that at the time of the execution of the lease from the Central Irrigation District to Sheldon the district owned a strip of land extending from the upper end of the Central canal to the river and covering the site of the Beckwith water locations, as well as that of the later locations of Sheldon and the canal company, and that said land was consequently included in the lease. The exclusion of this evidence was error. The property leased, aside from the canal itself, was described in general terms as "all real property owned by" the district in connection with its canal. It was proper, therefore, to show by proof that the general description contained in the lease included this particular property, and that this property included the sites of the several water locations. The theory of the plaintiff was that Sheldon had obtained this lease for the benefit of the three parties to the contract of September 20, 1902, and held it in trust for use in the common enterprise in which they were engaged. It was important, therefore, to show what property the lease included, and its location with respect to the general design. The evidence offered would also tend to prove that the new water locations were made in aid of the common plan, and not antagonistic thereto. For like reasons the court should have admitted the proof of the declarations of Sheldon at the time he was negotiating for the lease, including his bid therefor, to the effect that he could and would acquire the Beckwith water rights for use in connection with the Central canal, and that those rights were necessary to the scheme he proposed to carry out, because they were superior to the right of the irrigation district, and that he intended to post new notices of appropriation in order to protect those rights. Evidence should have been admitted in regard to the extent and size of the Central canal and its value. Such facts would show the magnitude of the enterprise and the reasons for the desire of Beckwith to obtain assistance therein. While not very important, this would throw some light on the purposes, motives, and intentions of the parties. The evidence tending to show notice to the Central Canal & Irrigation Company of the right of Beckwith and of his interest in common with Sheldon, and the evidence to show the time that had elapsed since the Central Irrigation District had done any work in the prosecution of its irrigation scheme, or toward the completion of the Central canal, should also have been admitted. The proof of payment by the Central Canal & Irrigation Company of the rent called for by the lease to Sheldon should have been allowed. It tended to show, what seems to have been disputed, that that company took over the lease soon after its organization, that this was the purpose of Sheldon when that company was organized, and that it was really the corporation contemplated by the original contract, although it was given a different name. The difference of the name would be of no importance if it were in fact intended to serve the same purpose. The court should also have allowed plaintiff to prove that the line of the proposed canal described in Beckwith's appropriation notices was identical with the line of the Central canal.

Certain other persons, parties defendant, filed general demurrers to the complaint, which the court sustained, and thereupon rendered judgment in their favor. The complaint alleges that each of them claims some right, estate, and interest in the property which the plaintiff claims is held in trust for his benefit, but that said claims were without right. They were therefore proper parties defendant in the action, in order that their interests may be bound by the judgment. The demurrers should have been overruled. There was no demurrer for uncertainly or ambiguity. It is probable that the failure of the court below to perceive the relevancy of the evidence excluded was due to the vagueness, ambiguity, and lack of coherence in the complaint. It should be amended and the facts stated more directly and clearly and in more orderly fashion.

We do not think it necessary to discuss the other alleged errors.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.; HENSHAW, J.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Anton Besold was convicted of murder in the second degree, and, from a judgment of conviction and from an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Sturges, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SLOSS, J. The defendant, charged with the murder of Cladie Besold, was found guilty of murder of the second degree. His motion for a new trial was denied and judgment of imprisonment for life followed. He appeals from the judgment, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

He also seeks to appeal from an order denying his motion for a postponement of the trial. The Code does not authorize an appeal from this order. An order denying a motion for a continuance is reviewable on appeal from the judgment, but to obtain a review of such order it is necessary to incorporate the motion, evidence and ruling, in a bill of exceptions. Pen. Code, § 1173, subd. 2, and section 1174; People v. Buck, 151 Cal. 667, 91 Pac. 529. The record before us does not include any such bill, and therefore presents no basis for reviewing the action of the trial court in refusing to postpone the trial.

The following statement of the evidence produced at the trial, while not exhaustive, will suffice to illustrate the points raised by the appellant. Some time in August, 1906, one Horton, while walking up Temescal canyon, near Santa Monica Beach, in Los Angeles county, saw a small piece of red silk lying in the path. On looking into the neighboring bushes, he found the corpse of a woman lying some five or six feet from the path. The body was removed to Santa Monica, where an inquest was held. It was evident that death had preceded the discovery of the body by a number of days. The flesh on the head and hands had decayed or dried, and the body was badly decomposed. In the skull were two holes, one on the left side and the other on the right, each being a little above and forward of the ear. They were holes which might have been caused by the entrance and exit of a bullet, and in fact a 38-caliber bullet, fitting the smaller hole, was found in the skull. It had apparently fallen back after piercing the skull and entering the scalp, its force being then spent. A wound of the character indicated by the condition of the remains would cause immediate death. A careful search of the place where the body was discovered disclosed no firearm or other weapon. By means of the clothing found upon the body, and evidence of disease in some of the bones, the body was identified as that of Mrs. Cladie Besold, the wife of the defendant. Dr. N. J. Brown, a physician of Los Angeles, testified that he had attended her professionally on July 9, 1906. He never saw her after that time. Mrs. Besold had an appointment with Dr. Brown for the 11th day of July, 1906, at 10 o'clock in the morning. She did not appear, but at about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of that day the defendant came to Dr. Brown's office in a condition of apparent excitement, and told the doctor that Mrs. Besold could not come that day for treatment, and that she had left Los Angeles for San Francisco, intending to stop at Summerland, near Santa Barbara, on the way.

On the evening of July 11th the defendant came to D. R. Cameron's store in Los Angeles to open a box which he had left there. He brought a trunk containing clothing which he said belonged to his wife, and stated to Cameron that his wife had gone to "Summerville, or Riverside, or somewhere." On the 13th he told Cameron that he had telegraphed to his wife, and was going to start to join her the next day. On the 19th or 20th of August he returned, and told Cameron that his wife was in West Virginia, and was getting along very nicely.

Mrs. Nobman was a friend of the Besolds, and lived in San Francisco. On July 23d she received from the defendant a letter, in which, under date of July 20th, he said: "I know you was waiting for a letter from Cladie. It is only bad news I can write you. You know she was very sick, and when we go down to Los Angeles, she got worse all the time until July 11th, and I said it was her last, called the doctor to the house, but it was too late, and she was buried last Friday at St. Bernardino." On August 7th Besold visited Mrs. Nobman, and spoke of his wife's death, saying that she had hastened her end by drinking to excess.

Mrs. Ethelin Chaffin had charge of a rooming house in which Besold and his wife lodged in June and July, 1906. On the 11th of July, 1906, as the defendant and Cladie Besold were leaving the house, the latter said to Mrs. Chaffin, in the hearing of Besold, that they were going to the beach for the day. Mrs. Chaffin never saw Cladie Besold again. The defendant returned the same evening, between 5 and 6 o'clock, and said he expected a telegram from his wife; that she had gone to Summerland.

Besold was arrested in Washington, D. C., on the 21st day of September, 1906. In his possession were various articles of jewelry which had belonged to Cladie Besold. He told the arresting officer that his name was Anton Oerter. Subsequently he said that his wife had gone to New Mexico; that she had left him, and he did not know what had become of her.

W. A. White, the sheriff of Los Angeles county, and one of his deputies, went to Washington to bring Besold back for trial. On the return journey they questioned the accused, and he stated that his wife had left him and had gone to Summerland, and that he did not know what had become of her. He said he had never had a gun; that the gun belonged to his wife. The deputy sheriff asked him, "Why did you take your wife up in that lonely canyon and kill her?" to which he replied, "Sheriff, if you have any heart, don't ask me. She makes me trouble when she is alive, and now she makes me trouble when she is dead." It appeared that on August 26, 1906, the defendant was married by a justice of the peace to a Mrs. Pickett.

This recital of the testimony is a complete answer to the claim that the evidence failed to show that the defendant committed the crime of which he was convicted. The finding of the dead body of Cladie Besold, with a bullet hole through the skull, together with the testimony of experts that a bullet piercing the head of a person in the manner indicated by the condition of the remains would cause death, was certainly persuasive evidence that Mrs. Besold's death had been caused by a gunshot wound. The fact that no pistol or other firearm was discovered in the neighborhood of the corpse clearly tended to show that the wound had not been self-inflicted. Nor was there any lack of testimony tending to prove that the injury resulting in death had been inflicted by the defendant. He had been seen with the deceased on the morning of July 11th. At that time she had declared in his presence that she was going with him to the beach. She was never again seen alive, but her dead body was found near the beach. Within a couple of days of the 9th of July, we find the defendant stating to various persons that she had gone to Summerland. A little later he declares that she had died and been cremated. With her clothing and jewelry in his possession, he departs from the state, and, on being arrested, states that she is alive, and had left him. In the meanwhile he has contracted another marriage. His statements regarding his wife are confused and contradictory, and all are contrary to the established facts. Furthermore, some of his statements to the officers who were bringing him back from Washington were almost tantamount to a confession. All of these circumstances combined to make out a case which the jury was justified in finding to be inconsistent with any rational hypothesis other than that of defendant's guilt.

What has been said covers the point that the court erred in admitting evidence of inculpatory statements of the defendant, because, as is claimed, the corpus delicti had not been established. Before any of the rulings complained of had been made, the people had proved the finding of the dead body of Cladie Besold, in a condition and under circumstances which warranted, if they did not compel, the inference that her death had been caused by the violent act of some person other than herself. Undoubtedly the prosecution is bound to offer evidence which tends to show the commission of a crime, and the want of such evidence cannot be supplied by proof of extrajudicial confessions or admissions of the defendant. People v. Simonson, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440; People v. Ward, 145 Cal. 736, 79 Pac. 448. But here, without considering any statement of the defendant, the evidence referred to fully established the corpus delicti; that is, it tended to show that the person alleged to have been murdered had come to her death, and that her death had been caused by criminal agency. As we have observed, this necessary proof was made before the admission of evidence of any statement of the defendant. Such is ordinarily the proper practice. We are, however, not to be understood as holding that a mere variation in the order of proof would be prejudicial to the defendant. People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 Pac. 698; People v. Fallon, 149 Cal. 287, 86 Pac. 689.

There was no error in admitting in evidence, over the objection of the defendant, the garments found on the person of the deceased. It is said that these articles were not shown to be in the same condition in which they had been when taken from the body. Such changes as may have taken place were fully explained. With this evidence of the nature and extent of the alterations, the jury could determine the condition of the clothing at the time the body was found. The ruling attacked was correct. Ezell v. State, 103 Ala. 8, 15 South. 818; Wynne v. State, 56 Ga. 113; Boucher v. Roberson Mills, 182 Mass. 500, 65 N. E. 819; Levy v. State, 28 Tex. App. 203, 12 S. W. 596, 19 Am. St. Rep. 826. The same considerations apply to the admission in evidence of the skull of the deceased.

Among the instructions to the jury was the following: "A person must be presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and must also be presumed to intend all the natural, probable, and usual consequences of his own acts. Therefore, when one person assails another violently with a dangerous weapon, likely to kill, and which does in fact destroy the life of the party assailed, the natural presumption is that such assailant intended death, or other great bodily harm, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, this presumption must prevail. The willful use of a deadly weapon without excuse or provocation, in such a manner as to imperil life, generally indicates a felonious intent." We perceive no sound basis for objecting to this instruction. It correctly states the law. People v. Newcomer, 118 Cal. 263, 50 Pac. 405. Nor can it be justly said to have no application to the case at bar. If the jury believed that the defendant had assailed Cladie Besold with a dangerous weapon, and that she had died in consequence of his act, the intent with which he acted became a material matter for their consideration.

There was no error in charging the jury that "proof of motive is not indispensable to a conviction." People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 208, 48 Pac. 75. People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 72 Pac. 965, relied on by appellant, merely holds that the court did not err in refusing to charge that "absence of motive is in favor of the defendant." This was held to be an instruction on a matter of fact and properly refused on that ground. The same cannot be said of the instruction given here.

A part of the definition of murder of the first degree is criticised. If the language used by the court was erroneous, the defendant was not harmed thereby, since he was convicted of murder of the second degree only. People v. Ryan (Cal.) 92 Pac. 853;

People v. Green, 1 Cal. App. 432, 82 Pac. 544.

The court instructed the jury that, "in determining the intention of the defendant at the time of the transaction complained of, it is important to consider the means used to accomplish the killing. The intent or intention is manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense, and the sound mind and discretion of the accused." It is argued that this instruction assumed as a fact that the defendant had in fact done the killing. We think the language is not fairly open to this construction. The court was dealing solely with the question of intent as one of the elements affecting responsibility for a homicide, and was declaring the rule which should govern the jury in determining such intent. Other factors going to make up the crime charged were not under consideration at the moment. It is impossible to declare in each instruction the law governing every phase of the entire case. But even if we assume that the charge quoted, taken by itself, involved an assumption that there had been a killing, and that it had been done by the defendant, it will readily be seen, on an examination of other instructions given, that no such intimation was intended by the court, and that the instruction could not have been so understood by the jury. To determine whether or not the law was properly declared for the guidance of the jury we are to look, not to an isolated excerpt from the instructions, but to the charge as a whole. People v. Flynn, 73 Cal. 514, 15 Pac. 102; People v. Tomlinson, 66 Cal. 346, 5 Pac. 509; People v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 401, 36 Pac. 678; People v. Brittan, 118 Cal. 411, 50 Pac. 664; People v. Ah Jake, 91 Cal. 99, 27 Pac. 595; People v. Anderson, 105 Cal. 34, 38 Pac. 513; People v. Winters, 93 Cal. 281, 28 Pac. 946; People v. Leonard, 106 Cal. 302, 39 Pac. 617; People v. Weber, 149 Cal. 345, 86 Pac. 671.

In this case the court impressed upon the jury, by instructions repeated in various forms, the propositions that, in order to justify a conviction, the prosecution must establish beyond a reasonable doubt every element of the alleged crime, and that the defendant was entitled to an acquittal unless his guilt of a crime embraced in the charge, and of every essential element thereof, was established beyond a reasonable doubt. Indeed, the instructions covering these phases of the case were so full and numerous that we cannot undertake to quote all of them at length here. One or two extracts will suffice. Thus, among other instructions, the jury was told that, "although the proof * * * may show certain circumstances beyond a reasonable doubt, yet if, in your opinion, it fails to show any one essential or material element or circumstance of the guilt of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt, then it is your duty to acquit the defendant. Every essential and material link in the chain of evidence, fastening upon the defendant the guilt of the offense charged in the information, must be proved to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt, and if, in your opinion, such proof has not been made, you must acquit the defendant." Again: "You are instructed that, where independent facts and circumstances are relied upon to identify this defendant as the person who committed the crime with which he stands charged, each and every material fact or circumstance which is necessary to complete the chain or series of independent facts tending to establish a presumption of guilt must be established to the same degree of certainty as the main fact." In addition, the jury was instructed specifically that to warrant a conviction it must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, by evidence exclusive of defendant's statements or admissions, that Cladie Besold had been killed, and that she had come to her death by criminal means. This was, in effect, stated at least three times. That the prosecution was required to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, every element of the crime charged, was declared no less than five times. Instructions requiring the jury to acquit upon failure of the prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt a single necessary element of the crime appear in two parts of the charge. The presumption of innocence, as applying to every ingredient of the crime, was fully set forth, as was the right of the defendant to have the evidence construed in his favor, so far as reasonably could be done. Two instructions informed the jury that, where circumstantial evidence is relied on, it must be such as to exclude to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt every reasonable hypothesis but that of the guilt of the defendant. The doctrine of reasonable doubt and the exclusive right of the jury to determine all questions of credibility of witnesses were clearly and amply explained. And, finally, the jury was instructed that, before it could find the defendant guilty, it must "be satisfied and entertain an abiding conviction to a moral certainty that the defendant Besold killed the deceased."

In view of all this, it is impossible to believe that the jury could have understood the instruction complained of as conveying any intimation that the court believed that the defendant had in fact killed the deceased. The instruction, taken together with those referred to, meant no more than that, if the jurors should be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had killed Cladie Besold, they were, in determining the intent with which he had done the act, to consider the means used and other facts shown. As has been suggested, the court was here dealing with the question of intent as affecting the distinction between murder and manslaughter. No juror of ordinary intelligence could have taken this language as meaning that he was not, before voting for a conviction, bound to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had killed the deceased. That he was so bound had been stated and restated with perhaps unnecessary elaboration. In any view that may be taken of the instruction, it must, in order to have any reasonable meaning, be read in the light of the other instructions as hereinbefore indicated.

No other points are argued by the appellant. We find in the record no error affecting him in any substantial right.

The appeal from the order denying a continuance is dismissed. The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

BRADLEY v. ROSENTHAL et al.
(Sac. 1,529.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 16, 1908.)

1. JUDGMENT (§ 695*) — CONCLUSIVENESS — PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

An agent is primarily, and his principal is secondarily, liable for his negligence, and while both may be sued in a single action, exoneration of the agent exonerates the principal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1218; Dec. Dig. § 695.*]

2. INDEMNITY (§ 13*)—AGENT'S NEGLIGENCE—RIGHTS OF PRINCIPAL.

While no right of contribution exists between joint tort-feasors, whether sued jointly or collectively, a principal, who has become liable through his agent's unauthorized negligent act, is entitled to indemnity against him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indemnity, Cent. Dig. § 29; Dec. Dig. § 13.*]

3. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1177*)—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE.

In an action against a person and a company for alleged joint negligence, a judgment for the person and a judgment against the company will be reversed and remanded, the company not being entitled to judgment in its favor, and plaintiff not being entitled to an affirmance, where it appears that any negligence was exclusively the person's, where there was an issue as to the person's agency for the company, and where it cannot be determined whether the verdict for the purported agent was based upon correct or incorrect instructions, since, if the verdict was based upon incorrect instructions, the principal is injured, as the judgment exonerates its agent, from whom it is entitled to indemnity, and if upon correct instructions, the principal is injured, since if the agent was not negligent, the principal was entitled to a verdict.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Personal injury action by M. W. Bradley against F. Rosenthal and the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company. From judgments for plaintiff and defendant Rosenthal, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant company appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Dixon L. Phillips, for appellant. Maurice E. Power, William H. Alford, and G. W. Zartman, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him. In his complaint he set forth that he was employed by the defendants to aid in the construction of a telephone line; that his employment consisted in helping to set up and erect poles, and place thereon wires and other necessary appliances; that the defendants agreed to furnish suitable and proper poles; "that said defendants carelessly, negligently and with want of ordinary care on their part furnished certain poles which were very brittle and unfit for said purposes, and the fact of the unfitness of such poles was known to said defendants at the time they furnished the same, but was unknown to plaintiff." He then alleges that, while in the course of his employment he was in the act of ascending one of the poles in a careful and workmanlike manner, the pole "by reason of its brittleness and unfitness for said purpose broke," and he was thrown violently to the ground, sustaining the injuries for which he seeks damages. The defendants answered separately. Defendant Rosenthal admitted his employment of the plaintiff, but alleged that in so employing he acted solely as the agent of the codefendant telephone company. He denies the furnishing of unfit and unsuitable poles, and in this regard alleged that the plaintiff represented to defendant that he was an experienced and skilled lineman, competent to erect and set up poles for telephone lines, and that the plaintiff, at defendant's direction, himself selected the poles which were used. The telephone company in its answer denied all responsibility for, and participation in, the construction of the telephone line, denied that it employed the plaintiff, denied that it furnished or agreed to furnish suitable or any poles, and denied that it had furnished unsuitable poles. Under the issues thus joined trial was had before a jury. It is to be noted that the plaintiff charges that he was employed by "the defendants," and that the negligence which occasioned his accident and injury was the negligence of the defendants. So far as appears from the complaint, therefore, both of the defendants were principals. As between the defendants, radically different issues were joined, the defendant telephone company denying responsibility for, or participation in, the construction of the telephone line, and denying that it had ever employed the plaintiff; the defendant Rosenthal admitting his employment of plaintiff, but pleading that in employing him he was acting as agent of his principal, the telephone company. Evidence was addressed to these issues. On behalf of the telephone company it was sought to be shown that Rosenthal was building the telephone line upon his own responsibility and not as agent of the telephone company; that his method was to construct such lines in the rural districts at his own risk and cost, and when constructed seek and obtain telephonic connection with the lines of the telephone company. Rosenthal, on the other hand, contended, and introduced evidence to show, that he was building the line for the telephone company, and in managing the work of construction he was acting as its agent. As to the occasion of the accident, it is not disputed that it resulted from the breaking of a telephone pole, the selection of which was not made, nor directly authorized to be made, by the telephone company, and that the selection was made by the defendant Rosenthal. At the request of the defendant Rosenthal the court gave the following instruction: "If you believe from the testimony that F. Rosenthal, acting as agent of the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company * * * employed the plaintiff as a lineman to work for said company, and that he was in the employ of said company at the time of the injury complained of, then in no event can said Rosenthal be held liable in this action; but, should you find in favor of plaintiff, your verdict must be against the Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company only." And again the court charged the jury: "If defendant Rosenthal was the agent of the defendant Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Company, and acting as and in the capacity of agent of said company, employed plaintiff to work on said line and poles, you cannot find or assess any damages against him." The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant Rosenthal, and against the telephone and telegraph company. Judgment was entered accordingly. The defendant telephone company moved for a new trial, which was denied, and it appeals from the judgments in in favor of plaintiff and in favor of Rosenthal, and also from the order refusing its motion for a new trial, serving notice of appeal both upon plaintiff and upon its codefendant.

Appellant argues that the evidence establishes without conflict that if it be responsible at all, it is responsible solely because of the relationship of principal and agent found to exist between itself and the codefendant Rosenthal; that not one word of evidence tends to establish any direct personal participation, personal knowledge, or personal culpability upon its part, or that its employé was in any way carrying out its express instructions in the particular matter, for the doing of which negligence is charged; that under such circumstances the employer is liable only because of the rule of law which holds him responsible, as well for the undirected, as for the directed, act of the agent within the scope of his employment; that in such kind of cases where there have been no express instructions for the doing of the act complained of in the particular way, the principal and agent, master and servant, are not joint tort-feasors as the law employs that term. The employé's responsibility is primary. He is responsible because he committed the wrongful or negligent act. The employer's responsibility is secondary, in the sense that he has committed no moral wrong, but under the law is held accountable for his agent's conduct. While both may be sued in a single action, a verdict exonerating the agent, must necessarily exonerate the principal, since the verdict exonerating the agent is a declaration that he has committed no wrong, and the principal cannot be responsible for the agent if the agent has committed no tort. While no right of contribution exists between joint tort-feasors, whether sued separately or collectively, there exists, in the kind of case here presented, much more than the mere right of contribution. The principal who has been obliged thus to pay for the unauthorized negligent act of his agent resulting in injury may indemnify himself to the full amount against his agent. These legal propositions, it will be seen, receive universal recognition. Applying them to the present case, appellant argues that the verdict of the jury in favor of Rosenthal must be construed as their finding that he was not negligent, and as the appellant could be responsible only because Rosenthal was its agent, the judgment against it must be reversed, and, upon the authority of Doremus v. Root, 23 Wash. 710, 63 Pac. 572, 54 L. R. A. 649, this court should order a like judgment in favor of it. Upon the general question here presented as to the correlative rights of master and servant, principal and agent, to indemnity, Cooley thus clearly enunciates the well-settled principle (1 Cooley on Torts [3d Ed.] p. 255): "A case in point is where a railroad company is made to pay damages for an injury caused by the carelessness of one of its servants. Here the injured party may justly hold both the company and its servants to responsibility; but the actual wrong, so far as it is one in morals, is on the part of the servant alone, and the company is holden only through its obligation to be accountable for the action of those to whom it intrusts its business. As between the company and its servants, the latter alone is the wrongdoer, and in calling upon him for indemnity, the company bases no claim upon its own misfeasance or default, but upon that of the servant himself. On the other hand, suppose the servant be directed by the officers of the company to do a certain act, which it turns out they had no right to do, and for doing which he is made to pay damages. Here, if the act was a plain and manifest wrong, as would be leaving the cars to commit a battery, the servant can have no indemnity, because he must have known the act to be unlawful, but if the act directed was one he had reason to suppose was legal, and he obeyed directions on that supposition, it would ill become the railroad company to demand that he be treated as a wrongdoer when called upon to indemnify him against the consequences of the act its officers had directed. In such a case the servant is not in morals a wrongdoer at all, and his claim to indemnity would be based upon a faithful obedience to orders, which he had a right to presume were rightful, nothing to the contrary appearing." See, also, 9 Ency. of Law & Prac. p. 807; Storey on Agency (9th Ed.) 271; Bailey v. Bussing, 28 Conn. 453; Old Colony R. R. Co. v. Slavens, 148 Mass. 363, 19 N. E. 372, 12 Am. St. Rep. 558; Railway Co. v. Latham, 63 Me. 177; Featherstone v. N. & C. Turnpike, 71 Hun, 109, 24 N. Y. Supp. 603; N. O. & N. E. R. R. Co. v. Jones, 142 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 109, 35 L. Ed. 919; Montfort v. Hughes, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 591; Culmer v. Wilson, 13 Utah, 129, 44 Pac. 833, 57 Am. St. Rep. 713.

Where recovery is sought, based upon the act or omission of an agent which the principal did not direct, and in which he did not participate, where thus his responsibility is simply the responsibility cast upon him by law by reason of his relationship to his agent, the effect of the judgment in favor of and exonerating the agent is learnedly considered in Doremus v. Root, supra. Generally speaking, it may be said that such a judgment in favor of the agent ex propria vigore relieves the principal of responsibility, and may be availed of by the principal for that purpose. Thus in Lake Shore & Mich. So. Railroad Co. v. Goldberg, 2 Ill. App. 228, several defendants had been sued in trespass, and one who had joined in the act of trespass and had acted as the agent of appellant had been acquitted. Appellant had acted only through the agent, and in its own defense offered the judgment of acquittal. The court holding the defense good, said: "But where the real actor, none the less liable personally because acting for another, is not guilty, it necessarily follows that the party for whom he acted cannot be. The principal can be no more guilty by reason of the act of his agent than if he had committed the act in person, and the party who was alone charged to have committed the act in person was conclusively adjudged not guilty. We see no way of escape from our conclusion, and for authority refer to Thomas v. Rumsey, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 26, and Emery v. Fowler, 39 Me. 326, 63 Am. Dec. 627." In Doremus v. Root, supra, the action was brought to recover damages for injury sustained by plaintiff. It was prosecuted against the railroad company, and against Root, the conductor of the company's train. It was charged that the conductor Root did not obey orders, and by his negligence caused a collision. After trial the jury rendered its verdict in favor of Root and against the railroad company. Judgment followed, and the company appealed. The case received elaborate consideration. The judgment in favor of Root was not appealed from. Such being the condition, it was not subject to reversal. The Supreme Court of Washington was compelled to hold that the case was one where the jury had found that the servant, who alone was charged with the culpable act, had committed no wrong, and that of necessity therefore the employer could have committed no wrong. Unable to reverse the judgment in favor of Root, it was constrained to decree the exoneration of the principal. As has been said, the appellant here contends for a like ruling, but in certain vital aspects the case at bar differs from Doremus v. Root. Here an appeal has been taken from the judgment in favor of Rosenthal, and there is no such embarrassment as confronted the Supreme Court of Washington. Upon the other hand, while appellant in seeking a judgment in its favor, is asking more than it is entitled to, respondent in turn makes a like request in arguing for an affirmance of the judgments as they stand. Herein he urges that his complaint charged both defendants equally as joint tort-feasors; that in such a case it is well settled that a verdict may pass for one and against another; that this was the result in the case at bar; that the jury must be held to have followed the erroneous instruction of the court in exonerating Rosenthal, or, in other words, must be held to have determined that Rosenthal was acting as the agent of the telephone company, and that this determination by the jury fixes, at any rate, the liability of the company, and that it can matter not that Rosenthal was, under the erroneous instructions, allowed to escape just liability. But there are many and insurmountable objections to this view. While it is true that the complaint charges both of the defendants as having been culpably negligent, the evidence beyond peradventure established that whatever negligence there was, was exclusively the negligence of Rosenthal, and that it was a negligence not directed nor participated in by the telephone company. Again, the issue of agency or nonagency was in controversy between the parties, and was important, because of the right to indemnification which the principal has for such negligent act of his agent. The effect of the verdict in favor of Rosenthal in a matter thus litigated between the parties would be to bar the principal's right of recovery over. And, finally, this appeal can be denied only upon a declaration by this court that the jury's verdict in favor of Rosenthal was based upon the erroneous instructions. But under the circumstances such a declaration cannot judicially be made. The evidence upon the question of the negligence was conflicting. A counter charge of contributory negligence was also made against the plaintiff, and the jury was properly instructed that if the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, he could not recover, and if the defendants were not guilty of negligence, plaintiff could not recover. Under the evidence presented the jury might have reached the conclusion that the defendant Rosenthal was not negligent at all, in which case it should have rendered a verdict in his favor. If it be said that a jury would stultify itself in holding that an agent was not guilty of negligence, and at the same time holding his principal responsible because of the agent's negligence, and that therefore it must be concluded that the jury followed the erroneous instruction, answer must be made that juries have done precisely this thing, and that the case of Doremus v. Root is a typical instance of it. Judicially, therefore, it cannot be declared whether the verdict of the jury in favor of Rosenthal was based upon the correct instructions given by the court or upon the incorrect ones. If upon the incorrect instructions, then appellant is injured, since the judgment exonerates its agent, from whom it is entitled to seek indemnity. If upon the correct instructions, then also is appellant injured, since, if the agent was free from negligence, the principal was also entitled to the jury's verdict.

For these reasons it is held that the judgment in favor of Rosenthal and the judgment against the appellant must both be, and hereby are, reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

In re MCPHEE'S ESTATE. (S. F. 5,000.)
(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 13, 1908.)

1. STATUTES (§ 117*)—TITLE—MISLEADING TITLE.

The use of the word "alternative" in the title of St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410, entitled "An act to add new sections to the Code of Civil Procedure, providing a new and alternative method by which appeals may be taken," does not render the title misleading, on the ground that the method provided is exclusive, for the act does provide a new method for taking an appeal, which may be substituted, for the existing method.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 117.*]

2. STATUTES (§ 109*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring the subject of every act to be expressed in its title, must be liberally construed, and a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation of the act is to be addressed is sufficient, and the title need not embrace an abstract of the contents of the act.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 136; Dec. Dig. § 109.*]

3. STATUTES (§ 117*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY.

The provisions of St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410, apply to the subject of providing a method by which appeals may be taken, and are within the title thereof, entitled "An act to add three new sections to the Code of Civil Procedure, * * * providing for a new and alternative method by which appeals may be taken from judgments * * * of the superior court * * * to the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal." and the act is not in conflict with Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring the subject of every act to be expressed in its title.

4. STATUTES (§ 60*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY—OBJECTION.

The objection to St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410, providing a new alternative method for taking an appeal, that it repeals, by implication, certain existing provisions as to appeals, and hence contains matter not expressed in its title, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 24, does not merely raise the objection made, the objection being based on a construction of the act, which is not admissible in passing on its constitutionality.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Dec. Dig. § 60.*]

5. STATUTES (§ 60*)—TITLE—SUFFICIENCY—OBJECTIONS.

The claim that St. 1907, p. 750, c. 408, providing for a new and alternative method for the preparation of records, is obscure, ambiguous, and uncertain does not go to the validity of the act, on the ground that the act contains legislation not expressed in the title, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring the subject of every act to be expressed in its title, this being matter of construction, and not affecting the constitutionality of the act.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 316*)—"DUE PROCESS OF LAW"—APPELLATE PROCEDURE—CHANGE.

Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without "due process of law," has no application as to notices of appeals authorized by statute, for the words "due process of law" mean a course of legal procedure according to the rules established for the protection of private rights; and, when a litigant has had his cause determined under the procedure applied to other similar cases, he cannot complain of want of due process of law.

St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410, providing a method for the taking of appeals without requiring service of a notice of appeal, is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no one shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, since the court, before any appeal is taken, has acquired jurisdiction over the parties, and the appeal is but a proceeding in the cause after such jurisdiction has attached.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 316*)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

St. 1907, p. 750, c. 408, providing a method for the preparation of records on appeals, without providing for service of notice, is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

12. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 395*)—UNDERTAKING—NECESSITY.

An appeal taken under a statute, which does not require the filing of an undertaking for costs on appeal, will not be dismissed for the failure of appellant to file an undertaking.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of George S. McPhee, deceased. From a judgment settling the accounts of J. S. Corrigan, administrator, in which Alta McPhee appeared as contestant, the administrator appeals. Motion to dismiss appeal denied.

Thomas, Pemberton & Thomas (Frank P. Deering, of counsel), for appellant. Chas. E. Wilson and J. W. Preston, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal taken by the appellant, as administrator of the above estate, from an order settling his final account. The order of settlement was made January 8, 1908, and the notice of appeal filed March 7, 1908. In taking the appeal and preparing the transcript to be used thereon the appellant proceeded under those certain sections which were added to the Code of Civil Procedure at the last session of the Legislature, and which provided for a new and alternative method by which appeals might be taken, and likewise a new and alternative method of preparing the records to be used on such appeals. The title of the act containing the sections (St. 1907, p. 753, c. 410) providing for such method of appeal is "An act to add three new sections to the Code of Civil Procedure, to be known as sections 941a, 941b and 941c of said Code, respectively, providing a new and alternative method by which appeals may be taken from judgments, orders or decrees of the superior court of the state of California to the Supreme Court or District Courts of Appeal thereof." The title of the act as to the method of preparing the records on such appeals (St. 1907, p. 750, c. 408) is "An act to add three new sections to the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California to be known as numbers 953a, 953b, 953c, relating to a new and alternative method for the preparation of records to be used on appeals from judgments, orders or decrees of the superior court to the Supreme Court or District Court of Appeal." Section 941a, referred to in the title of the act first quoted, provides that "appeals from all judgments, orders or decrees of any of the superior courts of this state reviewable by the Supreme Court or District Court of Appeals may in addition to other modes prescribed by law be taken pursuant to the provisions of the next section." This next section (941b) provides that any person having a right of appeal from any judgment, order, or decree of the superior court may appeal therefrom by filing with the clerk of the court in which the judgment, order, or decree is entered a notice of appeal, which notice may be filed at any time after the rendition of said judgment, order, or decree, but must be filed within 60 days after a notice of the entry thereof has been served on the attorney of record appearing in the case or proceeding. It further provides that "this notice need not be served on any of the parties to the action or the proceeding or their representatives or attorneys, but when filed * * * shall without further action on the part of the appellant transfer the cause for decision and determination to the higher court." The sections referred to in the title of the other act quoted provide for a detailed new and alternative method of preparing records for use on appeal. We do not refer to them at length, because we do not deem their consideration particularly necessary. In taking his appeal appellant proceeded under the new and alternative methods provided for by the sections of the acts referred to. He filed his notice of appeal, but did not serve it on the contestant or her attorney. He likewise had his transcript prepared under the new method provided for doing so, and in due time filed it in this court. The motion of respondent to dismiss the appeal is based principally on the claim that the particular act of the Legislature, providing for a new and alternative method by which appeals may be taken, is void.

It was also set forth in the notice of motion, as one of the grounds upon which a dismissal would be urged, that the transcript on appeal was not properly perfected under the new method providing for its preparation, but on the hearing this claim was, as we recall it, practically abandoned. If not, the point is without merit, as an inspection of the record shows that the transcript properly conforms to all the requirements of the new procedure respecting its preparation. Some criticism is indulged in as to the meaning and construction of the provisions of the act authorizing its preparation, but these matters will be considered in disposing of the principal attack of respondent, which is upon the act providing for the method of appeal as distinguished from the act providing for the method of preparing the record on appeal.

As to the attack upon the act providing for the method of appeal. The particular claim of respondent is that this act is invalid, as violative of article 4, § 24, of the Constitution, which provides that "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." He insists that the title to the act violates this provision because it is misleading, and that the act embraces more subjects than is expressed in its title. It is further insisted that by the provisions of the act respondent is deprived of her property without due process of law. As to the title to the act being misleading. It is the position of counsel that this follows from the use of the word "alternative" in the act, considered in relation to the provisions of the act itself; that the matter of appeal there provided for is not an "alternative" one, but it is intended to be, and is, exclusive. There is nothing in this claim. There was an existing method of taking an appeal when the act was passed, for which the new method might be substituted, if an appellant should elect to do so, as an alternative, and the term was sufficiently clear as indicating the character of legislation intended. Nor is the objection that the act embraces subjects not embraced in its title well taken. It is now well settled that the constitutional provision requiring the subject of the act to be expressed in its title must be liberally construed, and that all that is required to be contained therein in order to meet the constitutional requirement is a reasonably intelligent reference to the subject to which the legislation of the act is to be addressed. It is not necessary that it should "embrace an abstract or catalogue of its contents." People v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 61 Pac. 86; Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73. Considered under this rule, there is nothing in the act itself foreign to the subject of the legislation expressed in its title. All its provisions apply to the subject of providing a method by which appeals may be taken from all judgments, orders, or decrees of the superior court. In fact, when the objection of counsel that the act contains subjects not embraced in its title is considered in the light of the particular matters relied on by him as showing this, it is apparent that the real claim is more as to the effect or construction which is to be given to the provisions than their relation to the title of the act as distinct subjects of legislation. The claim really is that these provisions of the act, in effect, repeal by implication other provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relative to the time when appeals may be taken, and conflict with still other provisions in several respects. But these are matters which have no relevancy to the question of the validity of the act itself. Whether the act in question repealed by implication other portions of the Code or conflicts with them can only be determined when presented in a proper case. The construction of the act can have no bearing on the question whether article 4, § 24, of the Constitution has been violated or not. We look at the title of the act and its provisions to determine whether, under the liberal rule above stated, the latter conform to the subject expressed in the title. If they do, then the constitutional provisions have been followed. As far as the objections urged by counsel are concerned, they only affect the construction to be given to provisions which are all addressed to the subject-matter of the title, namely, the method of taking an appeal. When the provisions are thus pertinent to the title of the act, the constitutional mandate is complied with, and the construction of its provisions, which is a matter entirely aside from the constitutionality of the act itself, must be left until occasion calls for its consideration. In this view respondent's objection to the constitutionality of the act as violating the particular provision of the Constitution relied on is untenable. The same may be said of the objections of respondent to the other act providing a method of preparing the record on appeal. These objections do not go to the validity of the act, upon the score of legislation not expressed in its title. The claim is that the act is obscure, ambiguous, and uncertain; that it is indefinite as to the meaning of certain terms, and as to what is required to be done on the part of counsel, the clerk, and the court in various particulars with respect to the transcript. But these are all matters applying to the construction of the act, with which on this motion we are not concerned.

It is next insisted that the act violates article 1, § 13, relating to "due process of law," because it does not require that the notice of appeal shall be served on him so that he may have his day in court. But this constitutional provision has no application as to notices of appeal. "Due process of law" is law in its regular administration, through courts of justice (2 Kent's Commentaries, 10), and as said by Judge Field, in Pennoyer v. Neff, 95 U. S. 714, 24 L. Ed. 565, of the words "due process of law" when applied to judicial proceedings, "they then mean a course of legal procedure according to those rules and principles which have been established in our system of jurisprudence for the enforcement and protection of private rights." It is the right of any litigant to have his cause tried and determined under rules of procedure the same as are applied to other similar cases, and when this is afforded him, he has no ground to complain that "due process of law" is not being observed. Before any appeal is taken the court has already acquired jurisdiction in the action over the parties by original process, and the appeal is but a proceeding in the cause after that jurisdiction has attached. What the method and procedure in taking an appeal shall be is a matter for determination by the Legislature, and that it can prescribe, in the exercise of its plenary power over the subject, for taking an appeal without any service of the notice thereof is so clear as to admit of no doubt. Counsel for respondent has cited us to no authority which, even by analogy, supports his claim that failure to provide for service of the notice of appeal is not "due process of law." The only cases referred to by him are those of this court, where it is held that the service of notice of appeal was necessary in order to confer jurisdiction upon this court on appeal. But these cases have no bearing on the question here, because heretofore our statute has always required service of the notice, and, of course, when the Legislature prescribes service, it is essential that it be made. None of these cases cited even intimate (and naturally would not, because the question could not be involved) that the Legislature might not, as it has in this act, dispense with service without violating the constitutional provision. Whether service of the notice shall or shall not be made is its province to determine, and no constitutional right of respondent is invaded because it is declared that such service need not be made. The purpose of service could only be to give the respondent actual notice that an appeal had been taken. But as he is constructively in court during the pendency of the action, it was no violation of the constitutional provision to require him to take notice of any such appeal as part of the proceedings in the case. The statute fixed the time in which the notice of appeal might be filed and the respondent could readily ascertain, by examining the records and files of the case in the clerk's office, whether it had been in fact filed. Having notice in law that it might be filed within a specified time, he was bound in law to take notice of its actual filing within that time. What is here said as to the objection of want of service of notice of appeal applies equally to the claim of respondent that the act relative to the method of preparing the transcript is objectionable constitutionally, because it does not provide for service of the notice filed with the clerk that the appellant intends to appeal and requiring that a transcript be made up. His right to the service of notice is no better in the one case than in the other, and he has no constitutional right to have service of it in either.

It is further claimed that the act in question does not provide for an appeal from probate orders. But this claim is answered by the terms of section 941a heretofore quoted, which provides an appeal "from all judgments, orders or decrees of any of the superior courts of this state," etc.

It appears that subsequent to the order settling his accounts the superior court revoked the letters of administration of appellant. Thereafter he appealed from the order of settlement. Respondent insists that appellant had no right to appeal as administrator after the revocation of his letters. This point has no force. The statute confers on the administrator, as such, the right of appeal from an order settling his accounts, and the right to do so cannot be affected by any order revoking his letters. The cases of Kerns v. Dean, 77 Cal. 555, 19 Pac. 817, Ex parte McDermott, 127 Cal. 450, 59 Pac. 783, and Estate of Danielson, 88 Cal. 480, 26 Pac. 505, cited to sustain the position of respondent, are entirely inapplicable. This is so apparent that it would be time ill spent to particularly point it out. Aside from this, the order revoking the letters was itself appealed from.

Nor is there any merit in the point that the appeal should be dismissed for failure of appellant to file an undertaking on appeal for costs. The act under which this appeal is taken does not require the filing of any such bond. It was a matter solely for the Legislature to determine whether it would require such a bond to be given, and it has dispensed with it.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Frank H. Smith, Judge.

Action by the Stockton Automobile Company against Eli Confer and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Budd & Thompson (Buck & Middlecoff, of counsel), for appellants. C. H. Fairall and A. C. White, for respondents.

HENSHAW, J. This action was brought to recover damages for injury occasioned to an automobile belonging to plaintiff. While driven upon the streets of Stockton at night the machine struck a pile of bitumen upon the highway, and was damaged. The board of public works having employed a contractor, John Craven, to build cross-walks of bitumen at the intersection of two of its streets, in the performance of this authorized work he had placed the pile struck by the automobile. The pile was about 2 feet 8 inches in height, sloping toward its sides, and extending from the curb of the street a distance of about 16 feet toward the center, and about the same distance lengthwise of the street. The street was about 60 feet wide. The defendant Confer was a member of the board of public works which awarded the contract, knew of the contract, and was at the same time superintendent of streets. The bitumen had remained in the street for several days before the accident. The accident happened about 2 o'clock a. m. of January 10th. The court found that defendant Eli Confer and John Craven had notice of this obstruction for more than 24 hours before the happening of the accident, and that, notwithstanding the notice and knowledge of the existence of the obstruction, "the deceased John Craven and said Eli Confer failed to make any sufficient provision or take any suitable precaution to protect the public from injury therefrom." Judgment upon these findings passed for the plaintiff, and from that judgment, and from the court's order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, this appeal is prosecuted. The appeal is addressed to two principal propositions: First, that the evidence does not support the finding that the defendants failed to make any sufficient provision, or to take any suitable precaution, to guard or protect by lights or signals, or in any other suitable or sufficient manner, the obstruction of which they had notice; and, second, that as to the defendant Eli Confer the evidence does not support the finding that he had received notice of the existence of the obstruction.

Touching the first proposition, the law of the matter is simple and well settled. An individual who erects an unlawful obstruction to the free use of a highway, in its nature a nuisance, by reason of his wrongful act, is charged in law as an insurer against accident to a person properly traveling the highway and meeting injury by reason of such unlawful obstruction. Barry v. Terkildsen, 72 Cal. 254, 13 Pac. 657, 1 Am. St. Rep. 55; Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 220, 36 Pac. 411, 27 L. R. A. 590; Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 Pac. 220; 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pp. 433, 434. But where the highway is obstructed under license and by authority, the person responsible for such obstruction is chargeable only with ordinary care to see that such obstruction does not become a cause of injury to any person lawfully traveling the highway. If the work upon the highway is of a private nature, usually the person doing the work and the owner of the property are liable. In some cases, not necessary here to consider, an equal liability may be cast upon the municipality or municipal authorities. In the case at bar the work was public work, done by a private contractor, under contract with the municipal authorities. The responsibility of the contractor for any negligence is unquestioned. The responsibility of the street superintendent (and not the municipality) is, in this case, fixed by the provisions of the general street law. Vrooman Act, St. 1885, pp. 160, 161, §§ 22, 23. That act provides as follows: "If, in consequence of any graded street or public highway improved under the provisions of this act, being out of repair and in condition to endanger persons or property passing thereon, any person while carefully using said street or public highway, and exercising ordinary care to avoid the danger, suffer damage to his person or property, through any such defect therein, no recourse for damages thus suffered shall be had against such city; but if such defect in the street or public highway shall have existed for the period of twenty-four hours or more after notice thereof to the said superintendent of streets, then the person or persons on whom the law may have imposed the obligations to repair such defect in the street or public highway, and also the officer or officers through whose official negligence such defect remains unrepaired, shall be jointly and severally liable to the party injured for the damage sustained; provided that said superintendent has the authority to make said repairs, under the direction of the city council, at the expense of the city."

In the exercise of the due care to prevent injury by such obstruction, which the law thus imposes upon the contractor and the superintendent of streets, an obligation arises to erect guards and place lights. When erected, the sufficiency of these barriers or lights or other warning signals is a question of fact for the jury's determination. The authorities are so numerous upon these propositions that a mere citation of a few of them is sufficient: 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, supra; 5 Thompson on Neg. § 5996 et seq.; Raymond v. Keseburg, 91 Wis. 194, 64 N. W. 861; Weirs v. Jones, 80 Iowa, 351, 45 N. W. 883; Campbell v. Fair Haven, 54 Vt. 336; Walker v. Ann Arbor, 111 Mich. 5, 69 N. W. 87; Welsh v. Lansing, 111 Mich. 589, 70 N. W. 129; Klatt v. Milwaukee, 53 Wis. 196, 10 N. W. 162, 40 Am. Rep. 757; Mills v. City of Philadelphia, 187 Pa. 287, 40 Atl. 821; Canfield v. City of Newport (Ky.) 73 S. W. 788; Parker v. City of Cohoes, 10 Hun, 531, affirmed 74 N. Y. 610. It being the duty of the responsible person to see that suitable warnings are erected to guard the public against an obstruction, the next question which naturally arises is that of the duty imposed by law touching the maintenance of such warnings when erected. Upon this subject, too, the authorities are uniform. The rule is stated in Raymond v. Keseburg, supra, as follows: "The true rule is that if a person, whose duty it is to so guard all obstructions lawfully placed in a public street as to prevent danger to persons using such street for travel in the exercise of ordinary care, performs his duty in that regard, by the use of a proper light or otherwise, and the guard, after being properly placed, is removed without fault on such person's part, and a traveler is thereby injured before sufficient time has elapsed for such person, in the exercise of ordinary care, to discover such removal and remedy it, then he is not liable." To the same effect are Canfield v. City of Newport, supra; Dooley v. Town of Sullivan, 112 Ind. 451, 14 N. E. 566, 2 Am. St. Rep. 209; Doherty v. Inhabitants of Waltham, 4 Gray (Mass.) 596; Welsh v. Lansing, supra; Weirs v. Jones, supra; Klatt v. Milwaukee, supra; Parker v. City of Cohoes, supra. Of course, if a suitable warning or barrier has been erected by the contractor in the performance of the work, it relieves the city or other authority from the necessity of taking like precaution, and the city or other responsible person may avail itself, in its defense of the barriers or lights suitable in themselves and properly placed by the author of the danger. Walker v. Ann Arbor, 111 Mich. 1, 69 N. W. 87.

Under these well-settled principles, we come to the consideration of the evidence in support of the finding of the court that the obstruction was not guarded or protected by lights or signals or in any other suitable or sufficient manner. It appears from the evidence that the contractor Craven had been notified to place lights upon the pile. Upon the night of the accident witnesses testified that they saw a light, evidently a lantern, upon the pile. The light was seen between half past 5 and 6 o'clock. It was a single light, located about the middle of the pile of bitumen. It was visible for nearly a block. The light was seen burning by one of the witnesses as late as half past 9 or 10 o'clock, though another of the witnesses testifies that there was no light as late as 8 o'clock, and at the time of the accident it is in evidence, without conflict, that no light was burning upon the pile. It appears, further, that there was an electric light tower with three electric lights upon it situated in the street about 293 feet north of the pile of bitumen, and this light burned through the night. One of plaintiff's witnesses testified that he was at the scene of the accident a few minutes after it happened, and that he could see the pile of bitumen from across the street, a distance of about 60 feet. There was no light upon the pile, and no evidence that a light had been there. He looked for a light. No traces of glass or evidences of a lantern, broken or unbroken, were discovered.

Upon this evidence we are asked to hold that the finding of the court that no suitable or sufficient light or warning had been erected is unsustained by the evidence. But this we may not do. It is not apparent, as appellant argues, that the court held the defendants to the duty of maintaining, as well as providing, suitable lights and warnings. As appellants would construe the finding, it is to the effect that the court declared that suitable lights and warnings were provided and placed, but that they were not maintained, and that defendants were responsible for the failure to maintain them. But such is not the finding. The finding is that suitable lights and warnings were not placed, and to hold that this finding is unsupported would necessitate a declaration, as matter of law, that the single light burning upon an obstruction 16 feet square, upon a street 60 feet in width, was sufficient as a warning light. Generally, as has been said, the question of sufficiency is one of fact, to be left to the jury or judge as the trier of fact, and it would require a clear case to justify a court in holding that a finding as to the insufficiency of a barricade, light, or warning was not supported by the evidence.

It is next contended that the only notice sufficient in law to cast liability upon the superintendent of streets is an actual personal notice, and that such notice was not given. The fact is that the superintendent of streets was not notified personally, but it was proved beyond controversy that notice of the obstruction and of the lack of lights was given by a police officer of the city and by other persons, at the office of the superintendent of streets, to T. C. Poole, his deputy. This deputy made a note in the records of his office of the fact, and instructed an employé to carry word to Craven, the contractor, to provide lights. Craven was notified upon that day by an employé of the office. There was thus established a personal notice, delivered at the office of the superintendent of streets to his deputy in charge, and this notice was acted upon. Of course, if the notice thus given was sufficient, the superintendent of streets was responsible for the failure of Craven to erect suitable warnings, for the duty to do so was equally imperative upon each, and for the failure of either both were responsible. It may be broadly stated that, where a statute or contract requires the giving of notice, and there is nothing in the context or in the circumstances of the case to show that any other form of notice was intended, personal notice will be required. 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 53, and cases. This is true because the law always favors a personal notice, and countenances substituted and constructive notices as matters of necessity or extreme expediency. But the principle is not that personal notice must always be given, but that it must be given where, from the nature of the statute or contract—from the nature of the case, in short—it appears that no other notice is contemplated. Thus in Williams v. Bergin, 108 Cal. 171, 41 Pac. 287, this court had under consideration the provisions of a street law requiring assessments, and it was declared that, upon an appeal by the contractor to the supervisors for an increase of the amount of the lien upon the owner's property, the notice to the owner was in the nature of process by which the board of supervisors acquired jurisdiction to act upon the appeal and change the assessment, and that the notice given must be the notice required by the statute, and it was held that a publication requiring "all appellants" to appear, without specifying the owners of the property, or the defendants against whom the appeal was taken, was insufficient. It is there said that, in the absence of any provision in the statute for the mode of giving notice, it would be necessary that every person who might be affected by the appeal should receive personal notice of the matter appealed from. And this, as to the statute in question, would be a perfectly legitimate construction within the rule as above announced. The notice in that case being in its nature a summons for the determination of a matter affecting private property rights, in all such cases the law is zealous that the notice conveyed by the summons should be personally served, and permits substituted service by publication and deposit in the mail only as a matter of necessity. But here everything that could be done to notify the superintendent was done. He was sought at his place of business during business hours, and, in his absence, his deputy and representative was notified. If such notification, to meet the circumstances of cases such as this, be held insufficient, it would be necessary merely for the superintendent of streets to immerse himself in his private office during business hours, and forever escape the liability with which the law seeks to charge him for the careless or negligent performance of his duties. Such is an unreasonable construction of the law, and we hold that this notice, timely made, at the place of business of the public official, and in his absence to his deputy there representing him, is a notice sufficient under the provisions of the street law.

The court found "that said bitumen was placed and piled upon said street for the purpose of making said cross-walks, but it was not necessary to place or pile the same in the manner or place where the same was piled, and that the placing of said bitumen in said way constituted a defect and an unnecessary obstruction in said street." Upon this finding appellant argues that the case is one where the employer (here the superintendent of streets) is not liable, when the obstruction or defect in the street causing injury is wholly collateral to the contract work, not a necessary consequence of it, but entirely the result of the negligent or wrongful act of the contractor, subcontractor, or his servants; that in such a case the immediate author of the injury alone is liable. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 1029; Robbins v. Chicago City, 71 U. S. 679, 18 L. Ed. 427. But notwithstanding the finding of the court, the case does not fall within the principle to which it is referred. If no notice had been conveyed to the superintendent of streets, an argument might be based upon the proposition that the character of the work done was not inherently such as to cause an obstruction or nuisance in the street, and that he would not be chargeable therefor because such an obstruction was created by the negligence of the contractor as an incident to, and not as a necessary part of, the task to be performed. But the foundation of the action in this case is that the superintendent of streets, after knowledge that the contractor was thus obstructing the street (whether rightfully or wrongfully, necessarily or incidentally, it matters not), failed to see that proper precautions were taken to abate the obstruction, or to warn the public of the danger of its presence.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

CARR v. HOWELL. (L. A. 2,058.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 10, 1908.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 9, 1908.)

1. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 29*)—CONTRACTS FOR SALE OF REAL ESTATE—DESCRIPTION—SUFFICIENCY.

An agreement for the sale of real estate described the same as "56x155 feet to an alley, on the east side of Broadway between Sixth and Seventh streets" in a city named, "and * * * being a part of lot 7 in block 17, Ord's survey." Parol evidence showed that the vendor intended to sell, and the purchaser intended to buy, a certain lot, which was the only property that could answer the description. Held, that the agreement and the parol evidence sufficiently identified the property to authorize specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 73-74; Dec. Dig. § 29.*]

2. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 28*)—CONTRACTS—CERTAINTY.

A contract for the sale of real estate stipulated for a cash payment, and for the delivery of a purchase-money mortgage to secure the payment of notes for the balance of the price. The contract definitely fixed the amount of the notes, the rate of interest they were to bear, the time they were to run, and the rebate to be allowed for payment of mortgage taxes by the mortgagor. Held, that the agreement sufficiently stated the terms of the mortgage to authorize specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. §§ 61-68; Dec. Dig. § 28.*]

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 25*)—CONTRACT—EXECUTION—DELIVERY—"DELIVERED."

A broker, empowered to negotiate a sale of real estate, but not to execute a contract of sale, procured a purchaser, prepared a contract in duplicate, which the purchaser signed, and sent the duplicates to the owner, with the request to sign both contracts and return one for the purchaser. The owner signed both contracts, kept one, retained the money accompanying it, and returned the other contract to the broker. Held, that the contract was executed and delivered within the principle established as to a grant, by Civ. Code, § 1059, declaring that a grant shall be deemed constructively delivered, where the instrument is delivered for the benefit of the grantee, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Dec. Dig. § 25.*]

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 2, pp. 1958-1970; vol. 8, p. 7632.]

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER (§ 32*)—VALIDITY—FRAUD—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to warrant a finding that a contract for the sale of real estate was not procured by the fraud of the purchaser or the broker procuring him.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, Cent. Dig. §§ 38-60; Dec. Dig. § 32.*]

5. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 92*)—PERFORMANCE—DELAY—TIME OF ESSENCE OF CONTRACT.

Where time was not of the essence of a contract for the sale of real estate, a delay by the purchaser, caused by a desire to ascertain whether the owner of adjoining premises, who had taken possession of a strip of the lot purchased, intended to claim the strip, or would yield possession on demand, did not put the purchaser in default, and he could obtain specific performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Cent. Dig. § 242; Dec. Dig. § 92.*]

6. JUDGMENT (§ 570*)—RES JUDICATA—JUDGMENT OF DISMISSAL—EFFECT.

A judgment of the federal court, dismissing an action removed to it, rendered on plaintiff voluntarily asking for the dismissal, while a demurrer to the complaint was pending and undecided, is not a bar to a subsequent suit in any court on the same cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Judgment, Cent. Dig. § 1030; Dec. Dig. § 570.*]

7. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 120*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate, defendant claimed that the contract had been procured by the fraud of her agent and the purchaser, and it was not disputed that the agent had not actually delivered the contract to the purchaser, evidence of the prices offered to the agent by others offering to buy the premises after the duplicate contracts of sale, signed by the purchaser, had been forwarded by the agent to the owner for her signature, was immaterial on the issue of the delivery of the contract to the purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Specific Performance, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

8. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (§ 120*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate, executed by a purchaser procured by a broker employed by the owner, the owner claimed that the contract was obtained by the fraud of the purchaser and broker, evidence whether others, offering to buy the premises after the duplicate contracts signed by the purchaser had been forwarded to the owner for her signature, were authorized by proposed purchasers, able and willing to buy, was irrelevant, the broker not having been informed as to the proposed purchasers.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by J. E. Carr against R. H. Howell, administrator with will annexed of Lelia Bonner Dwyer, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geo. J. Leowy, Hunsaker & Britt, and Valentine & Newby, for appellant. Barker & Bowen, Gray, Barker & Bowen, and J. S. Chipman, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an action to enforce specific performance of an agreement for the sale of real estate, alleged to have been executed to the plaintiff by Lelia Bonner Dwyer in her lifetime. The defendant appeals from the judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying her motion for a new trial.

The first point argued is that the agreement in question is so uncertain, both in the description of the property agreed to be conveyed, and in regard to the terms of the mortgage to be given for the unpaid purchase money, that it is not susceptible of specific performance. The agreement is as follows: "Los Angeles, Cal., March 4, 1905. Received of J. E. Carr the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000) as a deposit and part payment on 56x155 feet to an alley, on the east side of Broadway between Sixth and Seventh streets, in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., and being a part of lot seven (7) in block 17, Ord's survey, which I this day agree to sell and the said Carr agrees to buy, at the purchase price of one hundred thousand dollars, subject to a three year lease containing a cancellation clause in case of sale of said property by me. On or before May 13, 1905, I agree to furnish said Carr a certificate of title by the Title Insurance & Trust Co., of Los Angeles, and upon the delivery of said certificate of title and my deed conveying to said Carr said property free and clear of all incumbrances, the said Carr on or before said date of May 13, 1905, simultaneously with the delivery of said deed and certificate of title, is to make me a further cash payment of nine thousand dollars ($9,000) and is to execute and deliver to me a purchase-money mortgage back on said property securing the payment of six notes in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) each, due on or before one, two, three, four, five and six years, with interest at the rate of nine per cent. per annum, payable annually, with an agreement back from me to rebate three per cent. per annum of said interest if held harmless on all mortgage taxes. Upon the consummation of this contract said Carr hereby agrees to pay Wesley Clark and W. I. Hollingsworth a commission of twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,500). [Signed] Lelia Bonner Dwyer. J. E. Carr." This agreement, reasonably interpreted, describes a lot 56 feet wide and 155 feet long, with side and end lines parallel, and abutting on Broadway street, but it does not clearly show whether it is the side or end lines that abut on the street, nor does it show in what part of lot 7, block 17, it is situated. It is conceded that, without aid from extrinsic facts, the contract is too uncertain in these particulars to be capable of specific performance. The appellant relies upon the rule stated in Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 207, 20 Pac. 389, that "parol evidence cannot be heard to furnish a description. The only purposes for which such evidence can be heard is to apply the description to the subject-matter"—and in Van Slyke v. Broadway Co., 115 Cal. 646, 47 Pac. 690, 928, that "parol evidence is inadmissible for the purpose of altering the legal operation of an instrument by evidence of an intention to an effect which is not expressed in the instrument." The case of Marriner v. Dennison, supra, however, also declares that "the rule as to the particularity of description required in executory contracts to convey is extremely liberal in favor of their sufficiency." The plaintiff in the case endeavored to make the description in the contract sufficient by setting forth at length a correct and complete description of the lot, which it is alleged the parties intended should be described in the contract, and alleged that Lelia Bonner Dwyer at that time owned the particular tract of land described, and that the said parcel was the only parcel of land she then owned situated in said lot 7 of block 17 of Ord's survey, or on the east side of Broadway between Sixth and Seventh streets in the city of Los Angeles. With the aid of these extrinsic facts, which were fully proven by the evidence, and found by the court to exist, the plaintiff claims that the contract was sufficiently certain.

The authorities fully sustain this view. In Hurley v. Brown, 98 Mass. 545, 96 Am. Dec. 671, the agreement declared that the vendor agreed to sell "a house and lot of land situated on Amity street, Lynn, Mass." It was contended that this description was too uncertain to admit of specific performance. Regarding this, the court said: "The presumption is strong that a description, which actually corresponds with an estate owned by the contracting party, is intended to apply to that particular estate, although couched in such general terms as to agree equally well with another estate which he does not own. * * * If the party who enters into the agreement in fact owns a parcel answering the description, and only one such, that must be regarded as the one to which the description refers. With the aid of this presumption the words 'a house and lot,' on a street where the party who uses the language owns only one estate, are as definite and precise as 'my house and lot' would be—a description the sufficiency of which has been placed beyond doubt by very numerous authorities." In this case it was further stated that the fact that the vendor could lawfully make an agreement to sell land which he did not own did not prevent the application of the rule. This case was followed in the case of Mead v. Parker, 115 Mass. 413, 15 Am. Rep. 110, where a similar description was employed under similar circumstances. It may be conceded that the decisions are not entirely harmonious with respect to contracts of this vague character, but in our own state we have followed the rule of Hurley v. Brown, supra. In Preble v. Abrahams, 88 Cal. 246, 26 Pac. 99, 22 Am. St. Rep. 301, Preble and Young agreed to sell to Abrahams "forty acres of the eighty-acre tract at Biggs." There was nothing else in the agreement which served to identify the property intended to be sold. It was shown by the evidence, however, that Preble and Young owned a certain specifically described 80-acre tract at Biggs; that they simultaneously contracted to convey the western half thereof to another party, and the eastern half thereof to the defendant, the two contracts being made with knowledge of all the parties concerned. In respect of this evidence as applied to the contract, the court said: "The evidence clearly shows that the parties perfectly understood that the sale and purchase was not of an undivided interest of 40 acres in a tract of 80 acres, but of 40 acres in severalty. * * * Nothing is made more clear by the evidence than that Mrs. Biggs [the other party], with the full knowledge of all the parties, purchased the 40 acres of said 80-acre tract upon which the improvements were located. This is clearly specified in the written agreement between her and the plaintiffs. They agreed to sell her 40 acres, including the buildings and orchards on the 40 acres, to be taken by her where the houses and barns and orchards were at that time, and the same place on which Mr. Biggs, Jr., and his family were residing. This and the agreement to sell to the defendant were contemporaneous. The defendant, if he agreed to purchase anything, agreed to purchase the 40 acres remaining after the 40 acres purchased by Mrs. Biggs had been segregated from said 80-acre tract." This case has been cited and approved in Towle v. Carmelo, etc., Co., 99 Cal. 398, 33 Pac. 1126, Higgins v. Manson, 126 Cal. 469, 58 Pac. 907, 77 Am. St. Rep. 192, and Brewer v. Horst, etc., Co., 127 Cal. 647, 60 Pac. 418, 50 L. R. A. 240. The case of Towle v. Carmelo, etc., Company also approves the case of Mead v. Parker, supra. Bacon v. Leslie, 50 Kan. 494, 31 Pac. 1066, 34 Am. St. Rep. 134, is a similar case. There the description of the land was as follows: "½ of sec. 7-23-7, and all of sec. 13-23-7, in Sycamore township, Butler county, Kansas." To aid this description, it was alleged and proven that the defendant at the time actually owned the south half of section 7, and that at that date he did not own any other land in that section. Following Hurley v. Brown and Mead v. Parker, the court held that this description, aided by the extrinsic circumstances mentioned, sufficiently identified the property intended to be sold and enforced specific performance accordingly.

The case at bar falls within these rules. Mrs. Dwyer owned no other property which could have answered the description given in the contract. The property which she did own fully answered that description, and it would not be presumed that she intended to sell and convey property which she did not then own. Therefore, for the purposes of specific performance, as that remedy is applied in this state, the description is sufficient. It may be further suggested that the agreement further identifies the property intended to be conveyed by stating that it was subject to a three-year lease, containing a cancellation clause in case of a sale of the property by Mrs. Dwyer, the vendor. There was some indirect proof that the property described in the complaint was covered by such a lease, but the fact was not alleged in the complaint as a matter to be referred to in aid of the description.

In regard to the terms of the mortgage to be given by the purchaser, it is claimed that the agreement does not state what covenants it was to contain. The contract definitely fixed the amount of the respective notes, the rate of interest they were to bear, the time they were to run, and the rebate to be allowed for payment of mortgage taxes by the mortgagor. The notes and mortgage were required to be executed simultaneously with the delivery of the deed, and thus their proper dates were fixed. The fact that mortgages sometimes, or even usually, contain other terms and covenants than those here prescribed does not render the contract uncertain. It merely relieves the mortgagor from the necessity of inserting any covenants which the contract did not specify. There was no uncertainty in the terms and covenants specified in the contract, and the subsequent proceedings showed that the parties had no substantial difficulty in complying with the agreement in this respect.

It is next contended that the evidence fails to show that the contract which the plaintiff seeks to have specifically performed, was ever executed, and the particular in which it is claimed there was a failure of proof is that there was no evidence of an actual delivery to the vendee. The evidence shows the following circumstances with relation to a delivery: Mrs. Dwyer, the vendor, resided in the city of New Orleans. Carr, the vendee, resided in Los Angeles, where the property was situated. Mr. Wesley Clark, a real estate broker in Los Angeles, was the local agent of Mrs. Dwyer, empowered to negotiate for the sale of her real estate in her behalf, but not authorized to execute a contract of sale. One Hollingsworth, who was acting as the agent for Carr, wrote to Mrs. Dwyer in New Orleans, asking her terms for the sale of the property in question. She answered that Mr. Clark was her agent in Los Angeles, and referred Mr. Hollingsworth to Clark for further negotiations. Thereupon, after some talk between them as to price, the agents agreed that Carr would give $100,000 for the property upon the terms mentioned in the written contract sued on. The contract was thereupon drawn in duplicate by Mr. Clark and given to Hollingsworth to procure the signatures of Carr to each copy thereof. This Hollingsworth did, and returned the same to Clark, to be transmitted to New Orleans for the signatures of Mrs. Dwyer. Thereupon Clark sent a letter to Mrs. Dwyer, inclosing the two duplicate contracts, and containing the following statements: "I herewith inclose you contracts of sale with a check of one thousand dollars ($1,000) as a deposit on said contract. Sign both contracts, and let me have one back for Mr. Carr, and also send me the certificate of title which you have by the Title Insurance & Trust Co. on this property, which I will have continued to date, and be ready to close the deal so soon as Mr. Carr is ready. Mr. Carr is putting up a block, and for that reason he is a little shy on ready cash, but he says that he thinks he will have some money within a very short time, and so soon as he does, he will notify me and close the deal up at once, without waiting to the time limit stated in the contract." These papers were received by Mrs. Dwyer at New Orleans, and, after consulting with her attorney there, she signed each copy, retained one of them, and also the check for $1,000, and delivered the other to her attorney, Hill, who by her direction thereupon sent it to Mr. Clark with the following letter from Hill to Clark in Los Angeles: "Your letter and agreement, signed by Mr. J. E. Carr, of date March 4th, came duly to hand. Mrs. Dwyer signed this morning, and requests me to forward the agreement to you, also the certificate of title, which you require. What is the meaning of the 9 per cent. and the clause about mortgage taxes? We do not understand it, but sign, nevertheless, as you seem to approve it. Is there any custom, in sales with notes secured by mortgages, for the purchaser to transfer insurance policies to cover the deferred payments? If so, we should like to get such security in this case." Immediately upon receipt of this signed contract Clark informed Carr that he had the contract, and was ready to close the deal as soon as Carr could perform his part of the contract. Hollingsworth appeared, and asked Clark for the contract, as did also Mr. Barker, the attorney who was acting for Carr in the matter. Clark declined to give them the contract, but did give them a copy thereof, and informed them that he wanted to close up the transaction immediately. Carr notified Clark that he was ready to close the deal, and Clark thereupon prepared a deed to be executed by Mrs. Dwyer, and the form of notes and mortgage to be executed by Carr, and forwarded the deed to Mrs. Dwyer for execution, and the notes and mortgage for the approval of her attorney. Mrs. Dwyer executed the deed as requested, and in about two weeks from the date of the contract sent the deed with the notes and mortgage to a bank in Los Angeles, to be delivered when directed by Mr. Clark. Some negotiations ensued, owing, it appears, to the fact that Clark suspected that Hollingsworth was interested in the purchase, and was unwilling to close the deal unless he had a larger share of the commission than that specified in the contract. It was not contended, however, at any time by Clark, nor by Mrs. Dwyer, that the agreement was not fully executed. Clark finally became satisfied that his suspicion that Hollingsworth had an interest was groundless, and demanded the immediate carrying out of the contract, notifying Carr that unless this was done by 2 o'clock of April 26th, he would direct that the papers be returned by the bank to New Orleans. It will be observed that time was not of the essence of the contract, and that by its terms the parties could offer to perform on or before May 13, 1905. A few minutes after the time specified by Clark in his notice, Carr expressly waived all the objections he had previously made to the title, and offered to perform the contract, tendering the money and the duly executed notes and mortgage, but the offer was refused.

Upon these facts the court found that the contract sued on was duly executed. It is contended that this could not have been so unless there had been an actual delivery of the paper to the vendee, Mr. Carr. This, however, is not necessary in all cases. Civ. Code, § 1059, provides that "though a grant be not actually delivered into the possession of the grantee, it is yet to be deemed constructively delivered in the following cases: (1) Where the instrument is, by the agreement of the parties at the time of execution, understood to be delivered, and under such circumstances that the grantee is entitled to immediate delivery; or (2) where it is delivered to a stranger for the benefit of the grantee, and his assent is shown, or may be presumed." While this section relates by its terms to a grant, we think the principles therein laid down are equally applicable to any contract. The force and effect of the evidence, and the inferences to be reasonably drawn therefrom were for the consideration of the court below. The letter which Clark wrote to Mrs. Dwyer, inclosing the duplicate copy of the contract signed by Carr, contained a request that she should sign both contracts and let Clark have one back "for Mr. Carr." Evidently the court below construed this to mean that the contract was to be returned to Mr. Clark to be held by him, not as her agent, but as the agent of Mr. Carr, the vendee. Under the circumstances of the case it cannot be contended that it would not reasonably bear this construction. In pursuance of this request Mrs. Dwyer signed the two agreements, kept one, retained the money accompanying the same, and returned the other agreement to Clark. The natural inference would be that she returned it to Mr. Clark for Mr. Carr, as the letter requested. Nothing in her conduct, until after the final tender by Mr. Carr, evinced any belief or contention on her part that the contract was not executed. On the contrary, it is all consistent with the theory that she considered the matter of the contract a completed transaction, and was desirous only of a full performance of its terms. Although Clark was

Mrs. Dwyer's own agent, she could, nevertheless, make him the custodian of the contract for the benefit of Carr; and, if she did so, and delivered the contract to Clark for Carr, as the evidence tended to show, and as the court manifestly believed she did, it was a sufficient delivery to complete its execution as a subsisting contract. There was reason to believe from the evidence that Clark chose to retain possession of the agreement because of his suspicions that Hollingsworth was to have an interest in the purchase, and as a means of obtaining for himself a larger share of the commission, and not because of any notion that the agreement would not be fully executed unless he should deliver it to Carr or to Carr's agent. The evidence sustains the finding that the contract was delivered.

The next contention is that the contract was obtained by fraud, and that the price agreed on for the property was inadequate, and that for these reasons performance should have been refused. From what has been said it will be seen that the negotiations on behalf of Mrs. Dwyer were conducted by Clark as her agent. He was a real estate broker who had been doing an extensive business as such in Los Angeles for many years prior to this transaction. It would be presumed that he acted in good faith, was true to his trust, and that the vendee was not aware of any evil design on his part toward his principal, unless such design or circumstances indicating it were made apparent to the vendee. The court below, after what appears to have been a very fair and patient hearing on the subject, found in favor of the plaintiff. The evidence is voluminous, and it is useless to discuss it at length. It may be said that, while there were some circumstances which might raise a suspicion that there was collusion between Clark and Hollingsworth, with the intent to induce Mrs. Dwyer to sell for the sake of the commissions to be divided between them, they were by no means of such controlling significance as to require a finding to that effect, much less to justify this court in overturning the decision of the trial court on the subject. Nor was there sufficient evidence of false representations by Hollingsworth, either to Clark or to Mrs. Dwyer, to require a finding that the contract was fraudulently obtained by him for Carr. There is some evidence that the property was worth more than the price named, and there was also evidence that it was worth less. The fact appears to be that prices of land in that vicinity were rising at that time, and that it was difficult, at the time of the trial, to ascertain the precise time at which they reached the values at which this sale was made. It is also shown that the market value of this lot, in common with real estate generally in Los Angeles, subsequently increased rapidly and materially, and it is evident that, at the time the contract was made, no person could foresee how long this upward movement of prices would continue, or how far it would go. The evidence shows that this sale was for a higher price per foot than any sale of property in that vicinity previously made. Under these circumstances, the claim that the sale was necessarily unfair because of inadequacy of consideration cannot be sustained. Possibly the evidence would have been sufficient to have sustained a finding of fraud and unfairness, if such finding had been made, but it is clearly insufficient to justify us in setting aside a finding that there was no fraud or unfairness.

The plaintiff was not in default by reason of his refusal to comply with the contract at the exact time of the demand, on the 26th of April, 1905. Time was not of the essence of the contract. His delay was caused by a desire to ascertain positively whether or not Forester, the owner of the lot adjoining the lot in question, and who had taken possession of a two-foot strip along the northern line of the lot, intended to claim title to said strip, or whether he would yield possession on demand. The delay thus excused was not unreasonable, and not sufficient to put the buyer in default.

On the 27th of April, the day after this tender, the plaintiff began an action in the superior court to enforce performance of this contract. That action was removed to the United States Circuit Court, upon the ground that Mrs. Dwyer was a citizen of the state of Louisiana. She died on June 22, 1905, and on August 8, 1905, Wesley Clark, a citizen of California, was appointed administrator of her estate in California, by the superior court of Los Angeles county. On August 28, 1905, while a demurrer to the complaint therein was pending and undecided, the plaintiff voluntarily asked that the suit in the United States court be dismissed, and judgment of dismissal thereof was thereupon given. The defendant claims that the judgment of dismissal is a bar to the maintenance of the present action. His theory is that, by the removal of the first action to the United States Circuit Court, the superior court of the county of Los Angeles was forever divested of all power and jurisdiction over the subject-matter of this particular cause of action. Some remarks in the opinions in Friedman v. Israel (C. C.) 26 Fed. 801, Railway Co. v. Fulton, 59 Ohio St. 575, 53 N. E. 265, 44 L. R. A. 520, and Cox v. T. V. & G., etc., Co., 68 Ga. 446, are cited in support of this rather startling proposition. But the cases merely decide that after the dismissal in the federal court the plaintiff cannot go back to the state court and continue or renew the original action in that court. And so far as they appear to uphold the doctrine contended for, they have been directly overruled by the later cases of Gassman v. Jar- vis (C. C.) 100 Fed. 146; Texas C. C. Co. v. Starnes (C. C.) 128 Fed. 183; McIver v. Florida, etc., Co., 110 Ga. 223, 36 S. E. 775, 65 L. R. A. 437, and other cases that might be cited. The rule has long been established that a judgment of dismissal, given upon motion of the plaintiff, before the hearing or trial of any issue of law or fact, and without any determination of the merits of the cause, is no bar to a subsequent suit in any court upon the same cause of action. 2 Black on Judgments, § 720, at page 1082; Merritt v. Campbell, 47 Cal. 542; Pierce v. Hilton, 102 Cal. 276, 36 Pac. 595; Parks v. Dunlap, 86 Cal. 189, 25 Pac. 916; Pyle v. Piercy, 122 Cal. 385, 55 Pac. 141; Westbay v. Gray, 116 Cal. 667, 48 Pac. 800; 23 Cyc. 1139, 1140. The court below correctly held that this judgment was no bar to the present action.

A number of errors of law are urged to have been made by the trial court in its rulings upon evidence. As before said, the trial appears to have been very fair and thorough. It would extend this opinion to an unnecessary length to treat of all these alleged errors in detail. None of them was of any substantial importance, and none appears to have had any material bearing upon the decision in the case. For the most part the rulings are correct. Those that may have been technically erroneous are insubstantial and immaterial. One instance deserves larger mention. Clark testified that between March 4, 1905, and March 17th after the duplicate contracts had been forwarded to Mrs. Dwyer, and before they were returned, certain other real estate agents made to him offers to buy this property. On cross-examination by defendant the court refused to allow him to tell the prices offered. This ruling was put upon the ground that the offered evidence was not pertinent to the issue as to the delivery to Carr of the duplicate subsequently returned to Clark. It was clearly immaterial on that point. Moreover, it was not disputed that Clark never did actually deliver that paper into Carr's custody. Afterwards, in the progress of the trial, these agents were permitted to testify as to what they said to Clark in making these offers, but were not allowed to say whether or not they were authorized, by any proposed buyer, to pay the prices offered, or whether the buyers were able and willing to buy. The only point to which this evidence could relate was the alleged fraudulent conduct of Clark, and as it was not claimed that Clark was informed in whose behalf the offers were made, nor as to their wealth and ability, the rejected evidence was clearly irrelevant upon that subject.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte HORNEF. (Cr. 1,454.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 9, 1908.)

1. STATUTES (§ 114*)—TITLE—DENTISTRY.

St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175, entitled "An act to insure the better education of practitioners of dental surgery to regulate the practice of dentistry, providing penalties for violation thereof, and to repeal an act to insure better education of dentistry practitioners, etc., approved March 12, 1885," is not defective.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Statutes, Cent. Dig. § 145; Dec. Dig. § 114.*]

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 993*) — JUDGMENT — AMENDMENT.

Where defendant was convicted of illegally practicing dentistry without a license, but the judgment first rendered recited that he was convicted of practicing "medicine" without a license, an amendment by substituting the word "dentistry" for "medicine" is not a second judgment by the court in excess of its jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 996.*]

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1218*)—PLACE OF IMPRISONMENT.

Under the act relating to the city of Oakland, providing that those convicted of any offense within the jurisdiction of the police court should be confined in the city jail, a person convicted of practicing dentistry without a license, in violation of St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175, making such offense a misdemeanor, and declaring that persons violating it should be punished by a fine or imprisonment in the county jail, was properly imprisoned in the city jail until payment of the fine.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3320; Dec. Dig. § 1218.*]

4. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 111*)—STATUTES—PROVISO.

St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175, makes it unlawful for any person to practice dentistry without a license from the board of examiners appointed thereunder, provided that the act does not affect the right of dentists to practice who had a right to do so when the act was passed, and section 19 declares that any person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor who is practicing dentistry without a license, or whose license has been revoked or suspended. Held, that as the proviso is matter of excuse only, and neither prescribes nor defines the offense, a complaint for violation of the act need not negative such proviso.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Indictment and Information, Cent. Dig. §§ 295-297; Dec. Dig. § 111.*]

5. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS (§ 5*) — DENTISTS—RIGHT TO PRACTICE—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175, § 1, makes it unlawful for any person to practice dentistry without a license granted as prescribed, and section 19, subd. 10, added thereto by St. 1903, p. 326, c. 244, § 6, makes any person guilty of a misdemeanor who is practicing dentistry in the state without a license, or whose license has been revoked or suspended. Held, that the act is not limited to those who commenced to practice in the state after its passage, but includes those practicing illegally under the former law.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, Dec. Dig. § 5.*]

6. HABEAS CORPUS (§ 92*) — DEFENSES — REVIEW OF FACTS.

Where a petitioner was convicted of practicing dentistry without a license, it was no ground for release on habeas corpus that the petitioner showed that he had a legal right to practice under the laws existing at the time of the passage of St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175, and was therefore exempted from the license requirement by section 19, subd. 10, added thereto by St. 1903, p. 326, c. 244, § 6; the decision of the trial court on the facts not being reviewable on habeas corpus.

In Bank. Application for a writ of habeas corpus by S. C. Hornef against the chief of police of the city of Oakland. Writ discharged. Petitioner remanded.

Austin Lewis, for petitioner. Everett J. Brown, W. J. Burpee, and John W. Stetson, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. The petitioner seeks his discharge from the custody of the chief of police of the city of Oakland, by whom he is imprisoned, under a judgment of the police court of the city of Oakland, pronounced upon a conviction of the offense of practicing dentistry without having a license so to do from the board of dental examiners of the state.

The act of the Legislature, upon which the prosecution against petitioner was founded, is an act entitled "An act to insure the better education of practitioners of dental surgery, and to regulate the practice of dentistry in the state of California, providing penalties for the violation hereof, and to repeal an act now in force relating to the same and known as 'An act to insure the better education of practitioners of dental surgery, and to regulate the practice of dentistry in the state of California, approved March 12, 1885,'" approved March 23, 1901 (St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175). This act was held constitutional by this court in Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 Pac. 879, by an opinion which practically disposes of all the points made by petitioner in support of the claim that it is unconstitutional, except the objection that its title is defective. Wherein the title is defective counsel for petitioner does not indicate, and we perceive no basis for the objection. The claim is made that the judgment under which petitioner is imprisoned is void, for the reason that it is a judgment attempted to be given after the police court had exhausted its authority by rendering a previous judgment. The records and papers show clearly enough that the so-called second judgment was merely an order correcting the entry of the judgment on the records of the court to make it conform to the facts, a trifling clerical mistake having been made in the first entry in the recital of the offense of which petitioner had been convicted. He had been informed against for practicing dentistry without a license, and had been convicted of that offense, and the judgment rendered on conviction was that he pay a fine of $50, and, in default of such payment, that he be imprisoned in the city jail of the city of Oakland until the fine was satisfied, in the proportion of one day's imprisonment for every $2 fine. In the entry of the judgment the recital as to the offense of which petitioner had been convicted was to the effect that he had been convicted of practicing medicine without a license. The entry was amended by the court to make it conform to what was obviously the fact, and to the judgment as actually rendered, by substituting the word "dentistry" for the word "medicine." There was no second judgment.

*For other cases see same topic and section NUMBER in Dec. & Am. Digs. 1907 to date, & Reporter Indexes

It is further suggested that petitioner cannot be legally imprisoned in the city jail, the offense of which he was convicted being a misdemeanor under a state law, and that law prescribing that persons violating its provisions shall be punishable by a fine or imprisoned in the county jail. This objection appears to be answered by the provisions of the act of the Legislature relative to the city of Oakland, which are similar to those in regard to the police courts of other cities, to the effect that the place of imprisonment of those convicted of any offense within the jurisdiction of the court shall be the city jail.

As was indicated to counsel on the oral argument, the only reason we issued the writ in this matter was that we desired to hear argument upon the question of the sufficiency, in one respect, of the complaint against petitioner, upon which he was arrested, tried, and convicted. The law provides: "It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the practice of dentistry in the state of California, unless said person shall have obtained a license from a board of dental examiners, duly authorized and appointed under the provisions of this act to issue licenses; provided that this act shall not affect the right under the laws of the state of California, of dentists to practice dentistry who have lawful right to practice dentistry at the time of the passage of this act." Section 1, Act 1901 (St. 1901, p. 564, c. 175). It further provides in section 19 of the act, as added in 1903 (St. 1903, p. 326, c. 244, § 6): "Any person, * * * shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, * * * who * * * (10) is practicing dentistry in the state without a license, or whose license has been revoked or suspended." The proviso in section 1 is not very artistically expressed from a legal standpoint, but the meaning is probably clear enough, viz., that all those having, at the time of the passage of the act, the lawful right under the laws of the state, to practice dentistry shall be excepted from the operation of the remaining portion of such section, requiring the obtaining of a license from the board appointed under said act. The complaint in the case at bar charged simply that petitioner on August 31, 1907, "did then and there practice dentistry without having a license so to do from the board of dental examiners of California, by displaying a sign advertising himself as a dentist," which constitutes "practicing" dentistry under an express provision of the act, and did not allege, in line with the proviso or exception in section 1, that he did not have the lawful right to practice at the time the act was passed, or any fact or facts tantamount thereto. As is apparent, it did allege facts constituting a public offense under subdivision 10, § 19, of the act. Assuming that this subdivision must be read in connection with the proviso in section 1, the question is whether or not it was necessary to further allege facts showing that the accused was not within the proviso of section 1, in order to state a public offense. It should be stated, for a better understanding of the meaning of the proviso, that at the time of the passage of this act there was in force a former act relative to the same subject, approved on March 12, 1885 (St. 1885, p. 110, c. 127), which made it unlawful for any person, not engaged in the practice of dentistry at the time of the passage thereof, to commence such practice without obtaining a license from a board of dental commissioners, and required every person then engaged in such practice to make proper proof thereof to such board within six months, and to thereupon obtain from the board a certificate thereon, upon which he might continue to practice. The proviso in the act of 1901 referred, of course, to those who were then lawfully entitled to practice under the act of 1885. At the time of the passage of the act of 1901 it thus necessarily included all dentists then engaged in practice, except those who were then practicing in violation of the act of 1885, but we do not consider that this weighs materially in the determination of the question under consideration.

There is practically no conflict in the authorities as to what the general rule is in regard to the necessity of alleging, in a complaint, indictment, or information, facts showing that an accused does not come within exceptions or provisos contained in the statute upon which the prosecution is based. The accepted rule is expressed very clearly in State v. Abbey, 29 Vt. 60, 67 Am. Dec. 754. It was there said: "The question is whether the exception is so incorporated with, and becomes a part of, the enactment as to constitute a part of the definition or description of the offense; for it is immaterial whether the exception or proviso be contained in the enacting clause or section, or be introduced in a different manner. It is the nature of the exception, and not its location, which determines the question. Neither does the question depend upon any distinction between the words 'provided' or 'except' as they may be used in the statute. In either case the only inquiry arises whether the matter excepted, or that which is contained in the proviso, is so incorporated with, as to become, in the manner above stated, a part of the enacting clause. If it is so incorporated, it shall be negatived, otherwise it is a matter of defense." The court further said that such exceptions and provisos were to be negatived in the pleading only where they are descriptive of the offense or define it, and that where they afford matter of excuse merely, they are to be relied on in defense. See, also, U. S. v. Cook, 17 Wall. 168, 173, 21 L. Ed. 538; Territory v. Scott, 2 Dak. 212, 6 N. W. 435; State v. Flanagan, 25 R. I. 371, 55 Atl. 876, and cases there cited. Whatever conflict in the authorities on this matter is to be found is not in regard to the rule above stated, but rather in the application thereof to particular circumstances. In State v. Abbey, supra, the indictment was for the offense of bigamy, alleging simply a second marriage by defendant while his former wife was still alive. The statute contained a proviso that the act should not extend to any person whose husband or wife had been out of the state for seven years together, the party marrying not knowing the other party to be living within that time, or to persons divorced, or when the marriage had been declared null and void by decree of court, or when the former marriage was within the age of consent, and was not afterward assented to. It was held that these things all constituted matters of defense, and need not be negatived in the indictment. The situation was practically the same in State v. Gallagher, 20 R. I. 266, 38 Atl. 655, and the same rule was applied. In Billigheimer v. State, 32 Ohio St. 435, the statute made an act of common labor on Sunday an offense, provided that nothing therein contained should be construed to extend to those who conscientiously observed the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, and it was held that the matter stated in the proviso was a matter of defense, and need not be negatived in the complaint. In State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 50, 40 Am. Rep. 488, the statute made it unlawful to sell, etc., opium, except for druggists and apothecaries, who might sell it on prescriptions of physicians, and the indictment simply alleged a sale, without negativing the exception. It was held that the exception did not define or qualify the offense created by the statute, and that the indictment was sufficient. In both State v. Flanagan, 25 R. I. 371, 55 Atl. 876, and State v. Heffernan (R. I.) 68 Atl. 364, the indictments were for practicing medicine without a license. The statute provided that it should not be construed to prohibit gratuitous services in case of emergency, and that it should not apply to commissioned surgeons of the United States army or navy, or marine hospital service, or to legally qualified physicians of another state called to see a particular case, etc. The indictments simply alleged the practice of medicine without a license, without negativing the exceptions, and were held sufficient. See, also, State v. Fuller, 33 N. H. 259. On the other hand, in State v. Mahony, 24 R. I. 338, 53 Atl. 124, the statute provided that "no person, unless a registered pharmacist," etc., shall retail medicines or poisons, and it was held that the limitation had been made a substantial part of the statutory definition of the offense, and must be negatived. This illustrates the distinction very clearly. There is apparently no decision of this state which is directly in point. See, however, People v. Nugent, 4 Cal. 341; People v. Collins, 105 Cal. 504, 39 Pac. 16. The case at bar is practically the same as State v. Flanagan, supra, and State v. Heffernan, supra, and is clearly a case where it was not necessary to allege in the complaint facts showing that the accused did not come within the terms of the proviso or exception. The offense of which petitioner was convicted, as defined by the statute, was "practicing dentistry in the state without a license." Subdivision 10, § 19, Act 1901, as added in 1903. The matters stated in the proviso to section 1 constitute no part of the definition or description of this offense. At most the proviso is a statement of an exception which in no degree qualifies the offense created by the statute, but simply exempts certain persons from the operation of such statute. As such, it was available to the petitioner in defense of the charge made against him in the police court if he came within its provisions, but it was not necessary that the complaint should allege that he was not within its terms.

Counsel for petitioner, relying on the language of section 1 of the act of 1901, "It shall be unlawful for any person to engage in the practice of dentistry," etc., contends that the act is applicable only to those who first commenced practice in the state after its passage, and that the complaint should allege such a commencement of practice after the passage of the act in order to state a public offense. We have already set forth subdivision 10 of section 19 of the act, which is a sufficient answer to this claim.

It is further alleged that the petition in this habeas corpus proceeding showed that petitioner had the legal right to practice dentistry under the laws of this state at the time of the passage of the act of 1901, and therefore was not required to have a license, as provided by subdivision 10, § 19, of the act. It should be unnecessary to say that this cannot avail petitioner in this proceeding. If he had any such defense on the facts to the charge against him, the time to make it was on his trial in the police court. The decision of that court as to the facts cannot be reviewed on habeas corpus.

The writ heretofore issued must be discharged, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city of Oakland, and it is so ordered.

NORTON et al. v. BASSETT et al.

(L. A. 1,972.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 16, 1908.

Rehearing Denied Nov. 14, 1908.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS (§ 103*)—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUST—ENFORCEMENT.

Plaintiffs and O. agreed to jointly buy land, with interests in a certain proportion; O., in addition to paying his own share of the purchase money, to advance part of that of plaintiffs, the legal title to be taken in O.'s name, and held by him in trust to secure his advances, and for the benefit of the joint owners, the land to be subdivided and sold, the proceeds to be applied first to reimbursing O., and after that to be divided among the parties in the proportion of their shares. Held that, while O. was a voluntary trustee, holding under a resulting trust of a continuing nature, so that, he having continued to discharge his duties and not repudiated the trust, no cause of action against him could arise, yet defendant, on the title devolving on him by inheritance on the death of O., became an involuntary or constructive trustee, with the duty merely to preserve and protect the property, to account to the beneficiaries for it, and to turn over to them their shares of it; so that, immediately on the death of O., without any repudiation of the trust, plaintiffs' cause of action against defendants arose, and the statute commenced to run.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Limitation of Actions, Dec. Dig. § 103.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 244*)—CHANGE FROM INVOLUNTARY TO VOLUNTARY TRUST.

Defendant's relation to property of an involuntary trustee thereof is not changed to that of a voluntary trustee, with the incidents thereof, by recognition of the trust by decedent's administrator, and by defendant's guardian, neither having authority to make any recognition having that effect.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 244.*]

3. TRUSTS (§§ 17, 18*)—CHANGE FROM CONSTRUCTIVE TO EXPRESS TRUST.

One's relation to land cannot be changed from that of a constructive trustee to an express trustee by his verbal promise to account at a future time; Civ. Code, § 852, providing that no trust in relation to real estate is valid unless created by instrument in writing or operation of law.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by C. E. Norton and another, partners, against Charles N. Bassett and another. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant Bassett appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Flint & Barker, Barker & Bowen, and Gray, Barker & Bowen, for appellant. Tanner, Taft & Odell and W. R. Bacon, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This cause was originally decided on appeal by the District Court of Appeals for the Second Appellate District. The judgment of the superior court was there affirmed, and on petition of appellant the cause was ordered to this court to be reheard. The action was brought to have a trust declared, and for an accounting of the rents, issues, and profits, and the proceeds of sale of a portion of the trust property. Plaintiffs obtained judgment, and the defendant Bassett appealed from it, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

It was alleged in the complaint that in February, 1895, the plaintiffs and one O. T. Bassett, who was the father of the defendant Charles N. Bassett, and the defendant Roll agreed to jointly purchase the Workmen Ranch, consisting of 814 acres of land in Los Angeles county, for the price of $44,812.34, and that they should purchase and own the said lands in the following proportions, to wit, O. T. Bassett ten-sixteenths thereof, the plaintiffs five-sixteenths, and the said Roll one-sixteenth; that O. T. Bassett, in addition to paying his own proportion of the purchase price, would advance and loan to plaintiffs and Roll such amounts of money above what they were able to advance themselves as were necessary to pay their proportionate shares of the purchase price; that the legal title to the property was to be taken in the name of O. T. Bassett, and held by him in trust to secure the advances to be made by him for plaintiffs and Roll, and for the benefit of said joint owners; that the land was to be subdivided and sold, and the proceeds and profits devoted to the payment of the purchase price and expenses of the venture until O. T. Bassett was repaid the advances to be made by him, and the residue was to be divided among the parties, in proportion to their interest in the land as above specified; that pursuant to this agreement plaintiffs paid toward the purchase price of their five-sixteenths interest the sum of $1,214, and the said O. T. Bassett advanced and loaned to plaintiffs and Roll, and paid for them to the owners of the property, the balance of their proportionate share of the purchase price of their respective interests; that upon such payment to the owners the title to the entire property was conveyed to said O. T. Bassett in trust pursuant to the agreement of all the parties; that the land was subdivided and portions thereof sold, and the proceeds, together with the rents and profits of the residue, paid to the said O. T. Bassett until his death on January 1, 1898. It is then alleged that, on the death of said O. T. Bassett, the title to the residue of said land vested in the defendant Charles N. Bassett, his son and only heir at law; that the estate of O. T. Bassett was duly administered on, and by a decree of distribution said lands were distributed to said Charles N. Bassett, who was at the date thereof a minor, and whose estate was duly represented by a guardian, appointed by the court, until he reached his majority; that the administrator and guardian, while they acted as such, and Charles N. Bassett at all times since his father's death, had actual notice of the ownership of plaintiffs of said five-sixteenths interest in said land and the proceeds thereof; that plaintiffs demanded of the administrator and the guardian and Charles N. Bassett an accounting; that the administrator and guardian promised that said C. N. Bassett would fully account for the moneys received for said lands, and the lands remaining unsold, when he attained his majority, and the said Charles N. Bassett, during his minority, also promised to do so when he became of age, but upon attaining his majority repudiated his promise, and refused to account; that the administrator and guardian while they acted as such collected all the rents and profits of said land, and upon attaining his majority the said C. N. Bassett did so, and the latter had also sold certain portions of the property; that by reason of the promises of the administrator, the guardian, and the said Charles N. Bassett himself that the latter would make an accounting when he became of age, the plaintiffs had not heretofore brought an action to establish their rights in said property. The prayer was for an accounting and decree declaring a trust in favor of plaintiffs for five-sixteenths interest in the land remaining unsold, and for a conveyance thereof from said defendant C. N. Bassett to plaintiffs. The complaint was filed February 6, 1903. It was subsequently amended, but there was no material change as to the facts alleged in the original complaint—at least none that affect the question to be particularly considered on this appeal. A demurrer was interposed by the defendant C. N. Bassett, both to the original complaint and the amendment thereto, under which it was insisted, among other objections to the sufficiency of these pleadings, that the cause of action alleged by plaintiffs was barred by laches on their part, and also by certain provisions of the statute of limitations. The demurrer was overruled, as was also the demurrer of the defendant Roll, who, however, made no subsequent appearance in the action. The defendant Bassett filed an answer, setting up various defenses, and after trial findings were made in harmony with the allegations of the complaint and amendment thereto. In addition the court found against the claim of laches asserted by defendant and the bar of the statute of limitations. A decree was entered accordingly, declaring a trust in favor of plaintiffs as to the property in question; that they were the owners of an undivided five-sixteenths interest in certain portions of it, which remained undisposed of, and directed a conveyance from defendant Bassett to them of such interest; there was also awarded plaintiffs, on the accounting taken in the action, a judgment for the sum of $9,328.95.

Various grounds for a reversal are urged on this appeal, it being particularly insisted that as matter of law, the court should have sustained the demurrer interposed to the complaint on the ground of laches and the bar of the statute of limitations, and that it should have found in favor of defendant in these particulars as matters of fact. Without considering the question of laches, we are satisfied that the cause of action asserted by plaintiffs was barred by the statute of limitations, and that the demurrer on that ground should have been sustained. The theory of plaintiffs, accepted by the trial court and by the District Court of Appeals, was that the same rule as to the time when the statute of limitations would commence to run against plaintiffs as beneficiaries applied in the case of the trust relation which the defendant C. N. Bassett held to the property by devolution upon him of the title to it through the death of his father, as applied to the trust relationship in which the latter held the property during his lifetime—that the statute would only commence to run in either case upon notice being brought home to plaintiffs of a repudiation of the trust. This, however, is not the rule as laid down by the decisions in this state. The trust relations of O. T. Bassett and the defendant C. N. Bassett to the trust property were entirely distinct, and the rule as to when the statute of limitations commences to run is essentially different as applied to such distinct relations. The relation which O. T. Bassett bore to the trust property was that of a voluntary trustee, that of the defendant C. N. Bassett as to it that of an involuntary trustee. As far as the elder Bassett was concerned, he was a voluntary trustee, holding title to the property under a resulting trust, a trust which, under the agreement of the parties and as accepted by him, was to be of a continuing character, and he was acting under it and making sales of the property in conformity with his voluntarily assumed trusteeship up to the time of his death. Under such circumstances, while the elder Bassett was trustee and as long as he was discharging the duties of such trustee in pursuance of the terms of his trust, the beneficiaries would have no right of action against him, and could have none until he repudiated or disavowed the trust relationship. This, of course, is a familiar rule. But the relation which the defendant Charles N. Bassett held towards this trust property upon the death of his father was not that of a voluntary trustee, but solely an involuntary one, one which was cast upon him by operation of law—a constructive and implied trust—springing from the devolution on him of the title to the trust property by the death of his ancestor. As to him the trust was neither a voluntary nor a continuing one. He owed no duty at all to the beneficiaries to do anything in furtherance of the purposes or objects for which the trust was created. As between him and the plaintiffs there was no contractual relation with reference to it. Upon the death of his father and the vesting of the legal title in him as heir, while the property descended to him impressed with the trust, he took it simply as a "dry, involuntary, legal trustee," upon whom was imposed no duty except to preserve and protect the trust property, and to account to the beneficiaries for it, and to turn over to them their share of it. As this was the only duty cast upon the defendant Bassett as an involuntary trustee, the plaintiffs' right of action to establish and enforce their claims in the trust property accrued immediately on the death of the voluntary trustee, O. T. Bassett. They were not required to make any demand upon the administrator or the guardian, or upon the defendant Bassett as a prerequisite to maintaining an action for that purpose. Nor was any denial or repudiation of the trust by any of these persons necessary in order to set the statute of limitations in motion. As plaintiffs' right of action accrued on the death of the voluntary trustee, the elder Bassett, and the vesting of the title to the trust property in the defendant Bassett as an involuntary or constructive trustee, the statute then commenced to run, and, unless an action was brought by the plaintiffs within four years thereafter, their right to maintain it was barred.

It is the settled rule of the authorities in this state that no repudiation of an implied or constructive trust—as an involuntary trust always is—is necessary to set the statute of limitations in operation. A cause of action in favor of the beneficiaries arises immediately that the law creates such a trust. In Hecht v. Slaney, 72 Cal. 363, 366, 14 Pac. 88, 89, where an implied or constructive trust was involved, the rule was declared and applied. It is there said: "Whatever may once have been the rule, it is now well settled that the statute of limitations runs in favor of a defendant chargeable as a trustee of an implied trust, and it is not necessary, in order to set the statute in motion, that he should have denied or repudiated the trust." The same rule was equally applied in the case of Nougues v. Newlands, 118 Cal. 102, 106, 50 Pac. 386. There it appeared that Nougues, Williams, and Ralston associated together for the purpose of purchasing and improving lands; the agreement being that Maurice Dore should take title to the lands in his own name, as trustee for those parties. While holding the title to the lands conveyed to him for the other agreeing parties under this express voluntary trust, Dore conveyed it all to William Sharon, who had notice of the interest of the other parties, and written notice from Nougues of the terms on which Dore held the property. The court held that Sharon, on taking the deed from Dore with full knowledge of the trust, became an involuntary trustee of a trust, cast upon him by operation of law, that Ralston's deed to Sharon did not create Nougues and Williams beneficiaries thereunder, and that on the conveyance from Dore to Sharon the statute of limitations commenced to run in favor of the latter, who was grantor of defendant Newlands, and the decision to the effect that the statute of limitations commenced to operate on the acceptance of the deed from Dore by Sharon was expressly based on the proposition that thereby Sharon became an involuntary trustee of the property. Broder v. Conklin, 121 Cal. 282, 53 Pac. 699, is to the same effect. Without particularly referring to the facts in that case, it appears that an assignee in insolvency, a voluntary trustee, transferred the property of the insolvent's estate to the defendant, against whom the creditors of the insolvent debtor brought an action to have it decreed that the defendant, who was the attorney of the assignee at the time of the purchase, held the property in trust for them, upon both an express and constructive trust. It is there said (quoting from the syllabus, which correctly states the conclusion of the court) that "the statute of limitations does not begin to run against an express trust until a repudiation thereof is brought to the knowledge of the beneficiary, and it begins to run against the enforcement of a constructive trust from the date of its inception, and, it appearing that the constructive trust established by the conveyance was created upon the purchase of the property of the insolvent debtor by the attorney for the assignee, some seven years prior to the commencement of the action, its enforcement by the creditors is barred by the statute of limitations." It is subsequently as clearly reiterated in Barker v. Hurley, 132 Cal. 21, 63 Pac. 1071, 64 Pac. 480, that, "where a trust, if it exists at all, is not created by agreement of the parties, but is only implied, or such as is by operation of law fixed upon the conscience of a person, the statute begins to run from the inception of the trust." In the case at bar, so far as this defendant was concerned, if the trust exists at all as to him, it is not by reason of any agreement on his part, but because it is thrust upon him by operation of law.

Under the principle of these decisions, as the defendant Bassett was but an involuntary trustee, the trustee of a constructive trust, the statute of limitations commenced to run as soon as that trust relationship was created by devolution of the title of the trust property on him. No disaffirmance of the trust on his part was necessary to set the statute in motion. Nor did the recognition of the trust, which it is alleged was made by the administrator of the estate of O. T. Bassett, the deceased voluntary trustee, or by the guardian of the defendant Bassett, or by Bassett himself, operate to change the relation of the latter to the property from that of an involuntary to that of a voluntary trustee. Neither the administrator nor guardian is vested with any authority in law to make any recognition which would have that effect. Neither did the alleged promise of the defendant, while a minor, to make an accounting when he attained his majority, accomplish it. It is not averred that any written recognition of the trust was made by the defendant Bassett, and no oral recognition of it would operate to change his relation from a constructive to an express trustee. As said in Nougues v. Newlands, page 107 of 118 Cal., page 387 of 50 Pac., to which we have heretofore called attention, "the recognition of Sharon of the rights of Nougues and Williams, which is pleaded in a paragraph of the bill above quoted, could not operate in law to change the position of Sharon from that of an involuntary to that of an express trustee. To accomplish this Sharon must have declared the trust by a signed instrument in writing. Civ. Code, § 852. It is not averred that he ever did this, and to the contrary the matters pleaded distinctly negative the idea that such was the fact." Neither is there any allegation of any written acknowledgment or promise made by defendant Bassett with reference to the trust, or an accounting thereof, such as was necessary to take the case out of the operation of the statute of limitations. Section 360, Code Civ. Proc. In support of their contention that the statute had not run in favor of the defendant Bassett because there had been no repudiation of the trust, respondents rely on the cases of Miles v. Thorne, 38 Cal. 335, 99 Am. Dec. 384, Roach v. Carrafa, 85 Cal. 446, 25 Pac. 22, Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 529, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64, Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 575, 26 Pac. 1108, Hovey v. Bradbury, 112 Cal. 620, 44 Pac. 1077, Faylor v. Faylor, 136 Cal. 92, 68 Pac. 482, and White v. Costigan, 138 Cal. 564, 72 Pac. 178. But in all these cases, save in Butler v. Hyland and Hovey v. Bradbury, the trusts with which the court was dealing were voluntary trusts, such as was the trust as it existed while the elder Bassett was alive and held the property as trustee for the benefit of plaintiffs. The rule, as we have seen, is uniform in such cases that, before the statute of limitations will commence to run, there must be a repudiation of the trust. These cases, of course, can have no application here, because, as we have seen, the position of the defendant Bassett was not that of a trustee of a voluntary trust, but that of an involuntary trustee—the trustee of a trust obligation cast upon him by the law, and to which the rule in the cases cited, as we have seen, has no application. The only cases cited which could have any possible application are the cases of Butler v. Hyland and Hovey v. Bradbury above referred to. It is true that in those cases the trusts sought to be enforced were involuntary trusts, but in each of those cases only two years had elapsed from the death of one of the parties to the voluntary trust, which had been changed into the involuntary one which was sought to be enforced. Clearly there the four-year statute of limitations had not run in favor of the involuntary trustees. In the case at bar the trust cast on the defendant Bassett was an involuntary one. The plaintiffs had a right to proceed to enforce their claim to the trust property immediately that the title to the trust property vested in the defendant Bassett as an involuntary or constructive trustee. The statute commenced to run from that date, and this action, not having been commenced until over five years thereafter, was barred by the provisions of the statute requiring such actions to be commenced within four years from the time the right of action accrues.

The trial court should have sustained the demurrer to the complaint on this ground. The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to set aside the judgment entered, and to enter an order sustaining the demurrer of the defendant Bassett to the complaint and the amendment thereto.

1. JUDGMENT (§ 195*)—ISSUES ON DEMURRER.

Where plaintiff chooses to rely on the complaint after the court has sustained a demurrer thereto, a judgment of dismissal, or for defendant, is the proper judgment.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 870*) — JUDGMENT APPEALABLE—REVIEW.

An appeal from a judgment of dismissal, or for defendant after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, brings under review the rulings on the demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by A. G. Litch and others against B. S. Kerns and others. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Dismissed.

L. F. Eggers, for appellants. Park Henshaw, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The record shows that: "The demurrer to the second amended complaint was duly argued by respective counsel; and, after due consideration by the court, it is ordered that said demurrer be, and the same is hereby, sustained, to which ruling counsel for plaintiff then and there duly excepted." The notice of appeal specifies that: "The plaintiffs hereby appeal * * * from the order of the aforesaid superior court * * * in sustaining the demurrer of defendants to the said plaintiffs' complaint." It does not appear that plaintiffs ever applied to the court for permission to file another amended complaint, nor that there would have been a denial of said application if it had been made. However, we must presume that plaintiffs chose to rely upon the complaint in question, and in orderly sequence a judgment should have been rendered dismissing the action, or for defendants for their costs. An appeal from the judgment would have brought under review the question of law whether the court erred in holding that the second amended complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. But, as shown by the certificate of the clerk, "no judgment upon said order, or any judgment of any kind, has ever been rendered or entered."

Respondents have moved to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground: "First, that said appeal was prematurely taken; and, second, that the order appealed from is not an appealable order." The position is clearly well taken. An order sustaining or overruling a demurrer is not appealable. Code Civ. Proc. § 939; Moulton v. Ellmaker, 30 Cal. 528; Hibberd v. Smith, 39 Cal. 147; Ashley v. Olmstead, 54 Cal. 618. In the last cited case it is said: "From an order sustaining a demurrer * * * no appeal can be taken directly to this court. The only method of review of such proceedings here is through an appeal from the final judgment entered in the action itself, if such judgment be unfavorable." In the Hibberd Case, supra, it is said: "The judgment is itself an adjudication upon the demurrer; and it is only from the judgment, and not from an order sustaining the demurrer, that the plaintiff could appeal. We have repeatedly held that an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer is not an appealable order." There is nothing to the contrary in the cases cited by appellants. In Gallardo v. Reed, 49 Cal. 346, there was an application to the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to compel the trial judge to pronounce judgment. The court said: "The demurrer to the complaint was sustained, and the plaintiff's application to amend was refused. This amounts to a final disposition of the cause, and it therefore became the duty of the clerk, in the absence of special directions from the judge, to enter appropriate judgment in the records of the court." So here, if the court had refused to allow the plaintiffs to amend, it might be considered equivalent to a final judgment, but still it would be the duty of the clerk to enter a judgment in favor of defendants, and from this the appeal would properly be taken. The case of Goldtree v. Spreckels, 135 Cal. 672, 67 Pac. 1091, cited by appellants, has no direct bearing upon the question before us. It does, however, in the following quotation, recognize the necessity of a judgment in addition to the order sustaining the demurrer to the complaint: "When a general demurrer to a petition is sustained, and the plaintiff declines to amend, he practically confesses that he has alleged in his pleading every fact he is prepared to prove in support of his action. Therefore, in such a case, nothing remains to be done except to render judgment for the defendant." In the foregoing view there is nothing technical or arbitrary, nor does this course impose upon an appellant any hardship; but, on the contrary, it harmonizes with the requirement of the statute, the decisions of the courts, and the uniform practice of the profession. No doubt if plaintiffs had announced that they declined to amend, or if the court had refused them permission so to do, the clerk would have entered the appropriate judgment, and the appeal could have been properly taken, but appellants chose rather to pursue a course for which we can find no reason nor legal support. It may be added that, notwithstanding the conclusion we have reached on the motion to dismiss, we have examined the whole record, and we are entirely satisfied that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer.

The appeal is dismissed.

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (§ 159*)—APPEAL—SECURITY—DEPOSIT—PURPOSE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 978, requires, on appeal from a justice's court, an undertaking in the sum of $100 for costs on appeal, and also provides for an undertaking to stay proceedings, but makes a deposit of the amount of the judgment appealed from, including costs, equivalent to the undertaking for a stay, and requires the justice to transmit the deposit to the clerk of the superior court. Section 926 permits a money deposit in lieu of an undertaking for costs on appeal, and requires the sum so deposited to be equal to the amount required by the undertaking. Judgment having been rendered against petitioners in a justice's court for $177, including attorney's fees and costs, they appealed, and on the following day deposited the amount of the judgment appealed from without stating its purpose, and the proceedings and the deposit were transferred to the superior court. Held, that the deposit would be construed as being security for costs on appeal, and not to stay proceedings, so that the appeal was improperly dismissed for want of such security.

Certiorari to Superior Court, San Joaquin County; Frank H. Smith, Judge.

Certiorari by the Pacific Window Glass Company and others against Frank H. Smith, as judge of the superior court in and for San Joaquin county, and the superior court, to set aside an order dismissing an appeal by petitioners. Order annulled and vacated.

Ashley & Neumiller, for petitioners. Webster & Webster, for respondents.

HART, J. Certiorari. The petitioners charge that the respondents acted in excess of their jurisdiction in the dismissal of an appeal from the justice's court of O'Neal township, county of San Joaquin, in a certain action wherein one W. J. Herson was plaintiff and the petitioners were defendants, and in which judgment was rendered and entered in favor of the plaintiff in said action against the petitioners.

The ground upon which the appeal was dismissed in said action was that "no undertaking on appeal for the sum of $100 for the payment of the costs on the appeal" had been filed by the defendants in said action (petitioners here), as required by the provisions of section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure. According to the uncontroverted averments of the petition, a judgment was rendered by the justice's court of O'Neal township on the 2d day of April, 1908, in favor of said W. J. Herson and against the petitioners for the sum of $177.30, of which the sum of $25.16 was for attorneys' fees and $26.34 for costs. On April 7, 1908, the petitioners as defendants in said action filed with said justice's court a notice of appeal from said judgment on questions of both law and fact, and served a copy thereof on the adverse party, and on the following day—April 8th—"made a deposit of the amount of said judgment, including all costs, appealed from, with said justice," in the sum of $177.30. Thereupon said justice transmitted to the clerk of the respondent, said superior court, a certified copy of his docket, the pleadings, all notices, motions, and all other papers filed in the cause, and the notice of appeal, and also transmitted and turned over to the clerk of said superior court the sum of $177.30 deposited with said justice as aforesaid, the same to be subject to any order of said superior court in the premises. Thereupon the petitioners caused said appeal to be placed on the May 4, 1908, trial calendar of said superior court; no objection thereto having been interposed by the plaintiff in said action. On May 15, 1908, the said plaintiff filed and served notice on petitioners that he would on Monday, May 25, 1908, move to dismiss the appeal upon the ground already stated. Said motion was heard, with the result as stated. The respondents demur to the petition on general grounds. The question which is assumed by counsel on both sides to be the pivotal one upon which it must be determined whether the superior court obtained jurisdiction of the appeal is as to the intent and purpose with which the deposit was made by the petitioners with the justice of the peace.

There is nothing in the record before us affirmatively indicating the particular purpose which was in the minds of the petitioners for which the deposit was made when the money was delivered to the justice. The money was deposited the day following the filing of the notice of the appeal, but counsel for petitioners so depositing said money made no statement to the justice as to the purpose which it was intended the deposit was to subserve. It is therefore claimed by the respondents that the deposit being exactly the same in amount as the judgment and costs and attorneys' fees awarded to the plaintiff, as required by the statute in cases where a deposit of money is made in lieu of a stay bond, and in excess of the amount required in lieu of an undertaking conditioned for the payment of the costs on the appeal, it must be assumed that the deposit was made for the purpose of staying execution, and not for the indemnification of the plaintiff against the costs on appeal. The position of respondents would be impregnable if the assumption essential to its soundness were tenable. But we know of no principle and can conceive of no reason justifying that assumption. We think it would be more conformable to reason, and that we are authorized to assume, there being nothing to the contrary shown by the record certified to this court of all the proceedings in the action before the justice of the peace, that the purpose of the deposit was intended by the petitioners to perfect the appeal, or, in other words, intended as a step in the matter of the appeal without which the appeal would manifestly be ineffectual. Section 978 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "an appeal from a justice's or police court is not effectual for any purpose, unless an undertaking be filed with two or more sureties in the sum of one hundred dollars for the payment of the costs on the appeal." The same section provides for an undertaking the purpose of which is to stay the proceedings, and further provides as to the latter undertaking that "a deposit of the amount of the judgment, including all costs, appealed from or of the value of the property, including all costs in actions for the recovery of specific personal property, with the justice or judge, is equivalent to the filing of the undertaking, and in such cases, the justice or judge must transmit the money to the clerk of the superior court to be by him paid out on the order of the court." There is no provision in that section authorizing the substitution of a money deposit for the undertaking required for the payment of the costs on the appeal; but the right to deposit money in lieu of an undertaking for that purpose is given by section 926 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the sum so deposited must be equal to the amount required "by the said undertaking," and an appeal so perfected will give the superior court jurisdiction of the case. Laws v. Troutt, 147 Cal. 172, 81 Pac. 401. Section 978 provides, as will be observed, that the money deposited in the place of the undertaking to stay proceedings shall be transmitted by the justice to the clerk of the superior court. There is no provision in either of the sections to which we have referred requiring the same course to be pursued as to the money deposited in lieu of the undertaking for the payment of the costs on the appeal. It is thus to be noticed that it was perhaps the duty of the justice, assuming that the money deposited with him by the petitioners was for the payment of the costs on the appeal, to have retained said money pending the disposition of the appeal by the superior court. But this circumstance does not necessarily become a factor in the determination of the question before us. The right of the petitioners to maintain their appeal should not be made to hinge on an unauthorized act of the justice of the peace. Besides, if this were the only objection grounded against the right to maintain the appeal, it would promptly and properly be repudiated as a mere shadow without any semblance of substance. But we do not understand respondents to undertake to maintain that the circumstance possesses further significance than as evidencing the understanding the justice conceived of the purpose for which the deposit was made.

We think the deposit, under all the circumstances, is to be and should be construed as having been made for the purpose of the payment of the costs on the appeal. The petitioners intended to and did take the appeal. They filed and served their notice to that effect, and doubtless their counsel well knew that, in order to perfect the appeal, an undertaking or a deposit of some amount of money to guarantee the payment of the costs on appeal was indispensably essential. For aught that we can determine from the record before us, the petitioners might have believed and assumed that the depositing with the justice of a sum equal in amount to the judgment and costs, etc., would have the effect of both staying proceedings and perfecting the appeal. But as the Supreme Court of Nevada, in Nevada v. Cal. M. Co., 13 Nev. 212, says: "Whether they unwittingly or intentionally executed the undertaking for the purpose of perfecting the appeal as well as staying execution, the result is that they accomplished the first, whether they did the last or not. An appeal is taken by filing and serving notice. It is made effectual as an appeal simply by executing an undertaking in accordance with section 1402, Comp. Laws." The fact that the amount deposited exceeds that required by the statute to make the appeal effectual cannot, of course, vitiate the appeal. The sum deposited to render the appeal effectual cannot be less than that required (Swem v. Monroe, 148 Cal. 743, 83 Pac. 1074), but the appeal cannot be invalidated because the amount deposited for that purpose exceeds, however much, the sum prescribed. M. H. C. & M. Co. v. Woodbury, 10 Cal. 186; Ward v. Superior Court, 58 Cal. 519. In some of the early cases it is said that an appeal will not be dismissed on the ground of insufficiency in the justification of the sureties, where the undertaking was both to render the appeal effectual and to stay execution, and the justification was sufficient for the former purpose. Dobbins v. Dollarhide, 15 Cal. 374; Zoller v. McDonald, 23 Cal. 136. The deposit was sufficient to meet the costs on appeal, and we can see no reason why it should not, under the circumstances, be held to have been made for that purpose. It is, of course, impossible to say, except by presumption, what the particular idea of petitioners was in making the deposit, but we may suggest that we can hardly understand why the petitioners should have intended the deposit to operate as a stay only, since they could have gained no substantial advantage by depositing the money for the purpose of effecting a stay of proceedings if, as the respondents contend, they failed to take the necessary step to make the appeal effectual.

Counsel for respondents suggest that, if the plaintiff had sought to secure execution of the judgment, the petitioners, under the circumstances, could and probably would have claimed that the deposit was intended as a stay. If so, their appeal would have been without the requisite support and consequently ineffectual. The suggestion also occurs to us that the plaintiff in the appealed action could have suffered no injury from a refusal of the court to dismiss the appeal, for, having declared, in resisting the motion, the purpose of the deposit to be to perfect the appeal, the petitioners would certainly have been estopped from thereafter denying it, or from asserting a contrary or different purpose of said deposit.

The conclusion we have reached responds to the spirit and corresponds with the trend of modern decisions on points of practice in general, which is that causes should be permitted to be heard on their merits where, in so ruling, positive violence is not done some rule or rules of procedure and practice. Vinson v. Los Angeles Pac. R. R. Co., 147 Cal. 483, 82 Pac. 53.

In accordance with the foregoing views, the order of the respondents dismissing the appeal in said action of Herson v. Pacific Window Glass Co. (a Corporation) et al., is hereby annulled, set aside, and vacated.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Bordwell, Judge.

Action by George H. Hartwell against the C. Ganahl Lumber Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, certain of the defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. C. De Garmo and Charles L. Batcheller, for appellants. R. L. Horton, for respondents.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from a judgment and an order denying the motion of appellants for a new trial.

The case presented is one where plaintiff brought an action against a large number of defendants, each of whom had filed a certain claim of lien against the property of plaintiff, requiring them to litigate as to their respective claims to a balance in plaintiff's hands subject to such liens. It was stipulated that the claims of lien were correct as to the amounts.

The only question presented upon this appeal relates to the validity of a certain building contract entered into between plaintiff and one Parlier for the construction of a certain house. There is appended to the respondent's brief an opinion filed by Hon. Walter Bordwell, trial judge, in support of his judgment determining that the contract entered into was a valid one. This opinion reflects our views upon the question involved, and is adopted as the opinion of this court:

"The plaintiff is the owner of real property upon which the defendant Parlier, as contractor, constructed a dwelling. The other defendants are lien claimants for labor performed, materials furnished, or subcontract work. The plaintiff by this action seeks to have the defendants interplead, and desires that the court by its decree divide the amount of money conceded to be due under the contract and which he has deposited in court. The plaintiff has offered an instrument from the recorder's office, purporting to be a contract under which the building was constructed, as evidence of the provisions of section 1183, Code Civ. Proc., requiring building contracts over $1,000 to be in writing, have been complied with. The deendants object to the offer on the ground that the contract has not been duly executed, in that the plans and specifications, although attached to the contract, have not been signed by the parties, as required by the express provisions of the contract. The objections will be overruled, for which I give the following reasons:

"The instrument offered consists of three parts all attached, the first part being a builder's contract in the form commonly used in this vicinity; the second, specifications; and, the third, plans. The first part, usually called the 'contract,' is signed by both parties. Among other things it contains the statement that the contract is to construct 'a two-story frame residence with basement and attic, said building to be built on lot 176 of Clark & Bryan's Westmoreland tract'; also that the building is to be constructed 'conformable to the drawings and specifications of even date herewith, made by A. L. Haley, architect, and signed by the parties.' Turning to the specifications attached to this contract, we find them to be named as 'Specifications of the material and labor to be used in the erection of a two-story frame residence building for George H. Hartwell, Esq., on lot 176 Westmoreland tract. * * * A. L. Haley, architect,' and underneath the cover we find again 'general specifications for the materials and works necessary in the erection and completion of the two-story frame residence building for George H. Hartwell, to be located on lot 176 Westmoreland tract, on the west side of Menlo avenue, according to the accompanying plans and specifications as furnished by A. L. Haley, architect, 204-5 Henne Building, Los Angeles, Cal.' The plans are attached to the specifications, and are marked as indicated in the specifications as prepared on the scale of one inch to one foot and by 'A. L. Haley, architect, 204-5 Henne building, Los Angeles, Cal.' The second and third portions of the instrument—that is, the plans and specifications—are each signed by the contractor. I think it proper to hold as a presumption that the contract was signed by the owner and contractor in the condition it now is, to wit, with the plans and specifications attached thereto; and, furthermore, the oral evidence in the case shows it was so signed. No oral evidence can be received to show what plans and specifications were intended by the parties to form a part of their contract. The sole question here is whether the plans and specifications attached to the contract can, as a proposition of law, without the aid of any oral testimony, be held to be the plans and specifications intended by the parties to be those constituting a part of their contract.

"Sufficiency of execution of contracts resembling the one here has been at different times before the Supreme Court. In Donnelly v. Adams, 115 Cal. 129, 46 Pac. 916, the contract refers to specifications as being signed and kept in the office of the architect. No specifications are in fact signed. The contract was held to be inchoate and void because of the misreference. In West Coast Lumber Co. v. Knapp, 122 Cal. 80, 54 Pac. 533, the contract recited that the plans and specifications were 'identified by the signatures of the parties thereto.' No such signatures being found, the contract was held invalid, although after the contract was signed the plans and specifications were attached and the whole filed as one document. In Worden v. Hammond, 37 Cal. 62, the plans and specifications were referred to as annexed, but were not in fact; the contract held void. In Willamette S. M. L. & Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles College, 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629, held that a failure to annex drawings referred to in the contract as 'hereunto annexed' renders the contract invalid; and holds that it is necessary that the 'entire terms [of contract] can be ascertained by mere inspection and without oral testimony.' There have been a number of other cases decided by the Supreme Court all holding that, where the plans and specifications were not filed with the recorder, the contract 'is rendered void.' It is all a question of identification. If, from an inspection of the instrument offered, the court can determine that it is the contract agreed upon by the parties in its entirety, it will be sufficient; but, if any oral testimony is required to enable the court to determine whether or not this is the complete contract intended by the parties, then the execution is insufficient, for, according to all authorities, no such oral testimony can be received. None of the cases referred to as having been before the Supreme Court was precisely like the one at bar. If they were, then the determination of the Supreme Court would, of course, settle the matter; or, if this case come entirely within the principles laid down by the Supreme Court, then those decisions would be conclusive here. Some of these cases so strongly resemble the one on trial that at first impulse they seem to determine the matter; but there is a difference, and the most important is that in none of these cases does it appear that there was any method or reference other than the signing or attaching of the plans and specifications by which it could be determined that the plans and specifications attached were the ones relied on by the parties for their guide as to details of construction. Here the contract signed by both parties referred to plans and specifications to be prepared by Mr. Haley, the architect, and, turning to the plans and specifications attached to the contract, we find that they go together and contain on their face the information that they were prepared for the construction of the house of the plaintiff and on property particularly described, to wit, precisely the same property described in the contract. In the second place, the plans and specifications contain the signature of one of the parties to the contract, to wit, the contractor, and is indorsed by the county recorder, as 'filed at the request of the owner.' The plaintiff's counsel argues (and not without force) that this is a sufficient signing to meet the requirements of the contract, as it indicates an intention on the part of both parties to regard this as their contract and binding upon them. I might find more difficulty in satisfying my mind on the sufficiency of the execution if the argument as to the sufficient signing was the only answer to the attack made upon the contract; but an inspection of the plans and specifications shows clearly, irrespective of any signing of the contract, that they were made as contemplated by the parties; and these plans and specifications are the ones referred to in the contract which is signed by the parties. 'That is certain which can be made certain' is applicable here, because from an inspection of the instruments as a whole it can be determined with certainty that the plans and specifications attached are those referred to in the contract.

"The rule by which we are bound is that we must determine from an inspection of the writing, without resort to parol testimony, what the parties intended to rely upon as their guide in the performance of the things to be done; and all the Supreme Court cases cited by counsel for the defendants were considered as coming within this rule. If the instrument, as a whole, makes certain what that intention was, it will suffice, and no omission which does not cause uncertainty, or tend to mislead, will be allowed to stand in the way of upholding the contract, and to my mind, in this case, it can determine without resorting to parol testimony that the plans and specifications attached are the ones which the parties intended; hence, in my judgment, this case does not come within the rule."

The validity of the contract, then, being determined, the court by its order distributed the fund among the various claimants. While the court erred under decisions of our Supreme Court announced since the trial of this cause in awarding preference to labor lienors and in allowing them attorney's fees, as well as attorney's fees to the materialmen, appellants did not serve notice of appeal upon any of the lien claimants to whom such rights had been given, and make no point, if in fact any could be made, that the allowance of an attorney's fee, as between the appellants, materially prejudiced either in his rights. The judgment, in so far as it affects the defendants other than appellants, has become final, and we see no prejudicial error in the record open to correction.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

LARUE v. DAVIES. (Civ. 478.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Sept. 9, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 5, 1908.)

1. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 13*)—REMOVAL FOR NEGLECT OF DUTY—SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS—ACCUSATION—SUFFICIENCY.

Pen. Code, § 772, provides for the removal by summary proceedings of public officers accused of neglecting their duties. Section 415 provides that every person who maliciously and willfully disturbs the peace by fighting, etc., is guilty of a misdemeanor. Pol. Code, § 4176, subdvs. 1, 2, 3, make it the duty of the sheriff to preserve the peace and to prevent all breaches of the peace, etc., which come to his knowledge. Section 4315 makes these subdivisions applicable to constables. Held that, in a proceeding to remove a constable for neglect of duty, an accusation alleging that a number of persons "willfully and unlawfully" disturbed the peace by fighting in the streets, and that defendant refused to prevent them, etc., was sufficient, though it did not allege that such persons "maliciously" disturbed the peace, since fighting is in itself unlawful, and under Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 4, providing that the word "maliciously" imports an intent to do a wrongful act, the allegation that such persons willfully and unlawfully disturbed the peace sufficiently indicated the intent.

2. SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES (§ 13*)—CONSTABLES—REMOVAL FOR NEGLECT OF DUTY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In summary proceedings to remove a constable for neglect of duty in failing to prevent a disturbance of the peace, evidence held sufficient to support findings against defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; H. M. Alberry, Judge.

Summary proceedings on the accusation of D. H. Larue against T. E. Davies for the removal of defendant from the office of constable for neglect of duty. From a judgment of removal, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. L. Donohoe and Frank Freeman, for appellant. Seth Millington, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal from a judgment removing defendant from the office of constable of Princeton township in Colusa county. The proceedings were taken under section 772 of the Penal Code providing for the "removal of public officers by summary proceedings," and were based upon a written accusation signed and verified by plaintiff charging defendant with refusal and neglect to perform the official duties pertaining to his office in that "on the 27th day of March, 1907, at and in the town of Princeton in Colusa county, state of California, and in said township, a large number of persons on the streets of said town, did then and there willfully and unlawfully disturb the peace of said neighborhood and of said plaintiff by threatening, traducing, quarreling, and fighting with one another; and did then and there use vulgar, profane, and indecent language that was heard by all passersby on said streets; that said defendant was present and a witness to all and each of said acts * * * and did willfully, knowingly, and unlawfully refuse and neglect to preserve the peace, or to make any effort to prevent the same; that said defendant had full power, authority, and ability to do and perform all and each of the things herein alleged to have been refused and neglected to be done by him."

Appellant contends: (1) that the written accusation does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (2) the judgment is not justified by the findings of fact; and (3) the findings of fact are not justified by the evidence.

The first two grounds may be considered together, as it is admitted that the findings follow the averments of the accusation. Hence, if the objections to the latter be not well founded, it must be conceded that the findings support the judgment. The contention is made that the duties of the constable are defined by statute, and that the facts alleged in the accusation fall short of bringing the case within the scope and purview of said statutory definition. The particular objection made by appellant is that it does not appear that an offense was being committed by any one at the time and place alleged in the accusation. Therefore it is insisted no duty was cast upon the constable to take any affirmative action. If we are to look to the statute for a specific justification of the charge, it will be found in subdivisions 1, 2, or 3 of section 4176 of the Political Code. By section 4315 of the same Code these subdivisions are made applicable to a constable, and they provide that he must: "(1) Preserve the peace. (2) Arrest and take before the nearest magistrate for examination, all persons who attempt to commit or who have committed a public offense. (3) Prevent and suppress all affrays, breaches of the peace, riots and insurrections which may come to his knowledge." From the averments of the accusation it appears clear enough that certain persons were perpetrating a breach of the peace and that the constable was present. Therefore it was plainly his duty to prevent or suppress the disturbance. His inaction under the circumstances alleged amounted to a willful neglect of duty, and rendered him liable to removal from office if effect is to be given to said section 772 of the Penal Code.

However, it is argued by appellant that the facts charged do not amount to a disturbance of the peace, for the reason that a material element of the offense as defined in section 415 of the Penal Code is omitted from the accusation. That section provides that "every person who maliciously and willfully disturbs the peace or quiet of any neighborhood or person by loud or unusual noise, or by tumultuous or offensive conduct, or threatening, traducing, quarreling, challenging to fight or fighting * * * or uses any vulgar, profane or indecent language within the presence or hearing of women or children in a loud and boisterous manner is guilty of a misdemeanor." The latter clause must be eliminated, as claimed by appellant, since there is no allegation that the language was used in the presence of women or children or in "a loud and boisterous manner." And it is urged that the accusation is not brought within the terms of the first clause, since there is no allegation that the parties who were engaged in fighting "maliciously" disturbed the peace. But it is alleged that they "willfully and unlawfully" disturbed the peace, and we consider this sufficient to meet the requirement of the statute. The word "maliciously" imports "an intent to do a wrongful act." Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 4. This intent is sufficiently indicated by the allegation that the parties willfully and unlawfully disturbed the peace by fighting in the streets. "Fighting" has a well-defined meaning, and is itself unlawful, and it is hard to conceive how persons could willfully and unlawfully disturb the peace by fighting without having "the intent to do a wrongful act." It is manifest, of course, that the accusation is concerned with the commonplace fistcuffs involving assault and battery, and it does not contemplate the more respectable if none the less cruel exhibitions of skill and endurance conducted according to Marquis of Queensbury rules under the auspices of some domestic incorporated club sanctioned by the Legislature. Pen. Code, § 412. We conclude without hesitation that, where two or more persons on the streets of Princeton willfully and unlawfully disturb the peace of the neighborhood by fighting, they are certainly committing a public offense, and we are unable to resist the conviction that, if a peace officer is present, he cannot be a passive spectator and discharge the duties of his office. We may admit that the accusation is somewhat uncertain in the respects indicated by appellant, but, conceding for the purpose of the argument that the requirements for an indictment or information are applicable to an "accusation," we find a ready answer in the suggestion that no objection whatever to its sufficiency was made in the court below, and it is clear that the facts alleged and the corresponding findings, if defectively stated, furnish ample support for the judgment.

In considering the sufficiency of the evidence there is no reason for any departure from the general rule that the testimony must be taken most strongly against the appellant, and, if we can see any substantial support for the findings, we can go no further. The record shows that several witnesses for the plaintiff testified to facts tending to support the material averments of the accusation. For instance, one said that there were from 20 to 40 men close together on the street. The men were wrangling, quarreling, cursing, and swearing. These men were engaged in that sort of thing for at least 15 or 20 minutes, when a fight took place. "Defendant was near where the men were all of the time, and I did not see him do anything to stop the noise or fight, until it was all over. After it was all over he took hold of one of them, and told him to quit. He did not make any arrest. After the trouble was over the defendant said: 'Hell, if they want to fight, let them fight it out.'" We must accept the testimony as credible and hold that it justified the findings.

Another question of vital importance, not suggested by counsel, but involved in the record, relates to the finality of the judgment. It is not clear that the Supreme Court or this court has jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. In the Matter of Curtis, 108 Cal. 662, 41 Pac. 793, it is said: "By section 772 of the Penal Code the Legislature has provided a manner for the trial of certain misdemeanors in office. * * * These proceedings are intended to be summary, and, as the Legislature has made no provision for a review of the action of the superior court, its judgment is final." There is now a statute authorizing an appeal—section 770 of the Penal Code as amended in 1905—but, as said in the Curtis Case, supra: "By article 6, § 4, Const., the Supreme Court is given appellate jurisdiction in all criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or information in a court of record on questions of law alone. Section 682 of the Penal Code declares that 'every public offense must be prosecuted by indictment or information, except where proceedings are had for the removal of civil officers of the state.' The 'information' here authorized is that named in the Constitution (article 1, § 8) as the equivalent of an indictment and which is to be prepared by the district attorney under the provisions of section 809 of the Penal Code. * * * As the appellate jurisdiction of the court in criminal cases given by the constitution extends only to such as are prosecuted by indictment or information, we have no jurisdiction to entertain the present appeal." In Wheeler v. Donnell, 110 Cal. 655, 43 Pac. 1, it is held that "a proceeding by accusation for alleged misdemeanors in office, under section 772 of the Penal Code, is a criminal proceeding not prosecuted by information or indictment, and is not within the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court."

The District Court of Appeal is given jurisdiction "in questions of law alone, in all criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or information in a court of record, excepting criminal cases where judgment of death has been rendered." Article 6, § 4, Const. Cal. As this is a criminal proceeding not prosecuted by indictment or information, unless we are prepared to hold that the Legislature can enlarge the appellate jurisdiction of the courts beyond what the constitution provides, the conclusion would seem to follow that the appeal should be dismissed.

But the judgment, for reasons stated, should be upheld, and, as the question of jurisdiction has not been discussed by counsel, we do not decide it.

The judgment is affirmed.

2. SALES (§ 69*)—BILL OF SALE—CONSTRUCTION—PROPERTY TRANSFERRED.

A debtor, in satisfaction of his debt, conveyed to a creditor real estate, together with the appurtenances and improvements thereon and connected therewith. On the same date, he executed a bill of sale, conveying to the creditor all the fences and buildings, and all engines, pumps, appurtenances, and pipe lines, scales, watering troughs, and other property of like character situated on or connected with the real estate, together with all of the appurtenances used in connection with the property situated on the real estate or in the vicinity thereof. At the time of the execution of the conveyance and bill of sale, a dairy and a slaughtering and butcher business were conducted on the premises. The debtor vacated the premises, and the creditor took possession of all the property. Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by the Houghton Company against J. W. Kennedy and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

P. Bernard and Francis C. Huebner, for appellants. Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an action in claim and delivery, to recover possession of certain property taken from the possession of plaintiff by defendants. The property sued for consists of an engine and boiler, a bunkhouse, shafts and piping, fencing, sheds, a Howe scales, and a centrifugal pump. Plaintiff recovered judgment for the possession of all of said property, and defendants have appealed to this court from the judgment and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial.

The only point relied on for a reversal of either the judgment or the order is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of fact that, at the time of the bringing of the suit, plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the property sued for. Inasmuch as the appeal was not taken from the judgment until more than six months after the entry thereof, it cannot be considered. Code Civ. Proc. § 939. This is of no practical importance, however, as the point relied on is fully presented by the appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, the reversal of which would have the effect of vacating the judgment. All of the property at one time belonged to defendant J. W. Kennedy. Plaintiff claims to have received title to the property in dispute from said J. W. Kennedy in April, 1905. It is insisted by defendants that the property in dispute was never transferred or sold to plaintiff by defendant J. W. Kennedy, and it is also claimed that prior to the alleged transfer and sale to plaintiff by J. W. Kennedy, all of the property sued for was sold by J. W. Kennedy to defendant W. S. Kennedy, and that he, by virtue of such sale, was the owner thereof, and entitled to the possession thereof when this action was brought.

We shall first take up the contention that the property sued for was never transferred or sold by defendant J. W. Kennedy to plaintiff. On the 1st day of October, 1901, J. F. Houghton (the predecessor in interest of the Houghton Company) leased to defendant J. W. Kennedy certain real and personal property. Said defendant became greatly indebted to plaintiff, for which plaintiff held notes of said defendant, and in April, 1905, said defendant had a settlement with plaintiff, whereby plaintiff released said defendant from his obligations under said lease, and delivered up and canceled the notes of said defendant held by plaintiff. In consideration thereof, and of said settlement, defendant J. W. Kennedy and his wife executed to plaintiff a deed dated April 18, 1905, conveying, with other lands, all of block 8 in the town site of Rolinda, Fresno county, together with the appurtenances and improvements thereon and connected therewith. They also executed and delivered to plaintiff a bill of sale, of the same date, in the words following, to wit: "This is to certify, that for value received, the undersigned, J. W. Kennedy and Margaret Kennedy, his wife, have assigned, transferred and delivered unto the Houghton Company, a corporation, all of their right, title, estate, claim or interest in or to all of the following described personal property, and appurtenances to real estate, to wit: All of the fences and buildings of every description, and all engines, pumps, appurtenances and pipe lines, scales, watering troughs and other property and appurtenances of like character and description, all situated upon or connected with the lands and property described in a certain lease between J. F. Houghton and J. W. Kennedy dated October 1, 1901, and the lands and property described in a certain trust deed from said J. W. Kennedy and wife to W. B. Houghton and H. F. Gordon, trustees for J. F. Houghton, dated the 15th of December, 1898, and recorded in volume 220 of deeds, page 430 et seq., Fresno County Records; together with and including all of the connections and appurtenances used in connection with said property situated upon said lands, or in the vicinity thereof, including any such property situated upon or extending through or under the town site of Rolinda, or through or under the streets, roads or highways thereon, or in the vicinity thereof.

* * * Said Kennedy and his wife, by the terms of the bill of sale, warranted the property transferred to be free and clear of all liens or incumbrances made or permitted by them or either of them. The trust deed mentioned described said block 8 of the town site of Rolinda. At the time of the execution of the bill of sale, and for some time prior thereto, a dairy and a slaughtering and butcher business were conducted on the premises described. Both defendants vacated the premises at or shortly after the settlement effected between plaintiff and J. W. Kennedy, and the same, and all the property now in dispute, seems to have been taken possession of by plaintiff, and so remained, without any claim being made thereto by either defendant, until the latter part of the following August, when defendants forcibly took possession of the property now in dispute.

Appellants first take up the ownership of the Howe scales and certain fencing, making a chute through which to run cattle, from the scales to the slaughterhouse. It is not contended that these scales and fencing were not situated upon block 8. They are therefore clearly within the terms of the bill of sale, which assigns "all of the fences, * * * scales, * * * upon or connected with" said block 8. The bill of sale was not intended to convey only such property as was appurtenant to the real estate. Such property passed under the deed of block 8, executed at the same time. The bill of sale in terms clearly passed all strictly personal property situated upon block 8. Appellants, however, point to certain testimony, given by defendant J. W. Kennedy, to the effect that he had, by oral agreement with Chittenden, the representative of plaintiff, reserved the scales, and insist that this evidence was not contradicted. Passing the objection to this argument that such evidence was clearly an attempt to modify and contradict the unambiguous terms of a written agreement, we think the evidence of Mr. Chittenden does, in effect, contradict such evidence. He had given evidence for plaintiff as to what took place between himself and J. W. Kennedy at the time referred to by said Kennedy, and as to what personal property he had agreed might be reserved and removed by J. W. Kennedy. It did not include any scales or fencing. Kennedy's own practical construction of the verbal agreement seems to accord with this, for, while he executed a writing at the time of the settlement, agreeing to remove his effects within three days, he never under such agreement attempted to remove the scales or fencing. We think it equally clear, that all of the other property in dispute is covered by the terms of the bill of sale. While some of it, probably, was not actually upon block 8, it was all in the immediate vicinity thereof, and all was upon the town site of Rolinda, and all was used in connection with block 8, and the property situate thereon, and comes within the clause, "Together with and including all of the connections and appurtenances used in connection with said property situated upon said lands, or in the vicinity thereof, including any such property situated upon or extending through or under the town site of Rolinda, or through or under the streets, roads or highways thereon or in the vicinity thereof." For instance, the boiler was in a shed or building situate on block 8. This boiler supplied steam to the engine, which operated the pump. The engine and pump were in a tankhouse, which, though probably not on block 8, was in the street bordering block 8, and was connected with the shed containing the boiler—one wall serving for the two structures. The engine and pump forced water to a tank, from which water was conveyed through pipes to the dwelling house on the premises, and various watering troughs on the premises used to supply stock with water. There was no other engine on or about the premises. It is the only engine that could possibly have been designated by the words of the bill of sale "all engines." The language of the bill of sale is very broad and comprehensive, and we think the court was justified in concluding that all the property in dispute came within its terms.

Appellants' second general contention is that the evidence shows without conflict that, before the assignment relied on by plaintiff, J. W. Kennedy had, for a valuable consideration, sold all the property in dispute to W. S. Kennedy. Respondent makes answer to this contention that the evidence is sufficient to support the conclusion that no sale in fact took place, that the assignment relied on was never intended, as between J. W. Kennedy and W. S. Kennedy, to pass title at all, but that the transfer was a sham and merely colorable, and also that whatever sale or transfer did take place was not accompanied by an immediate delivery, nor followed by an actual and continual change of possession, and was therefore void, under section 3440 of the Civil Code, as against plaintiff, which it is claimed was a subsequent purchaser in good faith. While the evidence is such that the court might have found in favor of defendants' contention, we think there is sufficient in the record to justify the court in finding in favor of plaintiff as to either of the contentions of plaintiff. Where there is a conflict in the evidence, or where different conclusions as to the facts may fairly be drawn from the evidence and circumstances proved, this court cannot interfere with the determination of the trial court as to the facts. The transfer relied on by defendant took place on or about May 4, 1904. W. S. Kennedy is the son of J. W. Kennedy, and on said date, and for some time prior thereto, had been working for him on the premises. Both continued thereafter to work on the premises in carrying on the operations and business of the ranch. At the time of the alleged sale to W. S. Kennedy the father was much indebted, some of the claims against him seeming to be considered by him as unjust. He continued actively to assist in the operations and business carried on at the ranch, until the settlement with plaintiff, without any compensation, or any agreement for any compensation other than as stated by W. S. Kennedy: "We were to pay off these debts, * * * to pay off all of his debts." The bill of sale between J. W. Kennedy and W. S. Kennedy, although specifying many items, does not, in terms, mention any of the property now in dispute, save "one engine and boiler." As is usual in cases of this character, the evidence and circumstances are such that different conclusions as to the facts might well be drawn by different minds. What the actual facts were was peculiarly a matter to be determined by the trial court. Claudius v. Aguirre, 89 Cal. 501, 26 Pac. 1077. No good purpose can be served by a detailed discussion of the evidence. It is sufficient to say that we think the court was justified in finding for plaintiff upon all the questions arising out of the alleged sale of the property in dispute to defendant W. S. Kennedy.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 342*)—EVIDENCE—COMPETENCY—MOTIVE.

The reasons of a witness for doing a particular act are not admissible, unless intent is the gist of the crime, and the witness is the one whose intent is the subject of inquiry.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 342.*]

7. RAPE (§ 38*)—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY—MOTIVE.

In a rape prosecution, the evidence tending to show that prosecutrix and another woman were in bed with two men when the alleged rape occurred, a question to the other woman as to why she got in bed with the man was properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Dec. Dig. § 38.*]

8. WITNESSES (§ 357*)—IMPEACHMENT—BELIEF UNDER OATH—COMPETENCY OF QUESTION.

A witness, called to impeach another by showing the latter's reputation to be bad, may be asked whether he would believe such other under oath, from what he knows of his general reputation; the adoption of the Code not having changed the rule.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Witnesses, Cent. Dig. § 1158; Dec. Dig. § 357.*]

9. WITNESSES (§ 357*)—IMPEACHMENT—MODE OF IMPEACHMENT.

That a witness may be impeached by proof of his general reputation would not prevent his further impeachment by showing his lack of credibility under oath.

10. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 814*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

An instruction not applicable to the case was properly refused in a criminal prosecution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1980-1985; Dec. Dig. § 814.*]

11. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 809*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTION.

An instruction that, if the evidence points to two conclusions, one consistent with guilt and the other with innocence, the jury must reject the former and adopt the latter and acquit, was properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 809.*]

12. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 822*)—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—INNOCENCE OF ACCUSED.

An instruction was proper that, if two opposing conclusions could with equal propriety be drawn from the evidence, the one favoring innocence should be adopted, where the jury were also instructed that a conclusion favoring guilt could only be adopted when convincing beyond a reasonable doubt, as the entire charge should be considered together.

13. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 789*)—INSTRUCTIONS—REASONABLE DOUBT—NECESSITY OF INSTRUCTION.

All instructions, which direct the jury to convict, properly include the element of accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1904-1922; Dec. Dig. § 789.*]

14. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES—REJECTION OF TESTIMONY FALSE IN PART.

An instruction that, if the jury believe from the evidence that any witness has willfully testified falsely to any material fact, "either at the preliminary examination of this case or at this trial," it might reject "her" or "his" (the) entire testimony (of such witness) was modified by eliminating the words quoted, and adding those in parentheses. Held that, if the instruction as given in the language of the Code was improper, as invading the province of the jury, the refusal to give as requested was not reversible error.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3163; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

15. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—INSTRUCTIONS—HARMLESS ERROR.

Instructions, given pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, providing that on proper occasions the jury should be instructed that a witness, false in one part of his testimony, is to be distrusted in others, whether or not violative of the Constitution as invading the province of the jury, contained only commonplace matters which the jury would be presumed to know without instruction, and, if not in fact prejudicial, are not ground for reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3154; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

16. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—INSTRUCTIONS—IMPEACHMENT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, permits a witness to be impeached by showing that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony. The trial court instructed that a witness may be impeached by contradictory evidence, or by evidence that his general reputation for truth is bad, but refused to add that he could be impeached by the fact that he had given testimony at other times inconsistent with his present testimony; there being testimony to which the requested instruction was applicable, and which would have been seriously affected by it. Held, that the additional instruction should have been given.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1889-1894; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

17. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 757*)—INSTRUCTIONS—PROVINCE OF JURY—EFFECT OF EVIDENCE.

An instruction, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, permitting a witness to be impeached by showing that he had made statements at other times inconsistent with his present testimony, would not be objectionable as invading the province of the jury; the statute not relating to the effect of evidence, but to its admission and application.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1772-1785; Dec. Dig. § 757.*]

18. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 785*)—INSTRUCTIONS—NECESSITY—PURPOSE OF EVIDENCE.

When the evidence is admissible only for a particular purpose, the court should instruct the jury to consider it only for that purpose; and, where impeaching evidence is attempted to be used to sustain the case in chief, the court should instruct that the statements introduced by way of impeachment should not be considered as proving the facts stated, but only to contradict the impeached witness.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 1889-1894; Dec. Dig. § 785.*]

19. RAPE (§ 54*)—PROSECUTION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY—CORROBORATION OF PROSECUTRIX.

In rape, a conviction will be sustained which rests upon the testimony of prosecutrix alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Rape, Cent. Dig. §§ 83, 84; Dec. Dig. § 54.*]

20. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1172*)—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—FAVORABLE TO COMPLAINING PARTY.

In a rape prosecution, an instruction that the jury should scan the testimony of the prosecutrix with great care, and act upon it with caution, except where it was corroborated by other credible evidence, if error, was favorable to accused, and not prejudicial; since a conviction might be had on prosecutrix's testimony alone.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. §§ 3154-3163; Dec. Dig. § 1172.*]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; W. P. James, Judge.

Edwin Corey was convicted of rape, and from the judgment, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, he appealed. Reversed.

F. H. Thompson and Goldberg & Meily, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and George Beebe, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

TAGGART, J. The record shows notices of appeal: From a judgment of conviction of the defendant of the crime of rape, committed by having intercourse with a female child under the age of 16 years, from an order denying a motion for a new trial, and from the verdict of the jury in the cause. Our Code does not provide for the appeal last named, and the record presents nothing for consideration under the appeal attempted by that name.

The offense is alleged to have been committed June 22, 1907, and, as testified to by the prosecutrix, was committed at the house of a woman named Jacoby, while the prosecutrix with defendant, and the Jacoby woman with another man, occupied the same bed for a period of about half an hour, all in a more or less intoxicated condition from drinking beer. And, according to the testimony of prosecutrix, each woman had intercourse with her male companion, although a 16 year old brother of the Jacoby woman, who had not been drinking, was present all the time. The Jacoby woman denied having intercourse with the man with whom she was lying, and all knowledge of defendant having had sexual intercourse with the prosecutrix, although she (the witness) was awake, and talking all the time the party were in the bed together. She, however, testified that when she "got up and went to the bathroom," she was followed by the prosecutrix, and "she [prosecutrix] made complaint to me." What the complaint was is not stated. This woman corroborated the testimony of the prosecutrix that the two men and two women, partly undressed, and more or less intoxicated, occupied the bed together, she fixing the time which the party stayed in bed at from 10 to 15 minutes. A physician, who examined prosecutrix in the early part of the September following, testified that he found prosecutrix's vagina in such a condition as to give presumptive evidence that she had had sexual intercourse some time before. The laceration of the hymen had completely healed, and the conditions were such as he would have expected any time after two weeks from the injury, or perhaps in less time. Neither the 16 year old brother nor the male companion of the Jacoby woman appear to have been witnesses at the trial. On cross-examination of the prosecutrix she was asked: "Who was the first person that you told about being ravished there that night after the occurrence?" To which she answered: "University Station Sergeant Butler." It was then developed that she was arrested about half past 1 o'clock in the morning, wandering about the streets alone, some time in July, about three weeks after the occurrence of June 22d, and again, about two weeks later, arrested about 2 o'clock in the morning under similar circumstances. On redirect examination by the district attorney she was asked, in relation to the arrest: "What was the occasion of your being there, and what made you run away from home." To this defendant objected as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and the court overruled his objection. The witness answered: "Well, because I was worried. I was going to drown myself; that is why." And the district attorney continued the examination: "Q. Worried about what? A. I was afraid I was in a family way, so I run away. (Defendant thereupon moved to strike out the answer, on the general grounds stated in objection to the first-mentioned question, which motion was denied.) Q. And the second time you were arrested out there, about two weeks later, why did you run away that time? (Same objection, ruling, and exception.) A. Worried about the same thing."

The cross-examination tended to show that the condition found by the physician might have been the result of conduct of the prosecutrix after the date of the alleged rape, and the prosecution was entitled, on redirect examination, to show that the presence of the prosecutrix on the street at the times mentioned was not for purposes which might have produced the conditions mentioned by the physician. This would have justified the asking of the first question, but the second question, "Worried about what?" was somewhat ambiguous. It might have elicited an answer which was proper evidence in the case, and did not necessarily call for incompetent testimony. The answer, although responsive, was clearly incompetent, and we think the motion to strike it out should have been granted. People v. Long (Cal. App.) 93 Pac. 387. It is apparent that the district attorney and the trial court both regarded the evidence as competent, since an objection to another question, intended to call for a repetition of the answer, was overruled. The testimony as to the delayed complaint, made to the arresting officer three weeks after the alleged occurrence, was elicited by defendant himself on cross-examination, and its repetition in the redirect examination could not have prejudiced him, even though the evidence itself was not admissible as a part of the case for the prosecution, under the decision in People v. Gonzalez, 6 Cal. App. 255, 91 Pac. 1013, and cases therein cited. The opinion of the prosecutrix that she was afraid she was in a family way was a corroborating circumstance which might have had great weight with the jury, the evidence for the prosecution, disclosed by the record, being inherently weak in character. Upon redirect examination it is proper to permit the witness to state facts and circumstances that tend to correct or repel any wrong impressions or inferences that arise from the matter drawn out on cross-examination, notwithstanding such facts and circumstances may prejudice the case for the defendant. State v. McGahey, 3 N. D. 293, 55 N. W. 753. The cross-examination by the defendant of witnesses for the prosecution may open the door for the admission, on redirect examination, of matters tending to support the case for the prosecution, which would not have been admissible on the case in chief, and such matters will be received, on the ground that they are necessary to explain the testimony elicited upon the cross-examination (Williams v. State, 61 Wis. 281, 21 N. W. 56), or are a part of the transaction which has been inquired into upon the cross-examination (People v. Smallman, 55 Cal. 185); but, on the other hand, the reason of a witness for doing a particular act is not evidence, unless intent be the gist of the crime, and the question be directed to the person whose intent is the subject of the inquiry. In a case of this character, even the reasons of the prosecutrix for her acts in connection with the crime charged, where detailed some time after, were held inadmissible when sought to be introduced in the same manner here attempted, to wit, by redirect examination. People v. Flaherty, 162 N. Y. 532, 57 N. E. 73. A question calling for her state of mind and her reasons for acts done three weeks after the time of the alleged rape, which on its face shows it was asked for the purpose of introducing in evidence a mere opinion or belief of the prosecutrix in support of her case, is clearly improper. The evidence sought to be introduced could have been intended for no other purpose than that the jury might connect it with the occurrence of June 22d, and thereby strengthen the case for the people. There was no error in sustaining an objection to the question addressed to the Jacoby woman as to the intent with which she got into bed with Sullivan.

The practice is not uniform in all the states in respect to the right to ask a witness, called to impeach another by showing the latter's general reputation to be bad, the question, "From what you know of her general reputation for truth and veracity, would you believe her under oath?" but in this state the right has been sustained, and it was long ago said to be too well established to be questioned. Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306. The adoption of the Code has not changed the rule. Wise v. Wakefield, 118 Cal. 107, 50 Pac. 310. The Attorney General contends that the refusal to allow the question to be asked has never been held to be reversible error by the appellate courts of this state, and we are asked to so consider the refusal of the court to permit the defendant to ask the question of the witness Herrin, in relation to the witness Jacoby. This is urged on the ground that the opinion of Mrs. Herrin in this respect could not have influenced the jury in reaching a verdict, and therefore the rejection of the evidence was not prejudicial. Other states which permit the question to be asked have taken a contrary view (Douglass v. State [Tex. Cr. App.] 98 S. W. 840; State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 266, 19 Pac. 749), and we do not see how an appellate court can well say that the opinion of a witness, made competent evidence by the statute and the rules of evidence, can have no effect upon the verdict. The effect must be determined entirely by the person giving the opinion, and this in turn would depend upon the manner of the witness, his credibility, and so forth, which are matters exclusively within the province of the jury. We have considered the effect of the decision in the case of People v. Tyler, 35 Cal. 553, that the witness may be said to be impeached by the proof that his general reputation for truth and veracity is bad in the community in which he resides, without the impeaching witness being himself prepared to say he would not believe the witness under oath. But the adoption of one method of impeachment does not exclude the party adopting it from availing himself of any of the other methods provided by law, however conclusive his first effort may have been. A witness may be willing to testify to the bad general reputation of a witness whom he could not conscientiously say he would not believe under oath. If he adds his individual opinion to the general reputation, we cannot say that such opinion will have no weight with the jury.

The trial court modified certain instructions requested by defendant, and refused to give certain others. The instruction, "The jury are instructed that, if the evidence points (equally) to two conclusions, one consistent with the defendant's guilt, the other consistent with the defendant's innocence, the jury are bound to reject the one of guilt and adopt the one of innocence, and acquit the defendant," was modified by inserting the word "equally," as indicated; and the instruction, "The court instructs you that, if there be two chains of circumstances, one chain of circumstances pointing toward the innocence of this defendant, and the other chain of circumstances pointing toward his guilt, and you are unable to say, beyond a reasonable doubt, which of the chains of circumstances is correct, it will be your duty to follow the chain of circumstances which points toward the defendant's innocence, and acquit him," was refused by the court. It is contended by appellant that under the authority of People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315, 31 Pac. 107, it was error for the trial court to modify the one instruction and to refuse to give the other. The instruction refused is neither within the rule laid down by the case cited, nor within the facts of the case at bar, and no error was committed by refusing to give it. By the modification of the other instruction the court no doubt intended to say that, where the evidence justified equally or alike a conclusion of guilt or innocence, the jury must adopt the latter. The words "points to two conclusions" were not happily chosen in the instruction as requested by defendant, but the ambiguity created by their use was not increased or rendered any more prejudicial to defendant by the interpolation of the word "equally." It was proper for the court to instruct the jury that, if two opposing conclusions could with equal propriety be drawn from the evidence, the one favoring innocence should be adopted, although it is also true that the one favoring the guilt of the accused could only be adopted when convincing beyond a reasonable doubt. The entire charge must be considered together. All instructions given to the jury, which directed them to convict, properly included the element of the guilt of the defendant beyond a reasonable doubt.

The defendant requested the instruction: "If you believe from the evidence that any witness has willfully testified falsely to any material fact, either at the preliminary examination of this case, or at this trial, you are at liberty to reject her or his (the) entire testimony (of such witness)." It was modified by the court by striking out the words in italics and adding those in parentheses, and, as so modified, was given to the jury. The importation into this instruction of the element of a false statement made at a place other than the trial cannot strengthen the right of the defendant to have it given. If he was not entitled to have the instruction given in the language of the Code as it was given by the court, the refusal to give it with the added matter was not reversible error. Section 2061 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, on all proper occasions the jury are to be instructed by the court: "* * * (3) That a witness, false in one part of his testimony, is to be distrusted in others." Instructions of this character, required by the section of the Code mentioned, and held proper, in other jurisdictions, have been frequently criticised as unconstitutional in this state, because invading the province of the jury, and the inferences which the jurors are thereby instructed to draw are declared to be inferences of fact, and not conclusions of law, which the court is justified in making for the jury. Kauffman v. Maier, 94 Cal. 283, 29 Pac. 481, 18 L. R. A. 124. After much consideration of the question the Supreme Court has classified these instructions among those said to contain only mere commonplace matters that jurors would be presumed to know about and act upon in the absence of instructions, and whether violative of the constitutional prohibition against judges charging juries with respect to matters of fact, or not, if not prejudicial to defendant's case, neither the giving nor refusal of them will be held to be a ground of reversal. People v. Wardrip, 141 Cal. 229, 74 Pac. 744; People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 251, 77 Pac. 907; People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 63, 77 Pac. 777; Goss v. Steiger, 148 Cal. 155, 82

Pac. 681; People v. Grill, 151 Cal. 597, 91 Pac. 515; People v. Hower, 151 Cal. 646, 91 Pac. 507.

The trial court also instructed the jury that, "A witness may be impeached, by the party against whom he is called, by contradictory evidence, or by evidence that his general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity is bad." Defendant tendered an instruction to this effect, which also contained the words, "or that he has given testimony at other times inconsistent with his present testimony," which additional words the court refused to give. Section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure expressly declares that a witness may be impeached by showing that "he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony." The Attorney General invokes the rule declared in connection with the instruction last considered, and contends that to so instruct the jury would be to tell them something they already knew. This can hardly be said of a rule provided, not as an instruction upon the effect of the evidence, but as a rule relating to its admission and application. The criticisms of some of the subdivisions of section 2061, referred to above, are not directed against a rule declaring the purpose for which evidence is admitted. There appears to be a peculiar propriety in the court advising the jury as to the application which the law permits to be made of a particular kind of evidence, while instructions as to the effect which should be given the evidence present a different question. Evidence which is intended to be considered only for a limited purpose is often admitted, and it is the duty of the court, upon request of the party affected thereby, to instruct the jury that they shall consider such evidence only for the purpose for which admitted. This rule is applicable to impeaching evidence, and has been so declared in cases in which parties have attempted to use impeaching evidence for the purpose of sustaining the case in chief. In such a case it is proper for the court to instruct the jury that the statements introduced for the purpose of impeaching the witness cannot be considered as establishing the facts stated, but for the sole purpose of contradicting the witness sought to be impeached. Thiele v. Newman, 116 Cal. 571, 48 Pac. 713. There is testimony in the record here to which such an instruction was applicable, and the defendant was entitled to have it given. The testimony of the witness Jacoby was seriously affected by such impeaching testimony, and it was important to the defendant that the jury should have been instructed in this regard.

The instruction requested by the defendant that it was the duty of the jury to scan and scrutinize the testimony of the prosecutrix with great care, and act upon it with caution, was modified by the court by adding the words, "except where it is corroborated by other credible evidence, if you find there is any such in the case." There is no special statutory requirement for such a cautionary instruction in rape cases; neither is there any statutory rule requiring evidence in corroboration of the story of the prosecutrix to be given in order to justify a conviction. On the contrary, it has been held by the Supreme Court of this state that a conviction will be sustained which rests upon the testimony of the prosecutrix alone. People v. Logan, 123 Cal. 414, 56 Pac. 56; People v. Benc, 130 Cal. 168, 62 Pac. 404. It has also been held that to refuse to give an instruction cautioning the jury as to the danger of convicting on the unsupported testimony of the prosecutrix was proper, in a case where there was some corroborating evidence, because the jury might construe such giving to be an intimation from the court that the corroboration was insufficient. People v. Rangod, 112 Cal. 672, 44 Pac. 1071. If there was error in giving the instruction as modified, it is apparent that the error was to the benefit, and not the prejudice, of the defendant.

Judgment reversed.

PEOPLE v. GREGORY. (Cr. 69.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Sept. 9, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 2, 1908.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION (§ 137*) — MOTION TO SET ASIDE—INSUFFICIENT COMPLAINT.

Though the complaint on which the warrant for defendant's arrest issued was insufficient, under Pen. Code, § 1322, because made by his wife, so that it would have been the magistrate's duty, if shown such fact, to dismiss the complaint, yet on a motion to set aside the information the sufficiency of the complaint is immaterial; the information being based on the commitment, and it being enough that this, on its face, was regular and charged an offense within the court's jurisdiction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1144*) — APPEAL — PRESUMPTIONS.

It will be presumed that the evidence on which a commitment was founded was in all respects legally sufficient.

3. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 259*) — COMMITMENT — DESIGNATING OFFENSE.

The commitment, reciting, "it appearing to me that the offense of committing a lewd and lascivious act on the body of a child under the age of 14 years has been committed," designates generally the offense denounced by Pen. Code § 288, which is all that, under section 872, is necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 562; Dec. Dig. § 259.*]

4. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1114*) — APPEAL — REVIEW—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

To authorize review of the denial of an alleged motion to discharge defendant because not brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, the motion and its grounds, the ruling and any exception thereto, must be authenticated in a bill of exceptions, as required by Court of Appeal Rule 29 (64 Pac. xii).

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Dec. Dig. § 1114.*]

5. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 635*)—TRIAL—PUBLICITY.

Defendant was not deprived of his constitutional right to a public trial by the remark of the judge, on refusing to clear the courtroom because he had no power to do so, that, in his judgment, there would be nothing testified to in the case that any right-minded person would desire to hear, though thereupon the entire audience left the room.

6. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 1153*)—DETERMINATION AS TO COMPETENCY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, providing that children under 10 years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly, cannot be witnesses, the ruling of the trial court, after an examination of a witness, more than 10 years old at the time of the trial, but less than that at the time of the matters in question, that she is competent is not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Criminal Law, Cent. Dig. § 3062; Dec. Dig. § 1153.*]

7. WITNESSES (§ 240*)—LEADING QUESTIONS.

Allowing leading questions to a witness, who is a mere child testifying to revolting circumstances, is a matter in the sound discretion of the trial court.

8. CRIMINAL LAW (§ 995*)—JUDGMENT—DESCRIBING OFFENSE.

Though the judgment does not declare the intent with which the act was done, it sufficiently describes the offense to enable one, from it and Pen. Code, § 288, to determine the nature of the offense of which defendant was convicted, and that the punishment imposed was within the prescribed penalty; it reciting that defendant was convicted of the "crime of committing a lewd and lascivious act on and with the body of a child under the age of 14 years."

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Orrin C. Gregory appeals from a conviction. Affirmed.

M. J. Cheatham and N. A. Gernon, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of "committing a lewd and lascivious act upon and with the body of a child under the age of 14 years" and was thereupon sentenced by the court to serve a term of 10 years in the State Penitentiary. The testimony discloses that the person upon whom the offense is charged to have been committed is the minor daughter of the accused. The evidence also shows that the alleged crime was perpetrated a trifle over a year prior to the making of the order by the magistrate holding the defendant to trial, and that at that time the child with whom the alleged act was committed was 9 years of age.

1. The defendant moved to set aside the information filed against him in the superior court by the district attorney, on the ground that, before the filing of the same, he "had not been legally committed by a magistrate." The bill of exceptions shows that said motion was made on the complaint filed before the magistrate, and upon which the warrant for the arrest of the accused was issued, the order of commitment and two affidavits made by the defendant. One of these affidavits alleges that Orra Gregory, who swore to the complaint before the magistrate charging the defendant with the crime for which he was committed, and of which he was informed against by the district attorney, was, at the time said complaint was so sworn to, the wife of the accused. The other, presumably offered as a basis for a motion for a continuance of the preliminary hearing, set forth that the accused was too ill to intelligently and understandingly proceed with said examination at the time the same was called and heard. It is obvious that, if the magistrate, before making the order committing the accused, and before taking any testimony in support of the charge, had been informed in a proper manner of the alleged fact that the party swearing to the complaint was, when said complaint was sworn to, the wife of the defendant, his plain duty under the law would have been to dismiss said complaint, it not appearing that the depositions of any other witnesses were taken by the magistrate before the issuance of the warrant. Section 1322, Pen. Code. But we think the question presented is not reviewable on a motion to set aside the information. The information is not based on the deposition or complaint upon which the warrant was issued, but upon the commitment. In the case of People v. Lee Look, 143 Cal. 219, 76 Pac. 1028, it is said: " * * * But in the case at bar, two years before the motion to dismiss now under consideration was made, the preliminary examination had been held, at which a large amount of testimony had been taken which showed, or strongly tended to show, that appellant had been guilty of murder, and the magistrate had committed him for the crime of murder, and the commitment was in due and sufficient form. The information in this case is based, not on the said deposition, or 'complaint' if that word be preferred, but on the commitment; and under these circumstances the question of the sufficiency of the said deposition to justify the original warrant of arrest is of no consequence"—citing People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 9; People v. Velarde, 59 Cal. 458; People v. Wheeler, 65 Cal. 77, 2 Pac. 892; People v. Staples, 91 Cal. 23, 27 Pac. 523; People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315, 31

Pac. 107; People v. Schorn, 116 Cal. 507, 48 Pac. 495; People v. Cole, 127 Cal. 545, 59 Pac. 984. The case of Ex parte Dimmig, 74 Cal. 164, 15 Pac. 619, was where the petitioner had been arrested on a warrant issued by the magistrate, upon a deposition or "complaint" which had been sworn to on information and belief, and the crime therein charged against the accused was unsupported by any other depositions containing competent evidence bearing upon said crime or connecting the petitioner with the commission thereof. The petitioner was discharged upon habeas corpus, because his arrest was under a void warrant, but his discharge was ordered before any hearing had been had or commitment made or information filed. In the case at bar, as we have seen, the defendant was committed after a preliminary hearing; and, while the character and the extent of the testimony upon which the commitment was founded do not appear, the presumption is that it was in all respects legally sufficient. In any event the commitment alone is the basis of the information; and, if upon its face it was regular, and charged an offense of which the superior court has triable jurisdiction, the fact, if it be a fact, that the accused might have been taken into custody and before the magistrate for preliminary hearing without authority of law cannot be reviewed on a motion to set aside the information, because, after the charge has been examined by a magistrate and the evidence taken, and the examination warrants the commitment of the defendant for trial, the imperfections of the "complaint" are cured. People v. Cole, supra; People v. Warner, 147 Cal. 548, 82 Pac. 196. In other words, the deposition or "complaint," which is authority for the issuance of the warrant of arrest, is functus officio after the examination of the charge and the taking of testimony and the commitment of the accused, and, as the Supreme Court says, is of no consequence on a motion to set aside the information.

2. There is no merit in the contention of appellant that the offense for which he was committed was not properly designated or described in the commitment. The order committing the defendant, in part, is as follows: "It appearing to me that the offense of committing a lewd and lascivious act upon the body of a child under the age of 14 years has been committed," etc. Thus, and by reference to section 288 of the Penal Code, defining the crime, it will be seen that the commitment designates the offense generally, and this meets the requirements of section 872 of the Penal Code. People v. Bianchino, 5 Cal. App. 633, 91 Pac. 112.

3. The point, urged by counsel for appellant in his brief, that the court below should have granted an alleged motion by defendant that he be discharged, on the ground that he had not been brought to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, cannot be reviewed, for the reason that said motion and the proceedings thereon are not authenticated in a bill of exceptions. People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 251, 77 Pac. 907. The grounds of the motion, and all the proceedings had thereon, the ruling of the court on the motion, and the exception to the ruling, if any be taken by the defendant, must be authenticated, as required by rule 29 of this court (64 Pac. xii), in order to authorize this court to consider and review said ruling.

4. After the jury had been selected and sworn to try the case, and before the taking of testimony was begun, the assistant district attorney suggested that, owing to the revolting nature of the offense with which the defendant was charged, there would necessarily be introduced testimony disclosing the disgusting acts constituting the crime of which the defendant was accused, and that therefore the courtroom should be cleared of all spectators. The defendant's counsel objected to such an order, and the judge thereupon said that, if he had the power, he would take great pleasure in excluding all persons from the courtroom during the trial, but that the court had no such power, and to do so would be error. The judge then concluded as follows: "I deem it proper to say, however, that there will be nothing testified to in this case, in my judgment, that any right-minded person would desire to hear, and while I can't order anybody from the courtroom, I certainly make the statement for their benefit, and leave it to them to do as they please." To this statement the defendant took an exception. In his oral argument and in his brief counsel for the defendant urges that the injury resulting to the defendant from the court's remarks lay in the fact that the entire audience left the courtroom immediately after the remarks by the court, and that the effect of the court's statement was to deprive the defendant of his constitutional right to a public trial. The objection and exception to the court's statement upon that ground cannot be of any avail to the defendant. The court did not order the spectators to leave and remain from the courtroom during the trial, but explicitly declared that it had no power to do so. When the spectators withdrew from the room they certainly must have done so with a full understanding, from the remarks of the court, that they were not compelled under the law or the ruling of the court to retire. Whether they did or not, it is very plain that an order excluding spectators was not made by the court, and that, if the defendant was deprived of the high constitutional privilege of having the public listen to the witnesses detail facts and circumstances tending to prove against him the commission of acts, the offensive and noxious odors from which would drive a polecat into bankruptcy, it was due less to the remarks of the court than to the commendable sense of decency with which the citizens of Red Bluff comported themselves with reference to the trial.

5. The defendant insists that the court erred in permitting, over his objection, the witness Mary Gregory, aged 10 years, to testify, the specific contention being that she was, by reason of her age, an incompetent witness, under the provisions of section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section declares that "children under 10 years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly," cannot be witnesses. It appears that the witness at the time the offense is alleged to have been perpetrated was under the age of 10 years, and it is therefore claimed that, notwithstanding the fact that when she was called as a witness at the trial she was over the age of 10 years, she was nevertheless a witness of the class referred to in said section 1880. There appears to be some force in that contention, yet, under the terms of the section, it was for the court to determine whether she was incompetent as a witness for the reasons therein mentioned. "The burden is upon the person who objects to the child being a witness to show that he is incapable, and the determination of the judge upon such objection, and examination of the child, is not a matter for review any more than is his ruling upon the capacity of an adult who may be offered as a witness. People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 469, 44 Pac. 186. See, also, People v. Welsh, 63 Cal. 167, and People v. Swist, 136 Cal. 522, 69 Pac. 223. The court examined the witness to determine the question of her competency, and, having found that she was competent, we cannot disturb the ruling.

6. We do not think that the court below abused its discretion in allowing certain leading questions to be put to the prosecutrix, who was, as seen, a mere child. The witness was no doubt without previous experience as a witness, except such experience as she acquired on the occasion of the preliminary examination, and was undoubtedly unfamiliar with court proceedings. In reply to a question by the district attorney, not leading in form, the prosecutrix first stated: "Well, papa told mama he was feeling bad, and he told her to go water the mules, and when he sent Alvin [her brother] down to the turkey's nest to get the eggs and caught ahold of my arm and dragged me around the corner of the house." What occurred thereafter was brought out by questions of rather a leading character. But, considering the age and sex of the witness, and the revolting circumstances to which she was required to testify, we can readily understand that it would have been with great difficulty that the facts and details of defendant's monstrous act could have otherwise been intelligently brought out. The examination of a witness in the trial of a case, or the manner of such examination, particularly as to the form of the question, is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, who must determine whether or not leading questions should be allowed in the examination of a particular witness from all the circumstances present and under his immediate observation. It is only where it clearly appears that the court has abused its discretion in the allowance of questions, leading or suggestive, in the form in which they are propounded, that this court would be authorized to interfere by reviewing the objections and exceptions to such questions. Moran v. Abbey, 63 Cal. 58; People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 19 Pac. 161; People v. Harlan, 133 Cal. 19, 65 Pac. 9. We do not think that any abuse of discretion by the court below in the respect referred to is shown by the record.

7. The defendant, having been sworn and testified in his own behalf, was asked, on cross-examination by the district attorney, whether he had not "on several occasions endeavored to excite the passions of that little girl." The court sustained an objection to the question, saying that it was not proper to prove such misconduct. Counsel for defendant thereupon took an exception to the question, and assigned it as prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney. We do not know but that the question was proper and within the principles announced in People v. Castro, 133 Cal. 11, 65 Pac. 13, People v. Koller, 142 Cal. 621, 76 Pac. 500, and People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463. It is, at least in our judgment, a debatable proposition whether the question was proper or not, and it certainly cannot be held that, where a question is propounded to a witness calling for testimony, the legal propriety of which may be shrouded in some doubt, and objection is sustained to such question, the mere asking of such question will constitute such misconduct upon the part of the prosecuting officer as to call for a reversal. Besides, the district attorney, after the court ruled the question out, did not persist in bringing out the testimony sought to be elicited by it, and the court's statement in ruling on the objection to the question, to the effect that the testimony it called for was improper to go before the jury, was enough to inform the triers that they were not privileged to draw an inference from the question unfavorable to the defendant. The case here, upon this point, is radically different from the case of People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 71 Pac. 564, where the district attorney persistently attempted to get before the jury the fact that the defendant had once been arrested on another charge than that for which he was on trial, after the court had repeatedly ruled against him, and told him the testimony he was seeking to bring out was manifestly improper.

8. It is contended that the judgment is void because, while it recites that the defendant was convicted of the "crime of committing a lewd and lascivious act upon and with the body of a child under the age of 14 years," it does not declare the intent with which such act was done. It is not necessary to describe the offense in the judgment, as the contention of counsel necessarily assumes, with the technical precision and nicety required in its statement in an information, and if the crime is referred to in the judgment under its generic designation it is sufficient. "A recital in the judgment that the defendant was found guilty of the offense of gaming at tan as charged in the information is equivalent to the recital that the defendant was found guilty of gaming at tan by carrying on and conducting the same for money or its equivalent." Syllabus, People v. Sam Lung, 70 Cal. 515, 11 Pac. 673; Ex parte Murray, 43 Cal. 455. The principal object of the requirement that the judgment shall contain in its recitals a proper description of the offense of which the defendant has been convicted, and for which he is punished, is to show that the court has remained within its jurisdiction in the matter of the admeasurement of the punishment inflicted. The judgment here recites that the defendant was convicted of the "crime of committing a lewd and lascivious act upon and with the body of a child under the age of 14 years, committed upon the — day of August, 1906," and further recites the fact of his arraignment and plea of "not guilty," and his conviction of said crime, on the 20th day of December, 1907. There can be no difficulty in determining, from the judgment as thus described, and by an examination of section 288 of the Penal Code, the nature of the offense of which the defendant was convicted, and that the punishment imposed is within the penalty prescribed by said section.

The instructions embody a fair and correct statement of the law bearing upon the charge and the proven facts, and, while the testimony upon which a conviction was had is, in the main, from the lips of the prosecutrix alone, it is sufficient to support the verdict.

Finding no prejudicial error in the record, the judgment and order are affirmed.

In re LEAVITT et al. (Civ. 494.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 9, 1908. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Nov. 2, 1908.)

1. TRUSTS (§ 11*)—EXPRESS TRUSTS—PURPOSES TO CONVEY TO REMAINDERMAN.

Under Civ. Code, tit. 4, § 847, providing that trusts in real property can be only those specified in this title, and section 857 thereof, permitting express trust to be created to sell real property or mortgage it for the benefit of legatees, etc., to receive rents and profits and pay them to the beneficiary, etc., and to receive rents and profits and accumulate them for certain purposes, a trust to convey property after the death of a life tenant was void.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 11.*]

2. TRUSTS (§ 52*)—MANAGEMENT—DUTIES OF TRUSTEE.

Where property was conveyed in trust to keep the premises insured, and pay taxes, and pay the net income to the life tenant and convey to others on her death, the trust to convey being void, the only duties left for the trustee to perform were the collection and payment of rents and the payment of taxes.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Cent. Dig. § 72; Dec. Dig. § 52.*]

3. TRUSTS (§ 319*)—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE—SUCCESSIVE TRUSTEES.

By Civ. Code, § 2274, except as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1700, relating to the compensation of testamentary trustees, where a declaration of trust does not fix the trustee's compensation, he is entitled to the same compensation as an executor. Code Civ. Proc. § 1618, provides that, when no compensation is provided by will, an executor must be allowed commissions upon the amount of the estate accounted for by him at the rate of 7 per cent. for the first $1,000, 4 per cent. for the next $9,000, etc. Appellant was appointed trustee under a trust to insure the property, pay the taxes and insurance, and pay the net income to the life tenant, appellant having succeeded two other trustees who had served 14 and 7 years, respectively, appellant having served 4 months, and his account as filed showed that his services during that time consisted in paying the taxes and insurance with the life tenant's money, and collecting and paying over 5 months' rent at $100 per month, less $10 a month allowed him by the court. Appellant's predecessors made no charge for their services, but appellant was allowed a commission of 7 per cent. on $1,000 and 4 per cent. on $3,000, the sums together being the amount for which the life estate was sold, from which was deducted his monthly allowance by the court. Held that, even if appellant could claim commissions on the basis of the corpus of the property, he was not entitled to the commissions to which his predecessors would have been entitled had they not waived compensation, as their waiver of compensation inured to the benefit of the beneficiaries, and not to the benefit of their successor.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 319.*]

4. TRUSTS (§ 315*)—COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEE—AMOUNT.

Respective whether appellant was entitled to compensation under the statutes on the basis of the purchase price of the life estate, or only to commissions on the money actually accounted for by him, the compensation allowed him was liberal under the circumstances, and he cannot complain thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trusts, Dec. Dig. § 315.*]

5. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS (§ 499*)—COMPENSATION OF ADMINISTRATORS—SUCCESSIVE ADMINISTRATORS.

Each successive administrator is not entitled to the same right of compensation, but their claims for compensation must be considered with reference to the rights of the others; the estate being administered as an entirety.

circumstances, whether appellant's compensation should have been allowed on the amount actually received and disposed of by him, or on the amount for which the life-tenant sold her estate as was done, need not be determined, respondent not objecting to the compensation as allowed, so that the order will be affirmed.

7. TRUSTS (§ 61*)—EXISTENCE—TERMINATION BY DEATH OF PARTIES.

Where property was conveyed to a trustee to collect rents and pay taxes and pay over the net income to the life tenant, and, on her death, to convey to others, the requirement to convey being void as not being a trust allowed by statute, the trust terminated ipso facto on the death of the life tenant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. A. Hosmer, Judge.

In the matter of the trust created by deed of Charles H. Leavitt and others to Jerome B. Fargo. From an order fixing the compensation of the trustee, the trustee appealed. Order affirmed.

Geo. B. Merrill, for appellant. Edmund Tauszky, for respondent.

HART, J. On the 20th day of October, 1882, Charles H. Leavitt, Simeon Sawyer, and Mary A. Sawyer, his wife, conveyed to Jerome B. Fargo a portion of 50 vara lot No. 1 in the Western addition, block No. 512, on the northwest corner of Fulton and Divisadero streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, in trust for the following uses and purposes, to wit: First. To keep the buildings on said premises insured, and pay the insurance and taxes on said premises. Second. After payment of the insurance and taxes, to pay the net income of said premises to said Mary A. Sawyer monthly during the term of her natural life. Third. Upon the death of said Mary A. Sawyer to convey said premises to certain designated beneficiaries. Said deed was duly acknowledged and recorded in the office of the county recorder of said city and county on the 20th day of October, 1882. Before being so recorded, said Fargo in writing indorsed upon said deed his acceptance of said trust. Immediately upon the recordation of said deed, said Fargo entered upon and proceeded to discharge the duties of such trustee, and continued to act as such until his death, which occurred on the 6th day of January, 1896. On the 6th day of August, 1896, the court, upon the petition of the parties in interest, appointed John C. Winans as trustee in the place of said Jerome B. Fargo, deceased, and said Winans thereafter duly qualified and then entered upon the discharge of his duties as such trustee, and continued to act as such until his death some time in the year 1903. Frederick Kronenberg, having, by mesne conveyances, succeeded to the interests of all the beneficiaries named in said deed of trust, except the interest of the said Mary A. Sawyer, petitioned the superior court for the appointment of a trustee of said trust to fill the vacancy in said trusteeship created by the death of said Winans, and on the 11th day of November, 1905, in accordance with the prayer of said petition, the court appointed the appellant herein, George B. Merrill, to the position of trustee of said trust. On the 15th day of November, 1905, said Merrill filed an undertaking in accordance with the order of the court appointing him trustee, took his oath of office, and proceeded to perform the duties of his trust. On the 4th day of December, 1905, the court made the following order fixing the compensation of said trustee as such: "On reading and filing the stipulation of the parties herein, it is ordered that George B. Merrill, trustee herein, may retain to his own use, out of his receipts as such trustee, the sum of $10 per month, on the first day of each and every month on account of his compensation for his services as trustee, any further compensation as such trustee to be determined by the court upon the settlement of his final account as such trustee." On the 16th day of March, 1906, a petition, previously filed, praying for the termination of the trust, was heard by the court. In this proceeding the account of the trustee, Merrill, with said trust, was filed and considered. The account exhibited the receipts and disbursements of moneys on account of the trust, and on the 19th of March, 1906, the court made its order allowing and settling said account. On the 23d day of March, the matter having been continued to that day to be heard, the court received testimony and heard arguments as to the matter of the compensation of the trustee for his services in the performance of the duties of the trust, and on the 26th day of March made an order fixing the same at the sum of $190, "less the sum of fifty dollars already paid him"; the same representing a commission of 7 per cent. on $1,000 and 4 per cent. on $3,000 of the sum for which the life estate was sold. Appellant excepted to this order. In this proceeding evidence was heard showing the total value of the trust property to be $25,400, and that Mary A. Sawyer had agreed to sell her life estate in said property for the sum of $4,000 to said Kronenberg and the latter had agreed to buy the same for the consideration named. The evidence upon the points mentioned was not disputed—in truth, the facts thus found were admitted. This appeal is taken from the order fixing the compensation of the trustee for his services as such.

The declaration of trust being silent upon the subject of the trustee's compensation, the regulation or fixing thereof is controlled, by express authority of section 2274 of the Civil Code, by section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The contention of appellant is that he is entitled to compensation based on commissions on the value of the entire trust property. The contention of Kronenberg is that the appellant is entitled, at the most, to compensation only upon the basis of the amount for which the life interest of Mary A. Sawyer was sold, to wit, on said sum of $4,000 "for the portion of the period during which he had served as trustee." Section 2274 of the Civil Code provides in part: "Except as provided in section 1700 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when a declaration of trust is silent upon the subject of compensation, the trustee is entitled to the same compensation as an executor." Section 1700 of the Code of Civil Procedure, supra, relates to the fixing by the court of compensation and the allowance of necessary expenses to be paid to the trustee of a testamentary trust which the trust clause of the testament authorizes to be continued after the distribution of the estate. Under the claim of the appellant, if tenable, that he is entitled to compensation on the corpus of the trust property, and not alone upon the value of the life estate therein of Mary A. Sawyer, the court should have allowed him as compensation, by virtue of the terms of section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an amount aggregating the sum of $851.08, less the sum of $50 already received by him. This figure would represent the legal commissions, not only on the corpus of the trust estate, but also in addition commissions on the amount for which he rendered an account.

It will be observed from the statement of the facts that Fargo served as trustee for 14 years, Winans for 7 years, and the appellant for 4 months. The evidence shows that Fargo and Winans made no charge for their services. The account filed by the appellant as trustee shows that during the brief period of his incumbency in that office, his services consisted exclusively of paying the taxes and insurance on the trust property with money furnished him by Mrs. Sawyer and in the collection of five months' rent at $100 per month and paying the same over to Mrs. Sawyer, less $10 per month which he was authorized by the court's order to retain as part of the compensation to which he was entitled as trustee. Indeed, the services thus enumerated were all that he was required to perform by the terms of the trust. Section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in accordance with the provisions of which, by authority of section 2274 of the Civil Code, the compensation of the appellant must be fixed, the declaration of trust being silent on the subject of compensation, among other things, provides: "When no compensation is provided by the will, or the executor renounces all claim thereto, he must be allowed commissions upon the amount of estate accounted for by him, as follows:" Then follows a specification of the commissions to which under the circumstances mentioned he would be entitled. It is clear from his account that the property in reality accounted for by him consisted entirely of the moneys received by him for the benefit of the life tenant or beneficiary and the money received from Mrs. Sawyer with which to pay insurance and taxes. Undoubtedly the purpose for which a trustee was named in the trust deed was to thus provide for the care and protection of the life interest in the trust property of Mary A. Sawyer and for a proper execution not only of that provision of said trust, but upon the death of the life tenant to convey the property to those entitled to it, under the terms of the deed, in remainder. But the trust to convey being void (Civ. Code, §§ 847 and 857; Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70), there was consequently nothing remaining for the trustee to do but to attend to the matter of the collection of the rents, etc., and paying the taxes and insurance on the property. Whether, however, under the provisions of section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court was right or not in allowing the appellant commissions on the price at which the life estate was sold, instead of upon the money constituting all the tangible property actually accounted for by him, a proposition we are not asked to decide here, we are perfectly satisfied that he is not entitled to commissions upon the corpus of the trust property. And, if the court had made the allowance of his compensation on the value of the entire property, the appellant could not justly claim the full amount of the commissions allowed upon that basis for the shares in such commissions to which his predecessors would, respectively, have been entitled but for their waiver of compensation would have to be deducted. It will not seriously be contended that where there is a succession of administrators of the same estate each shall be entitled to the same rate of compensation, "for, if that were so, the estate might be eaten up beyond the power of prevention." Ord v. Little, 3 Cal. 287, speaking of commissions of an executor under the section of the old probate act, corresponding to section 1618 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As is said in the case of Estate of Barton, 55 Cal. 87: "The administration of an estate is an entirety. There may be different persons in office at different times, or at the same time, but the claim of each to compensation must be considered with reference to the rights of each and all the others." So in the case at bar, if the compensation were to be based on commissions on the value of the entire trust property, the appellant's compensation would have to be adjusted with reference to the rights of his predecessors in the office of trustee.

From what we have said it is obvious that our opinion is that there is no merit in the proposition, which appellant's position necessarily assumes, that the waiving of compensation by his predecessors leaves the field open to him to claim the full commissions which would be allowable on the corpus of the property. Why they waived their right to compensation the record does not inform us, but in doing so they manifestly intended it as a benefit to the beneficiaries of the trust estate—perhaps particularly for the benefit of the life tenant—and not to the appellant or any other person who might succeed to the trusteeship. We have stated that there is no demand here for a decision of the question whether the court should have fixed the rate of appellant's compensation on the amount for which the life estate was sold, its presumable value (Estate of Fernandez, 119 Cal. 579, 585, 51 Pac. 851), or upon the amount actually received and disbursed by him, for the respondent appears to be satisfied with the order appealed from. But it may not be improper to suggest that it has been held by very high authority that the proper basis of compensation in a case in which the character of the trust and the nature and extent of the duties imposed upon the trustees are very much similar to those in the case at bar is the commissions upon the sums of money or their equivalent received and paid out by the trustee. Phoenix v. Livingston, 101 N. Y. 451, 5 N. E. 70. In that case the fee in the trust property did not pass. In this case the trust to convey was a futile attempt to vest the trustee with the fee in the trust property. Hence the situation is the same as if no attempt had been made to pass the fee to the trustee. There was therefore nothing left of the trust but the power in the trustee to execute its terms as to the life estate. He obviously was without power to make a final disposition of the corpus subject to the trust after the termination of the life estate. In other words, upon the termination of the life estate, the trust ipso facto terminated. So it is to be seen the case here is almost, if not quite, identical as to the facts with the case cited. In any event, it is plainly apparent that, considering the labor performed, and a most liberal, even if not a legal, measure of compensating the trustee having been adopted by the court, the appellant has no just reason to complain of the order from which he has appealed, and while, in view of the fact that the respondent does not complain of the order, the same should be affirmed, we refrain from expressing either approval or disapproval of the basis upon which the court below fixed appellant's commissions.

The order is affirmed.

3. BONDS (§ 128*)—PLEADING—VARIANCE.

Where plaintiff alleges and proves facts entitling him to judgment on a joint bond, he may recover, though he goes further, and alleges, but fails to prove, an alteration of the bond, which would entitle him to recovery as on a joint and several bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Cent. Dig. § 215; Dec. Dig. § 128.*]

4. BONDS (§ 120*)—DEFENSES.

Defendants are not precluded from setting up a defense available as against a joint bond, but not as against a joint and several bond, by the fact that plaintiff, in suing on a bond originally joint, alleges that a change in it, making it in form joint and several, was made under such circumstances as to authorize recovery on it as such a bond.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Bonds, Dec. Dig. § 120.*]

5. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY (§ 83*)—ESTOPPEL.

Sureties on a bond are estopped to claim that a change in it, made by another surety before delivery, was without their authority; they, though knowing the obligee was delivering goods on the belief that the alteration was made with their authority, not having notified him to the contrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Union Oil Company of California against the Mercantile Refining Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants T. P. Spiers and others appeal. Affirmed.

P. A. Bergerot and Frank McGowan, for appellants. Stoney, Rouleau & Stoney, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action is upon a bond given to secure the payment, by the Mercantile Refining Company, to the plaintiff of the consideration for oil furnished by the latter to the former. Plaintiff had judgment, from which, and the order denying their motion for a new trial, certain of the sureties have appealed.

The main controversy in the cause grows out of the fact that an alteration was made in the bond after it had been signed, but before it was delivered to and accepted by plaintiff. The change was made by one of the sureties—not an appellant—who added the word “severally,” making the bond in form “joint and several,” instead of “joint” as before the addition. Assuming that the aforesaid interpolation changed the legal effect of the instrument, and therefore constitutes a material alteration, and that it was made without the knowledge or consent of the appellants, then the rule is as stated by them: “It either rendered the instrument absolutely null and void, if the changes were made with the knowledge, express or implied, of the plaintiff, or else left the bond, as it was originally executed, a joint obligation, if the words inserted in it were interlined by a stranger to the bond, or without any fault or without the knowledge of the plaintiff.” In Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 53, 52 Pac. 117, 39 L. R. A. 697, the Supreme Court declares: “The general rule undoubtedly is, as contended by appellant, that any material alteration in the contract avoids it, even in the hands of innocent holders, and prevents recovery upon it to any extent. But this rule has application to cases where such alteration has been made by the payee or party seeking to enforce it. By the later authorities the rule does not apply in cases where the alteration is by a stranger to the contract, and it is now the settled doctrine, in this country at least, that such an act by a stranger, without the privity of the grantee or obligee, does not avoid the contract in its entirety, even though it be without the knowledge or consent of the party to be bound, but amounts to a spoliation merely, which will not prevent a recovery upon the contract in accordance with its original terms, where those terms can be ascertained. And this is obviously upon the principle that the act of a mere interloper without the privity of the parties should not be permitted to defeat a contract to the extent that it would otherwise be valid and binding. And an agent without authority is, in this sense, held to be a stranger to the transaction.” In the case at bar the court found: “That on said date all of said defendants knew that said plaintiff was making deliveries of oil under said contract to said defendant corporation, and intended to make further deliveries of oil thereunder, and they knew that said plaintiff was making such deliveries, and intended to make further deliveries, relying upon the credit of said defendant bondsmen and the validity of said bond. That at said time said plaintiff did not know that said change in said bond was made without the knowledge or consent or authority of all, or any, of said defendants, and did not know said fact until long after the commencement of this action, * * * but said plaintiff believed that said correction or addition of said word ‘severally’ therein was made with the full knowledge, consent, and authority of each of said defendants, and so believed the fact to be until after the commencement of this action.” There is ample evidence to support said finding. Indeed, assuming that said change was made without the consent of appellants, plaintiff had no knowledge of it, and every reason for believing to the contrary. And respondent was without any fault in acting upon its belief that the change was authorized by appellants. Therefore, upon authority, and the most rudimentary principles of equity, appellants are at least bound by the terms of the original contract. The court has, in effect, so held, and the judgment is in accordance with the terms of the bond as it existed prior to said change. The judgment is “that plaintiff * * * do have and recover of defendants, T. P. Spiers, Leo Dietle, Geo. W. C. Baker, Angler Baker, Arthur Dietle, and George F. Ehrenpfort the sum of,” etc. This is the appropriate form of judgment upon a joint, and not several, obligation. The judgment is in harmony with the conclusion of law, is justified by the findings of fact, and is within the issues raised by the pleadings.

It is true that plaintiff alleged in its complaint that the alteration in said bond was made with the knowledge and consent, and by the authority, of all of the defendants, but this allegation, and the corresponding findings of the court, may be disregarded entirely, and still the judgment for plaintiff, for reasons already indicated, must be upheld. The only answer to this consideration attempted by appellants is that: “The suit instituted by the plaintiff to enforce the bond was an action on a ‘joint and several’ bond, and not on a ‘joint’ obligation. The nature of the action was prejudicial to the appellants, in this: That it precluded them, or either of them, from urging, as a legal defense to the cause of action, the alleged claim of appellants that the plaintiff had released some of the sureties on the bond.” But appellants are entirely mistaken in their understanding of the situation. Under our liberal system of pleading and practice plaintiff is not denied any relief, if justified by his pleading and evidence, simply because he fails to prove that he is entitled to the full measure that he claims. In the case at bar plaintiff alleged facts which are supported by the evidence, justifying recovery under the original instrument. The pleading went further, and set forth a change in the terms of the bond, which, if shown as alleged, would entitle plaintiff to the additional relief of a several judgment against the defendants. To hold that a failure to prove these additional allegations is to be sent out of court empty-handed is opposed to the spirit of modern legislation and the decisions of the courts. Code Civ. Proc. § 580; Bell v. Solomons, 142 Cal. 63, 75 Pac. 649; Reiner v. Schroeder, 146 Cal. 416, 80 Pac. 517. Nor were defendants precluded from setting up the defense suggested. Ordinary prudence would lead them to urge whatever available defense they might have to any cause of action set forth in the complaint. If plaintiff had formulated its pleading in two counts, based upon the original instrument and the altered instrument, respectively, no one would question the applicability of the rule herein announced. There is no difference in principle, since sufficient facts are alleged to justify a judgment in keeping with either theory, although not separately set forth.

Again, it is found by the court, and the evidence is sufficient to support it, "that on said 2d day of February, 1903, and while deliveries, as aforesaid, were being made by plaintiff to defendant corporation, said defendants and each of them knew that plaintiff was ignorant of the facts connected with the said alteration, but believed that said alteration had been made by the authority, and with the consent and knowledge, of all of said defendants; that said defendants did not, nor did any or either of them, notify or inform plaintiff that any alteration had been made in said bond without their knowledge or authority, or against their consent, or that said bond was for any reason invalid, or any of the facts or claims respecting the said alteration therein, other than the alteration was made with the authority of all persons signing said bond," etc. In other words, we have a familiar illustration of the principle of estoppel. It is sufficiently pleaded, if necessary to plead it in anticipation of the possible defense of unauthorized modification of the original bond. It is warranted by the evidence, and properly found by the court. The rule is just and supported by the authorities that, where a document has been altered, and notice of such alteration is brought to the attention of the parties affected, it is their duty to disavow it at once, or within a reasonable time after learning thereof, or they are bound by the document as altered. Renville County v. Gray, 61 Minn. 242, 63 N. W. 635; Ward v. Williams, 26 Ill. 447, and cases cited in the note, 79 Am. Dec. 385. It is plain here that, since plaintiff was furnishing the oil on the strength of the bond, it was the duty of appellants to notify respondent immediately of any change in the terms of the bond within their knowledge and not authorized by them.

The other points made, and the citations noted, by appellants, have all been examined, but they are of mere academic interest, and do not demand further notice.

The judgment is right, and should be upheld, and therefore it and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

BOCA MILL CO. v. CURRY, Secretary of State. (S. F. 4,997.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 8, 1908.)

1. CORPORATIONS (§ 37*)—EXTENSION OF COR-PORATE EXISTENCE—LEGISLATIVE AUTHORI-TY—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 12, § 7, prohibiting the Legislature from extending any franchise or charter or remitting the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation, when considered in connection with the prior Constitutions and with article 1, § 21, article 4, § 25, article 11, §§ 3-6, and article 12, §§ 1, 5, prohibiting the granting of special privileges, the passing of special laws, etc., and in connection with the proceedings of the constitutional convention, prohibits the Legislature from enacting any law, general or special, under which the charter or franchise of a corporation may be extended or the forfeiture of any franchise or charter remitted.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations,
Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

2. CORPORATIONS (§ 1*) — CREATION OF COR-PORATIONS.

A corporation is purely a creature of law, and can exist only by permission of the state.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations,
Cent. Dig. § 1; Dec. Dig. § 1.*]

3. CORPORATIONS (§ 4*).

The legislative department is the only department empowered to form corporations or authorize their formation or prescribe or extend their term of existence, and, except as it is limited by the Constitution, the power of the Legislature is supreme.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Cent. Dig. § 11; Dec. Dig. § 4.*]

4. CORPORATIONS (§ 37*).

A constitutional provision that the Legislature shall not extend any charter of any corporation declares against legislation extending or authorizing the extension of the charter of any corporation in any way, and where the Constitution prohibits the exercise of the powers to so extend by the only body possessing it, and does not provide any other way by which the extension may be had, there is a prohibition against any legislation effecting or authorizing the extension of corporate life.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

5. CORPORATIONS (§ 37*).

Const. art. 12, § 1, providing that corporations may be formed under general laws, shall not be created by special acts, and that all laws concerning corporations may be altered or repealed, does not, when considered in connection with section 5, prohibiting the Legislature from passing any act granting any charter for banking purposes, etc., but corporations may be formed for such purposes under general laws, and article 11, § 12, declaring that the Legislature shall not impose taxes on counties, etc., but may by general law vest in the corporate authorities the power to assess and collect taxes, authorize or recognize the power of the Legislature to pass a general law for the extension of the existence of corporations.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 37.*]

6. CORPORATIONS (§ 39*).

The purpose of Const. art. 12, § 1, providing that corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special acts, and that all laws concerning corporations may be altered or repealed, is to make plain the will of the constitutional convention that a corporation shall have no legal right to insist that any general law relating to corporations shall continue in force unchanged because it was in force at the time of its organization, but such general power is subject to such prohibition as to specific matters as elsewhere found in the Constitution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Corporations, Dec. Dig. § 39.*]

7. CORPORATIONS (§ 37*).

The object of Const. art. 12, § 7, providing that the Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter nor remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation, is not to limit the power of the Legislature in the matter of corporations thereafter to be organized as to the time for which they may be originally created, for that is a different matter from that of extending the life of existing corporations, including those organized under the former Constitutions beyond the time fixed in their charter.

8. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 13*)—PROVISIONS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where the language used in a constitutional provision plainly and unequivocally shows a certain and definite purpose to be accomplished thereby, the courts must construe it so as to carry that purpose into effect.

9. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (§ 20*)—LEGISLATIVE CONSTRUCTION—EFFECT.

ties of forfeiture incurred by a failure to pay the license tax levied by St. 1905, p. 493, c. 386, do not show such a continuous course of legislative construction of Const. art. 12, § 7, prohibiting the Legislature from extending any franchise or charter or remitting a forfeiture of any franchise or charter, as is entitled to any particular weight in determining the construction of the section, especially as at the legislative sessions of 1905 and of 1907, a proposed constitutional amendment of the section so as to provide for the extension of corporate charters was adopted.

10. CORPORATIONS (§ 37*)—EXTENSION OF CORPORATE EXISTENCE—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

St. 1907, p. 344, c. 274, amending Civ. Code, § 401, by providing that every corporation may at any time prior to the expiration of the term of its corporate existence extend such term to a period not exceeding 50 years from the date of such extension, is in conflict with Const. art. 12, § 7, declaring that the Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter of any corporation.

In Bank. Mandamus by the Boca Mill Company against Chas. F. Curry, as Secretary of State, to require defendant to file a certified copy of a certificate of extension of the corporate existence of plaintiff. Alternative writ of mandate discharged, and proceedings dismissed.

John Garber, Garret W. McEnerney, J. J. Dwyer, T. C. Coogan, Jas. T. O'Connor, and W. H. Orrick, amici curiæ (Tobin & Tobin and James M. Allen, of counsel), for petitioner. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an original proceeding instituted in this court by plaintiff, a California corporation, to obtain a writ of mandate requiring the defendant to file in his office a certified copy of a certificate of extension of its corporate existence.

The question presented by this proceeding is as to the constitutionality of an act of the Legislature approved March 18, 1907, purporting to amend section 401 of the Civil Code (St. 1907, p. 344, c. 274), by the terms of which amendment "every corporation heretofore or hereafter formed, and existing under the laws of this state, may at any time prior to the expiration of the term of its corporate existence extend such term to a period not exceeding fifty years from the date of such extension." Prior to the amendment, and ever since the year 1873, the section provided that any corporation formed for a period of less than 50 years, the maximum period under our statute for which a corporation may be originally organized, might extend its term of existence to a period not exceeding 50 years from its formation. The amended section provides, as did the original, that such extension may be made at any meeting of the stockholders or members called by the directors expressly for considering the subject if voted by stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock, or by two-thirds of the members, or upon the written assent of two-thirds of the members or of stockholders representing two-thirds of the capital stock. A certificate of the proceedings of the meeting upon such vote, or upon such assent, must be signed by the chairman and secretary of the meeting and a majority of the directors, and be filed in the office of the county clerk where the original articles of incorporation were filed, and a certified copy thereof in the office of the Secretary of State, and thereupon the term of the corporation is extended for the specified period. The plaintiff was incorporated on the 5th day of June, 1877, for the maximum term of 50 years. In October, 1907, it was resolved, in the manner provided by the amended section, to extend the term of its corporate existence for the further period of 50 years from the date of extension. All the proceedings were in accord with the provisions of said section. The Secretary of State refused to file the certified copy of the certificate of extension upon the ground that section 401 as so amended is in violation of a provision of our Constitution, and thereupon this proceeding was instituted. It will be observed that the amendment to section 401, Civ. Code, made a radical change in the law. As the section stood before the amendment, only a corporation formed for a period of less than 50 years could extend its term of existence, and then only to a date not exceeding 50 years from the date of its original incorporation. Under the amendment, any corporation may extend its term of existence, although originally incorporated for the full term of 50 years, not exceeding 50 years from the date of such extension.

The claim of the defendant is that the amendatory act is invalid because it is prohibited by section 7 of article 12 of our Constitution, the article relating to corporations. That section is as follows: "The Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter, nor remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist under the laws of this state." The question here is as to the meaning of this provision. The defendant contends that it prohibits the Legislature not only from enacting any law, general or special, extending the term of existence of any or all corporations, but also from enacting any general law under which corporations may themselves extend such period. The claim of plaintiff is that the provision is intended simply either to prohibit such an extension by legislation special in its character, or to prevent the Legislature from passing any general law which, by the operation of the law itself, independent of action by any one else, will accomplish the extension of corporate charters; in other words, that the constitutional restriction is upon the method of accomplishing such an extension, and is not directed against the substantive thing, the extension, and that it does not prohibit the enactment of a general law of a permissive character, open to all corporations alike on equal terms. The constitutional provision under consideration is peculiar to our own state and the states of Washington and Idaho, which evidently copied it from our Constitution. At the time of its adoption the Constitutions of Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Colorado contained provisions in terms prohibiting the passing by the Legislature of special laws creating corporations or renewing or extending the charters thereof, and the Constitutions of Illinois and Nebraska declared that no corporation, except those organized for charitable, educational, penal, or reformatory purposes and under the control of the state, shall be created by special laws or its charter extended, changed, or amended, which was practically the same as the provision of Pennsylvania, Missouri, and Colorado. Since the adoption of our Constitution of 1879, the states of Montana and Idaho have adopted constitutional provisions in terms prohibiting the granting, extension, or amendment of corporate charters by special law, and the state of Delaware one prohibiting the creation, amendment, renewal, or revival of any corporation by special act. In view of all the circumstances proper to be considered in construing a constitutional provision, we are forced to the conclusion that section 7 of article 12 is not susceptible of either of the constructions sought to be given it by learned counsel for the plaintiff, and that it was plainly the intent of the framers to prohibit any action by the legislative department, by virtue of which any corporate charter or any franchise (at least any franchise held by a corporation) might be extended, or the forfeiture of any such charter or franchise remitted.

So far as the extension of corporate charters is concerned, when we come to a consideration of the evils to be guarded against by constitutional provision in that behalf, it must be conceded that under our system that of special legislation was the one principally to be feared, and therefore to be prohibited. We would naturally expect, for this reason, to find more force in an argument that this was the real object of the provision, than in the other claim of plaintiff that its object was to simply prevent the Legislature from directly extending the charter of corporations by general legislation, leaving that body free to authorize all corporations to extend their own period of existence. We are unable to perceive any particular object to be subserved by a provision having the effect asserted in this latter claim of plaintiff. The only suggestion of its learned counsel in this regard is that it may have been the purpose in prohibiting direct extensions by the Legislature by general law to guard against the special legislation that might be successfully cloaked thereunder. There is little force in this suggestion. The evil thus referred to is one common to all general legislation, and experience has given rise to more than a suspicion that it is to be found in various statutes enacted by our Legislature, general laws in form, and general laws in the sense that the courts can find no valid ground upon which to hold them to be special laws. This evil is as possible in the matter of legislation permitting corporations to extend their own charters, as in the case of legislation directly extending them. It is on the latter claim, however, that plaintiff principally relies, being apparently forced to this position by the weakness of any possible argument that, under the circumstances, can be made in support of the special legislation claim. The constitutional convention of 1879 was evidently firmly set against special legislation of all kinds, and the prohibitions thereof are very numerous. When guarding against the evils supposed by the members to accompany the power of enacting that character of laws, there was no reluctance to use terms showing beyond doubt that a certain method of legislation, viz., special legislation, was the only thing prohibited. An examination of the Constitution shows many prohibitions of this character. Section 21, art. 1, declares: "Nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens." Section 25, art. 4, provided that the "Legislature shall not pass local or special laws in any of the following enumerated cases, that is to say"; and contains 23 subdivisions stating the classes of subjects as to which such laws are not permissible. The nineteenth subdivision was: "Granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity." And the twenty-third subdivision was: "In all other cases where a general law can be made applicable." By sections 3, 4 and 5 of article 11, the Legislature was authorized to provide "by general and uniform laws" for the formation of new counties, and directed to establish a system of county governments, "which shall be uniform throughout the state," and directed to provide "by general and uniform laws" for the election, etc., of officers. Section 6 of article 11 declared: "Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the Legislature by general laws, shall provide," for their incorporation, etc. Section 1 of article 12 provided: "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act." Section 5, art. 12, provided: "The Legislature shall have no power to pass any act granting any charter for banking purposes, but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." These instances are cited to show that, when the convention was guarding against special legislation, it did not hesitate to show its purpose by clear and unmistakable language. The provision under consideration is destitute of any word or words from which any such purpose may be inferred, and, if it was intended by the framers of the Constitution as a prohibition on special legislation, it is, so far as we have found, the one solitary instance among the many prohibitions, of legislation of that character, in which they failed to make their purpose clear. "The Legislature shall not extend any franchise or charter" is the language used. There is no saving clause to the effect that such charters may be extended under general laws, analogous to that used in section 5 of the same article, nor is it declared, as in the many other instances of such prohibitions, that the Legislature shall not do the thing "by local or special law." In addition to this, the debates and proceedings of the constitutional convention show very clearly that all those who made any remarks while the provision was being discussed, both those favoring and those opposed thereto, were of the opinion that the effect thereof would be to place it beyond the power of the Legislature to enact any law, general or special, under which the charter or franchise of a corporation might be extended, or the forfeiture of any such franchise or charter remitted, and that such was the intention of those thus advocating it. It may be conceded, as urged by counsel for plaintiff, that our judgment as to the meaning of the provision cannot be influenced by the construction placed upon it by individual members of the convention in the debates. We speak of this expression of views solely with reference to the subsequent action of the convention in rejecting an amendment offered by Mr. Cross. He proposed that it be amended to read as follows: "The Legislature shall not by a special act extend any franchise or charter, or remit the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation now existing, or which shall hereafter exist, under the laws of this state." The only change proposed by the amendment was the insertion of the words "by a special act." He said in support of the amendment: "Many corporations exist in this state to-day that are doing business which is beneficial to the state. Now, corporations are organized in the state of California for a period of 50 years. If this provision is adopted as proposed by the committee, whenever that 50 years expires that corporation must dissolve and distribute its property, and wind up its business. Take, for instance, the case of some banking association that is conducting an honorable business. Say its charter expires in 20 years. When its charter expires, there must be a distribution of all its corporate property among the stockholders. Now, pass this provision, and it is absolutely necessary that the corporation shall be wiped out of existence, without any remedy. If we insert this amendment, the Legislature can provide by general law that corporations now existing may continue their existence." This amendment was entirely satisfactory to Mr. Wilson, the leader of the opposition to the original provision; he stating that it would be sufficient for the purpose he desired to accomplish. At the close of a discussion in which no one asserted a view contrary to that of Mr. Cross as to the effect of the original provision, the proposed amendment was rejected and the provision was adopted as reported by the committee. 1 Cal. Const. Conv. 1878-79, pp. 431-434. This action of the convention was most significant under the circumstances. The original provision contained nothing to indicate that its purpose was simply to prohibit special legislation, although in every other case where such was the object the purpose was clearly indicated. By its terms it plainly prohibited any kind of legislation extending any franchise or charter. No one disputed the proposition that, as drawn, the provision prohibited general as well as special legislation. The proposed amendment was practically the same as the language most commonly used in the other cases in which special laws were prohibited, and was substantially the same as the language contained in the provisions on the same subject contained in other state Constitutions. In the face of all this, it is unreasonable to conclude, as is suggested by counsel, that the rejection of the amendment may have been for the reason that the members of the convention thought the amendment unnecessary. If they were seeking solely to prevent special legislation, and were willing to allow general legislation accomplishing such extensions, in view of their action in other cases and the manner in which the matter was brought before them, it would have appeared exceedingly necessary to them to have adopted Mr. Cross' amendment, or some substantially similar amendment. That they did not do so indicates very clearly that they were not, by the provision under consideration, simply guarding against special legislation. They evidently intended exactly what appears to us to be the only reasonable construction of the provision—that the Legislature should not be allowed by any kind of legislation, general or special, to grant the extensions or remissions described therein.

Coming to a consideration of the second claim made by defendant, viz., that while the provision under consideration prohibits the Legislature from directly extending franchises and charters, or remitting the forfeiture of any franchise or charter of any corporation, it does not prohibit the legislature from enacting a law under which corporations may extend their own charters. In this consideration we must bear in mind that a corporation is purely a creature of the law, and can exist only by permission of the state; that in all of the states of this country the state legislative department is the only department of government empowered to form corporations or authorize their formation, or prescribe or extend their term of existence; and that, except in so far as it is limited by constitutional provision, the power of the Legislature in this regard is absolute. As is said by learned counsel for plaintiff, "that power belongs to the legislative body as an attribute of sovereignty, unless it is restricted by the Constitution." In Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 58, it is said: "Since corporations can be created by or under legislative authority only it is only by or under such authority that the charter of a corporation can be extended beyond the period for which it was created." See, also, Taggart v. Perkins, 73 Mich. 303, 41 N. W. 426. In view of this, it being clearly established that the purpose was not to prohibit special legislation, there is but one meaning that can be given to the provision under consideration. As the charter of a corporation may be extended only when authorized by the state, and as the permission of the state in this regard can be expressed only through its legislative department except as it is expressed in the Constitution itself, it would appear to necessarily follow that, when the framers of the Constitution declared that the Legislature shall not extend any charter of any corporation, they were declaring against the substantive thing, as it is put by counsel; that is, against legislation extending or authorizing the extension of the charter of any corporation in any way. When they prohibited the exercise of the powers to so extend by the only body possessing it, and did not provide any other way by which an extension might be had, they apparently intended to forbid any legislation effecting or authorizing the extension of corporate life just as clearly as if they had in terms said: "The Legislature shall have no power to enact any law extending or authorizing the extension of any charter." It is urged that section 1 of article 12 confers this authority on the Legislature, or recognizes that it has such power, and that it cannot be said that the power is conferred by one section and denied by the other. We do not so understand that section. Besides prohibiting the formation of corporations by special law and declaring that they may be formed under general laws, it does no more than to expressly reserve the power to the Legislature, in general terms, to alter or repeal any law then in force or thereafter enacted concerning corporations. The evident purpose of this provision was to make plain the will of the convention that corporations should have no legal right to insist that any general law relating to corporations shall continue in force unchanged because it was in force at the time of its organization. This general power is, of course, subject to such prohibitions as to specific matters as are elsewhere found in the Constitution, and there are many such prohibitions. The nature of the subject-matter of the section under consideration is such as to fully account for the form of the prohibition used, and to distinguish the case from the numerous other instances of prohibitions on substantive things contained in the Constitution, differing in form from this, which are relied on by counsel, and to make it apparent that it was not intended to leave the Legislature free to enact general laws under which corporations might extend their own charters. Any such construction would under the circumstances do violence to the language used. In this connection it is important to note that in other instances where such general laws relative to corporations were intended to be authorized the framers of the Constitution were careful to so state in conjunction with the prohibition otherwise. In section 1, art. 12, prohibiting the creation of corporations by special act, it was in terms declared that "corporations may be formed under general laws." In section 5 of article 12 the prohibition "the Legislature shall have no power to pass any act granting any charter for banking purposes" was followed by "but corporations or associations may be formed for such purposes under general laws." No good reason can be given for the insertion of this latter clause in section 5, art. 12, that would not be equally applicable to the provision under consideration and its absence there is very significant. We find in other sections similar instances of the care taken by the members of the constitutional convention to make it clear that certain prohibitions as to direct action of the Legislature were not intended as prohibiting that body from enacting general laws under which other authorities might do the thing prohibited to the Legislature itself. For example, section 12 of article 11 declares that "the Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns or other public or municipal corporations, * * * for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes." As to the provision under consideration, they refused to insert any limitation on what was apparently an absolute prohibition of legislation effecting or authorizing extensions of corporate charters, even though, as has been seen, the matter was specially brought to their attention by the discussion on a proposed amendment.

The claim is made in support of plaintiff's construction that the language of the Constitution of 1849 in regard to divorces was, substantially similar to that of the provision under consideration, section 26 of article 4 providing "no divorce shall be granted by the Legislature"; that this clearly did not prohibit the substantive thing, the granting of divorces, but simply prohibited the Legislature from directly granting them; and that the language used in the provision here under consideration should be considered as used in the light of the language used relative to divorces in 1849 for the purpose of expressing a similar purpose. This argument is in our judgment without force. It appears to us that the divorce provision in the Constitution of 1849 was intended by the framers of that Constitution as no more than a prohibition of special legislation granting divorces, as was held concerning a substantially similar provision in State v. Duket, 90 Wis. 272, 63 N. W. 83, 31 L. R. A. 515, 48 Am. St. Rep. 928, and the provision can reasonably be construed in that way. Evidently it was not regarded by the framers of the Constitution of 1879 as clearly enough expressing such purpose, for they failed to reenact it, and included the matter in the general section prohibiting the Legislature from passing local or special laws in various cases, the fifth subdivision being "granting divorces" (Const. art. 4, § 25), thus very clearly indicating their intent as in all other cases where special legislation is the thing being guarded against. The provision of 1849 in the light of the change made in the Constitution of 1879 constitutes to our minds an argument against, rather than in favor of, plaintiff's claim.

The other matters treated by the section under consideration, and covered by the prohibition therein contained, viz., the extension of franchises, and the remission of the forfeiture of franchises and charters, are, like the matter of the extension of corporate charters, peculiarly within the domain of the legislative department of the state. Except as otherwise prescribed by the Constitution, a franchise may be granted or extended only by or under the authority of the state Legislature, and the same is true as to the remission of forfeitures of charters or franchises. As to such franchises as are granted directly by the Legislature, it would be absurd to construe the provision as simply prohibiting the Legislature from making direct extensions, and leaving it at liberty to provide that such an extension might be accomplished by some action of the holder thereof, or granted by some other official body. There is nothing in the fact of their inclusion in the prohibition to detract from the conclusion that the section was intended as prohibiting legislation of any kind by or under which the things therein mentioned could be accomplished. To the contrary, their inclusion is in conflict with the theory that the restriction of the section was not intended to prevent permissive general laws under which the corporation or holder of a franchise can do the thing prohibited to the Legislature. As applied to such matters, the provision so construed would be most unreasonable.

It is much relied upon as showing that there could have been no intent to prohibit general legislation authorizing corporations to extend their own corporate existence, that there was not inserted in the Constitution of 1879 any limitation of the period of time for which the Legislature might authorize a corporation to be organized, the result being that the Legislature may change the present maximum period of 50 years for which a corporation may be organized to 100 years, or any other period. It is evident from this, of course, that the object of the provision was not to limit the power of the Legislature in the matter of corporations thereafter to be organized, as to the time for which they might be originally created. But this is a very different matter from that of extending the life of existing corporations, including those organized under the former Constitution, beyond the time fixed in their charters. There may have been, and the records of the constitutional convention indicate that there were, what appeared to the framers of the Constitution all-sufficient reasons for prohibiting the authorization of such extensions, while permitting the Legislature unlimited power in the matter of the time for which new corporations might be organized, and the fact that they permitted the latter is no indication that they did not intend to prohibit the former.

We do not see how plaintiff is aided by the fact that the five state Constitutions which, at the time of the framing of our Constitution of 1879, contained any express reference to the subject of charter extension, explicitly confined the restriction on legislative action respecting charter extensions to special legislation granting such extensions. These provisions, of course, show that the thing there being guarded against was simply the method of legislation. That, however, as we have already seen, cannot be held to be the situation as to our section adopted in the light of those other provisions, with the portions thereof confining them to restrictions on special legislation carefully eliminated, and refused insertion when offered by way of amendment. Our constitutional convention had some other purpose in view. To our minds, the language used in section 7 of article 12 clearly indicated that purpose to be to prevent the Legislature from accomplishing by any means the extensions and remissions therein mentioned. When resort is had to the record of the debates of the convention, this view of the purpose of the convention so indicated by the language used is but confirmed. Whatever may be the views of the courts as to the necessity for or propriety of such a provision is, of course, immaterial. If the language used plainly and unequivocally shows a certain and definite purpose to be accomplished thereby, it is the duty of the courts to so construe it as to carry that purpose into effect. A legislative construction of this provision is claimed to be found in an act of the Legislature approved June 13, 1906 (St. 1906, p. 22, c. 19), purporting to relieve corporations from the penalties of forfeiture incurred by a failure to pay the license tax levied by the act of 1905 (St. 1905, p. 493, c. 386), and also an act of a similar nature approved March 20, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 745, c. 403). These two very recent acts of the Legislature do not show such a continuous course of legislative construction of a constitutional provision as is entitled to any particular weight in determining the proper construction of the provision. It is to be noted that at the same session at which the latter of these acts was adopted the Legislature adopted a proposed constitutional amendment to section 7, art. 12, to be submitted at the next election, providing for extension of corporate charters, thus indicating that, while it assumed by the amendment to section 401 of the Civil Code to authorize charter extensions, it was not at all satisfied that it had such power under the present constitutional provision. It is also to be noted that at the session of 1905 a proposed constitutional amendment of the same general nature was adopted by the Legislature, to be submitted and which was submitted at the general election of 1906. It is still further to be noted that the act of March 18, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 344, c. 274), amending section 401 of the Civil Code, the act here under consideration, is the first attempt of the Legislature since the adoption of the Constitution to enact any law in any way authorizing the extension of the charter of a corporation. Certainly, so far as legislative construction of this constitutional provision is concerned, there is at least as much against the construction contended for by plaintiff as there is in its favor.

It is said that during the 28 years that have elapsed since the adoption of the Constitution of 1879 no question has ever been raised as to the validity of section 401 of the Civil Code as it existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, or as to the validity of section 287 of the Civil Code authorizing corporations organized before the adoption of the Codes to come in under the Codes and thereby extend their corporate terms for a further period of 50 years; that, if section 7 of article 12 of the Constitution of 1879 is to be construed in the manner contended for by defendant, both sections 287 and 401 of the Civil Code ceased to be operative at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, section 1 of article 22, thereof providing that "the provisions of all laws which are inconsistent with this constitution shall cease upon the adoption thereof"; that it is only fair to infer from the absence of any attack on these sections that many corporations have assumed that they were in force and have acted thereunder; and that to now declare them invalid might cause disastrous consequences on a large and wide scale. It is admitted that such considerations cannot control in the construction of a constitutional provision. However it is proper to say that we do not know that any corporation has assumed to act under either of these sections since the adoption of the present Constitution, and we cannot agree that it is fair to infer that many have so acted. Corporations are generally organized for the maximum period in the first instance, and section 401 purported to authorize the extension only when the corporation was organized for a less period, and then only for such time as would enable it to exist for the maximum period from the date of its organization. It is fair to assume that the ante-code corporations that desired to come in under the Code had generally availed themselves of the provisions of section 287 of the Civil Code prior to the adoption of the Constitution. But, if any corporation has so assumed to act under either of these sections, it does not necessarily follow from our decision that such action was unwarranted. What we have decided as to the constitutional provision is simply that it prohibited any action by the Legislature, by virtue of which any corporate charter might be extended. It may be that sections 287 and 401 of the Civil Code, as they stood at the date of the adoption of the constitution, are not inconsistent with this provision as construed by us, and are still in force. See Board of Commissioners v. Board of Trustees, 71 Cal. 310, 12 Pac. 224.

Every argument that can be advanced in support of the claim of plaintiff as to the proper construction of section 7 of article 12 of our Constitution has undoubtedly been advanced by the learned counsel representing it. Fully realizing the importance of the question, we have given each and every point our careful consideration, although we may have failed to state some of them in this opinion. We see no escape from the conclusion that the act of March 18, 1907, purporting to amend section 401 of the Civil Code, is in violation of section 7 of article 12 of our Constitution, and therefore, invalid.

If it is desired to conform to the rule existing generally in other states, of allowing by general laws existing corporations to extend their corporate existence under such restrictions as may be considered reasonable, a change in our constitutional provision is essential. A proposed constitutional amendment of this character is now pending to be voted on at the next election, and the people of the state will thus presently be afforded the opportunity to make the change if they so desire.

TULARE IRRIGATION DISTRICT et al.
v. COLLINS, Sheriff. (Sac. 1,622.)

(Supreme Court of California. Oct. 20, 1908.
Rehearing Denied Nov. 16, 1908.)

1. EXECUTION (§ 22*)—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS —STATUTES—PROPERTY EXEMPT.

Under Act March 7, 1887, p. 35, c. 34, § 13, as amended by St. 1897, p. 263, c. 189, declaring that the legal title to all property acquired under the act providing for the organization of irrigation districts shall vest in the district, and shall be held by it in trust for, and shall be dedicated and set apart to the uses set forth in the act, the legal title to all the lands of an irrigation district organized under the act is held in trust by the district, and the beneficial title is in the owners of the land within the district, and land which by reason of a change in the plans has become valueless for irrigation purposes is impressed with a trust, and is, like the other land of the district, exempt from execution.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Cent. Dig. § 133; Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

2. EXECUTION (§ 22*)—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

The rule that an exemption from execution of the property of a quasi public corporation only relieves from process such property as is necessary to the exercise of the quasi public functions which the corporation has assumed is not applicable to lands of an irrigation district held under an express trust created by Act March 7, 1887, as amended by St. 1897, p. 263, c. 189, where neither a sale of the land by the district nor any execution sale can be made without violating the terms of the trust.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Execution, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. EXECUTION (§ 22*)—RIGHT TO CLAIM EXEMPTION—ESTOPPEL.

The failure of the directors of an irrigation district existing as a public corporation under Act March 7, 1887, p. 29, c. 34, providing for the organization of irrigation districts, to pay a judgment against the district for damages occasioned through the negligence of the district in flooding land, does not estop the district from insisting that its property, held under a public trust, shall be protected from illegal seizure and sale, to the end that the public trust may not be violated.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by the Tulare Irrigation District and others against W. W. Collins, sheriff of Tulare county. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

C. L. Russell, for appellants. Hannah & Miller, for respondent.

HIENSHAW, J. The plaintiff, Tulare Irrigation District, is a public corporation organized under the act of the Legislature approved March 7, 1887, generally known as the "Wright Act" (St. 1887, p. 29, c. 34). The other parties plaintiff are members of the board of directors of the irrigation district and owners of land within its territorial limits. In 1894 one Mosier recovered a judgment against the district for damages suffered by him through the negligence of the district in flooding his land. The judgment was never satisfied, but was kept in force by subsequent actions thereon. In 1896 he caused execution to issue on his judgment, directing the sheriff to levy upon the personal property of the district, and, failing to find sufficient thereof, then to levy upon the real property of the district. This execution was placed in the hands of the defendant Collins for service, and he levied upon certain lands owned by the district and gave notice of sale. This action was thereupon brought to restrain him from making such sale. The court found the facts as above recited, and additionally found that the lands sought to be sold, though owned by the district, were not within the plan adopted by the district as its system and scheme of irrigation; that they were not a part of the canal system, of the storage reservoir system or of any other work or works for the irrigation of the land, for the completion and operation of which system bonds had been sold; that, after the receipt of moneys from the sale of bonds, the district did modify its plan and devoted part of the moneys so received to the acquisition of the land in controversy, contemplating its use as a reservoir, but that the district failed to acquire others lands necessary for the perfection of this reservoir site, and finally abandoned this branch of its scheme and acquired other lands, waters, and water rights. It finds the lands to be wholly unnecessary to and without the irrigation plans of the district, and to be in their character agricultural and grazing lands; finds that the bonds of the district have been fully paid, that the district has no indebtedness other than this judgment, which it has never paid or offered to pay. Upon these findings it refused to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the sale.

That upon such findings it was the duty of the district to pay this judgment may not be questioned. As little may it be questioned that the judgment creditor may, by appropriate method, compel the payment of his judgment. But here we are confronted with the single proposition whether or not an execution, levy, and sale of certain of the lands of the district is a lawful method for the collection of the debt. All of the land owned by this corporation was acquired by virtue of the provisions of the Wright act, section 13 of which declares that "the legal title to all property acquired under the provisions of this act shall immediately and by operation of law vest in such irrigation district, and shall be held by such district in trust for and is hereby dedicated and set apart to the uses and purposes set forth in this act, and said board is hereby authorized and empowered to hold, use, acquire, manage, occupy and possess said property as herein provided." An examination of the Wright act and of the Bridgeford act, amendatory thereof (St. 1897, p. 263, c. 189), discloses that the situation here presented was not contemplated by the Legislature, or, if contemplated, was not provided for. We mean by this situation that disclosed by the findings where an irrigation district owns lands, which lands, because of a change in its plans, have become unnecessary to the irrigation scheme. It is to be noted that the legal title to all of the lands of the district is held in trust by the district, and "is dedicated and set apart to the uses and purposes" specified in the act. The beneficial title is in the owners of the land within the irrigation district. Merchants' Bank v. Escondido Irr. Dist., 144 Cal. 329, 77 Pac. 937. The trust being expressly limited in its terms, dedicating and devoting all lands owned by the district to the purposes of irrigation, there is no power in the trustees as the law now stands, even to sell such lands. San Francisco v. Itsell, 80 Cal. 57, 22 Pac. 74. Such an attempted alienation would be in clear violation of the trust. In brief, it seems not to have occurred to the legislative mind that after adopting such a plan of irrigation as the act requires and selling bonds in accordance with that plan, and then using the money arising from the bond sale for the purchase of lands, after all this has been done, the district might or would so change its plans as to render some of the land valueless for irrigation purposes. If this contingency had occurred to the Legislature, it is reasonable to suppose that it would have made some provision to meet it, would have provided for sale, would have authorized execution and levy, or by some appropriate expression have relieved such land from the terms of the strict trust which it has imposed. But, in the absence of such expression, these lands stand in precisely the same position as do the other lands of the district. Equally with such other lands they are impressed with the trust and equally they are exempt from execution, levy, and sale. This question as to pueblo lands was most learnedly considered in the leading case of Hart v. Burnett, 15 Cal. 530, and the principles there announced have never been departed from. These principles are equally applicable to the lands held under this public trust. Seale v. Doane, 17 Cal. 484; Fulton v. Hanlow, 20 Cal. 450; Carlton v. Townsend, 28 Cal. 219; San Francisco v. Cannavan, 42 Cal. 541; Ames v. U. S., 101 Cal. 390, 35 Pac. 1005; San Francisco v. Leroy, 138 U. S. 656, 11 Sup. Ct. 364, 34 L. Ed. 1096.

We are in this not unmindful of the principle relied upon by respondent that the rule exempting from execution the property of a quasi public corporation, such as a railroad, goes no further than to relieve from process such property as is necessary to the exercise of the quasi public functions which the corporation has assumed, so that a canal basin has been held not to be a legitimate incident to a railroad which has no authorized canal connection, and is not protected from levy and sale; and, where such a corporation abandons a portion of its franchise, the property employed in the exercise of this franchise may become subject to execution. 6 Thompson on Corporations, § 1755. In this state, indeed, the principle has been applied to assessments for benefits upon lands owned by public corporations not necessary to the exercise of their functions. Ames v. City of San Diego, 101 Cal. 390, 35 Pac. 1005; San Diego v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 108 Cal. 189, 41 Pac. 291, 35 L. R. A. 33; Witter v. Missions School District, 121 Cal. 350, 53 Pac. 905, 66 Am. St. Rep. 33; City Street Improvement Co. v. Regents University of California (Cal.) 96 Pac. 801. But the principle is not applicable to lands held by a public corporation, as here, under an express trust where neither a sale of the land by the district nor any execution sale could be made without doing direct violation to the terms of the trust. In this respect the situation is identical with that of the pueblo lands considered in the cases above cited.

Nor can force be given to the objection made by respondent that appellants may not be heard in this action, since by their admitted failure to pay the judgment in favor of Mosier they do not come into a court of equity having done or offered to do equity. This just maxim can have no application to a case like this. However remiss the directors may have been in failing to pay the judgment, it cannot be held to estop a public corporation from insisting that its property held under a public trust shall be protected from illegal seizure and sale, to the end that this public trust may not be violated.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore reversed.

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 15, 1908.)

1. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER (§ 24*)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint alleging that plaintiff was in actual and peaceable possession, and that defendants wrongfully turned him out, but not alleging that defendants withheld possession from plaintiff at the commencement of the action, does not state a cause of action for forcible entry and detainer, so that Code Civ. Proc. § 1167, requiring defendant in such an action to answer in less than 10 days, does not apply.

2. FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER (§ 24*)—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

An allegation in a complaint, otherwise insufficient to state a cause of action for forcible entry and detainer because not alleging that defendants withheld possession at the commencement of the action, that plaintiff will continue to be damaged in a certain sum for each day possession is withheld by defendants, cannot be construed as an allegation that possession is withheld.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by J. M. Bell against J. P. Haun, W. Jones and others. From a default judgment and an order denying a motion to set the same aside, Haun and Jones appeal. Reversed.

Louis Luckel, for appellants. Jones & Weller, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Appeal from judgment on default, and from order denying motion to vacate and set aside such default and judgment.

The action purports to be for the forcible entry and detainer of premises at the time occupied by plaintiff. It is alleged that defendants "did wrongfully and unlawfully, and without the consent of plaintiff, turn the plaintiff out of the possession thereof by force and violence, and did throw the personal property of plaintiff then on said premises into the public road," and that by reason thereof plaintiff is damaged in the sum of $500, and will continue to be damaged in the sum of $5 for each and every day the possession thereof is withheld from plaintiff by defendants, followed by a prayer for restitution of the premises and $500 damages for the alleged forcible entry and the further sum of $5 per day for each day the possession is withheld from plaintiff by defendants. It is not alleged in the complaint that defendants detained the possession of said premises from plaintiff. By summons served on defendants September 18, 1907, they were required to appear and answer within three days of service thereof. Defendants failed to answer as commanded by said summons, whereupon default was entered, upon which judgment was on September 24, 1907, rendered for damages as prayed for, and whereby it was further ordered that plaintiff recover possession of the premises and that he have issued a writ of restitution requiring the sheriff to place him in the peaceable possession thereof. Upon the ground of inadvertence and excusable neglect defendants moved the court to set aside the default and vacate the judgment, which motion was by the court denied.

The procedure adopted is that prescribed by chapter 4, tit. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure, known as the "Forcible Entry and Detainer Act." Its purpose is clearly indicated by its title, which is: "Summary proceedings for obtaining possession of real property in certain cases." Section 1167 of this act provides that in proceedings instituted thereunder the summons issued shall require the defendant to answer within the time designated therein, which shall not be less, however, than two days before the return day. The summons issued complied with the provisions of this section, and required defendants to answer within three days after service thereof. Appellants' contention is that the complaint does not state a cause of action for forcible entry and detainer, and therefore the provisions of section 1167, wherein the defendant can be required to answer in less than 10 days, do not apply, in short, that the action is not one for the restitution of property, does not come within and is not controlled by any provision of the forcible entry and detainer act but is an action to recover damages for a trespass, as to which they were entitled to 10 days within which to answer, that the entering of default and rendition of judgment thereon before the expiration of such 10 days constituted error for which the judgment should be reversed.

The chief object of the action instituted under the provisions of the forcible entry and detainer act is to enable the party wrongfully ousted from the possession of premises to regain possession thereof by lawful means; thus avoiding incidental disturbances and breaches of the peace likely to occur in an effort to regain possession by force. Since the purpose of the action is to regain possession of the premises, it necessarily follows that it must appear from the complaint that the defendants at the time of the commencement of the action withhold and detain possession thereof from plaintiff. "In all actions brought under the forcible entry and detainer statutes it is necessary to allege a detention of the premises at the time of the institution of the action; for, in the absence of such detention, the complaint would amount to no more than a trespass." 19 Cyc. of Law, p. 1156. "The action must be brought against a person who is in the actual possession when suit is brought." 13 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 766; Champ Spring Co. v. Roth Tool Co., 96 Mo. App. 518, 70 S. W. 506. An allegation of forcible entry alone, unaccompanied by an allegation showing that defendant detains possession of the premises so forcibly entered, will not warrant an action under the provisions of said chapter 4, tit. 3, Code Civ. Proc., for forcible entry and detainer. Castro v. Tewksbury, 69 Cal. 562, 11 Pac. 339; Preston v. Kehoe, 10 Cal. 445; Armstrong v. Hendrick, 67 Mo. 542; Merrill v. Forbes, 23 Cal. 379. In the absence of such allegation, a fact necessary to constitute the cause of action must be taken as having no existence. Hildreth v. Montecito Creek W. Co., 139 Cal. 22, 72 Pac. 395.

While it appears from the complaint that plaintiff was in the actual and peaceable possession of the premises, and that defendants did wrongfully and unlawfully turn the plaintiff out of the possession thereof, it nowhere appears that defendants detained or withheld possession of the premises from plaintiff at the commencement of the action. Indeed, from all that appears in the complaint, plaintiff may have immediately, upon the commission of the acts attributed to defendants, resumed possession of the premises, and held the same at the time of instituting the action. Section 1174 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, if the finding of the court be in favor of the plaintiff, judgment shall be entered for the restitution of the premises; and, in compliance with this provision, the court did adjudge that plaintiff do have and recover of and from the defendants possession of the premises, and that there issue to the sheriff a writ of restitution requiring him to place plaintiff in possession of the same, all of which would be idle acts did not defendants withhold possession from plaintiff. To warrant such judgment it must appear from the complaint that defendants withheld the premises from plaintiff, and hence the requirement of said section 1174 that the judgment shall provide for restitution thereof. The real gist of the action is the detention of the premises from the one entitled thereto, and this whether the detainer be forcible as defined by section 1160 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or unlawful, within the meaning of section 1161, or the retention of possession without force and violence by one who has by force and violence entered upon the possession of another.

The statement in the complaint that plaintiff will continue to be damaged in the sum of $5 for each and every day the possession is withheld from him by defendants cannot be construed as an allegation that possession is withheld. To do so would be in violation of the rule that a pleading should always be construed most strongly against the party pleading, and no inferences indulged in its support. McIntyre v. Hauser, 131 Cal. 11, 63 Pac. 69; Callahan v. Loughran, 102 Cal. 476, 36 Pac. 835.

From these views it is apparent that the complaint fails to state a cause of action within the meaning of the chapter in accordance with which the procedure was taken, and the judgment and order must, therefore, be reversed. It is so ordered. It is unnecessary to consider other points made by appellants.

This is an action to have certain real property declared to be held in trust, and for a decree requiring the conveyance thereof by defendants to plaintiffs, on the grounds that the former acquired such property as agents of the latter and withheld it in violation of their trust. Judgment was for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. Without passing upon respondents' objection to the record on the motion for a new trial, we will consider both appeals upon the merits.

The theory of plaintiffs' cause of action is that defendants occupied a fiduciary relation to them, and that the confidence arising from such relation was violated and the trust betrayed by defendants by the purchase of a certain lot of land in the city of Los Angeles, as to which plaintiffs had undertaken to enter into negotiations to purchase from the owner, through the defendants. The confidential relations growing out of the transaction itself are sought to be strengthened by allegations of continuous dealings with and exclusive reliance of plaintiffs on defendants for information and advice in respect to all transactions in real estate in which plaintiffs had engaged for a series of years, etc., etc.

The court finds that the defendants had not acted as the exclusive agents, and had not at any time acted as general or other advisers of plaintiffs in their business affairs, that plaintiffs had confidence in the defendants, but such confidence was not reposed in defendants as agents of plaintiffs, but was because defendants had at all times dealt fairly and justly with the plaintiffs. In respect to the particular transaction in question, the court finds that defendants were acting as agents for the owner of the property here involved when plaintiffs made application to purchase it; that defendants communicated to the owner in good faith the proposition of exchange made by plaintiffs, which was refused, and brought a counter proposition from the owner to plaintiffs, which the latter refused to accept, and that plaintiffs "declined to proceed further with relation to the purchase of said lot 16, block B" (the property in question); that thereafter defendant Nolan purchased the lot and had it conveyed to the defendant D. A. Cole. This finding is fully supported by the testimony of the defendant M. J. Nolan, and the trial judge appears to have accepted his testimony as true. We cannot go behind this. It is unnecessary to cite authorities to sustain a judgment in favor of defendants upon these findings. They show that no continuing fiduciary relations existed between the parties from which a duty from defendants to plaintiffs could be implied; and also that, if defendants were acting as their agents in making an exchange of property, the negotiations which had been undertaken upon behalf of plaintiffs were completed before the defendant Nolan purchased the property. We find nothing upon which to base a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment and order affirmed.

DONATI v. RIGHETTI. (Civ. 514.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California.
Sept. 15, 1908.)

1. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 3*)—"MALICIOUS PROSECUTION" DISTINGUISHED.

False imprisonment is distinguished from malicious prosecution in that it is, as defined by Pen. Code, § 236, an unlawful violation of another's personal liberty, an unlawful arrest or detention of one without warrant or by an illegal warrant, or a warrant illegally executed, while if the imprisonment is under legal process, but the action has been commenced and carried on maliciously and without probable cause, it is a malicious prosecution.

For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2657-2661; vol. 8, p. 7660; vol. 5, pp. 4309-4310.]

2. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 22*)—EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In an action for false imprisonment under a complaint in justice court, it must be presumed, in the absence of contrary allegations, that the complaint stated facts giving the justice jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Dec. Dig. § 22.*]

3. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 10*)—PREVIOUS ARREST—EFFECT.

That plaintiff was previously arrested and convicted before a justice did not make his subsequent arrest and imprisonment on the same charge before another justice unlawful; that being a matter of defense.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Dec. Dig. § 10.*]

4. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 7*)—DISMISSAL OF PROSECUTION—EFFECT.

That a prosecution was dismissed because accused had been previously convicted for the same offense did not operate retrospectively to annul or render unlawful the arrest upon the legal process.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Dec. Dig. § 7.*]

5. FALSE IMPRISONMENT (§ 31*)—UNESSENTIAL MATTERS.

That, in prosecuting plaintiff, defendant intentionally withheld knowledge of plaintiff's prior arrest before another justice on the same charge, does not tend to show false imprisonment merely tending to establish malicious motives and bad faith.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see False Imprisonment, Dec. Dig. § 31.*]

6. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1002*)—REVIEW—FINDINGS—CONCLUSIVENESS.

Findings of the jury on conflicting evidence are conclusive on appeal.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR (§ 1057*)—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE—EXCLUSION.

Any error in excluding evidence was harmless, where the fact involved was undisputed.

8. MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (§ 34*)—ELEMENTS—TERMINATION OF PROSECUTION.

A showing that the prosecution had been finally determined in accused's favor is essential to his establishment of a case of malicious prosecution.

10. TRIAL (§ 256*)—INSTRUCTIONS—MALICE—NECESSITY OF REQUEST.

If plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution desired an instruction defining "malice" in the language of Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 4, he should have requested it; the Code definition not excluding other proper definitions, and the court having correctly declared the law.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by V. L. Donati against Mike Righetti. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Shipsey, for appellant. McD. R. Venable and S. V. Wright, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. Action for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution. Judgment for defendant on demurrer as to first cause of action and on verdict on the second cause. Plaintiff appeals from judgment, and from order denying motion for a new trial.

Both causes of action are stated in substantially the same language, except that in the second count there is the additional allegation that in procuring the arrest and imprisonment of plaintiff defendant acted maliciously and without probable cause. The complaint shows that plaintiff and defendant quarreled with each other in the city of San Luis Obispo; that a constable of the township made complaint in the justice court of that township against plaintiff for disturbing the peace, and upon this complaint plaintiff was arrested and fined, and paid his fine. Four days later defendant procured the arrest of plaintiff upon a complaint filed by him in the justice court of Arroyo Grande township (14 or 16 miles distant from San Luis Obispo), stating the same facts and offense as that to which plaintiff had pleaded guilty in San Luis Obispo, and alleging the offense to have been committed on the same date. It is also alleged that all the facts relating to the arrest in San Luis Obispo were known to defendant at the time he made the complaint before the justice at Arroyo Grande. The two causes of action, false imprisonment and malicious imprisonment, are quite distinct and different, and to be distinguished in several respects. False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another. Pen. Code, § 236. It is the unlawful arrest or detention of a person without warrant, or by an illegal warrant, or a warrant illegally executed. If the imprisonment is under legal process, but the action has been commenced and carried on maliciously and without probable cause, it is malicious prosecution. 8 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. p. 841; Neves v. Costa, 5 Cal. App. 117, 89 Pac. 860.

There is nothing in the complaint before us to show that the warrant issued by the Arroyo Grande justice was either void, voidable, or irregular. In the absence of contrary allegations, we must assume that the complaint stated facts proper to give the justice jurisdiction. The arrest and imprisonment, then, was made in the legal execution of a warrant which issued as the result of regular judicial action by a justice having jurisdiction. The fact that plaintiff had been arrested before did not make the arrest or imprisonment unlawful. In the course of the proceedings upon the complaint, this fact, like any other plea, was a matter of defense to be set up by the party charged. The prosecution being dismissed upon this ground did not operate retrospectively to annul or render unlawful the arrest upon the legal process. The fact that the defendant intentionally withheld his knowledge of the prior arrest from the justice would only tend to establish malicious motives and bad faith. These are not allegations material to an action for false imprisonment, and, although evidence thereof may aggravate the damages, they have nothing to do with the cause of action. Neves v. Costa, supra; Marks v. Townsend, 97 N. Y. 590. The demurrer to the first cause of action was properly sustained.

The question of the knowledge of defendant of the prior arrest was one of fact for the jury to determine. There was a conflict of evidence upon this matter, and the jury found in favor of the defendant. We must be content with their finding.

The order dismissing the case brought in the Arroyo Grande justice's court was introduced to show a final determination in favor of plaintiff. It contained the grounds of the district attorney's motion to dismiss, as follows: "That facts go to show that this defendant has been arrested on this same offense in the justice's court of San Luis Obispo, pleaded guilty, was by that court fined, and paid the same." On motion of defendant this was excluded on the ground that "the reasons given were no part of the act of the justice of the peace." Appellant contends that the reasons for the dismissal are made a necessary part of the order by section 1385 of the Penal Code, and to exclude this part of the order from the jury was error. Assuming, without determining, that this was error, it clearly was harmless. There was no controversy as to the fact that defendant "had been arrested on this same offense, pleaded guilty, and paid his fine." The showing that the case had been finally determined in favor of plaintiff was essential to the establishment of a case of malicious prosecution. Carpenter v. Nutter, 127 Cal. 61, 59 Pac. 301. Whatever the reason, the charge being a misdemeanor, the dismissal by the justice finally determined the case (Pen. Code, § 1387), and the reasons became immaterial.

No error was committed in sustaining defendant's objections to the questions asked him on cross-examination as to whether he had complained to the deputy sheriff about the disturbance. The questions as put were not properly framed for the impeachment of the witness. Neither was the proper foundation laid for this purpose, and this was the only purpose which they would have served if proper at all. If the plaintiff desired an instruction given to the jury in the language of section 7, subdivision 4, of the Penal Code, he should have requested it of the court. The Code definition does not exclude the giving of other proper definitions of the word "malice," and we think the instruction given by the court correctly declared the law.

No error appearing from the record, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PAOLINI v. FRESNO CANAL & IRRIGATION CO. (Civ. 114.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Sept. 10, 1908.)

1. TRIAL (§ 165*)—TAKING CASE FROM JURY—NONSUIT—GROUNDS.

In deciding a motion for nonsuit, plaintiff's evidence is taken as admitted, and every reasonable inference from any fact is regarded as proved, and, if all the facts and permissible inferences would sustain a verdict for plaintiff, a nonsuit should be denied; it being proper only where a verdict for plaintiff would be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Trial, Cent. Dig. § 374; Dec. Dig. § 165.*]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 262*)—IRRIGATION DITCHES—INJURIES INCIDENT TO SUPPLY—LEAKAGE.

If defendant negligently permitted water from its irrigation ditch to escape onto the plaintiff's land, because of defects in the ditch, or allowed the flow of the water to be obstructed so as to cause it to seep through the ditch and injure the land, defendant would be liable; the injury not being damnum absque injuria.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 262.*]

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES (§ 263*)—IRRIGATION DITCHES—INJURIES INCIDENT TO USE—ACTIONS—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injury to land by leakage from defendant's irrigation ditch, whether the land was injured by the seepage of water from defendant's ditch held for the jury, and a directed verdict for defendant was improper.

[Ed. Note.—For other cases, see Waters and Water Courses, Dec. Dig. § 263.*]

4. TRIAL (§ 169*)—TAKING CASE FROM JURY—DIRECTING VERDICT—GROUNDS.

It is improper to sustain an order directing a verdict for defendant, where reasonable men might differ in their conclusions from the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by P. R. Paolini against the Fresno Canal & Irrigation Company. From a judgment upon a directed verdict for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Henry Brickly, for appellant. Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Action for damages. The jury under instruction of the court, and upon motion of defendant, at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence rendered a verdict for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment upon the verdict.

Plaintiff alleged ownership of certain 160 acres of land, along the eastern boundary of which defendant was the owner of an irrigating ditch, used for the purpose of storing and conveying water; that defendant had failed and neglected to keep said ditch in repair by reason of which said failure and neglect "the same has become unfit for the purpose of carrying or containing water, and for a long time has been so unfit, and water allowed to flow therein has for a long time constantly seeped or percolated through the banks and bottom thereof, and flooded lands adjacent thereto," and "well knowing the defective condition of said ditch, defendant has carelessly and negligently, and against the will of plaintiff, caused water to flow in and through said ditch, or in or through said ditch, which said water has constantly seeped or percolated through the banks or bottom thereof during said time, and has constantly flooded a large tract of vineyard, to wit: 7 or 8 acres belonging to plaintiff, lying adjacent to said ditch, and being part of the real property described in paragraph 11 of the complaint"; that by reason of said flooding said land has become valueless, and has been converted into a swamp, whereby plaintiff has suffered the damage complained of. In its answer defendant denies specifically the allegations of the complaint, and sets up a special and separate defense, but as this latter phase of the case was not reached, this defense need not be stated. The rules in judging the correctness of orders granting motions for nonsuit are well settled. The evidence submitted by the plaintiff is deemed to be uncontradicted, and every fact and every reasonable inference that may be drawn from any fact must be regarded as proven. If the facts proven directly, or the just inferences from facts proven, would support a verdict for plaintiff, the nonsuit should not be granted, and it is error to do so. It is only where the facts are such that a verdict for plaintiff would compel the court to set it aside that a nonsuit is properly granted. Morey v. Wells, 147 Cal. 495, 82 Pac. 57; Vanderford v. Foster, 65 Cal. 49, 2 Pac. 736. We must consider the evidence with the above rules in view and be governed by them.

It appears by plaintiff's testimony that he is the owner of 160 acres of land, most of which is planted to vines. One of defendant's ditches comes to his land from the north to his northeast corner, and is used for irrigating purposes, and runs along the eastern boundary of plaintiff's land, from the northeast corner to the southeast corner (which we will designate as the north ditch), where it joins another of defendant's ditches coming from the east, this latter ditch at that point continuing southward, and is spoken of by witnesses as the "south ditch." At the northeast corner of plaintiff's land is a gate in defendant's ditch, through which water is let into another ditch, spoken of as a "side ditch," which runs along plaintiff's northern line. The portion of plaintiff's land alleged to have been rendered worthless through defendant's negligence is about 5 acres, and is situated about midway between the northeast and southeast corners, and lies immediately along the defendant's said north ditch between these two points. This piece of land is somewhat lower than the surrounding lands of plaintiff, and is spoken of by the witnesses as a "low place" or "sag" in plaintiff's land. Plaintiff testified that he "bought this land about five or six years ago" and had rented it two years before that. (The trial was February 16, 1905.) These ditches were all there when he bought the land. He testified that, when water is run through the south ditch, it backs up in this north ditch to a point above this low place of plaintiff's land, and stands. He testified: "During the summer months there is water in that ditch (the north ditch) all the time; during spring and summer. There is water there now. It is coming from here [indicating from south to north] this way, and this water is coming down and backing up here. There was water in that ditch all last year during the spring and summer. And the year before that, and every year before that. Here [indicating a portion of his land] is a kind of low place like that. Here the land is all high [speaking from a diagram, apparently]. Where it is low the vines have died. The condition of the land in that low place you might say is worthless on account of the seepage water. In reference to its being dry or wet, it is wet. * * * Well it happened that the vines all died in the last two years. In the low place is a part of the vineyard that had been producing vines before. The vines have all died out in the low place. They have all died on the low place. The land surrounding the low place, and those vines around the edges on the high place, I noticed last summer that they didn't bear as good as they did before. * * * About three years ago there was a pretty good crop of raisins on this low place where there are no vines. I should judge fully an acre around like that. That would make five acres." He testified that the land immediately around "this low place produced about a ton per acre of raisins or dried cured grapes. * * * This particular piece during the year 1903 didn't produce hardly any, maybe 15 or 20 pounds on some of the sickly vines, one bunch here and there. Last year it produced none at all." He also testified that the water that stood in the north ditch came from the south ditch by backing up; that there was no water run through the north ditch the year before, except for two days; that if water was run through that ditch, it would go on into the south ditch, "but there would be some water remain there. There would be a low place in the ditch where the water would have to evaporate. If there was no water in the big ditch south, the water would go from the north through this ditch, and on the south pretty well, but not all of it. It would leave some water on the low place there, but not so high as if there was water in the south ditch."

Witness McKay, county surveyor, made a survey to ascertain the relative levels of the low place on the north ditch, and the water in the ditch at the point of the alleged seepage, and the level of the land affected thereby. He testified: "I took the levels on the land lying west of the ditch, the place known as the 'low sag' spoken of there, and I found that that land was a little more than a foot lower than the top of the water in the ditch at the present time, or about 2½ feet below high-water mark in the ditch. There were no vines on the land. There was a tract there, with no vines on, quite low, and at one point I observed some tules growing, and some water grass; that would indicate that it was somewhat swampy." He testified that, continuing his levels in a southerly direction about 1,800 feet to another low sag in the vineyard, he found it about a foot lower than the first one, and that "grape vines were growing down there," and that the grade fall of the country southward was about 4 feet to the mile. The second sag was about a quarter of a mile west of this north ditch. The witness observed that the vines "seemed to be growing all right, except this one place." He further testified: "The ditch is about 18 feet wide opposite this low sag in the land. The ditch had some trash on the bottom. I believe there was some kind of water grass, something of that kind, growing in it. I didn't observe it very closely there; that is, the ditch itself. I know there was some trash in the bottom of the ditch that looked like an old fish-trap and also some weeds, as though it had not been cleaned for some time; I don't know for how long. It had not been cleaned out recently, at least. The water in it appeared to be standing; there was no current to it." On cross-examination he testified: "I do not know that there was anything to prevent the water running out, not along that portion of the ditch. I didn't follow it down. The effect on the water that might come into the ditch by the presence of this grass and old fish-trap and tules in the ditch would be a tendency to retard the water. If the water is retarded somewhat in the ditch, it would naturally have the effect of increasing the seepage from the ditch. It would retard the flow of the water along the sides and the bottom. * * * At that place there was more than ample space in the ditch for water through the ditch. The water at that time was dead water, standing water." Witness Griggs testified: "That when the south canal is filled up pretty well with water, it backs up in the ditch north, and so far this year there has been no water coming down from the north, down from the other ditch, but the water is standing in that ditch there nearly to the north line here, up, I suppose somewhere along in here [showing]." He testified that he knew the land in 1902, and helped to handle the raisins that year; that "there were raisins growing on there then [referring to the low place in plaintiff's land]. There were a few dead vines, but the majority of it had vines on it. * * * There is nothing there at all now. He has taken the vines out of there." With some evidence as to the value of raisins for the two or three years preceding the trial, the plaintiff rested.

The learned trial judge gave expression to his view of the case, in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, which is printed in the record. There being no question but that defendant was rightfully in possession of the canals, with the right to use them for the purpose of running water through them, said the court: "If damages result incidental to that use, it would be a great hardship to say that the use should not be permitted. In other words, if the defendant is here of right, then to charge it with damages it must be because of some particular acts of negligence or tortious acts for which it is said to be held guilty, and the damage must be, in addition to that, the proximate effect of this particular act of negligence. Now I fail to see or understand how in this particular matter the defendant is to be charged with any actionable negligence. Assuming that it might have kept the ditches cleaner than it did, still there is no evidence that the ditches were not entirely suitable for the purpose for which they were used—nothing of that kind, and we cannot say, at this stage of the business of irrigation that it is necessary or absolutely requisite that a party appropriating and diverting water and delivering water must deliver it through channels that are so constructed that they will not permit of any possible percolation; in other words, that it must be delivered in pipes of cement channels, or anything of that kind, in the present stage of irrigation in this part of the state, to say the least, and irrigation be practically an impossibility if it had to be done in that way. The business could not be carried on, and the people of the county would have to abandon their homes and their possessions practically, if that had to be done because that would be practically impossible as it would seem. Whether that would be so or not, whether that is a speculation here or not, it is a fact that the business is conducted, and has been conducted, in a certain manner. Now there is no evidence here, as I say, that this ditch—either one of these ditches—was not suitable for its purpose at the time, and has not been during the time, that the plaintiff has been in possession of this property. There is no evidence that the defendant has used the property in any other way, or used the ditches in any other way, than the customary way. There is no direct evidence of any actionable negligence, as I understand it." We have given the views of the trial judge quite fully, because they seem to state the position taken by the respondent in support of the judgment. The general conditions existing in the irrigating districts of Fresno county are not shown, nor is there any evidence in the record to show that defendant was operating its system of ditches in the usual and customary way prevailing in the country. We do not think the case presents the question which the learned trial judge seems to have considered involved, and we are not called upon to pass upon it. There was some evidence brought out on the cross-examination of witnesses tending to show that the effect of irrigation throughout the district would cause the water plane to rise generally, in some cases almost to the surface, the purpose no doubt being to suggest a possible cause for the drowning of plaintiff's vines, caused by this universal seepage and percolation through the ditches. The court seemed to be impressed with the serious consequences which would flow from a rule that would accord damages for such apparently unavoidable cause. We think, however, that the case as it now stands does not present an issue requiring so broad treatment. The evidence, it seems to us, is sufficient to present the question whether, under certain circumstances, actionable damages may not accrue through the escape by percolation or seepage of water from defendant's ditch to the tract of land mentioned. If at that particular point in the ditch the water was suffered, through defendant's negligence to escape to plaintiff's land by means of faulty construction of the ditch, or by allowing the water to accumulate and stand there, and permitting the flow to be obstructed by growing grass and tules and other obstructions, thus causing the water to seep or percolate to plaintiff's land to its injury, defendant would be liable in damages. We do not think there is any rule of law, or any case, holding that injury to land by seepage or percolation is, under all circumstances, damnum absque injuria. There may be as direct damage by this means as by overflowing the banks of a ditch, and the law will as readily redress injury resulting from the one cause as from the other when the facts satisfactorily locate the cause. The case of Shields v. Orr Extension Ditch Company, 23 Nev. 349, 47 Pac. 194, is illustrative of the principle, and was a case where the injury was caused wholly by percolating water coming from a ditch. So, also, is the case of Parker v. Larsen, 86 Cal. 236, 24 Pac. 989, 21 Am. St. Rep. 30. It was there said: "Where one brings a foreign substance on his land, he must take care of it, and not permit it to injure his neighbor. The law on the subject is tersely expressed in the maxim, 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.'"

There was evidence tending to show that, at the point of defendant's ditch in question, the land of plaintiff had produced a good crop of grapes prior to 1902; that since then, by means of seepage of water from the ditch, about five acres of plaintiff's vines had been destroyed and the land rendered worthless; that at that point in the ditch the bottom was below the grade of the ditch, causing water to stand there; that water backed up in the ditch from the south ditch, and stood there as dead water; that grass and tules and other obstructions had been allowed to accumulate at this particular point, the effect of which was to retard the flow of water when running through the ditch and thus cause greater percolation and seepage than would otherwise have happened; that at another place in the vineyard, some distance from the ditch, though a foot lower, the vines were thrifty; that no water, except for two days, had been run through the north ditch past plaintiff's land, but that the water, backed up from the south ditch past the low place in plaintiff's land, had stood there during the irrigating season. There was no direct evidence establishing with absolute certainty cause and effect, but we think there were enough facts and circumstances to take from the court the right to direct a verdict. It was said in Chidester v. Consolidated Ditch Company, 59 Cal. 197: "In a case where reasonable men might, upon deliberation, differ in their conclusions, it would be improper for this court to interfere with the verdict"; and it would be equally improper, in such case, to sustain an order directing a verdict.

The judgment is reversed.
